Pursued William Fox Mermaids While "A Daughter of the Gods" Was Being Filmed in the Tropics.

When William Fox made his great $1,000,000 picture, "A Daughter of the Gods," in the tropical Caribbean country there were several things he could not guard against.

He had no power to halt the characteristic tropical hurricanes, or interfere with the freakish workings of nature.

But the chief menace to his motion picture players against which he had little or no protection was the dreaded shark. The waters of the Caribbean contain many of the savage creatures. The blue-nose, white, gray, tiger and hammerhead sharks are seen here and despite the long-maintained belief that these so-called man-eaters do not attack human beings the actual record of such attacks is a bloody one throughout the West Indian islands.

When the mermaid scenes of "A Daughter of the Gods" were made in St. Anne's Bay, a beautiful cove behind the island which William Fox took over in its entirety as the setting for his picture, the directors and assistants felt that here, at last, was a place where the girl swimmers would not be molested by sharks.

But this was a vain hope.

From the very first day shark fins could be seen racing across the inlet to the bay. Mr. Fox at once established a motor boat patrol at the mouth of the bay and at frequent intervals the men in these boats exploded dynamite at the entrance of St. Anne's to give the swimmers protection.

For the first few days the mermaids were in a high state of terror over this unexpected danger. Encased as their legs were in scaly fish-tails, the girls, while able to swim skilfully, were not able to make any real speed and had a shark dashed after them their chances of escape were slight.

West Indian negroes with long chained harpoons hunted sharks outside the mouth of the bay and during the four months in which the mermaids and water scenes were being taken not less than 300 of these monsters were captured. The largest measured fifteen feet, two and a half inches and the average size shark captured was in the neighborhood of eight feet. Most of them weighed from 250 to 350 pounds.

Battle scene from the Fox-Brenon "A Daughter of the Gods."

In "A Daughter of the Gods," Annette Kellermann, the star, does seemingly every deed of daring that could be imagined by an inventive human mind. But William Fox conceived still another one for her.

He wished her ptotographed in his picture closely pursued by a huge man-eating shark and to escape by the very slimest possible margin. Miss Kellermann offered no protest whatever. On the contrary she welcomed the chance to do something never before accomplished. So, "A Daughter of the Gods" shows Annette Kellermann, with terror in her features, swimming for dear life with a huge shark close behind. You see his fin cut the water, you see him almost upon her and then you see the shark give that sickening, lurching roll that indicates he is turning on his back to come up under his victim with open mouth and swallow or rend his prey.

AUGUST TRIANGLES

Mae Marsh, Frank Keenan, Charles Ray, Norma Talmadge, H. B. Warner and Wilfred Lucas Form Centers of Interest.

Triangle releases for August provide an unusual variety of subject and treatment. Among the stars who will be seen in the various features are Mae Marsh, Frank Keenan, Charles Ray, Norma Talmadge, H. B. Warner and Wilfred Lucas. Two decided novelties in the month's releases are "The Marriage of Molly-O," which will be released August 5, and "The Jungle Child," to be released August 20.

"The Marriage of Molly-O" is an extremely interesting and typical Irish story in which Mae Marsh is ably supported by Robert Harron. No end of expense has been spared to make the settings of the story realistic—and one scene—a village street, is an exact replica of a street in the little town in County Kerry. The story serves to emphasize the remarkable ability of Miss Marsh for characterization, and will undoubtedly prove one of the best Triangle features ever released.

"The Jungle Child" is a daring piece of photography in which the interior of a jungle is used for a setting of the early part of the story. The idea of the play is a decidedly novel one and Howard Hickman and Dorothy Dalton, who fill respectively the leading male and female roles, give unusually fine interpretations of the characters.

During the month two thoroughly typical Frank Keenan characters will be shown. On August 5 "Honor Thy Name" brings Mr. Keenan as a co-star with Charles Ray. He plays a southern gentleman in the autumn of life with feeling and full appreciation of the character. In "The Thoroughbred," scheduled for release on August 27, he is again seen as a southerner, but in this he is one of the delightful horse racing fraternity.

"Hell to Pay Austin," another release for the week of August 20, is one of those big western stories for which Triangle is so well known. It serves to bring Wilfred Lucas to the front as a Triangle star.

Other August features are "The Devil's Needle," in which Norma Talmadge stars, "Shell 43," an H. B. Warner picture, and "Pillars of Society," in which Henry Walthall is seen.

Photographic effects entirely new to motion pictures were achieved by Director Paul Powell and his cameraman in "The Marriage of Molly-O," a new Triangle subject from the Fine Arts studios. They are beautiful effects and until someone gives away the secret, are going to cause much puzzlement.

In the course of the story the young hero takes Molly to the seashore and while they sit on the sand he tells her an Irish fairly tale. As the picture of the young people, with its sharp sunlight and accurate definition, fades out, the beginning of the story dissolves in and the fairy-like quality of the pictured narrative is instantly revealed in the pearl-like delicacy of the image. There is a misty softness that is not the softness got by throwing the image out of focus but that has full depth and light value and a roundness that is almost stereoscopic.

Pathe Advocates Federal Censorship

ANSWER TO PATHE'S SERIAL TO BE FOUND IN BIBLE

J. A. BERST, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, is a firm advocate of federal censorship for moving pictures, believes this furnishes the only available protection against legalized state and town censorship, and is convinced that quick action on the part of everyone concerned is absolutely necessary in order to have the Hughes bill passed.

Lina Cavalieri, celebrated singer soon to appear upon Pathe screens, in "The Shadow of Her Past."

He has therefore sent out a letter to every exhibitor urging his individual effort in the interests of the business, and giving many arguments in favor of the bill. He believes federal censorship would mean better pictures and the elimination of the necessity of the film running the gauntlet of various state and city censoring boards in which individual and prejudiced opinions too often prevail, which would be a good thing from the standpoint of economy as the boards of censors all over the country demand their toll which means an expense of thousands of dollars to the distributor. While the establishment of a federal board will not at once eliminate all existing local boards he thinks it will tend to do so in time, and the fact that there exists such a federal board will be a powerful argument against the establishment of additional local boards in states and cities. Mr. Berst concludes with a plea to every exhibitor to write his congressman at once asking his aid in having the Hughes bill passed.

The answer to Pathe's question "Is Humanity in the Grip of Evil?" is contained in the Bible and there will be a grand searching for the "three words" before the second chapter of the picture has been run, according to W. A. S. Douglas who is at the Balboa studio watching the production of the fourteen chapters of "The Grip of Evil." Mr. Douglas is very much impressed with the work Jackie Saunders is doing in this serial and describes the masterplot not as a serial in the old sense of the film word, although its parts are episodial, but a film picture book in fourteen sections, each section complete in itself but with a chain of common interest.

Cavalieri Once Earned Twelve Cents Per Day

Lina Cavalieri, who is featured with Lucien Muratore in the Pathe Gold Rooster play, "The Shadow of Her Past," released July 17, has had a very eventful life. When scarcely twelve years old she folded papers in the mailing room of a daily paper for a few cents a day. Her great beauty attracted the attention of Prince Sciarra, who thought so beautiful a girl should be given a chance and through the mailing room foreman, offered to pay for her education. It wasn't long before her beauty aided by her voice and acting ability had all Paris at her feet.

Big theaters in ever increasing numbers are booking Pathe pictures. B. F. Keith's, the finest in Columbus, has instituted a new policy, giving three vaudeville, and three picture performances a day. The photoplay performances of one hour and a half each, are devoted solely to Pathe serials and series.

The Pathecolored film, "A Matrimonial Martyr," in which Ruth Roland plays a dual role, is receiving enthusiastic praise because of its beauty of delicate coloring, as well as the value of the story.

The Strand Theater of Newark is booking episodes of "Get-Rich-Quick-Wallingford" as two-reel comedies for two days each week, from Manager Reinlieb of Pathe's Newark office.

R. E. Brown, one of the salesmen in Pathe's Cincinnati office, has booked "The Iron Claw" in 35 theaters in Columbus alone.

According to advices from F. C. Quimby, manager of Pathe's Seattle office, "Excuse Me" recently ran for the eighth time at the Mission Theater in that city, and did a capacity business for the four days on which it was shown.

Manager J. K. Morgan, of Pathe's Buffalo office, reports that in 137 theaters in Erie and Niagara counties, including the cities of Buffalo and Rochester, there is a total of 142 serial runs of Pathe per week, against 94 serial runs of all other companies combined.

Manager Ackerman of the Price Hill Theater, Cincinnati, and Manager Wessling of the Cincinnati Pathe office, recently advertised that patrons who were at the theater at one p. m. to see "The Iron Claw" and "Who's Guilty?" would have a moving picture taken of them and that this picture would be shown the following Saturday with the next episode of the series and serial. Mr. Wessling took about forty feet of film.

First Thanhouser Production for Pathe

Announcement has been made by Pathe of a new policy to be followed in the release of Gold Rooster feature plays. Hereafter three features will be released each month, with the addition of Thanhouser to the Pathe producing companies.

The new policy will go into effect on August 13 with the release of "The Fugitive," a Thanhouser product in five reels featuring Florence La Badie. This picture was produced by Frederic Sullivan from a scenario by Philip Lonergan, and is an absorbing drama with an ingenious plot. The production is excellent, and the acting of Miss La Badie and her co-workers leaves nothing to be desired.

A week after the release of "The Fugitive" on August 20, Pathe will release another stirring photodrama, "A Woman's Fight." This was produced for Pathe by Popular Plays and Players, and was directed by Herbert Blache. The featured players are Geraldine O'Brien and Churlow Bergen, both well known on the legitimate stage and both popular with the picture goers on account of their excellent work in other Pathe pictures.

For the third Gold Rooster release for August Pathe has obtained a real photoplay novelty, "Hidden Valley," a Thanhouser production. This will be released on August 27. It is unusual in many respects, but particularly so in the fact that most of the action takes place in Africa, a continent which, thus far, has been practically neglected by motion picture producers except as a place to obtain scenic pictures.

Valkyrien (Baroness Dewitz) the famous Danish beauty and classical dancer, is featured in this release. Selected by a jury of artists and physical culturists from among 60,000 contestants as the most beautiful young woman in Denmark, Valkyrien is of a type that is very rare in an American photoplay.

Society People in Pathe Fashions

Society likes to work in pictures! This discovery was made last Saturday by Miss Florence Rose, who is producing the "Florence Rose Fashions Pictures" for the Pathe program. Miss Rose had taken her squadron of twelve beautiful girls who appear in the pictures to the Ritz-Carlton for tea, as a reward for the good work of the week. Her cameraman trailed along also, the one lone man of the party.

The party attracted much attention from the patrons of the tea room, among whom were a number of persons prominent in society. One of them, a young man whose father is the wealthy owner of the largest racing stable in the East, stepped up to Miss Rose and asked her why she didn't set up her camera and take some scenes in the tea room. Miss Rose replied that she would be glad to, but had no men. "That's soon fixed," was the answer, and the young man made a tour of the room, enlisting volunteers among the men he knew. The consequence was that after permission had been obtained from the hotel people, some excellent scenes were taken in which many well known New Yorkers figure, among them the wife of the vice-president of the largest munitions company in the United States.

Unique and convincing war scenes add power to Triangle's "Shell 43," featuring the capable H. B. Warner.

A Powell Gleamer

The career of Linda A. Griffith, now starring in the first feature photoplay of the Frank Powell Productions, is as interesting as a chapter in one of our best sellers.

Linda A. Griffith, Powell.

Born in San Francisco, she established quite a reputation as a child actress, appearing in amateur theatricals and later joined the old Alcazar stock company of that city, which has produced many of the greatest legitimate stars of the stage.

She appeared as ingenue with Florence Roberts and Margaret Anglin, and shortly afterward came to New York as a refugee out of the disastrous San Francisco earthquake and fire, in which all her material possessions went up in smoke. After leaving the coast she joined Thomas Dixon's "The Only Woman," with whom she remained until her advent into the motion picture world, with the old Biograph Company.

In the summer of 1908 she played the female lead in an "Adventurous Dolly," the first picture produced by David Wark Griffith for that company and through which she became known as "The Biograph Girl." After four years with Biograph she rested a year, traveling in Europe, and while in Europe took part in the Gaumont film, of the flight by aeroplane of the late Harriet Quimby, from England to France. Upon her return to this country she joined the Kinemacolor Co. of America and was featured in such productions as "The Scarlet Letter," "Everyman," "As the Candle Burns," and many others. When Kinemacolor stopped producing she rejoined Biograph, being featured in K. & E. productions of "Beverly of Graustark," "The Wife," "A Fair Rebel," "The Stampede," and numerous other features.

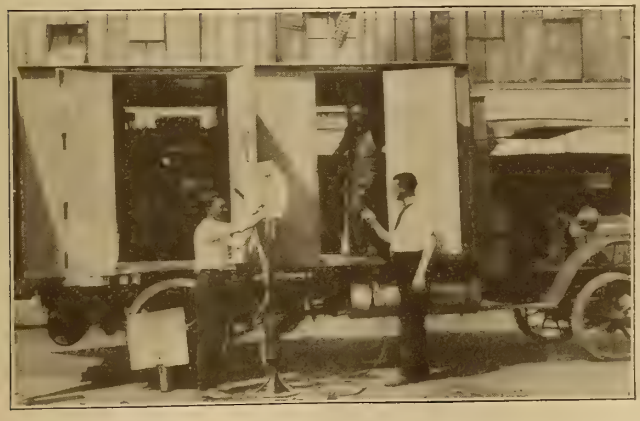
She has written many scenarios and numerous articles for Leslie's Weekly and at present is writing a series of articles for "Film Fun" on early Biograph days, recounting the experiences of many of the moving picture stars of today, who began their careers with the old Biograph.

Marguerite Bertsch is producing her latest story which features Edith Storey and Antonio Moreno and will be released as a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon.

Vitagraph Builds "Traveling Light Plant"

HAMLIN GARLAND STORY FEATURES OVERTON AND WALKER

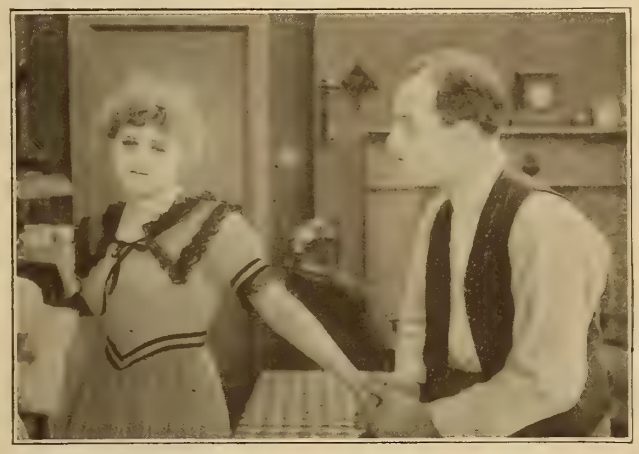
A MAMMOTH 218 ampere dynamo car built in the Vitagraph studio garage was given a try-out in Flatbush last week during an outdoor night scene. There were a great many people in the cast, it being a mob scene in "The Battle Cry of War," and the car's power to give light enough to illuminate the whole area covered by the action was in question. All the light needed was supplied, and the portable dynamo demonstrated its ability to light three city blocks under the ordinary lighting conditions.



The dynamo is driven by a 50 h. p. marine engine; both engine and dynamo are mounted on a 5-ton White truck. The car and all its parts were built by the Vitagraph garage crew. It will be used at outdoor locations where electric power is not available, such as woods and remote roads, to provide arc light enough for any motion picture photography. This is one of the very few and is the largest car of its kind in the United States.

Vitagraph Releases Hamlin Garland Story

A cast, truly worthy of the much abused title "All Star" is one of the distinguishing features of Vitagraph's latest offering in the way of Blue Ribbon feature. The picture in five parts is "Hesper of the Mountains," from the popular book by Hamlin Garland, the powerful short story writer. Lillian Walker and Evart Overton are the two featured members in the play.



Those seen in their support include, Donald Hall, Denton Vane, Rose Tapley, Lillian Burns, Donald Mcbride, Robert Gaillard, Templar Saxe and Josephine Earle.

In brief, the pot tells of Ann, a young eastern miss who admits her dislike of the West, but after witnessing the stoicism of western men is forced to change her opinion and finally marries one of them. As a whole the picture is interesting and sure to please. Some of the outstanding features are the beauty of interior and exterior scenes, clear photography and the attention to detail which Director North has exercised throughout. The picture, with its many scenes of the great outdoors should be an ideal hot weather feature.

Vitagraph's new perambulating lighting plant used for making night scenes out of doors.

Frank Daniels, whose success in many Vitagraph productions has established him as the premier straight comedian in the photoplay world, lives up to his reputation in "Dear Percy" his latest picture. Although it is told in one part, "Dear Percy" has material enough for two or three and the audience is therefore assured of a picture chock full of laughs. The combination of Cyrus Townsend Brady as author, the inimitable Frank as star and Arthur Ellery as producer has brought forth an excellent production.

Lillian Walker and Evart Overton in "Hesper of the Mountains," a five-section Vitagraph Blue Ribbon set free on the last day of July.

Vitagraph Gets Woman Director

Marguerite Bertsch, one of the foremost scenario writers and one of the few women directors in the motion picture profession, has started producing her latest effort, which will be released as a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature.

For a number of years Miss Bertsch was the editor-in-chief of Vitagraph's scenario department and it was then that she wrote a number of the big successes produced by that company.

Some of Miss Bertsch's pictures are "For A Woman's Fair Name," "Salvation Joan," starring Edna May, and "The Law Decides."

Summer Resort Claims Alice Joyce

When Alice Joyce, Vitagraph's popular star, found it would be impossible for her to get away for a vacation this summer, owing to her work in "The Battle Cry of War," she decided to move to Sea Gate, a summer colony situated not far from the large Vitagraph sudios in Flatbush.

The bungalow which Miss Joyce has rented for the season is situated only a few feet from the ocean and she intends to spend her spare moments playing with "Baby Alice," on the beach.

Frank Griffith, one of Mr. Sennett's assistants in the direction of comedies at the Keystone studios, has rejoined his company in Los Angeles.

The Varied Arts building of Thomas H. Ince's new half-million dollar producing plant at Culver City is now completed.

"Watch Your Hands," Says Fox Star

WILLIAM FARNUM DISCOVERS MOVING PICTURES IN 1709

"WATCHING your step in the movies is not half so important as watching your hands," says Stuart Holmes, the screen's most sinister star, who has broken up families by the merest by-play of his fingers, in the pictures.

"The hand is quicker, and in my opinion, more villainous than the eye. Motion picture actors and actresses today are relying entirely too much on facial expressions and flashes from the eye to register the various emotions. They are neglecting the hand, and the inevitable result is that their terminal facilities betray them.

"The hands, as well as the face, can express sadness, madness, gladness, or badness, if you'll only give them the chance. I have seen dozens of instances where the actor has extended his arm with his index finger pointing ferociously toward the door, and his hand quivering indignantly at the poor heroine. But the other hand—oh, that other hand! Half the time it hangs along his side in the most limp, listless and dejected fashion.

"Considering that there are only twenty-seven bones in the hand, it is remarkable to see how histrionic they can be. They certainly are the first aid to the young thespian.

"I have studied the hand to help me portray the diabolical, dress suited demon of the movies, just as I have studied the proper and most villainous way of twirling the moustache and of flicking the ash from the cigarette.

June Caprice, the little Boston school girl whose name Fox is making a familiar photoplay word.

"There are five classes of hands, in the physical sense: Idealistic, delicate with long pointed fingers; realistic, short square fingers; energetic, spatulated fingers; philosophic, rough fingers knotted at the points; and the mixed.

"Open hands indicate garrulity; clenched hands, determination; hands at the side straight with the fingers half bent toward the palm mean prudence; limp, dangling hands, listlessness; and so on.

"A good actor can make his hands as eloquent as his mouth on any occasion. Here's my motto: A bone in the hand is worth two in the head."

Talking Pictures in 1709

Moving pictures in 1709, you say? It's true. William Farnum, the Fox Samson of the screen, has received from an English admirer within the last week a page of the London Daily Courant's issue for May 9, 1709, which contains an advertisement as curious as it is interesting. The sheet had evidently been preserved with the greatest care, for it arrived in admirable condition for a two-hundred-year-old. Paradoxically, it was a trifle yellow, but still "in the pink of condition."

The advertisement is for a moving picture then being exhibited in England by the popular comedian Pinketham, and characterizes the invention as "A Most Famous Artificial and Wonderful Thing."

It is stated that the Artist Master of this piece had spent five years in contriving and perfecting it. Originally designed for a present "to a Great Prince in Germany, to be put in his chiefest cabinet of greatest Rarities," the death of that personage put it back into the hands of the maker, "who now presents it to the View and Diversion of all Ingenious Persons."

Did you ever hear of a plumber whose chief stock in trade was a nice, neat little crochet needle; who went to work in his idle hours—if you will pardon the paradox—and knitted a beautiful pair of slippers, the daintiest imaginable, for a great motion picture actress because he admired her art?

You probably have not.

And you certainly never heard of a case which had in addition to the foregoing, the fact that the man was so enamored of the actress's art—and his gift—that he called up the star from his home in Atlanta, Georgia, to find out whether she received the slippers intact and unharmed.

Miss Bara received the pair of slippers in question a few days ago. The name signed to the note that accompanied the twain looked for all the world like Francis, but the i had not been dotted in the haste of composing the letter, so Miss Bara judged, quite naturally, that the word was Frances. The point at issue, of course, was whether the donor was of masculine or feminine persuasion.

The Fox actress felt certain that the sender was a woman when she read the epistle which came with them. It ran:

"Dear Miss Bara: I knitted these myself for you alone. I have seen you many times in moving pictures, and think a great deal of you. These slippers represent a small token of my deep appreciation of your work, and the affection I have for you. You're a dear!"

Miss Bara wrote back to her admirer:

"Dear Little Friend: Thanks so much for remembering me as you have. I have many girl friends like you, who send me all kinds of things, but I don't know when I've ever received anything so useful as your beautiful knitted slippers."

Four days later came this answer, and with it the denouement:

"Dear Little Friend: I'm glad you liked the slippers, but I'm afraid you're a trifle mixed by my name. It is not Frances, but Francis, and I'm not a little girl, but a grown-up, man-sized plumber."

Jane and Katherine Lee, two of Fox's old standbys.

A. H. Van Buren Becomes a Fox Star

Archimedes Heckman Van Buren, known throughout the United States for his work in stock companies, is one of William Fox's latest acquisitions. He will have the leading male role in a coming release.

Gloucester, Mass., is responsible for Mr. Van Buren's classic first name. He left Gloucester for New Haven, and began studying there, with the intention of entering the shipping business. After nine years in the offices of a steamship company and on their vessels at sea, he gave up "steamboating" as he called it.

He has acted in stock in cities all over the country. For the last six years, he has headed his own organization in Washington, D. C.

Mr. Van Buren has played more than 200 parts and has done Ibsen, Sudermann, Shaw and Shakespeare.

William Farnum and Virginia Pearson in New Features

William Fox announces these releases, with stories as unusual and picturesque as the settings in which they are laid, for the first three weeks in August.

August 7—Ormi Hawley, in "Where Love Leads," a picture of love and adventure in college and newspaper life. The fact that the story is based on a dream forms a deft concluding touch, with an ending that is different.

August 14—William Farnum, in "The End of the Trail." Mr. Farnum acts the role of a French Canadian factor in a snow-bound trading post. A strong love tale runs through the film.

August 21—Virginia Pearson, in "Daredevil Kate," the drama of a woman's redemption. Kenneth Hunter plays opposite Miss Pearson.

A Fine Chicago Screen House

Chicago has many fine theaters devoted to pictures, but none of them in the outlying centers of population is finer than the De Luxe, at 1141 Wilson avenue. The noteworthy feature about this house is its splendid architectural design. Were there any photographs of the house in existence we would surely show one here. Whenever a picture of the house is secured, it will be printed in this paper.

The building was constructed for a theater and for a theater only by the owners, Cuneo brothers. That is the main reason for its beauty and convenience. The vital quality of simplicity is found to a very satisfying degree, and yet there is no dearth of decoration. The house was built four years ago and has been turning a profit since its debut into the business. The seating capacity is 520, and judging from the folks who are "held out" on several evenings a week, a larger number of chairs could be filled regularly.

L. A. Cuneo, an energetic young man of 25, is mananging the house for the Cuneo Amusement Company, which consists of Lawrence Cuneo, L. A. Cuneo, Frank Cuneo and C. Cuneo, the brothers mentioned above.

"The most important thing about a house," says this young manager, "is the films. You've got to give them a good show and we take a lot of pains to get just exactly the pictures that appeal to this neighborhood.

"The thing of next importance is music. We get good players, both for our organ and in the orchestra. Music mustn't be too loud, and once in a while it should pause altogether to give folks' ears a rest so they'll enjoy the next more. But, of course, I mean that only to apply to a very limited extent, as our audiences change too often to get very tired of the music.

"Ventilation is of great importance. It's almost first in summer. Nobody will say the show is good if the house is too warm. They won't come in so easy the next time either if they find the theater hot the first time. Stand in this door here," the manager said to the representative of MOTOGRAPHY. "Feel that cool air coming out of the house, instead of going in? That shows how our ventilation is. Very seldom does anyone find it too warm in there, as we have our ventilation system big enough to blow the house so full of fresh air all the time that it overflows out of the doors and ventilating shafts as you feel it doing now. That keeps the atmosphere fresh and helps people to enjoy the show, and brings 'em back again.

"Here's another thing which I think is a pretty good idea," continued the boss of the De Luxe. And he went to the wall near the first door leading into the auditorium from the lobby and opened a small door in the wall. "Here are all the switches controlling every light in the house. Now these are marked so that any patron or anybody who doesn't know anything about electricity or the house can handle it. In that way our employes make no mistakes, and also in the case of an emergency such as a panic, anyone could throw on the lights."

Mr. Cuneo acquired his theater experience in various Chicago houses. He is for clean pictures and the utmost that a manager can do for his patrons. That's the reason Wilson avenue people stroll into the De Luxe in such large numbers, in spite of the fact that there are other houses near by.

"The Daring of Diana"

V. L. S. E. Offers Blue Ribbon Newspaper Melodrama. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

ANITA STEWART'S ability and her personal magnetism have made her such a widely popular screen actress that there is every reason to believe that her latest appearance on the V. L. S. E. program in a newspaper melodrama playing in Paris and New York will prove a good box-office attraction.

Diana is given a big assignment.

Miss Stewart's talents will be put to the test in "The Daring of Diana." If audiences are to be entertained by this picture they must find their full enjoyment in watching the star, for there is little else to interest the spectator in a melodrama that is neither convincing nor well constructed.

At times "The Daring of Diana" savors of the paper-covered detective stories. The villains in the play thrice have recourse to the cellar of a house as a prison for the individuals they would keep out of their way. To offset the inconsistencies and the convenient developments the author utilized in working the plot to its happy conclusion, there is plenty of action. Fast action invariably strikes a responsive chord and audiences usually find satisfaction enough in "action" to forget for the time being that Reason is being relegated to some dark corner behind the screen.

Diana is a reporter on the Argus, one of New York's biggest newspapers. The editor of the Argus is the son of the owner. Jason Briscoe, the owner, has not been near this country for a period of twenty-five years. He became a wanderer immediately after the death of his wife, which occurred when the son was born.

Briscoe begins to long to see his son and he prepares to return to New York. His Paris agent evolves a scheme. Briscoe is locked in a celler on the outskirts of Paris and the agent comes to New York and represents himself as Jason Briscoe. He is followed by his former mistress. Diana is working on a big graft story. A political ring cannot induce, force, or bribe the editor of the Argus and it is a factor politically, so they plan to buy the Argus.

The girl reporter is lead to the home of the supposed Jason Briscoe. Here she learns all, for the agent has just shot his ertswhile mistress and she tells Diana the whole plot. Both women are locked in the cellar, but Diana makes her escape and arrives at the office of the Argus in time to expose the agent, who is about to sign the papers which will give the political ring control of the publication. The real Jason Briscoe is released by the Paris police and he arrives in New York and is introduced to his future daughter-in-law, who is Diana Pearson.

The story is by Charles L. Gaskill, and S. Rankin Drew directed its production, which at best was not a very fruitful task; even so, Mr. Drew has given us better directed pictures. Anders Randolf is good as the Paris agent. He does a great deal with the part. Julia Swayne Gordon makes a very favorable impression as Fanchette. Francis Morgan, Charles Wellesley and Donald MacBride are included in the cast. The settings are in most instances quite pleasing, and the photography is clear throughout.

"Sandy—Reformer"

Two-Reel "Mustang" Drama Released August 4. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE camera caught a very exciting and apparently very real bit of "broncho-busting" at the opening scene in this western play in which Art Acord and Helene Rosson have the leading roles. Murdock MacQuarrie is the director of the production, which is a very good two-reel drama. There is plenty of action, an interesting story and good character drawing.

Sandy, a cowboy, invests his savings, two thousand dollars, in a fake mining affair. When he learns that he has been tricked, he determines on revenge, and his method of turning the tables on the promoters of the fake forms the plot of the story.

Henry Botsford, who sold Sandy the worthless stock, is trapped by the apparently guileless cowboy and led into the mountains. There he holds him a prisoner until he shall consent to buy back the worthless mining stock.

In the meantime, Beth, Botsford's daughter, has run away from home because her father had insisted that she marry a wealthy man she did not love. She obtains a position as waitress in a restaurant and there meets Sandy, who at once falls in love with her. At last, Botsford is forced to sign a check for the two thousand dollars Sandy had paid him, and Sandy, still keeping the man a prisoner, returns to the town to cash the check. Then he and Beth are married, and together go to the cabin and release the now thoroughly subdued financier.

"The Devil's Needle"

Tully Marshall in Triangle-Fine Arts Drama. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

WRITTEN by Chester Withey and Roy Somerville, "The Devil's Needle" is a well devised drama which is commendable both for its sustained interest and the remarkably good opportunities it affords Tully Marshall, who appears in the role of an artist who becomes addicted to morphine. Ordinarily a characterization as impressive as that rendered by Marshall in this picture would be the outstanding feature of an offering but "The Devil's Needle" is not an ordinary picture.

Norma Talmadge in a character which is itself quite different from the usual in plays of this kind further distinguishes the part by a performance of singular naturalness and decided appeal. With Miss Talmadge at her best and an exceptionally good play is Mr. Marshall in competition and, as a result, the outstanding feature is that "The Devil's Needle" is a picture of high merit.

The play works up to an intensely interesting climax, strongly melodramatic, and the ending is very artistic. Tully Marshall is the artist, David White, whose model suggests that he try a hypodermic injection of morphine to quiet his shattered nerves. He is tempted and in impatience orders Rene to leave. He paces about his apartment and on walking into the dressing room for his models he discovers the hypodermic needle and succumbs to the desire to try its effect.

He continues to use the drug but it does not effect him noticeably until after he has been married to the daughter of a wealthy and prominent lawyer for some time. The girl eloped with White and by so doing cut herself off from her father. The artist searches for Rene while suffering terribly for a portion of the drug. The model has since become cured of her desire for morphine and she is struck with remorse when she sees White in such a pitiable condition from a vice which she encouraged in him. Rene pleads with him and induces him to attempt to be a man once more. After conquering the habit he returns to the city and though he had intended to leave Wynne free to marry Hugh Gordon, a loyal friend, man and wife are reconciled.

Marguerite Marsh portrays Wynne with pleasing sincerity. F. A. Turner, Howard Gaye and Paul Le Blanc are also in the cast. Mr. Withey directed the production. The treatment is very effective. "The Devil's Needle" is a credit to the Fine Arts studio and it will win the applause of the exhibitors of Triangle plays.

"Miss Petticoats"

World-Peerless Release in Five Parts Featuring Miss Alice Brady. Reviewed by Hugh Hoffman

THOSE who love Alice Brady are going to love this beautiful picture. She has not had a part in some time that is as good as this one. In it she gives two extreme portrayals of poverty and wealth. Beginning as the adopted daughter of a poor superannuated mariner, she passes through the different degrees of human progress and at the end appears as a cultivated countess of considerable wealth.

Miss Brady is very much in evidence all through the picture, and her pleasing personality assures for her a genuine welcome and appreciation every moment she is on the screen. There is a splendid supporting cast that lifts the story out of the mediocre class and calls forth considerable appreciation of the work of individual players. Robert Elliott as the minister in the leading role, opposite Miss Brady, is well selected for the part and plays it in a most convincing way. Arthur Ashley does a very neat light-heavy part, if there can be any such thing as a light-heavy. Johnny Hines is also in the cast; his work needs little praise here as it is well known and liked by the vast legions of movie fans.

Miss Brady, as Agnes the old boatman's daughter, attracts the attention of a wealthy lady by stopping a runaway team. For this she is rewarded by the wealthy lady with a position as private secretary. The wealthy lady has a nephew who is concerned chiefly with the opposite sex. The presence of Agnes in the house arouses the jealousy of one of the nephew's lady admirers, who also happens to be a married woman. This jealousy causes Agnes considerable trouble and anxiety. The jealous woman endeavors to surround her with scandal, and succeeds to the extent that it causes the death of Agnes' father.

To get away from the scandal the wealthy lady takes Agnes to Europe for several years to educate her. While there they learn that Agnes is a countess and has a great fortune coming to her. She returns to America with the wealthy woman and is quite triumphant over the unkind ladies who endeavored to besmirch her fair name. She marries the minister and those who had wronged her come to her penitently and ask forgiveness, which is gracefully granted.

The many beautiful scenes, both interior and exterior, in this production, help to make it doubly pleasing. The backgrounds are all worthy of the beautiful star, and in the aggregate the feature is altogether delightful.

"The Beast"

A Five-Reel William Fox Drama Released July 24. Reviewed by George W. Graves

IN William Fox's "The Beast" we have a virile drama which takes as its theme the taming and softening of a rough Westerner, largely brutal in nature, by the influence of the very girl he has sought to injure. From this it can be surmised that there is plenty of heart interest, as well as red-blooded action—which is the actual fact. George Walsh gives a realistic interpretation of "The Beast," a role which calls for not a little strenuous acting. Anna Luther is as effective and attractive in her role as can be, and she displays much daring. A pinch of comedy is afforded by Edward Cecil, playing Sir Charles.

The story is not by any means novel in its theme, but it is decidedly well developed and well acted, and all in all constitutes an offering that will go well, for it is the kind of drama that the public delights in. The story was written and directed by Richard Stanton. Settings and photography are uniformly good, the masquerade set used in one of the closing scenes being the most elaborate.

While touring in the West with her father, Mildred Manning leaves the train in the company of her ardent English suitor, Sir Charles Beverly, for a short reconnoitre in a near-by village. While Sir Charles is losing his money at faro in the saloon, Mildred tries to get a peek in at a real Western dance. She is discovered by a couple of drunken revelers, who both claim her as their prize. Then Del Burton, a ranch owner, comes upon the scene, fights for the girl and claims her as his prize, riding away with her on horseback.

Meanwhile Sir Charles returns to the train, thinking Mildred has preceded him, and the party starts off without anybody missing Mildred. Del, in order to escape pursuers, throws himself and the girl into a swirling river, from which they both emerge only after near exhaustion. During their short but exciting companionship, Mildred's womanliness awakens the better man and Del assures her that she need fear no longer—that he is no longer a "beast." When the rescue party returns for Mildred, Del sees that she is safely returned to her people.

Some time later, Del Burton, now a cattle king, comes East to beg Mildred's forgiveness. He meets a friend who takes him in hand and gives him the necessary Eastern polish. Then, when Del does finally meet the girl, she cannot penetrate his transformation. At a large masquerade ball, however, Del fits himself out in his Western attire and introduces himself as "The Beast." A touching meeting and forgiveness follows.

first scene in chapter ten explains that the cable was not really cut, as it seemed, but that "Hook" Barnacle, like a good guardian angel, had prevented Mahlin from chopping the rope and had aided Hope across the canyon.

Cleo and Hope then recross the canyon in the cable basket. When they are about half way over, Morton, the one who had kidnaped Cleo, returns in the aeroplane. He sees the escaping couple and fires upon them. This adds a further touch of danger to their perilous position. The bullets do not injure them, but Hope fires to better effect, sending a bullet through the gasoline tank of the aeroplane. The machine soon catches fire, and crashes to the ground, one of the spectacular scenes of the episode. The villain escapes serious injury, however.

Hope and Cleo finally reach comparative safety, and with "Hook," pause to examine the book which Cleo brought from the cabin. Mahlin and Satsuma watch from ambush, and then attack the men. Hope and "Hook" are overcome, but Cleo escapes and hides from her pursuers. Later Hope regains consciousness and sets out to find the lost heroine. On his way, he is caught in quicksand. Cleo, from the top of a cliff, sees his danger and climbs down a grapevine to his rescue. Just as she reaches Hope, Satsuma, who has been watching his chance for mischief, cuts the vine, and we leave our hero and heroine being slowly drawn into the depths of the quicksand.

"The Prince Chap"

Selig Five-Reel Drama Released Through V. L. S. E. July 24. Reviewed by G. Harris.

ALTHOUGH the conditions under which this picture was shown for review were not such as to bring out its best features (one-reel of the Selig-Tribune news weekly being interpolated between the third and fourth reel of the drama) still a number of excellent points in the production were apparent. The most striking one perhaps is its humanness, the reality of its characters. Another is the well sustained tone, local color, of the play, a result of carefully planned detail.

The setting of most of the incidents of the story is in London about twenty years ago, and the characters wear costumes of that period. Marshall Neilan, who has directed the picture as well as played the leading role, is seen as William Peyton, a struggling artist. The sets representing his surroundings in a poorer section of London, are unusual and interesting, and they look less like sets than like places that had really been lived in. The various characters introduced are interesting and get away from the conventional.

Peyton, an unsuccessful artist, goes from America to London. He is engaged to Alice Travers (Bessie Eyton), who promises to wait for him. In London, his friend has secured a studio and living apartments, and the services of Runion, a down-and-out old fellow, of whom George Fawcett makes a most vivid characterization. Another member of the household is a little slavey, Phoebe Puckers, excellently depicted by Fannie Cohn.

As the model for his picture, Peyton has Arline Arrington (Mary Charleson), whose husband is a worthless sort and who has a little daughter to care for. Arline becomes ill and before she dies, wins Peyton's promise to care for the child. So little Claudia is added to the household. A little girl not named in the cast plays this role and proves a most charming actress. There are a number of excellent bits of humor introduced in this part of the story, most of it contributed by the little girl and Runion.

The years go by and still Peyton does not win success. Alice's love for him is gradually being killed by the insinuations of her cousin in London regarding Peyton's mode of life. When Peyton adopts the model's daughter and cares for her, the cousin convinces Alice that the child is really Peyton's. Later Alice visits Peyton in London and jealously demands that he give up the little girl, but Peyton will not break his promise to the dead mother. So Alice marries Paul Helmer, another suitor.

There is a skip of ten or more years, until the death of Alice's husband. Alice, who repented of her hasty marriage, returns to London. Claudia, now grown up, is in love with her guardian, but Peyton still believes that he cares only for Alice. However, when Alice returns, Peyton realizes that his love has been transferred to Claudia, and they are married.

The cast of players includes Camille D'Arcy, Margaret Fawcett, Cecil Holland and Charles Gerard.

"The Strength of Donald McKenzie"

William Russell in American Mutual Star Feature. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

TWO things are emphasized in this production and on them its appeal rests. These are the personality of the star, William Russell, and the mountain settings, the charm of the wild places. There isn't must of a plot to the story and there isn't much action, but audiences who like William Russell will be pleased with the offering. The photography is good and the exteriors very beautiful. The spirit of the woods is well caught.

Russell has the role of Donald McKenzie, a woodsman who combines the strength of the forester with the mentality of a poet. Charlotte Burton has the leading feminine role, the daughter of a publisher who comes to the mountains to regain his health. Donald falls in love with the girl. When she and her father return to the city, Donald sends to them, under an assumed name, his volume of poems. The publisher, Condon, believes that the unknown poet is a genius and that the book will be a success.

Later he and his daughter, Mabel, return to the mountains. With them is Maynard Randall, a suitor of Mabel's. He becomes the villain of the story, for when Donald objects to his attentions to a girl of the village, he resolves to injure the woodsman in the eyes of Mabel and her father.

Randall is aided in his schemes for revenge by Pierre, a half-breed who dislikes Donald. While Donald and Mabel are on an exploring expedition in the woods, Pierre shoots and wounds Donald. In the meantime, the girl's father, worried by their long absence, sets out to find them. In the meantime, Pierre himself is shot by a warden for poaching, and he is cared for by Mabel and Donald. When Condon and Randall find them, Pierre, in gratitude to her rescuers, tells of Randall's plots. And then Mabel informs her father that the author of the book which is to win a fortune is Donald and that she is going to marry him.

scenes on a very hot evening. For many of the events of chapter eleven occur at the country home of Gloria's brother, and include toboggaan slides, skating and sleigh riding. Mulry is visiting in the country near the Stafford home, and Gloria and he meet. Mulry, finding Gloria's direct questioning too confusing, leaves hurriedly for Palm Beach. Gloria follows, bringing with her her reluctant family. Mulry's attempt to avoid the girl by pretending to drown, her rescue of him, and his final escape, all are good comedy.

But though Gloria learns little from Mulry, she does make an important discovery while in Florida. Accidentally she and Royce meet the Seminole chief who had terrified Gloria years ago on her excursion into the Everglades. Through him, Gloria learns that not Freneau but Royce had been her rescuer.

In chapter twelve, the family is again in New York. To distract Gloria's thoughts from the tragedy of Freneau's death, Dr. Royce suggests interesting her in social work. Accordingly, Gloria, her father and Royce pay a visit to the night court. Apparently a digression from the story, this event is important when we find, awaiting their trials before the judge, Mulry, arrested for speeding, and Gideon Trask, Freneau's murderer, arrested for disorderly conduct.

A waiter, Casinur, is also brought to trial, and his little son, Staas, is turned over to the Gerry Society. Gloria intercedes and promises to care for the boy. Then Trask is brought in and Gloria recognizes him as the man she saw kill Freneau. She is prevented by her father and Royce from telling her story and the man is discharged.

While the progress of the story is very slow, and much irrelevant detail is brought in, one of the faults of this serial, this is counter-balanced by the skill in presenting these details. As usual, the minor roles as well as the major ones are excellently acted, and the points of humor or pathos are well "put across."

"Shell 43"

Triangle-Ince Offering a Strong War Drama by C. Gardner Sullivan. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

NEVER has a more suspenseful and decidedly human war play than "Shell 43," reached the screen. Written by C. Gardner Sullivan, this drama from the Ince studios tells of a spy's work in the present war and taken as a whole the picture, which was produced under the direction of Reginald Barker, is one of the most interesting and thoroughly satisfactory five-reel offerings we have ever seen.

Since the drama deals with the present war, the exhibitor may be more or less concerned as to whether or not the cause of either one or the other belligerents is upheld. This is not the case. "Shell 43" is strictly neutral. The main character is an English spy operating within the German lines, but the spectator's sympathy is excited solely by the man and not the country for whose cause he gives up his life.

H. B. Warner as William Berner, supposed to be a newspaper correspondent for a Chicago daily, does the best work of his career in motion pictures. The author has drawn and presented this character with great skill and the enactment of it is in all particulars excellent.

Berner's credentials and his conduct when put to a test satisfy the German military officials that he is as represented, a war correspondent. He is the guest of the Baroness Von Altman when he learns that a shift in the lines of the Allies brings the house in which he is a guest under the fire to be opened at daylight.

Berner is sorely tried. The eldest daughter who is the wife of an officer in the German Army lies unconscious with her newborn child and the physician informs him that to move her at this time will cause her death. But he has sworn to serve his country in a capacity wherein brave deeds are their own reward, for no spy can hope for military honors.

Berner's struggle with the conflicting emotions at this time is depicted most effectively and the scenes at this point are representative of the best, dramatically, that the screen has offered to date. The play then becomes a series of thrills in which Berner does save the three women, the protection of whose lives has been thrust upon him, and he dies after fulfilling his mission as a spy.

The supporting cast, which includes Enid Markey, George Fisher, Margaret Thompson and Louise Brownell, is of a high order, all of these players appearing to marked advantage in a play containing the elements of appeal. The production is splendid. There are impressive battle scenes and convincing settings, but the battle scenes are not more numerous of duration than the story demands, which is a most commendable thing. A most admirable drama, faultlessly enacted and produced is "Shell 43."

'The Old Man Who Tried to Grow Young'

Three-Reel Selig Drama Released July 31. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS melodramatic sketch, in which improbabilities are carried along by swift action, has been directed by T. N. Heffron from a story by Malcolm Douglas.

Al. W. Filson has the title role, an elderly millionaire whose love for a young girl results in his becoming the dupe of a faker with an "elixir of youth." Rodney Graves, the millionaire, and George Harding, his secretary, both love Doris Keene (Vivian Reed). Harding and Doris are engaged to be married, but Graves believes he can still win the girl. Dr. Ceneri, who pretends to be an East Indian magician, sells Graves a supposed elixir of youth, then hypnotizes him and dyes his hair. But still Graves cannot interest Doris.

Then Graves determines to get the younger man out of the way. He accuses the secretary of stealing funds from the safe. Harding is arrested and sent to jail. Then Graves tells Doris that he will save Harding if she will break the engagement and marry him. She does so and they are married. The millionaire has a weak heart, and the supposed elixir is really a harmful drug. So he dies immediately after the wedding, but not before he reveals the plot against Harding. This confession saves the secretary, who is at once released. Doris inherits Graves' fortune and she and Harding are married.

The cast of players include Charles West, Harry Lonsdale, and Eugenie Besserer.

"Father and Son"

Henry E. Dixey in Mutual Masterpicture. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

KEEN competition in the pickle industry is the means of bringing together two marriageable couples and this forms the background for a five-reel comedy in which Henry E. Dixey makes his initial screen appearance. The picture has been well produced and the acting is generally good, but "Father and Son," though capable of holding the attention of its audience, never becomes very amusing. Its continued though never fulfilled promise is the only thing which permits it to escape being dull.

On several occasions Mr. Dixey shows himself capable of doing good comedy work before the camera, as was to be expected of an actor of such experience and talent on the speaking stage and the fact that he over-acts on one or two occasions is as much chargeable to the fruitless part as it is to him personally.

Mr. Dixey is Andrew Slocum whose famous bottled pickles are fast being displaced in the public favor by a cheaper grade offered by P. I. Winkle, which concern is managed by the widow of its founder. Slocum begins to worry about the condition of business and he sends his son, just back from college, to obtain a job at the Winkle factory and learn their formula.

The daughter of the widow and Andy are at once quite taken with each other and in a short time they decide to elope. Mrs. Winkle is now worried about business and she secures a position as Slocum's secretary and procures his new formulas. But these she decides to return when she learns that her daughter has eloped with Slocum's son. Then there are a number of situations, some of them a bit diverting, but most of them are both conventional and spiritless, and the ending finds all happy. Slocum, the elder, and Mrs. Winkle are married and Andy and Matilda are forgiven.

There is realism to the scenes occurring in the factory of Slocum; small wonder at that since the setting is for certain a pickle bottling plant. The other settings and the photography are also good. Gladden James, Milicent Evans and Mabel Montgomery support Mr. Dixey.

"Under Cover"

Famous Players-Paramount Production Released July 20. Reviewed by George W. Graves

ROI COOPER MEGRUE'S fascinating detective drama, with all its heart throbs and surprises, has been most ably adapted for screen presentation by the Famous Players Company. So well has it been screened that it easily constitutes one of that company's 1916 triumphs. Its story is the embodiment of mystery, rapid action and effective situations. So unexpected is the outcome, and at the same time so neatly finished, that one marvels not a little at its ingenuity.

Convincing, intelligent direction accounts in a large measure for the picture's success. The cast is headed by Hazel Dawn and Owen Moore and never have we seen either of these artists at better advantage. Others in the cast are William Courtleigh, Jr., Ethel Fleming, Frank Losee and Ida Darling. Beautiful photography and picturesque settings contribute their share in making the picture a delight to the eye. Robert G. Vignola directed.

Hazel Dawn portrays the part of Ethel Cartwright, a girl, popular in elite society circles, who, to protect her sister, is forced to become a secret agent of the United States Customs. The fact that Dan Taylor, the chief Customs official, knows her sister is guilty of a theft, is what forces Ethel to work for him.

Taylor, laying for a certain Steven Denby (Owen Moore), who he knows has smuggled a high-priced necklace into this country, sends Ethel to a Long Island estate where Denby is visiting, to spy upon him and aid the Customs men in his capture. Denby turns out to be a young man whom Ethel has met in Europe and whom she has admired, so her task is difficult, growing more so as she falls in love with him.

After many exciting situations Taylor gets his man, but agrees to accept an enormous bribe. No sooner has the corrupt official reached out for the tempting money, however, than Denby reveals himself as a member of the United States Secret Service and claims Taylor as his victim. Denby has long been on the trail of this unprincipled official, and the smuggling affair was only a prearranged trap. When Ethel sees that the object of her admiration and love is more than a common thief, a great burden is lifted from her, and also when Denby learns that Ethel has not been willingly pitting herself against him, he feels better, so the story closes happily, with the adjustment of the sister's theft.

SAMUEL F. ROTHAPFEL, managing director of the Rialto Theater in New York, has secured some pictures of extreme interest to run serially on the scenic and educational portion of his program for about four or five weeks, beginning July 23.

"The Lure of Alaska" comprises one of the most instructive, scenically beautiful and unusual collections of educational pictures ever shown. They were taken personally by Dr. Leonard S. Sugden, late surgeon of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police. Dr. Sugden will be present at all showings to explain them in detail in a better way than subtitles ever could.

Perhaps the most remarkable thing about these pictures and the accompanying lecture are the surprising facts revealed about our land in the North, facts which are utterly at variance with the preconceived notions we have entertained. Among the sensational and novel parts of the film are to be found views of shooting down treacherous rapids (Dr. Sugden himself having piloted on some four hundred trips), spouting whales, salmon leaping up rushing waterfalls, the birth of an iceberg from a glacier, a herd of caribou swimming a river and wonderful methods of modern mining.

We feel that all who have the good fortune to witness these pictures and to hear Dr. Sugden's intelligent remarks will experience a pleasure they will not soon forget. Thus Mr. Rothapfel's interest in his patrons will be reflected in their interest in his theater.

"The War Bride of Plumville"

Three-Reel Essanay Release of August 5. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

FLORENCE OBERLE and Hugh Thompson have the principal comedy roles in this comedy drama. There is a love story in the play and in this Nell Craig and Edmund F. Cobb are the leads. A small town whose principal industry is the iron works forms the settings of the story. The photography is good, and the story clear. The comedy element is emphasized. The offering as a whole will amuse an audience.

Two adventurers, Captain Dalziel and Sargent, his accomplice, played by Ullrich Haupt and Harry Dunkinson, arrive in the town of Plumville. The iron works there are owned by Erza Plum (Ernest Maupin), whose one daughter, Sallie, is in love with the manager of the works, Frank Hazard (Edmund F. Cobb). The adventurers pose as buyers for a foreign government and trick Erza Plum out of a large amount of money. Also, the captain, pretending to be a nobleman, wins the affection of Sallie away from the young manager, while his accomplice is attentive to Amanda (Florence Oberle), Erza's sister, whose vinegary disposition is the basis of some of the humor of the play.

Judge Pendlehurst is also a suitor of Amanda's, and he and Frank warn the others against the imposters, but in vain. At last the detectives from the city arrive and the adventurers are arrested. Then things go back to their original status, except for Erza Plum, who has lost money in the stock market. Sallie is married to Frank, Amanda to the judge.

Ince Vampire Play

Louise Glaum, famous for her "vampire" characterizations, and Charles Ray, the popular juvenile, are presented by Thomas H. Ince as co-stars in a forceful Triangle drama by C. Gardner Sullivan entitled "The Wolf Woman." The production serves to introduce Miss Glaum as a full-fledged star, the story having been written expressly to suit her peculiar talents, and that she has more than succeeded in justifying her promotion is the unqualified statement of Producer Ince and his associates.

"The Wolf Woman" tells the pitiful story of a siren's fall, a fall that carried her far into the depths of depravity—but not until she had been robbed, by a trick of fate, of her one potent weapon, beauty.

What is said to be one of the strongest arrays of talent ever assembled for an Ince production is appearing in support of Charles Ray in the Triangle comedy-drama by J. G. Hawks in which Ray is appearing as star under the directorial wing of Raymond B. West. The principal feminine role is being played by Margaret Thompson, the pretty blonde ingenue, who has been seen frequently in support of Ince stars. Miss Thompson has the part of a rich American girl. Next in importance among the fair contingent is Marjory Wilson, whose work in Triangle plays also is well-known and liked. She has the role of Ray's English sweetheart. Howard Hickman has the biggest male part, excepting, of course, that of Ray. Others in the cast include George Fisher, Charles K. French, Louise Brownell, Walt Whitman and Jerome Storm.

It's E. J. O'Donnell

One of the first live wires to be seen sparkling around headquarters at the Chicago Convention was E. J. O'Donnell of Brooklyn. When the exhibitors and film men took a trip out to the Essanay plant Mr. O'Donnell went along and had his picture taken out there, alongside of his chum, Lee A. Ochs, new president of the M. P. E. L., and Miss Bessie Gros, Tom Ince's new star being discovered by the aforementioned gentlemen. As a real magazine should, MOTOGRAPHY printed that picture in last week's issue, but Mr. O'Donnell's identity was all mixed up with that of another man, thereby complimenting both men. We hereby wish to state, however, that E. J. O'Donnell and no other was the courtier protecting one side of the fair damsel on the scene.

Universal Director Joseph De Grasse is making progress filming "If My Country Should Call," a five-reel society drama featuring Dorothy Phillips and Lon Chaney.

Cleo Madison, Universal star who has been producing the pictures in which she stars, will have the leading role in a big production of a modernized version of "La Tosca."

ABOUT BUDDING PLAYS, AND NEWS OF THE TRADE

Metro Fights Poliomyelitis Panic

Ormi Hawley Has Joined Metro and Will First Appear in "The Evil Men Do," a Powerful Drama.

RICHARD A. ROWLAND, president of the Metro Pictures Corporation, has inaugurated on behalf of the motion picture exhibitors, a nation wide fight against the infantile paralysis panic. As a result of a direct result of the visit of Mr. Rowland's special envoy to Washington, Assistant Surgeon General W. C. Rucker issued a statement calling on the entire country to refrain from panic as there was no cause whatever for panic, and Mr. Rowland has distributed broadcast among motion picture theaters a one-sheet poster setting forth the reassurance of General Rucker.

The Metro-Rolfe "God's Half Acre" is filled with comfortable, delightful human nature scenes, and Mabel Taliaferro binds all your sympathies up with the heroine.

The fright, shared in as much by the health authorities as by the general public and made greater by the sensational treatment given by the newspapers, resulted not only in paralysis for the business of many motion picture houses but in the closing of the very play grounds where children of the tenements get their only chance for fresh air. More deaths will undoubtedly result from the closing of the play grounds than from the disease itself.

Mr. Rowland urges every exhibitor to do his best to inform the people of his neighborhood of the real facts and thus make more effective the work that has been done by the newspapers The Metro offices during the campaign have resembled a bee-hive and an extra force of stenographers and clerks have been employed to handle the rush of material that has been supplied to the newspapers daily.

With a company headed by Edmund Breese and including such players as Ormi Hawley, Clifford Bruce, Evelyn Brent, George Morrel, A. L. McArthur, George Harcourt and Florence Moore, Director Harry Revier is in a logging camp in the northern part of Maine making the exteriors for the big Metro feature, "The Evil Men Do," which is being produced by the Popular Plays and Players.

Harry Revier, supervising director of the Popular Plays and Players, recently entertained with a novel birthday dinner. He invited about twenty of his friends to meet him at the Hotel McAlpin, from there he took them by auto to the Pennsylvania station and the dinner was served on a train bound for Philadelphia. Mr. Revier explained the reason for the dinner en train was that he was born on a train somewhere near Philadelphia, he didn't know exactly where.

Ormi Hawley has joined the Metro forces and will make her debut on the Metro program in "The Evil Men Do," the five-part feature in which Edmund Breese is starred. Miss Hawley was with the Lubin Company for five years before joining the Metro forces and during that time appeared in more than 300 screen play. She wrote many of the screen plays in which she appeared and also assisted in their direction. During the past two years she has written considerable fiction for the magazines.

Edwin Holt has been added to the cast of the new Metro-Rolfe production, as yet unnamed, starring Emmy Wehlen. This will be Mr. Holt's first entrance into the field of motion pictures but he has been very well known on the speaking stage.

All the scenes have been taken for the latest Drew comedy except those to be staged in the ocean. The Drew company passed the week-end at Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew's home at Seagate for the purpose of taking the pictures but balked when bathing suits were ordered because of the persistent rumors of sharks having been seen in the neighborhood. Mr. Drew has arranged for an armed motor boat patrol which will watch carefully for the invaders while the ocean scenes are being taken.

Two Powell Big Guns

The work of Frank Powell, president of the Frank Powell Productions, Inc., and noted as one of the foremost directors in this country and Europe has created a world-wide interest. Not only is it a combination of unique artistry and truthfulness of historical detail, but it bespeaks the vast experience Mr. Powell has had in the motion picture industry.

Starting as a stage director for Augustus Thomas, he later joined Kirke La-Shelle and afterwards for some years directed productions for Miss Ellen Terry. He then returned to America and made his debut in the motion picture field by directing comedies for the Biograph Company. He was connected with this firm for some two years, then returning to Europe again was engaged with Pathe Freres in Paris, as a producer of historical and romantic dramas. Ill health, however, compelled him to rest for a while, but his art and advancement did not suffer, for though he was compelled to lay off work, he toured the continent acquainting himself with foreign costumes and types. On his return to America, he was engaged by the Powers Motion Picture Company and after working with them for some time rejoined Pathe Freres, as a director of special features.

Mr. Powell then became associated with the William Fox Corporation and remained with that company for a considerable time, establishing a record of producing 48 reels of pictures in 52 weeks. He also produced the sensational feature picture, "A Fool There Was," which added greatly to his reputation.

Mr. Powell is at present producing a feature starring Creighton Hale, of "Iron Claw" fame, and Linda A. Griffith, which will be ready for the disposal of territorial rights in the early fall.

Sheldon Lewis, now under contract with the Frank Powell Productions, Inc., to star in the feature photo-play productions, is an actor of great ambition and no little achievement. He entered upon his stage career at a very early age, having made many successful appearances in theatricals while in school and college. Prior to his advent into the professional world, Mr.

Lewis attained considerable reputation as an athlete, and this training often comes to his aid in parts calling for strength and agility.

During his twenty years stage experience he has been associated with such stars as Augustin Daly, Minnie Maddern Fiske, Mrs. Leslie Carter, Ada Reahan, Blanch Walsh and many others too numerous to mention in this limited space. Mr. Lewis has played over 500 different character parts in the various companies he has appeared with and when Pathe Company were casting about for an actor of known reputation and ability to play the extremely difficult part of the Clutching Hand in "The Exploits of Elaine," they were fortunate in signing up Mr. Lewis.

Frank Powell.

So successful was he in this part that at the culmination of the "Exploits of Elaine" he was immediately re-engaged for the title part in "The Iron Claw." The Powell organization is to be congratulated upon securing the services of Mr. Lewis, who will appear in the first production of the newly formed corporation sharing stellar honors with Creighton Hale and Linda A. Griffith.

Pickford in Advance Release

Mary Pickford's latest Famous Players production "Hulda From Holland," was booked by exhibitors in the principal cities throughout the country before its scheduled release date, July 31, on the Paramount program. One of the immediate effects of this decision was the appearance of the production in Chicago last week at the time of the exhibitors' convention, while the star herself was in the Windy City.

"Hulda From Holland" was produced under the direction of John B. O'Brien, who also directed Mary Pickford in "The Foundling," one of her more recent successes. As the title suggests, the story is Dutch in its setting, the action opening in Holland and then being transferred to America, where it centers in the heart of the Pennsylvania Dutch settlements and in New York City. For the purely Dutch scenes a complete village was erected, town pump and all, and a number of interesting types were secured by the director to serve as villagers.

Universal's Helps to Exhibitors

Strong List of Plays Short and Long Appear During Last Days of July and First of August

THE Universal Film Company has established a "Putting It Over" department of advertising suggestions for the benefit of all exhibitors. The director of the department tells exhibitors how to boost Universal features and suggests various "stunts" to increase the box office receipts.

The feature releases on the Universal program for the last week of July include Flora Parker De Haven in "The Seekers," with Edward Hearn and Charles Mailes, a Red Feather production. "The Crystal's Warning," a two-reel Gold Seal with Hobart Henley, Clara Beyers, Sydell Dowling and Sidney Bracey; Pat Rooney in "The Belle and the Bell Hop;" "Midwinter Madness" with Dorothy Phillips and Stanley Walpole; "Temptation and the Man," with Hobart Henley, Sydell Dowling and Sidney Bracey; "Lizzie's Lingering Love," with Alice Howell and Fatty Voss; Cleo Madison and Charles Gunn in "Priscilla's Prisoner;" and Harry Carey and Olive Fuller Golden in "For the Love of a Girl."

The program for the week of July 31 leads off with Carter De Haven in "From Broadway to a Throne," a five-reel Red Feather feature, which is followed on the same day by a Nestor comedy, "Beer Must Go Down." On August first will be released "Who Pulled the Trigger," a three-reel Gold Seal in which Marie Walcamp and Lee Hill are starred; and also a Victor comedy, "A Society Sherlock," with William Garwood. August 2 brings "The Lucky Gold Piece," with Ben Wilson and Edna Hunter; Dan Russell in a two-reel L-Ko comedy, "Where Is My Husband?" and Issue 31 of the Universal Animated Weekly. On August 3 will be released "My Lady's Millions," a two-reel Laemmle drama featuring Hobart Henley, Howard Crampton and Catherine Calvert; "A Man's Hardest Fight," with Jack Nelson and Lucille Younge; and "The Rough Riders of India," another of the Dr. Dorsey expedition features. August 4 Imp presents Agnes Vernon and A. Lowrie in "A Daughter of the Night;" Victor gives "When the Minstrels Came to Town." A two-reel Bison, "Under the Lion's Paw," featuring Rex De Rosselli and Golda Colwell, will be released August 5; also a Big U drama with Cleo Madison in "The Girl in Lower 9," and a Joker Comedy, "Kate's Lover's Knot." August 6 brings King Baggot in "The Captain of the Typhoon;" an Imp drama, "The Finishing Touch," with Marjorie Ellison and the L-Ko howler, "The Youngest in the Family," with Gene Rogers supplying the fun. During the week of July 31 Francis Ford and Grace Cunard will appear in the fourteenth episode of the Universal serial, "The Adventures of Peg O' the Ring."

Morosco Enlarges Plant and Roster

The working facilities of the Oliver Morosco Company and Pallas Pictures are being increased through the enlargement of the outdoor stage to twice its original size, and the installation of a new system of light diffusing.

The roster of the company is also being enlarged with a number of new stars. Harold Holland is one of the latest acquisitions. Mr. Holland, who has had years of experience on the vaudeville and legitimate stages as well as the screen, will appear in an important role in support of Edna Goodrich in "Body or Soul."

Florence Vidor, formerly with the Vitagraph Company, has been engaged to appear in ingenue roles for the Paramount Program. The initial production in which Here's the way stars look before they are stars. They are the flock of Universal youngsters "mothered" by Directress Lule Warrenton. Steve Norton, the cameraman who immortalizes the movements of these youthful planets in film, is at the right.

Miss Vidor will appear is "The Intrigue." This photoplay will also mark the return to the screen of Lenore Ulrich as the star of the play. Countess Sonia will also be a member of the cast.

Kathleen Kirkham and Lucille Ward are also newcomers to the Oliver Morosco Company. Both of these actresses have had legitimate as well as screen experience.

L. V. Jefferson has been engaged as assistant scenario editor, and brings with him the record of having written and produced over 142 plays ranging from one-reelers to five and six-reelers in the last fifteen months.

Dustin Farnum has just completed "The Parson of Panamint" and has commenced work on his next feature, "A Son of Erin," in which he appears as a poor Irish peasant lad.

In place of "Nell of Thunder Mountain," as originally announced by the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company as the name of its initial release starring Vivian Martin this subject will be entitled "The Stronger Love." This production has just been finished under the direction of Frank Lloyd and was staged, chiefly in the San Bernardino pine forests at the top of the mountains, where many scenes of rare beauty were filmed.

$600,000 in New Firms

Fourteen newly formed theatrical and motion picture concerns, having a total capitalization of $931,000, were incorporated in the state of New York the week of July 17. The largest enterprise is the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, organized by the consolidation of the Famous Players' Film Company and the Jesse L. Lasky Features Company, having a capital stock of $625,000. The Little Players of America, with principal office in New York City, has also been granted a charter by the state. It has a capital of $100,000 and is authorized to engage in a general theatrical and motion picture business.

The new companies are as follows:

The Little Players of America, New York City. Theatrical proprietors and managers, also to conduct a general motion picture business in manufacturing films, projecting machines and the exhibition of motion pictures. Capital, $100,000. Emerald Captures Races

Exhibitors who like horse racing will be especially interested in Episode 7 of the "Tom and Jerry" series of two reel comedies written and directed for Emerald Motion Picture company by Fred J. Ireland. In this episode the pageantry and color of the great American Derby, revived at Hawthorne track on July 15, is shown. Perfect weather conditions made it possible for Director Ireland to secure for his great climax in "Tom and Jerry Knights of the Garter" most of the spectacular features which accompanied the victory of "Dodge." The start and finish of the great racing classic with closeups of Dodge and his jockey Frankie Murphy and the wonderful background provided by the great crowd which welcomed racing back to Chicago after twelve years, are woven into the story of "Knights of the Garter," in such a manner as to provide mirth, thrills and spectacle in the highest degree.

The title characters in the series are being played by Tom Keesey and Charles Huntington, supported by a stellar cast. Each episode presents a story complete in itself with laughable situations built around the errant fancies of Tom and Jerry for the members of the fair sex.

Donovan Makes Milo Pictures

Frank P. Donovan, well known in the film game, left New York last week for Baltimore, where he will make comic and dramatic pictures for the newly formed Milo Pictures Corporation, who have studios in Baltimore and in Norfolk, Va. Mr. Donovan is best known perhaps for his Harvard series of one-reel comedies with Billy Quirk. He manufactured the Fad Comedies that starred Tammany Young and Marie Weirman, the Manhattan Features, and was editor of the film departments of the New York Star, Photoplayers Weekly and New York Journal.

Many well known players of the screen will soon join the Milo Company, who intend to make big features with big stars for release through the Pathe Exchange. The comedies and other pictures will be made under the personal supervision of Mr. Donovan, who has assumed charge of productions.

Demand for Open Booking

Andrew J. Cobe, vice-president and general manager of the Unity Sales Corporation, has the following to say concerning the convention in Chicago.

"The most impressive thing to me about the convention," said Mr. Cobe, "was the interst which I saw manifested by the exhibitors in their demands for open bookings of features and serials, and their growing distrust and dislike of the program. Hundreds of exhibitors stopped at the Unity Sales Corporation's booth to assure us of their hearty support in our efforts to serve the independent exchanges.

"The exhibitors know that they are bound to get better pictures for their houses if they can judge the individual excellence of the picture rather than to take program offerings. The independent exchange man can see what he buys and the exhibitor has a far better chance to get something good for his audience by keeping in touch with the independent exchange. Nothing could more clearly prove this point than the fact that so often the companies who put out program pictures themselves offer any particularly attractive picture which they may make on the States' rights basis. Undoubtedly, the trend of the industry is towards an independent choice for the exhibitor."

"The success that we have had with the sale of "The Yellow Menace" to the independent exchanges is most gratifying, since it is the first time that a 16-episode serial has been released on the state's rights basis. There were many in the trade who thought it could not be made a success, but we have absolutely proved the wisdom of our undertaking beyond the shadow of a doubt. Only a few states in the south now remain open —the rest of the country being entirely booked up on a very reasonable and satisfactory basis, which not only gives us and the exchanges a fair return but guarantees to the exhibitors a chance for big profits."

Race Suicide Film

"Race Suicide," the six-part attraction, being distributed by Joe Farnham, 220 West 42d street, New York, and which he justly claims to be the first of the steadily increasing number of films dealing with the subject of birth control, is enjoying a remarkable activity.

The film has already hung up records for attendance and bookings in the states of Ohio and Kentucky, where it is handled by the Exclusive Photo-Play Service of Cleveland; in Oregon, Washington, Idaho and Montana, in which territory it is controlled by the Reel-play Feature Company of Seattle; in Colorado, Wyoming, Utah and New Mexico, where it is handled by Willis Kent of Denver. Ormi Hawley is the star of the production.

Earl Now Vice-President

Edward Earl, who for a number of years held the office of secretary-treasurer of the Nicholas Power Company, was elected vice president and treasurer at the recent annual meeting of the stock-holders of that company. The company's business for the year is highly gratifying, showing a substantial increase over the previous year, and the export business to all parts of the world have been practically doubled. Mr. Earl attended the motion picture convention and exposition at Chicago.

Praises Chicago Exposition

Mr. Will C. Smith, assistant general manager of the Nicholas Power Company, who was absent from New York attending the Motion Picture Convention and Exposition at Chicago, returned to New York very enthusiastic with the success of the Chicago show. Mr. Smith asserts that the exposition was the most largely attended of any yet held and he feels that a great deal of good will be derived by the entire industry from both the convention and exposition.

Howard With Chicago V.L.S.E.

Sidney E. Abel, Chicago manager of the V. L. S. E., announces that W. K. Howard, one of the best known film salesmen in the country, has been taken on the sales force of the Windy City office.

Marie Walcamp, fascinating satalite in Universal's brand new serial, "Liberty."

Mr. Howard, who joined the Big Four on July 10, began his connection with the photoplay industry as a lecturer with one of the first feature films, "Dante's Inferno," and later was connected with "Oliver Twist," in which Nat Goodwin was starred. This line of work carried his activities to the exploitation of a production by the Essanay company for the Weideman Company, of Newport, Kentucky.

Later, Mr. Howard entered the exchange business, beginning as shipping clerk of the World Film Corporation in its Cincinnati office. Then he was manager of the Bluebird Company in the same city, returning later to the World as assistant manager.

Melies Makes Announcement

In view of an impression which may have arisen the Melies Manufacturing Company has issued a denial that it is suing the General Film Company. It asserts that the interests of the Melies Manufacturing Company and of George Melies are the same and that neither is connected in any way with any other concern with a similar name.

L. B. Longnecker will build a new theater at Sioux City, Iowa, in the near future, at a cost of about $25,000.

Star an Ardent Charity Worker

Eulalie Jensen of the Vitagraph Company, finds time, though how she does is a mystery to her fellow-players, for constructive work among a number of families in unfortunate circumstances. Miss Jensen is Mrs. Webb Lawrence in private life and has a little girl and little boy of her own, so that ordinarily she would seem to have more than enough to occupy her few spare hours.

Recently, however, she became interested in a little girl who was an inmate of St. Michael's Orphan Asylum, Staten Island. Miss Jensen took the child out of the asylum, had herself legally appointed as guardian, and introduced the child into a family who have become so attached to the lucky little one that she has been adopted. The little girl is only eight years old. The good people who have adopted her through Miss Jensen's introduction are in very comfortable circumstances, so that the future looks very bright indeed for Miss Jensen's protege.

Miss Jensen herself refused to give any particulars about the incident, but one of her fellow players in the Vitagraph told the story.

Another American Beauty

Pretty, charming, blue-eyed, blonde leading ladies are becoming numerous, on the "lot" of the Flying A-Mutual studios at Santa Barbara.

One of the most recent arrivals is Miss May Cloy, who is playing the principal feminine role in the Kolb and Dill five-part comedy entitled "A Million for Mary."

Miss Cloy is well known to the realm of photoplay fans, and to disciples of the spoken drama, as she has appeared for some time with these famous comedians in their repertoire of musical comedies.

Few women have been more successful than Miss Cloy in adapting to the screen histrionic experience acquired on the stage.

There are many opportunities afforded Miss Cloy in this production to run the gamut of emotions from gaiety to pathos, and her registration is such as to sway spectators readily from laughter to tears and back to laughter.

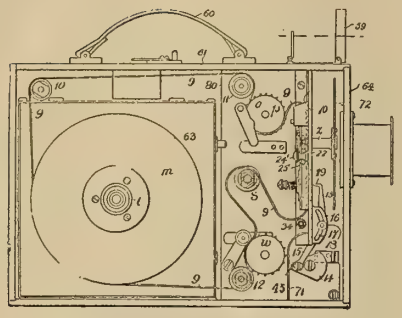
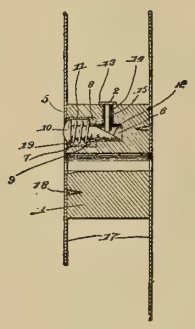
The day of the "photoplay-cowboy" who depended upon "property" chaps, a Stetson hat, leather cuffs, bright neckerchief, spurs, and a gun to give the proper "atmosphere" have passed.

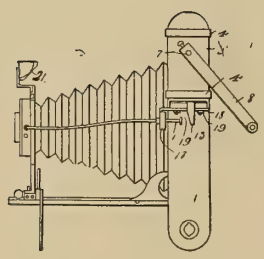
Now-a-days, theater patrons want the real thing.



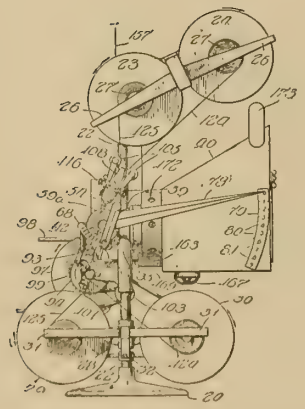
The American Film Company, Inc., boasts among its squad, champion riders and rope-hands—boys who can and do portray the life as naturally as though they didn't know what a motion picture camera was.



With such well known horsemen as Art Acord, Frank Borzage and Jack Richardson playing the leading parts in "Mustang" films, the "punch" gets into the pictures with consistent regularity, with a fervent respect for the correctness of detail without over-costuming or over-acting.



Acord's latest success is the title role in "A Modern Knight," a two-part "Mustang" subject.



Some New Motion Picture Patents

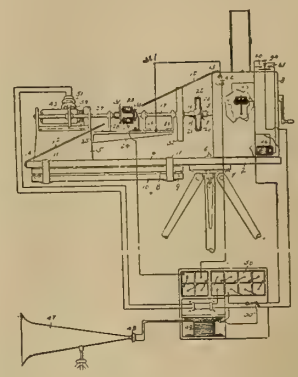
BY D. S. HULFISH

At the top the diagram shows invention No. 1,163,493, a motor camera. The second diagram is No. 1,164,999, a reel clip. Next is No. 1,164,321, which makes a motion picture camera of any kodak.

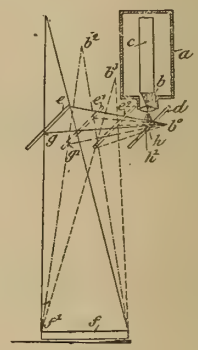
At the bottom is No. 14,023, a printer.

HERE is a description of some of the more interesting of the recent motion picture patents, compiled especially for MOTOGRAPHY.

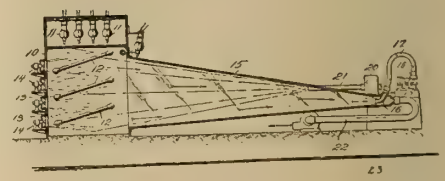
No. 1,162,433. Talking Pictures. Issued to E. H. Amet, Redondo Beach, Calif. The invention pertains to the devices for making the original sound records and picture negatives, the particular object being the provision of index marks from which the finished pictures may be synchronized. A single electric circuit, containing a controlling switch has a vibratory film marker in the motion-picture camera and a vibrator also affecting the recording needle of the speech-recording machine. When both machines are started, a touch upon the electric switch makes an index upon both sound record and picture film to show the points of unison.



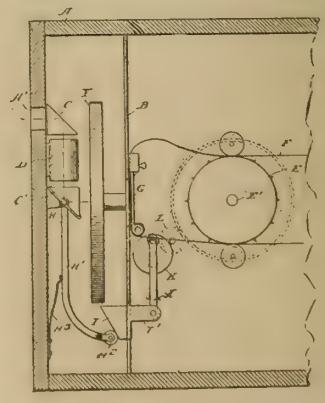
Reissue 14,023. Printer. Issued to A. S. Howell, assignor to Bell & Howell Co., Chicago, Ill. (Reissue of No. 1,056,794.) The negative and the raw print stock are moved before a light at a constant speed, and the light is varied to produce greater or lesser exposures. Notches in the edge of the negative indicate the points at which the light is to be changed, and automatic devices co-operating with the notches operate to vary the light as indicated by the notches. Twenty-eight claims, including many short ones.



1,162,812. Renovating Machine. Issued to J. W. Schab, Columbus, Ohio. The film is passed over rollers, at least one of which is "convex" or barrel-shaped, and at the same time a rubbing band for cleaning the film is rubbed upon the face of the film while the rollers support it at the back.



1,163,079. Synchrononizing Device. Issued to Leon Gaumont, assignor to Societe Etab. Gaumont, Paris, France. (Application filed Jan. 4, 1907.) The projector has a motor of two speeds, one a little faster and the other a little slower than the required projector speed. A circuit-changer controlled by the talking machine and the projector jointly operates to put the motor on the higher speed when the projector is lagging behind the talking machine, and operates to put the motor on the lower speed when the projector is leading. The speed differences are small, and the projector never varies from synchronism by more than a predetermined limit.



1,163,493. Camera. Issued to T. E. C. Wheeler, assignor to Cherry Kearton, London, England. The film reels are within the camera case, side by side, mounted upon the same spindle. A spring motor drives the shutter and shift and take-up. The camera is of light, portable type, for use without tripod.

1,163,493. Anti-Flicker Film. Issued to R. J. Leonard, New York, N. Y., assignor of part to M. Kirschman. The film is double width, two pictures side by side, projection being made with two lenses, and the images of one-half of the film being projected during the dark interval of shift of the images of the other half, the shift being permitted by projection of images at different points in the length of the film. By using only one lens of the projector, ordinary films may be projected without change or adjustments. The two lenses in the camera are adjustable that their two axial lines may cross at the plane of the center of interest of the picture.

1,163,557. Sprocket. Issued to A. L. Reising, Newark, N. J., assignor of part to Bruno Reichelt, Newark, N. J. The sprocket is for a film with central perforations, is exceedingly light, and is provided with side flanges.

1,163,656. Static Neutralizer. Issued to W. S. Hadaway, Jr., New Rochelle, N. Y. In a camera or printer, a conducting liquid is vaporized by an electric heater to produce an electrically conducting atmosphere by which static charges upon the film are dissipated.

1,163,757. Camera. Issued to C. F. Jenkins, Washington, D. C. The film moves with uniform speed. Light from the object photographed enters a reflecting prism, is reflected downward through a vertical lens to a rocking mirror which is rocked by a cam to keep the image moving at the speed of the film during exposure.

1,163,892. Stereoscopic Camera. Issued to Emanuel Cervenka, Paris, France. (Application filed Oct. 19, 1911.) A camera for making a series of pictures from two viewpoints, taken in alternation, right-eye, left-eye, right-eye, and so on, upon a single film. Any ordinary camera is used, a fixed mirror is placed in front of the lens and a movable mirror at the side is shifted back and forth between exposures.

1,164,252. Method of Making Clay-Model Pictures. Issued to C. A. Birch-Field, New York, N. Y. A clay model is worked by the hands or by modeling tools to reduce it to a shapeless mass, motion pictures being made the while, and the pictures then are projected in reverse order, showing the model as being built up upon the picture screen.

1,164,321. Kodak Attachment. Issued to J. E. Welch, Shreveport, La. A crank device for shifting film has an antinnous extension to the usual kodak shutter. By this attachment motion picture negatives may be made with any kodak.

1,164,401. Talking Pictures. Issued to D. O. Royster, St. Louis, Mo. The object of the invention is to avoid the delay or lagging of sounds in reaching the sound-record machine, as compared with the speed of light in reaching the camera. The action of the scene takes place within an enclosed stage and a current of air, increasing in speed through a tapered way, carries the sounds more rapidly, to reduce the time lag.

1,164,859. Wide-Film Projector. Issued to R. H. Pietzsch and R. P. Nichols, Philadelphia, Penna. A wide film band has four rows of images, the four of a row being projected by shifting the film sideways, the film then being shifted by the sprocket and four more images projected by return side shifts before the sprocket acts again. Suitable for toy uses.

1,164,999. Reel Clip. Issued to C. T. Duffy, Cambridge, Ohio. A push button at the side of the reel is arranged to lift the clip for placing the leader upon the hub.

When the force of the Universal Company was removed from Fort Lee, New Jersey, to the Pacific coast, C. Alfred Karpen was transferred to the main office in New York, where he is engaged in the film editing department, where he is associated with Miss Eleanor Fried."

Criticism against the loose methods of censors in allowing children to view objectionable film scenes has been made by Hon. S. M. Brewster, attorney-general of Kansas. Recently numerous women and children have been permitted to visit the censors' rooms in the sub-basement of the state house at Topeka. Many of the pictures rejected by the censors are seen by young children, women and girls, before the censors' orders prohibiting their being shown, is given. A large number of pictures rejected by the Rev. Festus Foster, state censor, because they might create an evil impression in the minds of the innocent Kansans have been first viewed by the minister's daughter and other young girls. It is charged, that frequently men and women gather in the censoring rooms in large numbers. Many of these persons are personal friends and relatives of the censors. The pictures which are condemned as being bad, are first viewed by people having like passions and prejudices as those who are prohibited from seeing them in the moving picture shows.

The New Center Theater will be completed September 15, and will have a seating capacity of twelve hundred on the ground floor, said to be the largest ground floor seating capacity in Kansas City. Mr. Zueker, who has a chain of theaters in Chicago, will move his headquarters to Kansas City. He will spend $20,000 in equipping the new theater.

Judge T. J. Seehorn dissolved an injunction at Kansas City July 10, preventing J. A. Payne and D. A. McCullough, union machine operators, from picketing the Eastern Theater, owned by John E. Hughes and Wesley H. Brier. The case will be appealed to the supreme court for final decision. Hughes and Briner caused the arrest many times of the two union operators for picketing their theaters. The men were repeatedly fined in the Municipal court, but their cases were dismissed in the criminal court of appeals. The owners of the theater then sought to get protection in the civil courts, and an injunction was obtained from Judge Burney in the circuit court, the judge holding that picketing could not be peaceful, but Judge Seehorn held that it was, and that it was legal, and dissolved the injunction. The trouble between the owners of the theater and the union came about when Hughes, a former operator and a member of the union obtained interest in the theater and operated his own machine, but by becoming an owner he automatically severed himself from the operators union. The union then placed the theater on the unfair list, stating that it must have a union operator, and commenced picketing.

Ten picture shows opened at Fort Worth, Texas, Sunday, July 9, the first Sunday opening since the agitation in March and the election in April, which allowed them to open. The attendance was reported as large. The prices were normal. The county attorney immediately got busy and filed complaints against the ten proprietors, charging them with violating the state law against operating picture shows on Sunday. The cases were set for hearing July 26. Seventy-five ministers at Fort Worth met and unanimously declared against the attitude assumed by moving picture proprietors. In nine of the theaters Sunday this slide was shown on the screens: "Shall the preachers rule the city?" The preachers answered: "As the watchman on the wall it is the business of the preachers to let the people know what is going on." The Pastors' Association is going to see that all church people express their sentiments and make themselves heard in protest to Sunday opening of moving picture theaters in Fort Worth.

AN EMERALD STAR

Dolores Cassinelli, leading woman of the Emerald Motion Picture company, is a Chicago girl and one of the most beautiful Italian types in filmdom. She entered picture work at the local studio of the Essanay company and rose to stellar position as leading woman to Francis X. Bushman and Bryant Washburn in a remarkably short time.

Miss Cassinelli is a tall queenly type of beauty and is especially adapted to strong dramatic pictures of a romantic type. Without previous dramatic experience of any kind the beautiful Emerald star is an accomplished screen actress and it is claimed for her by her director, Frederick J. Ireland, that she is absolutely lacking in that form of temperament which manifests itself in making things hard for all associated with the possessor.

In addition to her screen talents Miss Cassinelli has a well cultivated voice and is continuing her studies in music.

NORTHWEST NEWS

By A. K. M. Sutton

W. E. MacClymont, manager of the American Theater, Bellingham, was a visitor June 30th at the Metro office and other exchanges in Seattle.

W. W. Drum, western divisional manager for the World Film Corporation, left Seattle for his headquarters at San Francisco the evening of June 30th, after a two weeks' stay in the former city. Mr. Drum came up to help Hugh Rennie, new World manager for Seattle, get settled in his territory. Mr. Rennie comes just now from Salt Lake City, where he spent nine months in the World office. He reports three new salesmen on his Seattle staff. John W. Drum has been imported from Denver as a special representative for sixty days in Washington. J. H. Baum is the new representative in Oregon, and E. Bishop, former cashier in the Seattle office, has been promoted to salesman in Washington. The new cashier is H. B. Perry. Mr. Rennie says that business conditions are good in the office, especially on the Brady-Made productions.

E. G. Berg, former manager of the People's Amusement Company of Portland, Oregon, has been engaged by Messrs. Jensen and Von Herberg of the Greater Theaters Company to succeed Ed Holland as manager of the Mission Theater, Seattle. Mr. Berg, in addition to filling a managerial capacity for the People's Amusement Company, was for several months on the Big Time, covering the Pantages circuit. He has a reputation for being a live wire, and Jensen and Von Herberg consider themselves very lucky in getting him. Mr. Holland has gone to Salt Lake City, where he will devote much of his time to the production of a scenario of a big theme and action. He has worked on it for the last two years and hopes to complete it now that he will have his entire time to devote to it.

W. J. Drummond, Mutual's manager in Spokane, recently resigned to go with the Triangle Film Corporation in Salt Lake City. His successor has not yet been announced, but J. S. Woody, northwest manager for Mutual, has gone from Seattle to Spokane to look after that office until he can get a new manager settled and everything in smooth running order.

I. A. Rosenthal, of the Sutton Feature Film Company, is in Seattle for a few days, after a month's stay in New York, where he organized a company to buy the state rights of the new Ince feature, "Civilization," in ten western states, viz.: California, Washington, Idaho, Utah, Nevada, Oregon, Wyoming, Arizona, New Mexico, Colorado. There are offices in Seattle, San Francisco and Denver. Mr. Rosenthal is general manager of the company, which has adopted the name of The Western "Civilization" Company.

The Unity Sales Corporation, through its vice-president and general manager, Andrew J. Cobe, announces the acquisition of the sensational Nat Goodwin picture-drama, "The Marriage Bond."

E. E. Bland is managing the new Rex Theater at Alva, Okla., a recently opened house.

A Motion Picture Bibliography

COMPILED BY S. GERSHANEK, A. M.

Cataloguer, Reference Division New York State Public Library, Photoplaywright, Ex-Photoplay Editor and Research Director.

IN THE following list MOTOGRAPHY presents the most complete and up-to-date catalogue of books and pamphlets on motion pictures and its related fields which has ever been published. This list has been prepared to meet the needs of the motion picture manufacturer, his producing directors, and editors; the exhibitors; the photoplaywright, staff and free lance; or others employed or interested in moving pictures.

The compiler will be pleased to receive catalogues of supply companies to add to a later list, and will be pleased to hear from any and all writers on any subject of interest to the field for insertion in this catalogue. At various intervals additional titles and corrections will appear in the issues of MOTOGRAPHY.

International Offices Move

The International Film Service, Inc., has moved its New York offices. The firm has grown so that the quarters in the Journal Building at Fifty-ninth street and Columbus Circle, New York, have become inadequate. In order to find room for all of the many departments two entire floors, the eighth and sixteenth of the new building at 729 Seventh avenue, corner of Forty-ninth street, have been engaged and elaborately fitted up.

For more than a week past the offices have been gradually transferred into the Seventh avenue building. Saturday was "get-away day" and what remained of the equipment in the Journal building was picked up bodily and moved to the new locations.

The entire sixteenth floor is devoted to the use of the executive offices. On the eighth floor are located the business departments, the New York exchange, and the projecting rooms.

Gaumont Imports films

Owing to the Gaumont policy of never announcing any film which comes from Europe until it is actually in this country—because of the uncertainties of the war zone—several announcements which have given rise to interesting rumors in the trade are being withheld for the time being. It is known, however, that some big features from the Societe des Etablissements Gaumont are either about to be shipped or else are already on the water. These are to be released in Mutual Service. They supplement the present Gaumont releases through Mutual.

From the French Gaumont company have come such productions as "The Fall of "Constantinople" and the "Fantomas" series. It is understood that Mutual will now distribute some of the most successful of the French photodramas, selection having been made of those best suited for the American market.

ATLANTIC COAST NOTES

Adella Barker, last seen as "Mrs. McGuire" in "Young American," on the speaking stage, is to play the role of "Juliet's Nurse" in the Metro production of "Romeo and Juliet," in which Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are starred.

Frank Smithson has ceased to be director-in-chief of the Edison Company's studio.

Spencer Sladdin is publicity promoter for the Maurice Costello serial now being made by the Consolidated.

Mack Sennett is in New York for a conference with the heads of the Triangle Corporation.

Viola Dana, who made her debut on the Metro program in "The Flower of No Man's Land," is at work on another five-reeler, "Out of the Darkness," written for her by John H. Collins, who will direct the production. Mr. Collins was associated with Miss Dana when she was starring on the Edison program.

Emily Stevens, recovering from a recent operation for appendicitis, is resting at the country home of her aunt, Mrs. Minnie Maddern Fiske, in the Adirondack Mountains. She will soon begin work in another Metro production.

Everything written in an amateur's scenario has been used in the production of a coming Knickerbocker Star feature, "Sibyl's Scenario," starring Marie Empress. In it there are plots enough for a dozen plays and real thrills without end.

De Witt C. Jennings, the well-known actor in Fox photoplays, was the first pupil enrolled at the University of Wyoming, at Laramie.

In one afternoon last week at the Fox studios, little Jane Lee played four distinct roles for four directors in four hours, in pictures for James Vincent, John Adolfi, Kenean Buel and J. Gordon Edwards.

Lina Cavalieri, the Italian beauty featured in the Pathe five-reeler, "The Shadow of Her Past," first won attention when she sang at the Folies Bergere in Paris. Her husband, Lucien Muratore, of the Paris Grand Opera, appears with her in the picture.

Kittens Reichert, the five-year-old actress, is the youngest person whose name is listed in the telephone directory of her home city, Yonkers, N. Y.

Two treadmills have been installed in the Fox studios for close-ups of the racing scenes in the new William Fox photoplay. The horses were placed on these mills, with jockeys mounted, and the cameras began.

Jane Lee has gone to the poorhouse. her adventures there will be shown in in the next June Caprice picture.

In the country scenes in a recent Fox picture these animals appear, two dogs, three cats, two sheep, one cow, two horses and a family of pigs.

The engagement has been announced of Rube Goldberg, whose animated cartoons appear in Pathe motion pictures, to Irma Seeman, a New York society girl.

A one-reel film, "The Trump Card," is being made by Thomas A. Edison, Inc., for the use of the New York State Board of Health in a crusade by that body against impure milk.

In The National Sunday Magazine Dr. Frank Crane has an editorial dealing with the question asked in the New Pathe serial, is humanity in "The Grip of Evil?"

Then names of the first four episodes of the Pathe serial, "The Grip of Evil," are announced as follows, "Fate," "The Underworld," "The Upper Ten," and "The Looters."

Pauline Frederick has developed so much muscle driving her new roadster that nobody wants to play opposite her in those heavily emotional scenes in which she is moved to inflict bodily harm upon her adversaries. It is far too strenuous to be enjoyable.

Harry Schwalbe, manager of the Electric Theater Supply Company of Philadelphia, who will distribute "The Yellow Menace," the Unity Sales Corporation's sixteen-episode serial, in the Philadelphia territory, has been in New York for the past few days looking over the concluding episodes of the pictures.

George B. Seitz, secretary and treasurer of the Astra Film Corporation, and the author of the serials, "The Perils of Pauline," "Exploits of Elaine," "The Iron Claw" and "The Shielding Shadow," has been commissioned by Pathe to adapt for the screen all of the works of Rudyard Kipling. At present he is working on "Naulahka."

Ormi Hawley has been specially engaged by the Popular Plays and Players to play opposite Edmund Breeze in "The Iron Hand," a Metro feature production.

CHICAGO GOSSIP

Dolores Cassinelli is to be featured by the Emerald Company in "A Song of Romany," a five-reel gypsy story. The great American Derby at Hawthoren race track is one of the big scenes, with Dodge, the winner, and Miss Cassinelli as principal actors.

"A Tin Soldier," a comedy by Charles Hoyt, is being produced in two acts by Essanay.

Harry Beaumont of Essanay is in St. Joseph, his home town, for a visit.

Marguerite Clayton is working in another five-act Essanay drama, "Lost Twenty-four Hours," with Richard C. Travers and Warda Howard. This is an adaptation of a stage comedy.

"A Song of Romany," is to be the first of a series of monthly releases made by the Emerald Company, featuring Dolores Cassinelli.

William Lord Wright, head of the Selig publicity department, is spending his vacation in Bellefontaine, Ohio, his home town.

Sydney Ainsworth, Essanay villian, will spend his vacation on a boat cruise up the west shore of Lake Michigan to Northern Wisconsin and Upper Michigan.

Vernon Howe Bailey's Sketch Book of Petrograd, a new split-reel with scenic, will be the next of these motion drawings to be released by Essanay.

PACIFIC COAST NEWS

Edward Sloman, American director, is starting a five-reel feature, "Her Honor," in which Winnifred Greenwood and Ed Coxen will play the leading parts.

William D. Taylor, the director whose recent Morosco and Pallas photoplays have created such favorable comment, is to have Vivian Martin as his next star. The story is a southern one.

Ruth Stonehouse and Henri DeVries are to be co-starred under the direction of Raymond Wells in a five-act feature, "The Saintly Sinner." L. H. Hutton is the author.

Trading in film stocks during the past week continued rather dull with the exception of Lone Star, in which considerable activity is reported.

Lone Star Corporation—With the increasing number of films being released, the speculative element of this security is being gradually diminished and the demand for stock by the more conservative class of investors is increasing. The preferred is in good demand, due perhaps to the reports that this stock is expected to be retired at 110 this fall.

Mutual Film Corporation—The market has been very quiet the last few days, although a number of small trades have taken place. Rumors of dividend announcement shortly still continue.

Thanhouser Film Corporation—There were reported lately a number of substantial trades. The new contract with Pathe evidently has created a demand for stock.

ing leads with Director Ben Wilson at Universal City.

Crane Wilbur is preparing a story in which he will play the lead, the locale of which will take his company to the Mexican border.

Sessue Hayakawa, Japanese screen artist who was the star in the recent Paramount release, "Alien Souls," will appear soon in an elaborate feature, "The Honorable Friend," under the direction of Edward Le Saint.

Lou-Tellegen has begun work on a new Lasky production, "The Victor of Conscience," under the direction of Frank Reicher. Cleo Ridgley is his leading woman.

Charles Happ is now the "still" cameraman for the Metro-Yorke organization. He was formerly with Thomas Dixon.

The Smalleys are preparing to picturize "Idle Wives," with Mary MacLaren and Phillips Smalley playing the featured leads. The picture will be directed by Lois Weber, who prepared the screen version.

"Laundry Liz," Fay Tincher's next two-reel Triangle picture, is a melodramatic comedy. One of the features is the showing of how motion pictures are made. Another innovation is a scene showing the interior of a motion picture theater, with the picture being run, and the audience in the foreground.

Adelaide Woods has been re-engaged by the Morosco Company for a big part in a feature under the direction of Scott Sydney, "The Conflict."

William J. Tedmarsh, upon the completion of "The Secret of the Submarine," in which he played "Satsuma," the Jap, was at once cast for another Japanese characterization in an American feature.

Alan Forrest is playing opposite Mary Miles Minter in an American photoplay under the direction of James Kirkwood.

Helene Rosson is playing in a five-reel feature, "The Light," for the American Company. William Dowlan is the director. Franklin Ritchie and Eugenie Forde have strong parts.

Scott Sidney has been added to the producing staff at the Bosworth, Inc., studio. His initial production will be a five-reel feature with Lenore Ulrich as his star.

Grace Cunard and Francis Ford are finishing "Peg O' The Ring" this week and with a company of ten people will go to Honolulu for about a month. There they will make scenes for their new serial, "The Adventures of My Lady Raffles," written by themselves.

The seven-reel feature, "Inherited Passions," scenarized by Dorothea Farley, who plays the lead from a novel by Jack Wolf, is about three parts done, and Gilbert P. Hamilton, the managing director of the Century Film Company, has been taking some big interior scenes.

Hetty Gray Baker, who has been film editor for D. W. Griffith, has accepted a similar position with the Fox West Coast studios.

Olga Prinzlau, now with the Ince scenario department, has completed her first Triangle play, a drama of the Hawaiian Islands, and is awaiting its production at Culver City.

James Young has returned to the Lasky studios and will devote his attention to productions for Blanche Sweet. Their next picture is entitled "The Unconquered." Mr. Young directed Miss Sweet in "The Thousand Dollar Husband," released on the Paramount program.

Gilbert P. Hamilton is making great progress with his feature "Inherited Passions" in which Dorothea Farley takes the lead. Three studies will be made use of for the interior scenes, one at Roundup, Montana, and two in Hollywood, Cal. The exteriors are being selected from three states.

Director Charles Giblyn, of the Ince-Triangle forces, has completed the production of "Somewhere in France," the adaptation by J. G. Hawks of the late Richard Harding Davis' last story, in which Louise Glaum is to be presented as star.

A regulation railroad round house has been built for the next Helen Holmes Mutual Star production, "The Manager of the B. & A.," which is being produced at the Signal Film Company's studios.

Director J. P. McGowan has received word of the death of his brother, Sergeant Thomas E. McGowan of the Austrian Lancers, on the firing line in France. Sergeant McGowan has twice been mentioned in the official despatches for conspicious bravery in action.

"The Lily of the Coal Fields," a play written by Father Will W. Whalen for Jackie Saunders, will be taken up by the Balboa star just as soon as "The Grip of Evil" is finished. Father Whalen is the author of "Ill Starred Babbie," also a Saunders' success, now a popular stage production.

David, the year-old son of Rollin S. Sturgeon, director-general of the western Vitagraph studio, will make his first bow to a screen audience in "Through the Wall," the six-part detective story being produced by his father from the novel by Cleveland Moffett.

Henry Otto and his mother, who is always his traveling companion, are now enroute to California, where Otto will direct Harold Lockwood and May Allison in Metro productions.

Hampton Del Ruth, managing editor and assistant manager of production to the Keystone Company, was kell known on the stage at one time and played Pelleas to the Melisande of Constance Crawley for the pictures, as well as other leading roles.

William S. Hart has completed the production of the Mexican border story by Monte M. Katterjohn, in which he will soon be offered by Thomas H. Ince as star on the Triangle program. He is now engaged in filming a "western" from the pen of J. G. Hawks.

Clara Williams is having her first experience as a full-fledged star, at Thomas H. Ince's Culver City studios, where she is enacting the early scenes of the current Triangle drama by C. Gardner Sullivan, a play of an Italian nature.

Molly Malone, a dainty miss of nineteen, has just been made leading lady of George Cochrane's Universal company. Miss Malone's first engagement was when she was seventeen, with the Western Vitagraph where she played leads. She next accepted an engagement with the Lubin Company and later went to the Lasky Feature Plays Company. Previous to entering the pictures Miss Malone traveled extensively in America and Mexico and took a trip around the world, spending a year in South Africa with relatives.

Rhea Mitchell is working opposite Richard Bennett in "The Sable Curse," a comedy by Aaron Hoffman.

Claire McDowell has completed her first Universal picture, an Egyptian play directed by Raymond Wells, the young man who staged the big spectacle, "Julius Caesar," at Hollywood.

GLEAMS IN "CRIMSON STAIN"

Ethel Grandin is the exceptional leading woman in "The Crimson Stain Mystery," the sixteen-episode serial now in process of production by the Erbograph Company, which will be released next week by the Consolidated Film Corporation through the Metro Exchanges.

Ethel Grandin, the stellar light in "The Crimson Stain Mystery."

There are a great many phases and reasons why Miss Grandin is in a class all by herself, a few of them being her rare beauty and charm, her amazing personality, and her wonderful acting.

Miss Ethel Grandin is very young, but she has a long record of screen achievements. In "The Crimson Stain Mystery" serial, the first episode of which will be released August 1st, Miss Grandin interprets the role of Florence Montrose, a part especially designed by Author Albert Payson Terhune to give Miss Grandin an opportunity to display her unusual talents to the best advantage. Perhaps it is needless to say that Miss Grandin takes advantage of that fact.

And on top of it all it is pleasing to note that Miss Grandin, despite her unusual achievements, still has her future before her, and greater and better things are to be expected from her.

Signal-Mutual features, "Whispering Smith" and "Medicine Bend," released in two episodes of five reels each, have been combined into a ten-reel feature, called "Whispering Smith," and is proving very popular. The picture is from the novel by the same name by Frank H. Spearman.

Douglas Gerrard who appeared as leading man for Madame Anna Pavlowa in "The Dumb Girl of Portici." will hereafter direct at Universal City.

Myrtle Stedman, after several months of incessant work in the Morosco studios, has been forced to take a vacation because of trouble with her eyes.

Juanita Hansen, star of the serial, "The Secret of the Submarine," has an ingenue role in "Glory," a Kolb and Dill comedy made for the American Company.

"The Chalice of Sorrow," the film version of "La Tosca," featuring Cleo Madison, is intended to set a new standard of Bluebird productions. The artistic detail is carefully watched.

Neva Gerber is now playing the lead in a five-reel Bluebird feature, "The Enigma," under the direction of Ben Wilson.

Edgar Keller's decorative playlet, "The Yellow Girl," is to be released by Vitagraph this month. and the artist-actor-director is now busy with sketches for his second novelty, which will be Oriental in treatment.

"The Girl from Frisco," the new Kalem series by Robert Welles Ritchie, will feature Marin Sais and True Boardman. There will be fifteen two-reel installments, released once a week. Each installment will be a distinct story.

All the well known cowboys of the Universal western company appear in the new Universal serial, "Liberty," which Jacques Jaccard is directing.

"The Little Musician and His Friend" is a one-reel film play for children which Lule Warrenton has completed for the Universal company. Little Lois Alexander plays the lead, with Irma Sorter opposite, supported by John Sterling.

Director Carleton's next production will be "Black Friday," a five-reel society drama featuring Dorothy Davenport and Emory Johnson. He has finished "The Shepard," with practically the same cast.

John Steppling, who recently came to Universal from the American Company, will direct "Smiling" Billy Mason in a comedy by L. V. Waters.

"Peg O' the Ring," the serial featuring Grace Cunard and Francis Ford, will close with its fifteenth episode. "Liberty," the new serial, will follow immediately.

During the absence of Rex de Rosselli, who is playing the lead in a series of mountain pictures being filmed by Director George Cochrane, "Curley" Stecker has been put in charge of Universal City zoo.

Director Stuart Paton will require at least another month to complete the photography of the Universal feature, "Twenty-Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," after which the picture will have to be cut and assembled. Already fifteen months have been occupied in the taking of this picture.

Fay Tincher has resurrected her famous black and white striped dress, which she wore as the stenographer in the "Bill the Office Boy" series, and is wearing the costume as a servant girl in "Stars and Stripes," Triangle comedy written by Anita Loos, in which she co-stars with Tully Marshall.

Nell Shipman, in a few days of leisure between picture engagements, wrote a feature story for William Russell of the American studios.

As a result of his Fourth of July celebration, Antrim Short of the Universal studio has a piece of skin missing from his left ear, a finger of his right hand bandaged and several smaller burns on face and hands.

G. E. Jenks, scenario writer for the Helen Holmes feature company, this week left Los Angeles for the lumber country near Eureka, Cal., to familiarize himself with locations and conditions in that section for the better production of the Signal-Mutual feature to follow the production of "The Manager of the B. & A."

True Boardman, hero of the "Stingaree" series, returns to the screen in "The Girl from Frisco," Kalem series.

Frances X. Nemoyer, screen comedienne, has returned to pictures after a long absence and is appearing in Kalem comedies featuring Sis Hopkins and Ivy Close.

Dorothy Davenport, as a child, played with Bartley MacCullums' stock company in Portland, Me. She began her picture career seven years ago with the Biograph company, later joined the Reliance company, switched to the old Nestor troupe, joined the Selig company, went back to the Universal, left them for the Lasky, and is now with Universal again, playing emotional leads.

Frank Beal, who has been in the middle west, directing the Indiana historical picture for Selig, has returned to Los Angeles.

J. Warren Kerrigan has announced his intention of leaving the Universal forces when his present contract expires. At present he plans joining an eastern company.

Harry Todd and Margaret Joslin, formerly of the Essanay and Universal forces, have signed contracts with the L-Ko comedy company of Hollywood. Dave Kirkland will direct them. They will be remembered for their work in the "Snakeville comedies."

Frank Keenan and Charles Ray, who made so good an impression together in "The Coward," will again work together in a coming Triangle feature, "Honor Thy Name," from the pen of J. G. Hawks. Ray appears as a youth who marries an unworthy woman, thus disgracing the family name.

Ed S. Lewis, who has been working at the Signal studios in the production of the Helen Holmes feature, "The Diamond Runners," this week signed with the Pantages circuit to appear in an act to play over their entire wheel.

At a coroner's inquest held in Los Angeles, E. B. Jackson, property man for the Signal Film corporation, was this week exonerated from all blame in connection with the auto accident which resulted in the death of Charles Lord, a former employe of that film company.

Otto Lederer claims the "dying record." His record is unique in that he has died in the second reel of almost every three-reeler William Welbert has produced for the Vitagraph.

Ollie Kirkby is at last able to discard the crutches which she has needed since her injury several weeks ago while playing in a "Social Pirates" scene at the Kalem studios.

Edward A. Kaufman, free-lance author of "Soul Mates" and other Mutual program releases has converted one of his latest screen dramas into a vaudeville act which will star a well-known screen actress and be booked over the big time.

Anna Luther is again doing comedy leads, this time with the Fox company which has enlarged its studio possessions in California and plans for an increase in the variety of its out-put.

Lule Warrenton has completed the fourth of the juvenile picture series which she is directing at Universal City. These pictures, to fulfill their mission, must prove to be educational, vocational and entertaining.

Gilbert E. Murdock's comedy "To Catch a Thief" has been bought by the Universal company and will have an early production. Mr. Murdock is an explorer, playwright and prolific writer of fiction.

With only two more episodes of the serial to be made, Grace Cunard, Francis Ford and members of their company who have been filming the Universal serial, "Peg O' the Ring," are looking forward eagerly to a trip to Honolulu.

The journey will be both in the nature of a rest and a business trip, for a photoplay, in five reels, will be made from a script Miss Cunard has written. Upon their return the Cunard-Ford company will begin another serial.

William Burress, the Fox actor who has appeared with William Farnum in several productions, was a telegraph operator for many years on the Pennsylvania railroad before he began his long stage career.

Charles Ray is soon to appear opposite Bessie Barriscale in an Irish comedy being made at the Ince studios.

Little Eunice Hughes, who is now working at Universal City, is the niece of Rupert Hughes. the New York novelist and writer.

Jackie Saunders will appear in fourteen different characterizations during the filming of "The Grip of Evil."

"The Big Sister," by William Hurlbut, will be Marie Doro's next play. William C. De Mille is directing.

"The Spring Song," the five-reel Universal production featuring Ruth Stonehouse, is nearing completion under the direction of Wiliam Worthington.

Tully Marshall is soon to play in his first comedy picture, a two-reel Triangle Komedy written by Anita Loos. He will co-star with Fay Tincher.

The story of "The Chalice of Sorrow," an adaptation of "La Tosca," is laid in Mexico in modern times.

Jacques Jaccard is to film a Universal serial, "A Daughter of the U. S. A.," in which Marie Walcamp and Jack Holt will play the featured leads, with C. Raymond Nye as the heavy.

William V. Mong is now directing his own company at Universal City, as well as playing before the camera. Peggy Condray is his leading lady.

When Stuart Paton, Universal director, wishes to show a close-up of tears in the eyes of an actress, he tells her funny stories. When she laughs until she cries, he calls "camera."

"Bettina Loved a Soldier," is the name of the film adaptation of "L'Abbe Constantin," the Bluebird release of August 14.

TEXAS FLICKERS

By S. G. Parker

Special Correspondent for Motography.

THE Margaret Anglin Picture Corporation, Inc., Times Building, New York City, may erect winter studios in Dallas, Texas. In a full page advertisement in the "Dallas News" July 16, there was a paragraph reading:

"If $75,000 is subscribed by the citizens of Dallas, the company agrees to erect their winter studios in that city. Already a number of public-spirited citizens have signified their intention to assist in this good work."

Several months ago, the officials of a commercial plant in Dallas, operated under the name of the Daltex Moving Picture Company, and the Lone Star Motion Picture Company, got a number of prominent business men interested in the organization of a large producing company in Dallas; and at that time, it was intimated that Miss Anglin could be secured to be starred in their releases. Though there was much talk, nothing definite developed.

Dallas capital is backing the Acorn Moving Picture Cartoon Company, organized in New York, of which C. L. Sudman, former commercial artist in Dallas, is one of the principal interested parties. This concern has a "short-course" for cartoon moving pictures.

Florence Turner, popular Mutual star.

Several years ago, business men in Dallas invested in distributing film concerns, and in almost each instance, they lost their investment, through lack of business management of the concerns. In one instance, a prominent banker was "stuck" for $3,000 for a half-interest in a film production for the Southwestern territory, when the party selling had no interest in the film whatever—at the time, he was acting as booking agent for the manufacturers only. On account of the unscrupulous exchange men in this section, it is hard to successfully carry through a stock proposition in anything pertaining to pictures.

John D. Jones, formerly half-partner in the Crystal Amusement Company, of Greenville, Texas, and for a long time manager of the Crystal and Rex Theaters there, has jumped back in the show business after spending several months on the road for a large wholesale house. He will be the manager of the new Grand Theater at Amarillo, Texas. The house has been used as an opera house; but it is being remodeled to fit a picture show's needs. The original cost was $75,000 and another $8,000 is being spent to put it "right-up-to-now." The house seats 1,800 and opens August 1.

P. P. Stuckey of Bay City, Texas, has opened a 250-seat picture theater at Angleton, Texas.

Warren Shorts, for the past year an exchange man in Atlanta, Ga., and Memphis, Tenn., has opened headquarters in Dallas at 1911½ Commerce Street, in the building occupied by the Fox, Alliance, Souther Cabiria, Quality, Exclusive and United exchanges.

Mr. Shorts will exploit the Cort production, "The Whirl of Life," which features the dancing Castles. In Atlanta and Memphis territory, his offices handle this production, and also "The Melting Pot," another Cort film.

"Billy" (W. M.) Byrd, for several months manager of the Dallas exchange of the William Fox string, has turned in his resignation, and will shortly start a campaign for business on the big Thos. Dixon spectacle, "The Fall of a Nation," which has been purchased in the Southwest by three prominent business men. It is said that "Billy" will now get one of the largest salaries of any in the film section of the Southwest. Mr. Byrd was formerly road man for the World, then manager of that office, prior to his taking the Fox managership.

MORE ABOUT CHARLIE

Charles Chaplin, the Mutual comedian who receives so much money for his services that editorials galore have been written about the vast emolument, sermons by the score preached on it and mathematicians have used countless sheets of paper figuring his income to the fraction of a second, delights in relating his first experience in earning money.

While in reminiscent mood at his studios recently, the famous fun maker amused his company by telling of his first and only venture in the marts of trade.

"Misfortune struck our family when I was about nine years old," said Chaplin, "and it looked mighty bad for us for a little while. We were stranded in London and the well known wolf was howling outside the door when I conceived the child idea of wanting to earn money to support the members of the family. I had observed the street merchants in Petticoat Lane raking in the shekels so I ransacked the house for all the discarded garments I could find and hurried to the famous street and mounting a box began in a thin boyish voice to auction off my wares.

"The pedestrians stopped in amazement and watched me for a short time and then out of kindness purchased my meagre stock. I returned home that night with a shilling and sixpence for the afternoon's work, but small as the sum was it helped out."

EX-CHAMPIONS TO BOUT

Out of the Keystone studio there are several men who, at one time or another, aspired to pugilistic honors, and some of them were real "headliners." In fact at the present time six ex-champions are engaged with Mack Sennett's forces in making the famous Keystone brand of comedies.

Just now these ex-boxers are coming in handy, for Sennett is producing a piece, while not as yet named, is known under the working title of the "Fight Story."

A fully equipped boxing ring with all the necessary pugilistic paraphernalia forms the setting of a number of the scenes. With the six ex-boxers participating in the fight and with the suggestions which the directors will get from these "old timers" the story will no doubt be one of the most realistic and properly produced comedies that has ever been turned out by the Keystone company.

The men participating in the fight have been training on the Keystone "lot" for some time, and at several of the rehearsals the director has been obliged to resort to extreme methods in order to terminate the fight as it was scheduled to end. The two boxers evidently forgot for the time that they were making a moving picture. The "Fight Story" is a roaring farce, but the scenes in which the fight actually occurs have been arranged to the minutest detail, as it is the intention of Mack Sennett to combine a comedy fight with a real bout.

HOME FOR EXTRA GIRLS

wood Film company which resulted, last week, in the appropriation of $1,500.00 toward the establishment of a home for the extra girls of this colony.

For some time "Mother" Warrenton had converted her own home into a social center for the film-land girls of Hollywood who either "roomed out" or lived in a hotel. The Warrenton bungalow, however, soon became too small for the fast-growing extra-girl colony and it was then that Mrs. Warrenton took to the Y. W. C. A. of Hollywood the question of establishing leisure quarters for extra girls of the Southern California film colony.

At last weeks' meeting of the Hollywood Business Men's Association, the proposition was presented, the great need for just such an institution was realized and within a few minutes the men had pledged the sum of $1,500.00 toward the rental of quarters to be "home" to many of the extra girls of the Hollywood studios. Mrs. Warrenton is active in putting into execution plans for the Extra-Girls' Home. More than ever is she now entitled to the name "Mother."

E. B. Jones of Springfield, has patented a motion picture show on wheels. It will travel by rail to small towns in Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Wisconsin and Michigan. The car has opera house seats and 150 persons can view the show at a time.

The Grand moving picture theater in Pleasantville, which was destroyed by fire February 28, has been repaired and is now opened to the public. A. H. Travis is manager.

Iowa

Manager A. G. Ferris, who recently took over the Empress theater in Cherokee and rechristened it the Happy Hour, is making some decided improvements in the house. The front has been redecorated and now presents a very attractive appearance. The interior will be repainted, some new equipment installed and the house brought strictly up to date.

Kansas

Iuka now has a moving picture show. Fred Moore, of Myers, comes down each Friday night and puts on a show at the hall.

Maryland

The McHenry Theater Company has been incorporated for the purpose of operating a theater at Cross and Light streets, Baltimore, which will be opened January 1. Henry W. Webb, president of the Parkway Theater Company, will be the president, and Eugene Bolster secretary and treasurer. The theater will cost about $75,000 in a finished state. It will be fireproof, of concrete and steel, will be constructed after the plan of the Majestic Theater in Detroit, and the New Victoria Theater in Buffalo, and will have a seating capacity of over 1,200.

Massachusetts

The Court Theater at 39 Main street, Worcester, has been sold by its owner and manager, Charles A. Ball, to the Court Theater Corporation, a new company capitalized at $20,000, which also purchased the Grand Theater in Marlboro. They have taken possession. The Marlboro Theater has been operated by William S. Rieser. The officers of the new company are: President, William McKinnon, Worcester; William S. Rieser, Somerville, and John E. Rice, Marlboro.

Parillo-Brookhart Players Film Company, $500,000; Bert Brookhart, Thomas S. Hutchins, Jr., Charles C. Hutchins, Lauretta Parillo, Lola B. Hutchins, Portland, Me. Producing motion pictures and carrying on theaters and motion picture shows.

POWERFUL LASKY PRODUCER

George Melford, who is doing such excellent work as producer for the Lasky Company, is a Rochester, N. Y., native, and has a record to be proud of. For seventeen years he has been associated with the profession. Seven of these were spent on the speaking stage and ten in the photoplay world. He first joined the Kalem organization as a leading man, and, after directing for that company for some years, was placed in charge of the companies sent to California, where he acted as producer of features as well as general manager.

Since being selected by Jesse L. Lasky and Cecil de Mille as a producer for the Lasky Company, he has directed some of the most successful of the photoplays sent out by that concern, and among others may be mentioned "Young Romance," with Mabel Talliaferro; "The Governor's Lady," with Edith Wynne Matthison; "A Gentleman of Leisure," with Wallace Eddinger; "The Woman," with Theodore Roberts and Lois Meredith; "Stolen Goods," with Blanche Sweet; "The Puppet Crown," with Ina Claire and Carlyle Blackwell; "The Fighting Hope," with Laura Hope Crews; "The Marriage of Kitty," with Fanny Ward; "Out of Darkness," with Charlotte Walker; "The Explorer," with Lou Tellegen, the same actor in "The Unknown"; "Armstrong's Wife," with Edna Goodrich; "The Immigrant," with Valeska Suratt, and several others—a wonderful record for the comparatively short time he has been with the company.

Michigan

The village of Lyons has inauguraed a municipal motion picture show and free open air exhibitions will be given on every Saturday night during the summer season.

Not only will the new Oakland theater, now in process of erection on south Saginaw street at the corner of Water street, be one of the largest and handsomest moving picture theaters in the state, but it will also be a substantial addition architecturally to Pontiac's princi-

UNIVERSAL'S HANDSOMEST MAN

"Handsomest Man" Roy Fernandez, who won the prize of one year's Universal contract from several thousand other good looking aspirants, is not Violet Mersereau's ideal husband type. He is a blonde type, and her ideal is a dark type. What does all this matter? Little, except that Press Agent Van Loan in advertising the "handsomest man" contest had offered an extra prize in the hand of charming Miss Mersereau.

But, the offer ran, Miss Mersereau would have the right to turn down the prospective husband if she saw fit. Of course, Miss Mersereau saw fit to "saw fit." No handier excuse being around, it was discovered that both Miss Mersereau and Mr. Fernandez were blondes, which wouldn't make it an ideal union at all.

Mr. Fernandez and Miss Mersereau were introduced formally to each other at a special dinner on the Strand Theater Roof, New York. The newspapermen were "tipped" that Miss Mersereau would propose to the "handsomest man" right there, and it indeed looked that way when a genuine minister took a seat at the big table. However, it developed that the clergyman was a friend of J. W. Binder, executive secretary of the Motion Picture Board of Trade, and merely on hand as a guest. After the dinner, the much-publicized couple were taken to Madison Square Garden, there to be gazed at by a horde of admirers who thought the proposal had really come off per schedule.

But they're not engaged yet, and the most Mr. Fernandez will see of Miss Mersereau will be a few minutes a week at the Universal Eastern Studios, where Carl Laemmle has assigned him to play in the support of Edith Roberts, George Ridgewell directing.

pal business street. The Oakland Theater company is in charge of the project and has ample financial backing to make the theater as fine a playhouse as can be found in the country. Officers are: A. I. Marentette, president; James H. O'Donnell, first vice-president; Harry Goldstein, second vice-president, and Frank C. Cook, secretary and treasurer. They are all of Detroit. An effort will be made to rush the building to completion by October 1. In the decorations, which are to be quite elaborate, the Adams style of architecture will be carried out. Not only will boxes line the sides of the theater in two tiers, but there will also be a string of boxes clear across the theater above the orchestra rows. Considerable attention has been given to exits, which will be placed on all four sides of the building, making it easy to empty the theater in a short space of time.

A deal was closed recently whereby Ralph Saller of Westby, Mont., becomes owner of the Photo Play theater, at Crosby. The consideration was $4,500. Mr. Saller has taken charge.

Ohio

The De Luxe Theater Company was incorporated at Columbus for the purpose of operating a motion picture theater in Lima. Capital stock is set at $10,000. The company has not yet decided whether a new theater shall be built here or whether negotiations will be opened for the purchase of one of the present motion picture houses. The incorporators are A. Ritzler, manager of the Lima Automatic Piano Company, and Edema B. Ritzler, No. 606 N. Jameson avenue; Ira F. Wright and Ione W. Wright, Bay City, Michigan, and Oliver Kies, 944 West Wayne street.

The Sterling Film Company, Cincinnati, $31,280; Edgar Freiberg.

Oklahoma

It has been announced that Lee Olive, manager of the Sugg theater, took over the Kozy. Mr. Olive, who is also manager of the Empress theater, announced that that playhouse would be done away with and the Kozy moved to the stand occupied by the Empress. W. C. Blackstone, formerly owner the Cozy, will continue manager of the show. This deal gives the Sugg management control of all the theaters in Chickasha.

Pennsylvania

George Panagotacos is enlarging the Nemo theater in Johnstown. The building will be extended back about fifty feet and the seating capacity enlarged.

Virginia

Amendment to charter of Rialto Theater Corporation, Richmond, increasing its maximum capital stock from $600,000 to $950,000.

West Virginia

Manager Siburt of the Park theater in Moundsville is improving his theater.

Wisconsin

To reduce operating and advertising expenses and eliminate the competition which has existed for some time past, the four moving picture theaters of Eau Claire will unite in one company or corporation. The plan, it is announced, will unite the heads of the present theaters in one company but each house will be operated under its present management but the receipts will be pooled and divided up according to the agreement enterd into. The exact workings of the new corporation have not been detailed but it is stated on good authority that they will be approximately as outlined above.

J. W. Hurley of Adams has sold his moving picture show equipment to Frank Nowachek, who will conduct the show as heretofore.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than clsasification by makes, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

Gold and Glitter—(One Reel)—Biograph—July 31.—As the husband leaves for the lumber regions, his wife gives him a memory message to be opened after his arrival. Attracted by a maid, cherished by two old brothers, he forgets it until some time later. The message serves its purpose, for through it, after a thrilling experience, the maid learns the true value of the man's love, while he in turn goes back to his waiting wife and finds there, along with his shame and regeneration, his heart's desire.

Otto the Gardener—(One Reel)—Lubin—July 31.—Featuring Davy Don and Patsey De Forest. Otto is a gardener working in the beautiful gardens of lovely and accomplished Lady Dora. He is madly in love with her but on account of his rank he dare not mention it to her. Lady Dora says she will marry a prince. James Gordon and William Kent, two of her admirers, who had gotten the turn down, plan revenge and dresses Otto as a prince and takes him to the mansion where he meets Lady Dora, who falls in love with him. A reception is held in his honor and he is found out when his mother, who has learned of his acts, lets the cat out of the bag, and Otto is kicked out and loses his job.

The Old Man Who Tried to Grow Young—(Three Reels)—Selig—July 31.—Featuring Al Filson, Charles West and Vivian Reed. Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

The House of Discord—(Two Reels)—Biograph—August 1.—Featuring an all star cast. In her youth the mother was saved from the fatal mistake by an accident, but it caused her years of separation from child and husband. It has occurred primarily through her self-righteous sister-in-law's domination and interference. A like fate and downfall threatened the daughter, now reaching maturity. The mother's insistence separated the child from her environment. Love and understanding did the rest.

The Chimney Sweep—(Two Reels)—Essanay—August 1.—Featuring Joyce Fair and Tommy Harper. Review appeared on page 273, July 29 issue.

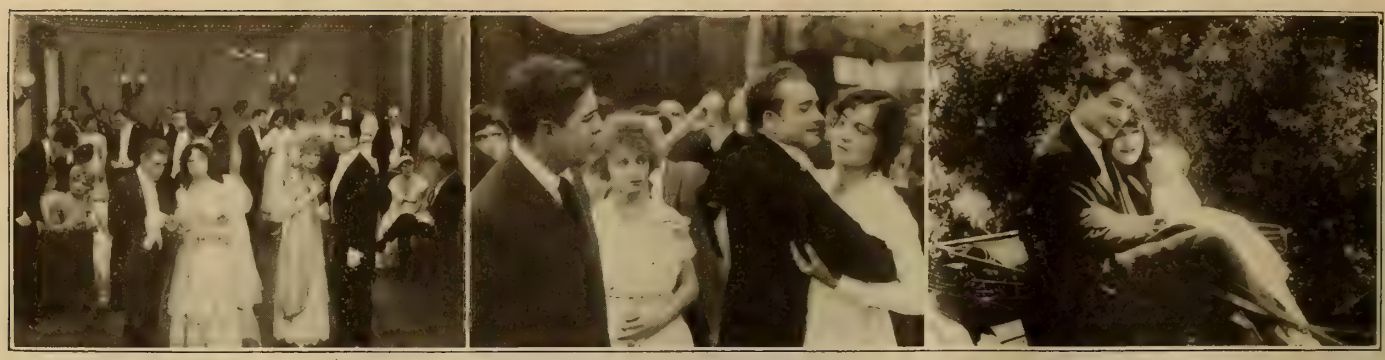
The Price of Dishonor—(Two Reels)—Lubin—August 1.—Kate, the pretty daughter of Colonel Lyon, of the East Indian service, is loved by Lieutenant Frank Waring, the paymaster, and Captain Eliot, of the ordnance department. She prefers Frank and they are engaged. Kate is visited by Faith Emory, an old-time friend, who is going away on missionary work. Kate introduces him to Frank and he congratulates her. Eliot is induced to gamble and is heavily in debt. He is about to be exposed when he steals from the pay roll and places it in Frank's pocket, who is accused. Kate renounces Frank and he is centured by the missionary. A consignment of ammunition arrives and it is worthless and instead of reporting it Eliot visits the company agent and accepts a bribe with which he pays his debts and makes love to Kate and she consents to marry him. Conscience smitten, Eliot writes a note which fully exonerates Frank and then kills himself. On the way home Kate, ashamed to look at Frank, but when they reach the post and the state of affairs are known, she is only too happy to place Frank's ring on her finger again.

Vernon Howe Bailey's Sketch Book of Petrograd—Essanay—August 2.—The capital of Russia which has for centuries reflected the glory of the czars and been the pivot point for the merging of the far east and the far west, a dividing line of Oriental and Occidental civilization, has been pictured in these motion drawings with all the skill of this renowned artist. The mysterious palaces of the mysterious city have been caught by his photographic eye and transferred to the screen. The architectural beauty of the Romanoff possession—possible to the richest family in the world—were all sketches before the outbreak of the war. The drawings have now been completed and in the film offer an excellent study of the old St. Petersburg which added new features to its history by the recent change in its name. By contrast 500 feet of scenic share the reel.

Hubby's Relatives—(One Reel)—Vim—August 2.—Featuring Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby. Lothario has many girls and is pursued by creditors. He falls in love with a new girl and marries her, having told his creditors that she is wealthy. His old flames read of the marriage and descend upon him. Likewise the creditors come to collect. Hubby in despair introduces them as his cousins, sisters, uncles, aunts and other relatives. He gets them out of the house, but they become suspicious and return. After he has exhausted every effort to keep the facts from wifey he is exposed.

Here are some new Mutuals. Descending, they are, "The Dreamer," "Gates of Divorce," with Gertrude McCoy, and "Dare Devils and Danger."

Human Hounds—(One Reel)—Vim—August 3.—Featuring Babe Hardy and Billy Ruge. With the secrets of a nation entrusted to his care, General Debility cautiously places them in his bureau as his charming friend, the Countess Mudge, enters his room. Her fascinating manner entirely puts the old chap off his guard and she discovers the hiding place of the papers. The old general's wife, tired of his everlasting flirtations, decided to divorce him and with the divorce papers calls on the famed detectives Plump and Runt to find them. At the same time the general discovers his valued plots are missing and also employs them to find them. They muddle things up in great style, mistakes the plots for the divorce papers, are themselves robbed, and finally blunder into the right course, owing to the indecision of the female mind, as the general's wife changed her mind re the divorce.



Wait a Minute—(One Reel)—Vim—August 4. Featuring Robt. Burns, Walt Stull and Helen Gilmore. Jane Higgs is greatly admired by Pokes, who tries in every possible way to win her affections but to no avail. Jane is not only the village constable, but the head of the fire department and the local justice of the peace. She is called away suddenly to assist the sheriff of the adjoining county and appoints Pokes as her substitute. She has scarcely departed when Pokes receives word that Bad Jabbs is shooting up Thirsty Norton's Cafe. Pokes starts off to capture Jabbs, but one look at the bad man and Pokes seeks refuge in the office. The various calls coming for Pokes that are part of the duties of the many offices he holds keeps him rushing madly in all directions. Pokes succeeds in capturing Jabbs and proudly returns to the office with his prisoner and instead of being praised for his daring capture he sees his admired Jane clasp the bad man to her bosom and proclaim him as her long lost husband.

The War Bride of Plumville—(Three Reels)—Essanay—August 5.—Featuring Nell Craig and Ernest Maupain. Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

An Angelic Attitude—(One Reel)—Selig—August 5.—Featuring Tom Mix and Victoria Forde. Al Matthews writes to his old friend, Daniel Miller, that a young lady wishes to come west to sketch some real western scenery, and will arrive at Miller's ranch in a few days. Daniel Miller is well along in years, but when Grace the artist appears visions of matrimony again come to the old gentleman. Tom, Daniel's son, also admires her, and it does not take long for Tom and Grace to fall in love, but their love making is constantly interrupted by the interference of the father. Grace wishes to paint a picture and she induces Tom's father to pose as an angel hanging from a rope which is tied to the limb of a tree. When father is thus secure, Tom and Grace escape to plight their troth uninterruptedly.

Mutual Pictures

The Dreamer—(Two Reels)—American—July 31.—Featuring Lizette Thorne, Edward Coxen and George Field. On a small farm on the outskirts of a large city lives Ezra Caldwell, the owner, and his son George. Betsy, a little slavery type, cares for the household, while Sim, a half-wit, does the outside chores. Ezra Caldwell is reputed to be the meanest man in the neighborhood, and is despised by the neighbors. He treats Betsy in a very mean way. Roland Delaney, clubman and wealthy idler, lives alone in his handsome home in the city. He receives an invitation to a week end party in the country and he motors down. It is harvest time and Ezra has ordered Betsy to prepare for several extra hired men. Delaney meets with trouble on the road and after some time succeeds in getting at Caldwell's while all but Betsy are in the fields. She, thinking him a hired man, offers him a seat and he gets into conversation with her. He is also hired and wins the gratitude of Sim, who was being beaten by George. Here Delaney learns from Sim that Ezra is not the owner of the farm. That night Delaney bids good-bye to Betsy and she is heart-broken because she has learned to care for him. Meantime, after hearing the threat to be exposed by Sim, they treat Betsy very fine and George decides she should marry him. She refuses. They finally lock her in her room until she will submit to the marriage and Delaney returns, after investigating the old records of the county recorder's office and finds the farm belongs to her. Delaney demands to see Betsy and they refuse and after a fight, at the end of which Ezra and George are locked in the kitchen and he goes and finds Betsy and takes her to his home and explains that she is the owner of the farm.

The Secret of the Submarine No. 11—(Two Reels)—American—July 31.—Featuring Juanita Hansen and Tom Chatterton. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

Painless Extraction—(One Reel)—Vogue—August 1.—Featuring Rube Miller and Owen Evans. Rube and Evans, a couple of tramps, are short of money and see a man and woman seated on a bench in the park and rob the man despite his protests. A flirtatious dentist puts a sign outside of the house for an assistant. Rube and Evans come along and see the sign and Evans lands the job. The dentist goes out for a good time with one of his patients and leaves the office in charge of Evans, who with Rube robs all the patients that come into the office. While they are dividing up their ill gotten gains they discover that they have seated themselves at the side of a sleeping policeman. He awakens, and after being roughly handled the policeman enters and gives the plunder to the patients and everything is once more set right, with the exception of Rube and Evans, who go crazy over their run of hard luck.

Daredevils and Danger—(One Reel)—Beauty—August 2.—Featuring John Sheehan and Carol Halloway. This comedy is filled with a series of thrills. The United States government had conferred upon Art Howell the honor of improving a "self-aiming gun" which had just been invented. Howell held the precious blueprints that contained the secret of this new engine of death and he was guarding them zealously. Jenks, Howell's valet, was a bit over-anxious to please and had Art been a good student of human nature he would never have tolerated the valet's antics. Art went over to his neighbor's to demonstrate the new gun, and Jenks took advantage of his master's absence and with a couple of assistants blew the safe that held the blueprints and started a mad rush for the border.

When Jerry Came to Town—(One Reel)—Cub—August 4.—Featuring George Ovey. Jerry, walking his way to town, sees a village cut-up tormenting a young woman who is carrying a heavy basket of groceries. To the fair one's rescue, Jerry vigorously lands on the youth's head with a brick, preventing any further trouble, and then he gallantly carries the basket for the girl, who is the daughter of the town grocer. The father is in need of a strong young man to help about the store and Jerry lands the job. His attention directed at the girl more than it is with his work, arouses the wrath of the storekeeper and the two get into a fight. Jerry hides in a barrel and soon he is a captive when the old man nails the lid on. Jerry escapes and there is a general mix-up. Led by the constable, a mob gives chase after Jerry, but the fleet-footed little fellow gains and outdistances his pursuers, while back at the store the angry father uses his razor strap effectively on his daughter.

Fate's Decision—(Two Reels)—Centaur—August 5.—The husband, a middle-aged and prosperous business man, is burdened and worried with the care of his enterprises, working early and late, that he does not show his wife the consideration and attentions that are naturally hers. She goes shopping with a female friend and they lunch at a tango tea garden and the young wife is introduced to the flirt and enjoys her first sensation of being flattered by a strange man. The first experience leads to other visits and she is soon on friendly terms with him. The husband is unexpectedly called out of town and 'phones his wife to pack his bag. They had planned to go to the theater that night and the wife suggests postponing his departure until the next day. This he cannot do and the wife decides that she will go to the theater and writes a message to the flirt. On the departure of the husband the wife begs him to take her along, but it is impossible. The husband is about to enter his auto when he witnesses an auto accident a short distance from his home and orders the chauffeur to drive to their assistance. The wife, all ready for the theater, descends to the lower floor to await the coming of the flirt and meets her husband and the chauffeur entering with the injured person. The ambulance is called and the wife bathes the blood from the face of the man and is horrified to recognize the features of the flirt. The wife faints and is carried to her room while the ambulance surgeon pronounces the flirt dead. The husband reads again the letter written by his wife, and realizing why she wanted to accompany him on his trip the last moment, and awakening to the fact that he had been leaving her too much alone, he sets fire to the letter and when it is consumed by the flame he kneels and gently takes his wife into his arms.

Universal Program

Beer Must Go Down—Nestor—July 31.—Featuring Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran. Reggie Smith has a falling out with his father, who, because of Reggie's bills for damages while on "drunks," calls his son a grafter and orders him out of the house. Reggie joins forces with Potts, a detective, who is working against a trust which has forced the price of beer up. At last a raid is made on the members of the graft trust and Mr. Smith, its head, is caught. Thus Reggie proves his father to be the biggest grafter, and Smith is forced to "make good" with both his

Who Pulled the Trigger?—(Three Reels)—Gold Seal—August 1.—Featuring Lee Hill and Marie Walcamp. The story of this picture was adapted by Walter Woods from the story by Edwin Balmer published in the Red Book Magazine. Laid in the South, it deals with the trouble

New Universal pictures. The one at the left is "The Captain of the Typhoon," with King Baggot. Then comes the Bluebird feature with Myrtle Gonzalez, "The Secret of the Swamp" and "From Broadway to a Throne," a Red Feather with Carter de Haven.

Periscopic views of coming Vitagraphs. Edith Storey and Antonio Moreno in "The Tarantula," Robert Edeson and Naomi Childers in "Fathers of Men" and Mary Anderson in "Waters of Lethe."

Douglas, foreman of a sawmill, creates by giving positions in his mill to negroes who have been abused by their employers, the Kendall brothers, on a nearby plantation. One of the Kendalls is killed and corrupt methods are used in disposing of the suspected prisoner, Douglas, which are about to end in a lynching when Douglas' sweetheart intervenes. With evidence of the foreman's innocence she prevails with the sheriff and prevents an outrage. Later Douglas and his fair deliverer become married and move North.

A Society Sherlock—Victor—August 1.—Featuring William Garwood and Irma Dawkins. In this comedy Freddie, the effete society dawdler, in his attempts to convince his sweetheart that he is a hero, proves himself a veritable Sherlock Holmes—or at least so it appears on the surface. In reality Freddie stumbles into success through no efforts of his own. But the result is the same: the girl is satisfied that he is a hero.

A Lucky Gold Piece—Imp—August 2.—Ben Wilson, Charles Ogle and Edna Hunter are in the cast. The story tells of a romance which begins in childhood. The poor boy is given a gold piece by the little daughter of a wealthy man. He is now a successful factory owner. He recounts the story of his meeting with the little rich girl to a factory girl who has found the gold piece. She happens to be the girl. Her father lost all his money and she is now forced to earn her own living. They have a wedding ring made of the gold piece and in the last scene Dunn places it upon Marion's finger.

Where Is My Husband?—(Two Reels)—L-Ko—August 2.—With Dan Russell and Katherine Griffith. The experiences herein set forth are calculated to show that flirting does not pay—at least when nasty-tempered husbands are to be dealt with. Dinty is slow to realize this, but the knowledge is gradually inculcated upon him through ever-increasing misfortunes. After being chased long and hard by the vengeful husband Dinty meets with a blood-curdling accident, and the closing scene sees him draped upon the pilot of a locomotive.

A Man's Hardest Fight—Big U—August 3.—Pelette, a guide in the tree country, and Martin Langley, foreman of a camp, are suitors for the hand of Gladys. Gladys marries Martin. Pellette fights hard to conquer his bitterness over the loss but he finally takes to drink. While intoxicated he attacks Gladys. Martin comes to the rescue and he is obdurate and wishes to punish Pellette, but Gladys pleads with her husband, for she understands the depth of Pellette's feeling for her and finally convinces him that the guide's remorse will be punishment enough. Lucille Young, Al MacQuarrie and Jack Nelson are in the cast.

My Lady's Millions—(Two Reels)—Laemmle—August 3.—Featuring Hobart Henley and Catherine Calvert; story written by John C. Brownell. Kate, the daughter of Stuart Kingsley, head of the Gasoline Trust, one day gives an unfortunate young man, Donald Grant, a one hundred dollar bill. Grant does not at the time know who his benefactress is. How the young man, through helding an inventor, becomes wealthy, meets Kate, and saves her father from ruin, amounts to the substance of the story.

Imperial India—Powers Educational—August 3.—This release in the Dorsey Travel Pictures series shows the sports of India. An elephant race, sword practice and daring feats of horsemanship are among the events. The camel race is both curious and amusing.

A Daughter of the Night—Imp—August 4.—With William Lowery, Agnes Vernon and Doris Baker. In this story Sunbeam, a child of eight, is the central figure as an active influence in leading others to a better life. Like many other good people, she is early claimed by death, but not until she has completely regenerated a couple who were on the lowest rung of human experience.

When the Minstrels Came to Town—(Two Reels)—Victor—August 4.—A juvenile comedy enacted by Baby Earley and Frank Butterworth. The children are taken to the minstrel show. They are so delighted that they plan to have a show of their own the next day. The garage is the playhouse and father's auto is started but cannot be stopped, but the show goes on just the same. The runaway auto and the missing baby cause the parents to worry much and the children have a lovely time until they are discovered.

The Girl in Lower 9—Big U—August 5.—Cleo Madison is cast in the role of a Swedish girl who is summoned to the West by friends of her father, who is very ill. A passenger on the train learns that she is carrying a large amount of money and he steals her purse that night. Tillie follows him from the train but Dix eludes her. The father, meantime, is anxious because of her failure to arrive on the scheduled train. When Tillie does reach her father's home she discovers Dix in the town. Nels, her father's friend, recovers Tillie's purse and the recovery of her father brightens the future for the girl and Nels.

Under the Lion's Paw—(Two Reels)—Bison—August 5.—An animal drama, this picture tells of a man who owns a menagerie. His daughter is loved by the superintendent. The girl's father objects to this match. He attempts one night to put an end to their secret meetings and allows a lion to roam about the place. Hamilton's little daughter runs out of the house and the lion lunges at her. The superintendent and the older daughter save the little girl and there is a happy ending to the romance.

Kate's Lovers' Knot—Joker—August 5.—With Gale Henry and William Franey. The friends of pretty Maxine and her fiance, Lovejoy, consider Maxine's old maid sister Kate a "lemon." But Kate's first beau finally appears, followed shortly by another, and Kate has the novel experience of playing one man off against the other. The two men, however, discover themselves to be long lost brothers and each renounces himself in favor of the other. Thus everybody is made miserable and Kate is left without further matrimonial hopes.

The Captain of the Typhoon—(Two Reels)—Big U—August 6.—King Baggot is in the title role and Edna Hunter is the girl who conceals herself on the Typhoon. She is discovered just before sailing time and the captain is surprised to learn that she is the daughter of his former captain. He was in love with her but Bess loved his worthless brother. The brother enters the cabin at this point and a fight between the two ensues. Tom is thrown overboard.

The Finishing Touch—Imp—August 6.—Written by Harvey Gates and directed by George Cochrane, this drama tells of a gang leader who drinks heavily and abuses his wife when intoxicated. The meek wife suddenly becomes determined and while he is drunk she binds him to a heavy piece of furniture and horsewhips him. This acts as a cure and in the end Sam is a quite rejuvenated man. Marjorie Ellison and Rex de Rosselli enact the piece.

The Youngest in the Family—L-Ko—August 6.—With Lucille Hutton and Bert Roach. Father fires the janitor, who is in love with his daughter, but leaves the safe open, the entire contents of which is appropriated by the janitor. The latter marries the girl and they live in a magnificent home on the stolen money. The wife finally persuades her husband to allow the old folks to come and enjoy their old age in luxury, as the robbery has reduced them to poverty. But when father arrives and discovers the identity of his son-in-law a storm of trouble is precipitated. The result is the son-in-law's downfall.

Blue Bird

The Secret of the Swamp—(Five Reels)—Bluebird—July 31.—Featuring Myrtle Gonzales and Val Paul. Chet Wells, with his invalid mother, rents a piece of property from Deacon Todd. Major Burke and his daughter Emily are near neighbors and she is engaged to a wealthy young man of the neighborhood. The girl's kindness to the invalid Mrs. Wells brings her into frequent association with Chet and they become fond of each other without openly expressing their regard. Chet is unable to make the farm pay and when Deacon Todd demands his rent he is unable to pay and the excited conversation that follows causes the death of Chet's mother. He swears vengeance. Compelled to vacate, he sells his chattels and goes away to seek his fortune. Deacon Todd moves in the house and soon arises an enmity between he and Major Burke. The Major sends a charge of shot in the direction of Todd, because he had discovered the Deacon letting his cows into his corn. Chet returns the night Todd disappears and suspicion is laid on him. The Major is conscience-stricken and takes to drink and in his maudlin slumber, reveals the facts of the shooting, which is heard by Chet. The officers accuse Chet of the crime and he admits he is guilty. Chet is locked up in the neighborhood jail and Emily releases him, giving him opportunity to decamp and begging him to take her along to be married.

Fox

The Beast—(Five Reels)—William Fox—July 24.—Featuring George Walsh and Anna Luther. The story deals with the effect a woman's tear has upon a brutish man who has intended doing her a great wrong, and the way her influence regenerates the man. Richard Stanton wrote and produced the picture. Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

OFFICE OF JAIRE ATHLONEC CLARKE

Concordia, Kansas,
July the Third,
Nineteen Sixteen.

Motography,
Chicago, Illinois.

Gentlemen:

I wish to congratulate you on having one of the best little advertising mediums in the business.

During this last week I have inserted in 164 of the leading newspapers and magazines of this country two small classified ads. Returns have naturally been good. But on Friday night last I began receiving replies from my insertion in your publication, two days before receiving notice from you that ad was being run, and to date have received a total of 112 replies, all of which mention Motography as the magazine in which my announcement was called to their attention. These returns place Motography at the head of my list relative to advertising mediums.

Thanking you for the same,

I am,

Yours sincerely,

Jaire

ADDRESS ALL COMMUNICATIONS TO POST OFFICE BOX 165. CONCORDIA, KANSAS

Our Answer to Jaire:

Mr. Jaire Athlonec Clarke, July 6, 1916.
Concordia, Kansas.
Dear Sir:

We have your favor of July 3 and desire to thank you for your unsolicited testimonial, which seems almost inconceivable, even to us, who know that MOTOGRAPHY is the leader in the motion picture field.

Unless you received some telegrams and special delivery letters it hardly seems possible that between the time of publication and the time of writing your letter you had received 112 replies to the two small advertisements appearing in last week's issue of MOTOGRAPHY.

We are taking the privilege of having your letter reproduced and will circularize it freely among prospective advertisers.

Again thanking you for your consideration in this matter, we are, yours truly, MOTOGRAPHY.

And Jaire's Latest Report:

Concordia, Kansas, July Tenth, 1916.

MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago.
Gentlemen:

Yours of the sixth instant before me. The bulk of the letters received in return from my advertisement in your magazine have been forwarded for investigation to our traveling representative, Mr. Lester B. Shrouf, and immediately upon their return I will take great pleasure in having them forwarded to you as proof of my statement as to the drawing power of your publication.

At this date I might state that a total of 268 replies were received from the one insertion, this total leading the nearest competitor by over fifty.

Thanking you for the same, I remain,

Yours sincerely,

JAIRE.

Country-wide String of Theaters

NEW $7,500,000 FILM COMPANY WILL ALSO MAKE AND DISTRIBUTE PICTURES

WHAT will probably be one of the largest motion picture corporations in the field was formed last week when a new organization was incorporated for $7,500,000.

The incorporation was made in South Dakota with State's Attorney Thomas C. McNamee acting as incorporating counsel and also serving as acting assistant secretary for the present with offices in Pierre, South Dakota.

The chief activities of the new concern will be confined to New York, Pittsburgh, Detroit, Cleveland and Chicago. The offices in New York and Pittsburgh have already been opened and offices in the other cities will be opened within a week.

No definite announcements of the names of the directors and the plans and scope of the organization will be made until after the first meeting of the incorporators the first week in August. It has been authentically learned, however, that Pittsburgh steel men and automobile manufacturers of Detroit and Cleveland are the real backers of the enterprise.

The organization has been incorporated under three distinct divisions—the Success Films Production Company, the Success Films Releasing Company, and the Success Films Real Estate Corporation. The latter is incorporated for $3,000,000; the production company for $2,500,000, and the releasing company for $2,000,000.

One of the best known directors in the business has been installed as acting chief of the production department. Negotiations have been pending with several stars during the past ten days and more than thirty have been placed under tentative contracts.

Studios for the new company have been obtained first picture will start August fifteenth.

One of the most important features of the corporation is the provision made for the development of a string of theaters throughout the country through the Success Films Real Estate Corporation. Plans have been made for the acquirement of a theater in every large city of the country as rapidly as possible.

Options on theaters in six of the cities of the east have already been acquired. These include Pittsburgh, Philadelphia and New York.

Boost Pathe in Central West

Here is a good example of what three business getters can do. In six short weeks C. A. Bunn, Henry E. Friedman and V. H. Hodupp have built a model Pathe organization at Chicago in accordance with the new sales plan which Mr. Berst has been perfecting since the first of the year.

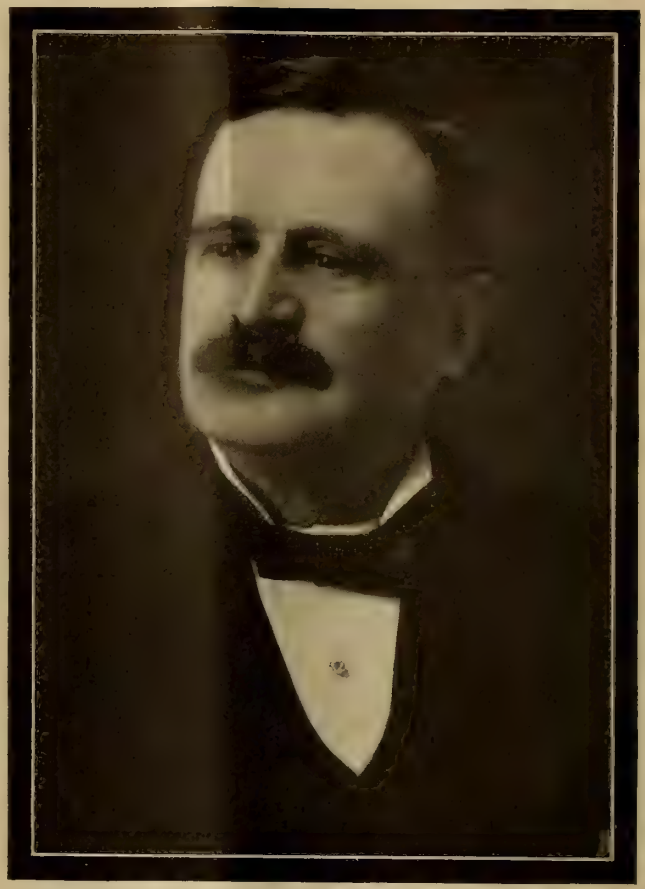
Mr. Bunn is manager of the Chicago office and Mr. Friedman has been appointed from assistant manager of the Chicago office to manager of the Minneapolis office. Mr. Hodupp is assistant to General Business Manager Seelye and as a result of his good work in Chicago has had the Minneapolis office also added to the territory over which he has supervision.

VITAGRAPH FOUNDER DEAD

William T. Rock, Organizer and Former President of Film Producing Company, Passed Away on July 27

William T. Rock, founder and former president of the Vitagraph Company of America, died at his home at Oyster Bay on July 27, 1916, at the age of 62 years.



Mr. Rock had been ill for about three months, and the cause of his sudden death was attributed to heart disease. He was one of the pioneers of the motion picture business, starting as early as 1896. During the time when the Edison Vitascope was being exploited Mr. Rock purchased the rights for the state of Louisiana and made his first money at New Orleans. At the end of the first year in the southern city Mr. Rock and his partner, Walter Wainwright, had accumulated about six hundred film subjects when they returned to New York. It was in the winter of 1897-98 that a partnership was formed with J. Stuart Blackton and Albert E. Smith, out of which grew the original Vitagraph Company. Mr. Rock retained the presidency until May of the present year, when ill health necessitated his retiring from active work.

A wife and two children, John B. and Mary Rock, survive him.

During his life, particularly that portion of it which was devoted to the motion picture industry—men who knew him best called him "Pop." In Motography of April 5, 1913, under the caption of "Who's Who in the Film Game," the following was printed:

He is Pop, the original. There are other Pops in the business, but only one William Tecumseh Pop Rock. And he's president of the Vitagraph Company of America, with offices strung around the world, but more particularly on Manhattan and Long Islands. Pop is usually flitting around visiting his offices. It is a long flit from Brooklyn to Paris, but there is always someone bound for the same place. Pop finds congenial friends wherever he goes and always when he arrives. Dull care hasn't looked him in the face for ever and ever so long. If you will be careful to examine, there are some tiny wrinkles at the corners of his eyes. They are caused by their eternal twinkle.

But Pop hasn't always had a bed of roses. He used to work—early and late. He got in on the tidal wave of motion pictures when the tides were running about as high as they do on Lake Michigan. But he stuck. When there wasn't anything better than the penny in the slot machine, Pop had all of 'em he could corral in a great hall at Coney Island, where he held concessions. Much has been written about his earlier activities in the film business. Everybody knows that Pop was in at the beginning and that he will be tangled up with pictures as long as he lives. The only inventions that are credited to William T. Rock are unrecorded at the patent office. They consist chiefly in new ways to spend money. Pop lies awake nights in devising methods to entertain his friends. He is never so happy as when wholly surrounded by guests who are there at his command and who are pledged to enter no protest when he calls for the check. The Vitagraph players and their friends never know what new stunt Pop has in store for them, but they know it is on the way. It may be recalled, a few years ago when film men journeyed to Atlantic City to air their troubles, that Pop chartered all the roller chairs and hired all the pushers. If you were to ride the boardwalk you did it as Pop's guest and waved a Vitagraph banner! You had your choice of doing this or walking. Nor did it matter whether you belonged to the film folks or not, for all of the chairs were under his embargo. Many stories of a similar nature are credited to him.

William T. Rock, founder of the Vitagraph company, who is dead.

Wm. T. Rock lives in Flatbush, Brooklyn, where he finds the drive to the main plant particularly suitable for his limousine. The home is luxuriously furnished with the things Mr. and Mrs. Rock have picked up in many parts of the world. Pop enjoys his home when he has time for it, but he prefers travel, partly because his business demands it and principally because it keeps him in practice—spending money.

The hardest work he has been known to do in recent years is to jimmy the cork out of a fifteen-cent bottle of Grove's cough cure and snip the bands from fifty-centers. He is a member of numerous clubs and is a tremendous factor in the licensed film organizations of this country. He is an extensive investor in real estate in Greater New York and operates an adding machine to keep tab on his flat buildings. It is known that he has more varieties of flats than Heinz has of pickles and things.

To Mr. Rock the vast extent of the business of the Vitagraph Company stands as a monument, for he was instrumental in making possible the plans of his associates. Under his hand it became a factor not only in the world of motion pictures but also in the financial world.

It was Mr. Rock who saw the possibilities of the motion picture business which his associates brought to him, in the flush of their first enthusiasm. It was his steadying influence and good judgment that did so much to place the business on its present foundation. It was an unusual combination that brought these three men together, with William T. Rock at the helm. He made it possible for the flights of imagination on the part of the younger men to become realities.

Milton H. Fahrney is the author as well as the director of "When Jerry Came to Town," the Cub-Mutual comedy starring George Ovoy.

Association Fights for Justice

BIG PUBLICITY CAMPAIGN LAUNCHED AT MEETING OF FILM MEN

PRACTICALLY every big producing concern in the United States, together with the distributing and accessories concerns and exhibitors were present at the meeting of the new National Association of the Motion Picture Industry held at Hotel Astor, at which a most comprehensive publicity campaign against adverse legislation was launched.

As a first step in this campaign a committee was appointed consisting of Lee A. Ochs, H. Reichenbach, W. A. Johnston, W. Stephen Bush, E. A. McManus and J. E. Brulatour, to make public the action of the meeting through every available newspaper in the United States, through exchange managers and every channel which will reach the general public.

The immediate purpose of this widespread publicity is the defeat of the Kitchin Federal Revenue bill, which proposes to impose upon all theaters in cities of more than 3,000 population a tax of one-half of one per cent of their gross receipts. The attack will not only be made upon the bill itself but upon all those who are responsible for or favor this measure. The campaign will also embrace attacks against other forms of adverse legislation, such as censorship and so forth, and publicity will be given not only through the newspapers but also on the screen as trailers to all films. The names of the biggest and most influential men in the film business will be used in a determined effort to get this publicity before the public in a convincing form.

The picture makers feel that because their business was highly profitable it has been made the target of unjust attacks by politicians and it has been decided because this appears to be a matter of politics that an expression of opinion from both presidential candidates shall be secured.

The National Association represents the fifth largest industry in the country and it proposes to show those in political power that it wields an influence that it will not be slow to use to gain fair and just legislation and to kill all laws aimed at the industry.

The meeting was the most enthusiastic ever held and all present were imbued with a very evident determination to institute immediate action and place the film business in the proper light before the people of the United States.

Walter W. Irwin, as chairman, presided at the meeting, which lasted for three hours.

In opening the session he related briefly the results of placing the proposed by-laws and charter of the association before the Chicago convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. The plan was unanimously accepted by the exhibitors and a branch committee of 102 members elected. This committee in turn appointed a directory of ten to represent that body in the new organization. He then spoke of the object of the federation.

Following this address of the chairman and the signing of names to the subscription list for the new federation, the various branches represented at the meeting appointed committees and elected directors.

Among those present at this meeting were the following:

Fred C. Hawley, W. A. Brady, W. W. Irwin, Wm. Brandt, E. A. McManus, J. Stuart Blackton, Arthur James, Lee A. Ochs, J. Robert Rubin, Wm. M. Seabury, P. A. Powers, J. W. Engel, Richard A. Rowland, J. NEW STUDIO NEAR CHICAGO

Charles H. France Projecting a Producing Plant for Fort Wayne, Indiana. American Standard of Chicago to Distribute Plays

Charles H. France, for thirty years an actor and for the past seven years a director in picture studios, is organizing a stock company to establish a studio in Fort Wayne, Indiana. Samuel Quinn, president of the American Standard Film Company of Chicago, a releasing house, has guaranteed to distribute the pictures.

Fort Wayne was chosen, Mr. France said, because it is centrally situated, the topography of the surrounding country is prolific with good locations and it is within easy reach of Chicago, which is fast becoming the distributing center of the United States. The price of sites that would do for a studio in Chicago, he pointed out, would be prohibitive and on the whole production of pictures would be infinitely cheaper here.

The studio plans have been designed by technical experts, in accordance with the most modern ideas.

With a laboratory capacity of 150,000 feet of film weekly and indoor studio containing five stages, and equipped with an interchangeable trolley system of artificial lights, the facilities will be of the best.

The chemical laboratories, developing and film printing rooms, housed in the basement of the building, will be equipped with the latest and most modern apparatus and the storage vaults are designed to contain space for 1,500,000 feet of film.

Other departments, conveniently located, will include carpenter shops, scenic studio, property rooms, title rooms, armory, assembling and inspection rooms, film drying rooms equipped with air filter supplying a complete change of air every three minutes, and last but not least, a model projection room.

The run of Thomas H. Ince's "Civilization" at Cohan's Grand Opera House in Chicago is expected to close on August 12.

Ed Sloman, the American director, is starting a five-reel picture called "Her Honor." It is a very strong drama with Winnifred Greenwood and Ed Coxen in the leading parts. There are many big sets and one particularly big clubroom scene.

WORLD AIDS THEATERS

Company Called Meeting of Exhibitors at Start of Paralysis Epidemic and Gave Extensive Financial Aid

Anticipating even the action of the Board of Health and other civic bodies, the World Film Corporation at the start of the epidemic of infantile paralysis in New York, issued a call to all exhibitors playing World Film features, requesting them to assemble at the New York Exchange, with a view to alleviating their distressing conditions during the scourge of infantile paralysis. Nearly five hundred exhibitors, showing in the area affected by the epidemic, responded and within the next few days 92 per cent of the exhibitors received direct financial aid from the World Film Corporation, which, in most instances, according to the distressed theater owners, not only prevented most of their houses from being closed, but gave them a leverage with which to exact similar alleviation from other producing concerns.

When the Board of Health was considering its drastic action against the film theaters the World Film Corporation began a systematic tabulating of conditions at each house under contract. Salesmen conversant with business conditions in normal times were sent to interview several employees and in this manner the precise extent to which various theaters were affected was arrived at. Then the immediate step was taken which resulted in divers measures of relief to obtain during the scourge.

In several instances wherein the investigators found theaters affected to an unusual extent, the owners were either given a reduction in proportion to their business decrease, or they were given other aid that met their situation.

The houses in Greater New York who found willing and ready relief at the World offices are—in part—shown here.

In Manhattan, Schuyler, Globe, Lyric, Odeon, Bunny Prospect, St. Mark's, Bayard, Pictorium, Riverview, Ross, Orpheum, Adelphi, Seventy-seventh Street, Paradise, Lyric, Cherokee, Bunny, Windsor, Claremont, Classic, Heights, Lenox Gardens, Art, Bushman, Arcade, Garden University, Grange, Stadium, Morris Gardens, Sheridan, Garden, S. & A. Express, Bohemian Annex, M. & S. houses, Comet, Fourteenth Street, Lyric Airdome, Fifth Avenue, Morningside, Ideal and Osceola.

Brooklyn—Brooklyn Theater, Clinton Star, Stanley Playhouse, Mardi Gras, Wyckoff, West End, Parkview, New Moon, Tuxedo, Cortelyou, Atlantic, New Kingston, Antoinette, Duffield, Victoria, Feltman's, Hanover, Universal, Cleveland, Fulton, Parkview, Norwood, Electra, Carlton, New Gardens and Plaza.

In other points throughout Long Island, Staten Island and Upper Westchester and Connecticut, affected Hoboken, Lynbrook, Bayside, College Point, Rockville Centre, Flushing, Irvington, N. J., Bridgeport, Bayonne, Newark and Freeport were aided.

The action of World Film Corporation in coming to the rescue of a number of hard pressed, distressed exhibitors stands forth as an example of how co-operation can be made to work.

No less than thirty exhibitors have written in and committed themselves of the fact that were it not for the quick and effective action of the World Film heads they would have been compelled to close their doors.

The work of aiding still goes on and not a day passes but that some house avails itself of the generosity of the heads of the World Film Corporation, although, according to Mr. Schaefer, New York branch manager, not one instance has been recorded where the exhibitor endeavored to take advantage of the opportunity to secure greater aid than his business injuries warranted.

Every man on the border has been shot, according to the Pathe News—with typhoid serum. Yaleta, Texas, was the scene of the above preventive puncturing.

"Immoral" Pictures

Arthur Butler Graham, a prominent New York attorney, sends the following letter as of interest to Motography readers. It is self-explanatory. The New York Sun first printed Miss La Badie's arguments.

To the Editor of the Sun:

Sir—The Rev. Albert Parker Fitch says the "movies" are immoral "because they are not true to life." He says: "If you take a play that does not portray the facts of life as they are, though the play is scented with lavender, it is immoral, but every play that deals with things as they appear in actual life, although it may outrage every canon of good taste, is a moral play." He also remarks that "We sentimentalize too much in life."

Why pick on the "movies"? If what Dr. Fitch says is true of motion pictures, how much more true is it of the speaking drama and of literature. He means, of course, if he is sincere in naming the "movies" as more "immoral" than any other art, that moving pictures are unreal in plot. Surely they are real in setting. In motion pictures you do not have painted trees and canvas walls.

Spoken plays are unreal in lines. How dreary it would be if Oscar Wilde's characters, for instance, spoke as his people really would speak.. What a woeful lack of realism there is in Shakespeare. How many of Shakespeare's characters, do you believe, were actually capable of saying the beautiful things Shakespeare put into their mouths?

In the "movies" Dr. Fitch probably objects to the triumph of virtue, of the idealized heroes and heroines; in other words, as he puts it, he objects to moving pictures because there is too much sentiment in them.

If that is true the "immoral" moving picture is in the same class with the Fourth of July, Memorial Day, the frightfully immoral "Star Spangled Banner," and the horribly immoral custom of celebrating "Mother's Day."

Florence La Badie.

New Rochelle, July 25.

C. W. Bunn, manager of the Pathe Chicago office, reports that the first Thanhouser production on the Pathe program has reached his office and is ready for local distribution.

No Relief for Eastern Exhibitors

AUTHORITIES STILL BAR CHILDREN FROM THEATERS BECAUSE OF EPIDEMIC

THE hardships of the exhibitors of New York and Brooklyn on account of the health rule excluding children from motion picture theaters during the epidemic of infantile paralysis, continue with no abatement, and many more theaters will have to close their doors unless the ordinance is rescinded soon. It is feared that many proprietors will be unable to meet the August bills for rent and upkeep.

Health Commissioner Emerson has announced that he will not consider any abatement of the stringent ruling debarring children from the picture houses until the first of August, or possibly later.

At the headquarters of the New York branch of the Exhibitors' League Lee A. Ochs said:

"We are waiting until August 1 before again attempting to have the recent ruling of the health department rescinded or modified. If at that time nothing is done to lighten the burden of the exhibitor, we will ask to have a test case made of the ruling. One child under 16 years of age will be admitted to a motion picture theater previously agreed upon, and the health authorities will be on hand to arrest the proprietor. Then the constitutionality of the ruling will be threshed out in the courts. However, we expect that the test case will be unnecessary."

At the New York branch of the league, attention was called to a gospel tent in the upper district of Manhattan, where it is claimed, hundreds of children are admitted, who sit closely crowded upon the bare ground. In the same vicinity an open-air theater is prevented from admitting children, who consequently collect in groups to peek through the cracks in the retaining wall, entirely without supervision on the part of their parents or others. Attention is also called to a Brooklyn church, where recently, it is said, a children's entertainment was held with such success that it will soon be repeated.

Proprietors of motion picture theaters claim that under the provisions of the present theater building law they are compelled to provide individual seats and take sanitary and ventilating precautions not required of the other meeting places cited.

This bit of film from the eleventh chapter of American's "The Secret of the Submarine" cools everyone off who sees it on the screen, and, besides, one touch of youngster makes the whole world grin.

Chicago Firm Gets War Film

Jones, Linick & Shaefer, the prominent Chicago exhibitors, have obtained the rights to "How Britain Prepared" for Illinois and Indiana. They will release the war feature through their Central Film Exchange. Following the return of Al. Lichtman, the general manager of the Patriot Film Corporation, from his trip to Chicago and Detroit, that company also announced the sale of state rights to Emanuel Mandelbaum, who owns one of the most important exchanges in the Middle West, and who has secured the rights to the state of Ohio. The Monarch Feature Film Company, also an important factor in its territory, has bought the states of Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, and Missouri.

The Colonial theater in Chicago, a Jones, Linick & Shaefer house, is now running "How Britain Prepared" to full houses.

News Film Pulls 'em in

The Pathe News No. 56, showing views of the trans-Atlantic submarine "Deutschland," has caused a sensation in the far west. It was the first news film containing pictures of the "Deutschland" to reach Seattle, and Manager Clemmer of the Clemmer Theater, advertised it heavily in the Seattle Times, which is famous for its motion picture news.

The Times is on the street at 3:30 and almost as soon as the paper was out crowds formed in the lobby and outside of the Clemmer Theater and as late as 10:40 that night a line extended some distance down the block.

Mr. Clemmer has advised Manager F. C. Quimby of Pathe's Seattle office that this advertising brought him more results than any he has ever used since his entrance into the show business.

Censorship in Virginia

President Truxton, of the Board of Aldermen of Norfolk, Virginia, recently proposed an ordinance which provides for the establishment of a motion picture board of survey, to have as its duty the "improving as far as possible" of the quality of the pictures, especially those of adventure and comedy, and securing a large proportion of educational films in each program.

The Exhibitors of Norfolk believe the mayor and police can now step in and cancel any objectionable picture, and do not see the need of a censorship board, since exhibitors there do not, in any case, cater particularly to children audiences. The proposed measure will be strongly opposed by the picture men.

J. A. Berst, the vice-president and general manager of Pathe, in discussing the evils of local censorship the other day, pointed to the fact that McMinnville, Oregon, with a population of only 2,500, has a regularly appointed board of censors!

OFFICER IN BRENON COMPANY

Stanley V. Mastbaum, Vice-President of the Recently Organized Herbert Brenon Company—Director of Stanley Theaters

Stanley V. Mastbaum, managing director of the Stanley Company of Philadelphia, which controls 50 theaters, figured in the formation of the Herbert Brenon Film Corporation and at the recent meeting held for the final organization was elected to the office of vice-president. Mr. Mastbaum's executive ability and wide knowledge of what the public desires in the play line and through his Stanley experience will make him an invaluable aid to his associates. These are Herbert Brenon, who directed the production of the Annette Kellermann picture, "A Daughter of the Gods," and who has already been recognized as one of the most able handlers of big films, and Lewis J. Selznick, one of the best known and most competent of New York play promoters and film magnates. He has been called "a play revolutionist," but his revolutions to date have always pleased the public.

Stanley Mastbaum.

Mr. Mastbaum was very laconic and very much to the point in answering the question as to how he became interested in the new corporation. He said: "Whenever one of Mr. Brenon's productions has played at houses which I have booked, they have always been assured of handsome financial profits. I have the utmost confidence in his plans and ambitions and his ability to carry them out with proper and sufficient business and financial backing. I regard Mr. Brenon as one of the directors today.

"Mr. Selznick has been my close friend ever since I introduced myself to the motion picture world. I am proud to be associated with such men in a new enterprise which cannot help but be successful financially and a source of keen personal satisfaction as well."

It is announced that the list of the new company's stars has already been started off propitiously with the engagement of Madame Alla Nazimova, the great tragedienne, and the securing of world's rights to "War Brides" as a medium for the display of her talents. It was in this play that Nazimova appeared in vaudeville and scored an unqualified success. Following are the theaters which were under Mr. Mastbaum's direction in the Stanley company:

Philadelphia: The Stanley, Globe, Palace, Victoria, Crosskeys, Regent, Arcadia, Savoy, Princess, Casino, Market Street, Auditorium, Plaza, Imperial, Park, Century, Ruby, Leader, Filbert, Bijou Dream, Great Northern, New Broadway, Iris, Model, Crystal. New York, N. Y.: The Stanley, Broadway, North Star. Atlantic City, N. J.: B. F. Keith's Theater, Garden of Dances, Colonial, City Square, New Victoria, Criterion. Reading, Pa.: The Palace, Hippodrome. Norristown, Pa.: The Garrick, Grand Opera House, Bijou, Empire. Pottsville, Pa.; Hippodrome, Academy of Music, Slater. Wilmington, Del.: The Bijou, Pickwick.

Second Thanhouser-Pathe

"The Shine Girl," a quaint tale of a little bootblack, in which Gladys Hulette is starred, is to be the Thanhouser Film Corporation's second release under the new arrangement with Pathe. "The Shine Girl," appearing on August 27, takes the place of "Hidden Valley," which had been announced for that date. The latter play will be released in September.

The story of "The Shine Girl" is by Agnes C. Johnston and the director is William Parke. It is the story of a girl who carries gladness into the sordid life of the tenements. She is taken into the country, expecting there to find no need for "shining hearts," but she finds it necessary to shine away the shadows even in the lives of the rich. It is a big, human story, deftly portrayed, full of sobs and smiles.

Ernest Warde, Thanhouser director who made "Hidden Valley," starring Valkyrien (Baroness Dewitz), soon to be released through Pathe, has just returned from the Catskills with Miss Marie Shotwell and the other members of his company. Mr. Warde spent a week making mountain scenes in a Thanhouser picture in which Miss Shotwell is to be starred.

Florence La Badie and her director, Frederic Sullivan, are working at the Thanhouser studios in a feature in which Miss La Badie plays two parts. A vast amount of double exposure work will be necessary before the picture is completed.

Paper Films in Future

New "Cold" White Light Solves Old Problem and Makes Films a Practical Possibility—French Discovery

The substitution of paper rolls for celluloid films in moving picture machines, made possible by the new "cold" light discovered by the French engineer Dussaud, which is described to the Academy of Science by Prof. Branley, with whom Dussaud studied the new light, is obtained by automatic separation of heat rays from luminous rays which occur together in all sources of light hitherto known to science.

The quest of an absolutely pure light, devoid of all heat, long has been one of the great problems of modern physics. The electric light is the nearest approach to this ideal, but it gives off a certain amount of heat.

M. Dussaud has been working on this problem for many years. The light obtained by this method is so intense that it is possible to throw images from newspaper illustrations, picture postcards and photographic prints on a screen even in a lighted room as clearly and sharply as if they were glass lantern slides.

Art in Posters

For the exploitation of their forthcoming release, "The Summer Girl," in which Mollie King and Arthur Ashley are co-starring, the World Film Corporation prevailed upon James Dewey, the noted artist, to do a number of highly attractive sketches, from which six and seven colored lithographic matter has been made.

Ochs Replies to Film Attack

EXHIBITORS WRITE TO CONGRESSMEN REGARDING TAX BILL

ALL the film world is up in arms against the unfair tax which the proposed new revenue bill will impose upon theaters. Lee A. Ochs of New York, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, has written a letter to Congress in reply to the attack on the films made by one of the leading members of the Democratic administration at Washington.

This enemy of the films is quoted as declaring that he wanted to close up the motion picture theaters and expressed his opinion that taxing them out of business was the surest way to accomplish the purpose.

At the same time it is not believed that this is the general attitude of the senators toward the film industry, as another Democratic senator is known to have declared that if the Kitchin tax bill was permitted to get by the finance committee he would personally lead the fight against its passage on the floor of the Senate.

President Ochs' Letter

President Ochs in his letter says in part:

We believe the bill to work an injustice because theaters alone are singled out for a percentage tax on their gross receipts. They are not taxed upon their profits or receipts after the profits have been earned, but on their gross. Munitions of war, the makers of which are directly and enormously profiting by war conditions, are not treated in such a manner, but are only taxed after a profit has been earned, while the theater, one of the greatest sufferers from war conditions, is taxed on its gross receipts, although these gross receipts in many instances afford no profits at all.

Enterprises generally and those corporations or individuals profiting by war prices and conditions escape all such tax levies as are proposed against the theaters. Even in the amusement field, the one division having educational value, the theater alone is singled out. Professional baseball, summer parks, horse racing, boxing and wrestling, cabarets in hotels and restaurants which result in considerable loss of patronage to theaters and other forms of entertainment, are exempted.

The members of the house may have overlooked the educational value of pictures and the necessity of entertainment and amusement for the people; and viewed the taxation on theaters as a tax on luxury. By some the theater may be deemed a luxury for those who attend it, but the tax does not fall on those who attend the theater; it is on the house management. No one can call managing a theater a luxury, except from the grim joke of operating a losing proposition.

One member of the Senate has been quoted as declaring that motion pictures should be abolished, and that the best way to do this was to tax them out of existence, but we feel sure this is not your views nor those of the Senate as a whole.

In behalf of the motion picture exhibitors of the United States, I respectfully request a more equitable division of the tax burdens.

Majestic Theater of Dayton Active

A number of the theater managers have become so exercised over this contemplated taxation that they have personally written to the congressmen asking their aid to stop the passage of the bill. Elmer L. Gerber and George Haas, owners of the Majestic Theater, Dayton, Ohio, have written a letter not only to senators and representatives but also sent a copy to Wm. G. McAdoo, secretary of the treasury. This is a very strong plea against the injustice which will be done the theater manager if the bill becomes a law.

To you, as its senator, the Majestic Theater desires to protest most emphatically and most energetically against this unfair, unjust and undemocratic tax. The present federal tax we considered grossly unjust and it was paid under protest. There is absolutely no reason why the framers of this bill should not be able to draft a bill that would be just and equitable to all.

It is indefensible that certain businesses should be required to pay a portion of the expense of this government, while other businesses are exempt. We are willing to pay our share of any tax, but no more. We well understand that moving picture theaters are taxed because they are considered luxuries. Well and good, we will grant that fact; but why should not other luxuries be taxed equally as well?

Ninety per cent of the articles on sale in a department store are luxuries, yet the department stores are not taxed one penny. The entire product of confectionery stores is a luxury, but no tax is placed on them. Automobiles are luxuries, yet they are not taxed. Pianos, victrolas, victrola records, jewelry, books, magazines, cigars and tobaccos, the output of soda fountains, are all luxuries and should be taxed. Likewise dance halls, and numbers and numbers of other institutions and businesses, or products, could be justly taxed, in which case the tax upon picture theaters and other amusements could be reduced so that it would in a measure be a just and equitable tax.

This is a free country! That is, our senators and representatives are free to impose numberless taxes indiscriminately upon their constituents.

NEW BRANCH FOR LEAGUE

Exhibitors of Hudson County, New Jersey, to Apply to National League for Charter—State Convention to Be Called

At a meeting of the Hudson County Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, held on July 20 at the headquarters in Jersey City, and attended by exhibitors from Hoboken, Jersey City, Union Hill, West Hoboken, North Bergen and Bayonne, it was unanimously decided to apply to the National Exhibitors' League for a charter.

It was also decided to issue a call for a state convention to be sent to all county associations in the state of New Jersey for the purpose of making one strong organization to combat adverse legislation, particularly censorship, and to promulgate favorable legislation.

It was further decided that absolutely no political slides would be shown on the screens without having those wishing them shown properly investigated through the organization and endorsed by the National League. Particular attention will be paid to those who introduced censorship bills at the last session of the State Legislature, and a drive will be instituted to defeat them when they come up for re-election.

A publicity committee was appointed to present to the public through the daily press the unfairness of the present health order, prohibiting children under 16 years of age from attending motion picture shows or exhibitions, although allowed to congregate in candy stores, on the street cars, and in similar public places.

Bennett in American Feature

Richard Bennett, the stage and photoplay star, is to be shown in his first "Bennett-Mutual" feature with an all star cast, including Rhea Mitchell as the leading lady, supported by Adrian Morrison (Mrs. Bennett) and George Periolat.

The vehicle which has been selected by President Samuel S. Hutchinson for the "Flying A" debut of this star is from the pen of Aaron Hoffman, well-known playwright, and is to be called "The Sable Blessing." The direction is in charge of George Sargent.

The theme is psychological, having to do with the uplifting influence exerted over a "down-and-outer" by a clean shave and respectable clothing. Richard Bennett enacts the part of a man down on his luck, who inherits a sable overcoat, from which he is made to realize the error of his attitude.

Rhea Mitchell, stellar favorite, has a compelling role in assisting the man to right himself and make good. The charming screen personality of Miss Mitchell blends delightfully with the forceful acting of Mr. Bennett, and a powerful interpretation of the theme is expected. Release date will be announced later by the Mutual Film Corporation.

Mary Miles Bows as American

There has already been a pre-screen viewing of "Youth's Endearing Charm," the multi-reel production in which Mary Miles Minter will make her bow to the public under the "Flying A" banner. The prediction is that it will rank with the greatest of the multitude of great pictures which bear the brand of the American studio.

Mary Miles American Mutual Minter.

"There is not a dull spot in the production," said one critic, "and it is undoubtedly one of the most fascinating heart-stirring pictures that has ever been screened.

"Mary Miles Minter, with her winsome, sunny smile and the compelling charm of youth, will get into the heart of everyone by her portrayal of tender emotions, and she will stay there long after the picture has faded from the screen.

"Under the masterful direction of William C. Dowlan, her natural ability to tune the heart strings of her audience has been brought out to the uttermost. In the lighter moments of this delightful play, she is as playful and frolicsome as her little, shaggy dog 'Zippy,' who is her companion throughout the picture. In her more serious scenes—and there are highly dramatic situations for goldie Mary in the story—she is sure to win the sympathy of the most callous movie fan.

" 'Youth's Endearing Charm' is an ideal vehicle for Mary's debut in Mutual theaters, as it gives her an opportunity to display the wide range of her capabilities. Starting out as a waif in an orphan home, she is served with fortune and misfortune until finally she becomes the darling of a wealthy broker's household.

"In the orphan asylum she first appears surrounded by about thirty kiddies of all sizes and ages. The children used in these scenes were secured by Director William C. Dowlan from St. Vincent's asylum in Santa Barbara, and Mary elected herself a committee of one to entertain them during their work—or rather play—at the studio.

"The production has been staged on an elaborate scale, with the new type of solidly constructed studio sets used throughout. The interior sets of the millionaire's home are furnished and decorated in period style."

SWIFT NEWS WORK

Mutual Weekly, Under Editor Pell Mitchell, Captures Big Fire and Shows Films at Rialto Twelve Hours Later

The Mutual Weekly and its editor, Pell Mitchell, scored a scoop on the big ammunition explosion on "Black Tom" island in New York bay.

A finished print of the motion picture record taken in the heart of the fire and amid flying shrapnel was run at the Rialto Theater on Broadway in New York at 4 o'clock Sunday afternoon, while the fire following the explosions was still burning and only twelve hours after the early morning blast that shook three states.

The Gaumont company spent approximately eight hundred dollars on specially chartered tugs and motor cars for the squad of four camera men who took the pictures. Extraordinary sums had to be offered for speedy tug service partly because of the danger involved in cruising about among the exploding ammunition barges and partly because of the cupidity of the tug captains, quick to capitalize opportunity.

The camera men on the picture under the direction of Mr. Mitchell were Hans Baader, Jake Yoder and Larry D'Armour. Each was assigned to a tug and sent plunging off into the bay among the floating wreckage and bombardments from "Black Tom" island.

"I had some luck at every turn," remarked Pell Mitchell. "The explosion tossed me out of a sound sleep at my home in Thirty-fourth street; that was at 2:08 a. m. By three o'clock I had two cameras on the fire and in time to get some of the best of the night stuff. We continued taking pictures until after daybreak.

"We had a lot of trouble and used considerable cash getting tug boats to carry us into the danger zones where the real stuff could be 'shot.' We did get there though and we made a special scouting trip out around Ellis island and the statue of Liberty to take in the views which would make the picture familiar to the millions of people who were watching the blaze from the Battery and other points along the Manhattan shore."

On the way to the Gaumont laboratories at Flushing, L. I., Mitchell had the good fortune to pick up a policeman on a hurried errand and was thereby enabled to infract the speed laws with impunity. He covered the distance from Thirty-fourth street, New York, to Flushing, L. I., in eighteen minutes, with the precious negatives in his touring car.

George Morgan, with the William Fox players, has had experiences in both the producing and the acting ends of the film business. He has appeared in pictures with several other companies, and was a director for a time. But he couldn't bear to see others wearing the grease paint while he stood by, so he returned to "the profession."

The Child as a Business Getter

AN INTERVIEW WITH BRUCE GODSHAW, THE CHILDREN'S EXHIBITOR

By B. F. Barrett.

MOST motion picture theater managers are willing to take all the nickels from the children that they can get, but it is quite a novelty to find an exhibitor who claims that it is the children who gave him his start in business and the children who have made this business a success for him.

Bruce Godshaw, manager of Ascher's Cosmopolitan Theater, Chicago, Illinois, is primarily and fundamentally a children's exhibitor, and holds the child as his mascot. He was one of the first to establish special matinees for children in Chicago and ever since has used the influence and loyalty of the child as the foundation on which to build up his success in the theater business. Mr. Godshaw has established the patronage of one picture house after another and on each occasion has used the little ones as a wedge to bring the patronage of the older people. In one neighborhood into which he went the theater was losing steadily and there seemed to be no way to get the people to come; they simply were not interested.

A careful survey of the neighborhood showed that there were a large number of children playing around which gave him the idea that if he could get those children into his house he could get their parents and build up the theater. So he instituted the children's matinees and besides running a special program for the kiddies he offered a box of crackerjack to each child in attendance. On other occasions he would advertise a candy matinee. Did it work? Can any child resist candy and crackerjack with a motion picture show thrown in? The children were delighted, the interest of the parents was aroused, and the box office receipts of that theater thereafter were all that could be desired.

There are some children to whom candy is no attraction, however, as another venture proved. In this instance the neighborhood was an exclusive one and probably the children were furnished all the sweets they cared for at home for the advertisement of a candy matinee brought out only a poor attendance. But this alert manager was not discouraged. He knew the children would come to his rescue here as they had time and time again, so he conceived the idea of starting a baby contest. The merchants of the vicinity were solicited and donated the prizes to be awarded the most popular child.

Photographs were submitted and with every ticket sold one vote was allowed for any of the contestants. Slides were made and for three weeks before the awarding of the prizes the pictures of the babies were shown each night with their corresponding number. Also each night a report of the standing of each contestant was thrown on the screen. The house was packed at every performance for those three weeks and the interest ran high. Each mother was determined that her baby should have the honor of being awarded the first prize. The checking up of the box office receipts with the tickets showed that many more tickets were paid for than used, to secure the extra votes. On the night of the awarding of the prizes an extra show had to be run to accommodate all the people. Again the kiddies had proved a drawing card and established a regular patronage.

Mr. Godshaw's latest innovation in the way of children's matinees is an ice-cream party which is given every Saturday afternoon. As first instituted the ice cream was bought in bricks and the bricks cut into slices which were re-wrapped and frozen. At the close of the performance a maid stood at the door with a tray full of these ice cream packages. Each child took one as he passed out, and as the mothers came along they asked if the parents also were allowed some ice cream and seemed to be as pleased as the children that there was enough for all. Next a father came along, hesitated, then asked the maid if she thought a man would look foolish going along eating one of those pieces of ice cream. Of course he was urged to help himself and went off looking very cool and happy with his frozen dainty.

With the plan used now a ticket is given with each admission entitling the bearer to one ice-cream cone free of charge when presented at a neighborhood store. As this advertises the store widely and an advertisement of the brand of ice cream used appears on the card the cones are secured for a little over a cent apiece, and in the sweltering hot days of July and August these ice cream cones have been very tempting to the children.

Mr. Godshaw believes in making personal friends of the children and he is universally known among them as "Bruce." Also he places a good deal of faith in their criticisms of his program and the films. The children know this and feel free to tell him just what they think and these comments prove very helpful in many cases. The children seem to be more discerning than the older people and are more decisive and radical in their judgment. Some of the small patrons complained to him that they did not like the pictures he was showing on Friday nights and as that was their free night with no school the next day they would be glad to come to the theater if he had something they liked. Knowing that it meant if the children came the other members of the family would also come, he saw to it thereafter that on Friday nights there were some numbers on the program which would appeal to the child. The close relationship and friendly feeling between this manager and the children show in a very pretty manner. Sometimes a child will stop him on the street and say, "Bruce, you have a good picture on this afternoon that I would like to see very much but I haven't any money today," and then this friend of the children wisely does not say, "Why, come in anyway," but instead puts his hand in his pocket and with no comment whatever places the five cents in the child's hand. Sometimes a few days later and sometimes a week later the cashier will tell him that such a child left five cents at the office and said he owed it to Bruce. While this may seem very philanthropical and not at all a good business policy, yet just to test it an account was kept of what Mr. Godshaw paid out of his own pocket in this way and how much came back unsolicited at the box office as soon as the child received some money, and it was found that there was very little loss from a monetary standpoint, and a great deal gained in loyalty. Neither did the children take advantage of this generosity and come back time and time again, for they seemed to feel the good comradeship in the act and to be put upon their honor. They were simply borrowing from a friend whom they intended to, and did, pay back on the first opportunity.

Another very clever appeal direct to the child is made through handbills which are distributed to the children as they come out of the neighborhood schools. These bills advertise the Saturday matinee and also the fact that on Sunday, as well, an extra picture is added to the program which will please the kiddies. These bills are written in simple language so that the children can read them and understand what they are reading, also they carry a paragraph urging the child to take the bill home and have mother read it to them as there may be some good things which they have missed or do not understand. This means that the bills are carried into the home and called to the attention of the parents. Also they are warned not to throw the bills on the ground as it is against the law to litter up the streets. In this way the children are educated to watch for the handbills, to know that they will be able to understand them, not to throw them away, to take them home, and to call the theater and the special program to the attention of the older members of the family. A great deal of missionary work is accomplished through this one idea.

These bills let the mothers know where to send their children to see the right kind of pictures; but here a difficulty arises. The parents send the children and too seldom come with them to the theater, consequently they do not know where the children go. The child may be started to the Cosmopolitan with his five cents and on his way pass a theater whose lurid posters advertise an Indian or Wild West picture. The little one is attracted, the picture looks exciting, he loves to see the cowboys, so he goes in there instead of to the special program arranged for him, and perhaps besides the Indian picture sees some other rather objectionable films. The parents are not giving the exhibitor the proper co-operation.

In discussing the managing of a house full of children Mr. Godshaw appears to find this no problem at all—perhaps the love which the children have for their exhibitor makes it easier for him to control them than the exhibitor who does not understand children so well. He finds that a look of disapproval is much more effective with the average child than a threat of expulsion from the theater. A system of slides appealing to their honor is also found very effective. If the children become boisterous and whistle and call as they sometimes do, a slide is immediately thrown on the screen which reads, "It is ill-mannered to whistle and annoy the little ladies near you." This brings them quickly to a realization that they are going beyond the bounds. If it is found that they are staying through too many shows another slide is utilized reading, "It is not fair, children, to remain for more than one show when lots of your little friends are waiting to get in." This appeals to their fairness and consideration for others and in most cases brings the desired results.

Mr. Godshaw believes that the question of allowing the children in the theaters and the censoring of films from the child's standpoint is going to take care of itself. He believes that the children themselves are regulating this matter, and that another year or so will see this adjusted satisfactorily, and this adjustment will be brought about because the children are tiring of the motion pictures. They have been getting all they want of them and now they are beginning to discriminate—in fact, they are much more critical than the older people. Also the plays are becoming more complex and deeper than they were a few years ago and the younger generation does not understand them and therefore does not enjoy them.

Thus they do not care to go to the theater every night but would rather wait and see something which they know they are going to enjoy. They always want to see Mary Pickford, Marguerite Clark, Charlie Chaplin and other favorites, and they enjoy the special programs arranged for them. The problem will find its own solution in this way and there will be no necessity of ordinances passed prohibiting the children from the theater in the evening, for they will exclude themselves. They have exerted their own judgment and found that the matinees and the nights on which their favorites appear are the only times they care to attend. If the grown people will not interfere with this wise decision of the younger generation by taking them to the theaters when they do not care to go, an easy solution will be found for what has appeared to be a very weighty problem.

Balboa Begins Pathe Serial

Balboa will immediately begin the production of another continued screen story for Pathe, thus maintaining the undisputed distinction of being "the house of serials." The contract was closed by H. M. Horkheimer, president and general manager of the Long Beach, Cal., studio, just before he left for the coast last week.

"The new serial," said Mr. Horkheimer, "promises to be one of the most novel pieces ever screened. I know this promise sounds trite, since the same thing has been said of almost every other photoplay, in advance. But, really, in this I believe we have something out of the ordinary.

"The production will consist of fifteen two-reel installments, for which the synopses are being furnished by one of the best known newspaper women writers in America. Her subject matter is the one thing talked most of in every home in the land. You can guess for yourself what it is. I am not at liberty to reveal it any further, at this stage of the game.

"Will M. Ritchey, Balboa's veteran scenario editor, will develop the scripts; and the leading parts will be taken by Ruth Roland and Henry King. This will be their first reunion since the success of 'Who Pays,' which we made more than a year ago. Ever since, there has been a constant demand for them from exhibitors and film patrons."

Griffith Addressed at "The World"

Sixteen days after a letter was posted in London, England, addressed to "David Wark Griffith, Somewhere in This Wide, Wide World," the same was reposing on his desk at the Hollywood studios, thus showing that the producer of the "Birth of a Nation" is not an entire stranger to the postal authorities of both Uncle Sam and John Bull. The envelope was received at the Hollywood studio bearing the original address without any additions as regards the proper destination being affixed during its long incognito journey.

Politics and the Screen

BY LEE A. OCHS

President Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

MOTION picture men are at last beginning to rise to their opportunities. We possess and control the most effective weapon in political warfare. Type and printer's ink have heretofore been looked upon as the most telling means of political propaganda. How narrow after all is the field which the newspaper is able to cover compared with the medium of the screen. Political news and political campaigning in a newspaper are but parts of the newspaper's contents. The reader may pass them up with a casual glance and never be impressed at all. On the other hand, what is shown on the screen is absolutely certain of the general and undivided attention of the audience. Millions upon millions of eyes are focused upon the twenty thousand motion picture screens in this country every day in the year. I have never figured out how large the percentage of voters is among the patrons of the motion picture theater, but it is obviously large. The indirect influence of the screen is carried to voters who themselves may not attend motion picture theaters.

Now, we all know that the politicians cherish a wholesome fear of the press. If the motion picture has so far failed to create a very strong degree of the same sentiment in the hearts of the politicians, the fault has been ours. I cannot help comparing our wonderful business with its boundless possibilities and its great record of achievements to a second Gulliver bound and fettered by pygmies. One strong motion of this new Gulliver's right arm and he will stand revealed in all his power with the pygmies in headlong flight.

Our new organization proposes to utilize its powers systematically and unceasingly from now on until the polls close in November. We have certain definite objects to accomplish in the coming political campaigns both in the various states and in the nation. If any of the members of congress who sided with the fanatics on the censorship question are up for re-election, they will hear from us we hope to their disadvantage. The political complexions of their districts are now under close and competent scrutiny and we will center our forces where they will do the most good.

In Ohio, Pennsylvania and Kansas a strenuous campaign will be started for the abolition of the censorship laws. We also propose to get busy in Maryland. Censorship in Ohio and Pennsylvania has become the laughing stock of the country. In New York, we will square accounts with the politicians who for reasons best known to themselves have introduced several strike bills both in the assembly and the senate. The sponsors of censorship bills in this state have gloried in their absolute ignorance as to moving picture conditions, and in their haste to tap a new source of revenue they drew such a preposterously faulty measure as to compel the governor to veto it.

It is only just to say in conclusion that we all make a very broad distinction between the politicians and genuine statesmen. Constructive statesmanship has realized by this time that the motion picture is the greatest medium of expression known to mankind and therefore, entitled to political enfranchisement. Indeed it ought to be put on a level of liberty and responsibility with the press of the country.

We helped to defeat the reactionary constitution, whose narrow-minded makers refused to consider our request for a grant of constitutional liberty to the screen. If that question ever is put before the people, censorship will be buried beyond the possibility of resurrection. We are never afraid of the result when the question is to be determined at the polls by the votes of the people, who are the staunchest friends of the motion picture. We are going to bring this fact home to the politicians. At the same time, we invite the constructive advice and the cooperation of the real statesmen to fix a permanent legal and political status for the motion picture in the scheme of our American civilization.

Our Campaign Bureau is being organized now and will be in charge of an expert provided with capable assistants. It will go to work forthwith.

GROCERIES CLOG AISLES

Fire Marshal of Pittsburgh Makes New Ruling Against Patrons' Packages—One Man Trapped in Go-cart

"Women must not be permitted to carry market baskets, go-carts or other articles that might obstruct exits, into moving picture shows."

This is the latest edict of County Fire Marshal Thomas L. Pfarr of Pittsburgh. No longer need the seeker after pictorial diversion fear walking into a leg of mutton, a dozen eggs or an itinerant baby while sliding along in search for a seat. The fire marshal's new edict forbids the presence of such articles in moving picture theaters—well, babies may be taken in, but they must not be allowed to crawl around on the floor under the seats.

"Besides being a danger in case of fire, all of this impedimenta, as Caesar used to say, is a nuisance in a picture show," Fire Marshal Pfarr declared emphatically, explaining his pronunciamento. "I was just watching a man try to get out of a seat yesterday. It was a good show, too, and that fellow's troubles spoiled the whole thing for me. When I started to watch him a lovely young thing was just getting ready to be kissed, and the next time I saw the film a lot of British soldiers were tossing hand grenades at some Bulgarians.

"Well, anyway, this fellow got up and started to sidle out. There were three women between him and the aisle. Just as he got in front of the first one he stopped suddenly, turned half around and knocked a man in front of him in the head with his elbow. I could hear him mumbling some kind of an apology and the woman was gasping 'My tomatoes.'

"He took another step and apparently waded into a bottle of grape juice or something, for you could hear glass smashing and pretty soon I smelled liquid contents. The women he was in front of then began to 'bawl' him out and he made a dash for the aisle.

"There was then only one woman between him and freedom and she was holding a baby in her lap and looked easy. I thought to myself, 'His troubles are over now; he'll be out in a minute.' But not so, not so.

The next thing I knew he was looking under the seats across the aisle and he had made a lot of noise getting there. "Gee! that dame has slugged him. I wonder what he stepped on her for,' I thought, and I was about to rush to the rescue when an usher pulled him out from under the seat.

"'Trapped,' he yelled. 'I'm trapped.' Well, sir, he was trapped sure enough. He had put his foot down into one of those collapsible go-carts and there he was, nipped just like a muskrat. It took the efforts of two men and enough time for three reels of pictures, including the funny film, to get him loose, not to speak of exposing the victim to the continued wrath of the three women. So I decided there ought to be a law and here it is."

OUR LADY ON THE COVER

Some Visual Sips From the Refreshing History of Jackie Saunders, Erstwhile Artists' Model Who Adorns Our Front Door

Here are just a few of the myriads of refreshing facts about Jackie Saunders, the Pathe and Balboa star who graces the front door of MOTOGRAPHY this week. Here goes. The reel is on. Miss Saunders—

Has another name. It is Jacqueline.

Was born October 6, 1892.

Is a native of Pennsylvania.

Has two eyes of cerulean blue.

Is blonde. Lots of golden hair that is honest to goodness hers.

Is plump and round and cuddly, but not too plump.

Has been honored by an eastern critic with the title "Maude Adams of the screen."

Was a dancing doll before coming into pictures. For several years she danced at Atlantic City. She can still dance.

Is sunny of temper and full of fun, but when the camera begins to purr she is strictly business.

Has twelve separate and distinct characterizations in "The Grip of Evil," the big plot in fourteen double reel chapters, that Balboa is filming for Pathe.

Is a hard worker. She loves to act for the camera and does it without being stagey. She loves tomboy or harum-scarum parts and just the other day exclaimed: "Oh, how I wish I had a good ragged part!"

Is just as pretty as her pictures, with the added charm of color and warmth.

Posed for Harrison Fisher, Howard Chandler Christy and Clarence Underwood before taking a chance with the films. She also played in stock a short time.

Never gets tired. She can outwork everybody on the job, including the stage hands.

Is of German-French parentage. That makes her neutral, doesn't it?

Can swim, skate, shoot, ride and play billiards, but best of all she loves to tune up her little runabout and hit the pike.

Is winsome, sweet, unaffected, tractable, womanly, charitable, kind, companionable and not a bit snobbish.

Has been with Balboa three years.

Is a favorite of the House of Pathe and many of her films have been hand-colored by them, a signal honor for any star.

ANITA STEWART ILL

Typhoid Fever Attacks Pretty Vitagraph Star Who Lies Critically Ill—Overwork Said to Be Cause

At her home in Bay Shore, near New York City, Anita Stewart lies critically ill with a fever, supposedly typhoid. She is at present under the care of a specialist and two trained nurses, and it is stated that she will be unable to resume her work in pictures for at least two months.

Having worked very hard on her production of "The Girl Phillipa" it is supposed that her illness is due to studio work during the recent hot wave. Miss Stewart first complained of headache last week, but gave no serious thought to it. Later she was unable to appear at the studios, but the critical nature of her illness was not realized until the following day.

Two Vitagraph Comedies on General

"Romance and Rough House" is all that the name suggests, slam-bang for a thousand feet of rip roaring comedy, with Hughie Mack, Vitagraph's heavyweight comedian, officiating in the capacity of chief funmaker and recipient of countless indignities. The photography and lightings are worthy of comment, as they are particularly fine.

The hand of Lawrence Semon is seen in the direction, which is certainly all that could be desired.

Hughie is exceptionally droll and his support is also very good. The balance of the cast includes Patsy DeForrest, Frank Brule and Edward Dunn. The story opens with Miss DeForrest reading a book on romance and yearning for the days of old when for a smile from "milady," a chivalrous cavalier would cross swords with his own brother. Obese Hughie does not measure up to the knights she has pictured and she scorns his advances. Broken hearted, Hughie wanders off to find consolation, he knows not where, and unexpectedly finds himself appointed leader of a villainous band. His reign does not last long, though, for when the band finds that he is not the man they thought he was, they proceed to exterminate him.

The quiet, homelike atmosphere of the country predominates in "Pa's Overalls," a single part comedy from Vitagraph's Bay Shore studio. Director Frank Currier has worked many amusing incidents around the customs of the sons of the plow and has succeeded altogether in making a pleasing and comical picture. William Lyttell, Jr., Dorothy Long and George O'Donnell are seen in the principal roles. Lyttell is seen as a dude, wrist watch, monocle, cane, and all the other requisites, who wins the love of a country maiden but her father objects to her marriage. They are secretly married and hide the certificate in Pa's overalls, where, when it is found, it causes considerable trouble. The dude finally wins Pa's favor by raising the biggest pumpkin in town. With its country scenes this picture should have a particular summer appeal. Sophie Milimet wrote the story.

Chick Morrison, chief cowboy of the "Flying A" outfit doesn't believe that horseshoes bring good luck. He has a perfect imprint of a calked shoe on his right hip, where one of the new "outlaws" secured for the rodeo kicked him behind the barn.

Running a Downtown Jitney Theater

BY GEORGE L. MADISON
Manager, Kozy Theater, Chicago, Illinois

THE statement that a five-cent theater in a downtown district cannot live against the cut-throat methods used by competitors is not true in every case. My theater in Chicago, the Kozy, situated in the heart of the business district, was the original five-cent theater in this location, and it is still running and still making money in spite of all the ten, fifteen and twenty-five cent houses that have sprung up in the last three years.

It means every minute on the job, however, for the manager if he is going to make a success of a small priced house—it does not mean sitting in your office with your feet on the desk waiting for the money to come in at the box office, but being right there to watch your employees, going into the house and sitting down with the audience to see what their comments and criticisms are. It is all right to be where the people can see you as they come out, and ask their opinions of the show, but often they are diffident about telling you the little things that annoy them which could easily be remedied, for they do not like to be considered kickers. But if you sit among them and they do not know who you are, you get their true opinion.

It also means looking after the comfort of your audience; seeing that the ventilation is the best possible, watching the projection that the operator does not loaf on his job and not give the best service possible, watching the ushers that they are courteous at all times, and all these big little things which make or mar the atmosphere of your house.

The patronage of a downtown theater is very different from that of a residential district. We have a large transient trade, of course, but the principal revenue is from the business people who drop in to see the pictures during their noon hour. And here is where the nickel house comes into its own. The majority of these workers have only an hour to get their lunch and do whatever else they want, which means that they have from half to three-quarters of an hour to kill at noon. They are fond of pictures and would like to see them, but think twice before spending ten cents for thirty minutes' pleasure. A nickel, however, is a different thing. The crowded time in my theater is from about 11 to 2:30 or 3—when the business people are out for their noon recreation. A large percentage of the audience is made up of men. The girls like to spend their time shopping or looking at the styles, but the tired business man wants to forget his worries and be entertained during this interval of rest, and where can he do it better than in a picture theater?

This patronage of business people governs my program. If they have only a little time to spend in a theater they want to see something in that time. They do not care to go into a house which is showing a seven-reel picture, for they probably will get in in the middle or toward the end and cannot get head nor tail of the story. They want a number of short features so that they can see a variety in a short time and understand all of them, and they want good comedies so they can laugh—not once, but many times. The program I give them for five cents shows four reels. I run a feature of two reels, a one-reel comedy, and one reel of scenic or educational. This gives a good variety and at the same time they are all short. These short length films are the foundation of the popularity of the five-cent theater. The public is getting tired of features, the bigger theaters give them too much, they do not care to sit through a two-hour show, and if they have a short time only to spend they do not care to listen to music for a good share of that time when what they really wanted to see was the pictures. They become disgusted with never being able to get into a theater at just the right time to see the start of the picture, and they do not like to leave just at the most exciting part, therefore the shorter pictures fill their order completely.

I have to stick to my rule of showing three different subjects, even if it means five reels instead of four, for the people miss them if I do not, and although there are four reels shown composed of a three-reel feature instead of a two, followed by the usual one-reel comedy, they complain that I am cutting their program short. In their interest in the feature they do not realize that it is longer than usual and believe they are being cheated of their third subject. So there always has to be three different pictures. I always see every film before I book it for my house. There are some companies whose pictures I cannot show because they have a rule that they shall not be exhibited for less than ten cents.

Some serials will draw the people, but as a rule they are not a success in a house like mine. The people will drop in just for their noon hour, and if a serial is being shown of which they have not seen any other episodes they feel that they have been rather cheated, for they are not interested in the feature, which takes up half of the program, and have paid five cents for a comedy and a scenic, or they may have to miss a day and then lose the connection and soon lose their interest entirely in the rest of the continued story. I have stood in front of the house often on days when the serial was running and heard people remark, "Oh, there is a serial today; we don't care to see that. Let's go on to some other show." When I complete the series I am now running I will not book another. The place for the successful exhibiting of a continued photoplay, I believe, is in the residential districts. Also, it is not feasible to show many first-run pictures because they cost so much that it takes a good many nickels to make up the price of the film alone, but most of my features are not more than three or four days old. In some respects I find that it is a good idea to run older pictures because with the houses changing their program every day the pictures come and go so fast that if a person sees a good one and wants his wife or family to see it, too, he is glad to find it showing at some other theater a few days later. Also, if people hear of a good film and cannot see it on that particular day they are glad to find it elsewhere later.

I have a good sized regular patronage of people who come every day, week in and week out. There is one elderly man who comes in and takes practically the same seat in the front of the house, who has missed only one day in three years, and another gentleman who goes into the first row in the balcony who has not missed a day in two years. He brought in a tabulated account recently to show how much money he had spent with me in the last two years. That the people are getting what they want is shown by the fact that never a day passes without a number of people stopping to tell the doorman or the ticket taker what a fine show it is for the money and saying they are coming often. They feel they are getting their money's worth and are glad to come again and again. A man will spend five cents every day without missing the money when he would think quite a long time before he would spend ten cents every day.

The greatest trial of the theater manager is the competition between the managers. If all the exhibitors in one locality would get together and decide that they would all charge ten cents with no raising of prices on Saturday and Sunday, they would all make more money. But it is a cut-throat game. If one manager finds that another theater charging five cents is giving four reels then he will give five. Then the next man will give even more to compete with this manager. So it is they go on and on and add more and more until they have reached the limit and cannot give all they have promised for the money and then there is another theater to rent. If the managers would only get together and have a regular schedule of what they would give and all do the same they would all make more money and the average income would be much higher. But even though they start out on that basis there is always some one who cannot play fair and will not stick to an agreement of this kind and then it is all off.

The business of the small downtown house is not what it was a few years ago because it has so many and such a variety of other houses to compete with, also there are so many suburban theaters now which take the patrons away from the business portions of the city, but I can honestly say that even with the strong competition and my low price of admission my profits are only a few dollars behind the downtown theaters which are charging ten cents, although it takes a greater number of nickels to make up that profit.

"Destiny's Boomerang," a Centaur feature of a sociological nature, a David Horsley production, presenting the co-stars Margaret Gibson and William Clifford, is the main offering from that studio to be released the week of August 19, on the Mutual program. The story is by Elsie M. Callaghan and was produced under the direction of Charles Swickard.

PATHE OFFERS SERIAL IDEAS

Public Floods Companies With Pertinent Ideas to Be Worked Out in the Popular "Who's Guilty?" Series

With all the talk about thousand dollar scenarios it is unusual, to say the least, for a motion picture company to receive a well worked out idea, concerning which the writer says, "If you decide to use this, merely acknowledge it and I will be amply repaid."

Yet it has happened more than once to the Arrow Film Corporation, producers of "Who's Guilty?" for Pathe. The Pathe executive offices and those of the Arrow Film Corporation have been flooded with suggestions from theater goers who have seen episodes of the series, offering ideas for future episodes.

One in particular is typical of the number received. It is from J. A. Whalen of Des Moines, Iowa, who, alleging that the conditions of many of the post offices throughout the country are conducive to tuberculosis, tells at length of a number of instances which corroborate his statement. Mr. Whalen says:

> May I be pardoned for begging that you will write a "Who's Guilty?" story founded on the facts in the enclosed clippings.
> Take, for instance, the case of the clerk referred to. Though the honesty and efficiency of this man had never been questioned, though he was a model husband, father and citizen, had he dared to protest against the conditions which eventually made him a victim of "the white plague" he would have been summarily dismissed, and with all his knowledge and experience not worth a penny anywhere else on earth, he could be today on the verge of madness from seeking in vain for employment, yet his plea for re-instatement, for justice—for the right to work at the one trade he knows, would fall upon unheeding ears. He would be told in effect as Old Foulon told the French peasants—"Go and eat grass."
> This is not altogether a fancy sketch. I wish it were. One of the most honest and conscientious men that I ever met died here in this city a little over a year ago, heart-broken and bereft of reason, owing to such treatment.
> In God's name, will you give your aid in bringing these facts before the American people?

A letter was sent to Mr. Whalen thanking him for his suggestion and regretting that it could not be worked out in one of the chapters of "Who's Guilty?" because the serial was already completed before his idea was received.

"His Golden Hour" is the title of a new one-reel Universal comedy.

The war scenes in Vitagraph's "Britton of the Seventh" have made the film a drawing power.

What Theater Men Are Doing

AN OPEN FORUM

This is a department of, by and for exhibitors. We want YOU represented here. Other managers and proprietors of picture theaters want to hear YOUR experiences, your opinions and your advice. Write to this department telling us your story, how you started, how you grew and all about your theater and how you manage it. Mention your advertising methods and your lobby displays. If possible send in photographs of yourself and your house. Address, The Forum, Motography, Chicago.

A Plain Talk to the People

By L. F. Guimond.

For his house organ, Lyceum Theater, Monticello, New York.

ISN'T it about time for us to come to a showdown on this matter of amusement service? We think it is. For the intelligent public the time has passed when pictures were pictures regardless of subject, cast, photography or projection. Motion pictures today occupy much the same commercial position that any other commodities do. You can be just as completely gold-bricked in your motion picture entertainment as anywhere else, but—if the shoeman sells you a bad pair of shoes you never go back for a little more of the same; if your clothier works off a bum suit on you, in the future you trade elsewhere. Why don't you apply the same rule to your amusement purchases?

When you sit in a darkened theater watching the shadow shapes come and go on the illuminated screen it is very possible that you never stop to consider the many factors which have been responsible for the excellence or lack of excellence of each subject.

Why not consider a motion picture from start to finish? Let us suppose, for example, that the producers start the ball a-rolling with a mediocre "script" or "scenario;" what is the result? All that high-priced directors, actors, camera men and exhibitors can do with such material is to produce a finished product which is exactly as mediocre as the script itself. You can't make a silk dress out of a burlap bag.

Again, supposing a first-class script is provided but unfortunately falls into the hands of a poor producing organization; the result is much the same. You can't turn over a hundred dollar watch to a steam fitter and expect results. The best scenario in the world can be absolutely ruined through improper direction and interpretation.

Finally you can turn over a completed photoplay which is a masterpiece of plot ingenuity, high grade directorship, masterly characterization, showing the workmanship of superior camera men and laboratory experts, to a boneheaded exhibitor with a cheap junk projection equipment and this one man will effectually stultify all the fine work and great expense which has gone into the making of a perfect picture.

The exhibition of motion pictures today represents the culminating step in a great business. The exhibitor has a greater opportunity to mar or make a great picture than almost any other factor. No exhibitor can make a bad picture good, but many, many exhibitors do make good pictures appear bad because of improper projection, inharmonious surroundings, poor musical accompaniment and many other things which can only be learned by experience and patient attention to details.

Eventually you patrons have to depend upon two factors for proper picture entertainment, the producers and the exhibitors. If you are being shown the products of the companies adjudged by popular opinion to be the best in the market your exhibitor has taken the first step towards giving you good service. The advertisements for last week's picture entertainment in New York city offer a first-class opportunity to consider just what companies popular opinion, as indicated by New York's biggest theaters, call for.

The Strand Theater advertised Mae Murray in "The Dream Girl," a Paramount-Lasky production already booked for showing in the Lyceum. The Academy of Music offers Virginia Pearson in "A Tortured Heart," a Fox film production booked for exhibition in the Lyceum in the near future. At the Broadway we have Dustin Farnum in "Davy Crockett," booked for the Lyceum the same week as "The Dream Girl," a Pallas-Paramount masterpiece.

The Rialto of New York advertised Frank Keenan in "Honor Thy Name," a Triangle feature, which together with the Keystone comedy, "The Waiters' Ball," featuring "Fatty" Arbuckle, will be shown in the near future in the Lyceum. Proctor's Twenty-third street theater advertised a daily change of program with six features as follows: "A Woman's Honor," Jose Collins; "The Good Bad Man," Douglas Fairbanks; "Mind the Paint Girl," Peggy Hyland; "The No Good Guy," Willie Coller; "The Masked Rider," Harold Lockwood; and "The Stowaway Girl," Marie Doro. All of these productions are booked for future showing at the Lyceum.

Proctor's One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street theater advertised "For the Defense," with Fannie Ward, which is showing in the Lyceum Tuesday night. "Mr. Goode the Samaritan," with De Wolf Hopper; Mae Marsh in "A Child of the Paris Streets"; William Farnum in "The Battle of Hearts"; and Wm. S. Hart in "The Primal Lure," all showing in the Lyceum in the near future. At the Criterion "Civilization" has passed its hundredth performance; booked by the Lyceum for September 19.

We could go on this way indefinitely, but what's the use? We have shown you what producing organizations stand highest in public favor because there is no better criterion than the programs of the highest priced motion picture theaters in existence. Be assured that they will have none but the very best features on their screens. And the Lyceum program is identical in every feature except price. A dollar in New York; ten cents in Monticello.

You must grant us then the best program obtainable at any price. There remains the theater itself and the projection. The theater is the largest to be found in any town under five thousand; it has all the ventilation which is consistent with safe construction; it has every known safeguard against fire or panic; it has toilet facilities and an expensive plumbing and heating system. It is constructed so as to offer opportunity for every sort of entertainment required by a small town community; it has electric fans of sufficient size and power to cool the entire audience; it has a stage equipped with every modern lighting device and with sufficient scenery to stage any production; it is a fully equipped theater.

And, finally, projection. This is a discouraging topic sometimes because it almost seems as though many regular patrons could not distinguish between good and bad projection. Take first the question of equipment. Recently the Lyceum management sold a complete motion picture projector for $55.00 and it was a good projector at that. With this machine and a booth and a muslin screen the purchaser was able to open a theater. The Lyceum apparatus for the projection of pictures cost perilously close to three thousand dollars, and not one dollar but has been wisely invested.

This investment covers high priced lenses, several styles of which are necessary to perfect projection; a transverter for the conversion of alternating current to direct current, necessary if you are to have a clear, white flickerless image on the screen; three motion picture projectors of the latest model; an especially prepared screen; a lot of expensive electric wiring and devices, including our own private lighting plant for use in emergencies; and a hundred and one other things which are absolutely essential to good projection. And yet—

It remains a question but that we could go back to the old type of cheap, junky equipment, alternating current, inferior lenses and a generally mediocre apparatus and give satisfaction to a certain proportion of Monticello's theater going public. Of course, there are many patrons who know and appreciate the difference between our pictures and those reproduced by inferior, low priced methods, but there are many others who do not seem to mind (and even prefer) the latter type of projection. After all we have to revert to the remark of the old lady who pressed a fervent salute on the cow's proboscis, "There's no accounting for tastes."

All that this article was written for was to call attention to the difference between good and bad pictures; real theaters and store shows; cheap projection and high priced protection. Can you tell the difference? Give the matter a little reflection. It may enable you to secure better amusement goods in the future.

Theaters in Hawaiian Islands

By A. P. Taylor.

The Liberty Theater of Honolulu has installed a $10,000 Wurlitzer pipe organ. The transportation charges from the factory to Honolulu amounted to more than $1,000. Motion picture theaters were first established in Honolulu about ten years ago and were then merely "holes in the wall." With the rapid development of the artistic side of motion picture filming the class of theaters has been raised, until at present the city possesses several first-class houses, the largest having a seating capacity of 1,800 persons. The architecture of this place of amusement is suited to the climate; plenty of ventilation is afforded through rows of shutter windows.

Ten years ago the highest price paid for admission to picture theaters was 15 cents, ranging down to 5 cents. Today the standard high price is 30 cents for reserved seats, with a 50-cent charge for box and loge seats. The Honolulu public, with its large tourist population, demands the best pictures, and the leading houses are now on the circuits of the foremost producers of New York and California.

The exchange system permits the same pictures to be sent to the outlying islands, so that even in small plantation towns on the Island of Kauai, the westernmost of the Hawaiian group, 2,400 miles from San Francisco, the same pictures produced in the leading theaters of Honolulu are given before an audience composed principally of Japanese, Chinese, Koreans, Filipinos, Porto Ricans, Spaniards, and Siberians.

Where no theaters have been built, in some of the outlying districts, enterprising managers have large tents of the circus type erected. By rotation a tent is seen in a village about every two weeks.

During the past three years two or three picture companies have gone to Honolulu, partly on vacation tours and partly to complete pictures which call for a Hawaiian setting. The result has been an investigation of the merits of the Hawaiian climate and scenery as a foundation upon which to build a motion picture colony. Negotiations are under way for the establishment of such a colony. At least $50,000 of local capital will be invested, the remainder coming from the mainland. An expert from New York states that while the Hawaiian Islands are admirably suited to the filming of South Sea scenes, they are also adapted for New York settings.

Climbing the Ladder

The subject of meeting competition is one that interests every exhibitor and irrespective of the fact that George C. Lindsay, of the Western Amusement Company, of Eureka, Utah, modestly declares that he is not a press agent and is not bent upon writing stories on "Competition and How to Meet It," he has set up a set of rules which if followed he maintains most earnestly will spell success to any exhibitor. He has aimed at the "bull's eye" and hit his mark. His rules, says Paramount Progress, are:

"Pay strict attention to the small details.

"Preach, practice and permeate cheerfulness.

"Give your full attention to your own business.

"Be absolutely square with the public.

"It has been my experience that the only sure way to win over an opponent who uses underground methods is to keep on playing the game square yourself. Morning, noon and night see to it that you give the public 'The Square Deal.' They will eventually come back to you, even as the Prodigal Son. Give them their full money's worth every time they visit your house. It's the best advertising in the world.

"You cannot keep a clean, well-balanced, wholesome program from attracting attention any more than you can keep a good man down. They will persist in coming up, and keep on coming up, be the opposition what it may.

"I am running Paramount Pictures and other features."

Art Acord has gone to New York to try for first honors in the "Motion Picture Cowboys' Stampede," to be held there early in August.

Knowing Something of the Other Fellow's Business

EVERY exhibitor knows how films are made, and every producer knows how they are projected. Beneath that blanket statement there are many degrees of knowledge and ignorance. It is, of course, impossible for either the exhibitor or the producer to keep track of the details of the other's business. Both have too many problems of their own that demand all the waking hours there are. But within the bounds of reason, the more the exhibitor knows about the difficulties and costs and embarassments of production, and the more the producer knows about the hard side of exhibiting, the fickleness of the picture-going public and the constantly narrowing margin of exhibitors' profit, the better off both will be. Knowledge of each other's business makes for mutual understanding, a more effective co-operation and a more charitable viewpoint.

About the cost of a production the press agent tries hard to leave little doubt. The average exhibitor, however, takes the press agent's claims with a spoonful of salt. He is, if anything, more skeptical than the public, and as cynical as a newspaper editor. If he is keen and experienced, he can estimate production costs pretty well himself; but being on the buying end, he frequently underestimates. The costs of stars and settings and travel and advertising are visible in their results; but the necessary general overhead, the losses in carrying a big payroll through rehearsals and retakes, and takes that never reach the screen, are not visible to the exhibitor or anyone else but the producer himself. The interest on enormous plant investments, the taxes on real and personal property, are equally imperceptible on the screen. There is a staggering sum of money tied up in producing properties in this country, and the exhibitor's rentals have got to pay for it all, plus a reasonable profit—that is perfectly obvious.

But from the other point of view, the sum total of investment in all the picture theaters has also reached enormous proportions. And not only the total, but the individual investment in a good many theaters makes a pretty figure. The high class exhibitor is no longer free to feel that if he don't like it he can get out. In a good many cases he has a fortune in property that would not be worth anything like the amount for any other purpose. He must sink or swim with it, and if things do not go right he must fight with every ounce of his energy to make them right. Most picture theaters today are more permanent establishments than their neighboring grocery stores and drug stores and five-and-ten-cent stores. They are there for keeps; their money is in for good; they must be made to pay a profit.

That is one of the things that the busy and maybe worried producer does not always take time to realize; that the theater investment has grown to be as important, and as permanent, and to need as much consideration as the studio plant investment.

The producer is full of enthusiasm for his latest feature. The passionate declarations of his press agent are not idle vaporings. He is really sincere in his belief that the picture will draw enormous crowds. He has put the best he had and could get into it and he sees that it is good. In his estimation, it will make a killing.

But the exhibitor has passed the point where making a killing is his chief aim. Instead of thinking by the day, he now must think by the year. Holding them out for a week will not maintain him; he would rather have two-thirds of a housefull at every performance, day in and day out.

The producer thinks only of making pictures. The exhibitor must think, not only of the pictures and the way his people will look at them, but of his music and his ventilation and the courtesy of his employes and the attractiveness of his house. For any one of these factors may ruin him; the pictures may be the most important, but they are far from being his only consideration.

Years ago it was common commercial practice in all lines for a manufacturer to sell a dealer as big an order of goods as he could persuade him to take, and then leave him to dispose of them as best he might. Today the majority of manufacturers do all in their power to help the dealers retail their goods. They advertise to consumers and assist the dealers to advertise locally and advise them in sales and display methods. Among this class of manufacturers the film producers have lately taken front rank, and are helping the exhibitors all they can.

This spirit cannot be carried too far. Every ounce of effort put into the work brings direct returns to the manufacturer through the increased prosperity of the exhibitor and his further reliance on the producer who has extended the helping hand.

Great as has been the progress along this line, we would like to see even more of it, if more be possible.

The kind of help that is offered promiscuously, and offered just for the sake of saying "Look what we are doing for you," may not be worth much. But the kind of help that is given after careful study of the exhibitors' problems, and in full understanding of them, makes the difference between success and failure for all concerned.

Go on With the Short Stuff

A CERTAIN formality has become the order of the day (or evening) in picture exhibition, and the change has come so gradually that the public has thought little about it. People talk now of making the "first show" after dinner, and if they are too late for that they wait for the second show. Everybody soon learns the hours when the shows start in a neighborhood theater.

Only the transient, or the occasional visitor, continues to drop in at the middle of a reel and to sit tight until the same scene comes around again.

The multiple reel feature, of course, is responsible for the change. Folks got tired of entering right at the climax of a four or five reel drama, and then having to see it back end to, so to speak.

So they learned the hours without any instruction and without any particular thought on the subject.

But many theaters, particularly in downtown districts and at street-car intersections, still depend upon transient trade. The strangers who make up a substantial part of their patronage know and care nothing about show hours. They want an hour's entertainment, delivered to them in as nearly perfect form as possible, regardless of the clock.

In such theaters the long feature has little place. The single and the two-reeler continue to make the best show for the drop-in drop-out class of trade. And that there is still, and will always continue to be a large amount of that transient, casual business no one will attempt to dispute.

It would be foolish to discourage the production of the best multiple-reel features that money and talent can make; for upon them depends the highest attainment of the art. But it would be more foolish to discontinue the manufacture of a continuous and competent supply of short subjects. The market for them, like that for the articles in the five and ten cent store, we have always with us.

Let those who aspire to them specialize on the mammoth productions that make dramatic critics gasp and get into all the newspapers. The producer who goes right on grinding out first class thousand and two thousand foot subjects will always have plenty of business and is pretty sure to make money.

"Split Reel" Notes for Theater Men

HOW OTHERS ARE STEERING THE SHIP

AN unusual co-operative scheme is reported from Cameron, Missouri, where the merchants seem to have a unique appreciation of the farmers. Twenty-nine stores have joined in providing free matinees at the Crystal Theater for the farmers and their families. Each Saturday a prize is given to the agriculturist who buys the largest bill of goods from the merchants in the scheme.

The Lyceum Theater, of Monticello, New York, managed by L. F. Guimond, gave a very successful masquerade ball at his theater on August 4.

The Mozart Theater of St. Louis, Missouri, presents its patrons each week with a four-page advance program which contains a real, live "answer" page.

A very complete photoplay section is published weekly by the Inquirer of Hollywood, California. One of the features of the department is social news of the film players.

Edwin L. Barker, the founder and president of the Barker-Swan Film Service, Peoria, Illinois, has severed his connections with that organization and joined another motion picture concern.

The Independent Film Corporation of Minneapolis has opened a branch exchange in Milwaukee. John De Lorenzo has been appointed manager and L. H. Olson road man for this office.

B. F. Schaffer, New York, has been added to the staff of Pathe's Minneapolis exchange. Mr. Schaffer, who is one of the oldest salesmen on the Pathe force, will cover northern Minnesota and Wisconsin.

The house organ of the Kunsky Theatrical Enterprises of Detroit, Film News, carries an editorial in the latest issue explaining to fans the significance of the National Convention held in Chicago.

Perhaps few exhibitors realize the importance of Minneapolis as a film center. The city contains 37 exchanges and boasts a lively Screen Club of nearly 150 members. This club held a very successful outing a short time ago.

The program at New York's Rialto, managed by S. L. Rothapfel, for the last week in July featured Mae Marsh and Robert Harron in "The Marriage of Molly O." Another feature of the bill was the Alaskan picture, "The Lure of Alaska," by Dr. Leonard Sugden.

Harry Levy, proprietor of the Wizard Moving Picture Parlor of Baltimore, Maryland, is showing a local-made film of which all the scenes were laid and the pictures were taken and developed by himself. The scenes are laid in and about the city of Baltimore.

Managing Director S. L. Rothapfel, of the Rialto Theater, New York, entertained one hundred members of the Sunset Club at a matinee performance on August 2. Membership in the club requires that each person shall be sixty years of age.

"To be a manager or only an exhibitor, that is the question," is one of the slogans from Shakespeare invented by George E. Carpenter, editor of Real Reels, published by the Notable Feature Film Company of Salt Lake City. Here is another: "It is better to have tried and lost than never to have advertised."

The Pitt Theater in Pittsburgh, under the able direction of Manager Patch, will present "Civilization" beginning September 15. Mr. Patch is the man who circumnavigated the Pennsylvania board of censors last spring by hiring actors to play parts of the feature which the board had eliminated.

The Shubert Theater, Minneapolis, is soon to run Ince's "Civilization." H. Apperson Jones of New York, technical director, who presented the spectacle with Ince in New York and Chicago, is now in the Mill City for the start of the run.

William E. Anderson, of Brooklyn, has completed an elaborate motion picture studio at Hudson Heights, New Jersey. The buildings are located on the brink of the Palisades, the studio covers 25,000 feet of floor space and has every necessary device including a twenty-five-foot square glass tank for taking submarine pictures.

Motion picture entertainments are being given frequently during the summer at the Shelby playgrounds, Ellwood City, Pennsylvania. The pictures shown are of an instructive and educational nature and are especially intended to warn against possible accidents. The playground is crowded on the nights of these free shows.

The three motion picture houses in Lewiston, Pennsylvania, have been closed, two of them just for a few weeks and the other permanently. The theater men declare it is not lack of money because the town never was more prosperous, but lay it to the lure of the out-of-doors during the hot weather.

W. T. Yoder has just finished a three weeks' trip through Arkansas, where he booked considerable new business for the Ft. Smith Universal branch. He reports business good considering the very hot weather. "Billy" will return to Oklahoma City soon, where he is well known to all Oklahoma exhibitors.

There is a series of films now being produced featuring a popular star which exhibitors will probably not see at all. This paradox is explained by the originality of Miss Mabel Normand, who during her spare time has made some short film stories for the benefit of the soldiers camped on the Mexican border. These pictures are not for general distribution, but are sent out only with Miss Normand's compliments.

"We feel compelled to state to our patrons that we do not offer 'as an inducement' twelve tickets for one dollar, nor eleven. We are showing you twenty-five-cent pictures for ten cents. Facts are facts, and when we say that we are giving you the highest priced and best program obtainable we only state a fact which will be substantiated by anyone acquainted with the motion picture business."

The above editorial appears in the current issue of Lyceum Motophotograms, edited and published by L. F. Guimond, manager of the Lyceum, of Monticello, New York.

The Star, Dome, Nixon, Regent, Grand and Crescent Theaters of New Castle, Pennsylvania, set aside the week of July 24-29 as "Fresh Air Camp Movie Week," and part of the proceeds of all these theaters gave a certain percent of their proceeds to help the kiddies have a little vacation. The newspapers gave wide publicity to the matter and urged the public to attend the above-named theaters during that week and so help the good cause. The theaters are located in different parts of the town, so an opportunity was afforded all to help the cause.

Motion picture machines will be installed by the Young Men's Christian Association at every border camp of United States troops which accommodates a brigade or more. Several already have been sent to San Antonio for distribution.

As soon as the association building has been put up the motion pictures will begin. For camps in the smaller towns or in the field where electric current cannot be obtained readily a field lighting plant run by gasoline will be sent.

Films will be started on a circuit of the camps from exchanges in southern cities and in New York.

A number of theaters have sent out subpoenas to the people of their towns summoning them to appear at the trial of Anna Nilsson and Tom Moore in Pathe's "Who's Guilty?" series. Here is the form used by the Strand, of Milwaukee:

We hereby serve you with a subpoena to witness for 14 consecutive weeks (every Tuesday and Wednesday) and pass your opinion on "Who's Guilty?" and why to the "Who's Guilty?" editor. All communications must be in every Saturday night of each week. The winner to receive the free ticket each following week. Put your name and address in your letter. Don't miss these interesting stories. No two are alike in plot, set or costume.

For this you are entitled to a six months' free admission Strand Theater ticket for two (2), if your opinion be the most plausible (decided by our judge).

Tom Moore and Anna Nilsson are the co-stars in these wonderful problem plays of present-day life.

"Thais" Causes Trouble

It seems at the present writing very probable that the opera "Thais" is to cause a legal fight in New York. The World Film Company is making preparations to produce the opera on the screen with Kitty Gordon as star. Herbert Brenon has also announced that he will produce the story, featuring Mary Garden. The question now is, who will have the right to make film history of the noted grand opera piece?

Numerous unusual comedy situations have been worked into "Home Talent," the Vogue-Mutual two-reel comedy, of which Rube Miller is the director as well as the star, assisted by the laughable Ben Turpin.

Institutions to Use Films

The Nicholas Power Company has made a large number of installations of its Power cameragraph in educational and industrial institutions during the present month and asserts that it is reliably informed that many more of these institutions would use motion pictures for educational purposes were it possible to obtain a regular film program suitable for this work. The following institutions will now begin the use of films:

Passaic Board of Education, Passaic, N. J.; St. Marys College and Academy, St. Joseph County, Ind.; Hamilton High School, Hamilton, Ohio; Jewish Orphans' Home, New Orleans, La.; Young Men's Christian Association, Fortress Monroe, Va.; Ford Motor Car Company, Detroit, Mich.; Avondale School, Cincinnati, Ohio; Board of Education, Norwood, Ohio; Amoskeag Manufacturing Company, Manchester, N. H.; Young Men's Christian Association, Tobyhanna, Pa.; St. Michael's R. E. Church, Jersey City, N. J.; State of New York, Utica State Hospital, Utica, N. Y.; St. Joseph's Church, Rosebank, Staten Island; Assembly Hotels Company, Pocono Summit, Pa.; Young Men's Christian Association, Mt. Vernon, N. Y.; Bureau of Clubs and Playgrounds, Pedro Miguel, Canal Zone; St. Joseph's R. C. Church, Cristobal, Canal Zone; State Board of Health, Raleigh, N. C.; Young Men's Christian Association, Mallory, W. Va.; First Presbyterian Church, Parkersburg, W. Va.; Willard State Hospital, Willard, N. Y.; Post Exchange, Fort Terry, N. Y.; U. S. S. Pennsylvania; U. S. S. Ohio; U. S. S. Arkansas; U. S. Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md.; U. S. S. Tennessee; General Electric Company, Schenectady, N. Y.; Ashland Coal & Coke Company, Crumpler, W. Va.; Pontiac State Hospital, Pontiac, Mich.

The above enumerated installations made in the past 30 days are eloquent proof of the immense field for motion pictures which educational and industrial institutions offer. This department of the Nicholas Power Company is under the supervision of Elwood Ernest DeHart, who has had extensive experience with this work and is thoroughly familiar with the requirements and special conditions of this new field for motion pictures. Mr. DeHart is personally known to a large number of educators and managers of the industrial concerns which acquaintance has proven of invaluable assistance to him in conducting his department.

Advertising Men Organize

Plans which have been under discussion for some time in motion picture advertising circles crystallized on July 26 into an actual organization of advertising and publicity men which will doubtless be called the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers. This organization has no connection with any other body either in or out of the motion picture business.

At the meeting, which was held in New York at the Hotel Claridge, the benefits to be derived from such a body as was proposed appeared so valuable that an organization was formed then and there and temporary officers were elected as follows:

President, Arthur James; secretary and treasurer, E. Lanning Masters; executive council, Carl Pierce, Paul Gulick, Harry Reichenbach, Samuel M. Spedon, E. Richard Schayer, Charles E. Moyer, Arthur James, and E. Lanning Masters.

The officers then elected an organization committee to secure legal entity and to draw up a suitable constitution and set of by-laws. Another meeting will be called as soon as this committee is ready to report.

Vivian Rich has turned her hand to comedy and will soon be seen in "Prof. Jermy's Experiment."

First Aid to Theater Men

BY S. L. ROTHAPFEL

A NUMBER of inquiries have been received as to whether it is a good idea to distribute free tickets to a theater or offer them as prizes and so forth. From a psychological standpoint the giving of absolutely free tickets is wrong. The person who has once received something for nothing never wants to pay for it again. The man who has always paid his ten cents for a seat takes it for granted that he will always have to pay ten cents for it and gives the question no further thought. But give him a free ticket two or three times and he never wants to pay again. He starts to count up how much money he could save if he always went in on a pass, and begins to realize how these dimes amount up in the course of a month.

This promiscuous distribution of free tickets, asking nothing in return, as the managers who make a practice of slipping a certain number of complimentary tickets into the programs they mail out, hurt the business. The person who is laboring under the impression that he may be lucky and receive one of these complimentary admissions will put off the day of going to the theater until he does have the free ticket. If he does not really care much about going, he will say: "Oh, I will wait until some other night and perhaps I will not have to pay then."

I am willing to concede that one free ticket usually does bring two or three paid admissions with it, but how many of these would you get anyway without the free admission? Also the fact remains that the man who came in without paying is dissatisfied when he has to pay thereafter, and the friends who came with him and paid for their seats are disgruntled that he is getting the same pleasure they are and it costs him nothing while they paid ten cents. And so your one free ticket has planted the seed of discontent among three people, and you do not care to foster any feeling of this kind.

When a complimentary admission is offered as a prize this is a different matter, for then the winner has worked for the ticket—he has paid for it by his effort which brought the prize to him, and there is no feeling of getting something for nothing.

51. The owner of a string of theaters has one house just one and one-half blocks from my house. It has been dark for six months. He has offered the theater to me absolutely free other than the ordinary running expenses. The house always has been a loser. Would you advise me to open this house in opposition to my present splendid investment?

The thought which immediately arises on reading your question is why burden yourself with a losing proposition when you have a making proposition at present? But the second thought is if you do not take over the house, who will, and what will they do with it?

You have hardly given me enough facts about the conditions and the neighborhood in which the theaters are situated to allow me to judge competently. If the manager of a string of houses has not been able to run the theater to any profit it would seem pretty safe to decide that it could not be done, but we all make mistakes sometimes, and it is possible that he has never hit upon just the right scheme which would make a success of this house. Some young exhibitor who really knew very little about the business might come in and take that theater and just stumble onto some idea which would atract the public and make a success of it.

Are you sure enough of your patronage, and is your theater well enough established so that you could stand against any kind of competition? If you are sure of this, then I would leave the other theater alone and take the chance of its remaining idle or of no one being able to make it attractive enough to cut your profits to any great degree. In a way competition might enhance your own proposition, and the comparison be to your advantage.

If you feel that it is not safe to invite real competition, that the neighborhood is not one that could and would support two good theaters, then your only safe plan is to take over the house and run it yourself—be your own competitor. You are in the same position as the property owner who has a beautiful home next to a vacant lot and is practically forced to buy the lot to keep objectionable flat buildings or stores from being erected thereon. He has to add to his initial investment to keep it up to par and not allow its value to be deteriorated. If the owner is offering this theater to you absolutely free, it seems that you could run it and make a profit with the small expense involved. Isn't there a class of people in the neighborhood who cannot afford to become regular patrons of a high class house who would fill a small priced house? Perhaps the reason of the failure of this theater is the fact that they have tried to make it too high class and so could not meet the competition which your house offered. You no doubt are running a long program of features. Would it not be feasible to take up this offer of the owner and by managing the house yourself block all competition and run it as a five-cent theater, showing about four or five reels each night and all short pictures—the longest a two-reeler? You would have to pay very little for the rental of the films because they would not have to be first runs and your expense would be very small. This plan might not work out in your neighborhood. You are the best judge of that after a critical study of conditions and your prospective patronage. The five-cent theater is becoming almost a thing of the past and it might prove an attractive novelty. Also in this low-priced house you might run some special class or kind of pictures, if you can ascertain what would particularly appeal to the probable patronage, or you might make it a theater which catered a great deal to children, having all the pictures those which children would like and in this manner introduce the novelty of a regular children's house. This would not mean running all fairy stories, but more what is known as a family program showing good pictures on interesting subjects, but clean ones. You will find in eight cases out of ten that the same films which appeal to the children will please their elders. It is usually the children who tease to go to the "show" in the evening and so get the family started.

Size up your neighborhood and find out if it is a district where race suicide is unknown, and if so make a direct play to the children and see if it does not result in a large attendance of the parents also.

52. I have a very poor attendance at my theater during the summer months, just about one-half the regular patronage. I have thought that it would be better to close it up for the receipts simply pay expenses and there is no profit at all but the same amount of work. Lots of people have advised me not to close because they thought it would hurt my business when I opened up again in the fall. You see there is one other motion picture theater in town and that keeps open all summer and if I closed all the people coming to my house would probably go to him. I think the town could support one theater during the summer all right, but it is just starvation for two of us.

What do you think about it, Mr. Rothapfel? Do you think my regular patrons would get so used to the other house that they would go there entirely after I opened again?

Cannot you and the other theater man get together and agree to both close during the hot weather? This would be the easiest solution of the whole matter, for then it would not hurt either of you and your net profits at the end of the year would probably be just as great or greater. You might make an agreement whereby you each stay open every other night and both run on Saturdays and Sundays and so make an equal division of the profits as well as the losses; or perhaps open only on Saturdays and Sundays. If you happen to be deadly rivals and will not co-operate with each other then you are the best judge of whether you dare to close and leave the field to him entirely. It seems to me in many cases it would be wiser for the exhibitor to close right up entirely instead of trying to drag along through the one or two summer months when business is so poor that he is making no profit and at times running at a loss. I do not believe the possible decrease in attendance when he opens in the fall on account of the people having become accustomed to another theater would result in as much of a loss as would result from running with no profit during the summer. There is no real reason either why there should be a falling off of patronage when the theater opens if the manager is alert and active to the possibilities of arousing the curiosity of the townspeople. Herald your opening in some very spectacular fashion. Have some special feature or some novelty which will be a drawing card and make a big event of your coming back in the fall so that the people will all want to be there on the first night. The public is fickle, you know, and after they have been going to the other theater all summer when you were closed they will be ready for a change and will come back to you. At any rate it is up to you to inveigle them back.

Your question brings out a situation which is very much to be regretted in the exhibiting business, and one which it is to be hoped will be improved in the coming years—this is the fact that there is no co-operation between theater managers in the same locality. It seems to be a case of no friendly rivalry but a cut-throat, fight-to-the-death matter. Why is it that just because two men are in the same business they should be deadly enemies? Why is it that competition cannot be carried on in a fair and square way with the idea of the survival of the fittest? What would business be if we did not have competition? We would jog along in the same rut and never advance, but rather deteriorate. There would be no impetus to keep us up to standard and we would soon get out of the habit of exerting ourselves. But when by getting together you can increase everyone's profits and join in competition against greater forces in rival localities which are trying to put you out of business or overshadow you, why should not competitors in the same neighborhood co-operate? If two or three theaters are simply struggling to make both ends meet during the summer why not get together and all close? Why not agree on a standard admission price and all stick to it? This would not be bridling any exhibitor's ambition or originality, but simply giving him the added co-operative foundation and strength on which to build.

Hughes on Censorship in Campaign

Hon. Charles E. Hughes, nominee of the Republican party for President of the United States, through his personal secretary, Lawrence Grim, has promised that he will discuss the question of the regulation of the motion picture industry in his pre-election campaign addresses.

At the request of numerous persons connected with the industry MOTOGRAPHY recently sent a letter to Governor Hughes requesting that, for the benefit of the motion picture industry as a whole, he define his position on the question of regulation.

At the time MOTOGRAPHY made the request explanation was made that while the industry as a whole was against all forms of censorship certain manufacturers and distributors had taken the stand that if there must be a censorship it should be a one board control in the hands of the national government.

Governor Hughes was requested to express his judicial opinion as to whether a national board of censorship would eliminate all forms of local censorship and express his opinion if the matter of states' rights would be involved. His attention was called to the fact that the motion picture business is strictly interstate and not intrastate.

In answer to this communication Secretary Grim wrote under the date of July 24 as follows:

"Your letter of the 20th instant addressed to Governor Hughes has been received. The demands upon the governor for expressions of various kinds are so numerous and the pressure upon him at this time is so great, that he is compelled to confine his expressions to public addresses. If you will read these, you will obtain a clear idea of his attitude toward the various issues of the campaign."

Exhibitor Enters Producing Field

Nathan Hirsh, a New York exhibitor and president of the Pioneer Feature Film Corporation, has entered the field of producing, and at present is taking "water-stuff" at Block Island for his first feature. This will be a five-reel drama with Em. Gorman, the celebrated juvenile star, in the lead.

To get the correct atmosphere Mr. Hirsh is sparing neither time nor expense, and is taking his company to a number of different localities in search of local color.

Being a successful exhibitor for the past ten years, and an equally successful exchange man for two years, Mr. Hirsh is peculiarly adapted to understand the various requisites which combine to make a feature a smashing box office attraction. The feature will be released on the state rights basis.

Henry Kernan, latest of the directors to join the Vogue-Mutual studios, is now at work on his first production.

CONDUCTED BY B. F. BARRETT

Former Editor of Photoplay Scenario Magazine.

Note—This department will appear hereafter in each issue of Motography, and will treat of all subjects of interest to the photoplaywright—whether amateur or professional. You are invited to suggest any subjects you desire to have discussed, or ask questions on any matters relating to the writing of photoplays which have been puzzling you. The department is also open to you at any time for the expression of your own ideas or the submitting of ideas of others which have helped you, and will be interesting to other photoplay writers.

Finding the Photoplay Plot

By Will M. Ritchey.

BEFORE anyone may aspire to writing salable scenarios, he must have the ability to recognize what to use and what not to use in his story. After all, a motion picture is a method of telling a story, and there must be a plot to hold it together. How to see a plot when it arises in the mind is the problem.

It is a trite saying, but a true one, that plots are to be found every time one comes in contact with human activity. The difficulty is in discarding the unessential and holding to that which speeds along the drama of the story. Thus a newspaper paragraph may suggest, not something to be copied, but something widely different in appearance but having the same fundamental theme. The dramas of every-day, modern life surround us. One has only to take some striking feature, dress it with action relating to that feature, and work it out to some logical conclusion. But that is not as easy as it sounds.

It is not a plot merely to have the history of a character's life. While the whole life may be interesting, it may be made up of many distinct events, around each of which a plot could be woven. What went before the particular event, or followed after, should not be told unless it relates directly to that event.

Life, of course, is all struggle, and what the dramatist strives to do is to reflect it so that his audience will say: "Why, that's true to life. I never realized it before." But woven into the major struggle of existence are many separate threads, each individual. Each thread may be regarded as a plot. A man wishes something. He plans to get it. Someone else wants the same thing. They struggle to gain possession. Their struggle grows more fierce until one gains the mastery. Then he obtains the object of his desire. There is your plot, in a nutshell.

Discourage Wholesale Writing

By E. H. Griffith.

Head of Scenario Department of Thomas A. Edison, Inc.

THE whole world knows of the photoplay and the whole world of writers knows that there is a market for stories or scripts that can be used for the production of screen dramas. People who are in the literary field and who are competent to write meritable stories need not be told that there are great possibilities in the literature of the screen and that fame and fortune will come to those who can produce the goods and people who are not inclined in a literary direction just as well might not be informed of this. The ambitious, but unknown, writer always will find the way to a market, and those who cannot find the way might as well not go there. The announcements of contests, prizes, etc., do not stimulate those who are capable of producing good scripts. Such writers know now that any acceptable work that they produce will find a ready market at a good figure. So the encouragement that many companies are putting forth with widespread publicity simply is inciting to effort those who absolutely are incapable of producing desirable subjects. For many years writers for the screen undoubtedly were underpaid, but there is little complaint at the present time in regard to the returns that a photoplay dramatist can secure for good productions.

Contests and various other lures that are held out to people of all classes not only result in the production of a tremendous amount of worthless material, but they have a deleterious effect on the productions of the company that sponsors them. When mail bags full of manuscripts arrive every day it absolutely is impossible to give them careful consideration, no matter what assertions to the contrary are made. According to theory the good scripts should stand out prominently among a mass of poor ones. Instead of this the superior stories seem to merge themselves with the mediocre ones until it is impossible to recognize them. When you have a great mass of manuscripts on hand the gradation from those that are utterly worthless to those that are acceptable is so gradual that the judgment is warped and plays of real merit often are discarded out of sheer inability to detect them. Give me one scenario a day and I will get as many plays and as good ones in the course of a year as if I had access to a thousand scenarios a day.

One reason for this lies in the fact that many scripts that appear worthless on a casual observation reveal great possibilities upon closer scrutiny. Often in reading a scenario, or in the consideration that follows the reading of one, an experienced editor or writer will think of some little twist of plot that makes an otherwise poor production a gem of art. It is commonly known that many striking, successful pictures have had their origin in scripts that appeared useless upon the first perusal. Thorough consideration can be given all scripts only when they do not come into an office in great numbers. When a flood of them arrives the editors are too busy reading to do much thinking and many manuscripts with great possibilities slip through their hands and are returned to their unfortunate authors.

I believe that it is best not to encourage a general production of photoplays and to give every consideration to those that are produced by ambitious writers who are making the writing of scenarios or photoplay stories a business. By this means you will encourage those who are seriously engaged in the work and not discourage them by subjecting them to such overwhelming competition that they turn away from the work in disgust and spend their talents in other fields where they find more consideration and appreciation.

A Hint to Photoplaywrights

By C. Gardner Sullivan.

DON'T run away from the recitation of troubles. Stand by and listen intently to heartaches. Absorb every detail of the story, no matter how tiresome the speaker may become, and the chances are nine out of ten that you will hear the nucleus of a photoplay. Most of us don't like to have others' woes poured into our ears, it is true, but those of us who are "game" enough to "stay with it" are likely to be rewarded with scenario material.

I attended a social function at Pasadena not long ago and during the evening I met a celebrated painter of miniatures. She was beautiful and talented, but she had a penchant, it seemed, for taking newly-made acquaintances over to a corner of the room and resurrecting her rather unpleasant past. Perhaps it was for sympathy; perhaps, out of sheer force of habit. I listened. And she told me of her shattered love affair; how in her young womanhood she had exchanged her honor for a chance to study painting; how, later, she earned entree into society circles; how she fell in love with her benefactor's brother, and he with her; and how marriage was frustrated by grim realization of the unhappy past. Those were the bare threads of the tragedy. I took them and around them weaved a plot which resulted in "The Payment," and I think it is one of my strongest plays.

A Chat With Frances Marion

THE free lance photoplaywright will be delighted to learn that he has one friend at court who is trying to gain recognition for him and see that he is treated fairly—one scenario editor who does not try to better his original work and in so doing eliminate all the little touches which made his scenario different, and turn it into a trite play.

A chat with Frances Marion, scenario editor of the World Film Corporation, brought out the assertion of her feeling of good fellowship toward the free lance writer and her ideas of fair dealing. Miss Marion started in the photoplay profession as a free lance herself and so thoroughly understands all the vicissitudes and disappointments of the writer. She says she feels deeply for the author who when his play is shown on the screen hardly recognizes it himself after the editor, the director and the producer have finished adapting it to their own ideas. She sympathizes with the photoplaywright who, with a feeling of conscious righteousness that he has interpolated into his scenario some points which are good and of which he is justly proud, when it is released invites some friends to accompany him to the theater to see its first showing. He knows there are some parts which are original and out of the ordinary, which will surely bring forth commendation from his friends and perhaps bring requests from the editors for more of his work. But what a disappointment awaits him, the title is flashed on the screen with his name as author and he is filled with self-conscious pride—but by the time the first reel is finished all his self-respect has vanished and anger and chagrin take its place. His play has been "murdered," all the freshness and originality is gone, it has been turned into a hackneyed studio story, and he feels that if he had not already spent the check he would return it and ask that his name be eradicated as author of this mediocre scenario.

Because of this fellow-feeling for the author Miss Marion is going to see that they get fair treatment with the World Company. She tries not to change the author's idea at all but use it as he has written it, and take advantages of his original way of working out his plot. It is sometimes necessary to make minor changes in the character parts to conform with the players to whom the roles are to be fitted. For example the script may call for an elderly woman in some small part and the World may have a male character which would fit in there to much better advantage, so the masculine part is written into the script. The young editor says, however, that she never makes any radical changes in the script without writing to the author and telling him what alterations she wants to make in his play, and if possible allows him to insert the new ideas himself.

In speaking of the market Miss Marion emphasized the fact that the World wants clean plays and will absolutely consider no other kind. She asks for synopses only for five-reel subjects which are written with an idea of fitting the World stars. Miss Marion writes the continuity herself and says it is easier to work out an idea along the lines desired than it is to try to make the ideas of the author as worked out by scenes conform to the needs of the company.

While Miss Marion promises fair treatment to the author, assures him that there will be no stealing of ideas, and that the play will be produced as nearly as possible in accordance with his ideas, and appear on the screen as written, still she brings out the fact that even the editor cannot be sure of having his work produced as written, for a director may suddenly decide that there has not been a "punch" for some time and interpolate a scene which allows a horse to fall over a cliff or some other thrill of this kind.

The World is perfectly willing to pay well for the synopses it accepts, and with a fair price offered and fair treatment assured, the photoplaywright has cause to rejoice that with one company at least he has come into his own.

Exhibitors Should Know This

Chicago, Ill., July 25, 1916.

Motography:

Dear Sirs:—It is with pleasure that I wish to congratulate you on the way you covered the Chicago National Convention in Motography, also in the issue of July 29 the photographs you published of the exhibit booths at the Coliseum were far superior to those appearing in other trade journals.

I wish you continued success in your untiring efforts to keep Motography in the lead as an exhibitors' trade paper.

Very truly yours, Geo. L. Madison, Manager, Kozy Theater.

P. S.—I wish to state that the Photoplay Scenario Department conducted by B. F. Barrett is a big addition to Motography and should prove a big factor toward better stories, therefore better pictures.

Mutual Introduces Dixey and Mills

VOGUE TO PRODUCE FEATURE COMEDIES IN TWO REELS

CHARLES CHAPLIN'S latest comedy entitled "One A. M.," will be released August 7. In this play the comedian presents on the screen a large number of things that he did not learn from a correspondence school, chief among which is a very laughable depiction of a man who drank quite a little too much.

It is rather well known that Mr. Chaplin is a young man of the most extreme sobriety, but "One A. M." leads one to believe that some time in his life the comedian has observed somebody who drank, for as a real late-home inebriate he is a striking success.

At the head of the Mutual releases for August 7 appear "Father and Son," a five-part comedy which will serve to introduce Henry E. Dixey to Mutual followers. Assisting Mr. Dixey will appear Gladden James, Millicent Evans, and Mabel Montgomery.

The second of the five-act Mutual Masterpictures, "The House of Mirrors," also ready for release on August 10, features Frank Mills. Supporting Mr. Mills in his first Mutual feature are Lillian Kemble, a noted star of the stage, J. Frank Clendon, Jack Curtis, a seven-year-old prodigy of the speaking stage, Runa Hodges, Harry Spingler, Bliss Hilford and Rudolph Cameron.

Edward Coxen and Lizette Thorne are featured as the stars of "The Power of Mind," written especially to suit the abilities of the co-stars, by Anthony Coldeway.

Initial of the Mutual three two-act subjects of the week will go to the public August 7 under the title of "The Little Troubadour." Vivian Rich is the star, supported by Alfred Vosburgh and George Periolat.

Anna Little and Frank Borzage have the chief roles in "The Coutin of Calliope Clew," second of the two-reelers for release August 11. This production is from the Mustang-Mutual studios.

Crane Wilbur is the star of "For Her Good Name," the Centaur-Mutual feature release in two acts, which goes to the public August 12. Mae Gaston has the chief supporting role.

Among the comedies of the week are "Billy Van Deussen, the Cave Man," with John Sheehan and Carol Halloway; and "Too Bad, Eddie," starring Oral Humphrey. They will be released August 9 and 13 respectively. "Jerry's Celebration" is a Cub with George Ovey, for release August 13, and "Some Liars," a two-reel Vogue, with Rube Miller and Ben Turpin, ready August 13.

Mutual Weekly No. 84, "See America First" and "Reel Life," the regular Mutual single reel feature releases, will go to the public as usual the two first named on August 9 and the last on August 13.

"Purity" Date Changed

The release date of "Purity," the seven-part American-Mutual featuring Audrey Munson, originally set for July 17, has been delayed. A pre-release showing of this feature was opened at the Liberty Theater, New York, on July 22, under the direction of A. H. Woods, with a bigger box office business than greeted the opening night for "The Birth of a Nation." The election of "Purity" to a place on the "big time" of Broadway with a half score of big productions bidding for the limelight is accepted by the Mutual as an unusual testimonial to its amusement value. While the picture has been given a pre-release showing in New York and will be shown early in a few other large centers it will go to the exhibitors of the country for unlimited release. The conditions under which Mr. Woods is showing the picture will leave the motion picture theater market untouched and will leave the picture with its earning power unimpaired for motion picture theater presentation.

Half Dozen Features Coming

Six five-act features to be released in forthcoming months as Mutual Star Productions and Mutual Masterpictures are now in preparation at the American studios in Santa Barbara, California. These include Mary Miles Minter in "Youth's Endearing Charm," to be followed by "Dulcie's Adventure," a Mutual Star Production; "The Sable Blessing," a Mutual Star Production featuring Richard Bennett; "The Three Pals," presenting Kolb and Dill, a Mutual Star Production; "The Land of Lizards," a Mutual Masterpicture starring Anna Little and Frank Borzage; and "The Torch Bearer," a Mutual Star Production in which William Russell is the featured player.

In addition to the five-reel features various companies now at work at the American-Mutual studios are engaged in the filming of a number of short length features. Among them are "The Franchise," a two-reel drama starring Edward Coxen and Lizette Thorne; and "The Secret of the Old Oak Tree," a two-reel Mustang-Mutual starring Lizette Thorne and Jack Richardson.

A series of special feature comedies in two reels, produced by Vogue Films, Inc., is announced by the Mutual Film Corporation. The Vogue comedies carry real all star casts. They are an expression in two reels of the all-star policy which President Freuler of the Mutual Company has announced for the Mutual's five-part features which are now being released under the general name of Mutual Star Productions.

The all-star quality of the Vogue two-reel feature comedies is amply evidenced by the list of star comedians now at work at the Vogue studios. Charles Chaplin is authority for the statement that Ben Turpin is one of the few real funny men on the screen. Rube Miller, director and star in Vogue comedies, began his career as a circus clown. Last January Paddy McGuire left Keystone for Vogue as the latest step in an interesting dramatic career. Among the other featured players of Vogue are Gypsy Abbott, Madge Kirby, Lillian Hamilton and Arthur Travers.

Harry Kernan, a director of unusual qualifications, has been added to the staff of the Vogue studios and has just completed his first two-reel feature.

William Clifford, who for the past eight months has been co-starring with Margaret Gibson in two-act Centaur-Mutual dramas, will hereafter head a company of his own and has already begun work on his first release, which will introduce a number of the celebrated Bostock animals. The Clifford Company will produce only dramas of the animal character.

Margaret Gibson, who at present is on her vacation, will upon her return be placed at the head of a company especially for her. A number of stories of the sociological and psychological nature are now being prepared for Miss Gibson, the first of which will be ready for release in September.

The third of the Mutual Star Productions featuring William Russell will be released August 3 under the title of "The Strength of Donald McKenzie," and not as "The Guide," as previously announced.

The titles of additional features in which Mary Miles Minter is to appear have been announced as "Faith," "Sunshine," and "Fortune." Each will be in five acts.

Guardsmen Scorch—Bara Cool

"They came to scoff and stayed to scorch."

Three score of New Jersey militia men who were recruited for the new Theda Bara photoplay in which the machine guns and battered forts of war are outstanding features of the landscape, learned a lesson about motion pictures last week. They also found that the harder the mercury boils, the harder and the better the famous vampire acts.

The soldiers learned that the silent drama is a fine art—and a hard art, and what is more to the point, an uncomfortably fiery art. They smiled as they saw Miss Bara in the cool costume of a Red Cross nurse on the battlefield (a New Jersey field near the studio). The sun certainly looked, and was, white hot, but they sat under the shelter of one of those spreading trees that Longfellow made so much about.

After a couple of hours' work in the open, the camera men began to grind out film while Miss Bara acted in the studio. The sun burned down through the studio roof until it appeared certain that the glass would melt.

Others simmered, smoked, and smothered. Theda Bara, however, like Tennyson's brook, went right on with her work.

"I have played vampire roles so long," she said afterward, "that the clinging warmth of a July day is even help to me. I feel that I can act my particular parts with decidedly more effect when the weather seems to others insufferable."

When it came the turn of the state guardsmen, they donned their heavy uniforms gaily and marched out into the field, went forth to do film-battle. For ninety minutes the men charged valiantly up a slope to give the director the military effect desired. For ninety minutes they broiled and baked.

When they returned to the studio, it was necessary to call the roll to find out who were missing. The ranks of the stragglers looked as though a cyclone had swept through them.

"Never too warm to work," said Miss Bara, as she adjusted the Red Cross band around her sleeve and prepared to register some more battlefield scenes while the guardsmen lay on the ground, face down, and groaned.

Roy Aitkin, brother of H. E. Aitken, president of the Triangle Film Corporation, who has been abroad for the past year in the interest of the film business, sailed for home last Saturday on the American liner New York.

Just before his departure from Europe, Mr. Aitken completed arrangements for several important deals in the film world. He expects to remain in New York the rest of the summer and will probably return to Europe in the fall.

V-L-S-E Employees Receive Bonus

FIFTH REEL OF SELIG ATHLETIC SERIES RELEASED

THE fourth division of net earnings in the profit-sharing plan of the V-L-S-E, which constituted twenty per cent of the net profits of the company for the thirteen weeks prior to its distribution, was announced last week by the Big Four company.

Notwithstanding the torrid season and other influences which are generally credited with retarding business, the profit sharing fund of the V-L-S-E at this distribution was the largest in the history of the company and ninety-three new employees shared in it, as well as the hundreds of older employees. Big Four employees in twenty-three cities throughout the country received substantial checks.

In the actual amount received by each employee of the company, the Big Four excelled that of all other companies in the country—even the Ford Automobile Company. The four producers making up the V-L-S-E have a combined wealth as large as that of the Ford Company but do not require as large a force as does the automobile concern, and so can divide the per capita shares of profits on a higher scale. Moreover, the very nature of the Big Four business makes necessary a higher salaried type of employee than an automobile concern requires and such men deserve more substantial recognition.

Perhaps the most happy phase of the profit-sharing plan as applied by the V-L-S-E is that unlike others of its kind, it has no effect whatever on the prices charged by the Big Four for its feature photo-dramas, for although the individual manufacturers making up the V-L-S-E have a combined capital of from thirty to forty millions of dollars, the company itself is capitalized for but $50,000. Instead, therefore, of having to go to Wall Street and issue $6,000,000 worth of stock in order to get $3,000,000 in cash, for which it would be necessary to pay a six per cent interest charge amounting to $360,000 a year, the V-L-S-E has to meet only $3,000 a year interest on its stock, so that it can give its employees a handsome share of its profits and still offer the exhibitor first-class pictures at prices well within reason. It will be readily seen, therefore, that the plan means increased profits for the exhibitor, for, since the increased business placed by each customer of the organization means increased earnings personally for every member of the organization's force, it is to the very vital profit of each individual to see to it that every customer receives the fullest measure of assistance in developing the possibilities of his business.

Such self-interest means Service to the theater owner, with a capital "S"—and it may be said parenthetically that this is the caliber of service which the Big Four is rendering—a service with a breadth and depth that is making the company's sales force stand out as one of notable efficiency throughout the entire commercial field.

Golf in Fifth of Athletic Films

The fifth reel of the Selig Athletic Series being released through V-L-S-E shows the work of Charles (Chick) Evans, who recently won the National Amateur Golf Championship; Jake Schaffer, son of the late "Wizard" Schaffer, in a billiard match with Harry Cline of Philadelphia; Ed Renny winning the three-mile walk at the San Francisco Stadium; a burlesque wresting match between Kalla Pasha, the Americanized Turk, and Jack Dribbs; and a bowling contest on the green at the Crescent Club of Brooklyn, showing a close-up view of William H. Herbert, bowling champion, and his trophies.

The Toronto branch office of the Big Four has been running a unique pre-publicity campaign on "God's Country and the Woman." The Strand Theatre in that city has booked the big Vitagraph feature, but the fact was kept a secret. A contest was announced in the Toronto papers in which readers were offered a prize of $25 for the best answer to the question "Which country is God's country?"

Large advertisements asked this question in bold type and announced that the Strand Theatre would give the person sending in the best answer $25. An accompanying article declares that everyone has heard the expression "God's country," but who can tell where it is located? Answers are to be confined to 250 words.

W. K. Howard, salesman of the V-L-S-E in the Chicago branch, showed his ingenuity as a salesman in a recent campaign on Marietta, Ohio. Mr. Howard had been informed that the exhibitors' indifference in this town was almost a prejudice and he proceeded to break this down. Artistically decorating his hotel suite with photographs of big scenes in V-L-S-E features to get atmosphere, Mr. Howard set out to interview every man in the town that time would permit. These included such men as barbers, drug store proprietors, grocers, and, in fact, any person whose business it is to be in close touch with the rank and file of a community. Then the mayor and the managing editor of the newspaper were interviewed. The latter ran an article about the V-L-S-E pictures and its policy, with the result that on the second day of Mr. Howard's call in Marietta every exhibitor called at his hotel to do business with him. The largest exhibitor in the town was sold, and an unsolicited letter to Mr. Howard by that exhibitor boosts the salesman to the skies.

F. A. Wagner, salesman in the San Francisco branch office of the V-L-S-E, was promoted last week to the managership of the sub-office of Salt Lake City, to succeed R. M. Bertleson, who was forced to resign that position because of ill health. Succeeding Mr. Wagner in his San Francisco post will be M. C. Wilder, booker of that branch office.

Critics on June Caprice

June Caprice, the seventeen-year-old sunshiny artiste of the William Fox photoplays, who scored triumphantly in her first picture, "Caprice of the Mountains," is full of the bubbliest sort of optimism.

Can you blame her:

"Miss Caprice is young, pretty, graceful, petite, with an eloquence of gesture that augurs a bright future in the movies."—New York Times.

"Wish there were more pictures like 'Caprice of the Mountains.' There is a find in this Caprice feature. June Caprice is winsome and wholly suited to the role of the little mountain girl."—Chicago Herald.

"June Caprice shines with the alluring of Venus on a starry night in her first picture. She has fetching beauty and is a most capable actress. There's a world of success ahead of Miss Caprice."—Milwaukee Leader.

"Miss Caprice captivated the audience."—New York Telegraph.

"June Caprice made a big hit. From her acting in this production, she is going to be regarded as one of the greatest finds of the year on the screen. She is extremely beautiful and the fans in this city are united in declaring that June Caprice is ahead of many of the noted stars of experience."—Cedar Rapids Republican.

" 'Caprice of the Mountains' pleased a capacity audience. The spectators were enthusiastic in their signs of appreciation."—New York World.

"June Caprice as Caprice of the Mountains is a charming figure with much winsome beauty and her acting has nothing amateurish about it."—Seattle Spectator.

"Miss Caprice will undoubtedly register with most audiences as a very promising addition to the very large list of stars now marked on the calendar of the film fan." —Wid's.

DIXON FILMS TO BUENOS AIRES

Two Productions of "The Fall of a Nation" to Be Used in South America—Ohio and New England Openings

The National Drama Corporation has completed arrangements with Roy Chandler, head of the Roy Chandler amusement enterprises in South America, for two elaborate productions of "The Fall of a Nation" in that country. For eighteen years Chandler has specialized in show management in this territory and has taken hither some of the greatest musical stars, spectacular productions, circuses, hippodromes and dramatic and vaudeville features.

The South American premier of the Dixon-Herbert spectacle will take place at Buenos Aires early in September, and the musical features will be even more elaborate than those of "The Birth of a Nation" when Thomas Dixon's earlier story was first presented to a South American assemblage in that great capital. The Victor Herbert music will be played by a real grand opera orchestra of 70 pieces.

Two productions, fully as sumptuous as the New York and Chicago ones, will be made—one to tour the east coast and the other the west coast of the continent. Among the cities visited will be Buenos Aires, Montevideo, Rosario, San Paulo, Rio de Janeiro, Bahia, and on the west coast Santiago, Valparaiso, Concepcion, Lima, Iquique and Panama.

The moving of one of the enemy's 42-centimeter guns by means of a tractor in "The Fall of a Nation."

The headquarters of the South American agency of "The Fall of a Nation" will be Casilla Correo 1759, Buenos Aires. Mr. Chandler and Thomas Dixon, Jr., a son of the playwright, recently sailed for the Argentine metropolis.

Willard Holcomb, for several years general press representative of Kinemacolor, and recently motion picture editor of the Dramatic Mirror, has joined the Frank Hatch organization and is doing the advance publicity for the bookings of "The Fall of a Nation" in Ohio. The Euclid Avenue Opera House, Cleveland, was secured for a run beginning July 30, and the same sumptuous production and Victor Herbert orchestra will be used as at the Liberty Theater, New York.

W. M. Powers, who has been acting as New England representative of the Dixon-Herbert spectacle, secured James E. Moore of the Modern Theater, Providence, for a showing of the war drama beginning July 31. This will be the first exhibition in New England.

SCREEN CLUB PICNIC

Members of the Cleveland Club Have First Annual Outing and Jolly Picnic at Cedar Point, Ohio

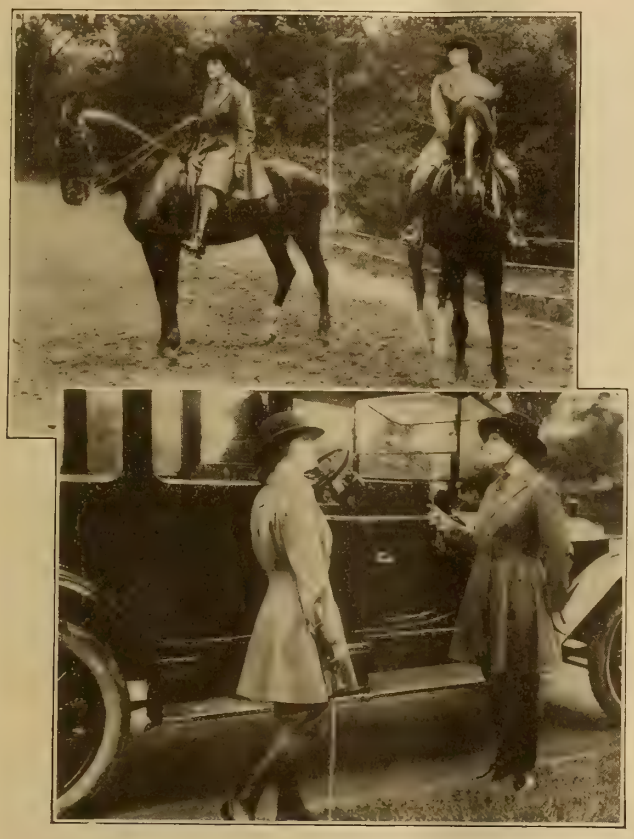
The members of the Cleveland Screen Club, to the number of sixty, recently held their first annual outing and picnic. The members of the party were taken to Cedar Point on a special train over the Lake Shore Electric line.

After the picnic lunch had been consumed a ball game was inaugurated between the exhibitors and the exchangemen. Emery Downs of the Knickerbocker theater was elected captain of the exhibitors' team, and Lusk of the Mutual Company head of the exchange nine. The teams were so good that two home runs were made without hitting the ball and the score was 8 to 7 in favor of the exchange.

Fox Acquires Another Writer

Hettie Grey Baker, bred in library lore, is now writing scenarios for William Fox productions. Miss Baker comes from Hartford, Connecticut, and her first position was on the staff of the Public Library in that city. For some time, she was in charge of the County Bar Library, the first professional librarian and the first woman to be appointed to a law library in the State. Previous to her joining the William Fox script writers, she had three years' experience in the scenario departments of the leading motion picture companies.

Campeau With Selig



Frank Campeau, well known theatrical star, celebrated for his powerful delineation of western characters, has been engaged by the Selig Polyscope Company, and will make his initial appearance in the five-reel western feature drama, "The Light of Western Stars."

Thirty children, ranging from three to fifteen years in age, appear in support of Mary Miles Minter in several of the scenes of "Youth's Endearing Charm," first of the series of Mutual Star productions featuring the screen's youngest star.

Player, Play and Production

BERST GIVES PATHE VIEWPOINT

J. A. BERST, vice-president and general manager of the Pathe Exchange, has added his opinion to the discussion as to the relative importance of the star and the play, with the statement that the star is important, so is the play, but the production is the most important of all.

Society folk in all their activities are shown in the unusual Pathe Florence Rose Fashions. The scenes and costume wearers are so attractive that these films are of universal interest.

Mr. Berst believes that the best star and the best play counts for nothing if the production is poor; that the motion picture public has been educated to such a point today that it demands good stories, good stars and good productions. There are some stage favorites who have made good on the screen, some famous stage plays and literary successes which have made good picture plays, but an analysis of all these cases brings the deduction that almost every successful play has been well produced.

In accordance with this policy plans are now being completed for Pathe's greater program and announcements have been made of the $5,000,000 serial program of which "The Grip of Evil" is the first release.

The productions of two new companies will be added to the Pathe program, Thanhouser Film Corporation and the Astra Film Corporation, and the Arrow Film Corporation is making some new and large plans for the very near future.

It is generally understood that beginning in August Pathe will release at least three features a month in addition to the regular program of serials, Pathe News, comedies, cartoons, scenics, etc.

Famous stars, both of stage and screen, will be presented in this greater program of dramatic and literary successes, as well as original scripts written especially for them.

"We want the best authors, the best artists and the best producers," says Mr. Berst. "We are going slowly and building surely. Because of the great demand of exhibitors we are increasing our output and we are raising the high Pathe standard ever higher."

One of the most important releases of Pathe will be "The Light That Failed," by Rudyard Kipling, featuring Robert Edeson.

"Kick In," one of the greatest successes of recent years, is also in the course of production.

"The Shadow of Her Past," starring Lina Cavalieri and Lucien Muratore, is being very heavily booked in advance.

Another Gold Rooster release features Geraldine O'Brien in "A Woman's Fight," and is produced by Blache.

Pearl White is working on a feature under the production of Edward José, producer of "The Iron Claw," who is now associated with the Astra Film Corporation.

George Fitzmaurice, whose successes include "At Bay," "Via Wireless" and "New York," has also contributed Gold Roosters for early release.

"The Land Just Over Yonder," picturized from Peter R. Kyne's great story, will be released before the end of the year.

In accordance with its policy of having only the best writers Pathe has recently added Louis Tracy, the English novelist, to its staff. His stories of "The Grip of Evil," a master plot in fourteen chapters, will be released simultaneously on the screen an in the newspapers. Mr. Tracy has been connected with various English newspapers, and with Conrad shares the distinction of having produced the strongest pictures of the sea that have been depicted by any writers.

"The Fugitive" will be the first Thanhouser-made Gold Rooster release on the Pathe program; ready for the public on August 13. The feature will star Florence LaBadie, who for four years has been under the Thanhouser banner.

Marie Shotwell, a former Frohman star, has been engaged by Edwin Thanhouser to appear in several features that will be released through Pathe. Miss Shotwell will first be starred in a play in which she plays an Italian girl, part angel, part devil.

Edward José, who produced Pathe's serial, "The Iron Claw," has severed his connection with the Feature Film Company and is now under the banner of the Astra Film Corporation. He has taken with him his entire staff of cameramen, assistants, etc., and is now finishing a five-reel feature for the Pathe program. This picture stars Pearl White, late heroine of "The Iron Claw." Other members of the cast are Hal Forde, Niles Welch and Lilie Leslie.

When Roland Bottomley was cast for the role of John Burton throughout the fourteen episodes of "The Grip of Evil," Pathe's master plot, produced by Balboa, he suggested to G. A. Smith, serial publicity manager of the Pathe Company, that a letter from John Burton be prepared and sent to the newspapers of the country. This has turned out to be one of the most effective publicity stunts known to a number of motion picture editors. Newspapers have been flooded with replies to the letter, and photoplay editors are enthusiastic in their praise of this and the other material sent out by the Pathe Company.

Makato Inokuchi, the Japanese actor appearing in "The Grip of Evil," is a graduate of Princeton and a citizen of the United States. He still retains, however, his wholesome dread of the spy system of his native land, and knows that although he has done no wrong against his country, to be suspected is a serious matter in Japan. Therefore, when another Japanese actor was added to the company and kept Makato Inokuchi under continuous surveillance it got on his nerves and he finally disappeared. This disappearance worried the newcomer and he too left, leaving a note to the effect that he had left the army of Japan and believing Inokuchi to be a spy who had gone to inform the consul, he left also and asked that his two days' pay he turned over to the spy as a bribe. Inokuchi turned the bribe over to the actors' fund.

NEWEST WAR PICTURES

"The Zeppelin Raids on London and the Siege of Verdun" Had Long Run at Park Theater, New York City

"The Zeppelin Raids on London and the Siege of Verdun," a five-part war film which has been said to be the most thrilling war picture ever seen on Broadway, has been offered for distribution on the state rights basis by the Kemble Film Corporation.

The production was made by an intrepid American, without the sanction of the war office of any of the belligerent powers, and for that reason contains many scenes that would never have been permitted to go out of any country at war. There are scenes in it that are absolutely hair raising; one wonders how the photographer ever managed to escape from the battlefield with his life. Indeed, it is said that on more than one occasion the camera which was taking the battle scenes was actually struck by stray bullets.

The production, as the name implies, embodies the actual and only authentic scenes of the bombardments of London by fleets of gigantic Zeppelins, the raids that aroused the entire civilized world by their intrepid daring and unexpectedness. Some of the scenes in the picture were made at night, the great airships being photographed by the light of hundreds of searchlights whose shafts of light were thrown into the sky immediately on the sounding of the alarm that the dreaded Zeppelins were coming.

The section of the picture dealing of the siege of Verdun, which is regarded by many military experts as the turning point in the great war, is one of the finest examples of a war picture that has yet been shown in this country. Lord Kitchener, the creator of the great English army that is now fighting in France, is seen reviewing the Coldstream Guards—the last pictures taken of that great warrior just before he met his tragic death. There are fierce bayonet charges and hand grenade attacks in this remarkable production. The soldiers can be seen advancing to the attack, under the cover of their heavy artillery, in the face of a murderous fire from the enemies' trenches. Up—up they go, until they mingle in a fierce hand-to-hand combat with the enemy. Truly, "The Zeppelin Raids on London and the Siege of Verdun" is one of the most remarkable films ever shown in this country.

Signal Will Tint Films

Under the supervision of Orrin Denny, superintendent of laboratories, the Signal Film Corporation is installing tanks and other equipment necessary for tinting positive films. The new apparatus comes as a result of requests for that sort of work by outside companies who have no laboratories and who have been relying upon the Signal to handle their work for them.

With the installation of this new equipment the Signal studios will be in possession of one of the most complete motion picture laboratories on the Pacific Coast. In addition to the outside work already being done by the Signal, it this week contracted to do the laboratory work for the Lincoln Film Company. For purposes of production in the staging of Vaughan Kester's novel, "The Manager of the B. and A.," the Signal Film Corporation this week began the construction of a section of a round-house at its studio to be used in the latter scenes of the story. The building had to be specially built for the production because it is burned to the ground in the course of telling the story. The set includes a section of the round-house showing four engine stalls, the office of the master mechanic, and the tracks leading to the turntable. By running temporary spur tracks from the Salt Lake railroad which passes the studio it is able to run in several engines to give the set the appearance of realism.

Fox Films Jockeys

The race-track scenes in William Fox's "Sporting Blood," the latest photoplay released, were taken at Jamaica, Long Island. The exercise boys and jockeys in the stables there were highly entertained at having a real moving picture company among them, and duly and daily signified their appreciation by rapt attention to every detail of the work.

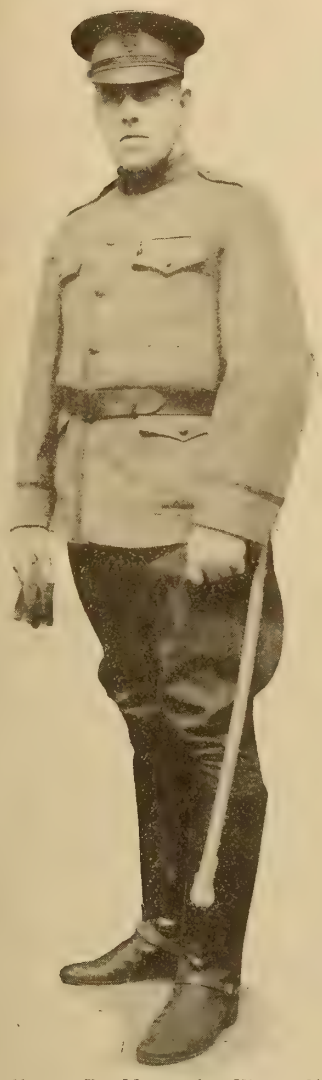
Things Vitagraph

THE BIG AUGUST BLUE RIBBONS—DIRECTORS—AND STAR STORIES



THE time has come, as the poet said, to talk of several and diverse things—about Vitagraph plays, directors, stars and many other items and various. Here we have them, all arranged in a glorious disarrangement.

First comes that powerful feature, "The Alibi," a five part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature to be released on August 7, a tense drama with a real grip. It presents a rare instance of suspense that is suspense, claiming the attention of the audience to the last. A welcome relief is also found in a criminal plot which comes well within the range of possibility. The characters, particularly those in the important parts, are true to life and convincing.

Betty Howe is charming as the bank president's daughter, whose love and faith in the assistant cashier remain firm even after he has been convicted of murder. James Morrison is an excellent sympathetic character as the assistant cashier, convicted of theft and murder by planted circumstantial evidence, and Paul Scardon, who also directed the picture, is strong as the real murderer, who, fearing detection, contrives the idea of "framing" the innocent man.

The direction of the picture has been carried out with unusual foresight and it is evident that Scardon made thorough researches to familiarize himself with the inner workings of a state prison, as there is no detail lacking. Even the three-foot separating wall, to prevent the passing of weapons from visitors to convicts, is shown. Mansfield (James Morrison) is first seen in a quandary because of his inability to raise funds to help his father out of serious difficulties. Slayton, the cashier, learns of Mansfield's plight, and in sore straits himself, determines to turn the knowledge to his own use. He robs the bank and on being detected kills the watchman. With cunning haste, he plants false evidence to insure Mansfield's conviction and establish an alibi for himself. After some months Mansfield escapes, and succeeds in proving his innocence. The remainder of the keen story we will leave to your screen to tell.

Edward Elkas and Robert Whitworth also do some very good work. "The Alibi" is from the book by George Allen England.

Harry T. Morey in Vitagraph's "The Battle Cry of War."

Exceptional Blue Ribbons on the Way

George W. Scott of the federal bench of the state of Oklahoma, has just written a love story of unusual merit. It has been purchased by the Vitagraph and will be produced by it as a Blue Ribbon feature. Also a successful play from the pen of Mabel Heikes Justice is being picturized by one of Vitagraph's scenario staff and will soon be put into production with an all-star cast of Vitagraphers.

When Van Dyke Brooke returns from his vacation to the Vitagraph studios in Flatbush, he will start work on a five-part drama of Civil War days of which Arthur C. Train is the author. Mr. Train also wrote "Mortmain," the picture in which Robert Edeson made his first Vitagraph appearance.

Fred Thomson is putting the finishing touches on the photoplay in which E. H. Sothern will moke his bow to photoplay audiences. When this is completed Mr. Thomson will begin work on a French drama by Paul Kester.

Vitagraph Stars and Directors

Director Paul Scardon has "The Enemy," by George Randolph Chester and Lillian Chester, well under way. We are told it is the most convincing story on the drink question and the best argument for temperance that can be put forward. Mr. Scardon selected an all-star cast, which includes Charles Kent, Evart Overton, Peggy Hyland, James Morrison, Julia Swayne Gordon, Billie Billings and Edward Elkas, for its enactment.

When Director Charles Brabin handed Marc McDermott a copy of the Franklin Coates story on which this pair are now busily engaged, and told him he was to play a dual role, MacDermott commenced to laugh very heartily. This was very puzzling to Brabin as the Coates story is a strong, intense and serious drama, so he questioned the Vitagraph star.

"Well," said MacDermott, "The last time I appeared in a dual role, an old lady wrote and told me she liked the man who played my brother much better than myself."

Gordon Gray, the popular Vitagraph player, has just finished work on a three-part drama which is soon to be released. In this picture Mr. Gray has a role which he says was very congenial. He portrays the part of an artist, with much inspiration and little cash, and failing health in addition. As Mr. Gray had intended taking up art as a profession, this characterization came easy to him. His story of how he forsook the idea of becoming a painter should be interesting.

His father, Carleton Wiggins, who is known as America's foremost cattle painter, was opposed to having his son follow the same career and offered him almost anything in the world if he would give up all thoughts of becoming an artist. Being light on his feet, it was but natural that he should pick dancing as his second choice. Soon after he had determined to become an artist of terpsichore, his services were in great demand and his face became familiar to patrons of such exclusive dance halls as that of the Plaza and the Waldorf-Astoria. While Vernon Castle was in Europe, Mr. Gray filled an engagement at the Castle House. He has also been seen in exhibition dances in the better resorts along the Atlantic coast from Maine to Florida. Mr. Gray considers dancing before an audience very easy as compared with dancing for the benefit of the camera's lens, but he has composed several new dances which he believes will be particularly well adapted to motion pictures, and when projected on the screen will not make the performers appear awkward, as is so often the case with the present dances. In "Letitia," a recent production in which he also had a part very much to his liking, Mr. Gray had the opportunity to exhibit some of his dances on the screen to excellent advantage. The public craze for the dance still remains, thinks Mr. Gray, and when dances can be shown on the screen the art will become still more popular.

Naomi Childers, Aviatrix

A very pretty little incident took place on Staten Island the other day during the rather exciting proceedings that attended the filming of a scene for "The Battle Cry of War." A great crowd had been drawn to a large field on the island to witness an airship ascension, part of the action of the scene by Naomi Childers, a Vitagraph star, who is one of the principals in the big war spectacle.

Before Miss Childers entered the aeroplane she was the center of a good deal of attention, none of which she remembers with such pleasure as the address made to her by a child. It was a little fellow of four that toddled out to her from the spectators with a four-leaved clover in his hand. This he gave to her with this earnest and labored speech:

"Dear Miss Lady: Here is a four-leaf clover.

"It is a good luck four-leaf clover.

"It is for you. It is so you get back safe!"

Miss Childers kissed the cherub. Then she went into the plane with the four-leafed clover in her hand.

Hughie Mack, Sleep Champ

People who see the strenuous work which Hughie Mack is forced to do in comedies of the slapstick type would be skeptical were they told that between these scenes, in which Vitagraph's heavyweight comedian exerts himself to the utmost, Hughie's favorite recreation is sleeping. Hughie is willing to meet all challengers, young or old, in a sleeping contest. He guarantees to sleep longer, fall asleep quicker and recline in more uncomfortable positions without his slumbers being disturbed, than any other man, woman or child in motion pictures or in private life, except dead ones. Oh! add to that list that Hughie is also willing to wager that his snores will drown those of any two men.

Screen to Combat Sinister Politics

PRESIDENT ROWLAND OF METRO SHOWS POWER OF SILENT STAGE FILMS

THE new National Association of the Motion Picture Industry at its formal organization at the Hotel Astor took up the question of making use of the motion picture screens to combat the sinister political influences which are working against the motion picture business. The importance of this subject cannot be brought out too strongly, as there lies in the hands of the motion picture industry, if the action is concerted, a formidable weapon against politicians, bigots and mistaken reformers who seek to injure the fifth industry of the United States. The manner of making use of this power is especially important, and in this connection Richard A. Rowland, president of the Metro Pictures Corporation, has the following to say:

The motion picture screen is the most powerful influence of modern times and today is farther reaching than any newspaper or any group of newspapers in the world.

Against censorship there can be used on the screen precisely the same campaign methods as are now employed by the newspapers with short, clear telling editorials; brief, well written news of the situation; short, sharp characterizations of the mistaken men and women who are fighting the pictures; propaganda plays enacted on the screen; slogans that stick; and appeals for reason, justice and fair play.

The people can be told how to fight against oppression, how to defeat men for office, how to resist the sinister and bigoted efforts to curtail their liberties.

In making use of the screen for this important work the greatest care should be taken not to misuse its tremendous power. To misuse the screen would be to kill it entirely as a public influence and those who are about to engage in the nation-wide fight through the screen against censorship will move as men holding in their hands a deadly weapon so tremendous in its force that it shall be aimed only at a real enemy in a fight against a real evil.

With a message every day, well told and skillfully contrived, presented to 20,000,000 of persons, is there anything that such an influence could not accomplish?

It could elect candidates for office and defeat unworthy men.

It could lay down principles of human liberty in such a way as to arouse a nation to any task. It could make for peace or war and hold the politicians of the United States in the hollow of its hands.

With the exhibitors uniting as they are uniting, a solid and harmonious army is already formed, organized and ready to stand for their rights and their liberties and those who seek to oppress the industry by unfair taxation or bigoted restrictions will before long consider well before they move against us.

In informing the public on matters of health, in educating mothers on the care of and training of their children, in implanting ideas and ideals, the motion picture screen will only scratch the surface of its tremendous possibilities. Right now there is need for its use against the gallant statesmen who seek to oppress us because they have read the stories of great fortunes that the business is supposed to hold for all who are engaged in it. There is need for its use in every state, in every congressional and senatorial district against men like Cristman, who fathered the Cristman-Wheeler bill in New York state; against men like Funkhouser of Chicago, against men like Senator Kitchin and Congressman Hughes. Either these men should be fair to our industry as in fact to all other industries, or they should be retired to the rest and quiet of private life.

The screen as a political influence is likely to interest the statesmen great and small throughout the nation. Other great businesses have been handicapped in their fight for fair play by the lack of adequate publicity avenues. The screen is a potential force that should and will be used for securing decent consideration at the hands of the law makers.

The present progress of the organization augurs well for the industry, and with its new found strength its fight for its own will begin within the fortnight.

Paramount Launches New Policy

BEGINS PLAN FOR CO-OPERATION WITH EXHIBITORS

AS the ultimate outcome of the publicity convention that was held in Chicago during the week of the National Exhibitors Convention by the publicity and advertising directors and managers of the exchanges of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, the heads of the departments of the corporation's office in New York and the representatives of the producing companies making pictures for the Paramount Program, there has been launched one of the most complete publicity campaigns that has ever been conceived of in the motion picture industry.

Every exchange in the Paramount organization was represented at the publicity convention at the Blackstone Hotel, where every publicity problem of the Paramount family was discussed. The members present represented the Paramount Pictures Corporation, Famous Players Film Company, the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, the Oliver Morosco Photo Play Company, Pallas Pictures, the Famous Players Film Company of New England, Famous Players Film Company of Boston, Mass.; the William L. Sherry Feature Play Co., of New York; Famous Players Exchange, of Philadelphia, Pa.; Famous Players Exchange of Washington, D. C.; Famous Players Film Service, Inc., of Pittsburgh; Famous Players Film Service, Inc., of Chicago, Ill; Kansas City Feature Film Company, of Kansas City, Mo.; Famous Players Star Feature Film Cervice, of Minneapolis, Minn.; Famous Players Film Service, Inc., of Cincinnati, O.; Southern Paramount Pictures Company of Atlanta, Ga.; Famous Players Film Service, Inc., of Detroit; Texas Paramount Pictures Company, of Dallas, Texas; Southern Paramount Pictures Co., of New Orleans, La.; Notable Feature Film Co., of Salt Lake City, Utah; Progressive Motion Picture Company, of Seattle, Wash.; Notable Feature Film Company, of Denver, Colo.; Progressive Motion Picture Company, of San Francisco, Cal., and the Progressive Motion Picture Co., of Los Angeles. It was an unusual conference in every respect.

With the beginning of August, when the plans for the great campaign will be put into play, there will be given a very complete exhibitors service. With the progressive ideas of the newly elected officials of the Paramount organization, President Hiram Abrams, Treasurer James Steele and Vice-President Wm. L. Sherry, backed by the determination of the producing companies represented by President Zukor, Messrs. Lasky and Goldfish of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and Oliver Morosco and Frank A. Garbutt, of the Morosco and Pallas Pictures interests, to give the exhibitor not only the best pictures that are producable, but a service and co-operation that will aid the exhibitor to present his pictures to the public in an attractive manner and advertise them in an efficient way.

The first move towards the perfection of the plan has been the establishment in every exchange of a publicity-efficiency department where there has been none in the past. Every want of every exhibitor will be given serious consideration and no matter what form of publicity is desired by the exhibitor it will be furnished.

President Hiram Abrams of Paramount has sounded the keynote of the campaign in stating that Paramount has determined upon a policy of absolute and consistent co-operation with the exhibitors, which was to include a sincere effort for the further unification of the various interests interlinked in the Paramount plan; that no stone would be left unturned to bring this about and that there would be no stone wall existing between producer, exhibitor and distributor, for in Paramount there would be naught save the most sincere of a family feeling. This feeling always has predominated in the Paramount organization.

President Abrams Explains Plan

To help the exhibitor build this business better is what we intend to do in the future. With our productions and our perfect mediums of distribution as the foundation we will render a service of absolute co-operation to our every exhibitor in the future that will be the keynote that will hold together the bridge of unequalled success. We have already passed through the first stage, that of getting together, and now we begin with the stage of real exhibitors' co-operation. Those two elements will be the steel and concrete of the bridge. Paramount will be, as it has been, a big family. Each day we will sit around the table and discuss how best we can help the other fellow. There will be nothing too small for us to do and nothing too gigantic for us to tackle. Hundreds of exhibitors have in the past caught the spirit of co-operation that we have given but we will not be satisfied until every single one has gotten the spirit and has profited by our efforts.

There is only one method that I can honestly affirm to bring about the improvement of Paramount, which, with its better pictures, was responsible in bringing into the theaters a better proportionate public, whose demands for the better pictures created the necessity of longer runs and these longer runs brought a larger proportionate return to the exhibitor, the exchange and the producer. It is co-operation. With our productions there came into being better theaters which brought a better public into the theaters and which resulted in higher prices. We have given the quality pictures to the country and it will be quality first, last and at all times in the future. That is why with these better pictures have come longer runs and higher prices.

That is why with the advancing of the industry our first thought in the future after the deliverance of our quality goods will be the co-operative service to be rendered the exhibitor for him to put the pictures across in a quality style and bring quality people into his house where with the displaying of our trademark, which means the productions of the four greatest producing companies in the industry, they will always know that the best is to be found here. The exhibitor who will follow our advice will constantly increase his profits and incidentally widen the circle from which his patronage is drawn.

Our permanent success has always been achieved in any industry by the product that has and maintains the reputation for consistent quality. That is why the exhibitor with our program, given to him in a protected territory, is bound to achieve permanent success. All we want to do is to help when the road is not clear, for there is no straighter path to ultimate success than the path that is lighted by Paramount.

Zukor and Others Back the Work

Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has seconded Mr. Abrams in this and has made it plain that the producers and Paramount had formulated this plan for the most aggressive campaign for better productions and more equitable and judicious distribution that has so far been made in the motion picture industry with the sole purpose of giving the exhibitor that more earnest co-operation and personal attention that he has always dreamed of some day obtaining. These same purposes and plans have met with the heartiest approval of Morosco and Pallas Pictures representatives and the publicity campaign of Paramount will be in full swing in a short while.

The members of the Paramount family who attended the conferences and outlined the needs of the exhibitor and the modes of obtaining co-operation from Paramount and the Paramount producers were the following:

Hiram Abrams, president of Paramount; William L. Sherry, vice-president; James Steele, treasurer; Wallace Thompson, director of Paramount publications and advertising; John A. Stevenson, manager of the Extension Bureau; P. P. Schulberg, Famous Players publicity manager; J. C. Flinn, Lasky publicity manager; Carl H. Pierce, Morosco-Pallas publicity manager; Julian Solomon, assistant to Mr. Pierce; W. E. Greene, treasurer, Boston exchange; S. J. Stoughton, general sales manager, Sherry exchange; R. C. Schmidt, manager of the Pittsburgh exchange; W. F. Seymour, manager, Twenty-third Street exchange; C. E. Tandy, general manager, Southern Paramount Pictures Company of Atlanta; Herman Wobber, general manager, Progressive Motion Picture Company of San Francisco; J. W. Allen, assistant manager, Progressive Motion Picture Company of San Francisco; George K. Robinson, publicity manager, Boston exchange; A. D. Flintom, president, Kansas City exchange; Bert Barnett, general manager, Minneapolis exchange; L. D. Balsly, advertising manager, Kansas City exchange; Oscar A. Morgan, publicity manager, Philadelphia exchange; John S. King, advertising manager, Pittsburgh exchange; W. C. Bachmeyer, manager, Cincinnati exchange; George E. Carpenter, publicity manager, Salt Lake exchange; J. H. W. Cohn, manager of the Denver exchange; F. H. Brockell, manager of the Chicago exchange; D. L. Dennison, manager, Detroit exchange; Harry Asher, manager, Boston exchange; L. Marcus, manager, Salt Lake exchange; Frank Paxton, publicity manager, Chicago exchange.

New Paramount Subjects

The Paramount feature productions of the week of August 14 are, "The House of the Golden Windows," a Lasky production in which Cleo Ridgely and Wallace Reid are featured, and "The Stronger Love," a Morosco production in which the charming Vivian Martin is starred. Both these five-reel features are up to the Paramount standard and will be classed as two of the best pictures issued on the Paramount program during the summer months.

Short reel releases for the week will include the twenty-seventh edition of the "Magazine-on-the-screen," the Paramount Pictographs; the personally conducted tour with Burton Holmes in "Innsbruck, the Capital of the Austrian Tyrol," that week's release of the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel-Pictures, and "Bobby Bumps Loses His Pup," a clever animated cartoon from the pen of Earl Hurd.

The 27th edition of Paramount "Magazine-on-the-screen," Paramount Pictographs, is one of exceptional interest, in which there are five main subjects treated, giving it an excellent variety. The first is "Bicycles I Have Met," in which there is pictured the evolution of the bicycle, starting with the old "dandy horse" upon which you sat astride, and propelled by stamping your feet on the ground, up to the time of the modern bicycle, picturing all the different methods and handling the subject with a bit of comedy.

"Better Babies" are taught in this release how to set a table, picturing a grandmother teaching a twelve-year-old girl the process. This picture makes a plea for the training of children in the practical work in the home, and gives a little lesson in setting the table properly. It shows how a table cloth should be laid, on which side knives and forks and spoons should be placed, where the glasses belong, how and where bread and butter plate, napkin, service plate, and first course service should be placed. The picture concludes with a little illustration of a simple and beautiful way of arranging flowers for the center of the table.

Teaching Men to Play

The beginning of a very interesting series, entitled "Teaching the Business Man How to Play," comes in this release, where the subject of tennis is discussed in pictures, in which, by speeding up the camera, there is shown precisely how a fast stroke is made in tennis, the picture being run slowly on the screen. This is the first of a series of Paramount pictures endeavoring to interest the business man in how to play, because the average American does not play enough, principally because he does not realize how attractive sport is.

International Releases New Serial

ARTHUR BRISBANE, EDITOR, AND BEATRICE FAIRFAX ON THE SCREEN

BEATRICE FAIRFAX, beloved of the love-lorn, is going to extend her field of endeavor to the motion picture screen in a new serial photoplay produced by the International Film Service, Inc., which will soon be given to the public. The title of the serial will be "Beatrice Fairfax."

For eighteen years the name of Beatrice Fairfax has been associated with love and romance, joy and sorrow. Millions of persons have sought her advice. Shop girls and society debutantes, maidens and widows, mothers and orphans in distress, bashful swains and worldwise men, rich and poor, young and old, have sought her advice. They have given her their utmost confidence and told her the thrilling stories of their life. Her weekly mail amounts to more than 800 letters. They run the gamut of subjects, but most of them deal with love problems and the romances that exist in every-day life—the real romances of the world. From these letters have been culled a series of thrilling incidents, each one made into an episode and each one complete in itself. The result has been a fascinating and dramatic series of human interest episodes. Many of them are real happenings. Others are based partly on fact and still others carry only the idea suggested by the correspondent, and in no case will confidence be betrayed or tender feelings be hurt.

The play is a newspaper story and centers around two characters, Beatrice Fairfax, and Jimmy Barton, a reporter on the Evening Journal. The series opens with a prologue showing an interior view of the office of the editor of the New York Evening Journal. Beatrice Fairfax, "Tad," the cartoonist, and other celebrities confer with the editor and then the scene shifts from the office of the editor to the office of Beatrice Fairfax as the first episode begins.

This prologue has persuaded Arthur Brisbane, editor of the Evening Journal, who recently made some remarks about motion pictures that created a furore all over the country, to pose for the camera himself. When it was called to his attention that a part had been written into the scenario for him, Mr. Brisbane consented to appear as the editor in the film, and went through the scenes offering suggestions and giving orders here and there.

In speaking of his experience as an actor, Mr. Brisbane said that with the exception of the heat from the light, having a moving picture taken is interesting and amusing. He also spoke of the great future and possibilities in the motion picture and expressed the hope that the day would come when the art of the moving picture genius will be devoted ninety per cent to education, to reality, to history, and only ten per cent to amusement, instead of being ninety per cent to amusement and ten per cent to education as is now the case.

Beatrice Fairfax will not appear herself in this film, but was allowed to choose the actress to represent her, and she chose Grace Darling as the best exemplification of her idea of herself. Many persons have pictured Miss Fairfax as elderly and matronly, but when questioned as to why she selected a woman of youth for the part, Miss Fairfax replied that love and romance centers about youth and beauty. The world loves youth and beauty and despises age and wrinkles, and therefore she desired the public to think of Beatrice Fairfax as young and comely and gifted with uncommon wisdom.

Grace Darling, who will impersonate Beatrice Fairfax in the new International serial photoplay, is a young woman of exceptional talents. Although but twenty-one years old, she has already won fame as a writer, as well as a moving picture actress.

Following both occupations, Miss Darling has traveled all over the world, has met celebrities in every land and has had enough thrilling experiences to make a fifty-episode film serial. Because of her ability as a writer, she was selected to make the trip on the first steamer that went from New York to San Francisco, through the Panama Canal.

In her moving picture work, Miss Darling has been in constant demand because of her pleasing personality, her great beauty and her natural ability.

Harry Fox has been chosen to take the part of Jimmy Barton, a happy-go-lucky reporter, who performs heroic and dare-devil deeds in as amazing and startling a manner as does Sherlock Holmes. Mr. Fox has been appearing for so long in musical comedy that many theatergoers have forgotten that he can do romantic roles equally well.

Jean Sothern in two scenes from International's serial, "The Mysteries of Myra."

He says he likes working before the camera, but moving picture directors are rather strenuous, for example, in one scene he has to fight with a crowd of Italians and it is a real fight all right, for the extras were Cornell football men and they took the instruction of the director to "beat him up" literally, so that he had to lay up for repairs the rest of the day.

Because of the infantile paralysis scare in the metropolitan district of New York, International has decided to postpone for two weeks the release of "Beatrice Fairfax" in the New York district. The first episode was to have been shown simultaneously in every city in the country, except the Pacific Coast, on August 7. This program will be carried out with the exception of the New York district, which will have its first sight of the splendid serial on August 28. The date of the release for the Pacific Coast is August 14. The new serial, it is said, more than equals "The Mysteries of Myra."

Brenon Corporation Leases Studios

RIGHTS FOR "WAR BRIDES" SECURED

THE Dramatists Play Agency has just arranged to transfer to Herbert Brenon the motion picture contract for "War Brides" existing between Charles Bryant and Marion Craig Wentworth, the author. Mr. Brenon has agreed to make a magnificent production of this play, and believes it will be the biggest thing he has ever done. Inasmuch as this will be the first picture made under his own management, its magnitude is bound to surpass even his former efforts. Mrs. Wentworth will be in New York during the making of the picture to consult and advise with Mr. Brenon. It is said that the business details pertaining to the closing of this contract involved a greater advance payment and a larger percentage than has ever before been given for the motion picture rights of a play.

Splendid Studio Equipment

The Herbert Brenon Film Corporation has closed a five years' lease on the Ideal studios and laboratories, located on the Palisades, on the Hudson county boulevard at Hudson Heights, and here Mr. Brenon will begin work immediately upon his first production, "War Brides," with Nazimova in the role in which she has scored one of her greatest successes.

"No perfect work of art can be created without perfect tools," says Mr. Brenon, in speaking of his plant. "Imagine Paderewski playing on a cheap piano, or Kubelik on a $5 fiddle, or Sorolla painting one of his inspiring canvases with one of those toy water-color boxes that children play with. There has been a tendency in the moving picture business—as distinguished from the photo drama art—to be lavish with expenditures in every department except the mechanical. I have been so fortunate as to secure this studio, which was built regardless of cost, by men who were determined to incorporate in it all the latest ideas and equipment, from dressing rooms to laboratory. Mr. Albert Teitel, under whose supervision all the work was done, was educated in this department in France, and is conversant with all the contributions of science to the cinematograph. I am satisfied that nowhere in the world is there a studio with better facilities. There are many larger ones but none, so far as I know, with all its refinements. I consider it a perfect tool."

The finishing touches on the plant were barely completed when W. I. Cherry made the lease for it for Mr. Brenon. It consists of two buildings, the stage areas being 143 by 75, and 50 by 70 respectively. In the larger studio there are accommodations for more than three hundred players in large, airy dressing rooms, this occupying one entire floor. Below this floor are the offices, property rooms, some storage room, paint room, machine shop, carpenter shop, and concrete and glass tanks for making submarine pictures. Many of these features have been installed from original designs and are not duplicated in any other plant. Spraying systems have been devised for cooling the roofs of the studios, making it possible for the company to work in comfort in the hottest days of the summer. Visitors' galleries have been built, in order that persons interested may witness the making of the pictures without interfering with the work.

Rotation of Scenes

All laymen who have visited large moving picture studios are aware of the general atmosphere of confusion that exists. One scene seems almost to overlap its neighbor, and the unavoidable turmoil cannot but have the effect of distracting the players from their work. This has been circumvented in the new Brenon studios by a device for rotation of scenes. In this way it has been estimated that the studio has a capacity of 350,000 feet in ten hours, which can be increased to 600,000 feet when working at full capacity with a few unimportant additions. No less care has been devoted to the laboratories, which will be under the direction of Mr. Teitel, the builder of the plant, and F. Doublier, who formerly was associated with the Lumiere company, four years laboratory superintendent of the Eclair Company, and designed the Paragon plant at Ft. Lee.

In this laboratory, too, the aim has been to provide facilities for producing perfect film. The latest inventions in perforating machines, printers, filtering system and drying apparatus has been installed. An innovation is a hot air interior drying system which insures an even temperature and prevents the settlement of dust on the celluloid. Mr. Doublier believes that the laboratory should be as much the home of the artist as the studio, and he is a true art-chemist of the profession. One of his chief motives for joining with Mr. Teitel in the building of the studios which will be used by Mr. Brenon was the assurance that contracts would not be taken for a greater amount of work than could be handled in the most thorough manner.

In addition to this equipment there is under construction an open air studio or stage, 100 by 160 feet, to be provided with similarly complete appliances.

In this studio Mr. Brenon already is installing his producing staff, and it is believed that the remarkable facilities offered will result in a new time record being set between the date of the organization of the corporation and the release of its first photo drama. However, not speed but quality will be the constant aim of Mr. Brenon, and his first picture, "War Brides," will not be released until it is practically perfect.

Fox Adds New Studio

THE William Fox Corporation has just added to its studio facilities in the substantial form of one of the world's finest and best-equipped laboratories for picture-making, in an effort to meet the well-known economic law of supply and demand.

The newcomer among the Fox studios is situated in Hollywood, California, and is ranked as one of the ultra-modern plants in the realm of motion pictures. Previously, it was known as the Dixon studio, and had been built by the National Drama Corporation. The stage alone is excepted. It is one of the largest in use for the silent drama, being seventy-two feet wide and one hundred and eight feet long.

As the William Fox laboratories in Edendale, the Los Angeles suburb, were already working to capacity, and expansion on the Coast was imperative, a long-term lease was taken on the Hollywood plant by A. Carlos, general superintendent of the Fox Films. The Edendale studio, which will be retained, is also completely fitted out from a seventy by one hundred foot exterior stage to an artificial lake 40 by 40 feet in size.

Director R. A. Walsh, who gained great fame through screening "Blue Blood and Red," "Carmen," "Regeneration," and "The Serpent," will make his headquarters in the Hollywood plant, and several new companies will be added in the near future. It has thirty-two dressing rooms directly above the stage, there is a rehearsal room where scenes may be worked out by the cast, and a wonderful power plant supplies such energy as the William Fox players themselves do not. The diffusers are placed at a height above the ground which insures a maximum of light, so one of the most difficult problems is solved in advance.

Efficiency was sought in the building and it has been observed in every detail. Every room is light, airy, and well ventilated, and the Walsh company say collectively and individually that the plant is the last word in comfort and convenience for the actor.

A few days since the laboratory was dedicated officially by Mr. Carlos. With players, carpenters, and property men scattered hither and yon about the place, Mr. Carlos mounted the rostrum, made a short "speech" in the nature of an invocation, and then ground out a film, as an exalted cameraman.

Screen Art More Difficult than Stage

Madame Bertha Kalich, the eminent tragedienne, will begin work within the week on a master moving picture production for the William Fox Films. The new photo-drama will give even more scope to the emotional art of the peerless artiste. "It is undoubtedly much more difficult for a tragedienne to act in the cinemas than on the legitimate stage. That is one reason my work in motion pictures is so fascinating to me," said Madame Kalich recently.

Dorothy Bernard, whose beauty blooms upon Fox screens.

"I think I may be justly proud of my achievements in Mr. Fox's photoplays when one considers the obstacles art must overcome. Remember first the omnipresent handicap in the lack of the audience. The actress has not the sympathetic spectator to help inspirit her. She has not the theater with the illusions it fosters, so that she can forget, absolutely, that her emotions are real, not forced. She has not the applause at the end of the scene to prove that her interpretation of the role has been a success.

"What does she have? One or two cameras grinding away constantly to remind her that she is acting—not living. Bare rocks or an open field or a dozen trees to distract her when she succeeds in forgetting the click, click, click, of the machine. Lenses which see every false move, however small.

"Then, one rises to the very height of emotion, and drops wearily in a chair for a moment's rest, only to hear the director say: 'Now, we'll have that scene over again.' Some one has not done quite right—perhaps an 'extra' has taken a step too far, or has not come far enough. And the emotional actress has to repeat the scene and act as naturally as ever. Once one falls into acting the automaton, art has fled."

Madame Kalich paused an instant, then continued reflectively:

"Consider, too, that there is no such sustained acting in the moving picture as there is on the legitimate stage. Things, of necessity, must be done after a piece-meal fashion.

"There is no continuity in screening a photoplay which resembles the preparation for the climax in a drama. On the stage, act two follows act one, and act three follows act two. In the film work, one rarely begins a new picture by acting the first scenes first. One may start in the middle—and I remember one place where we began almost at the end."

Madame Kalich, who has been enjoying a vacation at Lakewood, will soon commence on a new William Fox photoplay which will give her emotional intensity greater scope than ever.

June Caprice in Bubbling Optimism

June Caprice, the William Fox star-that-was-to-be-and-is, begins a new photoplay of bubbling optimism in a few days. Sydney Bracey, the "Sid" of "Merely Mary Ann," has rejoined the William Fox forces, and is now at work in the new June Caprice picture. Mr. Bracey, who is a native of Melbourne, Australia, earned the first money he ever made, on the stage. He ran away from home when a lad to go with Kyrle Bellew and Mrs. Brown Potter in "As You Like It." Like most Australians, Mr. Bracey is an expert in the water. He is a noted high-diver and can swim and sail with the best of them.

ANNETTE KELLERMANN'S STORY

Great Swimmer Appearing in "A Daughter of the Gods" Tells Interesting Adventures of Her Life

By Annette Kellermann.

I was born in Sydney, New South Wales, and had not the faintest idea of going in for swimming as a professional until well in my teens. As a child of nine I frequently went to Cavill's baths, Sydney, for all Australian children swim; it seems to come as second nature to us. It was then I learned my breast stroke. A few years later I often went to Farmer's Baths in Farm Cove, Sydney. In six weeks I had mastered all the strokes, even the trudgeon.

My first contest was in the 45-yard handicap, in which I was placed scratch, having to give a second start to Miss Buttell, who was regarded as the fastest girl swimmer among her contemporaries. I came in a winner by a couple of yards. That was when I was 15 years old, and in all future contests I was placed scratch and only lost one race.

It was at the Cleveland street baths that I won the championship of New South Wales for 100 yards in one minute, 18 seconds. The same year at Farmer's baths I won the one-mile championship in 32 minutes, 29 seconds, making a world's record, which I later lowered to 28 minutes.

I was very keen also on diving, and made my first display at Farmer's baths, when I did two dives with Vera Buttell, off the high diving board, 50 feet, after one trial. I was subsequently persuaded to give exhibitions of swimming at the principal Melbourne baths, and by request I commenced to give lessons. Then came an offer from the Melbourne Exhibition Aquarium, which I accepted. In the largest glass tank in the world, 60 feet long, with a lovely rookery and fish swimming about, I gave two shows a day of swimming and diving for nine months.

That winter I was engaged by Bland Holt for his wonderful production, "The Breaking of the Drought," at the Theater Royal, Melbourne, when I did a diving show in a seaside gala.

It was in Melbourne on the river Yarra that I swam 2¼ miles down the river in 46 minutes, defeating the previous down-river record, established by an American, in 58 minutes.

Later I went on to Vienna, where I was engaged by the direction of the "Englische Garten," or "Venedigen Wien," to give exhibitions nightly. During my stay in Vienna I had a splendid swim, from Toulin to Vienna, 26 miles, with a current of four miles an hour, in 3 hours 10 minutes.

I finished one season as a swimmer with my attempt to reach Boston light, a distance of 15 miles. I came within half a mile; was in the water 6 hours and 23 minutes, my average stroke being 22 strokes to the minute, defeating records of sixty men.

I next appeared for Mr. Keith and opening in his Boston theater played his theaters for three consecutive years, appearing in the leading vaudeville theaters throughout the United States. Then a long and pleasant engagement with the Shuberts followed, after which I set out for another tour of the world, playing in all the largest cities of Europe.

From England I went on to Paris and played for a long time at the Alhambra Theater. From there I came back to America to appear in a play. It was at that time that I first entered the motion pictures and made my appearance on the screen in the first marine spectacle ever filmed.

My second film was made in Jamaica, where I spent nearly a year, working as the star of Mr. William Fox's gigantic and beautiful film spectacle, "A Daughter of the Gods." I regard my work in this picturesque fantasy as the crowning work of my entire career. Mr. Fox has given me a wonderful opportunity and I believe all of you will feel that I have made the most of it.

"America Preparing" on State-Rights

"AMERICA PREPARING," the first patriotic preparedness picture to be released, is to be sold on the state rights basis, according to William H. Kemble, president of the Kemble Film Corporation, who produced the film.

The production, which had a long run at the Lyric theater, New York, was made by the authority of the Federal government, and is a complete portrayal of every branch of our military service. The scenes showing "Our Boys" drilling, playing in camp, and finally on active service in Mexico, are said to be most thrilling, and that portion of the film relating to the naval arm of the service contains numerous scenes that have never been shown before. There are no "dry spots" in the production, the interest being sustained throughout. Interposed in the picture are touches of comedy, pathos and human interest—flashes that bring a smile to the lips, or a tear to the eye.

William H. Kemble.

William H. Kemble, when interviewed last week by a representative of MOTOGRAPHY, spoke enthusiastically of "America Preparing."

"I believe that we have a picture that every American has been waiting to see, and one that every American will insist on seeing. Aside from the intrinsic entertainment value of the production, there are a number of other elements which will enter largely into the success of the picture," he said. "To begin with, almost every newspaper and magazine in the country has been urging preparedness for over a year. That their work has borne ample fruit may be seen in the great parades for preparedness which have taken place all over America—spontaneous demands for the adequate protection of our country. Over 5,000,000 men have marched in these parades, I am told. How many more times this number of people will want to see what they are advocating, with their own eyes.

"Further," continued Mr. Kemble, "the recent mobilization of our entire National Guard, and the transporting of so many units of it into Mexico for active service, scenes which are fully shown in 'America Preparing,' has served to heighten interest in our production. I have been told many people had recognized a son, or a brother, or a sweetheart, on the screen which the picture was being shown at the Lyric theater. All in all, I do not believe a more timely or a more appealing subject has ever been presented to the American people.

"Following our run at the Lyric theater," Mr. Kemble went on, "it was determined to send out a number of road companies to exhibit the picture throughout the country. To this end, negotiations were entered into with the Shuberts and their allied interests, for bookings in their theaters. When we decided to state-right the picture, however, we thought that it would be fairer to the man who bought the rights to a state, to let him have untouched territory. We have already received a large number of requests for bookings from theaters all over the country. These applications will be turned over to the exchanges which secure the territories in which these theaters are located.

"Our opening in New York City, at the Lyric theater," Mr. Kemble continued, "was witnessed by perhaps the most representative gathering ever seen at a Broadway opening. Senators, congressmen, ambassadors, the military attaches of all the foreign embassies, and a number of high government officials were present at our opening, besides many prominent film people. I have received any number of laudatory letters praising 'America Preparing,' from those who have seen it. One that I prized very highly I received from Thomas H. Ince, the producer of 'Civilization,' in which he praises the picture greatly, 'although,' to quote him, 'I am for peace and you for preparedness.'"

Just at the present time every newspaper in the country is constantly keeping before the public the subject of preparedness. All these news stories and editorials are really just so much advertising for the Kemble Film's remarkable "America Preparing" pictures.

Migrating Players Feted

The directors, actors and actresses who recently reached Universal City from the eastern studios of the company, were tendered a reception and dance by the leading players at the Big U plant. The function took place in the ballroom of the Ebell Club, Los Angeles, on Saturday night, August 5. A number of the leading players from the other studios were among the guests of honor, in order that the newly arrived Universalites may become better acquainted with the filmologists of the Pacific Coast studios.

The committee in charge of the affair consisted of Myrtle Gonzalez, Lois Weber, Marie Walcamp, Cleo Madison, Herbert Rawlinson, Lon Chaney and Jack Holt.

William Burress, now an actor in William Fox photoplays, once held down a telegraph key for the Pennsylvania Railroad, and he has a long list of stories.

He tells one about a section foreman at a junction on the road, who used to give minute descriptions of everything he could think of, in his reports to the supervisor. The latter was a kindly old soul, but he objected to reading pages of inconsequential matter, the meat of which might have been put into a short paragraph.

"Make 'em short!" the supervisor ordered. "You're not writing a history of railroading."

One week after the foreman received this order, came a great flood. The report said:

"Mr. Supervisor: The river is where the railroad was. Yours truly."

"Pillars of Society"

Triangle-Fine Arts Adaptation of Ibsen Play. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

HENRY WALTHALL'S first appearance in a Triangle offering is made in a film adaptation of Ibsen's "Pillars of Society," a play in which the famous dramatist scores hypocrisy. Mr. Walthall's acting in the role of Karsten Bernick, who has done much to further the position of his house in the community at the expense of another's good name, is one of the features of this interest compelling picture.

Karsten learns that "the Indian Girl" is afire.

Karsten after considering himself a "Pillar of Society" for years spent in jealously guarding his name finally admits the truth of his wife's statement that "the pillars of society are Truth and Freedom." From the time he left Paris and a rather Bohemian life, Karsten has held himself off from both Truth and Freedom. His fortune and his position were built on lies, and he has known no freedom from a terrible fear that his intimacy with a notorious actress will become known to his brother "Pillars" and the community whose welfare he feels is dependent upon his fine example.

It is very probable that the play loses something in dramatic effect in being brought to the screen as it here is, but that has nothing to do with the fact that this picture is interesting. The production is remarkably good and so, too, is the acting in all cases. The play, laid in Norway, has an impressive atmosphere, the selection of types, locations and interior settings showing great care and fine judgment on the part of the director, R. A. Walsh.

Mary Alden's characterization of Lona Tennesen, is excellent, and George Beranger really lives the part of Johan Tonnesen, the young man whose visit to the actress to plead for Karsten is the signal for the hypocrits in the community to shun him, and Karsten fails to clear his name until Lona, and fate, open his eyes to the truth.

The cast is completed by Olga Gray, Jaunita Archer and Josephine B. Crowel. The story and the characters are very real. It is pleasing and refreshing to witness a play in which a theme of this type receives real dramatic treatment and whose characters are so true to popular conceptions.

"The Fugitive"

Pathe Gold Rooster Play an Admirable Drama. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

"THE FUGITIVE," the first Thanhouser production released on Pathe's Gold Rooster Program, is an artistic and effective visualization of a story of ingenious conceit and excellent construction. A young woman makes a successful escape to a distant city following a murder committed by her sister in self defense and thereby makes herself a fugitive from justice, as evidence conclusively points to her as the guilty person.

Then a series of circumstances, all convincing and dramatically sound, bring about her arrest and the manner in which the play ends remains a question to the spectator until the actual exposition. This story presents little that is commonplace either in situations or handling and vast credit is due the author, Philip Lonergan.

"The Fugitive" is perhaps the finest original scenario Mr. Lonergan has turned out. The careful building of incidents and characters testify to his ability and experience in scenario construction and the plot he invented was splendid material on which to expend his best efforts and skill.

During the girl's absence from New York the older sister dies and as a consequence the suspect is held firmly in the net which a police official, whose reputation is at stake, throws about her. She is now happily married and the clue which leads to her arrest comes through her husband's visit to New York. His watch is stolen and a picture inside the case supplies the police official with information he immediately makes use of.

To make the ending ring true as it does required an amount of skill. A former lover of the girl accepts the blame for the crime. Under ordinary circumstances this ending would give rise to much question. It might be considered a convenient way out of a difficulty. Nevertheless, the suspense is carried right up to the last scene and in this case the incident is perfectly satisfactory.

A better directed picture never came from the Thanhouser studio. Frederick Sullivan deserves to share largely in the praise this offering merits. He produced the piece with rare good judgment and high effect.

Florence La Badie heads a cast whose every member plays well. The story puts no great burden upon any of the players. Miss La Badie, though, has ample opportunity to appear to advantage as a dramatic actress. George Marlo, Ethyle Cook and Hector Dion have the other important parts.

"The Secret of the Submarine"

Chapters 11 and 12 of the American Serial. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

"HOOK" BARNACLE again proves himself the guardian angel of the frequently endangered Cleo and Hope in this serial and to begin chapter eleven, he rescues them from the quicksand into which events of chapter ten had placed them. In this role George Clancy has a characterization consistently good and always amusing throughout the serial.

Once more safe, the two now must find the book mentioned as containing the secret. They have learned its name and know who bought it. Therefore it seems that their troubles will soon end. However, Romero, the purchaser, declares that he lost the volume in the mountains, and again their hopes are dashed.

The conspirators are having adventures, in the meantime. The Russian Olga and Morten, her aid, are captured by

Then, to complicate the situation further, the plan of Hope and Cleo to marry is disturbed by the claim of another girl, Inez, that Hope has promised to marry her.

In chapter twelve, further complications arise. Hope explains the circumstances under which he became engaged to Inez and Cleo begs that he keep his word and marry Inez. He goes back to the city, where he learns that he has inherited a fortune from a man whose life he once saved.

In the meantime Olga and Morton have been kidnaped by bandits. And Cleo, aided by "Hook," continues her search for the book.

The complications introduced will doubtless quicken the interest in the serial. The photography continues to be very good.

"Suspended Animation"

Episode Fourteen of "Mysteries of Myra." Released July 24. Reviewed by George W. Graves

THIS episode is the next to the last of the serial. It represents in itself the complete line of appeal of the "Mysteries of Myra," in respect of story interest and acting as well as of well arranged settings and the excellent photographic workmanship, which has been characteristic largely of the whole serial. In entertaining value Episode 14 stands very high, even to one who has not been systematically following the serial.

"Suspended Animation" deals with a deception practiced upon the Grand Master by Varney and his friend, to whom the Master's intended murder of Myra is revolting. This is done by bringing Myra into a state of suspended animation, which leads the Master to believe her dead. The Black Master's wrath on discovering that he has been tricked results in the death of Varney's friend.

With the help of blindfolded psychic, Alden and Mrs. Maynard are guided to Myra's side, where they are further instructed by the psychic as to the cause of the girl's apparent lifelessness. This enables Dr. Alden to remove the cause and bring the girl to her normal state.

"Florence Rose Fashions"

First Two Fashion Pictures on Pathe Program. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

THE first two fashion reels produced by Florence Rose have been completed and will shortly be released by Pathe as the "Florence Rose Fashions." The two reels were shown for review at the Pathe Exchange and after seeing them a mere man can say little more than that the models who displayed the gowns were good looking and the gowns themselves quite beautiful.

The reviewer approached the showing, as he now approaches the business of writing the review, entertaining grave doubts as to his ability and qualifications to adequately cover the assignment. He further confesses that such things as Pailettes, Underbodices, Medallions, Fillet Designs, mean absolutely nothing to him. Yet here are some notes written from the screen which fairly teem with such terms and the conviction grows stronger that the reader who would learn more than that these are fashion pictures, well photographed, will be justly disappointed that the assignment was not given to the keen and observant Genevieve Harris, whose superiority for the task is as obvious as it is eminent.

This much can be said: the pictures display a variety of gowns, suits and other articles of feminine apparel, including some millinery such as will send countless numbers of women picturegoers into ecstasies of delight. An attempt was made to introduce these displays in a story written around a society girl, but it was not a very serious attempt, nor is there any semblance of a story in the first two reels.

"A Day with Betty Young" is the title. We, however, refuse to take the title seriously because then we would find it hard to admire Betty, for the simple reason that she and her friends do nothing but examine and approve one another's clothes all day long. Anybody that thought about clothes and nothing else all day would soon become both tired and tiresome and our observations tell us that Betty is neither.

If this is to be a review, at least one point must be criticised, so here goes: The young woman in riding costume who mounts the horse unassisted does so amateurishly.

"Common Ground"

Paramount Offers Lasky Production with Marie Doro. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

"COMMON GROUND" is a melodramatic romance dealing with a reformer, a girl living in the slums and the much advertised men higher up. Marie Doro is the girl, Thomas Meighan the judge who extends a helping hand to unfortunate women, and Theodore Roberts is the politician who enjoys the respect of the community and lives in luxury on the profits of white slavery, so there is no question about the effectiveness of the acting.

William C. De Mille directed the production. It is a good production, there being the usual appropriate Lasky settings and splendid photography. Capable players and a good production, however, in this case fail to make "Common Ground" an impressive picture, for the simple reason that the story is unnatural and there are many inconsistent incidents. Frankly, it is not a good play, but this does not mean that "Common Ground" is a poor offering. In most cases it will entertain, for its action is interesting despite the fact that it moves slowly.

Marie Doro is "The Kid." She works in an artificial flower factory and becomes acquainted with Judge Evans, of the night court, when he takes up his residence in the slums to study conditions and fight the "ring" which fosters white slavery. The father of his fiancee is the man higher up, but this is not discovered by Evans until he has been discredited by the "ring" and forced to resign from the bench.

After he is "framed" he is ill and the Kid nurses him, though why a wealthy man should remain in a cheap tenement when he owns a beautiful farm is more than we can understand. There are other things which puzzled us, but they are too many to be mentioned here. In this picture we look at the seamy side of life, but for all of that it has entertainment value.

Miss Doro wears rags most of the time but she is beautiful just the same. Thomas Maighan and Theodore Roberts make their parts as real as possible under the circumstances. Mary Mersch, Horace Carpenter, Florence Smythe and Mrs. Lewis McCord appear in the picture.

"Tom and Jerry" Comedies

Numbers Four and Five of the Emerald Film Series. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

"TOM and Jerry in a Fog" and "Tom and Jerry Kidnaped" are the titles of four and five of the series of two-reel comedies being directed by Frederick J. Ireland and featuring Thomas Keesy and Charles Huntington. These contain further adventures of the two pals, whose chief delight is to run away from their watchful wives and have a bit of fun.

In number four, Tom and Jerry plan to go to a masquerade party. They inform all their lady friends that they will appear in the guise of two red devils. Their wives accidentally learn of their plans and of the costumes they will wear. But the costumes are stolen while being delivered to Tom and Jerry and they have to substitute another disguise.

At the party, the two thieves appear as the red devils, and are mistaken for Tom and Jerry. This leads to much excitement for the thieves, since not only are Mrs. Tom and Mrs. Jerry there, but the jealous husband of the French adventuress. But Tom and Jerry also have their troubles, for when the police arrive, searching for the thieves, to protect themselves, the robbers force Tom and Jerry to don the red devil suits, and as a result they are arrested, to be unmasked before their angry wives.

"Tom and Jerry Kidnaped" contains much excitement when the aforementioned jealous husband of the French woman comes to the office of Tom and Jerry, is thrown out, and plans revenge. He leads his enemies into a trap, with the aid of some of his fellowmen, binds and gags them and threatens to drown them. At last they are rescued by the French woman, only to fall into the hands of their angry wives.

There are many excellent points about these comedies. The featured players are clever and are gifted with personality. Their work is spirited and gets across well. The action is brisk and free from "slapstick" tactics. The photography is good, though a trifle uneven.

of the drama, the story is clear and interesting. The acting is good and the photography and settings beautiful.

Nita Davis and E. Forrest Taylor have the leading roles. Miss Davis is Mary Martin, a girl who, while returning from school at a Christmas vacation, is accidentally left by the night train at a water station near a rough western village. Frightened, the girl wanders to a cabin at the edge of the town. It happens to be a saloon where a group of ranchers are celebrating. Among them is one of a better class, Phillip Dean (E. Forrest Taylor), a rich man's son disinherited because of his wildness. Phillip protects the girl and takes her into the mountains with him. Her trust awakens his better nature, and he arranges for her safe return home.

The experience of the night has made a lasting impression on the two. A year later the girl is dreaming of the man who saved her and with whom she has fallen in love. Then Phillip appears to claim her, having renounced his old life for her sake.

that is needed, sometimes even giving animation to inanimate objects lying about the premises. Most of us are acquainted with Chaplin as a comic entertainer without rival in the field of broad farce, but if we had been told that even he could hold forth alone for two reels, we might have doubted its possibility. But this, Chaplin does and it is an unprecedented feat in pictures. Such a role drains upon all the resources of an actor. There is not much doubt that this is the most exacting role the comedian ever essayed.

Charlie Chaplin's bottomless well of originality is an ever-increasing source of wonder. In his clever mind originated the ridiculously funny bits of action which inhere in this film, and he is director as well. His eccentric ways are therefore allowed free sway. Again the absence of the celebrated Chaplin costume does not detract, though we hope that he will not permanently lay off his broad-beamed sabots and roomy trousers.

As the first scene flashes on the screen we see Charlie, decked out in a silk hat, opera coat and other fineries swinging up to the curb in his taxi. The nonsense starts without delay, for "our hero," much the worse for his night's revelry, gets hopelessly entangled in the intricate mechanism of the taxi door, and flounders around aimlessly for a while before he is ready to settle with his impassive chauffeur.

Having lost his key, Charlie enters via the window, stepping into a fish globe in the process. Once inside, he discovers the missing key and immediately climbs out again, killing some more fish, and enters his domicile in a manner befitting a gentleman. Then some rugs on a slippery floor lay Charlie at length a number of times until he learns through the hard knocks of experience to walk on something more solid. Other obstacles to his harmony are a couple of fierce-looking animal rugs, a revolving table with an elusive wine decanter upon it, a hat tree, a stuffed bear, and still other innocent fixtures and ornaments too numerous to mention.

Having fought his battles with everything on the first floor, Charlie decides to retire, achieving some really clever acrobatic stunts on a cushioned pair of stairs. Not being able to mount the steep incline even with the aid of a mountain climbers' outfit, Charlie at last climbs upon the projections of the hat tree. On the second floor, a capricious wall bed takes the offensive and after stoutly resisting all of its owner's frantic attempts to bring it into subjection, leaves him sore and out of breath. Then, wandering into the bathroom, and injudiciously tampering with the sensitive parts of a needle shower, Charlie suffers for this sin. Finally, seeking undisturbed quietude within the narrow precincts of that familiar poreclain receptacle so often employed in comedies, Charlie sinks into blissful sleep, and the midnight frolic ends.

Blue Ribbon Feature Released July 31 by V-L-S-E. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

LILLIAN WALKER'S latest appearance on the V. L. S. E. program is in the role of an Eastern society girl with a strong dislike for the West, but she is converted. It takes five reels to make Ann realize that the West is the only good place to live and the events which lead up to the conversion do not make the reels very stirring or impressive.

The story is an adaptation from the novel "Hesper" by Hamlin Garland. The attitude of the play is that the outdoor life in the West is so far superior to the existence in busy New York that every sane person ought to leave the latter place and reside in a mining town. The romance on which the story turns is lacking in the vitality necessary to give it prominence over a theme whose presence, we believe, was never intended by the author.

Ann reluctantly decides to accompany her brother, who is in poor health, on a visit to some relations in the mountains of the West. She meets Rob Raymond, a ranch foreman, and though he is greatly attracted by her, Ann treats him very coolly. Her brother admires Rob very much and after he leaves to make a start in some other line of endeavor the brother follows. In Sky Town the brother is taken ill and Ann feels that her place is with him. Accordingly she starts out in spite of the protestations of her cousins.

There is a strike brewing among the miners at Sky Town and shortly after her arrival there things become serious. About this time we are told that the glory of the mountains reflect in Ann's growing interest in Rob, or words to that effect. The strikers are now armed and they prepare to meet the attack of the sheriff's posse which the mine owners are sending. Rob and his business partner kidnap the leader and send a telegram to the governor, telling him to send the militia. A few days later a nwspaper is received. In big headlines it states that a bloody encounter betwen strikers and a sheriff's posse was prevented by one man. Also that Rob Raymond is the hero of the hour. Ann returns to New York, but one day she gets a vision of the grand country out West and she sends word to Rob to come and take her back.

Wilfred North directed the production. It was not produced in especially picturesque country despite the fact that the story's greatest opportunities are in its pictorial possibilities. The direction of the action is good throughout and this, coupled with the interesting performances rendered by the players make "Hesper of the Mountains" an acceptable offering.

Lillian Walker and Evart Overton are supported by Donald Hall, Denton Vane, Donald MacBride, Robert Gaillard and Rose Tapley.

"Hulda From Holland"

Famous Players-Paramount with Mary Pickford. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

IT IS a matter of months since Paramount has offered exhibitors so attractive a picture as "Hulda from Holland," for the simple reason that months have passed since the release of Mary Pickford's last picture. Whether or not it is merely a bearing out of the truth of "absence makes the heart grow fonder" we do not know, but it is a fact that Mary Pickford as the Dutch girl seemed more charming than ever and judging by the comments of those within hearing distance of the writer, the Monday afternoon audience at the Strand theater felt the same way about it.

Apparently it makes no difference whether the character is Japanese, Italian, Dutch, or whatever, as long as Miss Pickford interprets it said character is determined to romp away with the affections of the spectator. Hulda's charm is as mighty as the others and there is no denying it. She leaves Holland with her little brothers to live here in America with her uncle.

The uncle has a high regard for his farm, refusing to sell out to a railroad company. The president of the company has tried his powers of persuasion on Uncle Peter to no avail whatever.

When he learns that Peter's niece has come to America and that she is the apple of the old Dutchman's eye he evolves a scheme. His son, who has been disinherited, is sent for and promised ten thousand dollars if he succeeds in making Hulda love him enough to induce her uncle to sell to his father's concern.

Allan has already met Hulda and he consequently holds such a proposition as being very attractive. Allan sets out for Pennsylvania and Uncle Peter's farm. He takes them into his confidence and immediately a telegram is sent to the father telling him to come up there as Peter is ready to sell. Walton arrives and after the business has been completed he congratulates Allan but is very angry when he is told that his son's marriage to Hulda was necessary to the accomplishment of the deal. But it is not long before he, like everybody else, falls under the spell of Hulda's charm.

John Powers plays opposite Miss Pickford very commendably, and Frank Losee gives a most impressive performance as the railroad magnate. Uncle Peter is remarkably well played by Russell Bassett and the boy who appears as Hulda's youngest brother is one of the greatest child actors we have ever seen.

"Hulda from Holland" is an excellently directed production. Too much praise could hardly be accorded John B. O'Brien for the highly artistic manner in which he produced this story.

"Judith of the Cumberlands"

Five-Reel Signal Mutual Star Production with Helen Holmes. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS picturization of Alice MacGowan's well known novel of the Cumberland mountains, featuring Helen Holmes in the title role, has been directed by J. P. McGowan with many of the players who appeared in "The Girl and The Game" serial and the "Whispering Smith" stories. Very beautiful and interesting settings have been given the story, and both acting and directing give an impression of sincerity and force. The story itself is full of action. Advantage has been taken of this without the introduction of any forced "thrills." The atmosphere is realistic and interesting.

The treatment of the subtitles is pleasing, for many of them are superimposed on backgrounds of beautiful mountain scenery. A number of them are well selected from the novel and aid in portraying the characters. This is true of the speeches given the heroine. Helen Holmes is especially good as the spirited Judith.

Judith, a mountain girl, becomes interested in Creed Bonbright, a young lawyer who formerly had been a resident of the mountain region but who had been educated in the city. Judith's cousins own a still and are engaged in an illegal traffic in whiskey. When Creed begins his campaign of teaching the mountaineers respect for the law, Judith's cousins, led by Blatch, decide to drive him from the country.

Blatch wishes to marry Judith, and his hatred of Creed is the greater because he knows the young lawyer has won Judith's love.

Most of the story shows the exciting events in the struggle between the two factions, with Judith trying whenever she can to aid Creed. At last, Creed is accused of the murder of Blatch, while the latter is really unharmed and hiding in the mountains. A mob of mountaineers plan to lead Creed into the mountains and kill him. But, through the interference of Judith, Creed is warned and Blatch instead caught in his own trap and killed.

On the whole, this is a good, stirring story, which will please almost any audience. The cast of players includes Leo D. Maloney as Creed, Paul C. Hurst as Blatch. Thomas G. Lingham, William Brunton, Clara Mosher, Harry Lloyd, Sam Morje and G. H. Wisscussen.

"Worth While"

Essanay Three-Act Drama Released August 12. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

A POINT of interest in this picture is the introduction of scenes photographed about and within the walls of the state penitentiary at Joliet, Ill. In the story, the hero is sent to prison wrongfully, and this gives occasion for a number of scnes showing the life of the convicts there, and for the introduction of important members of the official staff. This realism is a bit out of the ordinary and aids a story which is in itself of average value.

Bryant Washburn and Marguerite Clayton have the leading roles, of Jack Thomas and his ward, Elsa. The girl, the daughter of a dead comrade of Thomas', when she grows up falls in love with her guardian. Randolph Murray, a man much her senior and for whom she cares not at all, is in love with her and when she refuses his proposal, he determines to have revenge upon the girl and upon Thomas. He seems to have little difficulty in ruining Thomas financially, and after that he has the girl accused of stealing a valuable ring. To save Elsa, Thomas takes the suspicion upon himself, is convicted and sent to prison.

Elsa determines to save the man she loves by tricking Murray into a confession of the plot. She obtains a position in his office, pretends to transfer her affections to him, and in this way leads him into the trap. His confession, overheard, releases Thomas.

While very improbable, the story is told in a swift fashion which carries the interest. The acting is good and the photography clear. John Cossar and Patrick Cole have important roles.

"Faith's Reward"

Knickerbocker Star Feature Released by General Film. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

THIS Knickerbocker Star Feature released on the General Program tells the story of a westerner who strikes gold and sets out to find the girl of his dreams. He has seen her once and he is fortunate to find her in the city and unfortunate enough to marry her. Henry King is the dreamer whose eyes are opened. Mr. King also directed the picture which was produced by H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer.

"Faith's Reward" is well produced and the photography is very good, which is the usual thing with offerings from this studio. The story is conventional to a degree but it succeeds in holding the attention, so "Faith's Reward" may be said to be a good program offering.

Marguerite Nichols has a sympathetic role and she makes much of it, though the part is not large. She is Belle, the girl whose faith in Haynes is rewarded when he returns to the home town after his wife, who has married him for his wealth which is now gone, declares that she does not love him and that she desires a divorce. The divorce is obtained and Belle promises to marry Haynes, who is much the wiser for his experience.

Ida Van Tine appears as Grace Vareive, who finds little happiness with Haynes. Grace is forced into the marriage by her mother and consequently the part is not an unsympathetic one. Mollie McConnell and Fred Whitman complete the cast. Though in no way remarkable, this story is consistent and it is fairly well told.

"Under Two Flags"

Six-Reel Fox Drama Features Theda Bara. Released July 31. Reviewed by George W. Graves

ALTHOUGH its name may so suggest, this picture is not a raging war drama relying largely on battle scenes for its power—the kind of subject that many is tiring of. It has to do with the happenings in a military camp in Algeria, the outstanding appeal to the sympathies being a girl's sacrifice for the man to whom she knows she can never be anything.

The story gives Theda Bara ample opportunity to bear witness to the fact that her powers do not all lie in the direction of the vampire role. We get an entirely new view of this star in "Under Two Flags," one which is illumined by sparkling gems of acting, both in light-hearted girlish moods and in those which show forth the most sternly emotional moments of a woman's life. The far-famed dramatic actress also provides us with a thrill when she jumps from a cliff into a body of water below, and numerous other thrills in riding horseback, falling from her mount, etc.

The production was handled by J. Gordon Edwards in a very capable manner. Desert scenes are very realistic, but a sand storm, introduced merely by way of scenic effect, falls short of its mark. The costumes and outfit of the Arabian Emir's band smack of the true eastern atmosphere.

Bertie Cecil, the oldest son of the Viscount Royalieu, takes upon himself the blame for his dissolute younger brother's crime and flees the country. Coming to Algeria, under an assumed name, he joins the ranks of the French army as a private. Because of help which Bertie renders the wife of an Arabian Emir who has been abducted by the colonel in charge of the barracks, the Marquis de Chateauroye, he incurs the latter's lasting hatred. Bertie unconsciously wins the admiration and love of Cigarette, the "daughter of the regiment."

In the course of time Venetia, Cecil's lover from childhood, and Berkeley, his brother, arrive in the French barracks as members of a distinguished English touring party. Bertie's intimacy with Venetia excites Cigarette's jealousy and she tries to kill this intruder, an attempt which conscience overcomes. Finally, when Chateauroye insults Venetia, the long pent up animosity of both men bursts forth and they have a terrible struggle. As a result Bertie is sentenced to be shot for attacking his superior.

Venetia, being a friend of the Marshal of France, explains the situation to him through a letter which Cigarette carries to him on her swift horse. Cigarette obtains a reprieve from the marshal, but is delayed by the Arabs on her return. She arrives at the barracks just as the firing squad is taking aim and dashes in front of them, only to receive the volley of bullets intended for Bertie. Then the story closes with the happiness of Venetia and Bertie and the adjustment of the difficulty caused by Berkeley.

"Who's Guilty?"

"The Goad of Jealousy" and "The Irony of Justice." Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

JEALOUSY and justice perverted by wealth are the themes of the last two releases in the immensely popular "Who's Guilty?" series produced by the Arrow Film Corporation and released by Pathe. In the case of both of these dramas the author seems to have concentrated upon dramatic effect more than a real serious treatment of the themes in hand. Both are interesting two-reel screen dramas but neither succeeds in creating a very lasting impression as is the case with a number of the previous releases.

"The Goad of Jealousy" is the thirteenth in the series. It is notable for the number of excellent emotional scenes presented to Anna Nilsson as the jealous wife, and Miss Nilsson acts the part very forcefully. One particularly good scene is that in which Olive becomes hysterical after accusing her husband of treating one of the women members of his physical culture class too familiarly.

The production of this story is also very remarkable. In staging and direction "The Goad of Jealousy" compares favorably with any of its predecessors in the series. The story tells of a young woman who simply cannot conquer the passion of jealousy. Her husband, a part admirably rendered by Tom Moore, maintains a well known physical culture institute and he exercises great patience with his wife, who is continually accusing him of unfaithfulness. When she has a dictaphone installed in his office, however, he gives way to anger and threatens to leave Olive. She believes him, and in despair takes an overdose of some powerful drug. He returns in a short time and finds her dead.

The release which closes this series is entitled "The Irony of Justice." The story tells of a young man who is victimized by a wealthy man, whose enmity he incurs and, is sent to jail for three years on a trumped-up charge. After his release he breaks into a house and strikes the man who has lured his sister to the house. Tom pleads guilty in order to protect his sister from injury to her good name and his past record figures in the maximum penalty for the offense, which is twenty years.

"The Irony of Justice" is not altogether convincing. It is rather difficult to have a man sent to prison for throwing a stone which connects with another man's eye before it spends its force. The story, however, is splendidly acted and produced. There is little doubt as to its ability to please the countless picturegoers who have followed the remarkable "Who's Guilty?" series, which when all is said and done has offered many very admirable and unusual dramas.

"The Stronger Love"

Vivian Martin Featured in Morosco-Paramount Production. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

A PICTURE of rare pictorial beauty is "The Stronger Love," in which Vivian Martin is seen for the first time as a Morosco star. In fact, beauty is the foundation on which the appeal of the offering must stand. The play is first of all a vehicle for Miss Martin and the spectator is treated to beauty in the close-ups as well as in the long views wherein the characters are set against mountain scenery of great charm and grandeur.

Miss Martin is Nell Serviss, the girl around whom a story of love and mountain feuds are built. It is an appealing romance dealing with two very human characters. These characters are Nell and her cousin Jim Serviss. The girl has two cousins and because of their frequent disputes the Widow Serviss advises Nell to make up her mind to marry one or the other, which is the only way to put an end to the trouble. Nell decides that if she must marry she would rather have Jim.

Tom drinks a lot. He is drunk more than half the time and he tries to force his attentions on Nell. Fortunately for her Jim is not far away whenever this happens and on three occasions Tom is knocked down by his brother.

On the other side of the mountain the Rutherfords live. Rolf Rutherford left the mountain years before and he is now a geologist and he returns to his home in search of radium. He desires to keep his identity from the Serviss family, not wishing to have his work interrupted by manifestations of the feud existing between the Rutherfords and the Serviss people.

He and Nell become acquainted and a strong friendship develops. Jim suspects him of being a "revenooer," so when Jim's still is burned he immediately blames the stranger. A conference is held at which it is decided to attack the Rutherford cabin. Nell hurries on ahead to warn her friend. When the door of the cabin is broken down Nell steps before the crowd and says she loves the stranger and will marry him. Jim is broken-hearted but he manfully accepts the inevitable. But a few moments later Nell joins him and explains that she only did that to save Rolf and that she reckons she belongs in the mountains with him.

Frank Lloyd plays the heavy role in a quite satisfactory manner. Mr. Lloyd deserves greater praise, however, for selecting such grand locations and directing the production of the piece so excellently. "The Stronger Love" contains a deal of charm. The story is pleasant, the production is magnificent and the star very charming.

Edward Peil does splendidly as Jim Serviss. Jack Livingston, Alice Knowland, Herbert Standing, John McKinnon and Louise A. Emmons make up the balance of a good cast. The photography is a credit to James Van Trees and an important element in the enjoyment this offering affords.

"The Woman's Fight"

Pathe Gold Rooster Play Produced by Herbert Blache. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

THE pleasing feature of this Popular Plays and Players production is the performance of Geraldine O'Brien, who enacts the role of the much abused women—she is harassed by men, women and fate. Miss O'Brien plays the part with fine spirit, great sincerity and an amount of acting ability. Moreover, Miss O'Brien's personality is forceful and the fine points mentioned are the more impressive by virtue of this.

Herbert Blache produced "The Woman's Fight" from a story by Aaron Hoffman. "The Woman's Fight" is an apt title for the picture. Kathleen fights with a girl at the shop where she works, she fights the boss, who becomes too demonstrative when he tries to calm her, and with this start she continues to fight practically every character appearing in the play. Sex appeal is the dominating element and as none of the scenes could be called offensive, there seems to be little doubt that the picture will gain popularity. It is frank melodrama and as a story it can be considered only as being crude in all the developments which have not become honored by time and polished by wear.

Kathleen is discharged because she resents the advances of the manager or proprietor of the shop. She is unable to find other employment for the reason that the former employer has her blacklisted, which, by the way, is a mighty poor reason because no such thing exists in Kathleen's trade. However, she is taken in by a woman of the streets and shortly after becomes the companion of a notorious crook named "Red" Palmer.

Both are arrested and convicted of theft. Kathleen escapes from the detention house and then her path crosses that of a minister. The minister is aware of the fact that she was not averse to picking a pocket now and again, since she met him while trying to take his watch. Kathleen reforms and she is living happily with her husband, the minister, when Palmer again enters her life. He forces her to give him money. Palmer's demands for money grow greater and his daring in attempting to secure more causes his death after a confession which reconciles the minister to his wife, whose past has become known to him.

Thurlow Bergen is co-starred with Miss O'Brien and the crook part is another well rendered character. The scenes laid in the detention house are very realistic. Numbers of women prisoners appear and some exciting action takes place in this portion of the play.

"The Gold Ship"

Two-Reel Selig Drama Released August 7. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

AS its title suggests, this is a romantic tale, the settings, aboard an old sailing vessel, making an appeal to the imagination. With a simple plot, which nevertheless gives opportunity for swift action and for suspense and a few thrills, the offering is an entertaining one.

Frank Beal directed the play from a story by James Oliver Curwood. It deals with a mutiny among the sailors on a ship which is carrying a heavy assignment of gold, and the fight put up against them by the captain of the ship, a crippled boy whom he had befriended, and the cook's young daughter, who is in love with the captain. Harry Mestayer, Sidney Smith and Edith Johnson play these roles.

The sight of the wealth carried by the ship arouses the cupidity of the leader of the crew. One night the men attack the captain. He and the cook, who remains loyal, are overcome by the mutinous sailors, but Mary, aided by Joe, the crippled boy, evade them and send up rockets to call help. Joe and Mary also manage to guard the valuable cargo until the attention of a passing ship is won. Then the frightened mutineers escape in one of the life boats, and the rescuers from the other ship revive the captain and the cook.

The photography is good throughout. The direction of the story brings out its dramatic value.

"CIVILIZATION" TO MOVE

Probable That an Ince Playhouse Will Be Established in New York to Show This and Revival of Other Ince Productions

It is probable that the announcement of an Ince playhouse in New York will be made in the near future, as "Civilization" will have to leave the Criterion on September 1 to make room for a new play in which George Arliss is to appear, which had been booked for September before it was realized that after its two hundredth performance "Civilization" would be as popular as ever. Mr. Ince's plans embrace the revival in 1917 of several of the most successful Ince productions such as "The Wrath of the Gods," "An Alien," and "Gettysburg," as hundreds of requests have been made for these productions.

Six more experts have been engaged to exploit "Civilization," and although some of the big firms which had Mr. Ince's order for pictorial printing will be working night and day for another month, the total number of sheets of pictorial work already shipped to the different state rights purchasers is in the millions, and Mr. Ince remarked that by Labor Day it will be possible to cover six city blocks with "Civilization's" wall paper alone, without once duplicating a single sheet.

The premier midwest presentation of "Civilization" will be presented in Minneapolis the last week in August by the Supreme Feature Film Company, of which the active members are Harry Rathner and M. H. Conhaim. Mr. Rathner has also purchased the rights of this film for five other states besides Minnesota and contemplates opening "Civilization" in fourteen cities during the months of September and October.

The stockholders of the ten million dollar opera house in Buenos Aires have sent their special representative to consummate the final arrangements for the presentation of "Civilization." The directors state that the scale of prices will be $25 to $100 for the boxes, each seating from four to six persons, while the orchestra or parterre which seats 850 persons is scheduled at $5 throughout. The upper gallery or sixth balcony provides the cheapest seats, half selling at $2 and the other half at $1 a seat.

Victor L. Schertzinger, composer of the score for "Civilization," left for California last week, where he will compose the music for Mr. Ince's forthcoming 1917 film spectacle.

The Columbia Graphophone Company have arranged with Thomas H. Ince to make phonograph records of Victor L. Schertzinger's "Peace Song," with words by Mr. Ince, and the "Civilization March."

The "Peace Song" has been put out in sheet music form with an attractive cover showing seven of the most interesting scenes from the play, and is selling rapidly at twenty-five cents a copy.

Second Minter Play

Little Mary Miles Minter is doing strenuous work in filming "Dulcie's Adventure," under the direction of James Kirkwood. They have been doing a great deal of location work, leaving the studio early in the morning and returning after nightfall.

Pathe for some time has been releasing only one five-reel feature a month. Now it is announced there will be an increase to three a month.

The Pathe News, the well-known motion picture newspaper, now boasts of being shown in every theater but two on Broadway, New York.

ABOUT BUDDING PLAYS, AND NEWS OF THE TRADE

Metro's Plans for Early Fall

Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet," Played by Bushman and Bayne and Powerful Cast, Completed Into Beautiful Sunshine Story

METRO'S early fall plans include many important productions and the appearance of some of the world's most famous stars of both the speaking stage and the screen.

Ethel Barrymore will begin work in about two weeks in a picturization of "The Awakening of Helena Ritchie." In addition to her work in the Metro studios Miss Barrymore will also be seen in a new play on Broadway.

Upon the completion of "Romeo and Juliet," Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne will begin work on the serial, "The Chain of Evil," to be released in fourteen two-reel episodes, probably at the rate of two a month.

Emily Stevens will begin work immediately on a five-part production, "Capital Punishment."

William Nigh and Irene Howley will be co-stars in a story as yet unnamed, written by Mr. Nigh.

Mabel Taliaferro, who has just completed the final scenes in "God's Half Acre," will begin on a new big feature written by Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf.

Lionel Barrymore, who is nearing the final scenes in "The Upheaval," will start at once on a picturization of the short story, "The Woolworth Diamonds," by Hugh C. Weir.

Mme. Petrova is now at work on a new feature, as yet unnamed, which she wrote herself. Harold Lockwood and May Allison are at work in the Metro-Yorke western studios at Hollywood, California, in "Mister 44."

Edmund Breese, supported by Ormi Hawley, Clifford Bruce and Evelyn Brent, is at work on a story of the Maine Logging camps called "The Weakness of Strength."

In addition to these multiple reel productions Metro has arranged to increase its program with more high-class and refined one-reel comedies, three of which will be released weekly, beginning this fall. The stars appearing in these comedies, include Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, Max Figman and Lolita Robertson, and Ralph Herz. Then too Metro is scouring the world for important and picturesque locales for the Metro Travelogues, which form an interesting weekly release on the Metro program.

Metro has many other plans, now nearing completion, for new stars, additional directors and stories from the very best writers to be found, which will be announced within the next fortnight.

With a great deal of commendable care Metro created at the Chicago exposition one of the most original and inviting booths in the big Coliseum. Young Japanese men and women were in attendance and a mysterious ventriloquistic arrangement which made the Metro parrots talk caused a good deal of wonder among the visiting thousands.

The Metro-Quality retelling of Shakespeare's tale of the eternal lovers, "Romeo and Juliet."

The elaborate production of Shakespeare's drama, "Romeo and Juliet," with Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in the roles of the historic lovers, has a remarkable cast of leading players, many of whom are Shakesperian actors and actresses of world-wide reputation. Among them appear Ethel Mantell, Robert Cummings, Alexandre J. Herbert, Leonard Grove, Leonard Grove, Jr., Horace Vinton, Lionel Belmore, Bary Macollum, Normal Macdonald, Eric Hudson, Edmund Elton, W. Lawson Butt, Helen Dunbar, Genevieve Reynolds, Adella Barker, Olaf Skavian, Fritz Leiber, William H. Burton, Harry Sothern, Marie Booth, Violet Hall-Caine, Emma Kemble, Blanche Davenport, John B. Hollis and Venie Atherton.

MacHugh Veteran at Publicity

The publicity career of Arthur E. MacHugh, recently press representative for the B. S. Moss Film Corporation, dates back to 1902. He started with the late Charles Frohman, and handled the advance work on his stage successes for five and one-half years. He next went out ahead of Olga Nethersole in "The Writing on the Wall," and later ahead of "The Gay Life," written by Roy L. Mc-

Cardell and produced by Harrison Grey Fiske. For a time following this connection he conducted the MacHugh Press Service in conjunction with Roy L. McCardell and Will A. Page.

He then returned to the road, doing the advance work for William Collier in "Never Say Die," Tully Marshall in "The Talker," and Louise Gunning in Sousa's opera, "The American Maid." Press agent for Keith's Orpheum Theater in Philadelphia was his next title which connection he severed to accompany Weber and Fields on their farewell tour. Mr. MacHugh entered the film business with the Globe Feature Film Corporation. Later he became affiliated with the moving picture branch of B. S. Moss' organization. He is now doing the press work for some big time vaudeville acts.

Pathe People Play

Pathe people know the benefits of relaxation.

The Pathe Club, an organization with a membership of about one hundred and twenty-five, had an outing on Sunday, July 23, that was memorable for the good time it gave everyone who attended. A steamer was chartered for the day, and the party went up the sound to Glenwood Landing where arrangements had been made for dinner and games.

Various contests were run off, among them a three-legged race, sack race, potato race, tall-and-short man's race, fat man's race, ladies' race, tug of war for men, tug of war for women and a baseball game between the married and single men. Prizes were awarded in most of the events, and a grand prize for the winner of the most points. Rothman won the grand prize with nine points and was close pushed by Gini, who had eight. Other prize winners were Messrs. Kyle and Duffy.

J. A. Berst, president of the club, was judge of events and awarded the prizes.

An excellent dinner was enjoyed at Karatsonyi's Hotel, a large dining room having been reserved for the club.

A Pathe News cameraman was along and filmed all the events, which have been put into a special reel to be shown at the next meeting of the club.

L. J. Gasnier, president and general manager of the Astra Film Corporation, attended the outing with Mrs. Gasnier. In addition to many present from the Pathe executive office, the staffs of the New York and Newark exchanges were present almost to a man. The many guests included the wives and lady friends of the members.

Mr. Berst, who had taken much interest in the outing, had much to do with its success. J. W. Kyle, as committee on arrangements, did his work well. The vice-president of the club, Paul Brunet; the treasurer, G. Bardet; and the secretary, P. Allen Parsons, all aided in helping to make everything go off smoothly.

Lee Ochs Crowned by Brandt

Exhibitors Saved Expense by Universal Suit. Universal's Latest Program Contains Varied List of Productions

JOE BRANDT, general manager of the Universal Film Company, was at the station to meet Lee Ochs, the newly elected president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, upon his return from the Chicago convention, and formally invested him with his robes of state and crowned him with a garland of roses, lilies of the valley, sweet peas and pansies as large as the messenger boy who carried it. Mr. Ochs, with a hundred other exhibitors following, marched to the headquarters of the New York local where the morning and part of the afternoon were spent in discussion of the problems of the trade.

Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal, says that every exhibitor in the United States has cause to congratulate himself on the victory of the Universal company over the Motion Picture Patents company in the famous "Latham loop case." But for this victory at a minimum weekly royalty of $2 per machine, the 18,000 exhibitors would have paid $38,000 per week into the coffers of the patents company. And this is only one of the big victories won by the Universal to permit the exhibitors and the exchanges and the manufacturers of pictures to go on with their business, unmolested and unafraid, and earn their bread and butter. Somebody had to fight this case for the whole trade. The Universal assumed the role of goat and butted in with all its might. It proved to be a good butter.

Eddie Polo, who used to be an acrobat with Barnum and Bailey's circus; G. Raymond Nye, a former Biograph player, and Neal Hart, for many years deputy sheriff in Converse County, Wyoming, all have prominent parts in the latest Universal serial, "Liberty, or a Daughter of the U. S. A."

A number of feature photoplays will be released on the Universal program beginning July 24. On that date the twenty-sixth Red Feather production, "Temptation and the Man," a five-reeler, will be released with Hobert Henley, Sydell Dowling and Sidney Bracey in the principal roles.

On August 27, "The Mark of Cain," the twenty-eighth Red Feather production featuring Dorothy Phillips and Lon Chaney will be released. "Onda of the Orient," a three-reel Gold Seal drama featuring Marie Walcamp and Eddie Polo will be released on August 8 and on August 12 "The Guilty One," a two-reel 101 Bison stage robbery drama featuring Cleo Madison and William V. Mong, will be put on the program.

William Sadler and Edward Crawford, popular comedians on both the screen and vaudeville stage, have returned to New York after some harrowing experiences in New London, Connecticut, where they were engaged in the production of some slapstick comedies being made by a New York film concern. Sadler and Crawford have had several offers from the film world on the Pacific Coast, but the call of New York is too strong to permit of their acceptance.

"Musty" Suffers of Exposition

Harry Watson, Jr., of "Musty Suffer" fame, was one of the busiest men in the world on July 17. That was "Harry Watson Day" at the Chicago Coliseum, set aside as such by the management of the Motion Picture Exposition. Besides his appearances at the Coliseum and at various theaters in Chicago where the admirers of his individual comedy methods gathered to see their idol in the flesh, the Kleine comedian staged a number of scenes of a new comedy in Lincoln Park. Kitty Kelly, critic of the Chicago Tribune, contributes the following description of his outdoor antics:

"Musty Suffer, roasting in his grease paint and behind his putty nose, frolicked for the camera and exchanged airy persiflage with the juvenile populace drawn up admiringly.

"Some of them had a chance to get in the pictures themselves by riding on the little train, and some real sure enough actors were developed in the train's driver, A. L. Gordon, who became suitably histrionic at Musty's efforts to usurp his engine; in the conductor, whom Director Myll had intended to order to keep still, but didn't because he acted so well."

ATLANTIC COAST NOTES

Joe Brandt has scheduled for release as a Red Feather for the week of August 21 the Conway picture, "The Beckoning Trail," with Warren Kerrigan, and "The Woman Desired," a Red Feather, which will be released on August 28.

Harry Sothern, who plays the part of "Abraham" in the Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne production of "Romeo and Juliet," and assists Leander de Cordova in the technical direction of the production, is a nephew of E. H. Sothern.

"Daddy" Miles Brown, eighty years old, who will appear in the forthcoming Metro-Rolfe production, "God's Half Acre," which Mabel Taliaferro stars in, was formerly an artist's model. A portrait of him hangs in the Corcoran Gallery at Washington. This picture won the Grand Award and a Gold Medal in 1910. Other paintings of him are in Boston, Philadelphia and Baltimore. There is one in the Bordeaux Gallery in France.

The role of "Choey McFadden," the proprietor of a cheap dance hall, in chapter thirteen of "Gloria's Romance," is played by Rapley Holmes, formerly with the Essanay players, and the husband of Gerda Holmes. He is now on the road in an important part in "Nothing But the Truth."

Jule Power, the "Lois Stafford" of "Gloria's Romance," claims Portland, Ore., as her birthplace.

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew celebrated the second anniversary of their marriage July 25 by working on the new Metro-Drew comedy by Epes W. Sargent, called "Coupons." Mrs. Drew was Lucille McVey before her marriage, and was an ingenue with the Vitagraph forces. Mr. Drew was her director.

Pell Mitchell, editor of the Mutual Weekly, has just returned to the Gaumont studios from a week spent in New England.

Earl O. Schenck plays the title role in "The Americanization of Stefan Skoles," an educational film prepared under the auspices of the United States Bureau of Immigration. This is to be the first of a series of feature films along similar lines made under governmental supervision.

Olga Petrova, who began her professional career as a dramatic critic in London, and is a well known contributor to magazines on both sides of the Atlantic, has written her own scenario for a forthcoming production which the Popular Plays and Players will make for the Metro program.

Mme. Ganna Walska, the noted Polish grand opera singer, will appear in the support of Irene Fenwick in "The Child of Destiny," on the Metro program.

Twenty-five dogs of all varieties, all pedigreed, all very valuable, are members of the cast which supports Max Figman and Lolita Robertson in the Metro production, "Love Me, Love My Dog."

The story of "The River of Romance," in which May Allison and Harold Lockwood are starred, first appeared as a novel under the title of "Sam," written under the pseudonym of "E. J. Rath," said to be the pen name of the wife of a United States Senator.

Alexander J. Herbert, who plays the part of Friar John in the Metro production of "Romeo and Juliet," acted in the first motion picture ever produced in Australia. This was "The Sign of the Cross," the Wilson Barrett play from the book by Hall Caine, produced under the auspices of the Salvation Army. Mr. Herbert, then a boy, played Stephanus, the martyred child.

Two real New York "gun-men" who have more than once been arrested for their misdeeds appear in the barroom scenes in chapter thirteen of "Gloria's Romance."

Harry Reichenbach has resigned as publicity manager for the World Film Corporation to accept a similar position with the Frohman Amusement Company.

John Arthur, who wrote the first working scenario for the Metro production of "Romeo and Juliet," died July 21 at New York hospital of intestinal trouble.

William Humphrey is putting the finishing touches on the James Oliver Curwood story in which Marc McDermott makes his first Vitagraph appearance.

John Henry Goldfrap has accepted a position as press agent with B. S. Moss.

George D. Baker, former Vitagraph director, will direct Emmy Wehlen in future Metro productions.

Madge Evans, World Film star, who was booked to appear at several New Jersey theaters, has been compelled to cancel her tour, owning to the strict anti-infantile paralysis orders issued to motion picture theaters, prohibiting children under sixteen from going to picture houses, for Miss Evans' greatest followers were among the younger theatergoers.

The Pathe News, the well known motion picture newspaper, now boasts of being shown in every theater but two on Broadway, New York, from the Battery to Spuyten Duyvil.

Herbert Heyes and Glen White are now at work in a new William Fox photoplay starring Valeska Suratt.

William McKey, who for seven years played David Harum throughout the country, is now on the screen in Ivy Close comedies.

Since they joined the Metro forces, at the first of the year, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew have produced about twenty single-reel comedies.

Valentine Grant and Sidney Olcott have just completed a journey to the Canadian border for the opening scores of a Famous Players production in which Miss Grant plays a Scotch girl.

For "Little Lady Eileen," featuring Marguerite Clark, Director J. Searle Dawley is using every known barnyard animal, including pigs, cows, sheep, dogs, horses and a little donkey upon which Miss Clark rides, when Harry Lee, in the role of the fairy-story telling cobbler, is not driving him before a little Irish two-wheeled cart.

The Universal eastern studios continue to keep busy despite the heat and rumor of their closing. Director Frank Smith is directing and playing the character lead in "The Professional Clubman," supported by Betty Page and Joseph Granby. Director Trinchera, recently engaged by the Universal, is at work on "The Tinselled Lady," in which Jack Newton and Jean Stuart play the leading roles. Robert F. Hill's company is busy on "The Urchin of the Sands," and Lucius Henderson is filming "Masks," in which Mary Fuller appears supported by Harry Benham. Director Edward Grandin is directing "Feud Renewed," in which Violet Mersereau stars.

PACIFIC COAST NOTES

Nell Shipman, who recently joined the Fox players, will be featured with William Farnum in a drama written by Henry Christeen Warnack, dramatic critic of the Los Angeles Times. Oscar Apfel will direct the play, which will be the last Fox drama produced in the west for some time.

"Lonesome Luke" appears as "Sherlock Holmes" in a burlesque on that play directed by Hal Roach, who makes Rolin comedies for Pathe. Bebe Daniels plays "Lady Raffles."

Jack MacDonald, remembered as the inimitable "Slapstick," in "The Spoilers," will be seen in an early episode of "The Girl from Frisco."

Another company has been added to the Rolin fold. Harry Russell, who directed at the Keystone studio, has charge of the new aggregation, with Bob Doran at the camera. Fatty Lampton, the seventeen year old heavyweight, is to head the company with little Gertrude Short playing leads opposite him. Harry Todd and Mrs. Todd, who recently returned for a good contract, will complete the leading players.

The $250,000 Dorsey Expedition Pictures have been put on the regular Universal program and exhibitors who are using the regular program will receive the pictures without any extra cost.

The following changes have been made in the personnel of the Universal companies and general stock: On July 1 Clara Horton was engaged to play in the Lule Warrenton juvenile company; on July 3 A. W. Wertz was engaged to play juvenile roles; on July 5 Fred L. Wilson was engaged to play characters; C. Eaglewing, an Indian, to play Indian roles; Earl Silvera and Joe de la Cruz, to play Mexican parts; V. V. Clegg and Jack Walters, to play in character, and Henri DeVries and Dorothy Drake to do heavies. On July 6 Claire De Bray and Eileen Allen were engaged to serve as utility actresses and Evely Selbie to play character roles.

Paul C. Hurst, heavy lead with the Signal Film Corporation, who was formerly a newspaper man, is at work on a "dictionary of misinformation" of motion picture terms which an eastern publishing company has arranged to put out in booklet form.

Following "The Victory of Conscience," the first Paramount Picture in which Lou-Tellegen will appear for the Lasky Company, he will be seen in "The Victoria Cross," a drama by Paul Potter, the distinguished playwright.

Marie Doro, the Lasky star in Paramount Pictures, will shortly be seen in "The Lash," a thrilling drama by Paul West.

E. F. Wayman, for the past nine months assistant to Orrin Denny in the Signal Film corporation's laboratories, was this week promoted to a position behind the camera where he is to work under instructions from Chief Cameraman S. A. Sues.

Arthur Shirley, the Australian actor, who played prominent roles in "The Fall of a Nation" and in the Selig production of "The Valiants of Virginia," has been engaged to support Bessie Barriscale in the Ince comedy-drama by Monte M. Katterjohn, in which she is working under the direction of Charles Miller.

A village street that will measure more than three hundred feet in length is being built at Inceville, this week, for use in the Triangle drama of an Italian immigrant girl by C. Gardner Sullivan, in which Clara Williams is making her initial appearance as a full-fledged star under Reginald Barker's direction.

George Routh, formerly featured in Lubin Western plays, is a recent addition to Kalem's "Hazards of Helen" company.

D. F. Whitcomb, author of "Little Mary Sunshine," "The Yellow Bullet," "His Old-fashioned Dad," etc., has resigned as a member of Balboa's scenario department and will go to New York.

Lois Wilson, the Alabama girl who won a place at Universal through a beauty contest, is leading woman with William Garwood in "The Odd Man," written by E. M. Ingleton.

EARLE METCALFE, REPORTER AND ACTOR

It has become a common thing in stage productions for the actor playing a certain role to perform the duties entailed by the part in reality. This is done in the cause of realism and has worked wonders in the faithful portrayal of certain roles by stage stars.

Earle Metcalfe.

Norman E. Mack, famous newspaper owner and sponser for the Buffalo Times serial soon to be released, had this in mind when recently he sent his star, Earle Metcalfe, on a tour of inspection through the great Mack newspaper plant in Buffalo. The popular screen star is depicting the leading role in the forthcoming serial, and one of the episodes calls for his portrayal of a young reporter. Metcalfe was shown the workings of a great daily in all its many departments. Mr. Mack conceived the idea of sending the screen star out on an assignment. Earle quietly acquiesced. The time for the first edition came and went—but no Metcalfe. The hero of a hundred screen adventures had fallen down on a simple news assignment.

The hours passed by and the absence of the picture star became the sole topic of conversation in the newspaper office and bid fair to make a story in itself. Just when the apprehension of Mr. Mack was becoming visible for the safety of his leading man, Metcalfe himself burst in the door and planked down on the city editor's desk copy for a big story. It developed that Metcalfe had once been a reporter on a Cincinnati daily.

The first episode of the Buffalo Times serial, in which Metcalfe is starred, will be seen shortly. The title is being withheld at the present time.

Grace Cunard and Francis Ford have been forced to abandon their plans of a trip to Honolulu for scenes in a tropical picture.

Alan Forrest, now leading man with the American company supporting Mary Miles Minter, is writing scenarios. His first attempt he sold to the Universal Company.

George E. Periolat plays the role of an elder brother to Richard Bennett in the second feature this star is making at the American studio. Periolat also had an important role in the first Bennett picture, "The Sable Blessing."

Howard Hickman and Charles Ray have important roles in the Triangle play, "The Wolf Woman," in which Louise Glaum is featured.

Thomas Chatterton, hero of "The Secret of the Submarine," is spending a short vacation on his 500-acre ranch twelve miles from Chico, Cal.

Anna Little wears the costume of a boy all the way through "Land O' Lizards," her newest American picture.

Cleo Madison has nearly completed her work as the leading woman in "The Chalice of Sorrow," the Bluebird feature being produced by Director Rex Ingram from "La Tosca."

Claire McDowell, former Biograph star now with the Universal Company, is playing the lead in "Husks of Love," a three-reel picture being produced by William V. Mong.

As "Diana Welland," in support of Crane Wilbur in the military drama, "Somewhere in Mexico," Mae Gaston has a very important role. She appears as a society favorite. Others in the supporting cast are Marie Corteaux, Ida Lewis and Harris Ingraham.

Director Milton H. Fahrney started work on the first two-reel Club Comedy this week, with diminutive George Ovey, star of the company, heading a large cast. The story supplies a number of thrills, among the daring things to be done by Ovey will be an aeroplane flight over the business section of Los Angeles.

Helene Rosson is now working under the direction of William Dowlan at the American studios. She is appearing with Franklyn Ritchie.

After finishing his work as an actor in "The Clique of Gold," under Rupert Julian, Hobart Henley will again direct his own pictures.

CHICAGO GOSSIP

The beautiful J. Ogden Armour estate at Lake Forest, Ill., was used for several scenes in "The Sting of Victory," the next Essanay V. L. S. E. release, in which Henry B. Walthall is featured.

E. H. Calvert, Essanay heavy, has returned from a rest at Madison, Wis.

Lillian Drew is the most enthusiastic golfer among the Essanay actresses.

Patrick Calhoun is playing in support of Marguerite Clayton in "An Old Fashioned Girl," two-act Essanay drama.

Henry B. Walthall is taking a vacation in the upper lake region of Wisconsin and is spending his time fishing.

Nell Craig won the all-comers woman's half-mile swimming contest at the Lake Michigan Sports Club carnival, making the half mile in twenty-one minutes and thirty-seven seconds, and winning a silver cup as trophy.

Col. William N. Selig has gone to Los Angeles to superintend the preparations being made to film "The Garden of Allah" at the western studio of the Selig Company.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than clsasification by makes, Motography has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

Faith's Reward—(Three Reels)—Knickerbocker Star Feature-General Film.—Henry King, as a miner in the modern drama. Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

The Telephone Girl and the Lady—Biograph—August 7.—Featuring Mae Marsh. Over the wire two friends were made and a catastrophe averted. Then in gratitude for her deliverance the lady enabled two young hearts to realize their desire. Watchful eyes had reckoned without the telephone girl and her many branching wires, while her father had reckoned without the sergeant on the beat and the lady. The father coveted the grocery-man and his store for the girl, but the lady found a way to satisfy all.

The Gold Ship—(Two Reels)—Selig—August 7.—Featuring Harry Mestayer and Edith Johnson. Frank Beal directed the picture. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

The Three Scratch Clue—(Two Reels)—Essanay—August 8.—Featuring Francis X. Bushman, Bryant Washburn and Irene Warfield. Lynch, a gentleman crook, finds his mode of living in stealing art treasures from the homes he enters as a guest. He learns that Dr. Strong has purchased for $50,000 an extremely rare book. Norman, his secretary, is in love with Helen, daughter of the doctor. Lynch meets her, too, and makes an impression. The thief tricks the doctor into leaving his study and then, disguised, breaks in. Norman and Helen find him. The former attacks the robber and is felled. He rushes out of the house and hires a taxi to trail the fugitive. As they near a lonely road he notes three scratches on the driver's face where he had cut him in the first grapple. They resume their fight. The auto strikes a tree and as Norman lies senseless Lynch prepares to finish him with a heavy stone. Dr. Strong, his daughter and the police drive up and Lynch is arrested. The girl's infatuation for Lynch naturally vanishes and Norman wins her.

Their Mother—(Two Reels)—Lubin—August 8.—Featuring—? Ned Maxwell finishes his college course and comes home and secures a position as a jewelry salesman for a band of crooks. Jim, his brother, is a plain clothes man and through Jerry Bennett, one of the gang, he loses his position. Ned assumes the burden of supporting the family and when he learns that he is working for crooks he is afraid to resign for fear of his inability to secure another. Jim appeals to the chief of police and is told that if he runs down the gang he will be reinstated. The leader of the gang is deposed and Ned elected to succeed him. The deposed leader, hoping to be revenged, tells the police and the place is raided and Jim discovers that his brother is their leader. Jim realizes that if Ned is taken as a crook it will break his mother's heart, so he takes Ned's place and is arrested, and serves his time in prison in contentment.

The Fatal Wedding—(Three Reels)—Biograph—August 9.—Featuring Irene Howley and Walter Miller. Cora Williams, an adventuress, loves her wealthy cousin, Howard Wilson, but he marries Mabel. Through the efforts of one Curtis, Cora leads Howard to believe his wife is untrue to him and he secures a divorce. Mabel kidnaps her two children and she makes a living for them by taking in sewing. Eight years elapse and Cora, who is keeping house for Howard, begs him to marry her and he tells her when he finds his children he will. Curtis discovers the whereabouts of Mabel and Howard takes the children from her. Through Toto, a servant, Howard learns of Cora's treachery and Mabel and her husband are reunited.

The Fable of Books Made to Balance—Essanay—August 9.—Once there was a Husky employed as slave-driver who kept the imported rabbits on the jump and increased the output. He was so handy that the directors declared him in on the watered stock. When he adjusted himself to prosperity, his daughter Katie, who used to carry his dinner, became known in high school circles as Katherine. When Husky got his first wagon load of kale daughter was registered at a vine-clad seminary overlooking the Hudson. There she became Kath-r-y-n. She decided the mill town would never do, so she went to Europe with a chaperon who had seen better days. There she met the Roqueforts and Camemberts and picked out as manly a chap as ever borrowed money from a toe-dancer. Now about once a month the markee shows up to make a swell touch and reminds her that she must forget her vulgar relations in America.

Moral—Europeans make the money and they have a right to pull it down.

Dreamy Knights—Vim—August 10.—Featuring Babe Hardy and Billy Ruge. The fish were to blame, they would not bite, so Plump and Runt dozed off and dreamed. The bottle containing a message is picked up from the waves and they start out to rescue the beauteous damsel, writer of the script. Mounted on a mule and goat and armed to the teeth, they encounter many and various adventures. Deceived by the voice of a porker they become lost in the forest and wander upon a pirate stronghold, where they are scared almost to death by the appearance of the pirate chief. Once more on the trail and more by good luck than management, they blunder upon the haunted house where the maid is imprisoned. Here they arrive in time to save the girl from being forced into an unwelcome marriage. Love hits them both and they are in a quandary how to solve the situation, when the fish begin to bite. Two or three vicious tugs at the lines and they wake up to find that though their qualifications as Knights Errant leave much to be desired; still as fishermen, they are in a class by themselves.

The Better Woman—(Three Reels)—Knickerbocker—August 11.—Featuring Reaves Eason. Gilbert Merrill, in the employ of Mark Grant, is forced to work late in an effort to satisfy his wife's social ambitions, while she, taking advantage of his absence, receives Grant's attentions. Merrill, from overwork, collapses and while he is unconscious, Harper, a crook, enters the office and takes $5,000 from the safe. When the theft is discovered Merrill is asked to resign and his wife thinking it to be a frame-up by Grant offering an opportunity for divorce refuses to have anything to do with her husband. Merrill leaves for the west and becomes the partner of Bart, a mine owner. They strike it rich and Harper, who has been trailed, finally confesses to the theft of the $5,000, thus clearing Merrill. He later discovers that his wife has been killed in an automobile accident and shortly after marries Nell, a girl of the west, who he has fallen in love with.

Rushing Business—Vim—August 11.—Featuring Robt. Burns and Walter Stull. Pokes and Jabbs come into possession of a fortune, and decide to invest it in a business enterprise. After examining and deciding against several places of business that are for sale, the attention of the two worthies is drawn to a hat store, outside of which a crowd of men are struggling to enter. They decide that this certainly is a prosperous business and quickly making terms with the proprietor, they buy the store and make ready to attend to the wants of the customers, only to discover to their chagrin that the struggling customers are seeking not to buy hats but to pay their poll taxes before the legal limit expires. Pokes and Jabbs plan to make business for themselves by breaking the hat of every man they find. While Pokes attends to the breaking end, Jabbs busies himself with selling new hats to all the men that Pokes has caused to patronize the store. Their Waterloo comes, however, when Pokes in his zeal to help business accidentally hits the tough guy of the district with one of his well aimed brick throws. In the melee that follows the entire store is wrecked and Pokes and Jabbs receive the beating of their lives.

Worth While—(Three Reels)—Essanay—August 12.—Featuring Bryant Washburn and Marguerite Clayton. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

A Western Masquerade—Selig—August 12.—Featuring Tom Mix and Victoria Forde. Tom, a stranded actor, secures the position as school teacher in a small western town and at once becomes interested in Vicky Withers, daughter of Jim Withers, who is a school trustee. Bill Stone, an uncouth rancher, loves Vicky and becomes jealous of Tom's attentions to her and causes Tom to lose his job. Old man Withers advertises for a school ma'am and Tom's ability as an actor comes to his rescue and he masquerades as a school mistress and old man Withers is at once smitten with her and when he proposes to her Tom reveals his identity and the old man consents to his marriage to his daughter.

Mutual Pictures

Secret of the Submarine Nos. 11 and 12—(Two Reels)—American—July 31 and August 7.—Featuring Tom Chatterton and Juanita Hansen. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

The Little Troubador—(Two Reels)—American—August 7.—Featuring Vivian Rich and Alfred Vosburgh. Minta, an orphan, runs away from the Millers, by whom she is employed as a slavey and takes with her an old accordion. She manages to earn a livelihood with the accordion and becomes known as "The Little Troubador." Joshua Quimble, president of a bank, offers one thousand dollars to the person who will make him forget his gout and when he hears Minta playing before his home the music so thrills him that he forgets his gout and offers Minta a home. Frank and Tom, employees in the Quimble bank, spend their vacation near Quimble's home and meet Minta and both fall in love with her. Tom by mistake receives a telegram addressed to Frank which is signed Julia and he shows it to Minta and accuses Frank of selling Minta's ring, which she has given him to have fixed, to secure money for Julia. She is sending Frank away when Quimble bursts into the group with a big trout and the diamond ring which the trout has swallowed after Frank had accidentally dropped in into the creek. Minto now recognizes the treachery of Tom and sends him away and shows by her actions that she loves Frank.

Billy Van Deusen, the Cave Man—Beauty—August 9.—Featuring John Steppling, Carol Halloway, John Sheehan and Dick Rosson. Billy is ever haunted by the face of a fair one and the thing was commencing to bother him and he was certain that if he wasn't soon at the bottom of the mystery he would be in the insane asylum. He confides in his friend who tells him to try the cave man stunt, so Billy the next time he sees his black eyed beauty captures her and throws her into an automobile and carries her off to a log cabin in the wilderness. She puts up a bold fight and finally Billy becomes so stricken that he threatens to commit suicide if she did not become human and drop her sphinx-like air. He locks her in a room and goes out and sits on the edge of a precipice and when he returns he discovers that his black-eyed beauty has fled, and he wends his weary way homeward.

The Power of Mind—(Three Reels)—American—August 10.—Featuring Edward Coxen and Lizette Thorn. Nadine Powers, daughter of Randall Powers, a wealthy elderly man, is engaged to Clinton Wayne, the partner of Dr. Hubert Bolling. About this time a series of daring thefts and bank robberies occur in the city and are seemingly the act or under the supervision of one brain and the authorities decide to trace the crime to the "master mind." The detectives capture a crippled gangster who confesses that Randall Powers is the leader. When Powers discovers he is found out he commits suicide and when Nadine learns her father was a crook she breaks her engagement with Wayne. Time passes and the effect of Nadine's secret thoughts is reflected in the temptation to steal which gradually grows stronger. Wayne seeks the aid of Dr. Bolling and he tells him the whole affair is absurd as Nadine is the daughter of an old friend of Powers. Wayne imparts this news to Nadine and she soon recovers from the effect of her morbid fancies, and shortly after she marries Wayne.

The Courtin' of Calliope Clew—(Two Reels)—Mustang—August 11.—Featuring Frank Borzage and Anna Little. Dr. Matthews, professor of philosophy in a small New England town, with his daughter, Prudence, starts out in a prairie schooner for the boundless west. At St. Jo, which in 1850 was the outfitting point for the great west, they fall in with Calliope, so named because of the vast carrying quality of his lungs and he falls in love with Prudence and after her father's death he offers her his heart and home and she accepts both.

Too Bad, Eddie—Beauty—August 13.—Featuring Orral Humphrey. Eddie Torr, proprietor of one of those small town newspapers, is up to his neck in debt and he sees no way out, but to marry Bettina Coyne, the daughter of Silas Coyne, the village banker, who had plenty of money. He tells his creditors that when he marries Bettina he will pay them off. Eddie decides to give Silas Coyne an editorial that would make his heart glad and rushes to his office, where he scribbled off a masterpiece that would make the house of Coyne a by-word on every tongue, but after he gives the copy to the printer, Tad, his secretary, wishing for revnege, changes the copy and when dawn breaks and the paper has been delivered, Eddie's home is stormed by the creditors who learn that Eddie's betrothal to Bettina is a fake and he gets his.

Some Liars—(Two Reels)—Vogue—August 13.—Featuring Rube Miller. Ben's wife is the boss of the house and her favorite pastime is throwing knives at her husband, while Rube is the boss of his house and dominates his wife. The two men meet on the corner and proceed to a saloon and after partaking of about ten drinks are ready to fight Mexico single handed. They clean out the saloon and start for home but after gazing in Ben's window and seeing their wives throwing knives at a crayon drawing on the wall they return to the saloon, where a couple of cops arrest them and they are given thirty days. When they return home they tell their wives a story of how they had been captured by thugs and carried away while senseless, but just as they finish a cop appears on the scene and tells them that if they pulled off any more stunts they would receive another thirty days and they get a good malling.

Universal Program

On the High Seas—(Two Reels)—Episode 12 of "Peg o' the Ring." Featuring Francis Ford and Grace Cunard. At the close of this episode it appears that the gangsters at last have Dr. Lund and Peg where they wish them, for the two companions find themselves stranded on a ledge of rock to either starve or jump into the sea below. In this episode Mrs. Lund's ruffians fail to get the letter, for they mistake Peg for Flip, Peg having substituted at a performance for the clown.

The Circus Act—(Two Reels).—Episode 13 of "Peg o' the Ring." Featuring Francis Ford and Grace Cunard. At the outset of this eposide, the circus people rescue Peg and Dr. Lund from their predicament on the cliff. Peg is again cleverly abducted and Dr. Lund, in his effort to come to her assistance, is wounded.

All Bets Off—Nestor—August 7.—This story, written by Ben Cohn, features Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran. Eddie and Lee make a bet, the winner to demand any duty to be performed by the loser. Lee loses and Eddie forces him to be a maid in his home, Eddie's maid having just left. Many predicaments follow, when Lee excites Eddie's jealousy.

The Henanpup—Powers—August 8.—Featuring Baby Early. A juvenile comedy in which Professor Wise is fooled by the remains of a dog and rooster which two children have buried. The professor thinks that he will be famous, having unearthed the bones of a creature which must have been a cross between a dog and a fowl, but his prospects for fame are shattered when he learns the circumstances of the burial.

A Knight of the Night—Laemmle—August 9.—Featuring Hobart Henley. This story, written by Robert F. Hill, tells how a thief saves a man's wife from being attacked by a supposed friend. The husband offers to reward the thief, but the latter refuses and strides off into the night, possessed with the incentive to go straight.

Crooked From the Start—(Two Reels)—L-Ko—August 9.—Featuring Billie Ritchie. Bill, the motorcycle cop, wins away the affection of Chief Schmalz' girl and elopes with her. Both he and the girl, however, fall into the hands of robbers, who prepare an awful death for Bill. But Schmalz proves himself a man of distinctive ability and saves the girl and Bill, only to blow the latter and his flivver skyward soon after.

The Silent Stranger—Big U—August 10.—Featuring King Baggott. The silent man of the town at last tells his story. He had been a prosperous lawyer in an eastern town, engaged to be married. The night before his wedding day she died, and in his anguish he called in the devil. The latter said that he would bring back the departed life, but that if the man laughed he would lose his love again. But in his joy at his sweetheart's recovery he forgot, laughed, and the girl straightway died. After telling his story, the stranger sees Satan again and falls over dead.

Ben, the Sailor—(Split Reel)—Powers—August 10.—This is a manikin comedy produced by R. F. Taylor and W. W. Wheatley from a story by Olga Printzlau. Old Captain Jonah's stories make such an impression on Little Ben that he wants to be a sailor. In his dream he becomes one and goes through many rough adventures, culminating when he saves his ship from being blown up by a missile from a hostile ship. Using a capstan bar as a billiard cue, he right-about-faces the missile and sends it back to destroy the ship from which it emanated. On the same reel is:

Salmon from the Egg to the Table.—The habits of salmon are here shown from birth to maturity in a very clear manner. When young they make their way to the sea, to return after some years to their birthplace to spawn, often being caught while trying to jump waterfalls.

The Marriage Broker—(Two Reels)—Victor—August 10.—With Ben Wilson and Dorothy Phillips. Old Reb. Litwak promises a dowry of $2,000 to the man who will marry Sarah, his daughter. Leah is the house drudge, and much prettier than Sarah, so the young man courting Sarah tells Leah that if she had a dowry he would marry her. How Leah gets old Litwak's money, and marries her lover, the policeman, while Sarah's suitor loses out all around, makes an amusing tale.

The Highway of Fate—(TWO REELS)—LAEMMLE—AUGUST 11.—Featuring Sydney Bracey and Sydell Dowling. Story by Harry Ditmar. The story tells how a gypsy girl, who has been wronged by a doctor, revenges herself by killing him after he has married another woman. The other woman, the wife of a man who has meant much to the gypsy, is finally reconciled to her husband.

Some Medicine Man—NESTOR—AUGUST 11.—Featuring Pat Rooney. Grouch, stopping at a frontier town, is not appreciative when an Indian medicine man calls to allay his pains, and he kicks him out. This starts a war between the redskins and the townspeople, in which Pat, Grouch's companion, who has been meanwhile making love to an Indian princess, figures as the hero.

By Conscience's Eye—REX—AUGUST 11.—Featuring Marjorie Ellison. This is the story of a neglected wife, who when on the verge of running off with a "man about town," is saved from this step by the influence of her little daughter. The eye of a doll, called "Conscience," is the instrument through which the child unconsciously acts.

The Guilty One—(TWO REELS)—BISON—AUGUST 12.—Featuring Cleo Madison. Story by R. E. Radbury. Because Jane is in love with Jeff, the deputy sheriff, her other ruffian lover, Lem, decides to get his rival out of the way. Lem and a companion rob the stage and make it appear that Jeff is the guilty one. Through the girl's help, Jeff's innocence is established and the authorities are set on the right path. On arriving at the thieves' cabin, however, the sheriff's posse finds them both dead, having quarelled over the loot.

She Wrote a Play and Played It—JOKER—AUGUST 12.—With Gale Henry and William Franey. Bill Bones, a prominent villager, is in love with Exeter, but she is too interested writing a play to be bothered with him. When Romeo Ham, a wandering actor, arrives in town, learns of Exeter's play and agrees to produce it for her, with the author in the leading role, Exeter is delighted. But the play proves a frost. After it is over Exeter learns that Ham has eloped with her cash, so she finally decides to quit the stage and marry Bones.

Her Mother's Sweetheart—LAEMMLE—AUGUST 12.—Featuring Harry Benham and Edith Roberts. While Delta Maitland is away at school, her father marries a widow. On returning Delta is indignant and regards her step-mother as an intruder. She thinks she discovers that the latter is having a secret love affair with another man. But it turns out that the step-mother's "lover" is no other person than her own son.

The Speed King—(TWO REELS)—IMP—AUGUST 13.—With Richard Stanton and Marcia Moore. Scenario by Walter Woods. This story deals with a gambling father, a maliciously jealous suitor and his rival, the "speed king." Then, of course, there is the girl, who loves the "speed king." The jealous suitor connives to cripple the racer's car, but he fails in his purpose, both losing the girl and the bet with her father.

What Darwin Missed—VICTOR—AUGUST 13.—With Victor Potel and Joe Martin, the Universal ape. This comedy relates the dream-adventures of Prof. Alonzo Bozzle, an eccentric zoologist. Exploring on a foreign shore, he encounters Joe, the wise orang-outang, and the two have many exciting adventures in the jungle.

Onda, of the Orient—(THREE REELS)—GOLD SEAL—AUGUST 5.—Featuring Marie Walcamp and Eddie Polo. This picture, written by Ben Cohn and Walter Woods, and produced by Henry McRae, tells of the way in which a villain appropriates, through impersonation of his dead enemy, the latter's estate in the Philippines. Years later, the man lives in America with his son and his victim's daughter. The latter believes herself to be his own daughter. How, when the father dies, the son tries to kill his "sister" in order to prevent her from discovering her identity and coming into her rights, and how the girl is able to solve her own mystery with the aid of her lover, and to regain her fortune, is the material of the story.

Feature Programs

Blue Bird

Love's Lariat—(FIVE REELS)—BLUEBIRD—AUGUST 7.—Olive Fuller Golden and Harry D. Carey are featured in this romantic drama of the East and West. George Marshall directed the picture.

Fox

International Film

Hearst-International News Pictorial No. 60—JULY 28.—First pictures shown in America of the Japanese fleet review by the Emperor; infantile paralysis plague continues to spread in spite of the efforts of federal, state and city health authorities, New York, N. Y.; polo and tennis entertain large crowds of society people at Narragansett Pier, R. I.; Japanese players compete with Americans in tournament; women of the National Life Saving Society hold swimming meet in which women divers perform remarkable water stunts, New York, N. Y.; the Ninth Massachusetts Infantry clashes twice with Mexican snipers, who fire from across the border upon their camp, El Paso, Texas; Miss Dolly Hackett, of the Passing Show of 1916, poses exclusively in gowns of her own creation for the Hearst-International News Pictorial; cartoon by T. E. Powers.

Mutual Star Production

Judith of the Cumberlands—(FIVE REELS)—SIGNAL—JULY 31. Featuring Helen Holmes. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

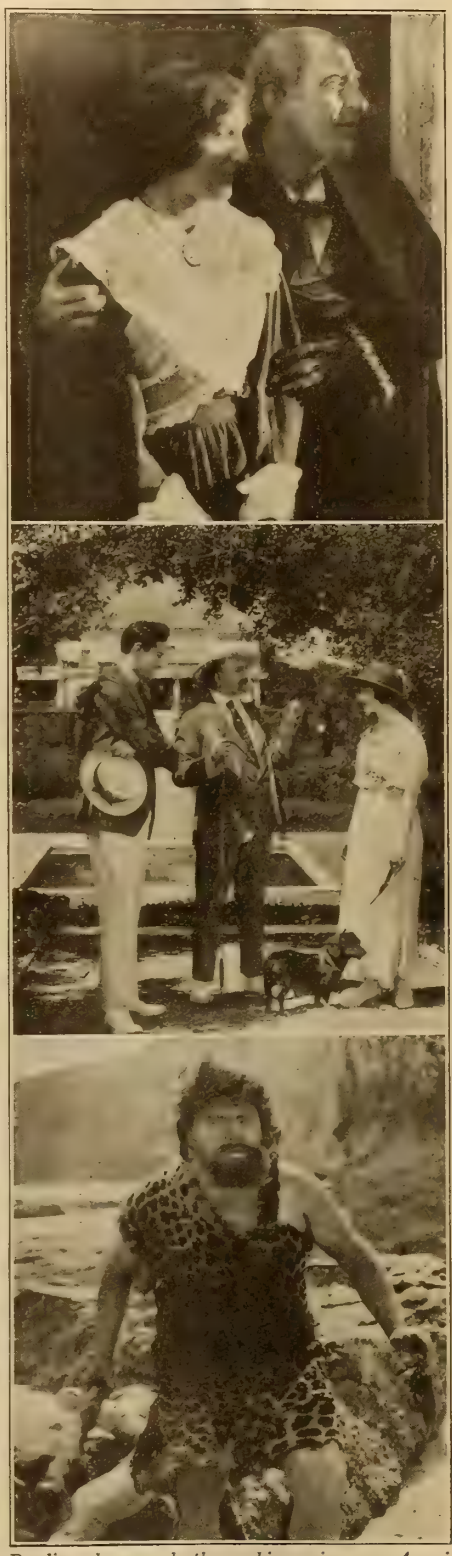
Paramount

Pictographs—PARAMOUNT—AUGUST 6. — Under the title "Do You Drink Milk?" This, the first article of the issue, gives a number of pictures taken on a modern and model dairy farm. "Play and Keep Well," which shows some expert tennis players on the courts, and "Testing Your Mind," a psychological test by Hugo Munsterberg, follow. The Better Babies Department shows parents the value of teaching the children to do practical things in the home. "Bicycles We Have Met," introducing machines of ancient model, is a highly amusing number and it closes this issue, a particularly good one.

Lunyland—(SPLIT REEL)—PARAMOUNT-BRAY—AUGUST 6.—This animated cartoon by Leighton Budd is rather novel and quite entertaining. Being along the lines of "Alice in Wonderland," there is opportunity for the use of the peculiar effects possible to the animated sketch. On the same reel with:

Saving the Zoo From War—Pictures recording events in the visit of Dr. Raymond Ditmar to the Georgia lowlands in search of reptiles for the Bronx Zoo. The party returned with a cargo of reptiles weighing a quarter of a ton.

From Carlsbad to Moravia—PARAMOUNT—BURTON HOLMES—AUGUST 6.—Opening with scenes taken at the famous springs which attract 50,000 visitors per year in normal times, this travel picture takes the spectator along the road to Moravia and presents many interesting views of the Bohemian people. At the end of the reel a Slovak dance is shown. These dances are bound to interest and amuse the screen patrons of this country.



The Stronger Love—(FIVE REELS)—MOROSCO-PARAMOUNT.—A mountain romance with Vivian Martin in the leading role. Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

Common Ground—(FIVE REELS)—LASKY-PARAMOUNT.—Marie Doro appears as a girl of the slums in this drama by Marion Fairfax. Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

Pathe

Who's Guilty?—(TWO REELS)—PATHE—JULY 24.—The twelfth issue in this series produced by the Arrow Film Corporation under the direction of Howell Hansel is entitled "Weighed in the Balance," and tells a well constructed and convincing story excellently. An ambitious young man who is employed in a large factory is in love with the foreman's daughter. The owner of the plant is jealous of Tom and they come to blows. Tom is discharged and as he is very popular with the hands they declare a strike. The militia is called out and though Tom pleads with the men not to use violence they become excited and force the soldiers to fire into the crowd. Tom is shot down and Edna rushes to his side, but it is too late—he is dead. This is one of the best dramas the series has presented to date.

Pathe News No. 60—JULY 26.—Ladies of the American Red Cross Society present the National colors to the United States troops at Fort Sam Houston, San Antonio, Texas; with all of the four hundred pleasure seekers safely removed the large excursion boat, Keyport, sinks off the Battery Wall after collision with a tug, New York, N. Y.; progressive farmers of the Empire state gather at the Monroe County Fair to witness a demonstration of the latest tractor plows,

Reading downward, these shimmering-new American Mutuals are "The Courtin' of Calliope Clew," "The Little Troubadour," and "Billy Van Duesen, the Cave Man."

Hilton, N. Y.; National guardsmen stationed near the border clear away the cactus and weeds around their camp site to insure sanitary conditions, Ysleta, Texas; recovered wounded soldiers and their nurses forget the terrors of the sick room as they engage in friendly sports, Wandsworth, England, sport in the immense pine forests of Oregon reigns supreme as huntsmen set out to catch wild game for a venison barbecue.

Pathe News No. 61—JULY 29.—Pounded by the heavy seas of one of the severest storms that has hit the coast in many years, the United States Naval Collier Hestor flounders off Cape Romain, Charleston, S. C.; pretty mermaids of the East compete in fancy diving contests, Rockaway, N. Y.; the increased demand for goat's milk is causing many condensories to enlarge their ranches and some have as many as 4,000 goats to meet the needs, King City, Cal.; Christy Mathewson, idol of baseball fans for sixteen years, is presented with a floral tribute when he appears at the Polo grounds as manager of the Cincinnati Reds, New York, N. Y.; the flags of H. M. S. Kent, tattered and torn in the great naval battle of Falkland Islands, are deposited midst impressive ceremonies in the have of Canterbery Cathedral, Canterbury, England; hundreds of German prisoners captured in the great Allied offensive by General Haig's troops, pass through Southampton, England, on their way to interment camps; the Naval Recruiting Bureau employs spectacular methods to induce able-bodied young men to join the United States navy, New York, N. Y.; latest fashions.

Who's Guilty?—(Two Reels)—Pathe—July 31.—The thirteenth of the series is entitled "The Goad of Jealousy." A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

Who's Guilty?—(Two Reels)—Pathe—August 7.—"The Irony of Justice" is the last release of the series. It is reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

The Grip of Evil—(Two Reels)—Pathe—August 7.—"The Looters" is the title of the fourth episode in this serial being produced by Balboa and featuring Jackie Saunders and Roland Bottomley. This release tells of the wealthy John Burton's dealings with a number of politicians. He is persuaded to accept the candidacy for mayor. Burton becomes disgusted with his new associates when he finds himself forced to rescue a young girl from the evil intentions of the leader. This man turns against him and Burton as a result loses the election. Later events only serve to practically convince Burton that "humanity is in the grip of evil."

V. L. S. E. Inc.

Dear Percy—V. L. S. E.—July 24.—This single reel Vitagraph comedy was written by Cyrus Townsend Brady and presents Frank Daniels. The story tells of a meek man whose very gentleness gets on his wife's nerves. He is struck by an auto and the doctor decides that blood transfusion is necessary. Neighbor Casey, who often beats his wife, offers to supply the necessary blood. After the operation Percy shows a tendancy to be as rough as Casey was and Mrs. Percy is sorry she ever wished her husband to be a wife-beater. Another accident makes Percy meek once more, which is highly satisfactory to all concerned. The picture is pleasant all the time and amusing on many occasions, thanks to Frank Daniels.

Hesper of the Mountains—(Five Reels)—V. L. S. E.—July 31.—Adapted from the novel by Hamlin Garland and featuring Lillian Walker with Evart Overton. Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

Tax Bill May Be Abandoned

COMMITTEE IMPRESSED BY OBJECTIONS MADE BY EXHIBITORS

SOME definite action on the question of the federal theater tax, which has been agitating the entire film industry, will probably be taken in a few days. The sub-committee of the Senate Finance Committee in charge of the consideration of the proposed new theater tax has carefully canvassed the situation and is ready for a joint conference with the other sub-committees of the finance committee.

It is understood that the arguments made by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America and numerous theater managers against this proposed change in the theater tax have seriously impressed Senators Hoke Smith, Kern, and other members of the finance committee and convinced them that if the theaters are to be called on to pay a federal tax it would be wiser to apply the tax as it stands than to undertake to impose a tax, as proposed, based on gross receipts of theaters, graded according to the population.

Replies have been received from Senators Boise Penrose, Reed Smoot, Ollie M. James, Robert F. Broussard, James E. Martine and William Hughes in response to the letter sent to the finance committee of the United States Senate by Lee A. Ochs, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, in which he protested against the pending tax bill upon motion picture theaters and the unfairness of the so-called Kitchin revenue bill. All of these letters from the senators show that they are in sympathy with the exhibitors and express their intention of doing all they can to kill the objectionable bill.

Bois Penrose writes to President Ochs:

I have yours of the 24th instant, on behalf of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, protesting against the provision in the so-called Kitchin Revenue Bill relating to theaters, museums or concert halls, and I fully recognize the force of the objections presented by you.

It is needless for me to say that I am radically opposed to all legislation of this character. I take the stand that the expenses of the Government should first be raised at the Custom House on importations, and if we still adhered to the policy of a protective tariff many of these direct taxes would be rendered entirely unnecessary. I shall be glad to bear your views in mind and do what I can, as a member of the minority, to halt or modify some of this illadvised legislation.

Robert F. Broussard wired Mr. Ochs the following from Washington:

Committee not giving general hearings. Gave me hearing this morning on exemption of moving pictures. Hearing extremely satisfactory to me. Have great hopes that committee will carry out my suggestion and substitute another provision in the bill in place of the tax on moving pictures and places of amusement. Sub-committee suggested to me that they would gladly consider written statement from you against the imposition of this tax.

James E. Martine is a true friend to the exhibitor. He writes Mr. Ochs:

I shall place your request in the hands of the chairman of the committee having charge of the new revenue measure. Whether or not hearings are granted, I think it very likely a change will be made in the bill before it is reported to the Senate, so that the gross receipts will not be taxed. It may interest you to know that I have long since protested against this provision of the revenue bill.

From present indications it is probable that one of three courses will be the result of the conference of the sub-committees—the retention of the old or present war revenue tax on theaters based on their seating capacity; the imposition of the proposed new tax based on the gross receipts of theaters graded according to the population of the cities and towns in which located; or both the existing tax and the proposed tax may be abandoned and theaters and film houses exempted from taxation.

Senator Hoke Smith of Georgia, chairman of the sub-committee considering the theater tax, said that his committee in view of the strenuous objections raised to the imposition of a tax based on the gross receipts of theaters considered the advisability of basing the new tax on net receipts. This idea was finally abandoned, however, because a net profit would be expensive to collect and would entail too much bookkeeping both for the government and the theaters. Senator Smith's committee has estimated that the present tax on theaters brings in $1,000,000 annually and the proposed tax would bring in about $1,500,000 annually. While this is a serous matter for the theaters, it is held the difference in income as between the two plans is not important enough to justify the new tax.

New Headquarters for Portland Exchange

In order to give more space to the constantly growing business carried on by the Film Supply Company, of Portland, Ore., G. A. Metzger, manager of the exchange, has seen fit to change quarters, and the exchange is now located in their new offices at 405-407 Davis street. The Portland office is now probably the finest equipped exchange on the Pacific Coast. The space they are occupying is 50x100 feet with basement.

Sam Spedon Leaves Vitagraph

Sam Spedon, the dean of motion picture publicity men, and for seven years the standard bearer of the Vitagraph Company, has closed his connection with that organization with whom he made his debut in the motion picture industry.

Sam Spedon.

He began at the bottom and reached the top. He is known in the farthest corners of the trade, and is one of the most likeable and most popular men in the business. He counts his friends among all the branches of the industry—exhibiting, producing, exchange, and newspaper.

Wherever the Vitagraph Company was represented Mr. Spedon was one of the chosen. It is a saying with the press that whatever he wrote seldom needed editing. It "made" in its original form. His methods of getting publicity over were innocent of subterfuge; his news was newsy and his statements were without embellishment.

Sam, as the exhibitors and exchangemen know him, was often called "the exposition man." He was active in all of them. His congenial smile and hearty handshake come straight from the heart and have been the welding of many friendships—a priceless asset. Every branch of the industry is more or less like an open book to Mr. Spedon. His diplomacy and unique personality make him a propagandist and a promoter whose statements convince.

As he has seen practically all of this country and is not at present curious about the scenery in foreign lands, more or less in a state of violent argument just now, Mr. Spedon is vacationing at his home in Brooklyn, 975 Ocean avenue. On his return to business we wish for him continued success in whatever endeavor he may devote his talents and ability.

New Producing Company in California

Charles M. Conant of Los Angeles, president of The Film Makers, Inc., recently spent several days in Chicago in the interests of the new concern which he is organizing.

The Film Makers was incorporated in March, 1916, for $150,000. Forty acres of filming space have been leased near Los Angeles and active production will begin about September first. The company is planning to do things on a solid financial basis and all finances will be provided before producing begins. Mr. Conant is at present completing the final arrangements.

The Film Makers are planning to spend $80,000 in its first production, "The Pearl of Asia," which is to be released in ten reels. This is said to be a strong, clean story of unusual power. The company will produce only so many films as are consistent with the highest quality.

Reichenbach Joins Frohman

Harry L. Reichenbach, for the past fourteen months general press representative for World Film and Equitable Motion Pictures Corporations, has resigned his position with those concerns and on August 19 becomes a member of the firm of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, of which William L. Sherrill is head. Reichenbach's position with the Frohman Company will be advertising and business manager.

Harry L. Reichenbach.

William A. Brady, Ricord Gradwell, Felix F. Feist, J. E. Brulatour, E. J. Rosenthal and the other heads of the World Film have presented Reichenbach with an elaborate gold and enamel desk set, designed and made by the Tiffany studios. The set represents the very ultimate both as to value and magnificence. It weighs fifty pounds, is patterned after the bookmarks of ancient publishers and is an exclusive design of the Tiffany Company.

Harry Reichenbach, during his four years in the film field, has built up a wide reputation for novelties, originality and energy. While with the Lasky concern Reichenbach innovated the syndicated publicity book, decorated stills, gelatine lobby displays, and was in full charge of the decorations of the Strand lobby when Lasky pictures were the attraction. His efforts with Bosworth, putting "Hypocrites" over, and his remarkable advertising campaign while with Metro, are incidents which stand out in the industry. His work at World Film is best attested by the remark of Ricord Gradwell, who termed him a "thousand per cent man."

Reichenbach's sole reason for changing is the added possibilities of giving his originality greater sway. He will, with Mr. Sherrill, have practical control over the executive end of the Frohman concern and will have a voice in the productional department as well.

The Frohman Company, during its eighteen months in the film field, has created eight very excellent pictures out of nine and is at work on what promises to be their most important work, "The Conquest of Canaan," with Jack Sherrill and Edith Taliaferro.

Reichenbach renewed his contract with the World Film last July, but when the opportunity came to advance himself secured a cancellation, but worked thirty days in order to allow the company to fill his position.

That Harry Reichenbach's work with World Film was satisfactory is attested by William A. Brady's remarks when he returned from Chicago and the exhibitors' convention. "Reichenbach's showing," he told various writers, "is nothing short of marvelous; he is indeed a live one." And if anyone should know, Mr. Brady is certainly qualified to talk.

THREE STATES ENTER LEAGUE

President Lee A. Ochs Announces Applications for Charters in M. P. E. L. of America—Bureau of Information Established

Lee A. Ochs, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, has made a statement at the temporary headquarters, 218 W. 42nd street, New York City, that since the convention held at Chicago during the week of July 10 the states of North Carolina and New Jersey have made application to join the League, and Kansas has signified its intention of doing so at its next regular state convention, which will be held some time in August.

"This awakening evidence of the necessity of a good strong organization on the part of the live exhibitors of these three states," said President Ochs, "has encouraged me to make strenuous efforts to completely organize every state of the entire country.

"The need of a strong organization has never been so evidenced as recently in the action of the House of Representatives in passing without a hearing a bill to tax the theaters one-half of one per cent of their gross receipts, and furthermore in the fact that practically every state legislature will convene this fall, and no doubt many will institute a bill for the censorship of motion pictures.

"Membership in the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America carries with it membership in the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and all the benefits accruing therefrom.

"A state organization can be started by five bona fide exhibitors signing a petition for a charter, accompanied by a charter fee of thirty-five dollars. The executive board, whose membership consists of exhibitors located in all sections of the country, will designate its nearest member to call a regular state convention, at which officers will be chosen and by-laws adopted.

"A bureau of information will shortly be established at the League headquarters, from which place such knowledge as may be requested regarding legislation and direct business affairs will be diffused."

Patrons League Defends Pictures

By S. G. Parker
Special Correspondent for Motography.

A booklet containing editorials from prominent newspapers, pastors of leading churches, men prominent in the political affairs of Dallas and other cities in Texas, favoring Sunday picture shows, is the issue put before the people of Texas by the Texas Amusement Patrons' League.

Excerpts from the booklet follow:

The moving picture show, some to the contrary notwithstanding, is not the great peril to our Christian Sabbath. Our complex civilization—teeming centers of our population—offers more vitiating influences to the perpetuity of our Lord's day than the censored screen. The root of our problem is not the picture show playhouses, but the homes of our country.—Rev. L. L. Cohen, Jr., Munger Place M. E. Church, Dallas.

Mrs. P. P. Tucker, president Dallas County Girls' Industrial Home, said: "In my opinion courts would have twice as many misdemeanor cases on Monday if the picture shows did not run on Sunday, and I truly believe there would be twice as many delinquent girls."

Under proper management and supervision, picture shows are as good as a church, and they should be kept open on Sunday so that working people may have a place to go for entertainment.—Mrs. Leona Stoneheart, Chairman Social Service Committee Woman's Forum, Dallas.

New Producer in Chicago

GATE CITY PICTURES COMPANY BEGINS WORK

THE Gate City Pictures Company, a producing company newly organized in Greensboro, North Carolina, has begun active production in Chicago.

The authorized capital of the company is $100,000 and the officers are prominent financiers and business men of North Carolina. The finances of the concern are already in shape for the making and exploitation of a series of first class productions. The United Photoplays studios in Chicago are at present being used for the filming of the first production, a comedy called "Roland's Rainy Day." This is to be one of a series of "Roland" fun films, featuring "Smiling" Roland Hill. "Roland's Lucky Day," "Roland's Jonah Day," and others will follow immediately.

Featured with Roland Hill, the leading man of the company, will be Miss Barbara Daverin, an experienced and charming actress formerly with Majestic and Vitagraph. Roland Hill is himself one of the organizers of the company. His has been the unique experience of playing under different names in six of the leading studios of the United States. In this manner he gained his comedy experience and then returned to Greensboro, his native city, and interested prominent capitalists there in the new producing concern. The remaining members of the casts for the Roland comedies will be chosen in Chicago.

Albert W. Hale, managing director of productions, has been in Chicago for some time making the final arrangements for the beginning of work and starting active production. Mr. Hale has directed for many of the prominent producing companies of the country, including Pathe, where he directed Henry Walthall, Vitagraph, Thanhouser, Famous Players, American, where he was in charge of J. Warren Kerrigan and Flying A productions, Majestic and Kalem. Captain E. E. Barclay, well known in Chicago film circles, has been secured as assistant director.

General Manager Garland Daniel of North Carolina paid a visit to Chicago during the completion of the final arrangements for active production. The releasing arrangements of the new comedies have not as yet been announced.

The officers of the Gate City Pictures Company are as follows:

President, Julian Price, of the Jefferson Standard Life Insurance Company; vice-president, Charles W. Gold, of the Jefferson Standard Life Insurance Company; secretary and treasurer, Frank C. Boyles, cashier of the American Exchange National Bank; general manager, Garland Daniel, of the Carolina Fair Association; general director of productions, Albert W. Hale.

The company is upon a solid financial basis and figures on doing part of its filming in North Carolina, near the seat of its capitalization. A studio in Greensboro is also a part of the plans for the future.

SEES RUSSIAN ADVANCE

W. R. Sheehan, General Manager, Organizing Branches of Fox Film Corporation in Practically Every Important Country in the World.

W. R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, who has been abroad since last March in the interests of his firm, is now in Russia.

Through the courtesy of Russian government officials he has been permitted to see a portion of the Russian army's extraordinary advance and has more than once actually been under fire. He is surveying the Russian field preparatory to the invasion of that territory by the William Fox motion picture organization. He has already installed branches of the corporation in England, Ireland, Scotland, Wales and in France, Norway, Sweden and Denmark. He has about completed the preliminary work in Russia and according to cables received here will sail next week for Australia and New Zealand. The Fox films are already established there, but Mr. Sheehan will make a trip of inspection which will not only include Australia and New Zealand, but will also include the Philippines, China and Japan and South and Central America before returning.

It is now expected that Mr. Sheehan will not return to New York before eight months or a year. When he left he did not expect to remain away more than a few months, but the exigencies of business have demanded that he visit practically every country, with the single exception of Germany and Austro-Hungary.

SUCCESS BUYS THEATER SITE

First of Chain of Theaters Throughout the Country to Be Erected in New York. Site Valued at $750,000

The Success Films Corporation, recently incorporated with the object of producing and exhibiting pictures with a chain of theaters throughout the country, has secured the option on a site for their first theater. This property is located on West Forty-fourth street near Broadway, and is valued at $750,000. A thirty-day option was secured.

The incorporators of this new company are:

S. Bradley, the Corporation Counsel of Pittsburgh; Harry O. Van Hart of the First National Bank of Cleveland; H. H. Cudmore of the General Electric Company; Edwin J. Maska of the Cleveland & Youngstown R. R.; J. S. R. Crawford of Pittsburgh, representing the largest mercantile interests in the State of Pennsylvania outside of the city of Philadelphia; and A. C. Reinecke of Cleveland, who severed his connection with Otis & Company, members of the stock exchanges of New York, Chicago and Cleveland, in order to devote his time to Success Films Corporation.

The picture rights to more than a score of plays have been purchased outright, and options are held by the new company on a number of others, including the "Decameron of Boccaccio," "The Grain of Dust," "The Sixth Commandment" and "The Eternal Magdalene." "Polly of the Circus," owned by Margaret Mayo, and the picture rights to all of James Witcomb Riley's poems are also in the number.

EXHIBITORS FIGHT SUNDAY LAW

Fifty-Five Houses in Syracuse, New York, Open on Sunday to Test Closing Law—Public Approves

The exhibitors of Syracuse, New York, are taking the bull by the horns. Fifty-five motion picture theater owners and managers, headed by Edgar Weil, of the Strand, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, defied Sheriff John P. Schlosser to arrest them on Sunday, August 6, when they opened their houses in the face of an order to keep closed, issued by Commissioner of Public Safety Walter W. Nicholson. Demand that the houses be closed was made by the New York State Civic League headed by O. R. Miller.

The Theater men, representing an investment of close to a million dollars, threaten to invoke century-old blue laws and have cigar and confectionery stores and newsstands shut up if they are forced to do so. Sheriff Schlosser declares he will arrest every offending theater man and will have them arraigned in Court of Special Sessions.

Both afternoon papers, the Herald and the Journal, uphold the theater men and have printed columns of interviews which Protestant bishops, Catholic priests, lawyers, doctors, clergymen and other professional men, declaring in favor of the Sunday shows.

Coxen and Borzage Features Coming

Edward Coxen and Frank Borzage, long associated with American-Mutual short length dramas, are shortly to be starred in five-act Mutual Masterpictures.

Coxen's initial performance as the featured player of a five-act production will be as the star of "The Shadow," especially prepared for the screen for him from William H. Lippert's story of the same name, by Clifford Howard, author of "Purity," the American-Mutual allegorical play starring Audrey Munson and other noted screen successes.

As the star and director of "Land o' Lizards," written by Kenneth B. Clarke, Frank Borzage will make his bow as the featured player of a multi-reel feature. The story, a gripping one of the West, has to do with the adventures of an Eastern girl who sought the prairies for romance and adventure. Anna Little and Jack Richardson have important roles in support of the star.

"The Heritage of Hate," a society drama in five reels, is nearing completion at Universal City by Director Burton George.

Lenore Ulrich—Artiste

A CLOSE-UP OF A VIVID AND TIRELESS STAR

By Genevieve Harris

"The most dreadful punishment I can imagine would be to have some one say, 'Lenore, until fall you must rest.'"

AFTER a New York success in "The Heart of Wetona" on the speaking stage and with the prospect of appearing in a new stage play in the fall, Lenore Ulrich, instead of taking a vacation, at once set out on a trip which was her fifth across the continent within a year, to join the Oliver Morosco Photoplay forces as the star in feature pictures being produced during the summer.

The little star, who won a devoted following among film fans in "Kilmeny" and "The Heart of Paula," has, during her absence from the screen, been winning an enviable place for herself among American actresses. The critics of the spoken drama are studying her work with much attention. With these new honors, Miss Ulrich comes back to pictures, temporarily, with the earnestness and zeal which characterize her. It is by no means a vacation, for this worker does not believe in vacations—for herself.

"I can't enjoy being idle," she explains. "The most dreadful punishment I can imagine would be to have someone say, 'Lenore, until fall you must rest. You must do nothing.' Oh, that would be torture for me. For I can't be still. And I can't remain away from theater or studio. The stage is at once my work and my only recreation. When I am not playing, I am in the audience. Between the closing of 'The Heart of Wetona' and my departure for New York I visited nearly every production in the city. I had not been able to see them when working, and I made up for lost time."

Miss Ulrich is very beautiful. One's first impression of her decides that. And her first statements revealed that besides beauty she has the prime attributes of an artist in any line, the vitality which forces one to self-expression, and a love for the medium of expression. To Lenore Ulrich, her work is her life.

While Miss Ulrich suggests in appearance and manner the possession of what has been called "the divine fire," the sensitiveness and delicacy of feeling of the artist, one still wonders at her energy and vitality. It would seem that so eager a spirit would outwear the strongest constitution, and Miss Ulrich is of slight physique. But after last season's hard work, she seemed as fresh and vivid as a child. She has regular features, and rich, beautiful coloring, but it is the beauty of her eyes and their expression that one remembers best. Her hair is brown; her complexion olive with the rose tint showing through. Her lips are full, with a slight curve which suggests sadness, a sadness which is also revealed in the large, very dark eyes. She is well fitted for tragic roles, while her exotic type of beauty has made it her fate to play foreign roles, on stage and screen—the Hawaiian girl, in "The Bird of Paradise," the Indian in "The Heart of Wetona," the little Mexican in "The Heart of Paula."

"I love emotional parts," she says, "but I should like to be an American girl, for a change. And I should like to be quite grown-up, for I have played so many pathetic, youthful roles, tragic children, they were. I should like to play a woman's part, an American woman. But there are two foreign girls I wish to interpret, a Japanese girl, and a girl from East India. I shall not be satisfied until they are added to my list."

Miss Ulrich is particularly fond of the work of Pauline Frederick, who, like her, has gone from the speaking stage to the screen.

When asked to contrast the problems of the speaking and the silent stage, Miss Ulrich in her reply touched a vital point, one which should interest exhibitors as well as manufacturers.

A cozy-at-home glimpse of the vivid actress who is now before the cameras at Morosco.

"At first," she said, "directors feared that without words the characters could not fully reveal their meaning. So action was exaggerated. Then came the use of the 'close-up,' until now the slightest expression can be revealed. The screen now demands naturalness and subtle acting. Facial expression counts for more than on the speaking stage. The screen is now very expressive. But the loss of the voice is felt in another way—the emotional appeal of the play is lessened. This, I feel, is the chief drawback, and it is one which can be partially met by the accompaniment of music. The emotional appeal of the human voice cannot be overestimated. It is by her voice that the actress sways her audience."

Another belief of hers is that the pictures owe a great deal to the stage stars who entered the game, for these people brought with them the best standards of acting. It is the acting, she believes, which determines the standing of the motion picture.

"At first, beauty was the prime requisite for a picture actress. Now acting ability is required, preferably with beauty of course. The pictures became art when this ability was demanded. And it is the people from the legitimate stage who first set this standard."

While Miss Ulrich has been successful in both fields, she finds that the mechanics of the picture play hamper her more than those of the speaking stage.

"I live the part I am playing in both dramas, but it is easier for me to do this on the speaking stage, where I am not bound by the pictorial effect and by the fear of stepping out of the picture.

"But all experience helps one. I learned many of my faults when I watched my work on the screen, and I am sure that I shall do better work in pictures this summer after my work on the speaking stage last winter under the wonderful training David Belasco gave me. He is a genius, and I am so thankful I could work under his direction."

This earnestness, this striving for the highest in her art, impresses you most in meeting Lenore Ulrich. And with it, she has a personality which attracts because of its sweetness, its genuineness and simplicity. Somehow you feel that she gives in her work the very best of her talent and charm, without self-consciousness and without restraint, after the fashion of the true artist in any field.

Northwest Exhibitors Meet

Probably the most important action taken at the last regular meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' of the Northwest was the acceptance of the resignation from the executive committee of Thomas Furniss, the prominent exhibitor of Duluth, and the election of David Rodgers to succeed him.

Mr. Furniss deemed it advisable to give up his place on the Northwest executive board on account of his recent election as one of the twelve directors from the National Exhibitors' League on the board of the new National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, and also on account of his position on the executive board of the M. P. E. L. of America. James Gilosky, president of the Northwestern Association, expressed the feelings of the remaining members of his organization when he stated that he accepted Furniss' resignation with extreme regret.

The personel of the Northwestern Association's executive board is now as follows:

David Rodgers, Henry P. Greene, Minneapolis; W. A. Reisman, St. Paul; W. A. Scott, Red Wing, Minnesota; Frank Nemec, St. Cloud.

State Vice Presidents—Minnesota, Anton Gilles, Breckenridge; Wisconsin, J. E. Sherwood, Madison; Iowa, J. B. Boyle, Dubuque; South Dakota, J. E. Hipple, Pierre; North Dakota, J. E. Kavanaugh, Grand Forks.

CONVENTION REPORT

Chicago Exposition and Convention Affairs Settled and Committees Commended—New League Members for City and State

The books of the Chicago Convention and Exposition have been closed and the committees commended for their efficient work in handling the various aspects of the biggest sessions and show the industry has ever seen.

The final reports were made at the last regular monthly meeting of the Exhibitors' League of Illinois, the branch which had the show in charge. The finance committee reports that every bill has been collected and all accounts have been settled.

A "Political Action" committee has been appointed by the Illinois League to take in hand all matters affecting the legislation of the motion picture industry. The committee is comprised of Robt. R. Levy, chairman; Louis H. Frank, secretary; Joseph Hopp, Adolph Powell and M. A. Choynski, with power to add to their number.

Twenty-seven new local members and eighteen state members were initiated into the League at the above meeting of the Illinois branch.

A resolution was passed that no political slides be shown unless recommended by the League and that every exhibitor be notified to that effect.

Exhibitors Work With Politicians

Exhibitors of Cleveland are still opposing the censorship of the state of Ohio and are winning the support of prominent politicians.

At the regular meeting of the Exhibitors' League, which was held last week in Cleveland, the floor was given to the local candidates for the fall election. Chris S. Baxter, candidate for state representative, expresses himself as opposed to the present form of censorship, and against over-regulation of the building code in regard to picture theaters. He passed campaign slides among the exhibitors, and C. A. McGowan volunteered the use of his screen to further Mr. Baxter's interests.

Mr. Grim, candidate for state senator on the Republican ticket, also declared himself as in favor of the repeal of the present motion picture censorship in Ohio.

Sam Bullock, chairman of the Cleveland delegates at the Chicago convention, made his official report of the convention.

A motion was made and carried that five members of the league be appointed as a committee on organization and political action to work out plans which will meet with the approval of the National League. The following were chosen to act as the committee: Sam Bullock, D. S. Schuman, W. T. Slimm, George Heinback and S. Simpson.

What Is Being Done for the Kiddies

Iowa Asks for Special Matinees

At a meeting of the Iowa Motion Picture Exhibitors' convention a plan was presented calling for special matinees for children once a week in every picture house in Iowa, with only films shown which had been picked by a committee of mothers and exhibitors. No definite action was taken on this new plan but it was referred to a committee to be given due consideration.

Dr. Frank A. Ely spoke on behalf of the mothers. He gave proofs of the harm that is done growing children by the usual run of motion pictures, which, to quote the doctor, are generally filled with "love stuff and mush," and pleaded for a performance at least once a week where a mother could take her children with benefit and no harm to the kiddies.

Children's Censor for Grand Rapids

In speaking on the subject of the motion picture theater and the children, Superintendent of Schools Greeson of Grand Rapids, Michigan, came out flatly against motion picture theater owners who show questionable films in places where children are admitted.

As a suggestion for the settlement of this very vital question he advocated the appointing of a censor paid by the city to see every film and pass judgment upon it before it is allowed to be shown in the city. He pointed out the fact that there are so many different pictures being shown every day in Grand Rapids that it is manifestly impossible for a commission of private citizens to do justice to the task of censoring all of them but at the same time no picture ought to be shown by any exhibitor unless it is fit for children to see. He also called attention to the atrocious, and in some cases decidedly offensive, posters which are being displayed to advertise films, and stated that he believed something radical should be done to curb this poster advertising used to attract older people to the type of plays to which children are not admitted.

Pictures in the Sunday School

Motion pictures can be a valuable aid to the church. Every pastor knows the value of the stereopticon for lecture and teaching purposes. Every wise head of the church recognizes the fact that the children must have fun, they must laugh and enjoy themselves, and if the right kind of entertainment is not given them they are liable to find for themselves the objectionable kind. What is more natural than that the church to which we look for all good, should try to supply this healthy pleasure to the children? And to do this many churches have been experimenting with motion picture entertainments and have found them most attractive to the young people and of a great help in creating and holding the interest in the church. The Grace Methodist Church of New York has been holding children's picture matinees every Saturday and from 600 to 1,000 children have gathered to see the free pictures. They come from the Italian neighborhood and from Riverside Drive. They laugh and shout at the comedy films and cheer the patriotic reels. The children are admitted by a card given out each week which they take home. The card advertises various services. The children learn to love the church and make it their headquarters. The Sunday School has grown 30 per cent. The love and advocacy of childhood is the best asset a church can have. At the same time, pictures are shown that inform and plant good, sweet thoughts not found in close, dark rooms and on street corners. At night adults see the same pictures or some special feature reel and hear about the Sunday services and receive a cheering good night as they go out.

Children's Motion Picture Committee

Charlotte, North Carolina, maintains a children's motion picture committee as a branch of the committee on public amusements. Through the efforts of this organization special matinees for children have been held for four months, and have been highly successful.

Charlotte's efforts to secure suitable pictures for the little ones found its origin in a well-defined conviction that many of the films which they see emphasize phases of life which can hold no normal interest for a child and are hence either misunderstood or likely to form a basis for undesirable processes of thought. A majority of the motion pictures are made without taking into consideration the interests of the child. They deal with such questions as the eternal triangle, the married woman in love with another woman's husband, and similar situations such as never occurred to the mind of a normal child of 10 years ago as being even remotely possible. Frequent repetition is apt to lead to the impression that is the normal, instead of the abnormal, state of affairs. Producers of pictures cannot be blamed for supposing that their audiences want adult pictures. No adult wishes to be compelled to see a production that has been emasculated for the protection of children. Producers are in the business to give the public what it wants, or what they think it wants.

The National Board of Censorship has seen a definite tendency to discriminate between pictures that are suitable to children and those that are not. It has studied the tastes and needs of the average boy and girl. It has sought skilled advice and formulated principles for the selection of films that satisfy those tastes and needs. It suggests live and entertaining themes to manufacturers. Parents who would work to this same end are advised to insist on the showing of good programs—not necessarily all educational, for an audience is the first essential. The most satisfactory regulation of motion pictures is that which is dictated and expressed by public opinion in the form of intelligent and sympathetic advice.

Pictures as Disciplinarians

Manager Moule, of the Alhambra Theater, Detroit, Michigan, for more than nineteen months has been giving motion picture shows for the children every Saturday afternoon. He has made a study of children's matinees and came to the conclusion that the modern child does not want nor enjoy the simple, childish or kindergarten subjects. There must be life and action and plausibility in the stories; and the purely instructive pictures must bring the world before their eyes, showing how big and wonderful things are accomplished. The point this exhibitor has tried to attain in these special shows is the elimination of dangerous themes, unpleasant action, and uninteresting, tiresome instruction. As a result the Alhambra has succeeded where many theaters have failed, in providing a children's matinee that captivates, instructs and holds the young folks' interest, and at the same time the little ones do not feel that they are being given a childish entertainment. They see the best and the newest in the picture world in a program selected with the greatest care, and their imagination is properly aroused and satisfied.

While the children of well-to-do and loving parents are enjoying these programs arranged for their entertainment, just around the corner from the theater are gathered a number of children who are not so fortunate, the little inmates of the Van Leuven-Browne Hospital School. Realizing that all children are made happy by the same things no matter what their condition or environment, Manager Moule extended an invitation to the matron of this institution to bring as many of her charges as were able to the Saturday performances. It has been made a rule of this hospital-school, therefore, that every child whose deportment has been up to a certain average during the week may go and see the pictures, and those who have fallen below are denied this pleasure. The taking away of a pleasure as great as this is very severe punishment and the little ones guard their behavior all through the week so that they will not be denied their Saturday afternoon at the show. The generosity of this manager gives them a treat and a change which they otherwise could not possibly enjoy.

The stage veteran, Nat. C. Goodwin, in his first photoplay, "A Wall Street Tragedy," five-act Mutual drama to be distributed early in August.

"Stunts" Devised by the Exhibitors

The picture theater managers, to be successful, must be original and many of them have testified as to their ingenuity by the novel ideas they have worked out to get the children interested in the performances which are devoted to their interests. Two managers conceived the idea of making a free ticket to the Saturday matinee a reward for high standings in lessons at school. In the first case every child who attained an average of eighty-five for all his studies for the month received a free ticket to the Saturday matinee; in the other instance the tickets were distributed at the time of the mid-year examinations and every child receiving an average of ninety per cent or higher was given a pass.

The co-operation with the schools is always a wise move on the part of the theater man for through these channels he is enabled most easily to reach the children and through them the parents. When W. O. Jensen, manager of the Lothrop Theater, Omaha, Nebraska, was first considering experimenting with matinees for children he overheard his small son discussing the fact that his school was trying to raise enough money to buy a Victrola. The suggestion was all that was needed by the alert manager and he told the teachers he would give one-half of the receipts of his first special matinee for children toward the Victrola. The theater was packed, the special matinee was established and is now a regular part of the weekly program and incidentally the Victrola was purchased and the manager made staunch friends of those teachers and pupils.

In their efforts to attract the children to their theaters the managers of the Empress at Kearney and Krug in Omaha hit upon the same idea. It was dandelion time when the weeds were spoiling everyone's well-kept laws and proving a nuisance all around. So these live wires utilized this pest for their advantage. They advertised that each child bringing a peck of dandelions to the theater would be given a free ticket to the afternoon performance. The children could not afford to miss a chance like this and probably many a parent wondered at the sudden ambition of Johnny to do that weeding he had been hectored about for the last week. The lobbies of the theaters were not large enough to hold all the donations and finally the city garbage wagons had to be called to drag the weeds away. But the matinees were a success and got a good start.

Motion Pictures for Schools

Dallas, Texas, is rapidly coming to the fore in its efforts toward better and the right kind of pictures for the younger members of the family. Miss Bess L. Whitehead, publicity manager for the Hulsey theaters, is making a special effort to secure appropriate and entertaining subjects for the Post-Queen series of children's matinees. The mothers' clubs are turning their efforts toward the securing of motion picture machines for use in the school rooms and several exhibitions have been given them to show what can be accomplished by the projection machine in conjunction with educational talks.

Griffith Spectacle Appears

"INTOLERANCE" EXPECTED TO MAKE HISTORY—OPENS IN NEW YORK, AUGUST 21

AT last the big Griffith spectacle is out. Everybody knows that David Wark Griffith has been working in secret upon this big drama ever since the release of "The Birth of a Nation." It will be presented for the first time on August 21 at the Liberty Theater, New York.

"Intolerance" is the name which has been given to the big drama and Griffith designates it "the sun play of the ages." The working title of the film was "The Mother and the Law." For more than five years altogether Griffith has been giving his personal attention to his new production. The kernel idea consists of parallel narratives running down through the four ages of the world's development.

The connecting link between the past and present reveals that the same force which has created crises in the world's affairs is at work today. In this production Mr. Griffith has set a new mark and created his most ambitious achievement. Greater backgrounds have been made for his action than was ever revealed before. In his principal scenes he has utilized more people than were ever seen in any production.

"Intolerance" also tells a modern story of striking local color and stirring detail which depicts the suffering and adventures of a young couple who happen to be caught in the whirlpool of so-called social reform. The effort to thwart the law of individual destinies is the force which brings the young lovers and others into a sequence of events which engulf them. In this Griffith has shown a keen insight into prevalent conditions and in illustration of his theme has painted a picture which startles by its realism.

In joining his modern story to ancient events Griffith has made a wide departure from all stage construction of the past. He elaborates upon his original invention of the switch-back to flash parallel narratives of the fall of Babylon, the advent of the Nazarene into Judea and the massacre of St. Bartholomew in Paris in 1572. In each locale he introduces analogous characters to the protagonists of his modern story and shows them engulfed in the same vortex of intolerant opinions which are the negative forces in his main theme. The work of research to give authority to these ancient scenes was carried on by a corps of experts over a period of the past three or four years. These writers furnished Mr. Griffith with over six volumes of the latest condensations upon the different subjects and it was this data that he worked upon. His Babylonia is brought up to the very latest discoveries and histories of the leading university expeditions to the ruins which are being excavated. His scenes in and about Jaffa and Jerusalem will give a pictorial color to the Holy Land which has never been revealed before and his background for the massacre in Paris shows the quarters of old Paris in minute detail from prints and descriptions of the times which are of vast value for their fidelity.

Some of the greatest characters in the world's development are pictured at war with the irresistible currents of thought which dominated their ages and all lead to the approaching era of individual responsibility tempered with the mutuality of brotherly understanding between men.

Big Chicago House Opens

A big new theater, the largest in the city devoted to films, has been turned over to photoplays in Chicago. The new screen house is the Covent Garden Theater, on North Clark street, constructed only recently for the production of musical extravaganzas.

Sledding was poor and the house has been acquired by Lubliner and Trinz, who operate several picture houses in the Windy City. Covent Garden seats 3,000 people and is so constructed that there are no pillars supporting the large balcony. What is said to be the largest organ in the world is installed in the house. It was built by Hope-Jones and really is a wonderful instrument, containing more than 2,000 pipes and orchestral attachments.

The Kay-Bee production, "Honor Thy Name," played to good houses the opening week.

"Civilization" Presented for One Man

How would you like to be the only man in the auditorium of a beautiful theater at the elaborate presentation of a big film spectacle?

The Washington Theater, Detroit, was recently the scene of such a one-man show, when "Civilization" was taken there from Chicago for the sole purpose of presenting it for Henry Ford. Henry sat in the audience and thrilled at the big spectacle, which was presented with an orchestra of 30 pieces and special soloists.

Lou Houseman took the film to Detroit from the Grand in Chicago, where the film was then running.

Rolin Company Expands

The success of Pathe's "Luke" comedies has caused the Rolin Company, which produces them, to expand. A new company has just been formed under the direction of Harry Russell, formerly of Keystone. "Fatty" Lampton and little Gertrude Short will play the leads.

Sunday Opening Adventures in Texas

By S. G. Parker.

Special Correspondent for Motography.

The Sunday opening question in Fort Worth, Texas, which stirred up interest all over the state, is still in doubt. The shows opened a couple of weeks ago on Sunday and had a fine business. Immediately afterward the exhibitors were arrested under the old state statute against Sunday opening, even though the people of Fort Worth voted for Sunday shows early this year.

The first case to come up was that of Pierre C. Levy of the Hippodrome, and he was adjudged "not guilty." The other cases, the county attorney's office announced, would come up one by one until all of them were tried.

For a couple of weeks the Ham-Ramsey evangelists and singers have had Fort Worth, their "imitation Billy Sunday" antics being staged at the "Glory Barn," a large tabernacle built especially for the purpose.

For a year or more Reverend Ham has been denouncing picture shows. He fired his shots in West, Cleburne, San Antonio and many other places. He says that picture shows are not "decent places." He says that any one who would go into a picture show would not hesitate to go into a cheap saloon or dance hall, that there's a lot of kin in the three businesses. He has had his hand called several times; but he relies on his "Billy Sunday" antics to carry him through.

After Pierre Levy was acquitted in the Tarrant County Criminal Court, that night, the "Glory Barn" was the setting for much ranting.

"We had a great meeting at the court house today. After a service lasting several hours, one came through. What I mean is that the jury in the county court acquitted the proprietor of a moving picture show who had opened on Sunday—acquitted him after the judge had expressly charged them to disregard the city ordinance and to render their verdict in accordance with the state closing law, and to find the defendant guilty if the evidence showed that he had opened his place of amusement on Sunday.

"The defendant pleaded guilty, and then the jury went out and found him not guilty. I do not attempt to offer any explanation."

This statement was given out at the "Glory Barn" by the Methodist presiding elder, Dr. John R. Nelson.

"We don't need any explanation," threw in Reverend Ham. "The whisky gang said to turn him loose and he went free." Then he called upon the people of the audience to stand, all of those who would not go into a picture show on Sunday. Almost the entire audience stood, according to the newspapers.

The whisky interests have never been aligned with picture shows by some of the most drastic "movie fighters" before. Probably Reverend Ham could think of nothing else to say at the time.

It is very probable that many of the "standers" in the Ham-Ramsey "On-To-Heaven-Quick" campaign, will be patronizing many picture houses in Texas on Sunday and in Fort Worth before long.

Advertisers Elect Officers

Twenty-four advertising and publicity men representing, with two exceptions, every important motion picture producing company with offices in New York City, met at the Claridge Hotel, New York, on August 2, to approve the articles of incorporation which had been drawn up for the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers by its council, Arthur Friend. The meeting had been called by the temporary officers, and the first business transacted was the election of permanent ones for the ensuing year, as follows:

Arthur James, Metro, president; Wallace Thompson, Paramount, vice-president; E. Lanning Masters, V. L. S. E., secretary and treasurer. Executive council: John C. Flinn, Jesse L. Lasky Photoplay Company; Paul Gulick, Universal; Carl H. Pierce, Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company; Harry Reichenbach, Frohman Amusement Company; S. B. Van Horn, World Film Company; Hopp Hadley, Mutual.

The three elective officers are also members of this council ex officio.

Mr. James, in accepting the presidency, made it quite plain to those who had not attended the previous meetings that the A. M. P. A. was an organization without connection with any other body or board, and that it was the intention of its founders to confine its activities strictly to matters which appertain to advertising, and the welfare of advertisers.

The Articles of Incorporation were approved, and a vote of thanks was tendered to Mr. Friend for his efficient work. The president then appointed a membership committee consisting of E. Richard Schayer of the Lewis J. Selznick Enterprises, Inc., Nat G. Rothstein, of Universal, and C. J. Meegan, of the General Film Company, and the following publicity committee: Paul Gulick of Universal, chairman; Terry Ramsaye of Mutual, and Ben Schulberg of Famous Players.

Until permanent headquarters can be secured the regular meetings of the A. M. P. A. will be held in the Claridge Hotel, the next meeting being set for August ninth.

"Million Dollar" Ince Outing

"The Million-Dollar Outing" is what the players in the Los Angeles film colony are calling the trip made to Catalina Island, a short time ago, by the aggregation of stars and directors from the Ince Triangle studios at Culver City. E. A. Featherstone, the Los Angeles clubman, took the celebrities aboard his luxurious cruiser, "Edna."

The guests were Louise Glaum, Enid Markey, Clara Williams, Dorothy Dalton, Margery Wilson, Margaret Thompson, William S. Hart, William Desmond, Charles Ray, Directors Reginald Barker, Walter Edwards, Raymond B. West, Business Manager E. H. Allen, Superintendent of Production David M. Hartford, Publicity Manager Kenneth A. O'Hara and Cameramen J. D. Jennings and Frederick Betz. The party derived its name—"the million-dollar outing"—from the fact that the aggregate annual income of its members approximates a million dollars.

V-L-S-E. Assistant Manager in Chicago

A. W. Goff, of New York, assistant general manager of V-L-S-E, spent August 7 in Chicago. He is on a ten-day tour of the Big Four branch offices in Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis. This tour is in line with the plan laid down by Mr. Goff soon after his ascension to the assistant general managership to keep in close personal touch with all branch offices, their managers and all their assistants.

During his trip Mr. Goff will inspect the work done by those four branches since his last trip and will accomplish much by conference that could not have been accomplished by correspondence.

AN OPEN FORUM

This is a department of, by and for exhibitors. We want YOU represented here. Other managers and proprietors of picture theaters want to hear YOUR experiences, your opinions and your advice. Write to this department telling us your story, how you started, how you grew and all about your theater and how you manage it. Mention your advertising methods and your lobby displays. If possible send in photographs of yourself and your house. Address, The Forum, Motography, Chicago.

Outside Clocks Show Feature Times

THE Bunny Theater, of 3589 Broadway, New York City, uses two large clocks outside the lobby. The hands of these point to the times at which the feature begins running. The house seats 1,300, including the roof garden. It was built in 1913 by Bradberry and Brandon at a cost of $80,000.

The roof garden of the Bunny accommodates 600 people and it is always cool. Colored lights are a part of the decorations here and two Powers machines are a part of the roof equipment. The pictures are thrown on a plain tin screen painted white. The throw is 88 feet, the same distance as in the theater proper.

The interior of the house is notable for its conservative and tasteful decorations, which make it restful and pleasant. The floor is carpeted in green.

Music is furnished by an 88-note "Photoplayer," installed in the pit directly below the screen. Its cost was $10,000. Several large openings in the side walls of the auditorium allow the breezes to blow in freely, and in addition two large exhaust fans are constantly used.

The lobby of the Bunny is spacious, being 25 by 50 feet. This is an important feature, as it eliminates the crowding and inefficiency of a small lobby and adds to the sense of luxury which the patron feels. Indirect lighting, which is best, of course, is used. On the right is located a large office. The floors of lobby and office are covered with rubber tiling of tasteful checked design. Some checks are atrocious and remind one of a cheap barber shop, but the design used by the Bunny is at once harmonious and attractive.

The Bunny runs eight or nine reels at each performance and runs four or five performances per day. Fifteen cents is charged evenings, Saturdays and Sundays. Matinees on week days are five cents.

New York's Strand Has Unusual Service

For some weeks past the Strand Theater, New York, has maintained what is termed the "Strand Daily News Service," the outward evidence of which is a large motor car painted a cream white with the name of the Strand on it here and there. Anyone on New York's streets has seen the Strand Cameracar, for it's a thing about as retiring and inconspicuous as an actor's vest.

The Cameracar is a limousine fitted with folding doors in the roof and a tripod mounted on top. When the camera man wants to take a picture, he opens the doors and, standing on a platform on the back seat, adjusts his machine to the tripod. A sign is then hung out that the pictures being taken at that time will be shown on the screen at the Strand the day following.

The Strand Daily News Service is the logical outcome of the various news weeklies. With the Cameracar at its disposal, the Strand can shoot out its camera man to any place within a radius of fifty miles and get pictures while the event is still fresh. The roof of the car has also proven an advantageous place from which to "shoot" over the heads of crowds or obstructions. Since its inauguration it has been a great adjuct to the Strand Topical Review, the compilation of news services the Strand runs.

While not engaged in photographing fires, accidents, parades or other interesting events in the day's happenings, the Cameracar scouts around the city hunting for scenes characteristic of the great metropolis. Glimpses are taken of the shopping throngs on Fifth avenue with a lens open for the latest styles in hats, gowns and dogs. Occasionally the camera man gets up early and catches the hordes of commuters alighting from the various ferries. Several trips have been taken to the popular beaches near New York. The Cameracar has also invaded Wall street and recorded phases of the drama of the war brides on the curb.

As soon as the Cameracar stops and the operator unlimbers his machine, the crowd begins to gather. The innate longing of every individual to appear in a moving picture supplies all the actors the camera man needs. And here the Strand Cameracar has a distinct advantage over any other taker of moving pictures in the highways; the Strand car makes a direct appeal as the bystander not only knows he is having his picture taken but that he can see if he "registers" by going to the Strand the next day.

The interest manifested in this latter phase of the Cameracar's activities has more than justified the venture, which cost the management of the Strand several thousand dollars to inaugurate. Recently statistics were taken in connection with the filming of a public event and it was found that 92 per cent of those in the picture visited the Strand next day to see themselves on the screen.

The Ideal Exhibitor's House Organ

By E. E. Sharp.

Orpheum Theater, Nampa, Idaho.

To my mind the most important feature of the ideal house organ is the editorial column or page. This should be consistently used, week in and week out, to boost the moving picture art as a whole, the particular program which the theater is using and the house itself.

My idea in boosting the art itself is to try and overcome in the minds of some prejudiced people—and there are a lot of them in the world—their antipathy to moving pictures, and if possible get them to come just to see if it really is as great a thing as we claim it to be. Coming just once may not convince them, but it will come nearer doing it than leaving them alone would.

Boosting the picture program and the house itself are of equal importance. Boosting one or two particular stars is not enough. You can't have the one or two stars every day. Patrons should not only know that a certain star is coming, but should also know the program.

After the editorial column, next in importance is a column of local news. This is something which, owing to a lack of time, we neglect in our own house organ, Reelism, but we realize its importance and whenever possible try to chronicle some of the local happenings.

With a good editorial and some local news the rest of the house organ will almost take care of itself. It should of course contain the program for the week or month and plenty of short notes about the stars, plays, etc. We do not use any outside advertisements in Reelism, but that is not necessarily because we consider them bad, but because the paper is small and we covet all the space for ourselves—and believe that it is worth as much to us as to anyone else. The above, sprinkled lightly with cuts, constitutes, in my opinion, "the ideal house organ."

Censors Move $200,000 House

Because the city's Board of Censors is so exacting in its rulings, the $200,000 motion picture theater, which was to be erected at Portland, Oregon, will be located in Butte, Montana, instead. The firm of Jensen & Von Herberg of Seattle is building the new house.

Speaking of his company's decision in the matter, J. Von Herberg said:

"We didn't feel that we could afford to jeopardize such a heavy investment, and we therefore decided not to build in Portland.

"It is not the principle of censorship that stood in the way at all," he continued; "some films should be ruled out, of course, and we do what we can to rule them out ourselves. It is well known that the big business done by our Portland house, the Columbia, has been built up by clean pictures, and we have built up business for our four Seattle houses by following the same policy. It is a poor business man who would chance the loss of thousands of dollars bucking public opinion by exhibiting vicious plays. It would not be a display of best judgment either to risk a $200,000 investment by undertaking to meet at all times a set of censorship laws which are in themselves so contradictory that a man doesn't know where he stands.

"People have in a short space of time seen motion pictures progress from crude Wild West and vampire thrillers to such high-class productions as 'The Captive God,' a remarkable new Aztec play in which William S. Hart will star soon in our theaters. It is such productions, and others like Douglas Fairbanks in 'The Habit of Happiness,' that are here to stay, and it is the kind we shall continue to show. We consider the great public the best censor, and it is the best productions that the people patronize."

Endorses Vest Pocket Programs

John A. McNear, Jr., manager of the Mystic Theater at Petaluma, California, advocates the use of vest pocket house organs. He says:

"I advocate the use of a program only large enough to be accommodated in every man's and woman's pocket or pocketbook, as so many of the patrons of the motion picture houses are those on the streets or engaged in business that drop in to see a show or arrange their dates so as not to conflict with other business, in order to see a picture that appeals to them. It is a fact that a program such as I suggest and make use of will please them and be appreciated by every one, more so than one that is too large to be conveniently carried in the ordinary pocket.

"My program is issued weekly and is ready for distribution at Saturday and Sunday shows for the week commencing the following Monday, thus giving us the best two days of the week for advance advertising. The program consists of four pages, printed on first-class stock 5¾ by 7½, the first page is given up to name and date, with house announcements. The second, third and fourth pages show the weekly program. Our issue is 3,000 weekly and costs approximately $8."

Leap Year Night in New Hampshire

By C. A. Riva.

Manager Pastime Theater, Tilton, New Hampshire.

Your many readers will probably be interested in a little "stunt" I put on the other night that brought big business and made a big hit.

I selected Tuesday as this is the poorest night of the week, and more than doubled my receipts besides admitting all gentlemen free who were accompanied by ladies. It was a genuine "leap year" night, as the ladies bought tickets "like a man," even the children entering into the fun, and it was such a success that I am going to put on another later.

I ran my ads like this:

Leap Year Night on Tuesday

Gentlemen accompanied by Ladies will be admitted free of Charge.

Men—Let the Ladies Pay. It's their treat this time.

The plan is as simple as it is inexpensive, the entire expense being the printing of the tickets. These I distributed to the ladies for a week previous, and were good to admit a gentleman provided he was accompanied by a lady. All gentlemen coming without a lady bought their tickets in the usual way. I had some crowd.

For ruggedness and scenic grandeur, the Santa Ynez district of California is rivalled only by the Rocky Mountains of the northwest and by the Grand Canyon of Arizona. This superb scenery has recently been secured by Director Frank Borzage in "Land o' Lizards," a Mustang drama in which he and Anna Little plays the leads.

HOW OTHERS ARE STEERING THE SHIP

THE Fifth Avenue Theater of Nashville, Tennessee, printed a coupon in the newspapers when it ran "The Clown." This coupon admitted any child to the theater for five cents, half price.

C. Hawthorne, proprietor of the motion picture theater at Renwick, Iowa, was drowned in the river near Renwick last week.

Five contestants won a first prize, and nearly two hundred names were sent in for the new Hopkins and Halberg theater at Port Angeles, Washington. "Lincoln" was the name chosen.

Franklin K. Lane, secretary of the interior, attended the Rialto Theater in New York last week for the purpose of seeing the Sugden Alaskan pictures, which are accompanied by a lecture.

When Manager Edward Holland, of the Mission Theater, Seattle, ran "Excuse Me," he dressed his lobby to resemble the interior of a Pullman car, and the doorman wore a conductor's uniform.

Motion pictures of present day campus life proved very interesting to former students at the annual reunion of the Central Pensylvania association of graduates of Pennsylvania State College.

Hyde's confectionery store in Seattle is featuring on its menu the "Iron Claw" and "Laughing Mask" sundaes. In addition to this, eight or ten ice cream parlors in Seattle are also selling these sundaes in large quantities.

The Colonial Theater, Chicago, where "The Birth of a Nation" ran during the latter part of its stay in the city, is now running the six-reel war pictures, called "The German Side of the War." The house is under the management of Jones, Linick and Schaefer.

"Ninety minutes from worry," is the telling phrase used as the slogan of the Third Street Theater of Easton, Pennsylvania. Happy oblivion from the little troubles of life are what is sought by a large percentage of the patrons of theaters, particularly the grown-ups.

William A. Lochren, president of the Lochren Film Corporation, Minneapolis, has just closed a deal with the Milano-American Film Company of New York, for the booking of "Dante's Inferno," throughout the state of Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, and North and South Dakota.

The Court Theater Company will open a new, high-class photoplay theater with a seating capacity of 750 at Auburn, Indiana, September 1. It will be under the management of William A. Thomas, and has for its slogan, "Entertainment, Comfort, Service."

Manager Friedman of the Minneapolis Pathe Exchange, formerly of Chicago, has installed a new department to be known as "Advertising Aids to Exhibitors." J. E. Schwartzbein, formerly in charge of the advertising of amusements in the Minneapolis Tribune, will be in charge of this department.

Twelve perfumed air coolers operated by a new system invented in Los Angeles, have just been introduced into the Criterion Theater, New York, where Thomas H. Ince's "Civilization" is playing. This new system assures a temperature in the theater of 21.7 degrees below the temperature of the street.

The epidemic of infantile paralysis in New York City continues to grow, according to reports from the City Health Department, and hundreds of theaters are still closed. There have been more than 1,000 deaths from the disease, up to date, in New York alone. Chicago houses have not as yet been affected.

The Strand of New York offered Pauline Frederick in Famous Players' "The Woman in the Case" as the feature of its bill for the week of August 6. Charlie Chaplin's "One A. M." was also run at the same time, in addition to the usual Strand Topical Review, travelogues, and a "Mutt and Jeff" cartoon.

A number of the theaters of Indiana, including the Idle Hour of Michigan City and the Grand Opera House of Terre Haute, have given benefit performances for the militia of the state. Evansville houses contributed twenty per cent of their receipts on specified days of several weeks to a militia fund.

Films and Footlights, the sixteen-page program of the Mutual Theater Company operating the Royal-Grand Theater, Marion, Indiana, is a very live organ. It contains interesting chats about the plays and players as well as the stories of many of the features shown. The Royal-Grand Shows Paramount, Triangle, Fox and World films.

The Oregon Motion Picture Men's Association is waging a campaign of protest against the present censorship ordinance and asking that a new ordinance be substituted which will grant appeal to the courts from the ruling of the censorship board. A petition is being circulated and more than 10,000 signatures have already been affixed.

C. H. Mills, supervisor of playgrounds of Grand Rapids, Michigan, has arranged for the showing of motion pictures in the parks. The pictures will be displayed on a screen in the open air and will be shown in a different park every night during the week. The pictures will make the circuit of the parks for four weeks.

Notices have been received by stockholders of the North American Film Corporation to the effect that 50 per cent of the remainder of the preferred stock issue will be retired at 110 and dividend on September 1, and the balance of the issue on October 15. The preferred stock was sold to the public at par carrying a bonus of common stock.

The professional men and merchants of Decatur, Iowa, will give a free moving picture show every Saturday night during August. The pictures will be thrown on a large screen erected on Main street in such a position that all can see and be comfortable during the show. Three to five reels will be shown.

G. M. Fosdick of the Minneapolis Mutual Exchange, reports that the four-reel feature, "The Miracle of Life," has been stolen from in front of the exchange. He warns exhibitors to book this feature from no one but the Mutual offices and will appreciate any information regarding the whereabouts of the film.

American motion-picture films are rapidly crowding out domestic films in Great Britain, according to a report from consular sources. Picture theaters in Bristol use a great many more American films than any other kind, and their hold on the public favor seems to be constantly growing.

Following unusually extensive heralding, due to three postponements of the feature, the Rialto of New York last week offered "Hell to Pay Austin," the Triangle drama with Wilfred Lucas and Bessie Love. The Mutual-Chaplin "One A. M." was also run as a special added attraction. The regular program included a Keystone comedy, "Laundry Liz," the topical and scientific weekly, and the Alaskan pictures.

A handsome structure has been erected at the corner of Third and Virginia, Seattle, Washington, for the Mutual Film Corporation. This is in accordance with the policy of President Freuler to make the homes of all Mutual branches models, exchanges that will be a pride, exchanges equipped with the latest modern appliances. J. S. Woody is northwestern district manager for the Mutual.

Here is an argument for continuous motion picture patronage printed as an editorial in the magazine issued by the J. H. Kunsky Theatrical Enterprises of Detroit:

> The motion picture . . . has done more for humanity in its short life than any other public service. It educates, uplifts, inspires, entertains. By its means all the people are enabled to visit the most beautiful places in the world, the best artists, the best writers, work, not for the moneyed few, but for all the people. The rich man and the poor man draw their entertainment from the same source.

A. D. Pappas, manager of the Majestic Theater of St. Louis, has celebrated the first anniversary of his house. He gave away more than ten thousand roses and carnations during the "birthday" week. A special program was also run and advertised. As Mr. Pappas has a neighborhood house, there is no doubt but that he will receive very satisfactory returns for his investment in the celebration of his house's "first birthday."

A remarkable example of the effectiveness of cooperation with the community in which a theater is situated is found in the Electric Theater of Claremore, Oklahoma. The manager, Maude E. Littlefield, aided in the clean-up movement of the city by offering admissions on Saturday mornings to children who bring twenty cans, bottles or other refuse. More than a wagon load of "tickets" have been turned in on several mornings.

Burr Mackintosh, playwright, magazine publisher and motion picture magnate, is visiting Mackinac Island with a motion picture outfit, and a company of actors and actresses including Lillian Gilman, personally superintending the production of a number of one-reel pictures. Mr. McIntosh and his party are the guests of Lucius G. Fisher of Chicago, on his yacht Dolphin. They are cruising from Chicago to New York via Georgian Bay and many pictures of this resort region are being taken for the screen.

The Halsted Theater of East Orange, New Jersey, issues most of its announcements on orange colored cards out of a spirit of loyalty to the city. One little card put out, looks just like a ticket. "Pass" appears in large letters, but "This is not" is run in surreptitious type before it. "Cool, clean and inviting," is the slogan used, and,—"the cleanest and best film productions in the Oranges." C. F. Thompson is proprietor of the Halsted and the small and handy give-away program carries a small cut of his picture.

Four hundred and forty-two thousand people was the record attendance which saw "The Little Girl Next Door" at the La Salle Opera House in Chicago on Saturday, July 15. This is a larger attendance than the house had at any time during its extreme popularity as a music comedy house. The performance of the film ran from 9 in the morning until 11 at night, with admission at 25 cents. Following the fourteenth week the picture was removed to the Bijou Dream Theater on State Street, where it is running to good business.

C. C. Charles, manager of the Rex Film Exchange of Albany, would very much appreciate any information which any of the exhibitors or exchangemen can give him in regard to the whereabouts of one B. Jacobs, who was formerly employed by the Pioneer Film Company, and during the month of June was employed as traveling salesman by the Rex Film Exchange. Mr. Charles intimates that it would be of mutual advantage to all exhibitors to circumscribe the activities of said Jacobs.

The dearth of genuine comedies-film productions with a real laugh is so great that Managing Director S. L. Rothapfel of the Rialto Theater of New York has changed his programme twice this week in an effort to bring the comedy element up to the Rialto standard. Exhibitors generally are complaining of inability to secure a sufficient supply of comedies, and producers in turn assert that it is so difficult to secure comedy material that they are finding themselves compelled to re-issue from the negatives of laughing films made and released years ago.

The New York Telegraph has started a voting contest for the most popular actor, actress and motion picture player in the United States. Among the prizes awarded to the favorites will be automobiles; building lots at Baldwin Harbor, Long Island; player pianos and records; Corona typewriters; suits of clothes from Hansen of Fifth Avenue; gowns from B. Fabricant; solid gold Elgin watches; and Sonora phonographs. Every player on the American stage or in motion pictures is eligible to enroll in this contest for popularity and to compete for prizes.

The Nude in Pictures

ONCE a poor lass attached to some evangelistic camp in Chicago was arrested for trying to break up some nude statues with a hatchet. People laughed, of course, at her ignorance. The statues were famous reproductions of art, and quite without vulgarity. But it seems she did not know that. She must have considered them vulgar and harmful and was trying to save the world from their contaminating influence.

If a majority of the people in the world were like that, nude statues would really be vulgar and harmful. They were harmful to this particular crusader or she would not have tried to save other people from them. Fortunately a majority of the world is more or less sane; but in the thousands of shades of mind between the person with an artist's eye and the person with a prude's eye, it is a little hard to decide judiciously where the average strikes.

To the pure all things are pure; so it is a pity that the world is not made up of purity. But we know it isn't. The mind and the eye and the conception of an artist are not safe guides for the "common people." Even the artist himself does not always come suddenly or naturally into his so-called "sense," but arrives at his attitude and viewpoint by gradual training. When he projects the result of that training upon the uncultured eyes of the world, there is bound to be dispute as to its propriety.

A large percentage of the people who are not artistic are prudish. Those who profess to look upon the nude with a purely esthetic eye become alarmed when their children observe the same spectacle. Select a man or a woman who approves a nude study and place them upon a board of censors; their approval will change to condemnation. Why? Because they believe in their own purity but not in that of anybody else. It is, indeed, quite amusing to observe that no one ever objects to pictures of the nude for his own sake. No censor, and not Anthony Comstock himself, ever admitted that he, personally, was harmed by one of the subjects he declared against. It is always the other fellow who must be protected. If pictures were as demoralizing as the censors seem to think, those censors themselves ought to be a pretty demoralized lot by now. But no—they are in no danger; everybody else is.

There is nothing logical at all in the world's attitude toward nude pictures. And any subject that runs against human inconsistency is a dangerous subject for picture producers. That does not mean necessarily that such pictures should be avoided; the clever and gifted producer finds no terror in dangerous subjects.

But it does mean emphatically that the director must be clever, and must be gifted, beyond the peradventure of a doubt, before he can hope to put forth a nude picture that will be both a moral and a commercial success.

The fact that a few directors can get away with it without offense is no proof that others can do the same. The fact that such a production seems artistic in every sense of the word to its makers is no proof that others, without the artistic soul, will view it in the same light.

Those inspired directors who find the depiction of the nude necessary to the perfection of their conception need not, and probably will not, be discouraged from its use. But those whose inspiration arises solely from the knowledge that others have succeeded with it should be and must be discouraged. It is a subject upon which the sentiments of the world are too keen to be trifled with.

Properly handled—and there is a world of significance in that simple phrase—the nude in pictures can make the artistic reputation of a producer. Handled without the exercise of the most extraordinary care, it will carry the producer down to disgrace and failure.

The Political Power of the Picture

THE talks by President Ochs and R. A. Rowland on the power of the pictures, which were printed in last week's Motography, are indications that both exhibitor and producer are thinking along the same lines of preparedness. They recognize that the time is rapidly approaching when the film business will have to use its tremendous strength in its own defense.

Like most giants, the motion picture industry has always been good natured and even tempered, slow to arouse and long suffering. It has stood for disrespect, abuse and extortion with only an occasional mild protest. It has striven only to be helpful, entertaining, instructive; its effectiveness in propaganda has always been used for the good of other causes, and not its own.

The motion picture is peculiarly American, and like this great country of ours, it has held its prosperity and the fullness of its growth without protection. Its nature and its policies have been idealistic. Its heroes have been actual, its villains only make-believe. Its inner experience, the events of its circle, have not prepared it against the real "heavies" of business and politics.

The failure of the pictures to offer adequate defense against their enemies has been due to disinclination and not lack of armament. The power of a concerted attempt to mold opinion by the screen is beyond comprehension. When the world has been awakened to its possibilities, respect and freedom from persecution will come without asking.

That this dream of power must be materialized as a measure of common business protection is becoming evident. But it is equally obvious that nothing can be accomplished without unity. The nucleus of that desirable condition is already found in the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. With concentrated effort it will be possible to develop a machine whose ability to sway the sentiment of the country will surpass that of the press as the press surpasses the power of the orator.

Great strength, once demonstrated, need never be exercised. A single object lesson would be sufficient to instill into the minds of persecutors a most wholesome respect for the things that the screen obviously might accomplish politically were its full force diverted in that direction.

The Attractiveness of Comfort

IT is very much easier to keep warm in cold weather than it is to keep cool in hot weather. We seldom hear a picture theater patron complain in the winter about an inadequately heated house; but there are still a few exhibitors who do not, we fear, realize the importance of comfort to their patrons in midsummer. We are familiar with their protests that people will not come to their shows when it gets hot; they do not realize that the heat might be made to furnish the very reason for attendance. Anybody who could be cooler and more comfortable in a theater than he could at home or on the street or in the park, would hurry into the theater. He wouldn't even investigate whether the show was any good or not.

A sign reading "Thermometer says 70 degrees inside," or "20 degrees cooler than the street," is mighty attractive in the dog days; and during the recent hundred-in-the-shade spell that blanketed the central states, the theaters equipped with such signs, and that could prove their claims to coolness, did not suffer seriously from loss of business.

To cool a theater and keep it cool is neither an easy nor an economical process. It costs money and takes attention. But when you once get it you can capitalize it with advertising and signs, and the people who have been in it will talk about it to the people who have not, quite as much as they will talk about the pictures they saw.

First Aid to Theater Men

BY S. L. ROTHAPFEL

BY a singular coincidence just after I opened my mail and read two letters from exhibitors, one asking as to the advisability of installing a larger orchestra in his city theater and about how many pieces I would recommend, and another from a manager saying he employed a ten-piece orchestra and had such difficulty finding sufficient appropriate music to give his patrons a variety in the musical program, I picked up a copy of the Anaconda, Montana, Strand, which contained a very fine article on this very subject by R. Vincent Johnston, director of music at the American Theater, Butte, Montana, and conductor of the Butte Symphony Orchestra and Butte Municipal Band.

Mr. Johnston's article is such a strong and comprehensive one that I am publishing a greater part of it herewith for the benefit of these two inquirers and other interested managers.

"Picture development has completely revolutionized picture music and picture players. The one or two-reel pictures calling for a waltz, two-step and 'Hearts and Flowers' has given way to complete plays of from one to two hours' duration. In some instances famous operas with equally famous singers are shown. To adapt suitable parts of the action to the original music with the tremendous handicap of the swiftly changing screen is no light task. Besides which, all the extraneous music must be similar in atmosphere and character to the music of the opera itself. It is evident that this condition calls for a trained musician.

"In some houses one still suffers from the pounding forth of 'William Tell' or other popular overture usually by an orchestra of from three to six men, one of whom fortunately is a drummer. This latter individual takes the place of all the lacking instrumentation, and in addition supplies enough noise to cover the musical sins of his partners in crime. This type of organization usually regards its efforts as a separate attraction to the picture, regardless of the fact that a group of four or five men, one of whom is a drummer and another generally a cornet player, cannot possibly reproduce with even the faintest musical satisfaction the thousand and one nuances of strings and reeds, or the complex scoring of modern music.

"The picture orchestra of today in all the best houses is an integral part of the pictures. Some one has said that it supplies the third dimension to a two-dimension play; but whatever else it does, it most surely proves that the leader, regardless of the instrument he plays, must be a thoroughly qualified musician, and possess a strongly developed dramatic instinct. Nor can the music be purely melodic throughout the play. Its lyrical parts must only come at suitable intervals, and even then must absolutely fit the occasion.

"All big pictures are accompanied by scores nowadays, because of the absolute necessity of the right sort of music if the picture is not to be spoiled. Exhibitors are frequently at the mercy of their orchestra leader, for he has it in his power to make or mar every picture that crosses the screen.

"A feature picture may have been an unqualified success wherever shown, and much is expected of it by the houses to whom it is yet to come. It makes good in all of them except in one certain theater. In this particular instance the orchestra prided themselves on playing big music. True, they tried not to antagonize the picture too much, but nevertheless the ambitious leader vied with the picture to get the approval of the audience for his music, with the result that both lost out and the show was spoiled. This type of small town leader is the unconscious foe of all good pictures. The fault, of course, rests primarily with the employer for not knowing more of the psychology of picture exhibiting.

"Ignorance of dramatic values absolutely disqualifies any leader utterly, regardless of his musical ability. The two are inseparable. While the proper appreciation of the emotional contents of a picture may be a natural gift with some, it is something that may be acquired by all with the necessary instruction and experience.

"As for 'fake playing,' that is something no longer tolerated even in the small houses where there is only a pianist. This expression 'fake playing' or 'faking the pictures,' was for years a recognized term in motion picture vernacular. The most hideous mutilations of simple, well-known melodies, such as Rubinstein's Melody in F and Mendelssohn's 'Spring Song,' were dinned into the ears of a long-suffering public until a correct version seemed positively unfamiliar. This does not refer to the legitimate variations of a theme, but to the actual combination of wrong notes and distorted rhythms.

"With the artistic development of the photoplay these travesties on music have been pretty well abolished. The logical forward step now is to furnish not merely technically correct music but music which interprets every mood of the story as thrown on the screen, and through the ear so intensifies the impressions conveyed through the eye that it shall actually be the voice of the speechless drama. Incidentally there are few agents with such democratic and universal facilities for popularizing good music as the photoplay musical director, in houses where the management is up with the times.

"But, strange as it may seem, while money beyond computation has been expended in the production and perfecting of pictures, scant attention hitherto has been paid to the musical accompaniment, which is really such a vital part. Lighting and every mechanical factor increasing the proper atmosphere for photoplays has been reduced to a science; yet music, the most potent emotional influence in the world, has been given no special thought until recently, save by a few far-sighted individuals whose progressiveness has brought them conspicuous success in the motion picture field.

"Inappropriate music is a far more subtle quantity than such a glaring incongruity, for example, playing a tango when a funeral procession is being thrown on the screen. Inappropriate music is music which, however worthy a composition verse, still does not completely blend its essence with the essence of the story portrayed.

"Of course, the extent to which the emotions registered on the screen are duplicated in the consciousness of an audience depends upon individual susceptibility to impressions. But certainly the effect produced through the employment of hearing as well as sight must be definitely increased.

"Everybody today with a sincere interest in the advancement of the motion picture art realizes the profound influence of appropriate music as an accompaniment to the photoplay. More than that, those who have analyzed the subject recognize the fact that not only does music enhance the entertaining value of photoplays, but that it exerts an influence surprisingly reactive upon film producers.

"The great success attained by the orchestra of the better photoplay theaters and the prestige they have achieved has opened up a still wider vista. Music has been composed and arranged to fit the picture. Why should not pictures be created to fit musical masterpieces?

"Only a few years ago a photoplay audience, whether at a 'store show' or more pretentious performance, was obliged to listen to the agonies of a helpless piano. Today there are hundreds of magnificent orchestras playing pictures throughout the country.

"With the progress of motion picture photoplays, music will advance correspondingly. But instead of fearing that music will out-march the screen itself it should be recognized that these sister arts will each reach their greatest power through a jointness of merit, for the combination of photographic pantomime and fine music has an inspiring effect upon the mind and emotions surpassing any other visible or audible artistic appeal. The truth of this is attested by the innumerable following of the photoplay as compared with the devotees of other forms of art or amusement.

"Victor Herbert, one of the foremost composers of the country, has recently composed an entire score to a big feature production, and other celebrated writers are following his example.

"Similarly the best musicians of the country are gradually getting into the picture show profession. It is no longer a thing to be shunned, but is instead a matter of pride, for only the very best type of musician can fill the bill in a first-class picture house using a first-class orchestra. It is true, as I have already said, that there still remain players who do not come up to these high standards, but they are only to be found in towns where local conditions prevent outside players from coming in, or where the theater people themselves are behind the times.

"The Rialto Theater of New York City is one of the biggest and most luxuriously appointed theaters in America. It was designed, built and equipped for motion pictures. It handles over 100,000 patrons a week. It employs a symphony orchestra of 35 men, each an acknowledged symphony artist. Besides the conductor, Hugo Riesenfeld, there is an assistant conductor and two famous concert organists—Alfred L. Robyn, a well-known composer, and Edwin Johnston, an equally distinguished recital artist. Triangle pictures are shown here exclusively. The organ of this theater is the equal of the Salt Lake tabernacle in size and its superior in resources and mechanical equipment.

"Another great New York City theater is the Strand, the home of Paramount pictures. Here is employed a symphony orchestra of the same number and caliber as at the Rialto, the conductor being Carl Eduarde, famous the world over, and the organists, Arthur Depew and Clarence Brigham. The four manual organ of this theater had no equal in any church or theater in America prior to the opening of the Rialto Theater. Of course these theaters have the advantage of running the same pictures for seven days, owing to the size of New York City. The American Theater in Butte uses the entire output of Triangle and Paramount films, changing every two days, which gives one an illuminating insight into the difference in cost between Butte and New York City. It also illustrates the increased labor and amount of music used in the two places. The cost of orchestra music for a five-reel picture will average about $25, and this the leader must supply. Perhaps no other one point emphasizes the importance of a genuinely thoroughly trained musician for picture playing. It is not enough that he have a tremendous library; he must have an intimate first-hand acquaintance with the world's best music and must keep up to the minute with the very latest worthwhile compositions, operas symphonic and concert. He must be a systematic reader. He must know at a moment's notice what particular composition will fit, not merely the action or dialogue of the moment, but the atmosphere of the entire play. For example, take a love theme. A motive suggesting love only will not do. The environment of the love scene must be taken into account. It may be a Fifth avenue drawing room, in Cairo, on board ship, on a farm or in the Bowery, but wherever it is the necessary atmosphere must regulate the choice of the love theme. Then, again, one number must be so chosen as to fit into the one that follows, without abrupt changes of keys or jarring modulations.

"But over and above all this, the music must be so much a part of the picture that the auditor is unconscious of it. People must not realize what the music is doing at the time the picture is on the screen. The picture must be the thing. This is verily the art which conceals art.

"No theater can guarantee that every picture will be equally good or equally interesting, but any theater that likes to pay the price can secure musicians who will add tremendously to the interest of any picture, make a mediocre one get by, and frequently redeem an out and out poor one. But this is not done by playing concert music as a thing apart from the picture, but by conveying the themes, emotions and atmosphere of the silent drama through the agency of suitable music to the understanding of the man in the chair."

We're Surprised, Lillian!

Lillian Gish has adopted a course of training as strenuous as a professional pugilist in order to get into the best possible condition for her "rough house" work in the Triangle-Fine Arts production, "Diana of the Follies." Miss Gish has several free-for-all fights in the picture, including one at her husband's house and another on the stage of the opera house in which several chorus girls mix in.

In the theater scene one of the chorus girls emerged with a black eye as the result of coming in too close contact with demure Miss Gish. Miss Gish's portrayal of the temperamental actress in "Diana of the Follies" is expected to make other celebrated temperamental ladies of the screen look to their laurels to preserve their reputations as "Champion Temperamentalists of the World." W. C. Cabanne directed the production.

The Present Day Photoplay

By Mrs. S. Brownstein

An answer to the article, "Are All Pictures Trite and Padded?" in the July 29 issue of Motography.

ARE all present day pictures trite and padded? Indeed they are not.

Are most pictures of old theme, rehabilitated and renamed? Both yes and no, is the correct answer.

Are some present day pictures padded, mediocre, glaringly old and boresome? Yes, a few.

Are pictures daily improving, becoming more wholesome and entertaining? Positively yes.

Are there more complainers than commenders? Oh yes, always.

I do not agree with our writer. If I had never seen a picture before reading these plaints, I would have foresworn never to put foot in a cinema playhouse, so much so does that writing flavor of "all is dark and dreary, sunshine never enters."

The writing, posting, traying, registering of emotion and final reading of that letter or letters mentioned may or may not have been overdone in that particular play. I could not say because I do not know what vital bearing the letter had on the issue, but I'd hazard a wager of a shopful of chic fall hats (if I had them) against a hatpin that the contents of that letter carried a message of great moment, and that its delay in minutes or seconds meant the making or breaking of the life-interest of the recipient or his kindred. The very fact that these scenes, or so mentioned "unnecessary bunk," bored and irritated our writer shows me that it accomplished what it was intended for. It created that impatient, anxious feeling to get it over and see the outcome—the smash "suspense"—why it is the very essence of the story.

When I sentence a play as "padded," it is because there was not sufficient suspense, not enough struggle, threatening jeopardy of the interest of the characters. But I don't see very many padded plays nowadays.

Old stories; now let us see what is an old or new story. Men and women have inhabited this earth, lived, fought, loved and died since the first rib operation was performed. Consult the Bible and see if I'm not telling the truth. It is about them (us) and the various ways of being of these fundamental laws and enacting these natural functions that we are trying to tell one another, and have been doing it these thousands of years, so where is there anything new? But a novel grouping of these same every-day human events, a different combination, or interchange, an unusual sacrifice, or malice, an unusual act of heroism or cowardice, these "new twists" we call them, constitute originality and make the new interesting stories, when deftly woven around the character.

Right here enters the argument of the probability and improbability of the photoplay. We very often consider a situation improbable, because we are not acquainted with it or its possibility. Those of us who are not versed in characters and characteristics of people and things usually measure by a margin of our own standards and our limited knowledge and experiences. Not so many years ago when I read or saw on the screen that a mother left her own helpless baby and husband for another man, I thought it was not true to life to leave one's own infant. A morbid imagination I would think, but when I learned of a mother, who immediately after her husband left for work, threw a heavy feather bed upon her own six-weeks-old child to kill it quicker and muffle its cries so that the neighbors would not be aroused and not check her flight with a miserable man, I thought different. Where would our entertainment and enlightenment come in if we saw just what our friends and neighbors do? We already know that. It is the possibly possible and the uncommonly probable that we like to see.

Read Mr. Chas. W. Goddard's article in July 8 Motography. It is very instructive and of basic truth.

During an exhibition of the "Million Dollar Mystery" series, I overheard a woman remark to her friend beside her, "these people all have nine lives." Yet this woman attended each subsequent episode religiously and would not miss one for any consideration. When "The Diamond From the Sky" serial was shown in my town something went wrong with our rented electric power during the showing, and picture, piano and lights ceased simultaneously. The house was packed and all laboriously plodded in the dark and emerged upon the sidewalk. Repairing was slow and all waited. One venerable lady on the better side of "old age" and of liberal obesity waited indefatigably with the others. "Do come home," begged her husband, who out-aged and out-weighed her. They live several miles from town and it was getting late. "I want to wait. I want to see who gets the diamond this time. The monkey had it last," she pleaded, almost as a child would. There you are. This is what the general public wants.

I and others greatly enjoy the so-called pallid, soft, indisputably probable play, too. But these are the plays where there's such strong character painting, such tense gripping, heart-interest, not maudlin, lachrymosal, but those artistic touches that forge spiritual hinges which join our hearts to those of the characters. I wish I could write such.

As to scenes of attractively negligéed women in bedrooms, and curly-headed kiddies, too, I cannot imagine that a director would incorporate them unless they fitted in the story, but I hope authors will write such scenes into their stories fittingly. I love to see them. Pictures have not reached perfection but they are daily improving, and the endeavor which all concerned with the photo-drama exert show me that great things in pictures are sure to come. I know of no industry in which the public is taken so much into consideration. Daily I read where producers consult and take tips from exhibitors, who in turn consult and take tips from their patrons as to what is desired and good. All ages and classes are being catered to, with a desire to help. A common conjunctive interest runs through it all. Down deep in our hearts we do not want perfection. It isn't good for us. Somewhere I read that perfection and satisfaction check progress. If you and I were perched upon a mount of perfection, wherever that may be, we'd grow so stupid and tired of it all that we'd beg to be brought down and given a chance to enjoy life by seeking it and helping to make it.

No, I don't concede that such flagrant mediocrity bides with our present day pictures. Intelligent criticism is always necessary. It stimulates dissatisfaction, therefore progress.

This is not subtle optimism, just a bit of common sense. I don't expect too much, therefore I'm not disappointed.

A Novel Hint to Neophytes

By Paul Sloane

Editorial Staff of Thomas A. Edison.

THE day of photoplays that depend on action, and action only, for their intetrest rapidly is coming to an end. Photoplay audiences more and more are demanding the presentation of character in the productions they witness. People who formerly were thrilled by sensational stunts now laugh at them because they recognize the hollowness and worthlessness of such melodrama. They want the "quiet" type of play—the play that reveals the inner rather than the outer struggle. As a result of this logical and natural development writers are more and more turning their attention to psychological themes and abandoning the old melodramatic stories. But the result has been some absurd depiction of character. The writers who formerly depended on plot to put over their stories still are depending largely on this, although they believe that they are writing the most subtle character studies. The cause of this lies in the fact that they select their action and situation first and then pick out characters that seem to fill the demands of the story. The result is a lot of ludicrous and falsely drawn characters—characters who do everything but the things that would naturally be expected of people of the types they represent.

In a true character study the action grows out of the contact between people of different types who are thrown together in a certain locality. The action always is a logical result of unseen moral struggles. Writers of experience know this and they are competent to select characters with wisdom and discrimination and evolve a story from them. But the writer of little experience cannot do this, so there is only one way for him to work. That is to select a number of characters in a haphazard manner, choose a location at random, place the characters in the location and then let the action develop as it logically would develop if such people were thrown together in such a place. But the average amateur is not capable even of making such a selection as this plan involves, so it has occurred to me that this can be accomplished by the tyro even by the use of a simple little expedient. Write down a list of all the various types of persons that occur to you on small slips of paper and do the same with a number of different localities.

You will have, for instance, an actor, a plumber, a minister, a school teacher, a clerk, a stenographer, a reporter, a policeman, a society lady, an aviator, an adventuress, etc., in the way of characters. For localities you may have New York, a farm, a desert island, a small town, a village in France, a mining camp, a cattle ranch, etc. When you have your slips all prepared mix them up and pick out, from your localities, one slip—selecting it at random and without looking at it. Use the same method of selecting from three to six or seven characters. Then proceed to build your story, basing it on the probable complications that would arise if the characters you selected were thrown together in your location. As a rule you will find that an interesting and logical story will be bound to result. Sometimes it will be a comedy and sometimes a tragedy. Sometimes it will be original and striking and at other times it will lack the qualities that will make it desirable. The method, however, invariably will develop the imagination and emphasize the importance of character study and its relation to the silent drama.

Will Film the Rockies

Victor Miller of the Cinema Camera Club has left New York for a two months' trip through the Rockies to film a series of scenics.

Mr. Miller, whose camera work is widely known, was the photographer of the remarkable naval scenes in the feature production, "America Preparing." Some notable camera work was obtained by Mr. Miller in this film masterpiece. The panoramic views of Pensacola were taken while flying over the city in an aeroplane driven by Lieutenant Saufley, whose brief career was tragically cut short about a month later. The splendid film impressions of West Point and Annapolis have also aroused favorable comment.

"The Country God Forgot" is the title of the next Selig Red Seal play to be released through V. L. S. E., on August 21. The Western drama was written and produced by Marshall Neilan and features Thomas Santchi as the lead cowboy star, supported by a company of notable players including Mary Charleson.

Field Films Make Their Bow

NEW PRODUCING COMPANY INCORPORATED FOR SEVERAL MILLIONS

FLORIDA is fast becoming a great film producing center. Another new film company has been formed and has chosen this southeastern territory for its operations.

This company, operating under the name of Field Feature Films, is composed of men of wide experience and reputation in the commercial world and backed by their own capital exclusively to the extent of several million dollars. C. C. Field, president of the company, is well known in the automobile business and has long been a student of the drama, having collaborated on several plays that have been successes on the speaking stage. Associated with Mr. Field is Thomas J. Peters, who has an international reputation in the commercial world, and H. G. Ralston, a real estate man in Florida.

A large glass-covered studio has been erected at Miami, Florida, fully equipped. Offices are being established in New York for the sale of its features on the state rights basis.

The Field Feature Films company will produce only features. The first two productions are already completed and the third is in the course of making.

In an interview with MOTOGRAPHY'S representative, Mr. Field outlined the ideas and policies of the company. He said, "We have set out to make the Field Feature Films 'Custom Made Features,' by that I mean our features will be builded to meet present day box office requirements. We are not going to spend our money for stage stars with inflated salary values. We are not going to attempt to make artistic history at the expense of common sense. We are not going to attempt to make the great picture of the future. What we are going to do is confine ourselves to making pictures that are demanded by the public of today; pictures that will make money for us, for the people who buy them, and for the people who book them.

"We are conducting our business along business lines," continued Mr. Field, "the same as any other manufacturing business is conducted. We have studied our market in the same careful manner that all successful merchants study their respective fields and will supply that class of features that our observations have convinced us will be commercially profitable.

"In the making of our first picture 'The Human Orchid' and our second feature 'The Toll of Justice' we have practiced economy where economy should be practiced and have spent money liberally where money should be spent; with the result that we have produced two good features that will make money for the exhibitor because they are designed to entertain the great majority. They are good clean wholesome pictures and the money spent on them we consider good financial investments.

"By eliminating studio waste and confining ourselves to the offering of dramatic values we anticipate a ready market for our pictures. What the exchange man wants is features that are readily booked. What the exhibitor wants is attractions that really attract; and what the public wants, I am firmly convinced, is pictures photographically beautiful and strong in subject matter.

"The presence of a great stage star in a picture will not make up for the absence of dramatic quality and therefore the money invested for the services of that star has been wasted. Where dramatic value does exist in the story itself the presence of the great stage star becomes what might be termed an 'added attraction' and as such might easily be dispensed with. Therefore, we have decided to use good players; those who have proved their ability but who have not become obsessed with the idea that there is no limit to the financial resources of the film manufacturer. We will concentrate on the strength of the story."

NEW AMERICAN WAR FILM

"Uncle Sam Awake" Endorsed by the United States War Department. Shows How America Is Prepared.

It is particularly refreshing in these days of multitudinous war pictures, preparedness propagandas and peace productions to be able to see "Uncle Sam Awake." A more loyal and patriotic appeal to the senses of Americans has yet to be made. It is genuinely interesting, well put together, logically thought-out and above all the United States War Department is back of "Uncle Sam Awake," it being a picture actually authorized in taking and exhibition by the Secretary of War.

Americans, including those who marched for preparedness, are given an opportunity to see why we should have an army at all—what we have to protect—what we have to build protection with—how we go about it—what happens to a man after he enlists.

You see the troops actually in service in Mexico. You see actual battle---nothing faked—you see our aeros in action—our field guns—our mortars—coast defense guns, all belching shot and shell. You see submarine mines dealing havoc on the high seas.

The United States Government has contributed 2,000 feet of film for this stupendous production; two thousand feet of scenes never before publicly exhibited. The plotting rooms, for instance, where each shot from each gun is aimed by means of marvelous instruments, the "base end" stations—the ammunition chambers—the mortar tunnels.

Laurence Rubel and Hugh Fargo are at the Hotel McAlpin, New York, to market this film spectacle. They report many offers for rights and will close up within a few days.

Signal Plays with Fire

In the production of the five-reel screen version of Vaughan Kester's novel, "The Manager of the B. & A.," J. P. McGowan this week staged what is generally regarded as the most spectacular series of fire scenes ever made for exhibition on the motion picture screen.

Through possession of their own water mains they have been able to do away with the use of smoke pots and other paraphernalia in staging their fire scenes and now resort to nothing less spectacular than the real thing. The entire street set built to represent the main street in the town of Antioch, was saturated with oil and distillate and fired. The lumber used to build these buildings was old and seasoned and when the torch was applied the entire street burst into flames and for a time threatened to get beyond control. At one side of the set stands a row of eucalyptus trees which reach at least sixty feet into the air. The topmost leaves of these trees are burned and the flames at times were leaping twenty feet beyond the top of the tallest of them.

So hot did the fire become at times that Cameraman Sues was forced three times to move farther back with his camera. The flames for more than ten minutes were easily leaping a good hundred feet above the ground.

Veteran Signs With World

Little Madge Evans is an unspoiled child of the screen, although she has won numerous beauty contests for stage and screen children.

The little star is as clever as she is dainty and has appeared in a number of important screen productions for the World Film Corporation. She was born in New York City seven years ago. She has played in London and throughout the English provinces, returning to this country to engage in motion picture work.

Miss Madge Evans, a bright World twinklet.

Among her World Film appearances were "Old Dutch," "Bert Leveyette," "Over Night," and "The Ballet Girl."

Following her engagement in "The Ballet Girl," Little Madge played a very important role in "Sudden Riches," where she had many opportunities to show her surprisingly well-developed dramatic talent and emotional expression. She is a child who bids fair to become one of the most prominent in the ingenue field in a few years. She will be seen in World Film productions exclusively for the next two years.

From Pulpit to Pictures

Clarence J. Harris used to worry over Proverbs. Now he worries over plots for new 'scripts to be screened by William Fox directors, for Mr. Harris is one of the hardiest of the staff of Fox scenario writers.

Mr. Harris is forty-three years old, and left the ministry after twenty years of active work. In the last three years that he has been writing scenarios, he has sold 275 reels to more than fifteen different producing companies.

Now he lives in a comfortable Washington Heights apartment in New York City, instead of a parsonage in Oklahoma City.

His first scenario was a story called "The Trail of the Lost Chord," written around Sir Arthur Sullivan's composition. The inspiration for this photoplay came, oddly enough, from the poet Browning. In connection with his pastoral work in Oklahoma City, where he had been in charge of the Unitarian congregation for three years, Mr. Harris was giving a course of lectures on the poet. "Abt Vogler" gave him an idea which developed into a fine two-reel drama.

A year and a half after this scenario was sold, Clarence Harris' health broke down, as a result of six years of strenuous western missionary work. For months he could not use his voice, the screen became his mouthpiece; and as pictures offered a wider, more congenial, and more profitable field, he adopted them permanently.

MACK SENNETT TALKS

Keystone Comedy King States Output Must Give First Place to Quality—Mabel Normand Feature Coming

Mack Sennett, the man behind the Keystone products of fun films, has just returned to California from a business trip to New York where he conferred with the heads of the Triangle Film Corporation. No one in the film comedy field has solved the process of fun making to the extent that Sennett has. "Everybody likes to laugh," he says, and he has studied all the means of satisfying that very human desire via the films.

"I want our pictures to keep people awake," said Mr. Sennett. And there is no doubt but that Keystone comedies perform that function. Sennett achieves his swift action by means of merciless scissors in the cutting room. Speed is his middle name. But quality is the first requisite at the Keystone fun factory. "We shall not increase our output," said the humor genius, "because if we did our quality might suffer, and I will never stand for that. We will cut down our footage before we will let that happen. It is getting harder and harder to make good comedies as people are getting more particular and good ideas are scarce. A good comedy means a great deal of time, money and patience."

As for the market for Keystones, says Mr. Sennett: "It was never better than it is right now. Everybody likes to laugh and our only problem is to give them enough to laugh at. The foreign field is especially good, because comedies are always popular doing war times. What do you think that the soldier does when he comes home on leave? Does he sit around talking about war? No, the first thing he does is to ask where he can see a good comedy."

Mr. Sennett is probably the only director in the business who has no desire to make a twelve-reel production. Even if he did film a multiple-reel, the lure of the scissors would prove too strong and he would clip it to 3,000 feet.

Just now his pet production is the new Mabel Normand feature, now nearing completion. It is to be thoroughly a Keystone product—a Keystone story filmed by a Keystone director and featuring Keystone Mabel. But it is to be different. It will not contain any tricks or "rough stuff." It will run a natural length. It will be distributed as a special feature.

General Film Company's information department calls attention to the fact that in the General Film Service program August 14-19 inclusive, twenty-six noted stars appear in its productions.

Two Mutual Innovations

THREE-REEL SERIAL AND TABLOID PLAYS

RICHARD BENNETT, Mary Miles Minter, William Russell and Kolb and Dill, all comparatively recent additions to the Mutual program, have completed their first productions under this brand and are now working on their second features. All seven companies at the American-Mutual studios are working on features to be released in the forthcoming weeks as Mutual Star productions or Mutual Masterpictures. Among the five-reel productions under way are "His Brother's Keeping," written especially for Richard Bennett by Kenneth B. Clarke. Mr. Bennett's supporting cast will include Rhea Mitchell, Adrian Morrison (Mrs. Richard Bennett) and George Periolat.

"Dulcie's Adventure" is Mary Miles Minter's second vehicle and in this instance Alan Forest will supplant Wallace MacDonald as leading man.

Kolb and Dill's next laugh-provoker will be called "Bluff." Thomas Chatterton and May Cloy will also appear in this production.

William Russell is working on "The Love Hermit," with Charlotte Burton playing opposite him, while other important parts have been assigned to Ashton Dearholt, William Stowell and Harry Von Meter.

Edward Coxen will make his debut as the lead in a Mutual Masterpicture in "The Shadow." Winnifred Greenwood and George Field are supporting Mr. Coxen.

Among the other five-act productions now well under way are "Land o' Lizards," initial of the Mutual Masterpictures starring Frank Borzages and Anna Little; and "The Light," a drama of Hindu occultism, in which Helene Rosson and Frank Ritchie are to be starred.

Stage Celebrities on Program

Three celebrities of the speaking stage, Nat C. Goodwin, Henry E. Dixey and Frank Mills will appear in Mutual multiple-reel productions during the month of August. Mr. Dixey's vehicle will be "Father and Son," a five-act Mutual Masterpicture, and he will be supported by three other legitimate players, Gladden James, Mabel Montgomery and Millicent Evans.

Frank Mills also appears in a five-reel Masterpicture, "The House of Mirrors." The cast will also include Lillian Kemble, Frank Clendon, Harry Spingler, Bliss Milford, Rudolph Cameron and Jack Curtis and Runa Hodges, two child artists.

Nat C. Goodwin's initial appearance will be made in "A Wall Street Tragedy." For his premier appearance as a Mutual featured player Mr. Goodwin was given the support of a noteworthy company of players, among them Richard Neill, Mabel Wright, Mary Newton, Zola Tolmzart, Eugenie Elba, J. Cooper Willis, Marie Burke, Robert Entwhistle and Clifford Gray.

Florence Turner will appear on the August program in "A Welsh Singer." Henry Edwards plays opposite Miss Turner, Campbell Gullan, Malcolm Cherry and Una Venning also appear in the cast.

Mutual's three-part offering for the week of August 14 is "The Holly House," in which Vivian Rich and Alfred Vosburgh are co-stars. Harry Von Meter and Leona Hutton also have important roles.

Three two-part dramas are scheduled for release during the week, "Ruth Ridley Returns," in which Edward Coxen and Lizette Thorne are the featured players, ready August 14; "El Diablo," a Mustang release of August 18 presenting Jack Richardson, supported by Lizette Thorne and Warren Ellsworth; and Destiny's Boomerang," the Centaur offering from the David Horsley studios, starring Margaret Gibson and William Clifford.

"Disguiser," with Claude Cooper and Frank McNish, a Falstaff comedy, leads off the Mutual single-reel comedies for the week. It will be released August 15. The "Beauty" release, "Perkins Mystic Manor," starring Orral Humphrey, is to be released August 16, while "The Luckless Scheme," a two-part Vogue, will go to the public August 20.

Mutual Weekly No. 85 for release August 16 and "See America First," which goes to the exhibitor on the same day, presents an unusual number of interesting news and travel scenes. Reel Life, the Mutual Film Magazine in pictures for release August 20, is comprised of a number of unusual subjects, filmed especially by the Gaumont studios for the animated magazine.

Artists' Model in New Production

Audrey Munson, who is now working on her second Mutual production, "The Girl o' Dreams," has been completely won to the art of the motion picture camera. In discussing her appearance in "Purity," Miss Munson says: "The absurdities of censorship and attempted censorships are beyond explanation. My figure done in marble is seen by millions of New Yorkers every day. An image done in silver has been in one of the fashionable shop windows of Fifth avenue for several years. But when it's in the motion picture then they think it's different. It isn't. It's all in their minds. I have observed that the public is a good deal cleaner minded than most of the people who set themselves up to hand out morality to the public in neatly labeled doses."

An innovation in motion picture production will shortly be released by Mutual as a part of the weekly release of "Reel Life" in the form of tabloid photoplays, none of which will run over 250 feet. Each of these short length pictures will feature popular stars especially engaged by the Gaumont studios, where the pictures are being filmed. Iva Shepard and "Budd" Ross are already at work on the first of these little plays, which is a dramatic representation of the "Ant and the Grasshopper" fable.

Introduction of these tabloid photoplays is due to the desire of the Gaumont-Mutual studios to make "Reel Life," resemble a magazine as much as possible. The film playlets have their counterpart in magazines in the space devoted to fiction. None of the working scenarios of these short length features now in preparation occupy more than one typewritten page. But little footage can be spent on "atmosphere," the director depending for his effects upon the situations. Just as much care is being taken in the filming of these 250-foot photoplays as would be expended on the making of a feature production of the usual length.

With the completion of the fifteenth and last episode of "The Secret of the Submarine," the company has disbanded. Thomas Chatterton and Juanita Hansen, co-stars in the production, will shortly appear in feature productions. George Webb is to be starred in a series of American-Mutual masterpictures in which Winnifred Greenwood will be his leading lady. William Tedmarsh will continue to portray character parts in American-Mutual productions.

Previous to the breaking up of the company, a farewell dinner was given them at the American-Mutual studios at which Thomas Chatterton and Juanita Hansen had the positions at the head of the table.

New Three-Reel Serial

"Fantoms," the serial detective stories which have been appearing in a syndicate of Sunday newspapers, will be pictured by the Mutual Film Corporation in a serial with one three-reel release every week. This is the first time a three-reel series has been attempted, and it is planned to start a big advertising campaign to cover the whole country exploiting these films.

"The Prince Chap," Selig, is now gliding over the country's screens.

Fox Actor's Fish Story

"Admission, One Fish."

This was the sign which lured the theater-loving population of Juneau, Alaska, to the playhouse one memorable night that Henry A. Barrows was playing in the city. Some actors have been paid in full. Some have not. Few have been paid in fish. Mr. Barrows is one of those few, and the William Fox photoplayer says he won't forget it for many a day.

If the weather in Juneau had not been warmer than had been anticipated for this particular night, Mr. Barrows would never have acted in the films with William Farnum. He would be rolling in wealth, living in the lap of luxury, and between times, driving about in his limousine.

Arrangements had been completed for the showing of Barrows and his company in the Alaskan metropolis. Everything was ready for the actors—everything except the guarantee which had been promised them. The funds for this were in the satchel of the treasurer who had faded away over the mountains. Money was low. The actors were depressed. The town was almost without the taint of gold.

In desperation, the management agreed to accept anything tendered in the piscatorial line as coin. All Juneau flocked to the show. The price couldn't have been cheaper. The streets were filled with people walking in groups to the performance. Each person paid one fine fish for admission.

Pearl White in New Pathe Serial

Edward Jose, producer of Pathe's "The Iron Claw," will make a serial this fall with Pearl White as the star. This serial will be made under the auspices of the Astra Film Corporation and released through Pathe.

Miss White has starred in more serials than any player before the public, and her drawing power is remarkable. The association between Mr. Jose as director and Miss White as the star proved so fortunate in "The Iron Claw," that exhibitors will undoubtedly be much pleased to learn that this association will be continued.

New Rolin Quarters

The makers of Rolin comedies are preparing to move from the Hollywood studio back to their original home on the high hill overlooking the cities of Los Angeles and Hollywood. The new home is being gone over, re-wired for lights, projectors, etc., and a new large enclosed stage is under construction. A third company will soon be put on to make Rolin Comedies for Pathe.

Chicagoan Writes Special Score

Through Manager Bunn of the Chicago Pathe office, Harriet Weber, a prominent musician of the middle west, has arranged a special musical score for "The Shadow of Her Past," the Pathe feature starring Lina Cavalieri and Lucien Muratore, the grand opera songsters.

Scare Proves Value of Open Booking

V-L-S-E'S AUGUST PROGRAM HELPS WEATHER RECEIPTS

THE value and efficiency of the open booking, box office value policy of the V-L-S-E has been well demonstrated during the upheaval in the theaters of New York and Brooklyn due to the epidemic of infantile paralysis. The unusual conditions have been very readily met by the open booking plan and a strong contrast drawn between this and the flat rate system of renting pictures which calls for the same price at all times, on every film, and makes no provision for a reduction in that price in cases of emergency such as this. On the other hand, the box office value plan—which is based on the individual drawing power of each separate production, plus the drawing possibilities of each individual house, automatically adapts itself to meet such conditions as those with which we are confronted now. For, obviously, if an exhibitor is barred from filling his house by an epidemic, his drawing power is decreased and therefore the box office value of any feature to him must of necessity be decreased in ratio to the reduction in attendance.

It has not been necessary, therefore, to make any special ruling, nor to disrupt the general plan of doing business in order to meet this situation. It was taken care of before it ever arose by the simple operation of a policy which recognizes that all films cannot be of equal merit, and that business conditions cannot always be of equal stability, and that, therefore, in fairness to the exhibitor, it is simply a matter of commercial justice and sound business efficiency to provide a system of rental that would adjust itself automatically to these variances.

Not being tied by any contracts, and with no deposits at stake, the exhibitor is at liberty to shape his course exactly as he sees fit.

In other words, if he feels that he ought of necessity to close his theater until the epidemic is arrested, because of the decrease in attendance, he can do so without loss, as he has paid no money in advance, or, if he wishes to curtail in his film rentals, the open booking policy permits him to pick whatever pictures he may desire, so that he may cut his coat to fit his cloth.

In accordance with its policy of helping the exhibitor to fill his house during the summer weather the Big Four has compiled a program of unusual strength for the month of August. Heading the list is the Vitagraph release for August 7, "The Alibi," in which James Morrison and Betty Howe are featured. "The Sting of Victory," ready August 8, shows Henry B. Walthall in a double role supported by Antoinette Walker.

On the 14th will be released "The Dawn of Freedom," featuring Charles Richman, Arline Pretty, James Morrison and several other Vitagraph stars. This play, written by William J. Hurlburt and directed by Paul Scardon and Theodore Karston, is one of the most pretentious ever produced under the "V" banner.

"The Country That God Forgot," is the Selig contribution for August 21. Tom Santschi takes the leading part in this five-reel feature, supported by George Fawcett, Mary Charleson, Sidney Smith and Cecil Holland.

Another five-reeler will be released on this same day, "The Footlights of Fate," a Vitagraph feature starring Naomi Childers and Marc McDermott.

"The Kid," a newspaper story featuring Lillian Walker and produced by Wilfred North, is slated for August 28th.

V-L-S-E Makes Important Changes

Last week marked several important changes in the organization of the V-L-S-E, a branch manager, a sub-office manager, a salesman and a young lady booker being the principals.

Charles A. Meade, for the past year manager of the Dallas V-L-S-E branch office, has been promoted to the managership of the Cleveland office, to supplant C. E. Shurtleff.

J. B. Dugger, who has been Mr. Mead's assistant in the Dallas office, will succeed him as manager.

R. W. Bertelson, manager of the sub-office at Salt Lake City, has been forced to relinquish that position on account of ill health. His place is now being filled by F. A. Wagner, of whom much has been heard as a San Francisco salesman.

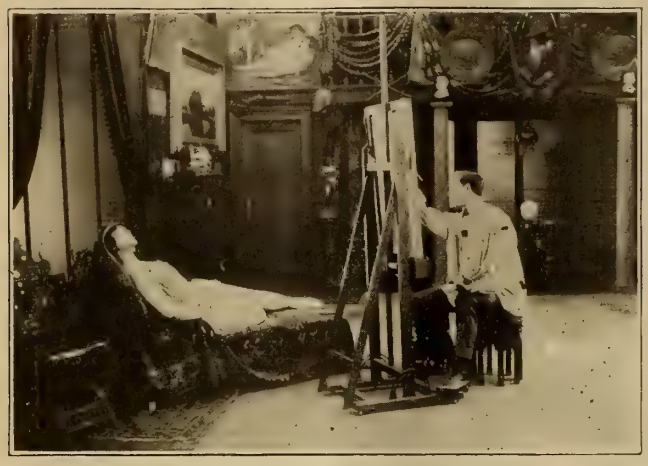
Succeeding Mr. Wagner in the San Francisco office will be M. C. Wilder, who has been promoted to a salesmanship position from that of booker.

Another young lady of the V-L-S-E came into prominence when Miss J. James was named as a booker of the San Francisco office to succeed Mr. Wilder. She has been secretary to Manager Quive of that office since the ascension of A. W. Goff to the assistant general managership of the Big Four. Previous to that time she was assistant to Mr. Goff, and kept all statistics covering San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle, Denver and Salt Lake City offices.

New "Athletic" Release

Ed (Strangler) Lewis, champion wrestler, appears in the seventh of the Selig Athletic Series to be released through V-L-S-E on August 7. The "Strangler" is seen in two matches within an hour. Marty Cutler and Joe Gustout are his opponents.

The annual field day held at Comiskey Park, Chicago, in which every champion in every line of field events in and near the Windy City took part, follows the wrestling match. The annual tug-of-war between sophomores and freshmen of Columbia University; Collier and DeWalde, champion roller skaters of the world, in a skating match and a number of difficult figures; and a pocket billiards match between Frank Weinrach, of Chicago, and Ralph Greenleaf, of Monmouth, Illinois, complete the film.



Popular Installs Own Laboratory

The Popular Plays and Players, a producing company releasing on the Metro program with such big stars as Mme. Petrova and Edmund Breese, has just installed its own laboratory at the studio in Thirty-fifth street, New York. Amos Stillman has been placed in charge of the new laboratory. He was one of the first laboratory men engaged by the Vitagraph Company in Brooklyn about ten years ago, and has been associated with some of the best known experts in the industry.

GIVE THIRTEEN AUTOMOBILES

Contest to Be Run in Connection with "The Crimson Stain Mystery" in Sixteen Episodes, Released in August

The first episode of "The Crimson Stain Mystery," the sixteen-eposide serial produced by the Erbograph Company and presented by the Consolidated Scene from the second episode of "The Crimson Stain Mystery"—Consolidated Film Corporation.

Film Corporation through the Metro exchanges, will be released the latter part of August.

The leading characters in this serial are interpreted by Maurice Costello and Ethel Grandin. The story was written by Albert Payson Terhune. So enthusiastic did Mr. Terhune become with the plot when he first began to write the story that he decided he could do it justice only by devoting his entire time to it. Accordingly he gave up temporarily his desk at the New York Evening World for the first time in twenty-two years.

Due to the extraordinary ability of Ludwig G. B. Erb the first episode shows a sample of some of the latest improvements in motion picture photography. One of these is the showing of the crimson stain in the arch-fiend's eyes from which the serial gets its name.

The direction is in the hands of T. Hayes Hunter, who received the greater part of his artistic training under David Belasco.

By arrangement with the Dry Goods Economist the women in the serial will wear gown creations that will be from five weeks to three months in advance of the prevailing fashions.

The famous Morosini Mansion at Riverdale-on-the Hudson, familiar to hundreds of tourists who make the day boat trip on the Hudson between Albany and New York, will be used in many of the episodes of the serial.

In connection with the presentation of the serial, "The Crimson Stain Mystery," the Consolidated Film Corporation will give away thirteen automobiles in a contest consisting of the submission of the best idea for a five-reel feature based on the characters, mysteries and situations in "The Crimson Stain Mystery." The United States will be subdivided into thirteen zones and the best idea submitted from each zone will receive an automobile. Names and reputations do not count in this contest. The story is the only thing that does count and it will be judged solely on its merits by a board of judges composed of some of the best known men in the motion picture and newspaper fields. The contest closes August 1, 1917. All manuscripts must be typewritten and addressed to Contest Committee, Consolidated Film Corporation, 1482 Broadway, New York City.

MANY SEPTEMBER BOOKINGS

Fifty Prints of the Thomas Dixon-Victor Herbert "The Fall of a Nation" Will Be in Use Soon After Labor Day.

The demand for "The Fall of a Nation" by state rights buyers and exhibitors continues in such force that E. V. Giroux, general manager of the National Drama Corporation, says fifty prints will be working by the middle of September. Ten prints of the Dixon-Herbert spectacle were completed in July for the immediate quick requirements, but forty more have recently been ordered to keep pace with the rapidly increasing demands. At the same time Arthur W. Tams has printed large editions of the Victor Herbert orchestral and piano music, which is advertised as "the first original score written for a great picture by a composer of foremost rank."

The New England campaign of the film started on July 31 with a week's run at James E. Moore's Modern Theater, Providence. Many exhibitors from eastern Massachusetts and Rhode Island mingled in the big crowd that attended the premier. Wallace M. Powers represented the interests of the National Drama Corporation. Willard Holcomb, business manager of J. Frank Hatch's "Fall of a Nation" company, reports good business at the Euclid Avenue Opera House, Cleveland, where the picture had its first Ohio showing beginning July 30. A tour in the first class theaters of Toledo, Dayton, Columbus and Cincinnati will follow the Cleveland run.

Under the direction of Mrs. William Bramwell, (nee Minnie Seligman), a benefit performance of the spectacle will be given at the Hotel Nassau, Long Beach, on Wednesday evening, August 9. The gross receipts will be devoted to the relief of guardsmen's families who were left without funds by the militia move to the Mexican border.

Juanita Hansen Goes to Fox

According to the latest advices from the coast, Juanita Hansen, the heroine of "The Secret of the Submarine," has left the American Company and accepted an engagement with the Fox Company. Miss Hansen probably will play opposite George Walsh under the direction of Otis Turner, at the new Fox studios in Hollywood, Calif.

Miss Hansen is a particularly beautiful blonde, and her features are well known to newspaper and magazine readers.

Southern Trade Paper Changes Hands

The Motion Picture Journal, a monthly trade publication for the Southern exhibitor and exchangeman, published at Dallas, Texas, has changed hands. C. A. Walker, formerly editor and owner, sold his interests to S. G. Howell, of Dallas, who has been identified with the trade as manager of the United Seating Company of Dallas. Mr. Howell will incorporate his own ideas to improve the magazine and make it of value to exhibitors of the South.

Two New Pathe Serials

"THE SHIELDING SHADOW" SERIES RELEASED OCTOBER FIRST

The statuesque Madeline Traverse and Leon Barry in "The Shielding Shadow," Pathe's newest and biggest silent serial.

IN accordance with Pathe's promise to exhibitors of seven serials a year two more continued photoplays have been added to the five million dollar serial program. These stories are from the pens of Mabel Herbert Urner, author of "Helen and Warren," "Their Married Life," and others; and Guy McConnell, who has contributed to the best magazines in the country. It is understood that one of the new serials will be produced by the Astra Film Corporation and the other by Balboa. Mrs. Urner and Mr. McConnell are now at work on their stories and production will begin shortly. One of the new serials is scheduled for release in October and the other in December. Pearl White will play the lead in one of these plays.

"The Shielding Shadow," a serial in fifteen episodes, will be released October first. This is the first serial to be made by the Astra Film Corporation. A trio of stars are featured—Grace Darmond, Ralph Kellard and Leon Barry. There is also a mysterious character called "Ravengar," who will baffle the audiences even more than did the mystery of the Laughing Mask in "The Iron Claw." The author of the scenarios is George B. Seitz, who wrote "The Iron Claw."

The Pathe Company will institute a record-breaking advertising campaign on "The Shielding Shadow." In addition to newspaper advertising in all the large cities billboards and painted signboards will be used to further the publicity. The novelization of the serial is by Randall Parrish, one of the most popular writers in the United States.

Last Chapters of "The Grip of Evil"

The last three episodes of Pathe's masterplot in fourteen chapters, "The Grip of Evil," form a six-reel serial of themselves. To bring the story to its powerful climax the producer has found it advisable to use the same characters and continue the same story throughout the twelfth, thirteenth and fourteenth chapters.

Results of a nation-wide debate have been visualized on the screen and the opinion shared by the majority that "God's in His Heaven, all's well with the world," is presented in the twelfth episode. The theme of the thirteenth chapter stated briefly is "How Sweet is Forgiveness." The fourteenth chapter brings the characters to a graceful, fitting and satisfying denouement.

The ministers of Cleveland, as well as many others, are taking much interest in the discussion of the question, "Is the world today in the grip of evil?" according to a four-column headline in a recent issue of the Cleveland Leader. For the fourteen best answers of two hundred words or less to the problem "Is the world in the grip of evil?" the Leader will give $100.00 in prizes, the awards to be made by a committee of judges to be named later. The Leader has appointed a "Grip of Evil Editor," to whom answers must be sent. The first prize is $50.00, second $25.00, third $10.00, fourth $5.00 and ten will be $1.00 each.

Exhibitors in Cleveland are benefitting largely by this discussion and they are doing everything they can to promote it with the entire co-operation of Pathe's local office. Results are heavy bookings and crowded theaters.

With a five-reel Gold Rooster comedy drama produced by Thanhouser—two reels embracing a "Is Humanity in the Grip of Evil?" problem; a thousand feet of Heinie comedy, and a split reel educational containing two timely subjects besides the two reels of Pathe News, the Pathe program for the week beginning August 27 deals a hand to exhibitors all of which are trumps.

The five-reeler is "The Shine Girl," featuring Gladys Hulette. This is a sweet story with a great human appeal and is the kind of picture that will be approved by the severest women's clubs or societies active for "motion picture reforms."

"The Butterflies," two "Grip of Evil" reels, wins out in second place. "Caught in a Jam," is the title of the slapstick Heinie comedy.

Of the scenics "Weapons of War" is an interesting trip through Creusot, France, noted for its active manufacture of modern guns. Much that is not known of these death-dealing war monsters is revealed. On the same reel is Historic St. Augustine, a splendid scenic of the oldest historic city in the United States.

Exhibitors Compliment "Iron Claw" Producer

A most remarkable tribute to Pathe's "The Iron Claw" and the regard in which producer Edward Jose is held by the exhibitor is furnished by a letter which Ellis F. Glickman of Chicago is sending to a number of theaters which have shown the serial. Mr. Glickman, who is a prominent theater man, suggests that as probably every exhibitor who has shown "The Iron Claw" has made much money with it, it would be a good thing to show a proper appreciation for it by giving Mr. Jose a suitable testimonial. Therefore he suggests the sending of fifty cents or a dollar to L. O. Fiske, 1493 Broadway, New York, who has consented to act as treasurer of the fund. When enough money has been collected a loving cup will probably be purchased, suitably engraved, and presented to Mr. Jose.

Powerful on Stage and Screen

Henry Kolker, who heads the supporting company in "Gloria's Romance," the George Kleine motion picture novel, in which Billie Burke is the featured star, has proved time and again on the screen that he is just as capable a star when appearing in the silent drama as he is on the speaking stage, where he can use his voice to aid his pantomime. As Dr. Stephen Royce, the young physician who falls in love with Gloria Stafford, Kolker grows decidedly better as the story progresses.

Henry Kolker, the powerful "legitimate" actor who leads in "Gloria's Romance," opposite Billie Burke.

This talented player began his career with the German Stock Company of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, soon afterwards joining Robert Downing in such plays as "The Gladiator," "Damon and Pythias," "Virginius," and "Othello." After spending two seasons with Mr. Downing, Kolker headed the company supporting James O'Neill in "Hamlet" and other classics. The next five years were spent as leading man of stock companies and at the end of that period he was cast for the title role in "Sergeant James," Mr. Eugene Walter's first play, produced by Kirk La Shelle. Under the Liebler management he toured the country in the role of John Storm in "The Christian," played in Leo Dietrichstein's "Military Mad" at the Garrick theater, and then for a season of twenty weeks supported Ada Rehan in "The School for Scandal," "The Taming of the Shrew" and "The Country Girl." Mr. Kolker also played in the original production of "Strongheart" at the Hudson theater, New York.

After a season as leading man for Mme. Kalich, he appeared with the same star in "The Kreutzer Sonata." His next engagement was as leading man for Rachael Crothers in "The Three of Us" and then he left for a tour of Australia with Margaret Anglin in "The Thief," "The Taming of the Shrew," and "Twelfth Night," returning to America to join Madame Nazimova in her production of "The Passion Flower." He later came under Col. Henry W. Savage's management and was starred in "The Great Name" and "The Greyhound."

Later he was starred in "Our Wives" and in "Help Wanted," both very unusual successes. It was just following his appearance for a season in that splendid play, "Our Children," that he did his first picture work in the feature entitled "The Bridge."

New Seating Material

The Du Pont Fabrikoid Company of Wilmington, Delaware, has introduced into motion picture equipment a new and highly durable upholstering material known as "Fabrikoid," which is available to every owner of a motion picture house for re-upholstery of their seats.

This material is clean, neat and gives a luxurious appearance. It adds much to the appearance of the house.

"Fabrikoid" is an artificial leather which wears for years without the appearance of shoddiness which ordinarily comes from continuous use of split leather and many other upholstery materials. It is a preparation which is manufactured with a basis of strong, tightly woven cotton cloth into which the outside coating penetrates so that the cloth and coating become one. This is in turn grained so that the casual observer could not tell whether it is the natural grain leather or not.

An ordinary hide to be used for bookbinding and upholstery is cut or "split" into four layers.

Fabrikoid is much stronger than any of these, its base being woven of very strong cotton cloth, while the base of coated "splits" is a thick pulpy piece of flesh, much weaker than cloth. Both being coated and embossed in the same manner, you will see that Fabrikoid has the advantage. It is also waterproof, which allows it to be washed without injury. This is a feature that will no doubt interest theater owners.

Chicago Theater Sold

M. J. Mintz, formerly owner and manager of the Harvard Theater, Chicago, Illinois, has sold his house to Fecher & Nortman, who are also operating two other theaters in Chicago.

Mr. Mintz has not yet made any definite plans as to his future business ventures but says he believes he will leave the exhibiting and enter the film end of the business. Mr. Mintz has been a very successful exhibitor and the Harvard Theater has been noted for its systematic management and good service.

Patterson Promoted

E. G. Patterson, who has been the right hand man of H. O. Davis, vice-president and general manager of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has been placed in charge of the entire plant of the company at Universal City, where thirty-eight separate producing companies are in operation.

The Midland Film Company of Cleveland has completed the purchase of 150 acres of land, where only seven-reel pictures will be made, among which is "An Ounce of Gold," by Alexander Miller Ingraham.

Fox Adds Three Directors

WILLIAM FARNUM WILL PORTRAY ONE MORE WESTERN ROLE

THREE new directors have been added to the already large directorate of the Fox Flim Corporation. They are Otis Turner, Teft Johnson and Frank Lloyd. The addition of these men gives William Fox a total of twelve motion picture makers, which is undoubtedly the largest staff ever retained by any motion picture company.

The list now includes J. Gordon Edwards, Kenean Buel, James Vincent, Bertram Bracken, John G. Adolfi, Oscar C. Apfel, R. A. Walsh, Richard Stanton, Will S. Davis, Otis Turner, Teft Johnson and Frank Lloyd.

Each of the new directors is well known in the screen world. Mr. Turner was on the stage for years before he entered the picture field, after which he became circus manager and later film maker. By a curious coincidence Mr. Lloyd was once the "heavy" in Turner's motion picture delegation.

The retention of this unprecedented number of directors means that William Fox has taken another step toward the goal of pictures perfect in every detail and it means, too, that more time and care will be devoted to the picture, and the high standard insured.

Farnum in One More Western

William Fox did not take into account the feeling of the picture-going public when he announced that William Farnum would no longer be seen in western roles but would hereafter portray more elite roles and "society life." William Farnum can't come back east yet. The public won't let him. As soon as the announcement was made that he would forsake his western roles both Mr. Farnum and Mr. Fox were bombarded with entreaties to allow at least one more picture of the type for which he is famous. So once more Mr. Farnum will don the blue shirt of the mining camp and make his positively-last-appearance in a western role. Oscar C. Apfel, who has directed more than half of the William Farnum photoplays, will have charge of the filming of this final adieu to the west. The scenario for the production was written by Henry Christeen Warnack, a well-known dramatic critic of Los Angeles.

Theda Bara also has been forced to bow to the demands of the public that their "vampire lady" be returned to them. Miss Bara has just started work on her third picture, in which she is cast in a "sympathetic" role, and this will be her last, for William Fox has said "the public be pleased," and Miss Bara will return in a part more vampirish than ever. William Fox has proved to the world's satisfaction, and Miss Bara to her own, that the peerless "vampire" could be just as peerless in a somewhat sugar-coated role; for Miss Bara has won the hearts of thousands as the lovely Isabel in "East Lynne" and as the lovable Cigarette in "Under Two Flags."

Three of the big guns of the Fox dramatic forces—Theda Bara, soon to go a-vampiring again, A. H. Van Buren and Virginia Pearson.

Several new names have been added during the last week to the list of William Fox photoplayers. The biggest addition is undoubtedly Frank D. Alexander, who weighs 320 pounds.

Caroline Harris, who is now working in a new Valeska Suratt picture, is another new actress with the Fox company. Miss Harris had a long training on the stage before going into the picture work.

Two other newcomers are Mabel Van Buren and Charles Arling. Miss Van Buren has had a long experience in stock and is already well known in the realm of motion pictures as she has acted in many feature films. Mr. Arling's first position was that of errand boy in a bird store. From this he jumped into chief baritone of the Bostonian Opera Company, and thence into pictures.

The recent explosion in New Jersey shattered three dozen camera plates of as many different scenes in one of the William Fox pictures now being screened on the Pacific Coast. The plates had been sent from the Western studios and were resting securely in a downtown express office, until they were so rudely shocked.

In her newest photoplay for William Fox, June Caprice had to receive special instructions in cow lore. She learned two important things about cows: (1) How to milk them; (2) How to ride them. She does both in skilled fashion now.

Director J. Gordon Edwards, one of the foremost with the William Fox Company, has completed eight feature films in the last seven months. The last picture was done in exactly twenty-three days. For a five-part photoplay of the high order of the newest production, this is undoubtedly a record for fast—and good—work.

That the high cost of living or the higher cost of furniture is not considered by the William Fox studio workers is demonstrated in the fact that eleven different bed-room sets had to be erected for the new Valeska Suratt photoplay which is now being made by Director Will S. Davis.

Because of the infantile paralysis epidemic, John W. Kellette has had a great deal of difficulty in recruiting his cast of children for June Caprice's new Fox picture. Twelve of the little ones have important roles.

Under the headline, "Especially Recommended—A selected list of the most recent Better Films," in the Woman's Home Companion for September, is "The Man From Bitter Roots,"

One of the most popular scenes with the youthful contingent of New York's East Side, ever filmed, was taken a few days ago by a company of William Fox players. The picture called for the upsetting of a beautifully laden cart of bananas. The stock of one of the vendors was bought up, the cart tipped over, and then the rush began. The director got all the action he desired—and the "kids" had all the bananas they wanted.

One of the four glass enclosed Ince stages at Culver City, California, is shown at the lower left and below at the right is the fireproof film vault sheltering millions of dollars worth of crystalized dramas.

The administration building of the new Ince studios (shown on the left) is an example of good taste in architecture which might well be followed by the whole industry. Studio buildings heretofore have not, in general, been things of beauty.

Splendid Ince Studios Complete

THE new Ince studios at Culver City which have just been completed represent the last word in structures of their kind. The entire plant represents an investment of practically a million dollars and is a striking monument to the growth of the film business.

The boulevard frontage of the studio is several hundred feet long, is monumental in architectural treatment and unbroken, save by a great columned gateway. At the corner of the lot facing the street is the administration building, the brain center from which the giant mechanism is controlled.

Adjoining the administration building is a big two-storied department of costumes where you can uniform a company of warriors of almost any period or country on five minutes notice.

Along the front of the lot is the double-decked array of dressing rooms, each with its individual outside entrance.

The Ince studios where the actual photography in the making of Triangle pictures takes place are all of steel and glass. There are four of them in all, each about 150 feet long and 70 feet wide. Their special value lies in the fact that they permit of every minute of sunlight being utilized each day.

An extremely interesting building is the film vault, where there is approximately $1,000,000 worth of film stored at all times. Work on the studios has been under way for almost a year. Unlike many other structures devoted to similar purposes, the Ince studios have been built with an eye to permanency and they will undoubtetdly be a lasting evidence of the enormity which characterizes everything connected with the film industry today.

Sir Herbert Tree at Work

Sir Herbert Tree is now working in earnest in the Fine Arts-Triangle drama, "Old Folks at Home," from the short story of the same name by Rupert Hughes. Chet Withey is directing the production.

Included in the cast are Josephine Crowell, Elmer Clifton, Mildred Harris and W. E. Lawrence. Lucille Younge has the part of a vampire, and said it is the vampiriest vampire part she ever had.

Sir Herbert has the role of the father whose son leaves the farm for a career of excitement in the city.

Scenic effects all done in black and white is the novelty introduced in the Triangle comedy, "Puppets," featuring De Wolf Hopper, and directed by Ted Browning. The production is being made somewhat along the lines of a French pantomime. Hopper wears a black and white striped suit, as does the balance of the other members of the cast. The background of the majority of the settings are also finished in black and white. "Puppets" promises to be one of the most unique pictures released on the Triangle program.

Norma Talmadge adds fresh and convincing proof to the fact that she is in the foremost rank of screen stars by her work in "The Devil's Needle," an exceedingly powerful Triangle feature released August 15. At the same time Tully Marshall again demonstrates his remarkable ability for characterizations that are both gripping and sensational.

The story of "The Devil's Needle" is essentially that of a man's heroic struggle with his own weakness. The moving power that aids him in his struggle is the love of a good woman. The story is exceedingly well told and the action is swift and certain.

Mention of Marguerite Marsh and F. A. Turner, who appear in strong roles in support of the leading characters, must be made in any storoy of the pictures. They give exceptionally careful interpretations of their roles and lend not a little to the general excellence of the picture.

A tentative title was this week given the first of the Helen Holmes features to be produced while the Signal Film Corporation is stationed at Eureka, Cal. "A Lass of the Lumberlands" is the name chosen, and in its production Miss Holmes will appear in the title role.

POWERFUL LABOR DRAMA, "THE DAWN OF FREEDOM," RELEASED AUGUST 14

THE question of Capital versus Labor has always aroused a great deal of discussion, and a picture based on this same subject which is making people think, and which before very long will cause many changes in the management of affairs, is likely to cause a great deal of comment. "The Dawn of Freedom," Vitagraph's five-reel Blue Ribbon feature listed for release August 14, is such a picture, and is a stinging satire on the death of those ideals that made the nation. Charles Richman takes the leading role supported by Arline Pretty in a dual role, James Morrison, Joseph Kilgour, Billie Billings, Thomas R. Mills, Templar Saxe, Edward Saxe and Edward Elkas.

It would seem that the motion picture players who spend most of their lives having their pictures taken would run at the sight of a camera but the reverse is the case as is shown by the fact that the busiest person near the Vitagraph studios is the "Tin Type Man" who has set up his outfit in a lot near the studio and the actresses and actors spend all their spare time having tin types taken separately and in groups.

Dr. Sigmund Stark, physician for the New York studios of the Vitagraph Company, returned from Camp Whitman for a few minutes on Friday and arrived at the studio just as Director Larry Semon's troop of fun-makers in fantastic costumes were leaving the yard with a battered brass band. Seeing him, they turned and marched around the yard at his back, tooting their tattered trumpets and banging their ragged drums. Used to such doings, the doctor did not realize that he was the object of their affection for several minutes. When he did, Uncle Sam's bold medical adviser flung honor to the wings and fled, to the joy of the rest of the studio.

Jules D. Cowles, the well known character heavy, is collecting tin foil from all his friends who smoke. It will be pressed into a ball and shipped to the Red Cross committee in Paris and the proceeds of this consignment will be used to aid families of wounded soldiers.

Edith Storey to "Stampede"

Edith Storey will represent Vitagraph in "The Stampede" at Sheepshead Bay. Several years ago Miss Storey was famous for her work in western dramas and was a familiar figure on the billboards dressed in buckskin. The date of Miss Storey's appearance is August 10, and she has entered for every event except the bucking horse and declares she would have entered that also if they would give her a mount guaranteed to fight fair and not reach around and bite her in the calf.

Peggy Hyland, the English actress, is one of the marvels of the Vitagraph studios for in one feature play she has just finished she wore twenty-five different dresses—and not once did she put on the wrong dress. With twenty-five different gowns, each for nearly always a different scene, and the scenes coming out of rotation in the doing and all jumbled up from day to day in the mazes of the story, it is an intellectual strain to appear properly garbed each time. This is a record for often actors and directors make a mistake when only three or four different costumes are involved.

"Oh Joyce! Alice is Back!"

The old saying, "they never come back," cannot be applied to the motion picture star, for Alice Joyce has come back in all her glory. Letters are pouring in on Miss Joyce asking if it was really true that she had returned, when her first picture will be released, what kind of part she plays, if there is an opportunity for her to show her motherhood in the story and the thousands of other questions dear to the fan's heart. And it never seems to occur to the star that it is herself that the people love, and not what she has done, except for her acting.

One of Uncle Sam's gallant Jackies paid a unique tribute to Anita Stewart, who is now recovering from an attack of typhoid fever. He confessed that before going into battle he placed a picture of Miss Stewart next to his heart so that if he was killed in battle the fellows would find this picture and wonder if she was his sweetheart.

New Keystone Comedies

"Love on Skates," a Mack Sennett-Keystone comedy, now being filmed, is the picture story of a rather mixed up love affair, in which a dazzling vampire plays an important part.

Bobbie Vernon is in love with Myrtle Lind. He has the "question" all framed and the engagement ring in his pocket. But, alas! he proved fickle hearted and allows his attention to turn to Helen Bray, who flirts with him before he sees the girl he desired to make his wife on his proposal errand. Fred Mace has started work on a new comedy piece that bids fair to be one of the most laughable pictures ever produced at the Mack Sennett-Keystone studios.

It is entitled "The Fire Chief," and the story gives the popular Mace an opportunity to appear at his best.

Barbers and manicures hold a series of big jollifications that would make the printed accounts of the doings of the ultra-fashionable read like a pauper's funeral, in "The Manicurist," a tremendously funny Mack Sennett-Keystone comedy, now being filmed.

The operation of an "improved" street car fender provides no end of stirring comedy situations, in a Mack Sennett-Keystone production, now being filmed under the direction of Glen Cavender at the Edendale plant of the Keystone Film Company.

Henry Gribbon is the superintendent of a street car company, also somewhat of a "bad" villain, and out after the hand of May Thurman, the president's daughter.

Molly Malone Becomes a Universalite

Molly Malone, a dainty miss of nineteen, has just been made leading lady of George Cochrane's Universal Company. Miss Malone's first engagement was when she was seventeen, with the Western Vitagraph, with which she played leads. She next accepted an engagement with the Lubin Company, and later went to the Lasky Feature Plays Company. Previous to entering the pictures, Miss Malone traveled extensively in America and Mexico, and took a trip around the world, spending a year in South Africa with relatives.

Miss Malone is a real out-door girl and loves to hunt, fish, swim and row a boat. She revels in the pictures, the scenes of which take her to the mountains or the seashore.

Porto Rican Exhibitor Gets Big House

From Porto Rico comes a tribute to the drawing power of Pathe's serial, "The Iron Claw." The manager of the Teatro San Agustin writes that with this serial he established a new record for Porto Rico with 1,506 paid admissions in one evening. He says that for the first time he has been compelled to give two shows in the same evening to accommodate the people, and had to make good on one hundred and eleven admissions in excess of the number the police allowed him.

Europeans Prefer American Films

ROY AITKEN, OF TRIANGLE, DESCRIBES PICTURE CONDITIONS IN ENGLAND

THAT American film productions are better received in England than those of their own manufacture is one fact that has been satisfactorily proved to Roy Aitken, president of the Western Import Company, and brother of Harry E. Aitken, president of the Triangle Film Corporation.

Mr. Aitken recently returned from Europe, where he has been arranging for the handling of film, both in the British Empire and on the continent. In discussing the foreign market he says:

It is not the slightest exaggeration to say that America controls the film business abroad. At least seventy-five per cent of the motion pictures that are shown in England are made in this country.

Speaking strictly from a business standpoint, I found the Triangle pictures to be by far the most favored of all brands. The people over there have not taken to motion pictures with quite the same enthusiasm that they showed in this country. They seemed, rather to hold aloof and insisted on having it demonstrated to them that they were worth while. Triangle pictures seemed to convince them that motion pictures were all that was claimed for them, more quickly than did the pictures that bore other labels.

One thing that impresses the observer strongly in England is the fact that pictures that have the woman element strongly in them, appeal the most. Stories dealing with marriage problems, if they are in no way suggestive, are extremely popular. Whether there is a connection to be traced from this to the fact that, aside from the immediate vicinity of concentration camps where the recruiting is going on, the great majority of motion picture theater-goers are women, I do not know. It does seem a fair assumption though, that it indicates pretty strongly the kind of pictures women—at least the women of England—like best.

And before we get away from that subject, let me tell you the day of the western picture, so far as Europe is concerned, is over, unless there is something decidedly unusual about it. Europe has been flooded with so-called western pictures, nearly all of them badly done, and now they are not interested at all.

The war, of course, has affected the motion picture business, though not as much perhaps as might be imagined. In their hour of greatest distress, people the world over seem to demand more relaxation, and at present the moving pictures are about all they have in the way of entertainment.

The fact that so many million wage earners are now at the front or have been killed, however, makes a decided difference in the attendance at the theaters. Another thing that plays a very important part in the matter is the change in time. The time has been advanced one hour in order to get the advantage of more daylight. When the time comes at night for the public to go to the theaters, one finds that it is still very light and early, and they are more inclined to seek pleasure either at the beaches or in the parks in preference to going to the theaters. There is also a heavy war tax on each admission, which has a tendency to decrease the attendance.

Despite the really remarkable growth of interest in motion pictures abroad, however, they have not as yet come into their own. One reason is the absence of fine, big, impressive motion picture theaters. There is not one in all England that can even be compared with the Rialto Theater here.

It is that one consideration, more than any other thing, that has thus far kept the newspapers from crediting the motion pictures with the importance which is actually theirs. That situation will be changed, however, within a very short time.

Coming Triangles

Director Raymond B. West has introduced some very clever trick photography in "The Wolf Woman," the Triangle "vampire" story by C. Gardner Sullivan, in which Louise Glaum and Charles Ray are presented as co-stars by Thomas H. Ince. Miss Glaum apparently falls headlong through a large mirror. Mr. West admits the actress was not injured; moreover, he declares she did not even assume any risk of injury in enacting the scene. And yet, to the observer, it is said the sight is grewsome in its reality.

In "The Captive God," a Triangle-Kay Bee feature in which William S. Hart is star, a new and original plan was invented for handling the mob which consisted of between 2,500 and 3,000 men who were working for two weeks. On a level space near the entrance to the plant, thirty partitions were erected and each was numbered. Then as the men filed in, the first 100 were instructed to dress in partition No. 1, the next hundred in No. 2, and so on. In this way, the confusion of finding a place and the attendant crowding and delay were eliminated.

A notable cast of players is presented by Thomas H. Ince in the Triangle-Kay Bee play "The Phantom," in which Frank Keenan and Enid Markey are offered as co-stars. Everyone is familiar with the consistently strong work of these stars. Supporting these leads appear Robert McKim, Charles K. French, J. Barney Sherry, P. D. Tabler and Jack Gilbert.

Film Newspaper Swift

NEW YORK EXHIBITORS RUN SPEEDY INTERNATIONAL NEWS FILMS IN COLORS

THE film newspaper now parallels the "old-fashioned" one. And in these days even the celluloid sheet is "printed in colors." Moving pictures of a great catastrophe or other big news event on exhibition in theaters at the same time that the man in the street is buying and reading his newspaper "extra" has become a reality.

The International Film Service placed in all of the important New York motion picture theaters a few hours later scenes of the ammunition disaster at Black Tom, New Jersey, which rocked New York and was felt in five states. This demonstrated that the Hearst International News Pictorial is able to work almost as speedily as the daily press.

The fact that the disaster occurred early on a Sunday morning threw some difficulties in the way. While automobiles were taking the camera men to the scene of the explosion within a half an hour after it took place, other machines before daylight were rounding up the men who were to develop, dry, print and cut the film. As the cameramen "at the front" shot back their negative, it was rushed to the developing room. The result was shown that evening on the screens of scores of theaters.

Despite the little time in which to work, the Hearst International found time to color the remarkable pictures, which would have lost fifty per cent of their value if put out in plain black and white, owing to the fact the cameramen worked on top of the great masses of flame which without color would not have shown clearly in the picture.

Sunday is a non-work day in all union print shops with the exception of those under special arrangement such as daily newspapers. For any other organization to have had one sheets printed would have been an impossibility. But the co-operation of the Hearst organization came into play and the New York American and Evening Journal composing rooms were utilized: Composers and linotype operators were taken away from their work and made busy setting and printing the Hearst International News Pictorial posters.

It is doubtful if any more remarkable pictures than those released as a special extra by the Hearst International News Pictorial and those put in the regular release of that news film, have ever been made. The fact that they were procured is due to the courage of Herman Stockhoff, Eugene Boyd and Arthur Sorenson, of the International Film Service staff. Stockhoff and Sorenson handled the cameras while Boyd directed the task of photographing the great disaster. The photographers were constantly under fire from three-inch shells and shrapnel shells which exploded continually from barges loaded with ammunition, the shells cases whistling and shrieking past the cameramen and the firemen beside whom they were working.

Cases and carloads of powder exploded. No one knew at which point the next blast would take place, but no one worried about that.

The firemen and police might have forced the photographers back out of the danger zone, but they were too busy with the tremendous task on their hands. Stockhoff climbed over burning and crumbling piers and narrowly escaped being caught by a falling factory wall. Sorenson, on board a tug, ran in beside the fireboats and revenue cutters on the water side. So close was his tug that the crew were compelled to play a hose on it to keep it from catching fire.

Private Showings of "Beatrice Fairfax"

A private view of "Beatrice Fairfax," the new serial of the International Film Service, Inc., was given to exhibitors and the press in the Criterion Theater, New York, on August 8.

The first two episodes and the prologue of "Beatrice Fairfax" were shown, as were also the current news reel and cartoons. A symphony orchestra furnished music. The greatest interest has been aroused in the "Beatrice Fairfax" serial and a large crowd attended the private showing.

Members of the Friars Club also attended in a body the first private showing of "Beatrice Fairfax." They cheered lustily their fellow member, Harry Fox, who has a star part in the production and was seen for the first time on the screen.

Lillian Concord With Universal

One of the new comers at Universal City is Lillian Concord, who will appear in big productions and who was well known on the operatic and vaudeville stage before she entered pictures.

Miss Concord was educated at Berkeley and the University of Wisconsin, where she played leading roles as a prima donna in college productions. Her education was completed in Paris, after which she appeared for one season in grand opera in New York and then became a headliner of the Orpheum circuit.

She followed Flora Zabelle in "The Red Widow" and then became prima donna in "The Midnight Girl." She has been starred in stock in the east but was attracted to California by her desire to enter the pictures.

Joseph M. Goldstein, president of the Exclusive Features, Inc., is in the middle western states, signing up state right buyers for the seven-part photoplay "Where Is My Father?" He reports that most of the states have been contracted for.

Exhibitors are now billing Essanay's "The War Bride of Plumville."

FOX STAR TEACHES SWIMMING

Annette Kellermann Urges the Installation of Bathing Pools in Every School, Apartment Building and City

Annette Kellermann, star of the William Fox spectacle, "A Daughter of the Gods," is teaching three-quarters of a million pupils how to swim during the warm weather months. All of this is being done through the newspapers of America who accepted her offer to give free swimming lessons through their columns.

Miss Kellermann calls attention to the fact that swimming in America is still in its infancy and remarks as to the laxness of those in authority in not furnishing adequate bathing accommodations in the cities. Miss Kellermann advocates that all schools and apartment houses install pools and every city have at least a half dozen large bathing pools. The great swimmer says:

"There is a lot of money to be made in conducting bathing pools, and if those in charge could only see for enough ahead, and build these pools, and charge a small admission fee, they would be surprised to find how much money there is in this proposition."

Annette Kellermann without a doubt has done a lot to make swimming a popular sport, especially among women and she was the first woman in the world to establish long distance swimming records. Her struggles throughout her early life, when she was a weak little child and had to wear iron braces on her legs, up to the time she became the world's champion swimmer reads like a romance, and shows what indomitable will power will do.

In "A Daughter of the Gods" Miss Kellermann passes through several hundred dangers without harm. She leaps 100 feet from a window into the ocean, is pursued in the water by more than a hundred negro swimmers, outdistances them and is finally trapped in a cove just as a huge shark nears her; is sentenced to be thrown to the crocodiles in a pool; bound hand and foot; goes with the speed of a train down three miles of rocky channel; and finally hurled over a great waterfall into peaceful water below.

President George K. Spoor, of Essanay, has obtained the rights to "The Prince of Graustark" and will produce it as a five-act photoplay.

This is a sequel to George Barr McCutcheon's popular "Graustark," produced in six acts by Essanay.

FILMS FOR SCHOOLS

New York Board of Education Proposes Adoption of Motion Pictures for Certain Uses in Public Schools

Realizing the great benefit being derived from the use of motion pictures by many large mercantile firms which have used this method of acquainting the public with instructive facts pertaining to their business, and working on the theory that if adults are easily instructed in this manner the children will learn even more quickly, the board of superintendents of New York City has placed before the Board of Education a plan for the adoption of motion pictures for certain limited uses in the public schools.

It has recommended that when the work of visual instruction in the schools is placed on a broader basis lists of approved motion picture films, lantern slides, etc., be prepared for each school grade and for general assembly use so that desultory and inefficient work may not be done in this line.

The board of superintendents is planning to make use during the year 1917 of the great stock of well-selected lantern slides and illustrative material on hand at the State Department of Education at Albany. This stock has not been available for the schools of New York City for several years past, owing to a lack of proper organization to make use of it. Within the past few months a beginning has been made to properly organize for use the visual instruction material belonging to the state.

The work cannot be done, however, without the proper equipment and financial support. To make this possible the board of superintendents has recommended to the Board of Education that $20,585 be included in the budget of 1917 for "maintaining, increasing and organizing visual instruction in the schools." The largest item is for the rental of films.

A piece of freak rolling stock was this week purchased by director general J. P. McGowan and added to the railroad equipment at the Signal studios. A seven-passenger car was purchased and flange wheels fitted to it so that it may be operated on standard gauge railroad tracks. The car is to be used to travel to and from the studio-station when they are working on exterior scenes along the tracks.

Paramount Plans Publicity Drive

MAGAZINE AND NEWSPAPER STORIES LATEST INNOVATION

HIRAM ABRAMS, president of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, announces that as a result of the publicity conference recently held in Chicago, at which Wallace Thompson of Paramount, Ben Schulberg of the Famous Players, John Flinn of Lasky, and Carl Pierce of Morosco and Pallas, laid out a program of subjects which brought up for discussion practically every open question in the matter of publicity, working plans were formed which will enable Paramount to accomplish something that no motion picture organization has yet been able to achieve.

The entire Paramount family will be linked together in a drive which will make Paramount pictures produced by Famous Players, Lasky, Morosco and Pallas not only the best pictures made in the world, but the best known productions in every town and city where they are shown. Mr. Abrams wants every Paramount exhibitor and non-Paramount exhibitor, who today is using Paramount short reels in the hope that he will ultimately be able to get Paramount feature plays in the protected territory in which he is located, to feel that Paramount is working with him to make his business bigger and this is one big battle which is being fought and in which the exhibitor can depend upon Paramount and Paramount will depend upon the exhibitor for mutual success.

Exhibitors Tell how to Handle Crowds

H. I. Day, editor of Paramount Progress, has received some very interesting replies to the question as to how exhibitors are handling crowds in their theaters. One of the best of these was received from Emery Downs, manager of the Knickerbocker Theater, Cleveland, Ohio. Mr. Downs says the crowds should be handled before they arrive by giving the patrons explicit information both by slides and programs as to just the minute the feature will start at each show. On days when special pictures are shown the doors should be opened five or ten minutes before the regular time; ushers should see that no single seats are left between parties not together; and the volume of patronage for the first show carefully watched in order that one may know how the seats will be vacated as the second show starts to empty the house. If the house fills before the finish of the first show there should be an usher standing at the ticket window announcing "There are no seats for the first performance; the second show will start at ——, when there will be seats for all."

Stanley V. Mastbaum, of the Stanley Company of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, also gives some good ideas on this subject. He believes if there is a crowd waiting in the lobby the lobby man should allow only such a number of people to enter as would again fill two-thirds of the standing room as it is much easier to handle and seat those standing if there is room for them to move toward the chain release without being crowded. The releasing of standees must be systematized, the entire floor force must work together. The ushers should know at all times just how many vacant seats they have in their respective section and make same known to the assistant manager, who, upon releasing the chain directs the patrons to such aisles where seats are to be had. It is better not to allow more than four or five people to be released at one time, as they can be handled much quicker and with less confusion than if allowed to go in or out in droves.

Latest Publicity Mediums

One of the cleverest and most effective publicity mediums inaugurated in the motion picture industry in connection with newspapers is the half and full page newspaper and magazine stories issued by the Publicity Bureau of the Paramount Pictures Corporation.

These half page and page stories in mat form are issued fortnightly from the Paramount Publicity Bureau and are the handiwork of Charles E. Moyer, of Paramount; Ben Schulberg, of Famous Players; John Flynn, of Lasky; and Pete Schmid of Morosco. This is one of the features that has been added to the department lately and will be forwarded diligently in connection with the large publicity and exhibitors cooperative campaign which is now under way.

The leading papers in over 200 cities in the country have already contracted for these stories. One paper in each city is given the service, while the other papers in the same communities are given other attractive mediums by which they can tie up their publicity with the Paramount exhibitors in their respective communities.

In the near future half page stories will be issued on "Ten Hats For a Dollar," by Marie Doro; "Whose Hands Are These," picturing the hands of the world's most famous people, as shown in Paramount Pictographs; and "The Master Villain of the Screen," in which there is told how a green lion was tamed within 30 minutes to perform before the motion picture camera.

Paramount's Latest Releases

Two five-reel features will head the Paramount program for the week of August 21. These are the Lasky production of "Public Opinion," in which the leading role is portrayed by Blanche Sweet; and the Famous Players production of "Rolling Stones," in which Owen Moore and Marguerite Courtot will be presented in the leading roles.

The Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel-Picture for the week is entitled "In South Tirol," and shows that Italian corner of Austria which is familiarly known as "Italian Austria."

The Paramount-Bray cartoon shows "Colonel Heeza Liar" in the character of Hamlet.

The twenty-eighth edition of Paramount Pictographs shows how a fireman is made; a plea for maternal nursing in "Better Babies;" weaving in wood; the George Junior Republic; and "A Picnic for Two," in which is shown an automobile used for picnicing.

In its film on forestry conservation Paramount shows how to take care of trees and what can be accomplished by saving the trees.

Picture Progress, the monthly magazine issued by the Paramount Pictures Corporation, is decidedly attractive for October. The cover carries a picture of Pauline Frederick in a hunting costume against a background of white birch trees, and the magazine contains a number of very interesting stories about the stars, many attractive pictures, and two pages of "Answers to Questions" by Miss E. Edith Caldwell, the query editor.

In the twenty-seventh number of Paramount Pictographs under the title of "Bicycles I Have Met," is shown every form of the bicycle from the time of the first foot-propelled velocipede, known as the "dandy-horse," up to the time of modern motorcycles. The pictures were made from the actual historical relics, some of them 300 years old. Other subjects treated are "Teaching Businessmen How to Play"; Hugo Munsterberg, the psychologist, shows how the hand is quicker than the eye; and "Better Babies" shows how a grandmother teaches a twelve-year-old child to set a table.

The Paramount-Bray animated cartoon for the week of August 17, entitled "Bobby Bumps Loses His Pup," is from the pen of Earl Hurd.

The Paramount Pictographs' cameraman has discovered a land where there are no women and none desired. On the Ruffle Bar off Canarsie is a settlement of oyster fishermen who do not believe in women. They divide their labor so that one man does most of the washing, another does the sewing for the colony and another cooks. This will be shown in a forthcoming release of the "magazine-on-the-screen."

A SPEEDY ROMANCE

Universal Man Proposes, Gets License and Marries During Lunch Hour—Joe Brandt as Second—President Laemmle Entertains

Would you have the nerve to propose to your charming stenographer while you were dictating letters to her at 11:50 A. M., quit work for lunch at 12:00 noon, secure your marriage licence at 12:20 P. M., get married at 12:45 P. M. and resume your dictation to your steno-wife at 1:00 P. M.?

Well, that's what Julius A. Lewis, manager of the supply department of the Universal Company of New York, did. Miss Anna Rabinowitz, his former stenographer, is the girl who was taken through this swift romance with the speed of a film comedy. As Julius and his steno-bride-to-be dashed out of the office on his way to the licence bureau, he seized upon Joe Brandt, Universal's well known general manager, who vouched for Lewis when the papers were made out.

The young couple were the guests of President Laemmle, of Universal, at Murray's in New York the same night. Among those present besides Mr. and Mrs. Julius Lewis were:

President Carl Laemmle, with his two brothers, Joseph and Louis; Joe Brandt, George E. Kann, Nat G. Rothstein, A. Tuchman, Hy Gainsborg, Sam Zierler, Jack Cohn, George U. Stevenson, Tom Wylie, Sam D. Pelzman, Hal S. Hodes, Sam B. Kramer and his fiancee, Miss Mamie Speisberger, Earl Kramer, Hugo Mayer, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Rothenberg, Morris Pivar, Sydney Samson, Al Moses, Louis Kaufman, Louis Stern, Louis Friedberger, Harry Cohn, Mr. Rosenbaum, and R. S. Doman.

In addition there were present the Universal's beautiful bevy of girls.

At the dinner Br'er Joe Brandt presented Mr. Lewis with an envelope containing $100.

Charles Ray, N. Y. M. P. leading man, in his latest picture, "The Dividend," has a striking role opposite W. H. Thompson.

Three Vitagraphs on General

During the second week of August, Vitagraph will release three pictures of exceptional merit through General Film. The most prominent of these is "The Wandering Horde," a three-part feature by James Oliver Curwood, in which Evart Overton is starred. "Conductor Kate" and "There and Back," both single part comedies, are the other two subjects.

In "The Wandering Horde," Curwood gives an insight into the lives of men of high finance. He also conveys some idea of how the "hoboes" who wander the roads and byways of our country subsist. The two conditions are blended together with a pleasing love story in which Evart Overton is seen as chief stockholder in a large corporation and a novelist. He refuses to countenance a dishonest watering of the stock which the other directors wish to put through and becomes disgusted with their shallow methods. Later, he joins a band of tramps, the wandering horde of the unemployed, to get material for a book he is writing. While on this venture, the remaining members of the board of directors, through scheming and conniving, succeed in pushing him to the wall. He is saved from utter ruin, however, with the money he has managed to keep out of the hands of the dishonest directors, when he assists a "knight of the road" in carrying out a patent car coupling device, which the fellow has invented. In this three-part subject, Overton "puts over" some of the best work of his career.

"Conductor Kate" is crowded with laughs. Good-natured Hughie Mack, the heavyweight comedian, in "There and Back," lives up to his reputation of chuckle-maker.

Margarita Fischer With Mutual

Margarita Fischer is announced for a series of Mutual star productions.

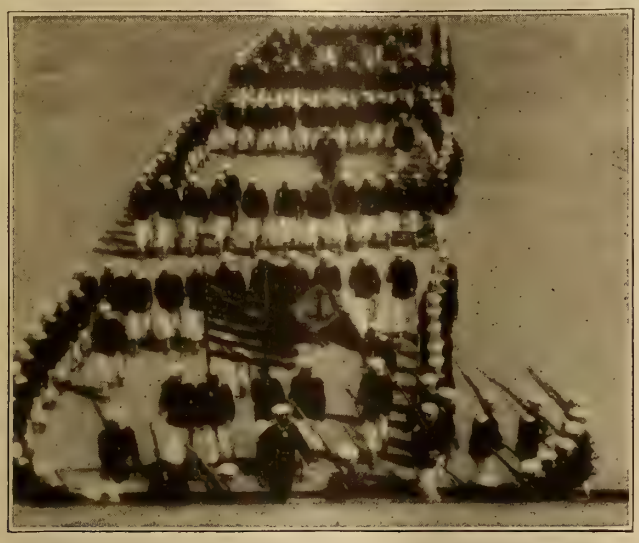
President John R. Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation issued a statement announcing the closing of a contract whereby Miss Fischer will be starred in at least six five-part features for Mutual release.

The first of the pictures may be expected by exhibitors late in October with the others following at intervals of four weeks.

The Fischer pictures will be released by the American Film Company, Inc., through the Mutual by virtue of arrangement made by Director Pollard with Samuel S. Hutchinson. The Fischer releases will be filmed at special studios in Los Angeles.

The first picture to be released in the Fischer star series will be entitled "The Pearl of Paradise."

"Miss Fischer's successes during her previous connection with the American Film Company proved her value as a box office attraction," observed President Freuler. "Her success in pictures is based on the long experience and hard work that must be coupled with natural beauty and ability to attain the standing with the public that makes a star."



Current Saving Device

G. T. Brannon, sales manager of the American Auto-arc Company, has opened temporary offices at 390 Old Colony building, Chicago. This concern is offering a new economic current-saving device for projection machines. It is claimed that the use of the Auto-arc increases the light upon the screen.

Kemble to Handle Big Features

STATES RIGHT TO "AMERICA PREPARING" SELLING RAPIDLY

WILLIAM H. KEMBLE, president of the Kemble Film Corporation, is negotiating with several manufacturers of feature films, a number of whom are at present releasing through the larger distributing organizations, and will shortly handle dramatic features of from five to ten reels. It is not known whether these pictures will be handled on the states right basis, or whether Mr. Kemble will establish a series of branch offices throughout the country.

United States Marines entering a Mexican town in riot formation. From Kemble Film Corporation's "America Preparing."

The Kemble Film Corporation is now distributing a ten part patriotic film spectacle, "America Preparing," on the states right basis and also controls the rights to the Triangle service for Brooklyn and all Long Island, besides being the owner of the Triangle Theater in Brooklyn, one of the few "two dollar" motion picture theaters in the country.

Remarking upon the popularity of "The Zeppelin Raids on London and the Siege of Verdun," which Mr. Kemble is also handling on the states right basis, he said that when he first obtained the rights to his picture a number of his film friends told him that he had purchased a white elephant; that there was no market for that kind of a film; that the public was weary of the palpable fakes that had been foisted upon them in the guise of war pictures. Probably the public was weary of the fakes but when they discovered a war picture which was really authentic they were glad to see it as is demonstrated by the fact that since the first announcement that the picture would be distributed on the states right basis requests for information have been received from almost every territory in the Union. These inquiries prove that there is a genuine demand for a picture of this type that is what it is said to be, and "The Zeppelin Raids of London and the Siege of Verdun" is all that is claimed for it. It is a thrilling depiction of real war—taken on the firing line, where the camera men shared equally with the soldiers, the dangers of their exposed position. The portion of the picture that shows the Zeppelin Raids on London is simply that—the photographing of a fleet of giant airships bombarding the largest city in the world, and the wild excitement and alarm that resulted.

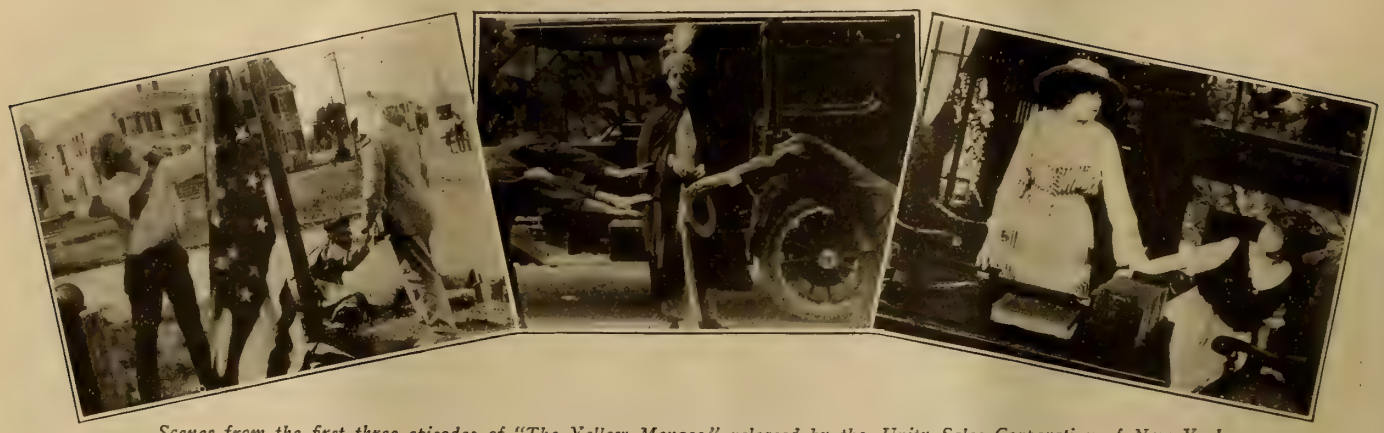
More than seventy-five offers came by mail, phone and wire for the states right to territory in all parts of the United States, in response to the Kemble Film Corporation's announcement that its ten-part patriotic spectacle, "America Preparing," would be distributed on the states right basis. Many requests for bookings have also been received from some of the largest theaters, including several legitimate houses that wish to book the production for extended runs. The picture is not being booked direct, however, except in New York state and these requests are being filed away to be turned over to the various exchanges that purchase the rights to the territories.

In discussing the picture Mr. Kemble said: "I sincerely believe that 'America Preparing' has a real mission to perform in this country. There has been so much said and written, pro and con, on the subject of preparedness, that I esteem it a privilege to present to my countrymen a true, uncolored picturization of our army and navy as they really are. I believe that the picture has an interest greater than its own thrill and entertainment value. The subject it treats of is the most vital question that has ever confronted the American people. Both of the great political parties have made the preparedness question the major plank in their platforms, and it will be the outstanding feature of the coming presidential campaign. Probably the timeliness of the production, as well as its intrinsic worth has had a great deal to do with the widespread demand for it among the state rights men. It is good business for them to buy a picture that all of the theaters in their territory will want to run.

Hollywood Regiment Formed

The Hollywood chamber of commerce is taking an interest in the proposed formation of a regiment of soldiers, composed of young men, and has donated the use of a hall for the drills.

At Universal City, which is Hollywood's biggest single industry, are a large number of men who have seen real militia service. Already sixty of them have enlisted in a company to become a part of the Hollywood regiment.



The organization so far has selected T. E. Duncan, who served in the Philippines as captain; H. T. Woodward, formerly of the Philippines constabulary, as first captain, and C. E. Cuthbert as first sergeant.

A newcomer at Universal City is Lillian Concord, formerly in vaudeville.

Director Robert Z. Leonard's new leading lady for Universal's "The Eagle's Wings," was Grace Carlyle.

Vice-President and General Manager H. O. Davis, of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has purchased the photoplay rights of "We Are French," a story by Robert H. Davis, the editor of Munsey's Magazine. The film version will be produced by Director Rupert Julian. The story is a good example of Universal's policy of securing solid stories with logical and carefully constructed plots.

"The Yellow Menace"

First Three Episodes of Unity Sales Corporation Serial Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

THOSE whom the producers of "The Yellow Menace" had in mind when this subject was selected and picturized will doubtless take very kindly to this new serial which will run for sixteen episodes of two reels each. The picture was made for those picture enthusiasts whose tastes run toward melodrama of the broadest possible type. Judging by the first three episodes, "The Yellow Menace" has money-making possibilities.

Death in some horrible form is close at hand all the time with such an arch villain as the man who signs himself "The High One" in "The Yellow Menace." This is the main issue and the author of the scenarios as well as the producer concentrated on it with the result that the pictures show people about to be killed—indeed, numbers are actually killed in the first three episodes, and never mind whether such things could ever take place or not.

The villain has the power to do about everything possible to a human being and several things no living man has ever been known to do. His house is a maze of secret doors and death traps; he can hypnotize people under the most astounting conditions; he has any number of dupes to obey his commands even though those commands go so far as to order a subordinate to commit suicide, and yet with all this power he chooses to further the cause of a world empire dominated by the yellow race by spending all his time sending poison or threatening notes to a banker who is pushing a bill prohibiting the emigration of yellow men to this country.

Of course, the banker has a daughter and consequently Ali Singh directs some of his attentions to her. She is trapped by him in the second episode, but Errol Manning, confidential diplomatic agent, rescues her. The first episode shows Ali Singh in Hung Kai, where he quells an uprising against the whites by the Mongolians assembled to secretly work for the subjugation of all those parts of the world not in possession of yellow men. He then comes to America and in the second episode he commences to harass Banker Bronson. The police and Errol Manning are hot on Ali Singh's trail but he proves too resourceful to be caught.

In the third episode Ali causes the death of a senator by sending him a note tinctured with some strange perfume which attracts tarantulas. Then he sends his men out with tarantulas and it is only a question of time when the insect will find the note and bite the person carrying it. The subtitles say the bugs are "poisonous tarantulas," which may explain their resemblance to the dytiscus or allied genera, commonly known as the water beetle. As far as the story goes in the first three episodes, we learn that Ali Singh, who is working to drive the white race to destruction in order that the yellow may rule, is known to be in New York and Errol Manning of the government service, with his friend, the banker's son, is striving to capture the yellow man. The thrills are provided by Ali's schemes to frighten the banker into withdrawing his financial support from the emigration bill.

The picture was produced under the direction of A. M. Kennedy. Edwin Stevens, well known on the speaking stage, appears as Ali Singh. The other parts are played by Margaret Gale, Eric Mayne, Armand Cortes, Florence Malone, Gerald Griffin, Albert Hall and Tina Marshall. The production of these three episodes is fair and the photography is good.

"Home"

Five-Reel Kay Bee-Triangle Society Drama. Reviewed by George W. Graves

"HOME" is one of the finest productions that ever filled a motion picture audience with enthusiasm. It is an enormously clever satire on the familiar tactics of the nouveau riche American. The pointed veracity of the picture, although of necessity slightly exaggerated, should bring the habitual snobs in the audience to a sharp realization of their own ridiculous vanity. The entire picture confers a pleasure on the spectator which is not born of mere elementary emotion, but of the subtler appeal which delves deep into the mysteries of human nature. The author's keen perception of human leanings is as manifest as the fact that he has created from this perception an intensely human, entertaining story. This story, too, is not without its comical side. The author's (C. Gardner Sullivan's) subtitles stimulate the element of satirical humor.

Bessie Barriscale's portrayal of Bessie Wheaton is a splendid example of her supreme ability as an actress. She is easily the picture's mainstay of fascination. Charles Ray and Louise Glaum also have big parts which they both play with sincerity and conviction. Other members of a cast which is exceptional for individual effort are Clara Williams, Agnes Herring, Thomas S. Guise and Joseph Dowling. Direction, photography and artistic effect are in keeping with the picture's standard.

Bessie Wheaton returns from Europe to find that the sudden acquisition of wealth has not left one member of her family normal. Her mother and sister are insufferable snobs, the latter's only activity being to capture a Count who stands ready with his title. Her brother is a drunkard and a hopelessly foolish young man, his worst offense being a determination to marry a woman of the commonest sort. Bessie's father has developed into a rock-bound cynic, spending most of his time at the club and presenting the picture of boredom while at home.

After surveying the situation, Bessie decides it is time for the rescue work to begin. She resolves upon a grim determination, to put off her own sweet, natural ways and assume the combined faults of her family, thus to hold up the mirror to them. She succeeds in outdoing each member of the family in his own peculiarity. Bessie stays her brother from marrying the common woman of his infatuation by adopting that women's ways. But her biggest sacrifice, the one which nearly deceives her lover, is in winning over the Count to herself, causing her sister to haughtily reject him. The Count loses out all around.

Finally things come to a head. The family orders Bessie before their court of judgment and accuses her of snobbish-ness, wild behavior, intolerance, etc. Whereupon, the girl, her anger fully aroused, flays them one and all for their hypocrisy and explains her motives. Then she dashes from the house and attempts to run away. But her lover captures her and carries her by force back to the house. They arrive just as the startled members of the family are humbly acknowledging the truth of Bessie's statements. A touching scene ensues and Bessie makes up with her lover shortly after.

"The Little Volunteer"

Three-Reel Essanay Drama Released August 19. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS is an unusually charming juvenile offering. Joyce Fair is featured, assisted by several other attractive children, and her little dog, and by Hugh Thompson and Edmund F. Cobb. Like other well done juvenile plays, it will be also attractive to grown-ups. An audience always responds to scenes containing children, and this play seems to have been directed by someone who understood youngsters, for it contains a number of pranks "kids" love to play, dressing the dog in doll clothes, for instance, and dressing themselves in grown-up costumes.

The theme of the story will appeal to the imagination of children, the account of a little rich girl who leaves a party to go to the assistance of a family of poor children. Their mother is dead and the father is cruel to them. Joyce, the more fortunate little girl, who has everything she wants except other children to play with, takes charge of the household, puts the house and the children in order, and, having carried enough money in her coin purse, pays the butcher, the baker and the landlord and everyone else who demands payment. When the cruel father returns, she lectures him upon his misdeeds and protects the children. She does not convert him to better ways, however, and he goes back to his business of burgling.

This time he selects Joyce's own home. While robbing the place he is shot and seriously injured. Then Joyce's father recognizes the man as his own brother, the "black sheep" of the family. As the burglar is dying, the brother promises to care for the unfortunate man's children. When he goes to the address given, he finds Joyce, for whom the police have been searching, and there is a happy reunion when he promises to adopt the new-found family.

"The Surf Girl"

Triangle-Keystone Offering. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

"THE SURF GIRL" is a whirl of action. If anything this Keystone is too fast, the scene switching from place to place at a bathing resort with such amusements as roller-coasters and all the other what-not that goes with them. Amidst a maze of running about the picture presents a number of laughs.

The picture was given a production of the usual Keystone high standard. Furthermore, it is a picture such as only Keystone can turn out. "The Surf Girl" is never dull, but just what it is all about is too much for us. Everything seems to happen at once and out of the mixup comes an elderly man whose search for his daughter leads him into trouble with a young man who forever thereafter is bound to catch the bearded one.

The chase takes the spectator through the various amusements at the beach, including an indoor swimming tank into which first one person and then another is pushed. In spots "The Surf Girl" is really funny and throughout it is sufficiently good to hold the interest. Several pretty girls in bathing costume, some novel bits of trick-photography and a good production are some of the things which will make "The Surf Girl" a pleasing comedy in the estimation of the majority.

"The House of Mirrors"

Mutual Masterpicture Released August 10. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

FRANK MILLS, who is well known to patrons of the stage and screen, is the featured player in "The House of Mirrors," a Mutual Masterpicture dealing with an inventor whose suspicions of his wife's loyalty are founded on circumstances and not fact. The play was adapted from a story by Frederick Chapin. The story presents its strongest dramatic situation in the scene between Probert, his wife and Martindale, who shows himself a cad when Probert accuses his wife of unfaithfulness by refusing to state the truth and confess his vicious part in the affair.

The story is built on this situation. After a number of years in which the inventor's son becomes attached to the daughter of the woman who runs a gambling establishment without knowing, of course, that she is his sister, the husband who made a plausible mistake and the unjustly accused wife are reconciled by means which were at hand from the beginning and the lapse of time has brought nothing to make them more accessible. When the estranged couple meet again the wife repeats her protestations of innocence and the husband believes her the second time. The only reason that he did not in the first instance seems to be that more film on the subject was desired.

When man and wife separate the custody of the boy is given to the father and the mother takes the girl in her care. When young manhood and womanhood has been reached by their children we find that the father is wealthy and the mother has only enough left to purchase a fashionable gambling establishment. "The House of Mirrors" is the name of the institution and a place of its kind would cost more money than the titles in this picture admit.

Mrs. Probert's own son is introduced into the house under a fictitious name. She makes the discovery by a ring he wears and which she had given his father. Then naturally there is a stop put to his attentions to the daughter, his sister. The girl goes for a motor ride with the son of the man who caused the trouble between Blanche and her husband. A fierce rainstorm prevents their return that night, but young Martindale's attentions are honorable so there is no more trouble on that score. This incident is followed by the reconciliation of Probert to his wife after the elder Martindale tells the truth to the inventor.

Many of the dramatic moments are forced. In fact, the story in its entirety is not true to life, and the most that a good production and splendid acting by the featured player did for "The House of Mirrors" was to make it a fairly interesting Mutual Masterpicture. Marshall Farnum directed the production. Bliss Milford, Rudolph Cameron, Lillian Kemble, Harry Spingler and J. Frank Glendon support Mr. Mills.

"The Secret of the Submarine"

American Serial, Chapters 13 and 14. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE discovery of one of the books and the breaking of the partnership between Olga and Morton are the significant events in chapter thirteen of this "Flying A" serial, which is nearing its finish. Olga, the Russian adventuress, and Morton, the American who sought the secret for his own advantage, were carried away by bandits at the close of the last installment. While they are held prisoners, Olga finds the book which the bandits had taken from Cleo in the mountain cabin, and learns from an inscription that the secret of the submarine may be found by reading every seventh word on page 61 of Dr. Burke's copy of Metallurgy.

When Morton learns of the discovery, he forcibly takes the book from Olga and escapes from the bandits. Olga also escapes later and returns to the city.

In the meantime, Hope learns that Inez, the girl he was about to marry, is tricking him into marriage to gain possession of his recently inherited fortune. Angered, he denounces her and returns to find Cleo.

In chapter fourteen, we are shown an interesting section of a preparedness parade, giving another touch of timeliness to the picture. "Hook" makes himself very conspicuous in the parade and in this way is brought to the attention of Hope, who at once goes to him, seeking news of Cleo. He learns that the girl had returned to the little village and he and "Hook" follow her there. They arrive just in time to prevent her from committing suicide, and she and Hope are reconciled.

Chapter 14—Hope stops Cleo's attempt at suicide.

All sorts of exciting things happen to Olga and Morton to end this installment. Olga, armed with a dagger, tries to get the book from Morton. The encounter is witnessed by Mahlin. When Morton gets the dagger away from Olga, the adventuress produces a packet which she declares contains Morton's own secret, that Cleo is the real heiress to the wealth of Morton's uncle. Morton in turn accuses Olga of the murder of Dr. Burke. In a struggle which follows, Morton stabs Oyga. The police arrive and arrest Morton, and in the confusion Mahlin, who has watched all the events, rushes in and seizes the book and the packet and escapes.

"The Child of Destiny"

Metro Comedy Drama Produced by Columbia Pictures Corporation. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

FIRST in importance in "A Child of Destiny" is Irene Fenwick, who returns to the screen in a comedy drama written especially for the occasion by William Nigh. If the play was not written directly for the star at least it has all the appearances of having been written to exploit the charm and ability of the featured player more than the dramatic and pictorial possibilities of the films.

Miss Fenwick as the innocent country girl must do all the pleasing if audiences are to be entertained at all by "A Child of Destiny," for there is little originality and less depth to the play. It is highly probable that Miss Fenwick can do all that is asked of her. For some reason or other Miss Fenwick has changed in appearance since the last picture in which we saw her, and the change is in the way of an improvement. Without a doubt she is prettier, and she displays as much acting ability as ever she did before the camera.

"The Child of Destiny" tells the story of an orphan girl who is reared in a swamp country by an old couple. Her only companions are a half-witted youth and the turtles she finds in the pond near by. Now that she has attained young womanhood her foster parents deem it best to send her to the city to be educated and they notify her guardian, a judge who is a confirmed bachelor.

The judge shares his residence with a young lawyer who has had an unfortunate venture in matrimony. He discovers immediately after marrying a pretty woman that she is an adventuress and has deceived him. This make Strange a woman-hater. He journeys to the country with his friend and the girl falls in love with him, much to his discomfort.

It develops that Alita is the daughter of the adventuress, who refuses to grant Strange a divorce. But the judge finds evidence which satisfies him that a divorce can be obtained. Not realizing that Alita is her own daughter, Constance informs the girl that Strange is her husband. Then Alita returns to the farm. The end finds Alita and Strange happy, for Constance jumps into the pond when she discovers that Alita is her daughter.

Supporting Miss Fenwick are Mme. Gana Walska, Robert Elliot, Roy Applegate and William Davidson.

"A Woman's Way"

Five-Part World-Peerless Release Featuring Carlyle Blackwell. Reviewed by Hugh Hoffman

IF every woman should see this feature and take a lesson from it there would not be so much said on the subject of "why men leave home." The picture tells us about a woman who had a way, and her way was the right way to keep a husband, even though a designing woman had him very much in her power, and was about to kidnap him.

The average woman never looks to herself to find the blame. It is always her husband who is the one to be censured. It never occurs to most deserted wives that perhaps the fault might lie with them, and not with the other woman. This picture shows us a wife who got busy as soon as she saw that her husband was in danger of being kidnaped and began to use the same tactics to keep her husband that the other woman used in trying to lure him away. Needless to say her plan worked out entirely in her favor, as might have been expected.

It is one of the few photoplays that come along endeavoring to solve a social problem that comes anywhere near giving a lesson to wives in how to meet a problem. Most photoplays content themselves with showing how the cruel love pirate came along and stole the husband away from a wife that was true and devoted. The kind of advice found in such a picture is advice that resembles the advice we usually get about locking the stable door after the horse is stolen. This picture will give wives an idea of how to save the horse from being stolen, the horse, of course, being a metaphorical allusion to the husband.

Carlyle Blackwell plays the husband, and Ethel Clayton the wife. Both of them give an excellent performance of a bright young society couple who are mentally a match for each other. The elegance of the interior settings is one of the particularly noticeable parts of the feature. These interior scenes are not only costly and in extremely good taste, but there are many of them. There are a good many scenes in the beginning of the picture showing the coal mining district of Pennsylvania by way of bringing in the early environments of the wife.

She began life as a school teacher in the mining district. It was there she met her future husband, who came there as superintendent of the coal mine. After marrying her he took her out of that environment and put her into New York society where she did not fit very well at the start. Before a great while the young wife found herself in competition with a well seasoned adventuress who had succeeded in beguiling almost every other man in their set except her husband. Instead of flying into a temper and calling the other woman a huzzy and other things, she took the matter philosophically and like a good fellow invited the other woman to her house.

She gave brilliant parties in which she shone as brightly as her rival. Also, she was not at all backward about receiving attentions from some of the gentlemen guests, especially while her husband happened to be looking her way. Incidentally some of the men in the smoking room began to tell the husband tales of how they had been stung by the lady who had caught his fancy. Altogether it was rather an interesting and profitable evening for the husband, and when he had weighed everything up carefully in his mind, he thought that the best thing he could do was to stick by his good little wife.

There are many touches of humor throughout the picture which put the production almost in the comedy class. This is not a fault by any means. It is really a very serious theme skilfully covered over with laughs. The picture contains a splendid lesson for wives and sweethearts. But will they take the lesson? Aye—there's the rub!

"The Germ of Mystery"

Three-Reel Selig Drama Released August 14. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

LABORATORIES and scientific discoveries play an important part in this mystery story and give it a flavor of novelty. The story is told briskly and in the main clearly, the element of mystery holding the interest. While not remarkable, it is an entertaining program offering.

William Robert Daly directed the play from a story by L. V. Jefferson. Guy Oliver, Frank Clark, Fritzi Brunette and Frederick Freeman have leading roles. Guy Oliver is Dr. Comstock, an expert on poisons. When the story begins, he is experimenting with a deadly sort of spider in order to find an antitoxin for its poison. Dr. Comstock is in love with Letitia (Fritzi Brunette), the daughter of Alexander Daniels, another scientist who has invented a powerful explosive of great value. Daniels does not like Dr. Comstock and wishes his daughter to marry Clifford Ainsley, his own partner.

Then Daniels is found dead from the bite of the poisonous spider. When it is found that the only specimen in captivity belonged to Dr. Comstock and that this is no longer in his possession, suspicion points to the doctor as a possible murderer.

Only Letitia and her father know the formula for mixing the explosive and after Daniel's death, Ainsley asks Letitia for the directions, lest the unprepared materials catch fire. Letitia, who does not trust Ainsley, refuses and goes into the laboratory to mix the ingredients herself. While she is thus engaged, a man enters the room, overpowers the girl and binds her to a chair. Then he attaches wires to the clock by which the watchman registers so that an electric spark will cause an explosion.

But Dr. Comstock arrives in time to save the girl, and it is discovered that her assailant is the man guilty of the murder of her father. He had been employed as a butler in the family but had been seeking the precious formula. Dr. Comstock is freed from the murder charge and marries the girl.

The swiftness of the action and the well managed suspense counterbalances the improbability of the plot of the story. The ending, although it leaves some things unexplained, is not obvious and the surprise will be liked.

"The Sting of Victory"

Essanay V. L. S. E. Drama Released August 7. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS is a Walthall picture. Henry B. Walthall plays the two leading roles, and plays both excellently. His admirers will be delighted with his work, and the play is arranged to bring out his best points. He has been given a fine opportunity to show just how finished a screen actor he is. The roles he plays, two brothers, are well contrasted. The character of the elder brother is emphasized and of this youth who clings to his principles even when he must sacrifice for them all he holds dear, Walthall has drawn a distinct and sympathetic portrait, in his best manner.

It is a story of the Civil War. At the beginning of hostilities David, the elder brother, takes his stand with the abolitionists, while the younger, Walker, joins the southern army. The act of the elder brother is regarded as the basest treachery by his relatives and friends, but he remains true to his beliefs. During the war, David, in command of a northern company, quarters his troops at his old home, in this way protecting his family. But they still feel bitter toward him.

After the war the bitterness remains, even when David is appointed military commander of the district and provides for his parents. In his duties, he tries to be very just, and when his own brother is brought before him accused of murder, he is ready to sentence him to death unless he is proved innocent. But David himself traps the real murderer and thus saves his brother. Because of this, he is forgiven and reconciled to his family. But he has lost the girl he loved, for she chooses the younger brother.

The suspense in the last part of the play and the pathos of the last scene do much to overcome effect of the poor construction of the story as a whole. Not that the early scenes are uninteresting, but rather that they are not as dramatic as they might be. The battle scenes are well staged and excellently photographed. The beauty of the photography is a feature of the release throughout. There is much clever camera work shown in the handling of the double exposure scenes. And Walthall in either role holds the interest.

But the story as presented lacks compactness and continuity. It is more like a series of events, for the most part, than a well built drama. Since Walthall is the leading figure in each event, however, this lack of a strong connecting plot may be forgiven by audiences with whom he is in favor.

The supporting cast includes Antoinette Walker, Anne Leigh, John Lorenz, Thomas Commerford, Richard Cotton and Jack Dale. J. Charles Haydon directed. The play is in five reels.

"The End of the Trail"

Fox Drama Starring William Farnum Released August 7. Reviewed by George W. Graves

ACCORDING to publicity issuing from the Fox offices, this is the last but one of the Western roles which William Farnum is to enact before coming East and taking up the more polished, conservative type. "The End of the Trail" is a vigorous picture, filled with struggles that are considerably truer to life than those depicted in many films. The story has plenty of strong emotional moments. Its production in the snow-clad regions of the Northwest is extremely effective.

William Farnum is in his best form in this picture. His acting is spirited and sincere, and conforms faithfully to what a red-blooded individual under the same circumstances would do in life. It makes us feel that he is in his element in the picturesque Western role.

The imploring expressions which cross Gladys Brockwell's face are calculated to make sympathizing males in the audience itch to throttle the beast who so shamefully maltreats her. Miss Brockwell's performance is extremely enjoyable. Willard Louis as Devil Cabot, the villain, is excellent. His part entails an amount of undisguised brutality which will be offensive to some, but it serves its dramatic end. Others in the cast are William Burress, H. J. Herbert and Ogden Crane. Maibelle Heikes Justice was the author of the story. Oscar Apfel's direction is highly commendable.

Eunice, about to marry Jules Le Clerq, the man of her choice, is forced to marry a brute in order to keep her father out of prison. She runs away from Devil Cabot, and he is almost killed by an Indian enemy. The Indian believes him dead. While Devil Cabot is convalescing in a lonely hut in the woods, the girl is married to her lover. Finally the brute again appears, overpowers the young husband and takes his wife afar off. She is finally rescued from her oppressor, but she dies as a result of his inhuman treatment.

Devil Cabot having escaped, Jules takes Eunice's child (his own child) and swears a bitter revenge. It is nearly twenty years from this time that the chance for this revenge arrives. At this time Jules catches Cabot forcing himself upon his daughter. Jules' long pent up rage lends him strength, and the long struggle that follows finally sees him the victor over his gigantic opponent.

"The Woman in the Case"

Five-Reel Famous Players-Paramount Drama for August 8. Reviewed by George W. Graves

CLYDE FITCH'S drama, as produced by the Famous Players Film Company, after it once gets under way, is fairly alive with real situations—situations which have lost none of their vitality in the transfer from the stage to the

"Tell me that you are innocent!"

screen. These moments of high pitch open a wide field for Pauline Frederick's excellent emotional power and resourcefulness. She plays with unvarying skill right through the five reels. Famous Players' programme leaflet appropriately describes the picture as "one of her greatest screen triumphs."

Alan Hale's portrayal is of too fine a quality to pass over lightly. Eminently suited to the part, he carries it with grace and strong acting. Others in the cast are Marie Chambers, Paul Gordon, Clarence Handysides and George Larkin.

Julian Rolfe, an American visiting in Paris, is easily roped in by Claire, a woman with whom he believes himself in love, but whose true nature he is slow to perceive. Julian, in hiding, hears sufficient from Claire's own lips, however, to convince him of her evil designs, and he drops her at once. Claire lightly speaks of the affair to her crony as a "romance that missed fire."

Julian Rolfe returns to America and marries Margaret Hughes, a woman of noble character. Claire also returns to the land of her birth and exerts her wiles upon Philip Long, one of Julian's warmest friends. Julian warns Philip that Claire is bad all through, but only stirs up his anger, for Claire has been careful to pour into her victim's ears base misrepresentations of Julian's connections with her. Finally Rolfe brings his friend to his senses, but not until the latter has secretly married the worthless woman. Overcome with remorse, Long shoots himself in Claire's apartment with Julian's initialed revolver which the woman has kept as a memento.

Claire, who has witnessed the suicide, discovers the weapon and determines upon her old lover's doom. The latter falls into the trap and is duly sentenced to the chair. Then begin the long succession of big events in the play, the part that really grips until the closing scenes. Rolfe's wife, Margaret, knowing her husband is innocent, becomes a woman of the same stamp as Claire and wins her confidence, although it causes her agony to associate with the woman.

Finally the time for Claire's confession arrives. The dictograph is installed in her apartment and Margaret, equipped with plenty of wine, commences to get her enemy intoxicated. The detectives record Claire's confession, Margaret triumphs over the latter and her husband is released.

"The Woman in the Case" was directed by Hugh Ford and filmed by Ned Van Buren.

"Ruth Ridley's Return"

Two-Reel American Drama Released August 14. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

A VERY human appeal given to a story whose plot is fairly well worked out makes this a release which will have little difficulty in holding an audience not too critical. This story is well put into two reels and the situations developed are interesting and have a dramatic value. There are several things in the plot which might be questioned, but these will be lost sight of in the interest aroused by the situations. As a program release, this may be rated as very good.

Lizette Thorn has the title role, a stenographer. Edward Coxen is the leading man, Arthur Strong, an author. Strong's mother makes every sacrifice to let him devote his time to writing. She has difficulty in meeting her bills but keeps this fact from him. One day, in the real estate office where she goes to pay her rent, chance throws several hundred dollars into her hands. She keeps it, and one of the stenographers, Ruth Ridley, is accused of the theft.

Ruth Ridley serves a prison term for the crime she did not commit. Meantime, the author's book is finished and brings him a comfortable income. But his mother has become blind. Since she cannot aid her son, as formerly, he advertises for a secretary, and Ruth is engaged for the position. She recognizes in Mrs. Strong the woman who had visited the office on the day of the loss of money and who was probably the thief. However, she does not reveal her knowledge. She becomes a valuable aid to Strong and suggests a situation for his next novel. The story she suggests, of a girl sent to jail unjustly, is her own. When the novel is finished, Ruth reads it to the mother, who realizes the great wrong she has done. However, things turn out happily for all, when Ruth and the son fall in love and marry.

Dixie Stuart has the important role of the mother.

Mrs. Strong confesses the theft.

George Field has the role of a villain who complicates the plot occasionally. A. Hollingsworth directed the picture, from a scenario by Anthony Coldwell.

"Gloria's Romance"

Chapters 13 and 14 of the George Kleine Serial. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

GLORIA'S pursuit of the elusive murderer continues through these two installments, with a few complications and many irrelevant incidents. In chapter thirteen, "The Midnight Riot," there is much excitement when Gloria leaves the night court to follow Trask, whom she recognizes as the murderer of Freneau and who has been released. Her pursuit leads her to a dance hall, run by "Chooey" McFadden (Rapley Holmes). "Chooey" insists that Gloria dance with him. Royce, who has followed Gloria, comes to her rescue. He has a struggle with the proprietor, which ends in a free-for-all fight. The police arrive and arrest the mob, so Gloria and Royce come back to Judge Freeman's court as prisoners. Trask, the murderer, alone escapes.

Chapter fourteen deals with milder events, mostly. Much of two reels shows the regeneration of the little waif adopted by Gloria. He is bathed and properly dressed and taken to Dr. Royce to be cured of a cough. Gloria also orders her father to see that the child's father is given a position, and when she learns that the mother is ill, she goes to the home in the slums to visit her. It so happens that Trask is living in a room in the same building and that his daughter has found him and persuaded him to go back to their ship. As he leaves with his daughter, he is seen by Gloria, who again sets out after him. This time she overtakes him on his ship and hears him tell his daughter of the murder. She informs him that she had witnessed the crime and is going to bring him to justice. He, however, overpowers her and escapes.

The chapters are worked out in the fashion of the preceding ones. The action is slow, and the plot of the story not very important. At this stage of the serial, a strong story would aid greatly in holding patrons who have become tired of incidents which, though entertaining in themselves, do not arouse a great desire to know what will happen next. Miss Burke continues to hold the attention in her own playful way, and the work of the supporting cast is as usual good.

Mack Likes 'em Short and Snappy

Mack Sennett is probably the only director in the business of manufacturing film pictures who has no desire to make a ten or twelve-reel production. Nearly all of the big directors have at one time or another produced or attempted to produce a big multiple-reel picture, but Mr. Sennett is satisfied to go with the comedies. It is in the cutting room that Mr. Sennett really exercises his powers as "boss." His work is more like that of an editor than a director; he knows the wisdom of being brief. Many a director's heart has been broken when Mr. Sennett has cast a week's work in the waste basket. Even if Mr. Sennett did film a ten or twelve-reeler, the lure of the scissors would prove too strong and he would undoubtedly clip it to 3,000 feet.

A brilliant Metro sextette. Emily Stevens is at the left end of the choir, then comes Max Figman, Mme. Olga Petrova, Ethel Barrymore, William Nigh and Mabel Taliaferro.

Two New Metro Players

Lorraine Frost, "Legitimate" Ingenue, and Edward L. Davenport Engaged for Important Productions

LORRAINE FROST, an ingenue well known on the legitimate stage, has been added to the Metro players. Miss Frost is playing a part second in importance to the star in both the Metro-Rolfe production, "God's Half Acre," and the Metro-Columbia five-act drama as yet unnamed. Miss Frost's first dramatic experience was in "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" and more recently she has been seen in "The Angel in the House" and "The Senator Keeps House." She has also appeared in a few motion pictures for Selig.

Edward L. Davenport, who is becoming as well known in motion pictures as his celebrated family has always been on the speaking stage, has been engaged for an important role in "The Upheaval," the new Metro-Rolfe production starring Lionel Barrymore. Mr. Davenport was a prominent member of the old Boston Museum stock company and is identified with parts calling for the realistic handling of everyday types.

Baroness Dorothy van Raven has been selected to visualize Juliet in the newest one-reel comedy, "A Taxicab Elopement," starring Max Figman and Lolita Robertson on the Metro program. Miss van Raven has appeared in several motion pictures for the Biograph, Reliance and Pathe before being engaged in Metro productions. Although born in Auburn, New York, she is a real baroness, as her husband belongs to the Dutch nobility and comes from a line not far removed in position from the crown.

Admirers and followers of Mme. Petrova have a decided treat in store for them for she has just arranged to appear in a five-reel production that she has written herself. The central theme of the story deals with the marriage question from an economic standpoint and deals with the equality of sex. Mme. Petrova has just completed the final scenes in "The Secret of Eve," which is scheduled for an early release on the Metro program.

Bob Walker's grandparents on both sides were ministers, and now he has been called upon to play a clergyman in the new Metro-Columbia five-reel photoplay starring Viola Dana. The picture is as yet unnamed. The clergyman is of the new militant variety, which gives Mr. Walker a chance to be both powerful and holy.

Jerome N. Wilson, a marine engineer, is in the cast of "The Pretenders," Emmy Wehlen's newest starring vehicle on the Metro program. Mr. Wilson followed the sea for seven years. He wrote an article for the New York Sunday Times supplement in 1913 on lessons to be learned from the Volturno disaster. He is the author of many articles on marine protection and following the Republic disaster predicted the tragedy of the Titanic.

Five August Releases for Famous

Seven entire companies are now under full swing at the Famous Players studio preparing productions for release on the Paramount program and an eighth is about to begin operation within the next few days.

Having just completed the adaptation of Clyde Fitch's "The Woman in the Case" in which she starred, Pauline Frederick is now at work on a big photoplay written especially for her by Forrest Halsey.

Owen Moore and Marguerite Courtot are completing the adaptation of Edgar Selwyn's celebrated comedy-drama, "Rolling Stones." This production marks the first appearance of Miss Courtot in a Famous Players production.

J. Searle Dawley is now taking the preliminary scenes for Ann Pennington's second silent starring vehicle.

Mae Murray, who has heretofore appeared exclusively in Lasky productions, is making her first appearance in an eastern studio under the direction of John B. O'Brien in "The Big Sister," a story of the slums and of politics.

Having just returned from the northern part of the state, where the opening scenes of her next production were staged under the direction of Sidney Olcott, Valentine Grant is doing some of the interior work in the studio, preparatory to starting south. The story opens in Scotland and then moves to an American lumber camp. It is for the latter part of the action that Miss Grant will go to the lumber camps of the south.

Within the next few days Maurice and Florence Walton will begin work on a special production under the direction of Ashley Miller. This will mark the debut of the stars as Famous Players.

Tooker Joins Ivan

William H. Tooker, powerful delineator of character roles on the legitimate stage and on the screen, has been cast for one of the leading male roles in the second all-star cast production, which will be called "Her Surrender." Mr. Tooker has portrayed hundreds of different roles before the camera. Featured by William Fox in "Fool's Revenge," Mr. Tooker reaped new laurels in the field which he has chosen to make his own since he deserted the legitimate stage.

"Her Surrender," the second production to be made by the Ivan Film Productions under their new policy of all-star cast, one hundred per cent story features, will bring together a great cast, including the following:

Anna Q. Nilsson, who has just completed the sensational serial "Who's Guilty" for Pathe; Rose Coghlan, legitimate star, whose work in "The Faded Flower" was the cause of much favorable comment from the critics; William H. Tooker, star of "A Fool's Revenge," and other successful photo plays, and many others.

Moss Leases Flatbush Theater

B. S. Moss, of the B. S. Moss Motion Picture Corporation, announces the inauguration of a special service department for the benefit of exchangemen and exhibitors in connection with the features which he is putting out under his new one-a-month policy.

These pictures include, "In the Hands of the Law," a thrilling photo play, dealing with the evils of circumstantial evidence; "The Power of Evil," a striking society drama; "The Woman Redeemed," a moving and compelling story of a battle between a fighting minister and the king of New York's underworld, for the soul of a young girl, and "One Hour," a sequel to Elinor Glyn's "Three Weeks" and "One Day."

By this policy the state rights man can have exclusive rights for his territory for the twelve pictures at one price. He can see the first four before he signs his contract and will receive Mr. Moss' personal guarantee that the other eight will be up to standard.

During the past week Mr. Moss, in addition to announcing his plans for the million dollar theater he is going to build at 181st street and Broadway, states that he has leased the Flatbush Theater, Brooklyn, New York, and will run continuous performances of pictures and vaudeville. The Flatbush Theater has a seating capacity of 2,000, is absolutely fireproof and equipped with a complete ventilation system. The opening date is set for September second.

Powell Adds McGovern

Pursuant with its progressive policy the Frank Powell Productions, Inc., announces the engagement of E. J. McGovern, who will act as general sales representative. Mr. McGovern has had considerable experience in the motion picture industry and for the past several years has been associated with the New York Motion Picture Corporation in various capacities ranging from advertising manager to assistant to Adam Kessel.

Elmer J. McGovern, new Powell official.

He is well known to motion picture executives throughout the country, is a member of several motion picture clubs and will, no doubt, prove a valuable asset to the Powell organization.

Contract on "Yellow Menace"

D. J. Chatkin, vice president of the United Film Service, whose main offices are in Chicago with branches throughout the West, closed what bids fair to be one of the largest exchange film contracts ever made, with Mr. Andrew J. Cobe, vice president of the Unity Sales Corporation. Under the terms of this contract the United Film Service Company purchased for $100,000 the rights on "The Yellow Menace" serial for fourteen western states, including Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming, New Mexico, Utah, California, Nevada, Arizona, Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana.

The United Film Service Company already operates offices in the most important cities in this territory and in addition will establish other branches so as to successfully handle "The Yellow Menace" and other forthcoming productions. Aside from the regular advertising campaign put out, the company conducts a tremendous advertising campaign on their own account.

The fact that the serial is entirely completed and ready for the exhibitors to see at least six weeks ahead of the showing of the film to the public has been a great aid in disposing of the various territories. The success of the distribution of this film has proved that a big serial picture can be distributed through independent exchanges, and also shows that there is still a big demand for serial pictures.

Lockwood Moves

E. B. Lockwood, cameraman for the Selig-Tribune news film, has changed his headquarters from Seattle, Washington, to Denver, Colorado. While in Cheyenne, Wyoming, recently filming thrillers of the "Frontier Days" celebration Mr. Lockwood staged a thriller himself by getting mixed up with a bucking broncho, which he was capturing in a close-up. He barely escaped with his camera—and his life.

Colin Chase Engaged by Morosco

Colin Chase, who recently supported Dustin Farnum in "The Parson of Panamint," has been engaged by the Morosco-Pallas companies under a long term contract for character leads. Those who have seen Mr. Chase in "The Making of Maddalena" and also remember him as Old Barry in "David Garrick" have remarked on the way in which Mr. Chase's work caused the characters to stand out.

Mr. Chase is very good-looking, as well as an accomplished actor, and his success, judged by the leading comments which have been made on previous photoplays, may be considered as permanently assured.

Two new buildings are being added to the Morosco studio. One is for the workmen who make the stucco and plaster houses, pillars, ornaments, frieze and in fact all the varied use that skilled stucco workers can do with this plastic medium. It is a two-storied structure. The other building is a greenhouse for the palms and potted flowers used in the scenes and will be well supplied with all types of greenery. Russell Stapleton has been placed in charge of the enlargened property warehouse and C. W. Comegys has been transferred to the purchasing department.

Miss Vivian Martin, as announced by the Morosco-Pallas companies, has just closed a long term contract to make pictures exclusively for this organization. In announcing this, one of the officers of the companies wrote to the New York office saying, "We feel perfectly safe in making this contract because Miss Martin has proven her worth so conclusively." In fact those who have seen Miss Martin in "The Stronger Love" about to be released by Pallas Pictures, say there is no more beautiful or vivacious, captivating or attractive girl on the screen today than Miss Martin.

The initial Vivian Martin subject to be released by the Morosco Company has been completed and will be shown in Paramount houses commencing August 14. The title of the play is "The Stronger Love," a photoplay in which this winsome little actress offers a characterization of deep heart interest, such as she has presented to best advantage in the past.

Lasky Gives Strong Plays

Lasky offers a galaxy of stars in strong features for the August Paramount program. On August 3 Wallace Reid and Cleo Ridgely appeared in an original photoplay entitled, "The House of the Golden Windows." The co-stars are supported by a very able cast, including "Little Billy" Jacobs, James Neill, Mabel Van Buren, and Marjorie Daw.

On August 17 will be offered "Public Opinion," with Blanche Sweet as the chief factor in the exposition of this screen problem play. The cast includes Earle Foxe, Edith Chapman, Elliott Dexter, Tom Forman and Raymond Hatton.

On August 24 Sessue Hayakawa, the noted Japanese actor, returns to Paramount theaters in "The Honorable Friend." Hayakawa is supported by Tsuri Aoki, Raymond Hatton and Billy Elmer.

On August 28 Lou-Tellegen will appear in "The Victory of Conscience." Cleo Ridgely plays opposite Mr. Tellegen.

One of the first outward manifestations of the practical advantage of the recently formed merger of the Famous Players Film Company and the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company is the fact that Mae Murray, who has appeared under the Lasky banner since her debut on the screen, is now working on staging her new Paramount picture, "The Big Sister," at the Famous Players studio under the direction of John B. O'Brien, Famous Players director.

"Common Ground" is the title of the Jesse L. Lasky feature starring Marie Doro which will be released on the Paramount program, July 27. The supporting cast is a strong one including Thomas Meighan, Theodore Roberts, Mary Mersch, Horace H. Carpenter and Veda McEvers.

When the protests of exchange men regarding the complaints of the exhibitors is a matter of widespread discussion, the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company is receiving many letters and telegrams complimenting them on their productions. S. Barrett McCormick, manager of the Princess Theater, Denver, Colorado, is loud in his praise of "The Dream Girl," and extends his congratulations to Mr. De Mille, Miss Murray and the Lasky trademark.

Fire of an unknown origin destroyed the Lyric Theater at Van Alstyne, Texas, at 5 o'clock on the morning of July 18. S. L. Brown owned the house, which was partially insured.

Marguerite Courtot, who recently joined the Famous Players, will make her first appearance with that company in an adaptation of Edgar Selwyn's play, "Rolling Stones," with Owen Moore opposite.

Maurice and Florence Walton make their debut with Famous Players in a production directed by Ashley Miller.

Pauline Frederick has just signed a contract which will keep her with the Famous Players for two more years.

William H. Tooker, featured in many photoplays, among them "A Fool's Revenge," the Fox picture, has a leading role in the second Ivan production, "Her Surrender."

Ralph Herz is making one-reel comedies for Metro, and also finding time to rehearse for the new stage production in which he is to be starred, "A Regular Girl." After the opening of the play in September at a Broadway theater, Mr. Herz will continue to make comedies, acting at night and working before the camera in the day time.

Pathe has arranged for two more serials to be released this year. Mabel Herbert Urner and Guy McConnell are the authors. These will bring the number of Pathe serials to seven this year. The others are "The Red Circle," "The Iron Claw," "Who's Guilty," "The Grip of Evil," and, beginning September 3, "The Shielding Shadow."

Edna Hunter, formerly leading woman with King Baggot in Universal pictures, has signed a contract to appear in Clara Kimball Young productions.

W. R. Sheehan is at present in Russia in the interests of William Fox pictures.

A forthcoming release of the Paramount-Burton Holmes Pictures—is devoted to Innsbruck, the beautiful capital of Austrian Tyrol.

The husband of Mme Ganna Walska the "Constance" of "A Child of Destiny," the Metro-Columbia feature play in which Irene Fenwick is starred, was Baron d'Eingorn, who was killed early in the war while fighting for Russia.

"The Fugitive," featuring Florence La Badie, will be the first Thanhouser play released through Pathe. The date is August 13.

Pauline Frederick is working in "Ashes of Embers," written for her by Forrest Halsey. Joseph Kaufman, who has recovered from his illness, is directing.

"Jaffery," recently produced by the Frohman Amusement Corporation, has been secured by William R. Hearst as the first feature release for the International Film Service.

Jack Curtis, a seven-year-old prodigy of the speaking stage, has an important role in "The House of Mirrors," a five-act Mutual Masterpicture, featuring Frank Mills.

A complete motion picture, either drama or a comedy, of 250 feet in length, is shortly to be released by the Mutual on the weekly release of "Reel Life," the Mutual Film Magazine in motion picture. Edward Middleton will direct the filming of these pictures with such noted stars as Iva Shepard, "Budd" Ross and others of equal note, appearing as the featured players. A cast of thirty-seven players was required for one of the first of these short features. Scenery and properties used in these productions will be the same as in the long photodramas.

There is a remarkable bit of trick photography in "The Fugitive," a Thanhouser feature to be released through Pathe. The police inspector holds in his hand a photograph of Florence LaBadie, the fugitive. "When I get you I'll—" he threatens, and, portraying his thoughts, two tiny policemen come from behind the photograph. Miss LaBadie comes to life and after a struggle the policemen lead her away.

Henry Kolker, who heads the supporting cast in "Gloria's Romance," began his career with a German stock company in Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

PACIFIC COAST NOTES

Mary Miles Minter's favorite recreation is attending motion picture shows. She is an ardent fan, and has a number of favorite players whose pictures she never misses.

Clarence Kolb, of the team of Kolb and Dill, shot himself in the hand during the filming of the comedy, "Three Pals," at the American studios. A property man had loaded the gun.

Colin Campbell, who recently finished directing the film version of "The Crisis" for the Selig Company, is back in Los Angeles and will soon begin the production of "The Garden of Allah."

Rose Garrity, a Boston artist, was so impressed by the performance of Monroe Salisbury as "Allesandro" in "Ramona" that she has decided to make a marble statue of him.

Richard Stanton, the well known director, is ill and must submit to an operation which will keep him from acting or directing for a couple of months.

Henry Otto is back in California with his stars, Harold Lockwood and May Allison. They are putting on "Mister 44" in their studio on Gordon street, Hollywood. The company will leave for Lake Tahoe to take some exteriors.

A railroad locomotive is to be blown up for a spectacular scene in the Signal production of Vaughan Kester's novel, "The Manager of the B. & A."

Harry Lloyd, formerly a stock player at the Signal Film Corporation's studios, was this week promoted to the position of assistant to director general J. P. Mc-

Gowan in the production of Helen Holmes features. Mr. Lloyd has been with the Signal company for a number of months during which time he appeared in the production of "The Girl and the Game," "Whispering Smith," "Medicine Bend," "Judith of the Cumberlands" and is now cast for a role in the film version of "The Manager of the B. & A."

"The Lone Hermit" is the title given the Clarke Irvine picture now being produced by William Russell at the American Film Studios in Santa Barbara, and which will be the sixth of the eight William Russell productions to be released as special features of the Mutual program. Edward A. Kaufman supplied the continuity for the Irvine story.

The settings of one interior scene in the new Pallas-Morosco play featuring Vivian Martin cost $4,000. William D. Taylor is the director. The supporting cast includes Herbert Standing, Alfred Vosburgh, Helen Eddy, Lucille Ward and Tom Bates.

Kolb and Dill have started their third feature for the American company, with Rea Berger as director.

As a result of the "Little Mary Sunshine" picture, Henry King, the Balboa actor-director, has received a number of amusing letters from children throughout the country.

Her work in the five-reel feature, "The Enigma," having been completed, Neva Gerber is resting before beginning another five-reeler for the Universal company, "The Last of His Race," the story of an Indian.

Director A. W. Rice is at present in the wilds of Bear Valley, where he is producing a number of outdoor one-reel dramas for the Universal program.

Wyndham Gittens has been added to the Universal forces as film editor. He will co-operate with Eugene E. Lewis, scenario editor, and watch the film of all productions during their progress. He will also act as critic of the films and advisor to the directors.

Lule Warrington is directing her Universal juvenile company in a one-reel fairy picture, "Sea Foam," written by Helen Jonas, the daughter of M. G. Jonas, publicity chief of Universal City.

"The Chalice of Courage," starring Cleo Madison, has been completed in five reels at Universal City.

Jules Mendel, formerly on the vaudeville stage, has joined the Universal players and will appear in comedies with Al Frank, directed by M. L. Forrester, with Viola Lind as leading lady.

The large squad of cowboys at Inceville are staging thrilling rides for the new Triangle "bad-man" play by J. G. Hawks in which William S. Hart is featured.

A sensational boiler explosion aboard ship was staged this week, by Director Walter Edwards for scenes in the desert-island drama by Lanier Bartlett, in which Thomas H. Ince will present Dorothy Dalton and William Desmond as co-stars.

Antrim Short, the clever juvenile at the Universal studios, has been playing a varied assortment of roles. He had just finished being a fairy prince under the direction of Lule Warrenton when he became a Mexican youngster at a border raid, then a bell boy around whom a hotel scene revolves, then the msichievous younger brother of a coquettish girl.

"The Adventures of My Lady Raffles" is the new series starring Grace Cunard and Francis Ford, which will follow "Peg O' The Ring." Each installment of the series will be a complete story, but a master-story will run through the episodes. Grace begins as a society girl who becomes a crook to gain the attention of Ford, who has a Sphinx-like role of a man who never smiles and seldom speaks.

Director Henry Kernan has just completed his first Vogue comedy, "Gone To The Dogs," in which sixty dogs of all varieties were used. All the dogs from the streets of Hollywood were brought to the studio and turned into picture players.

Richard Bennett, the stage star now working in pictures for the American Company, is planning to produce several stage plays of his own authorship in Santa Barbara.

Mae Wells, comedienne at the Keystone studios, began her theatrical experience with an "Uncle Tom's Cabin" road company. She went into pictures in 1904, her first being "Memories of a Trunk," produced at the Edison studio in the Bronx, N. Y., and directed by Ed. Porter, who was also the camera man. She also appeared in the first D. W. Griffith picture, "Dorothy's Adventures," produced by the old Biograph Company. In the company at the time was Tony O'Sullivan, now Mack Sennett's chief assistant. Griffith was an actor then and was given the story, with the understanding that if he could make a picture of it he would be made a director.

Fred Mace, star comedian of the Keystone studios, was famous on the legitimate stage before entering the movies.

The tenth and last episode of "Timothy Dobbs," starring Carter De Haven, has been completed by Director Wallace Beery.

Zoe Rae, the six-year-old Universal actress, formerly called Zoe Beck, is to be starred in a five-reel production, "Little Miss Charity," a comedy-drama.

In her first Universal feature, "The Spring Song," Ruth Stonehouse had twenty changes of costume.

The cast of "Mister 44," the new Metro-Yorke photoplay starring Harold Lockwood and May Allison, includes Aileen Allen, who holds the woman's championship of the United States for fancy diving.

COSTELLO IN "CRIMSON STAIN"

Maurice Costello, who is starring in "The Crimson Stain Mystery" serial, which the Consolidated Film Corporation is presenting, was one of the very first popular heroes of the screen; he was the first general matinee idol and immediately the girls throughout the country named him "Dimples" and "Curly." Although he has been in the pictures several years, he still receives hundreds of letters in which he is addressed as "Dimples" and "Curley" Costello.

"The Crimson Stain Mystery" is Costello's first serial.

CHICAGO GOSSIP

Jack Wheeler, editor of the Selig-Tribune, formerly served in the White House as bodyguard for former Presidents Roosevelt and Taft.

"The Crisis," the twelve-reel production from Winston Churchill's novel made by the Selig Company in Chicago and Vicksburg, will be released early in the fall. A beautiful system of subtitles has been devised, it is reported, which will add to the artistic worth of the production.

The Monarch Film Producing Company celebrated the completion of its first comedy "Raising An Army," featuring Gene Greene, the former vaudeville comedian, by an invitation showing at the studio, 2332 N. California Avenue. In addition to the showing of the picture, which is in two reels, a vaudeville performance given by the members of the cast, a number of whom are from the vaudeville stage. The Monarch Company plans to film a series of two-reel comedies starring Gene Greene, and later will produce dramatic sketches.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by makes, Motography has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

The Germ of Mystery—(Three Reels)—Selig—August 14.—Featuring Guy Oliver, Fritzi Brunette, Frank Clark and Lillian Hayward. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

A Temporary Truce—(Two Reels)—Biograph—August 15.—Featuring Blanche Sweet. Mexican Jim, a good-for-nothing, quarrels with Jack Hardy, a young prospector, and Jack, under other circumstances, would have disdainfully ignored Jim's drunken garble, but he felt in none too good a humor, for things were not prospering with him, and his young wife was growing homesick for the East, hence Jack's temper was on tap and he made Jim the laughing-stock of the town by giving him a walloping. Jim vows to get even. He carries off Jack's wife and leaves a derisive note for Jack, and another at the saloon, to the effect that the joke is turned. Jim has forcibly taken Jack's wife as far as an old deserted well-box in the hills, when Jack, who started after them, comes up and opens fire. Jim has the advantage for he is sheltered by the well-box, and furthermore, Jack is careful for fear of hitting his wife. This warfare does not last long because of an outbreak among the young Indian braves, who have started out to avenge the death of one of their tribe at the hands of a party of drunken cutthroats, so Jack and Jim form a truce to fight the common enemy. The finish of the story is quite unique, and the production as a whole is one of the most convincing western stories ever made.

Saved From Himself—Biograph Reissue—August 15.—Featuring Mabel Normand and Joseph Graybill. The young hotel clerk and the stenographer are engaged, and the boy's one ambition is to provide a rosy future for his bride. With this in mind, he invests all his savings in the stock market, having been induced to do so by the success of an old friend in the market. He, however, is not so fortunate, for the stocks he bought are dropping fast. His broker wires for $2,000 to save him from utter ruin. This, of course, he hasn't, and in the despair caused by the thought of his hopes for the future being crushed, he is about to yield to the temptation of appropriating a large amount of money left in care of the hotel proprietor by one of the guests, when his purpose is discovered by his sweetheart, whose influence saves him from the dishonorable act his desperation would have driven him to.

My Country, 'Tis of Thee—(Two Reels)—Essanay—August 15.—Featuring Richard Travers, Lillian Drew and Sydney Ainsworth. When the militia is called to the Mexican border Stone regrets that he resigned his captaincy in the national guard. His wife congratulates herself that she forced him to give it up. However, patriotism is too strong and he wins back his commission in spite of his wife's pleading. She insists he does not love her, or he would not leave her. Leander Wilcox tells her that no man who loved her would leave her. Stone is obdurate and goes to the front. Wilcox escorts Mrs. Stone to a gay round of affairs and friends notify Stone. The captain leaves fighting for his country long enough to return to fight for his home, but discovers his wife has learned to understand Wilcox. She tells him to go back to his duty and that she will await him.

A Lesson in Labor—(Two Reels)—Lubin—August 15.—John Seward II brings his son John Seward III up to take charge of the Seward Mills and continue the Seward system of "Every cog must show its profit." His father dies and the first order of the new Seward head is to discharge all employes over 50 and this discharges Walsh, one of the most respected workmen in the place. Walsh's son, a capable young fellow, plots a reckoning and kidnaps Seward and his fiancee, Eleanor, from Seward's yacht. Walsh takes Eleanor and Seward to a lonely shore of an island and there at a first physical encounter beats him into a state of semi-slavery. He works his young master in a fashion of work Seward never realized existed. Seward is injured and Walsh takes care of him. In turn Walsh is injured just as the searching party finds Seward and his captor. Seward, however, has learned the lesson of work. He tells the searchers that he left the yacht as an experiment. Back at the mill Seward rescinds his order. The old man returns to work and his act, together with the experience on the island, creates in him and Eleanor a feeling of mutual respect and love they would not have enjoyed except for the drastic methods of the "Eaglet" Walsh.

Canimated Nooz Pictorial No. 14—Essanay—August 16.—The annual athletic meet of the Chorus Men's Athletic Club, which was held at Powderpuff, N. Y., has been filmed by Canimated Nooz camera men. A close-up of "Pinky" Rooze winning the shotput is shown. Two big healthy youths indulge in a most thrilling game of croquet. "Cutey" Wristwatch wins the honors at the game. Aloysious Rutherford Morebrain, aged nine years, is filmed as he graduated with highest honors, receiving the degrees of D.D., S.O.S., M.D., and P.D.G. The lad is pictured delivering his oration on "Darwin and Wrong," or "Our Ancestors, the Fish Family." Dreamy Dud has another thrilling nightmare. Five hundred feet of scenic share the reel.

Their Dream House—Vim—August 16.—Featuring Rosemary Theby and Harry Meyers. A bad real estate man sells a phoney house to the young couple and they are delighted with it until things begin to happen. The water won't run until after they have turned on every tap, when it runs too much and floods the house before they are aware of what is happening. The gas works on the instalment plan and then won't behave. Things go from bad to worse until the house starts to leak in a heavy storm. Hubby steals a big umbrella from the real estate man's buggy and comes home. The wind blows the door shut, and when he kicks it the panel bursts, being made of paper. With the umbrella the couple are sheltering themselves as best they may when the roof of the house blows away and they are engulfed by the rain. What happens afterward is left to the imagination.

The Life Savers—Vim—August 17.—Featuring Plump and Runt. Plump and Runt, life savers, fall for the charms of Miss Aqua, a beautiful young diver, and seek means to humiliate the other in her eyes. First one and then the other is favored by the diver's smiles and driven almost crazy Runt decides to get rid of his fat rival by digging a hole under the water and enticing therein his hated one-time pal. Plump goes to the rescue of an old maid and the two are buried in the ocean bed and Runt, gloating over his rival's destruction, escorts his loved one into the water. Remorse seizes him, however, and he aids in the rescue of the almost choked Plump. The diver pretends to be overcome and both Plump and Runt go to her rescue, and when they bring the charmer safely to land they are met and thanked by the lady's husband and the two pals cool their fevered and disappointed brows beneath the salty waves.

Comrades—Vim—August 18.—Featuring Pokes and Jabbs. Pokes and Jabbs, cellmates, have formed a friendship which seems unbreakable. When their sentences are served Pokes tells Jabbs that henceforth he is going to follow the straight and narrow path and Jabbs scornfully parts from his old comrade and hies himself back to the old surroundings and dishonest friends. Pokes seeks shelter in a boarding house to which he has been attracted by the landlady's daughter and by his charming manner he quickly wins the smiles of fair Ethel, much to the disgust of the other men boarders. Pokes, who has reverted to his old profession of house breaking, enters the home of Ethel and steals her necklace. When Ethel discovers her loss she arouses the household and they suspect Pokes, who has discovered Jabbs hiding in his closet, and after a struggle he secured the necklace. He is admiring the necklace when they enter his room and circumstantial evidence causes it to look black for Pokes and he, realizing this, dives out through the window and away before the law can again fasten its grasp upon him.

A Little Volunteer—(Three Reels)—Essanay—August 19.—Featuring Joyce Fair, Hugh Thompson and Edmund F. Cobb. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

A Bear of a Story—Selig—August 19.—Featuring Tom Mix and Victoria Forde. Tom, a cowpuncher, is engaged to marry Vicky Williams, a ranch girl. Vicky has a girl chum who owns a pet bear, and she tells Tom that he must get her a bear. With his friend, Sid Jones, Tom soon discovers bear signs. Finally a bear is treed. The limb on which Bruin is hanging is sawed off, and the bear falls to the ground, where it is lassoed by Tom and Sid. Vicky, in the meantime, has been playing with her girl friend's pet bear and it bites her finger. When she sees Tom and Sid approaching with the bear, which they finally captured at the risk of their lives, she tells them she doesn't like bears, doesn't want one, and leaves. With an expression of "Can you beat it?" Tom and Sid fall to the ground in a faint.

Selig-Tribune No. 62—August 3.—Twenty-two men dead and half a dozen others are dying as a result of an explosion of gas in the water works tunnel, five miles from shore under Lake Erie; seven persons killed and forty injured when a bomb explodes in the line of march of the Preparedness parade at San Francisco, Cal.; 1st Illinois Brigade members do their hike to Leon Springs, but not without many falling by the roadside because of the terrific heat, Canton, Mass.; for the relief of the dependent families of state militia, chorus girls from Broadway shows sell tickets for National Guardsmen's Field Day at Sheepshead Bay, New York, N. Y.

Selig-Tribune No. 63—August 7.—Future admirals of the navy take their midsummer practice cruise aboard the battleship Wisconsin, Charlestown Navy Yard, N. C.; John Borden, millionaire sportsman of Chicago, and Captain Louis L. Lane sail on the schooner Great Bear to hunt big game and whales in the Arctic, Seattle, Wash.; the 3rd, 4th, 7th and 8th Illinois Machine Gun Companies practice with new type of machine guns, which are being used extensively in the European war, Leon Springs, Texas; the explosion of the 69 cars of ammunition stored on Black Tom Island kills at least three men, injures scores and causes a property loss of approximately $20,000,000.

Good Evening, Judge—Kalem—August 8.—Featuring Ham and Bud. An underworld burlesque, in which Ham and Bud, because of their cleverness in bargaining, are engaged to take care of a pawnshop that is really a "fence" for a clever band of crooks. They gain the confidence of Queenie, the leader of the band, and are invited to aid in a big coup. As burglars Ham and Bud are first-class bunglers, and mistake follows mistake until they bring a swarm of police down on the band. Queenie and her pal, Dick, escape, but Ham and Bud fight a running battle with the minions of the law. Backing away, battling bitterly inch by inch, they back directly into the courtroom. "Good evening, Judge!" says Ham, and without a word of instruction they find their way below, to their old cell, make up their bunks, and go off to sleep.

American is about to release "The Holly House," on the left, and "El Diablo," next. The third view is from the two-reel Vogue-Mutual, "Her Luckless Scheme."

Daisy the Demonstrator—Kalem—August 11.—Featuring Ivy Close. Daisy arrives in the rising town of Yeast at a propitious moment, for at Bobby Hubbles' General Store business is bad, and Porticas Pepper, holder of the inevitable mortgage, insistent. When Daisy starts to demonstrate Bobby's newly invented soap business picks up with a rush, for all the men of the town enjoy having their faces washed by Daisy's dainty hands. But even these results do not banish the pestiferous Pepper. The day of judgment comes, and when Bobby is unable to look the mortgage in the face Pepper starts for the bank to give instructions that the deed be enforced. But Daisy learns of Bobby's plight and comes forth with a bank-roll that would choke any self-respecting third-act mortgage and a race ensues to the bank. The things that happen in that race brings gasps of amazement and laughs in rapid-fire succession until a bang-up finish finds Pepper and his mortgage out in the cold, cold world, while Bobby and Daisy embrace.

Hurled Through the Drawbridge—Kalem—August 12.—Featuring Helen Gibson. Learning that the driver of the Comet car has been disabled on the eve of the big race, Sinton, a gambler, bets heavily on its rival. But his plans go awry when Gordon, the owner of the Comet car, meets Naroche, a celebrated French driver, and engages him to pilot the racer. Sinton, facing heavy losses, desperately instructs his unscrupulous aids to use every means at their command to prevent Naroche and the Comet reaching the scene of the race. The conspirators lay plans to delay the special bearing the Gordon party. Helen, at Lone Point, learns of the plan and speeds in a handcar to the Melius drawbridge to give warning. Sinton's aids attempt to forestall her by overpowering the bridge tender and raising the draw. Helen, tearing ahead at great speed, plunges through the open draw, barely escaping death as the heavy handcar overturns and strikes the water. Swimming to the opposite shore, Helen races down the track and succeeds in stopping the special in the nick of time. Later, in a race filled with thrills, the Comet car sweeps to the finish victorious.

Mutual Pictures

Ruth Ridley's Return—(Two Reels)—American—August 14.—Featuring Lizette Thorne and Ed Coxen. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

Perkins' Mystic Manor—Beauty—August 16.—Featuring Orral Humphrey. Pinkney Perkins, a lawyer, is willed a large estate by one of his clients and he starts out to take possession of it. Unknown to him the mansion, long deserted, has been usurped by a pair of Hindoo mystics, Princess Murad and her assistant, Mogul, and their slavey, Mecca. Perkins enters the house and finds himself in a room fitted up in Oriental style, where he is seized and questioned by Mogul, who refuses to vacate. Princess Murad resorts to vampire tactics to gain permission from Perkins to use the mansion and Mecca's jealousy is aroused, for he loves Princess Murad. He plants a bomb under the bench on which they are sitting and it blows them skyward. Some time later Perkins learns that he has been bequeathed another large estate, but once is enough for him and he tears the will into bits and drops it in his waste basket.

The Holly House—(Three Reels)—American—August 17.—Featuring Vivian Rich and Alfred Vosburgh. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

El Diablo—(Two Reels)—Mustang—August 18.—Featuring Jack Richardson, Kitty Wells, King Clark and Lizette Thorne. Tom Morton comes to Sagebrush, Ariz., with his mother and sister, Tina, and accepts the position of sheriff. El Diablo, an outlaw living in the mountains, has a special animosity for sheriffs and Tina, upon learning this, is fearful of her brother's life and determines to rid the town of El Diablo. She comes upon him and he, thinking her a man, engages in a gun fight with her and finally wounds her. When he learns that she is a woman he tells her why he has become a bandit and why he hates sheriffs. He tells her that years before the sheriff at that time had been in love with his wife and had forced him to write a letter to her, stating that he had been the perpetrator of a recent robbery and that he was leaving the country. After freeing himself he returns home and finds his wife gone and had never heard from her since. Later El Diablo goes into the restaurant owned by Mrs. Morton and discovers that she is his lost wife.

Her Luckless Scheme—(Two Reels)—Vogue—August 20.—Featuring Gypsy Abbott, Larry Bowes, Arthur Moon and Paddy McQuire. Blanch Whitney, whose father owns the largest department store in the town, learns that Jack Bryson, star reporter of the News, is going to investigate working conditions in the department stores, and she resolves to work in her father's store as a shop girl, hoping for a chance to meet Bryson and in some way revenge herself upon him. She meets Bryson and he makes a date with her and at luncheon she brings tears to his eyes, describing how she lives on four dollars a week. He asks her to marry him and she consents to run away with him that night. She then arranges with Dot Kernan and her father for Dot to elope with Jack and she would then tell the town about it and make Jack the laughing stock among newspaper men. Complications set in, however, and Jack learns of the joke to be played on him and Blanch discovers that she is the victim of her own joke and her friends laugh at her expense.

Universal Program

Episode No. 1 of "A Daughter of the U. S. A."—(Three Reels)—Universal Special Feature.—With Marie Walcamp, Eddie Pole and Jack Holt. The first episode of this serial shows how Liberty Horton, daughter of a wealthy land owner in Mexico, is placed under the guardianship of Major Richard Winston and Senor Pancho Leon, trustees of Horton's vast estate. After living a year with the Winstons Liberty returns to her father's estate in Mexico, accompanied by Major Winston and Captain Rutledge of the Texas Rangers. The latter loves the girl. Pancho Lopez, major domo of the ranch, abducts Liberty, carries her into the mountains and demands a large ransom, the money to be used for financing a revolution against the Mexican government. As this episode closes Liberty escapes; Alvira, an insurrecto chief, prepared to attack an American town, and Captain Rutledge and Manual, antagonistic rivals for Liberty's hand, decide upon a duel.

The Will—(Two Reels)—Episode 14 of "Peg o' the Ring."—Featuring Grace Cunard and Francis Ford. This episode sees the rescue of Dr. Lund, Jr., and Peg from their latest precarious position by the circus people. Old Dr. Lund, discovering that his wife is trying to poison him, springs at her, only to die of the exertion. Then Mrs. Lund and Marcus devise a plan to get Peg out of the way so they may appropriate the will. One of Peg's fits aids them, and as the episode closes Peg is again seized.

Retribution—(Two Reels)—Final Episode of "Peg o' the Ring."—Featuring Grace Cunard and Francis Ford. At last Marcus meets his death in trying to do away with Peg. After a hard fight with Dr. Lund, in which the house is set afire, the young doctor and Peg barely escape, leaving Marcus in the flames. Mrs. Lund puts up a hard fight for the possession of Peg's inheritance, but Flip's testimony crushes her. As the story ends, Mrs. Lund is forgiven, Dr. Lund, Jr., proposes to Peg, and the latter, now healed of her strange inheritance, accepts.

The Sody Clerk—(Two Reels)—August 14.—Episode 1 of "Timothy Dobbs, That's Me." Featuring Carter De Haven. Timothy, the handsome soda dispenser in Centerville, is the idol of all the girls in town, as well as the enemy of the young men of the region. All is well until Gwendolyn Bates comes to visit Centerville. She sows the movie hero worship seed in the heads of the girls and Tim is utterly ignored. When the soda dispenser can stand it no longer, he announces that he is to be a movie actor himself and he is immediately idolized again. The episode closes with Timothy leaving for California.

The Battle for Chile Con Carne—Nestor—August 14.—Featuring Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Priscilla Dean. Lem Forby, a correspondence school reporter, is sent to cover the Mexican war. Through the help of General Siesta's sweetheart, who has transferred her affections to Lem, the latter manages to get the "papers" he is after—which turn out to be only a recipe for chile con carne.

A Son of Neptune—(Three Reels)—Gold Seal—August 15.—Gordon Griffith, W. V. Mong and Betty Schade featured. Little Joe, his father drowned at sea, is treated cruelly by old Rufe, his guardian. The story tells how Joe meets a wealthy young girl from across the bay, how they both have a beautiful dream and how the dream finally comes true, Joe becoming the girl's prince in earnest.

He Wrote a Book—Victor—August 15.—With William Garwood and Lois Wilson. Homer Wormwood, an indefatigable student, is the butt of all the jokes at the boarding house. When the boys at the house discover he has written a book on China they play a joke on him with the aid of a Chinese laundryman. But Homer takes lessons in physical culture and his day of revenge at last arrives.

The Toll of the Law—Imp—August 16.—With Agnes Vernon. Steve robs the home of a young minister and is sent up. While he is in jail his sister, helpless, is adopted by the minister. On being released Steve resolves to be revenged, but as he is about to exact his payment from the minister he discovers that the man has cared for his sister.

The Mother-in-Law—(Two Reels)—L-Ko—August 16.—Billie Ritchie featured. Billie thinks that if he can get someone else for his mother-in-law to pick upon, she will be less abusive to him. So Billie manages to rope in a man for mother-in-law and they are married. But now Billie finds to his grief that he has two foes instead of one. So the tormented son-in-law decides to end it all, but not until he has had revenge. With the help of thugs his revenge is swift and sure. But in his moment of exultation

New Essanays. Reading from the left, "Worth While," "The Sting of Victory," with Henry Walthall, and "The Little Volunteer."

Billie meets with an unexpected accident and is blown into the sky.

A Woman's Eyes—Big U—August 17.—Featuring Harry Carey and Olive F. Golden. This story takes as its subject the averted cheating of an old man out of his mining claim through the influence of his daughter's innocence and gentle womanliness, which completely overpower the villain and cause him to retrace his steps.

Japan, the Riddle of the World—Powers—August 17.—In this Dorsey travelogue numerous places and objects of interest in Japan are shown. First come the beautiful sea approaches to the country. Then follow scenes in the cities, pointing out the wonderful changes brought about in the last few years. The scenic beauties and methods of labor in the land are also dwelt upon.

Ashamed of the Old Folks—(Two Reels)—Victor—August 17.—With Matt Moore and Jane Gail. Matt and Jane, happily married, have both come from the country and made their fortunes in the city. They each receive letters from their parents stating that they intend to come and visit them. Each is ashamed of his country parent and thus the two parents are put up secretly at the hotel. It chances that Matt and Jane select the same hotel. The old folks meet at the hotel, have a brief love affair and become married. Thus there is more than one surprise awaiting Jane and Matt.

The Weapons of Love—Big U—August 18.—G. Raymond Nye and Vola Smith featured. This story by Hapsburg Liebe was originally published in the Red Book magazine under the title of "The Weapons of Bill Murrel." It deals with the breaking up of a feud of long standing between two clans. Bill Murrell loves Tommie, daughter of John Anson, leader of the hostile clan. Tommie is stricken with the mountain fever. Anson and his followers come upon Bill in the woods praying earnestly for the recovery of his sweetheart. The sight of Bill praying for Tommie strikes home to Anson and is sufficient to end the feud, Bill and Tommie being married when the latter recovers.

The Two Pictures—Imp—August 18.—With Wilfred Rogers and Kathleen Aamold. This story shows what happens as the result of exchanging a salacious picture in the window of an art store for that of the Madonna. Thinking the latter picture is that of the nude, an immoral young man takes it to a dance hall for the edification of his friends. A fight results. Then follows the effect the Madonna's picture has on a blind girl.

Beyond the Trail—(Two Reels)—Bison—August 19.—Dorothy Phillips and Ben Wilson featured. John Blakely, widower and father of a little girl of five, works for Morgan. The latter's wife, in love with John, vows vengeance when he refuses to call on her. As the result of her plotting John is forced by Morgan to leave the town. Before Mrs. Morgan dies she confesses her guilt to her husband. Years later Morgan's son Paul falls in love with John's daughter in Canada. John attempts to kill Paul but wounds another man by mistake. Finally Morgan and John meet, difficulties are explained away, and the young lovers are hampered no further.

Soup and Nuts—Joker—August 19.—With Gale Henry and William Franey. This sea story has to do with an amorous captain, his sweetheart, her daughter, Lillian, and the latter's lover, Frank. The heart of Lillian's mother is set against Frank, but the latter finally rescues Captain Salt and his sweetheart from an insubordinate crew. Thus Frank gets Lillian and the crew is made to walk the plank.

Pie—Powers—August 20.—A juvenile comedy in which a youngster, having partaken freely of sweets, has a terrible dream. It is mostly about cannibals, taking wild flights into the fantastic, as dreams will. George Hupp is featured.

Universal Animated Weekly No. 32—August 9.—Guardsmen enjoy camera man's visit after hard day of drill, McAllen, Texas; Speaker Champ Clark unveiling allegorical group over entrance to House, Washington, D. C.; liner Shnayak ashore on rocky coast, graveyard of many ships, Monterey, Cal.; household pets and vagrants rounded up for death, as germ carriers, New York, N. Y.; bicycle parade brings out wheels, high and low, Los Angeles, Cal.; London society sells flowers from Lusitania life boat, in aid of British wounded soldiers, London, England; German submarine dodges waiting cruiser on homeward voyage, Baltimore, Md.; a 52-foot whale is killed after fierce battle, Rockaway, N. Y.; Miss Laura Bromwell thrills spectators by spectacular plunge, Cincinnati, Ohio; cartoons by Hy Mayer.

Blue Bird

Bettina Loved a Soldier—(Five Reels)—Bluebird—August 14.—Featuring Louise Lovely and Rupert Julian. Based on Ludivoc Halevy's novel "L'Abbe Constantin." Jean Reynaud, the nephew of Abbe Constantin, is in love with Bettina, but looks upon her wealth as a barrier between them as he is poor. When Jean sees his love getting the better of him he decides to leave the following morning, and to see Bettina once more he attends a ball given at the castle. Here he meets Paul de Lacardens, who also loves Bettina, and when he casts an unworthy aspersion upon Jean's motives with Bettina they fight and Paul is defeated and completely crushed. The next morning Bettina goes to the vicarage and confesses her love for Jean to the Abbe and the priest commands Jean to marry her. Francella Billington, Douglas Gerrard, George Berrill, Zoe DuRae and Elsie Jane Wilson complete the cast. Rupert Julian directed the production.

The End of the Trail—(Five Reels)—William Fox—August 7.—Featuring William Farnum. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

International Film

Hearst-International No. 61—August 1.—Remarkable picture of actual fighting on the battlefield with French and German engaged in a titanic struggle; Salvation Army Fresh Air Camp is host to scores of small children of Boston poor families, Canton, Mass.; Miss Miriam Babis, one of the beauties of the Ziegfeld Follies of 1916, poses for the Hearst-International News Pictorial in gowns of her own creation; exclusive pictures of staff photographer, Nelson F. Edwards, showing the training of German troops at the big camp at Barnstadt; German people pay tribute to Von Hindenburg by erecting a monster statue in his honor in the German capitol; $7,000,000 worth of ammunition ready for shipment to the entente allies let go with tremendous force, killing many, injuring thousands and destroying more than $50,000,000 worth of property, Black Tom Island, N. J.

Hearst-International News Pictorial No. 62—August 4.—Submarine merchant liner Deutschland, the first boat to carry the German flag into an American port and out again, departs for its home port, Bremen, Germany, Baltimore, Md.; General Leonard Wood addresses and reviews youthful soldiers who are training at this camp, Plum Island, N. Y.; big preparedness parade is marred by foe of national defense who explodes a bomb, killing six persons and injuring seriously a score of others, San Francisco, Cal.; Ensign Vincent Astor reviews New York State Naval Battalion and flies over Long Island Sound in his hydroplane, Bay Shore, N. Y.; Miss Beth Lydy, prima donna of "Step This Way," Astor Theater, New York, poses exclusively for the Hearst International News Pictorial in gowns of the latest designs; cartoon by T. E. Powers.

Kleine

Gloria's Romance No. 13—(Two Reels)—George Kleine.—The Midnight Riot. Featuring Billie Burke. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

Gloria's Romance No. 14—(Two Reels)—George Kleine.—The Floating Trap. Featuring Billie Burke. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

Metro

The Child of Destiny—(Five Reels)—Metro—July 24.—Irene Fenwick is featured in this story, written and produced by William Nigh. Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

Mutual Masterpictures

The House of Mirrors—(Five Reels)—Mutual Masterpicture—August 10.—Frank Mills in a modern domestic drama directed by Marshall Farnum. Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

Paramount

The House With the Golden Windows—(Five Reels)—Lasky-Paramount—August 3.—Directed by George Melford and starring Wallace Reid and Cleo Ridgely. Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

The Woman in the Case—(Five Reels)—Famous Players—August 7.—Featuring Pauline Frederick. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

Pictographs-Paramount — August 13. — "The Making of a Fireman" has first place on this issue of Pictographs. The scenes of the training classes and other phases of the fire-fighter's work, including work on a burning building, are of the New York Fire Department. "Getting the Right Start in Life" is the title of this number in the Better Babies department. "Weaving in Wood," showing wicker furniture in the making, and "A Picnic for Two" complete this release, which is a remarkably good one.

In Innsbruck—Paramount-Burton Holmes—August 13.—This travelogue contains some pictures of striking beauty but the greater part of it is given to the favorite dances of the people of the Austrian Tyrol. Both are interesting.

Farmer Al Falfa's Egg-Citement—Paramount-Bray—(Split Reel)—August 13.—Farmer Al's sign warning all birds that the laying of eggs promiscuously about the farm will bring down punishment upon the offender if caught. A very productive duck decides to have some sport with Al Alfalfa, and it does. This fairly amusing animated cartoon is by Paul Terry. On the same reel with:

Nature's Bugaboo—A Dr. Raymond Ditmars nature picture. The subject is that most peculiar animal, the sloth. This beast so closely approaches the popular conception of what is a perfect misfit that its every move is fascinating.

Pathe

Pathe News No. 62—AUGUST 2.—Hundreds are killed or injured as colliding dynamite cars explode and set fire to mammoth stores of war munitions worth millions of dollars, Jersey City, N. J.; police guard trolley cars in strike which threatens to disorganize the transit facilities of New York, New York, N. Y.; one hundred Seattle society women don khaki uniforms and undergo two weeks' training in an effort to learn something of Red Cross work.

Pathe News No. 63—AUGUST 5.—Big schooner Great Bear sails for the far north to give aid to the famous explorer Stefansson, who is stranded in the Arctic regions, Seattle, Wash.; Mayor Mitchel, with Commissioner Woods, review the police rookies who are receiving military training to better prepare them for their duties, Fort Wadsworth, N. Y.; the French proudly put on exhibition the many different kinds of field pieces captured from the Germans in their new offensive, Paris, France; forty-two well-known swimmers start in the eighth annual Chicago River Marathon Classic, Chicago, Ill.; the interned German liner Nekar bids godspeed to the Deutschland as the merchant submarine pulls off her dock for the return voyage to Bremen, Baltimore, Md.; naval cadets from the United States Academy at Annapolis start on their annual summer cruise on the U. S. S. Wisconsin, Charlestown, Mass.

The Grip of Evil—(TWO REELS)—PATHE—BALBOA—AUGUST 13.—The fifth episode of the serial featuring Jackie Saunders and Roland Bottomley is entitled "The Deserving Poor." The story tells of John Burton's experience with a family posing as poor and the victim of unfortunate circumstances. He aids the old couple and also the daughter, only to find that they treat an opportunity to better themselves lightly and continue in their dishonest, immoral ways. Jackie Saunders appears as the daughter who is not strong enough to rise above the plane adhered to by the other members of her family. The play is interesting, even though at times it is not very well acted.

The Grip of Evil—(TWO REELS)—PATHE—BALBOA—AUGUST 20.—"The Hypocrites," which is the sixth release in this series, develops a theme of the same character as its predecessor in the continued drama which confronts its audiences with the question, "Is humanity in the grip of evil?" John Burton goes to the country for a vacation but continues to seek an answer to the question which absorbs him. He encourages two young people who have been sent from home by their puritanical father, but learns that his confidence in them is misplaced, when both the boy is arrested as a result of a bar-room fight, and the girl gives in to her infatuation for a young artist who is celebrated for his many love affairs. The story is commendably acted by Jackie Saunders and Roland Bottomley and a good supporting cast.

Tokio, Capital of Japan—(SPLIT REEL)—PATHE—AUGUST 7.—An educational release giving views of the largest city of Japan. On the same reel with:

Jumping Analyzed—PATHE.—The body movements of the jumper are here shown in pictures taken with the Pathe ultra-rapid camera, which records movements not perceptible to the naked eye.

Losing Weight—(SPLIT REEL)—PATHE.—This R. L. Goldberg cartoon satirizes the popular so-called reducing methods in a typically Goldberg grotesque fashion. Fatima's stunts to remove inches from her waist line are quite diverting. On the same reel with:

Nature's Tireless Energy—PATHE.—Some very picturesque views of waterfalls in the United States.

Red Feather

A Yoke of Gold—(FIVE REELS)—RED FEATHER—AUGUST 14.—Dorothy Davenport and Emory Johnston are featured in this fascinating drama wherein love conquers the lure of wealth. Lloyd Carleton directed the production.

Triangle Program

Hell to Pay Austin—(FIVE REELS)—TRIANGLE-FINE ARTS—AUGUST 20.—A delightful comedy played by Bessie Love and Wilfred Lucas. Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

Lieut. Danny, U. S. A.—(FIVE REELS)—TRIANGLE-INCE—AUGUST 20.—A romance by J. G. Hawks in which William Desmond appears as the American army officer who rescues a Mexican beauty from a bandit. Enid Markey is the senorita. Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

Home—(FIVE REELS)—KAY-BEE TRIANGLE.—Featuring Bessie Barriscale. This story shows up eccentricities of human nature in a very original plot dealing with a young girl's sacrifice to recall the members of her family from the folly into which the love of riches has led them. C. Gardner Sullivan was the author.

V. L. S. E. Inc.

The Alibi—(FIVE REELS)—V. L. S. E.—AUGUST 7.—A Blue Ribbon feature produced by Paul Scardon from a crook melodrama by George Allan England. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

The Sting of Victory—(FIVE REELS)—ESSANAY—AUGUST 7.—Featuring Henry Walthall and Antoinette Walker. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

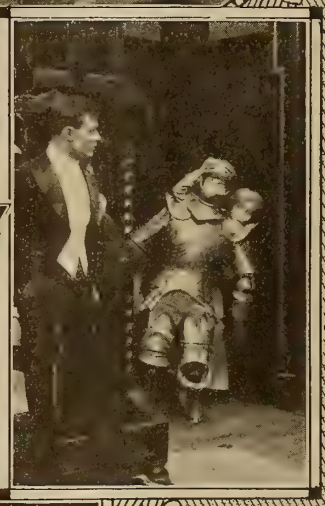
John Wanamaker's Policy

Is Our Policy

THE principles which have made him the world's foremost merchant are identical with those which, in less than a year and a half, have put V. L. S. E. to the forefront.

Founded on economic order and commercial justice; these principles recognize the right of the buyer to select that which suits his purposes best, and to pay for it according to its individual merit.

There is nothing very startling about these ideas only the fact that they were not applied in the film industry before.



Their overwhelming acceptance now is proof positive that the business men in this field are just as alert to "fair play" and bed-rock business principles, as in any other.

Vol. XVI CHICAGO, AUGUST 26, 1916 No. 9

Merger of Releasing Companies

"TWO OR THREE DISTRIBUTORS WILL SOON HANDLE ALL FILMS"—SEELYE

"WITHIN a very short time practically all the films in the United States will be distributed by two or three big releasing concerns."

The above statement was made last week to a representative of MOTOGRAPHY in the Chicago Pathe office by Business Manager C. R. Seelye of the Pathe company, who is in the west on business. Mr. Seelye not only makes the prophecy mentioned but he states that the process of distributing dissolution and re-combination has already begun. He gave no concrete examples for publication.

"There was a lot of meaning which escaped the cursory eye in the recent alliances quietly formed by manufacturers with Pathe," Mr. Seelye said. "The last one to come under our standard was Thanhouser. Several others are negotiating with us. The significance is that we have seen the light. It means centralization, economy and more equitable price lists."

Mr. Seelye indicated that it would serve also to stop the present cut-throat bidding for stars, reduce some of the present enormous salaries and permit exhibitors and others in the business to obtain a fairer return on their investments.

"We read every day of new companies springing up in different parts of the country, but most of them are not new companies," he declared. "They represent largely a breaking up of old companies under directors who have seen the light also and who will produce pictures for the big releasing companies.

"Such an organization as ours, for instance," Mr. Seelye explained, "means that the cost of any one picture will not be assessed against any one country, but proportionately among all the countries of the world. This, together with the fact that we manufacture our own materials from film to camera, means that we can sell a picture for what it would cost any other producer to make it, and we can still realize a fair profit on it."

The determining factor of success or failure depends largely on the selling force. In Cleveland Pathe has established what Mr. Seelye says is one of the most efficient film exchanges in the country. He has added a number of new men there.

New Blood for Cleveland Office

"It was only after spirited competition," he declared, "that I was able to secure the services of C. E. Shurtleff and A. M. Holah, formerly heads of the V. L. S. E. Cleveland branch, and put them in charge of the Pathe offices there. They bring to the Pathe office with them J. A. Conant and Paul H. Tessier, both of whom were also employed by V. L. S. E. in Cleveland. They will also have W. H. Windsor, M. J. Glick and A. W. Kurz."

Before leaving Chicago Mr. Seelye also issued a statement relative to "The Shielding Shadow" the next big Pathe serial, which he declares is the greatest that Pathe has yet turned out.

"We have sent prints," he said, "to all our exchanges and we have postponed the release of this serial so that the exhibitors might have an opportunity to see beforehand the quality of the picture and to plan special campaigns in connection with it. We have spent a great deal of money on the production and an extraordinarily large price was paid for the scenario by George Bracket Seitz, author of 'The Iron Claw' and many of our serials. We are convinced our new serial will increase the vogue of the serial picture fifty per cent, and the vogue now is stronger than it ever was."

Mr. Seelye will not return to his headquarters in New York until he has touched all thirty Pathe branches.

EXHIBITORS WIN

Test Case of Sunday Closing Law in Syracuse, New York, Gives Complete Victory to Theaters—No Other Trials

More than fifty exhibitors of Syracuse, New York, have defied the closing laws and have opened their houses on Sunday. Practically every manager was arrested but the first trial gave complete victory to the theaters. B. Emmett Cornell, manager of the Eckel Theater, was placed on trial before Justice B. J. Shove in the Syracuse Court of Special Sessions, charged with violation of the Sunday laws. The trial lasted five hours, the defendant putting in no testimony. The charge of the court was highly favorable to the defense, and the jury was out less than fifteen minutes, bringing in a verdict of acquittal.

The charge was presented upon a complaint lodged by Superintendent West of the New York Civic League. Other cases are pending, but it is doubtful if any more will ever be tried. Officials of the city and county are wholly out of sympathy with the prosecution.

Deputy Sheriff John C. Kratz was the first witness called. Kratz testified that with Deputy Sheriff Edward Hoffmire he had visited the Eckel Theater on Sunday, July 30, under orders from District Attorney Standen.

The deputy sheriff said that while of course a motion picture performance was going on in the theater, there was no disorder, noise or other disturbing factor. The sounds of the orchestra could not be heard from the street, nor from anywhere outside the auditorium, he said.

He answered in the negative Mr. Mosher's question as to whether a religious service of any description was taking place in the theater. When asked if an educational lecture was included in the program, Kratz said there was.

"The moving picture was a drama," explained Kratz, "and any drama is a sort of educational lecture, in my opinion."

Kratz described the drama, which was "Under Two Flags," but denied ever having read the book, so could not testify as to how faithfully Ouida's manuscript was followed in the picturization. He found Cigarette's adventures instructive, he said.

Hoffmire's testimony only served to corroborate that of Kratz.

Other witnesses called by Mr. Mosher were the ticket seller, ticket taker, head usher, machine operator and leader of the orchestra at the theater. Their testimony consisted of a statement of their working hours and a description of their work. It was brought forward by Mr. Mosher in an effort to show that violation of the labor laws existed.

THEATERS QUARANTINED

Infantile Paralysis Epidemic Still Rages and Bars Children From Many Picture Theaters in the East

There appears to be no abatement in the infantile paralysis epidemic in New York and Brooklyn, in fact the recent hot wave rather aggravated it and added to the already appalling death list.

The latest report shows that 848 persons have succumbed to the disease since July 1, and of these 685 were children under five years of age. Greater precautions are being taken and the quarantine is being tightened so that it appears that there will be no relief for some time for the motion picture exhibitors who are so hard hit by the health ordinance barring children from their houses.

This ban against the motion picture theaters has now spread to Philadelphia, where the discovery of seven cases in the city and thirteen in the state immediately brought an ordinance barring all children under sixteen from the motion picture theaters in that city.

New Jersey is barring the entrance of all children into the state and in this way trying to quarantine the state and prevent an epidemic of the disease, and two towns have already put the ban on the picture shows. Both New Jersey and New York state will postpone the opening of the public schools for some time.

Delaware has also declared an immediate quarantine applying to children under 16 years, against Pennsylvania, New Jersey and New York.

Although forty-three cases have been reported in Chicago so far, nothing has been done in the way of closing the picture houses to children. In fact, with the exception of one theater in Kendalville, Indiana, which was closed for a time, the western territory has been in no way affected as yet.

The Lyric Theater of Uniontown, Pennsylvania, thinks so highly of "Who's Guilty?" that it is carrying a full page ad in the Daily News-Standard.

NORTHWEST EXHIBITORS MEET

Letter Sent to All Exhibitors of District Exhorting Them to Give Support to the Association—Questions Discussed

In a letter sent out to all motion picture managers of the northwest the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the Northwest urges all exhibitors to become members of the organization. The letter points out that unless all theater men join to make the organization a strong one the exchanges will soon have things their own way. As a result of the failure to keep an upper hand the exhibitor must now pay for films in advance and the prices are getting higher every day, not because they ought to be higher or because better pictures are being produced, but because the organization has not been strong and active enough to keep control of film prices.

The association exhorts the smaller exhibitors to help, as the officers of the organization cannot fight alone. They are willing to hold up their end, however, as was demonstrated at the last session of Congress when the executive committee spent fully three months at the Capitol lobbying against Sunday closing. This practice of letting the big exhibitor do all the fighting is unfair. The smaller manager should help with his encouragement and financial support.

The association points out that it has already accomplished the following things toward making the success of the organization:

First: The exhibitor pays express charges one way only. This item abounts to at least $40.00 or $50.00 per year to each exhibitor, no matter how small his house.

Second: We have an arrangement whereby you can buy your carbons and lamps at a big discount.

Third: The Sunday-closing bill was defeated through our efforts at the last session of the legislature.

Fourth: Another bill calling for the raising of the State license to five hundred dollars for a seating capacity of five hundred, one thousand dollars for a thousand seating capacity and fifteen hundred dollars for a theater having a seating capacity of over one thousand, was killed last session.

At a meeting of the Northwest Exhibitors' Association held August 14, Mr. Koenig read a letter from Fred Meyers of Laemmle Film Service complaining of the failure of the association properly to express its appreciation of the hard work done by him for the exposition in the way of selling tickets. It was moved that a letter of thanks be forwarded to Mr. Meyers.

Grievance Referred to National League

A complaint regarding the V-L-S-E and World Film Exchanges charging express both ways was made and referred to the Grievance Committee of the National League.

It was moved by Mr. Reisman and seconded by Mr. Rodgers that the secretary write a letter to MOTOGRAPHY, thanking it for its kind expressions in its recent letter to the association, and that the secretary send that publication all news of the association and that he request MOTOGRAPHY to send subscription blanks.

Plans for getting all the Twin City exhibitors together were entered into, and after considering several methods, it was moved by Mr. Rodgers and seconded by Mr. Reisman that the association instruct the secretary to invite, by letter, all exhibitors in the Twin Cities to a luncheon to be given at the West Hotel, in the pheasant room, August 28, at which time important matters will be gone over thoroughly.

Mary Pickford Forms Own Company

WILL DIRECT PLAYS HERSELF SURROUNDED BY NOTABLE CAST

THE millions of admirers of Mary Pickford, lovingly called "the world's sweetheart," will be delighted to hear that they are going to have Mary at the head of her own company, not only acting in the pictures but directing them as well, so that they will be thoroughly embued with her personality from every angle.

According to advice received from the east a formal announcement has been made of the organization of the Mary Pickford Film Corporation with offices in the Godfrey building, 729 Seventh avenue, New York City.

Under the new regime Miss Pickford proposes to appear only in the most artistic and largest motion picture productions. She will not only create and interpret roles similar to those which have won her large following of admirers but will give her own personal direction to every detail of the screen presentation. Work has already been started on the first production of this new organization at the Mary Pickford studio, which is entirely devoted to the uses of this company. The role in which the star appears is one that will appeal to her admirers and be along the line of the other parts she has made famous. The supporting cast includes many distinguished players and it will be the aim of Miss Pickford to have associated with her in this new company the best brains and skill to be found in the motion picture industry.

All of the pictures produced by this company will be released independently and will be the part of no program.

Miss Pickford makes the following announcement of the aim of her company:

"In announcing the formation of the Mary Pickford Film Corporation I want to first express my gratitude for the co-operation of the exhibitors everywhere, and also for the generous response of the public in bringing success to my efforts and various creations on the screen. Surely without either no one can have progressed and in my own instance our work together has been so full of happiness that it makes doubly treasured the success that has come to us.

"In the selection of scenarios, the casting of companies, the direction, production and character creating of motion pictures I am sure that I have learned something every day and that I will keep on acquiring this knowledge. And that is just why I want to use it to the best advantage in guiding my own company which will now produce all of the plays in which I am to be seen. It is our purpose not only to give every detail of the Mary Pickford Film Corporation our unfaltering direction, but to surround the star with the best brains, ability and skill in this wonderful art industry.

"It will be our purpose and endeavor to make most complete, elaborate and art harmonizing productions—each of which is to stand out pre-eminently as a master work. The productions will be the best that are made. Each will have a cast of distinction, a direction of originality and creativeness, fine environment, its own especially written music—all with that dignity, simplicity and artistic ensemble that will make the best in motion pictures and attract the largest and most discriminating audiences."

Where "The Girl o' Dreams" is being born. The interior of the studio on Catalena Island in the Pacific Ocean where the artists' model, Audrey Munson, is appearing in this American-Mutual feature. Sitting, at the left, is William Pigott, the author. Opposite is Thomas Ricketts, director, and his assistant, Charles Watt.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION MEETS

Officials for National Association of the Motion Picture Industry to Be Chosen—Exhibitors Attend From All Parts of Country

Exhibitors and film men from every part of the United States traveled to New York to be present at the first directors' meeting of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, which was held in New York a short time ago by a representative body of motion picture men and ratified at the Chicago Convention by the Exhibitors' League of America.

This important meeting was held at the Hotel Astor on August 16. More than thirty men, all prominent in one phase or another of the industry, and all directors in the National Association, were present. The chief purpose of the meeting was for the election of association officers. Exhibitors took an important part in the choosing of these officials. Up to the time of going to press no announcements of results had been made. These will be printed in full in the next issue of MOTOGRAPHY.

Following the election of officers the Association made plans for the future activities of the organization and mapped out details of procedure in matters of immediate importance to both exhibitors, producers and distributors. The National Association is now a complete working body, as all the branches are organized and the committees named.

Among the prominent exhibitors to attend the meeting from the west were William J. Sweeney and Maurice Choynski of Chicago, and Charles Phillips of Wisconsin, all directors in the National Association. With these men went Louis Frank and Alfred Hamburger, both prominent Chicago exhibitors.

The Girl on the Cover

That proficiency in the law is not destructive to dramatic talent is proven in the case of Agnes Eyre, who, although very young, has shown her versatility by leaving the law department of Chicago University within a year of being admitted to the bar of the State of Illinois, visiting an Essanay studio in company with a friend, and being promptly snapped up by a discerning director.

This "tryout" was followed by continually growing parts in "The White Sister," with Viola Allen; "Graustark," with Francis X. Bushman; "The Prince of Graustark," a sequel to "Graustark"; the Selig Panama-Pacific series, "The 7 Suffering Sisters," and latest, "The Sting of Victory," with Henry B. Walthall and Antoinette Walker.

Now her eyes have turned eastward, and with some flattering offers from producers on this edge of the continent to consider, she is about to try for new honors right in the heart of things filmy. She has been called "La Penserosa" by those who knew her when she was wrestling with Blackstone, Coke, Littleton, and others of the tribe of jurisprudence, but then she was very serious minded. Not that she is less so now, but her seriousness has taken a different turn, and the smile which shines from her hazel eyes shows that the glare of the Cooper-Hewitts has given life a new tinge, and there is much more of the joy of life in winning fame and a modicum of fortune before the camera than in hunting through dusty law tomes for a bunch of antique, moldy, precedents and decisions which don't fit the case in hand at all. The screen needs more girls of the type of Agnes Eyre.

Trade Papers Host to Reichenbach

On Thursday, August tenth, Harry Reichenbach was dined—or lunched—at Rectors by the trade paper men. This is a distinctly unique performance as, although all of the trade papers have official diners, they have hitherto been known as guests, and have sat as though handcuffed when the waiter has brought the bad news, glaring in red ink at the foot of a list of figures.

The reasons for this unusual burst of hospitality are that Harry is a regular fellow, has never kept the newspaper men waiting in his outer office, and, principally, that he is making a new connection. Starting with next week, he will have the title of advertising and business manager of the Frohman Amusement Corporation. Just now he is enjoying his vacation.

Harry Ennis acted as toastmaster, and scattered insults and wit impartially and with great success. Those present were:

State Rights Selling

Negotiations are now being carried on for the sale of state rights for "America Preparing," the ten-part feature owned by the Kemble Film Corporation.

The coming elections will strongly revive the preparedness issue which forms a major plank in both the Democratic and Republican platforms. Aside from the great intrinsic value of the feature, that is an excellent reason for the popularity of "America Preparing" among exhibitors, as it offers them the opportunity of becoming important factors to either political party respected, and one that will be a prominent factor in the upbuilding of the industry, without overlapping the work of the new National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

Carr and Schad, the Paramount exhibitors in Reading, Pennsylvania, have now acquired the ownership of five houses. Two years ago they were running two theaters. From the day the Princess was opened, it has run Paramount Pictures. Within three months they will open their fifth theater which will be one of the largest and most beautiful in Pennsylvania, on which they are spending nearly a half million dollars.

Federal Tax on Theaters Killed

FIVE THOUSAND POPULATION THE DIVIDING LINE FOR TAXATION

THE exhibitors have won. The Democrats of the Senate have stricken the proposed new plan of taxing theaters on a gross profit basis from the general revenue bill. In the place of this plan an amendment has been substituted which extends the provision of the emergency revenue law of October 22, 1914, which imposes a tax on theaters on a basis of seating capacity.

The amendment, which was adopted by the caucus of Democratic senators, provides an important modification of the existing law. This modification is a proviso to the effect that in cities of less than 5,000 population the existing tax shall be only half what it is in cities of over 5,000 population.

The rates of taxation imposed by the Federal Government on theaters in the existing war revenue act of October 22, 1914, are as follows: Twenty-five dollars for theaters with seating capacity not exceeding 250; $50 for theaters with seating capacity not exceeding 500; $75 for theaters with seating capacity of 500 to 800; $100 for theaters with seating capacity of over 800.

The Democratic caucus has decided to retain these rates of the existing law as the tax to be collected from the theaters in towns of 5,000 population and over and in towns of less than 5,000 population the tax is to be cut in half and is to be as follows: Twelve and one-half dollars for theaters seating not over 250; $25 for theaters seating from 250 to 500; $37.50 for theaters seating from 500 to 800; $50 for theaters seating over 800.

Lee A. Ochs, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, is highly pleased with the results the league has been able to obtain in the short time since the clause in the Kitchin bill became known. Mr. Ochs gives full credit to the Association of Theater Managers for their prompt work in opposing the taxation measures but believes that the victory is also due to the combined efforts of the motion picture exhibitors.

Encourage Films for Church and School

BY GEORGE K. SPOOR

I WAS talking to an exhibitor recently who deplored the fact that there was a widespread movement to inaugurate the showing of motion pictures in churches and schools.

As this movement has grown there also has sprung up an opposition among many exhibitors to the granting of licenses to these institutions. It is my opinion that exhibitors should encourage this movement instead of attempting to retard it. And this for their own benefit. For I am of the firm belief that the more churches and schools there are showing pictures, the larger the theater patronage will become. It will increase the attendance of the regular motion picture theater instead of lessening it.

Personally, I am glad to see the growth of such interest among church people and educators, because it shows that they have finally come to realize the value of pictures, not only as an amusement, but as the greatest medium for instruction and moral uplift.

It may be taken for granted that I favor that which is of benefit to the exhibitors, for the exhibitors' and manufacturers' interest is one. What injures one is bound to injure the other, and what benefits one must benefit the other.

The motion picture business was inaugurated under the greatest opposition; it was attacked on every hand by unwarranted prejudice. There was solid worth in the motion picture or it would have died at the outset. As it is, it has swept over all obstacles and has become universal.

Means More Universal Theater Patronage

While former prejudices have largely been dissipated, its value as an amusement and as an art now being recognized in the literary, scientific and educational world, yet there still is a large element among certain classes of church people which opposes it.

These people oppose the motion picture, as a rule, because they do not know what they are. They have not seen them and they do not understand their present value. There are many who still think of the motion picture as a cheap melodrama which occupies the same relative position to the drama that the penny dreadful occupies to literature.

The best way to dissipate this idea is to show these people pictures. This class will not enter the theater so it is necessary to take the pictures to them. And just here is where the exhibitor will be benefited instead of hurt. The exhibitor will find a new field, a new motion picture public. He will find that the showing of pictures in these institutions will create a new class of motion picture advocates.

Church Films Create Patronage

Interest in pictures will be instituted in the churches. This interest will begin with the one picture show on Sunday. It will create a demand for more. That proportion of the church people who have not before attended the motion picture theater naturally will be drawn more and more until they become regular theater patrons. Thus, the exhibitor gains a new field to draw on. It means increased business instead of less business.

In the schools also, where pictures are shown, we are not only educating the pupils by means of the screen, but we are educating the boys and girls to love pictures and to rely upon them for their amusement. Consequently we are creating another class of motion picture enthusiasts who will be found regularly in the theaters.

There is no possible chance that they will become surfeited with the pictures shown in the school and church. These will be few and of a different character. One is primarily educational, the other is primarily to amuse. The educational picture will create and stimulate the desire for amusement in the same line.

Finally, it will be impossible to check this movement even were it desired. The motion picture is something of universal interest; it appeals to all in every line. Any movement as widespread, as deep-seated in the human heart as this, is bound to sweep all obstacles. It is bound to become not only the chief amusement but one of the chief moral and educational factors.

Metro Officials Guests at Banquet

Officials of the Metro company enjoyed an important banquet at the Hotel Traymore, Atlantic City, on August 12. It was given by the Consolidated Film Corporation of New York, to the Metro officials and exchange managers, who have been holding their annual business convention there during the past week. O. E. Goebel, president of the Consolidated, was the host. The Consolidated is making "The Crimson Stain Mystery," a sixteen episode serial, starring Maurice Costello.

The toastmaster was Arthur James, director of publicity of the Metro. The speakers were O. E. Goebel, Richard Rowland, president of the Metro, and others. The arrangements for the banquet were under the direction of S. G. Sladding, director of publicity for the Consolidated.

Those who attended were: Richard A. Rowland, president of the Metro; Joseph W. Engle, L. Lawrence Weber, Harry J. Cohen, C. K. Stern, J. H. Tocker, E. M. Saunders, W. E. Atkinson, Henry James, J. Robert Hubin and Dr. O. M. Leiser of the New York office of the Metro; also James B. Clark, Pittsburgh; Louis B. Mayer, Boston; J. A. Fitzgerald, Detroit; Joseph Skirbett, Chicago; O. N. Davies, Minneapolis; O. J. Gunnell, Chicago; John D. Clarke, Philadelphia; David Reed, Dallas, Tex.; L. M. Day, Washington, D. C.; R. M. Watkins, Chattanooga; Arthur S. Dickinson, Chattanooga; Arthur S. Sawyer, Montreal, Canada; Herman Jans, New Jersey; Carl C. Bugbee, New Orleans.

Preparedness Evening Features "The Fall"

Many prominent motion picture and theatrical people, including Mack Sennett, Roscoe Arbuckle, Wilton Lackaye, Minnie Seligman, E. V. Giroux and others attended a benefit performance of "The Fall of a Nation," at the Hotel Nassau, Long Beach, on August 9. The performance was arranged by Thomas Dixon and Victor Herbert of the National Drama Corporation in co-operation with Mrs. William Cumming Story and the Women's National Committee of the American Defense Society and a large sum was raised for the benefit of the dependent families of the soldiers now in service on the Mexican border.

The details of the performance were in charge of Miss Seligman, or Mrs. William Bramwell, as she has been known since her retirement from the stage. "The Fall of a Nattion" was the feature of the evening and the subject of preparedness was prominent in all the other entertainment offered. The entertainment was followed by a preparedness ball at the Hotel Nassau.

A Womanless Play

Of far more than ordinary interest to motion picture exhibitors and producers alike is "The Patriot," the most recent five-reel feature to be sent out on the Triangle program from the Ince studios. The picture, which stars William S. Hart in what seems likely to prove his most popular role, was written by Monte J. Katterjohn, one of the staff writers in the scenario department of the Ince studios.

The most striking feature of "The Patriot" is the fact that it is absolutely devoid of the so-called "woman stuff." There is not a single suggestion of romance and the only women who are seen on the screen are seen there for a brief period toward the close of the picture and are not actually essential to the plot. The development of a story without the introduction of the feminine is almost revolutionary and, in fact, it has often been declared by supposed authorities on the photodrama that it was an actual impossibility to develop a story that would hold the interest through an average five-reel feature without it.

Mr. Katterjohn, however, assuredly has defied tradition and done the supposedly impossible. He has substituted a man's love for his son and country for the usual touch of sentiment and the effect is to give a story that holds the interest, rouses all the emotions and wins the approbation of everyone.

"The Patriot" brings William S. Hart in a strong, human likeable part. Next in interest is little Georgie Stone and a close second to Master George is Joe Good-Boy, an Indian who plays himself in the story.

Thirteenth Week of "Civilization"

The Criterion Theater, New York, has started on its thirteenth week with Thomas H. Ince's spectacle "Civilization" as the drawing card. That the interest has not diminished is shown by the fact that the receipts last week were the largest of the prolonged engagement, and the matinee attendance has not diminished.

After a spirited competition the New England rights to "Civilization" were sold to the New England Film Distributors, Inc., of which David A. Lourie is the president. At one time there were no less than twelve bidders for the New England rights and it is stated that the final purchase price was so high that a publication of the figures would be regarded as beyond the possibility of truth.

Arthur Werner has purchased the New Jersey state rights for "Civilization."

There remain now a few southern and only two or three eastern states in which to dispose of state rights to the great Ince drama.

Women Patrons Learn Fashions

The answer to the question "What will the women wear next year?" is contained in the Florence Rose Fashions pictures released by Pathe. They show the latest cut in bathing suits in Atlantic City, also the new hats and gowns to be worn by the women of the country next fall. In other words, they are the medium through which Dame Fashion talks to the tens of millions of American women. They are prepared under the supervision of J. A. Berst, vice president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, and Miss Florence Rose, one of the greatest fashion authorities in the country, and they show striking novelties.

These are not the Fifth avenue fashions and the Paris fashions which never get further west than New York. They are the fashions that the women in every city of the country will wear. Twenty of the prettiest girls in New York have been engaged as models for these fashion pictures. Some of the most prominent manufacturers in the United States have offered their support, and photographs for leading creations will be seen in Pathe pictures, after which the patrons of the motion picture theater can see the actual garment at the leading store.

Hale and Lewis Together Again

An item of more than unusual interest to picture-goers of the country is the placing under a long term contract of the well-known stars, Creighton Hale and Sheldon Lewis by the Frank Powell Productions, Inc., to appear in the feature pictures of that company. Mr. Hale and Mr. Lewis have been associated together since the beginning of the "Exploits of Elaine" serial and following with the "Iron Claw" where both added further laurels to their already excellent reputation. At the conclusion of the "Iron Claw" the two stars were separated for a few weeks but fate has brought them together again, with the result as above stated.

Pathe Serial Held for October

In order that more episodes might be completed to enable exhibitors to see them and plan a comprehensive campaign on the picture, Pathe will release the wonder-serial "The Shielding Shadow" on October 1st instead of in September as at first intended. Meanwhile work goes on at top speed at Pathe's studio and in Pathe's thirty branches looking toward the completion and efficient handling of the "greatest money-maker of them all," as Pathe confidently expects "The Shielding Shadow" to be.

Fox Player Began as Baby

Elsie Balfour, who is acting in the new Valeska Suratt picture for William Fox, does not remember her first stage engagement. This is not because Miss Balfour is so old now, but because she was so young then. When "The Volunteer Organist" was in the heyday of its stock regime, Miss Balfour played a baby part in it. Her father, a well-known actor, has often told her that she was absolutely composed on this occasion, and exhibited no stage fright at all.

J. K. Burger in West

J. K. Burger, assistant general manager of the International Film Service, Inc., is visiting Chicago, St. Paul and other western cities on business in connection with the new photoplay series, "Beatrice Fairfax."

Mr. Burger, on his trip, will also work with his assistants on the forthcoming production of the International's new feature, "Jaffrey," which will be released on September 5. During his stop in Chicago Mr. Burger held several important conferences with Manager Bowman of the local International office.

Alice Brady Wins Out

DAD THOUGHT SHE COULDN'T "MAKE GOOD." SHE SHOWED HIM

By Genevieve Harris

DARK brown eyes and dark brown hair, a quick, friendly smile, a pleasing voice with a crisp rising inflection,—that's Alice Brady, a well-poised young lady with the magnetism of high spirits and self-confidence, who was a success in musical comedy, a success in stage drama, and is being decidedly a success in motion pictures. Success and Alice Brady are good friends. She is just that kind of a girl. Her father is W. A. Brady, the famous theatrical producer, and she seems to have inherited his ability to get what she goes after.

A smile that Miss Brady sends to Motography readers.

To be the daughter of a famous manager does not at first seem a serious handicap for a would-be actress. But it came near being fatal to Alice's young career, for Daddy, having spent his life in the stage world, decided that daughter should try another field. Fathers in any business usually decide that their children shall follow another profession. So Alice was to be a musician. She was packed off to a conservatory near Boston and set to work practicing scales on the piano.

"I was a very bad student," said Miss Brady in speaking of this stage of her career. "I just would not work, and I played atrociously," she continued, with a chuckle, "I was very dreadful."

Then, after the fun of school days had begun to pall a bit, came the inevitable day when Alice Brady announced to W. A. Brady that she was going to invade the theatrical world where he lived. She was going on the stage. W. A. Brady does not usually yield without a struggle, and he yielded now reluctantly. Go ahead, he told his daughter, since she was so determined, but she must show that she could make good before she came to him for help. Alice chuckled, and went ahead.

After all, it was her musical training which gave her her chance, for she had developed a good singing voice. In musical comedy, including Gilbert and Sullivan opera revivals, she proved her fitness for the career she had chosen. After that came work in legitimate drama. Her father had decided by this time that she was worth encouraging and he gave her the important role of "Beth" in his production of "Little Women."

When her father became actively interested in motion pictures, it was very natural that his daughter should also try her fortune in this field and her appearances in various World films, from "As Ye Sow," her first, to "Miss Petticoats," have won her a host of friends.

Alice Brady is a most sane and sensible young person, without fads or hobbies. She likes to read and she loves music, and like the majority of stage people, her chief amusement is attending the theater. She is not interested in athletics, she declares, although she has the appearance of a girl who "goes in for" outdoor sports. Her pet little horror is affectation, mannerisms, and she thanks the screen for pointing out her own failings in this line.

"It's dreadful," she declares with a shudder, "to watch your own peculiarities for several thousand feet of film. I come away determined to rid myself at once of this or that little trick I notice."

During the recent Chicago Motion Picture Exposition, Miss Brady for a week tried a new profession, that of a teacher, for she held an audience every day with would-be screen stars during which she explained the best way to get into the work, the fact that in her opinion acting ability counted for more than beauty, and that actual experience was better than the training of dramatic schools. All sorts of questions she answered regarding her profession in a good-natured, interesting manner.

To sum her up, Alice Brady is a wholesome, normal girl, with magnetism and talent and a thoroughly likeable personality which reaches from the screen or stage right into the hearts of her audience and gives each one a pleasant feeling of having found a new and worthwhile friend.

"Some women think they deserve a pension for fighting their husbands," said Stuart Holmes, William Fox's villain, amid great cheers at the studio.

Millard Wilson has been added to the production forces at Universal City.

The New Commandment

"THOU SHALT NOT SHOW"

By Hampton Del Ruth

THERE is no more vital question before the American people today than the question of censorship. Censorship is not in keeping with republican principles. It is only a step from censorship of motion pictures to censorship of newspapers, and any man, with a spark of liberty in him, knows that the freedom of the press is vitally necessary to the existence of a republic.

If the American people are to be told by their police what they may see and what they may not see, they will soon be told what they may read and what they may not read. I take it that an official of any kind in a republic is an official for the sole purpose of doing the will of the people. A public official is a servant of the people, and it is not a servant's part to advise his master as to what he shall see or read. This comment, however, has not the slightest bearing upon legitimate critics or volunteer reviewing boards similar in purpose and intent to the National Board of Censorship, but applies solely to official censors of the various cities and states.

Hampton Del Ruth, Managing Edtor, Assistant Manager of Productions, the Keystone Film Company.

The charge is made that motion pictures are more susceptible to so-called questionable subjects than books, magazines or newspapers. For example, the question of nudity in motion pictures has been brought up time and again. Yet magazines of the highest standing print, month after month, reproductions of famous paintings in the nude. Yet this is splitting straws. The main thing is that censorship is not in keeping with republican principles, and, if allowed to grow, will finally throttle the liberties of the country.

Much stress is laid on protecting the children, and the producers of motion pictures readily agree that the child should be considered. But if motion pictures are to be cast to meet the child mind, there will be nothing left for the entertainment and advancement of the adult. If all our literature were written to meet the child mind, we would merely have a collection of fairy tales and picture books. The fact is, if people who want censorship fastened on this republic are permitted to have their way, we will soon be a collection of nonentities driveling over fairy tales and mother goose rhymes in pictures.

To get right down to facts, the child is as appreciative of real art as the adult. The child is natural, and the comedian who pleases the children is the comedian who pleases the adults. People seem to think that the child is a semi-imbecile instead of a human being containing all the potentials of any other human being. Any reasonable man will admit that his four-year-old son has often caught him with questions that he could not, with all his adult wisdom, answer.

The producers of motion pictures want to keep pace with the editors of magazines and newspapers, and to do so must be given the same freedom that the editors of magazines and newspapers enjoy. If censorship is fastened on motion pictures, the newspapers can expect censorship to be fastened on them. Some police official will sit by the side of the editor and tell him what to write, or, before the paper goes out on the streets, it will have to secure a release from the censorship board. Military censorship is another matter, and cannot be compared to censorship in time of peace.

Censorship not only throttles liberty, but it is the parent of graft. With newspaper censorship, it means that some papers will be favored and others suppressed. With censorship of motion pictures, it means that nothing unfavorable to those in power may be pictured. No man or body of men are perfect, and there has never been in the history of the world an official board of censorship but what to some extent used its power to further its own ends. In a small city the exhibitor may not be "right" with the city administration. Holding the power of censorship the mayor orders a picture, for which thousands of dollars have been spent, to be suppressed. By use of the power of censorship the exhibitor may be forced out of business. By use of the power of censorship any newspaper in the United States may be forced out of business. If the editor does not please those in power, they can make him shut up shop.

If we are to be throttled with censorship, why not adopt Russian methods, and cease this hypocritical mouthing? No doubt, had Washington considered the children, he would not have become an American patriot. War means that children must suffer, that they must be orphaned. Washington considered the people as a whole, and their future. He proposed that the children of 1776 should become free men and women and not British vassals.

If we permit censorship because of the children today, what of censorship when those children have become men and women? Perhaps the children will not thank us for restricting their liberties and the rights they should enjoy under a republican form of government. We have just discovered that our educational system was a gross imposition on the child. We have just discovered that to jam a growing, restless boy into a school room seat and force him to stay in one position for hours is wrong and does not contribute to his physical or mental progress. We have just discovered that each child should be handled separately and according to his individual genius. We have just discovered that a child with a creative mind does not prosper on a diet of mathematics. Yet we propose to treat children in mass insofar as motion pictures are concerned. Some official simply decides that a picture is not fit for children to see, and suppresses it.

Censorship of art and literature has made us the laughing stock of continental countries. The United States is looked upon by the artistic Latins as a country in which the art vandal and meddler finds supreme expression. We pose as a liberty-loving people, and then proceed to enact laws and ordinances that would not be tolerated even in Russia. We busy ourselves with censorship, leaving the more important questions of defense, of getting work for the idle, of lowering taxation, and countless other matters that affect the prosperity of the people, to settle themselves. Censorship is the work of people who derive a peculiar pleasure in telling other people what is good for them and what is not. The lovers of censorship form the minority, and there can be no republic where the minority rules.

It is readily admitted that, in the early stages of motion pictures, a few short-sighted, dull-witted producers, hoping to make quick money, catered to the morbid and salacious-loving element. This was also true of the early days of printing, and to a certain extent exists today, but it does not follow, because there are a few publishers of salacious books, questionable papers and off-color postcards, that press censorship should be established. Likewise it does not follow that a great industry like the production of motion pictures should be hampered and restricted because of the shark methods of a few ignorant, money-hungry producers.

Some rulings of state censor boards are so ridiculous that they would merely excite mirth were it not for the fact that they menace the liberty of the citizens of this republic. Not infrequently producers are advised that they must not show poison labels, although every housewife has a bottle of chloroform in her medicine chest. Producers are advised by the censors of one state that the star's skirt may not come above her shoe tops; by others that decollete gowns are frowned upon.

According to the racial prejudices of the majority of the members of the censor board considering the picture, no intensification of character is permitted. A Frenchman on a censor board will not permit a French character to be shown save as a hero. An Englishman will not permit an Englishman to be shown save as a hero. A German character will not permit a German character to be shown save as a hero. A novelist is privileged to draw sharply, racial characteristics, but the motion picture producer must not touch racial characteristics save in highly complimentary fashion. Apparently the only safety lies in making the villains all Americans. No objection has been raised as yet to making the villains Americans. To expect true portrayals of character under such handicaps is to expect the impossible.

The race-bound man flourishes under censorship. Through censorship, if he be sufficiently powerful, he may suppress any exhibition of his racial weaknesses. Like royalty he may not be pictured as he is but as he thinks he is. This tends to divide the country into exemplary classes and to make the pictures unnatural and flat.

In time, if censorship is permitted to flourish, the newspapers will not dare to state that an Englishman beat his wife; that an Irishman looted a bank; that a Frenchman ran away with another man's wife; or that a Jew burned his clothing store to collect the insurance. All references to race will be barred from the comic papers, and no one with the possible exception of an American will be pictured as a fool, a grafter or a villain.

Censorship is insidious; it creeps in in disguise as a benefit and arrayed in the proper garments of smug puritanism; it comes singing a doleful song entitled "This is for the good of the people," but the history of censorship reeks with injustice and cruelty. Censorship has never prospered save where ignorance and prejudice rule supreme.

Kathlyn Williams with Morosco-Pallas

Everyone knows Kathlyn Williams. This daring and popular star has just resigned from the Selig Company and has signed a long term contract to appear under the Morosco-Pallas brands on the Paramount Program. Promptly upon resigning from Selig, Miss Williams received four attractive offers to star in big subjects but decided in favor of Morosco-Pallas in lieu of their standing in the business and their affiliations with the Paramount Program.

Miss Williams' success has not been of the "overnight" variety so often written about and so often exaggerated. Seven years ago in company with Mary Pickford, Arthur Johnson, Henry Walthall, Billy Quirk and other now famous members of the "old guard" at Biograph under D. W. Griffith, she received her early schooling in the silent drama.

Born in Butte, Mont., and educated at Wesleyan University, Helena, Montana, Miss Williams entered the theatrical profession at an early age. In dramatic stock she appeared under the managements of Belasco, Willard Mack and William Morris, which fitted her well for the demands of the photoplay. On leaving Biograph, Miss Williams became associated with the Selig Company under whose trademark she appeared up until her recent resignation. In the title role of "The Adventures of Kathlyn," she starred in the first serial photoplay ever produced, a twenty-six-reel subject, which resulted in adding many new admirers to her large following. In "The Spoilers," as Cherry Malotte, "The Rosary," "The Ne'er Do Well," "Back to the Primitive," "The Two Orphans," "Thou Shalt Not Covet," etc., Miss Williams also scored great personal success.

In addition to her talent as an actress, the new Morosco-Pallas star has attained considerable distinction as a writer and is a member of the "Authors League." Among her offerings in this field are "Thy Will Be Done," "The Last Dance," "Strange Case of Talmai Lind," "Pride of Baldoon," and many others, all of which have been produced. Miss Williams will start on her initial subject for the Paramount Program early next month.

EXHIBITOR LEASES TWO MORE

Pitt Theater of Pittsburgh and Chestnut of Philadelphia to Be Run as Dollar Houses According to Patch Policy

William Moore Patch, who for the last year has managed the Pitt Theater, Pittsburgh, for the Pittsburgh Life and Trust Company, has leased that house and also the Chestnut Street Opera House, Philadelphia, which he will run in conjunction with the Pitt and along the same policy.

Mr. Patch has long been considered the pathfinder in art in motion pictures and the unique policy which he established will be continued with his two houses.

Some idea of this unique policy can be had when it is learned that Mr. Patch is the only exhibitor outside of New York who has dared to charge $1.00 admission prices for all his pictures. The Pitt runs but two shows daily and seats 2,000, each seat being reserved.

Among the greatest successes in the Pitt Theater last season were "The Birth of a Nation" (three months), "The Battle Cry of Peace" (two months), "The Ne'er-Do-Well" (one month) and "Ramona" (two months). "The Birth of a Nation" is the only picture that has ever broken the $1.00 scale established by Mr. Patch. Two dollars was charged for the Griffith spectacle.

Mr. Patch is the originator of several innovations in the presentation of motion pictures, many of which are now in universal use. He was the first exhibitor ever to make sound and voice effects an inseparable part of pictures, and he employs a crew of a dozen men at all times to work out these parts. Each production he exhibits opens with a massive stage setting with choruses, ballets and many other incidental features.

Not a small part of Mr. Patch's prominence was gained through his circumventions of the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors. The "punch" in "The Battle Cry of Peace" was lost when the censors ordered the elimination of the climactic scene which showed a mother shooting her two daughters rather than have them fall into the lustful hands of the country's invaders. When the big feature was shown by Mr. Patch he circumvented this elimination by merely staging the scene with actors in the flesh.

The Pitt will open its season on August 28 with a return engagement of "The Birth of a Nation." "Civilization" and Annette Kellerman in "The Daughter of the Gods" will follow in its wake.

Metro Captures Nance O'Neil

Metro Pictures Corporation has engaged the eminent dramatic artist, Miss Nance O'Neil, to appear in a five-act screen production. The play chosen in which to present Miss O'Neil is a picturization of Margaret Deland's novel, "The Iron Woman." Mrs. Deland also wrote "The Awakening of Helena Ritchie," in which another Metro star, Miss Ethel Barrymore, will be seen shortly.

"The Iron Woman" is one of the strongest of all modern novels. Miss O'Neil and her supporting company began work August 14.

AN OPEN FORUM

This is a department of, by and for exhibitors. We want YOU represented here. Other managers and proprietors of picture theaters want to hear YOUR experiences, your opinions and your advice. Write to this department telling us your story, how you started, how you grew and all about your theater and how you manage it. Mention your advertising methods and your lobby displays. If possible send in photographs of yourself and your house. Address, The Forum, Motography, Chicago.

Use Your Ingenuity to Produce Surprises

By A. K. Pay

Manager, Colonial Theater, Sioux Falls, South Dakota.

THE greatest single factor in building up the patronage for the Colonial Theater, which is the largest in the state of South Dakota, is the publicity methods which we employ.

I have found from painful experience that it is not always the star or the feature production most exploited by the companies that is the most successful in drawing crowds to the box office. Many of the players whose names appear in glaring print in advertising sections of the magazines have no appeal whatsoever for the patrons of our house, and many are the eight-reel features that have proved inferior to regular five-reel products.

To illustrate this point let me cite the tremendous success which "The Dividend" enjoyed during the two hottest days of midsummer at our theater. We determined to feature it, first, because Charles Ray appeared in it; second, because it was a Triangle production and hence could be relied upon to satisfy if not delight, and third, because it had received favorable comment in reliable magazines.

Charles Ray has not been advertised widely, but we ascertained that our patrons liked him when he appeared in "The Coward" and in "Peggy." We believe that in a good part such as "The Dividend" provided, he would become a favorite that we could always realize on. The crowds that responded to the publicity which we gave him justified our belief.

To make the feature doubly attractive, we used the scenes in the opium joints as a theme for decoration. The ushers were dressed as geisha girls—kimonos, fans, and hair done in Chinese style. We placed rose lights through the house and hung large Chinese lanterns around the canopy and inside the foyer. The name "Charles Ray" was painted in Chinese style across the top of the doors, and on either side depended Chinese posters bearing the hieroglyphics, "From College to the Opium Dens." As the first scene of a Chinese joint was flashed upon the screen, we lit the incense burners placed in the foyer, and soon an Oriental fragrance spread over the house.

The second day we played to bigger business than the first, and indeed broke all records. Quite a feat for a day when the mercury flirted with the ninety mark! We spent a good deal of money through the papers, but we spent it for exploiting Charles Ray in order that our patrons might become intimately acquainted with him. Thus when we show his next pictures, they will recall his personality and his style, and we will need to expend very little in publicity. We are planning a week of Ray features on the strength of the success with "The Dividend." We intend to lead off with "The Deserter" and with a return engagement of "The Coward," which we have already played twice. For these pictures the house will be dressed in patriotic colors, with door men in Civil war uniforms, and the girl ushers in crinolines. A bugler will be stationed outside to sound the announcement of each performance. We also plan to give souvenirs and to serve tea in our black and white room, thus making it a grand opening for our fall season.

It is these little spectacular effects that cause people to talk of the theater and to expect a surprise when a feature is announced. I have shown the possibilities of playing up one actor whom we believed was worth it, regardless of the size type with which his name was printed on advance matter. It may be done in other cases. Don't let the company's press agent dictate the favorites for you. Watch your patrons. When you hear favorable comments for a certain one, take a chance on making him or her your star. If you are showing a good program, don't think it necessary to pay extra money on an eight reeler to give your patrons a treat. Take one of the plays from your program, feature it correctly, and you will find that nine times out of ten your patrons will go away satisfied.

My advice to a new exhibitor is: Use your ingenuity. Don't be afraid to pick your own winners and to spend money on advertising them. You will soon find out from the attitude of the audience whether they approve of your choice.

Fifteen Cents Admission

By Bruce Godshaw

Manager, Cosmopolitan Theater, Chicago, Illinois.

This letter was written for publication in a neighborhood newspaper in answer to the complaint made by some of the residents that fifteen cents was altogether too high a price to charge for a motion picture show.

"We will answer through this paper the current question, 'Why does the Cosmopolitan charge 15 cents so often?' We must do it or give cheaper and older pictures. In the last year the cost of operation has increased 40 per cent. Film products have gone up over 35 per cent on account of the war. Two years ago operators got $21 a week; now they receive $35.

"Two years ago a piano player and ordinary music cost $21 a week. Now the public demands the finest pipe organs and organists.

"Good organists cost $40.

"The Cosmopolitan, owing to its long shows, uses a main and relief organist.

"A year ago a Chaplin picture cost $20. Today we pay $60. A year ago a serial picture cost about $20 for each two reels. Today we pay $65 for every two reels of the 'Billie Burke' stories. Over 200 of the best film theaters in Chicago are compelled to charge more than 10 cents or show the cheaper and older forms of pictures.

"Any theater of 1,000 seats showing at 5 and 10 cents in Chicago today must play to an average of 1,500 people daily to make a living. It can't be done. The prices of foodstuffs and all classes of merchandise have gone up, but how can it be remedied? We are not money mad. We are not rubbing it in. We are only compelled to give you the best and ask an equitable co-operation.

A FEW COMPARISONS

"A good cigar lasting 10 minutes costs 15 cents.

"A banana split disappears in about the same time —15 cents.

"A glass of liquor vanishes in half a second—costs 15 cents.

"One minute's ride on a White City coaster, 15 cents.

"And nobody grumbles.

"We give ten times as much.

COSMOPOLITAN THEATER GIVES

"The biggest show in town.

"The best pictures.

"Almost two hours of clean and generous amusement.

"Good music. Best ventilation. Comfortable seats. Singers. Vaudeville. Novelties. Homelike surroundings. Courteous attention.

"The most of the best of everything for 5, 10 and 15 cents.

"And some folks grumble."

Mr. Pay Pays

EDITOR, THE FORUM, MOTOGRAPHY, CHICAGO, ILL.

I have received so many valuable hints from your department that I feel it my turn to pay down a little on the debt. Thus I am writing you of the great success with which I featured up "The Dividend" during midsummer and so bolstered up waning business.

I also tried some of my ideas on spectacular effects and picking my own winner. I am tired of having some simpering star "wished on me," and then hear my patrons denounce me as a fraud for exploiting such player. You probably know incidents of this.

I enclose a few kodak pictures showing some of the decoration and the ushers in costume. If you cannot use this material, kindly return it to me with postage enclosed.

Very sincerely yours, A. K. Pay,

Manager, Colonial Theater, Sioux Falls, South Dakota.

A New Theater for Baltimore

The Walbrook Amusement Company of Baltimore, Maryland, composed of Harrison L. Stires, president; Oscar Teschner, vice-president; Otis J. Tall, treasurer; Clarence H. Konze, secretary, and Christopher R. Wattenscheidt, counsel, on May 29 opened the Walbrook Theater, which is one of the finest suburban houses in Baltimore. This is the first motion picture house to be opened in this neighborhood and it has been erected in strict accordance with the municipal theater requirements and is an absolutely fireproof playhouse of the most modern type. Special attention has been given to the beautiful interior color scheme and the most improved system of ventilation installed. The program is changed every day and good music by a competent orchestra is a feature of the entertainment.

The Walbrook Theater, a new suburban house in Baltimore.

The performance runs from 2 to 10:45 each day. The afternoon prices are five cents all over the house, except the box seats, which sell for fifteen cents. In the evening there are 250 seats for five cents, 700 seats for ten cents and 50 box seats for twenty cents.

The program includes a feature and a two-act comedy or two one-reel pictures.

He Likes 'Em

For seventy consecutive weeks E. M. Biddle, manager of the Gem Theater of Paoli, Indiana, has been using Pathe serials. "I have been ten years in the game and they are the biggest money-makers I have ever had," he says in a letter to Manager R. S. Shrader, of Pathe's Indianapolis office.

Clean Out the Parasites

IT takes all kinds of people to make a world, as somebody said, and in a business as big as motion pictures one may readily find all the varieties. It is no reproach to an industry to say there are crooks in its midst, for there are evil minds among the most honored professions. And there are men of vicious practice who use the respectable name of some profession or trade to cloak their misdeeds; men who are in, but not of, the business they misrepresent. It is always possible to find a few teachers and physicians and even clergymen who maintain their professional respectability only for the advantage it gives them in the pursuit of the profits of evil. Yet we cannot, on their account, declare teaching and doctoring and preaching to be immoral professions.

That is the logical and philosophical viewpoint. Unfortunately, the people, and especially the reformers, are not given to logic and philosophy. The delinquency of a clergyman, as we all know, always supplies a luscious bit of gossip, and reflects indirectly upon every other clergyman, however great his rectitude. How much greater then, is the prejudice when the proprietor of an amusement enterprise is caught with the stain of vice. The prudes (and it is astonishing how many there are of them) always eye the theatrical business with suspicion, because it works nights and associates with ladies in "tights." So when a theatrical manager goes wrong they merely smack their lips and say, "Aha! I knew it!"

If the human race were made up of philosophers we would all have an easier time. As it is not, we must consider the illogical viewpoint of the world upon whose population we depend for our livelihood.

The newspapers are setting lurid headlines above a New York dispatch that declares picture theaters in that city have been used as recruiting stations for "white slaves." It seems that a certain confessed pander has said that thousands of young girls have been so procured.

So long as it is possible, and easy, for any man to start a picture theater if he has the price of film rental, there is nothing to prevent the most vicious crook from opening a house and using it as a blind and a help to his real business. These parasites have enough money (not made in the picture business) to make them appear desirable exchange customers.

It is not customary in business to investigate the morals of a prospective purchaser, provided his financial standing is all right. But the motion picture business, like all lines of entertainment, is peculiarly sensitive. Since the public will not view it with intelligent understanding, it is forced to purge itself of every influence that may even slightly poison the mind of the people.

It is evident that the greatest harm can be done the industry by those who enter it with no thought for its interest, but only to shield their operations in a nameless and vicious profession. We believe it is the duty of the picture distributors and exhibitors, not merely to the public but to their own welfare, to give all the assistance in their power in running to earth the perpetrators of outrages against its fair name. Every exhibitor who is in possession of evidence that a procurer is posing as a picture man should lose no time in placing that evidence in the hands of the proper authorities.

No single exchange has so many customers that it cannot keep track of their respectability, their moral as well as monetary responsibility. Every disreputable character who is allowed a foothold in the picture business, and who uses that foothold to further his vile purposes, strikes a blow directly at the whole industry.

No man feels that he is his brother's keeper; but those whose livelihood and reputation depend upon the approval of the people owe it to themselves to keep their industry immaculate. They should assume the responsibility that will inevitably be rested upon them and shut out the parasites.

The Sunday Show Problem

WHETHER it is proper and moral to operate or to attend a picture show on Sunday is a constantly recurring question in many communities, and probably it never will be settled. There is always a very active minority of the population which views with indignation any attempt to enjoy the Sabbath. There was a period in history, as we all know, when a substantial proportion of the people held that attitude, and time has not wholly diffused it.

It is natural enough that those who protest against Sunday picture shows should be church people. But trying to view the situation in its broadest light, and without prejudice, we wonder how much of the complaint is inspired by true reverence and how much by the spirit of business rivalry.

For there is no denying that such rivalry does exist between the Sunday show and the church, without any conscious attempt at competition. The theater man puts little thought on the matter; taking patronage away from the church is the last thing in the world he would think of. But the churchman who sees a large and happy crowd entering the theater doors on a Sunday evening, and then turns to his own perhaps scantily filled pews, naturally feels either discouraged or indignant.

Now if the church were a business proposition—a condition for which it has few aspirations—it would compete with counter attractions by offering more to its attendance and increasing the interest of its proceedings. Not having the business spirit, it merely protests loudly and tries to put the counter attraction out of business. It is inspired to this course by the belief (an easy self-deception) that it is saving the morals of mankind.

The only fault we have to find with those excellent people who appoint themselves our guardians is that they persist in believing that we would fall to the ground if it were not for their constant effort. They give the rest of the world absolutely no credit for any self-supporting morals.

Ostensibly the purpose of the church is wholly altruistic. Theoretically, it should give unstinted recognition to those who are able to preserve their reverence and their piety without its help. Practically, it seldom does so. It is inclined to oppose everything that diverts attention from it on the Sabbath, including Sunday newspapers, automobiles, smoking-jacket-and-slippers, and picture shows.

Just as the college has no monopoly on learning, the church cannot corner morality. To say that by going to a picture show Sunday evening one undoes all the good he gained by going to church Sunday morning is bigotry, pure and simple. That not all pictures are morally uplifting is true; but very few of them are harmful, and practically all of them broaden the mental experience and carry a philosophy that helps.

The Sunday picture show has to its credit the dismantling of hundreds of saloons whose patronage was cut off. This is a work that the church has unsuccessfully attempted for ages. The Sunday picture show has kept the family together on the one holiday of the week, and so earned the gratitude of thousands of wives and mothers. Altogether the Sunday picture show is one of the best co-operators the church has in the work of making this world a pleasanter and kindlier and purer place.

If the closing of the Sunday picture shows sent all their patrons flocking to the church, we might favor their closing. But as human nature stands unchangeable, closing the Sunday shows is very liable to prove a calamity to the community—a return to the saloon and the dive and the thousand devices of mischief.

HOW OTHERS ARE STEERING THE SHIP

BOSTON capitalists and New York theatrical men have acquired a site in Worcester, Massachusetts, and will construct a $1,000,000 theater building. It will be ten stories high and include offices and retail stores.

H. M. Davis has been appointed manager of the New York branch of the Unicorn Film Service.

Twenty-seven out of the one hundred and ten motion picture houses in Baltimore, Maryland, are closed for the summer.

"The Fall of a Nation" will be shown at the Hotel Nassau, Long Beach, for the benefit of the American Defense Society.

A new picture company has been formed with studios at Jamaica, Long Island, known as the Harry La Pearl Picture Company.

The state of Indiana is going to buy the film of James Whitcomb Riley in which he posed for the Selig Company shortly before his death.

Philadelphia theaters are now hit by the infantile paralysis scare and an ordinance has been passed barring the children from the motion picture theaters.

The Strand Theater of Minneapolis and the Starland of St. Paul are showing the Dorsey Expedition pictures. These are scientific European pictures.

It is estimated the attendance at the moving picture houses throughout the city of New York has fallen off fifty per cent during the quarantine for infantile paralysis.

Charles Z. Schaefer, who has been managing the Bandbox Theater, Chicago, has now returned to the Casino. Mr. Schaefer was running the Casino at the time he took over the Bandbox.

The operators of Canada believe in close union and publicity. They have arranged for a column to run in each issue of the Bulletin, the Canadian publication which reaches the theaters of the Dominion.

H. N. Sollenberger, playground director of Dayton, Ohio, has requested that the city appropriate funds for a moving picture machine so that free entertainments can be given at the Wayne avenue gymnasium during the winter.

It is reported that the extreme hot weather has affected business in the northwestern states much more than usual and that many houses are taking a temporary vacation from work. The same is true, of course, of certain other parts of the country.

Last spring A. C. Lewis, a prominent lumber man of New Jersey, built a fine little theater in a "far-off" section of Seaside Park, New Jersey. He has made the house a success by inducing the runners of the town jitney busses to carry a placard, "To the Colonial Theater, Fare 3 cents."

The Australian Company of Sydney, New South Wales, Australia, has been granted a charter to conduct a general motion picture business in New York state with a capital of $1,500,000. Millar Johnson is representing the company in New York.

S. M. Bower, a prominent exhibitor of Idaho and half owner of the Olympic Theater of Pocatello, has been engaged by V. L. S. E. as a salesman in the Denver office. Bower should be a good film seller as he knows how the shoe feels on the other foot.

A new use to which motion pictures have been put is the teaching of stammerers and stutterers to overcome this remedial defect. Mrs. Mabel Farrington Gifford, lecturer on defective speech correction, is using motion pictures to show how these defects may be overcome.

During the "Baby Week" campaigns in various cities of Ontario the Provincial Board of Health sent out operators and educative films to give free exhibitions on the subject. The Canadian government is also using films in a campaign for the conservation of natural resourses.

Jones, Linick & Schaefer of Chicago are running the new German war pictures at the Colonial, and "Where Are My Children" to big houses at the La Salle, and at the Studebaker, Central Film's "Diana's Inspiration," the Brady, "A Woman's Way," and the 13th chapter of "Gloria's Romance."

Many exhibitors in the country are familiar with the old Dewey Theater on Fourteenth street, New York. It was named for the popular Spanish war naval hero and has been a landmark for years. The old house, which has been running picutres of late, is now being torn down.

Manager Weil of the classy new Castle Theater at "the busiest corner in the world," State and Madison streets, Chicago, is planning on establishing an umbrella service for his patrons. When guests wish rain sticks they will be able to secure them at the Castle box office.

Ever use a big spider as a lobby display? Several New York houses displayed real tarantulas in glass globes when they ran V. L. S. E.'s "The Tarantula." The deadly "bugs" were furnished by Salesman A. J. O'Neill, of the New York V. L. S. E. office. He had them captured at the docks where the banana ships are uncargoed.

The theaters of Chattanooga, Tennessee, have been endeavoring for some time past to induce the authorities to loosen up on the Blue laws forbidding Sunday opening. The attorney-general has just issued the statement that no houses will be permitted to run on Sunday until the legislature repeals the present statutes bearing on the case.

S. L. Rothapfel, manager of the Rialto Theater, New York City, in an effort to produce the proper atmosphere for a saw-mill scene in "Hell to Pay Austin," rigged up a contrivance to give the shrieking, ripping sound of a saw and had chemists prepare a pine perfume which is sprayed into the ventilators and swept through the house.

Thomas H. Ince's spectacle, "Civilization," closed at the Grand Opera House in Chicago on August 12, then started a tour of the state, Mr. Ince still retaining the rights of Illinois. During the last few weeks of the Chicago run the film was shown without the big action prologue and prices were reduced from two to one dollar.

The United States Special Safety First special train has been giving free motion picture exhibits in the railroad yards of the different towns. The pictures show the activity of the United States government and of many departments and private corporations in securing safety to life and property, also battleships and battle scenes.

A baby check room is run by Manager George Fischer of the Alhambra, Milwaukee. When one of the youngsters needs its mother's attention the maid in attendance presses a button which lights a light on the proscenium showing the number of the child. The woman who has the corresponding check then goes to the relief of her checked offspring.

It is expected that one of Alfred Hamburger's Michigan avenue theaters in Chicago will use a specially written musical score when it plays Pathe's "The Shadow of Her Past," the feature starring the opera singers, Lina Cavalieri and Lucien Muratore. The score was written by Henriette Webber, a Chicago musician, who made the arrangements for the special composition through Manager Bunn of the Chicago Pathe exchange.

Following the advice of Frank J. Rembusch, a prominent exhibitor of Indiana and one of the M. P. E. L. directors in the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, it might be well for many exhibitors to study the bulletin on systems of business accounts just issued by the United States Federal Trade commission. A copy may be had by writing the commission at Washington, D. C.

The Parkway Theater of Baltimore creates an attractive four-page program each week printed on light blue stock of good quality. A half tone of a screen from one of the current plays is carried on the front cover. On the back appears "some interesting facts relative to future film productions at the Parkway." The house's descriptive phrase is "a theater of refinement catering to the most select following in the city of Baltimore."

It certainly is a good thing for a theater to get the newsboys boosting for it. This was accomplished in Buffalo by Manager Harold Edel of the Strand, who, co-operating with the Buffalo Evening News, invited through the paper, all the newsboys to a special free performance at the Strand. There the boys saw themselves on the screen for they had been captured by a Pathe Weekly cameraman a short time before. It would seem to be a good stunt without any special newsboy film.

Daily matinees at the Alhambra Theater, Cleveland, have been discontinued owing to the fact that the management is installing a Typhoon cooling system. This new ventilating apparatus is the largest that has ever been brought to Cleveland. The system has two fans seven feet in diameter and when they are both in use it is possible to get the temperature below 70 degrees. Two 50-horsepower motors are used to drive the fans.

Lubliner and Trinz, owners and operators of several Chicago houses, will open two more film theaters during the first of September. These new screen houses are the Michigan, a two thousand seater at Michigan avenue and Fifty-fifth street, and the West End Theater, at West End avenue and Fortieth street. The latter house will seat 1,500. The other houses operated by Lubliner and Trinz are the Biograph, Vitagraph, Knickerbocker, Paramount and South Shore. Each of these houses seat 1,000 or more.

V-L-S-E Pals prints the following well written verse used in the advertising of the Rosebud Theater of Portland, Oregon. This sort of community spirit on the part of a house is sure to make its place more solid with the people.

Boost your city, boost your friend,
Boost the show that you attend;
Boost the street on which you're dwelling,
Boost the goods that you are selling.
Boost the people round about you,
Possibly they can do without you;
But success will quicker find them,
If they know that you're behind them.

Boost for every forward movement,
Boost for every good improvement;
Boost the stranger and the neighbor,
Boost the man for whom you labor.
Cease to be a chronic knocker,
Cease to be a progress blocker;

And if you would have your home town better,
Boost it to the final letter.

Studio Near Detroit

The Margaret Anglin Pictorial Corporation has purchased twenty acres of land on the south side of Michigan avenue, twelve miles from Detroit, and will establish a moving picture studio. James D. Barton, president and general manager of the company, says that $45,000 will be put into buildings and $35,000 more into equipment. Construction work will start immediately and the main building will include a studio 25 or 30 feet high which will have capacity for eight pictures, dressing rooms, property rooms and storage space, and a restaurant for the performers.

The new Chicago home of President Samuel S. Hutchinson is rapidly nearing completion. It is situated on Sheridan road, with the whole of Lake Michigan for a back yard, and with a magnificently appointed motion picture theater in the basement. Mr. Hutchinson will undoubtedly be an infrequent visitor at Santa Barbara once he begins enjoying the new home.

First Aid to Theater Men

BY S. L. ROTHAPFEL

IN these days when the only thing that interests sweltering humanity is the word "cool" or any of its variations, and the only thing that will attract their attention is something that "looks or listens" cool, it behooves the picture theater manager to make his house and coolness synonymous in the mind of the public if he does not want his trade to fall off very perceptibly during the hot nights. The parks, the bathing beaches, the automobile rides and all pleasures that keep one out-of-doors are very attractive when the thermometer hovers around ninety, and with the exodus of whole families for their summer vacations it means an extra effort on the part of the exhibitor to bring the box office receipts up to the paying mark.

It may not be possible for all managers to install in their houses special cooling and ventilating systems because they are too expensive to be practical in many cases. It is possible, however, for the manager to make use of every facility he has for making his theater cool and comfortable. A little extra effort to secure a good circulation of air will make a great deal of difference in the atmosphere of the house and in the box office receipts. Also special attention should be paid to the program for if the people are sufficiently entertained they will forget how hot it is. If the manager cannot truthfully hang out the hot weather sign saying that the theater is twenty degrees cooler than the street, he can hang out a sign calling attention to the fact that if a person is having a good time he forgets how high the thermometer stands and invite the people into the theater to be entertained, have a good laugh, and forget the heat. This might prove a novelty in hot weather signs and be just as effective as the twenty degrees cooler bait.

53.—It seems to me that the majority of people are very inconsiderate and decidedly hard to please. They don't seem to take into consideration all the trouble the manager goes to to make his theater attractive for them and get a program that will suit them, but seem to think they ought to kick at every thing that doesn't go just right and any film that is not exactly up to the standard. When a fellow is booking a regular program he can't get just what he wants and if some of the plays are not as good as others they might average them up and give him some credit. Just the other night I had a program in which I will admit the feature was very poor, but there were two splendid short subjects that evened it up, but do you think anyone spoke about those extra fine short subjects—not on your life. They all came out and kicked because the feature was so poor and said if I couldn't run better shows than that they were not coming any more. Sometimes I get so disgusted with the unreasonableness of people that I just want to throw up the whole business. The women are the worse. If only men and children came to the shows it would be alright, because they just come to be amused and it isn't so hard to please them, but half of the women come with the idea of picture reform or some such bunk and think they have shirked their duty if they can't find something to criticize and complain about. I believe when anything goes wrong at home during the day they take it out on the manager of the theater at night.

Although this letter was evidently written on a "blue Monday," at the same time I believe most managers will agree with the writer that the public is too fond of complaining and too liable not to give the exhibitor credit for what he is trying to do. This is especially true of the neighborhood theater in which the people feel they have a personal interest and so a perfect right to criticize. They feel that all their money for motion pictures goes into the box office of this special theater and so they have a part ownership in it.

If you let these complaints get on your nerves they will drive you to distraction. The only way to regard them is to take the advice for what it is worth and then forget it. Very often in these criticisms you will find some sensible ones that will give you an idea whereby you can better your service or give the public what it wants. It is, of course, out of the question to please everyone with the same thing, but the only way to learn just what they do want and what will please your patrons is by sifting these animadversions and taking out what really is useful to you.

As a matter of fact, life would be rather dull if everything went along too peacefully, and if we did not have anyone to hold us up to our standard and keep us striving to reach a higher goal we might lose all incentive for better and higher things and simply jog along in the same rut and not get anywhere. These criticisms may be rather unpleasant in some cases but at the same time they do keep us stirred up to a certain degree and to a realization that all business is a survival of the fittest and it is up to us to be the "fittest" or the next fellow will beat us to it. The women we have always with us, and although they may be a great deal harder to please than the rest of the family, you must realize that they are the real backbone of our motion picture theater business, and make allowances for them as you want them to make allowances for you. If we did not have the women we would have no theaters for always three-quarters of the audience is composed of women and they are the ones who bring the men out in almost every case, for what tired business man would not rather rest comfortably at home in the evening with a good book and a cigar than to come out to a show if his wife did not drag him. Also the children could not and would not come if the mothers did not bring them. So if the women are the complainers they are also the payers. Take that into consideration before you condemn them entirely.

On nights when you know you have a poor film try the little trick of showing the poor one first on your program and then running the good ones and you will find that the last impression is the one that is remembered and very often this will help to cover up the poor picture at the beginning of the program. It might even be wise in some cases to go out and get another film which you think is exceptionally good so that the audience is given an extra amount for its money. Advertise a double-header or an extra long show and make the people believe they are going to get something special, then run the poor one first and the good ones after it and you will probably get away with it in pretty good shape.

Although these complaints and criticisms are rather annoying and in many cases you feel they are rather a matter of habit than true analyses, do not discourage the people from telling their trouble to you or make them feel that you do not like to hear their views on the films you show or your management of the theater, for it pleases them to feel that they are important enough to have their opinion considered and their feeling of proprietorship and personal interest in the house should be fostered as it means their continued and steady patronage for your theater—and yours alone. Take their complaints along with their money and only allow them to annoy you to the extent of keeping you ever on the alert for any real good ideas which they may offer for the betterment of your house and program.

54—I have just bought a theater which has been very poorly managed and consequently has not been making any money. The former manager's idea was that if he paid the highest prices for all equipment he would have a high priced house making lots of money but he had no executive ability and paid no attention to the little things which are so important. I want to make a success of this venture, of course, but find that although the equipment is all of the best the results are not all that could be desired. One thing which I cannot understand is that although the screen is a gold fibre one the pictures are not as clear as they should be. I thought perhaps it might be the machine and had it cleaned and thoroughly overhauled but the result was no better, so I have decided that it must be something else.

Have you investigated to see if your screen was at fault? I have known of some instances where the gold fibre screen has not given the best results in small houses where the projection was very short. In such cases the machine is so near the screen that the light is too bright on the metallic surface and a glare results which reflects back on the picture and makes it indistinct in some places. Yours is, perhaps, a short and broad projection, which does not obtain the best results from the gold fibre screen. I was talking just recently to an exhibitor who had a small house and he had spent a great deal of time trying to find out just what was the matter with his pictures and at last hit upon this solution. As he expressed it, the screen was too good for his house. He removed the screen and went back to one of the simpler forms—the plaster wall covered with an aluminum solution and found that the result was very satisfactory, the reflection was not so strong and consequently the pictures were clearer. There is an aluminum curtain which can be purchased for about fifty dollars if desired, but for a trial this painting of the wall costs only about ten dollars in comparison.

As long as you feel the theater you have just taken over is well equipped as far as the big things are concerned, turn your attention to the little things. You will find that it is often these little things that make more trouble than the big ones, and if the small items are carefully looked after the big ones will take care of themselves.

Here's wishing you all kinds of success in your new venture.

55—Can you help me out on this problem of how much to charge children coming into the theater? My regular price is ten cents for adults and five cents for children, but nights when I run special features I charge fifteen cents for adults and ten cents for children and some of the parents are objecting and saying the children should come in for five cents at all times.

The problem of the children and the motion pictures is one which seems to cause more trouble to the exhibitor from all angles than any other. He seems to be between the devil and the deep blue sea. If children are barred from seeing certain films the parents object because they also have to stay home if the children cannot come, and if the children are admitted then there is trouble on account of censorship, because the children see many films which they ought not to see. Then the next question which comes up is this one of how much the child should be charged. The parents never seem to look at this question from the standpoint of the manager. Of course there are just so many seats in his theater, and he gains his livlihood from the selling of those seats, but nevertheless the parents see no reason why he should not gladly get only five cents, whereas he could get ten cents for each one if the children were not admitted for less. Even if the child is small he takes up a whole seat and there may be any number of grown people waiting on the outside who would be very glad to pay the ten cents for those same seats, and so double the profits of the manager.

But on the other hand, the exhibitor must look at this from the other side. The child coming in for five cents is responsible for a number of ten cent admissions. Take a family where there is only one child under twelve yeasr of age and perhaps two more above that age. The youngest is usually the one to tease to go to see the pictures in the evening and she gets all the family started so that by allowing the one child to come in for five cents you have brought four other members of the family, all of whom pay ten cents admission. Also many mothers cannot come to the theater in the evening unless they bring the children with them, because there is no one with whom to leave them. As long as it is only five cents for the children she thinks nothing of it, but if it is ten cents for each one she will stay home and keep the children, too. You want your theater to be a family theater and as such you must cater to the children—you must keep the good will of the community and this can only be done by keeping the good will of the children. The child is little but he is mighty in his influence over the family and this fact must not be overlooked.

There is always a question in my mind whether the exhibitor is justified at any time in raising his regular price because of a feature unless it is a very special one. I do not approve of this practice of every other night making the price fifteen cents. If you feel that you cannot run your house on the ten cent admission scale, then raise it to fifteen cents and keep it there—do not jump back and forth for this invariably antagonizes the patrons. There may be times when you are showing some exceptional film when you are justified in charging twenty-five cents admission. This is perfectly legitimate if you announce it far enough in advance.

The practice to which I object is simply jumping your price any night in the week without any warning and having the people come expecting to pay the regular admission of ten cents and be confronted with a fifteen cents sign. If you feel that you have to do this once a week it is a good idea to have it always on the same night so that the people may know that on Thursday, for example, you always have a special performance for which you charge fifteen cents for adults and ten cents for children, and then if they do not care to pay the higher price they can make a point of staying away on that evening. If you do make your price fifteen cents, however, either permanently or just on special evenings, you will be very much wiser if you keep the price five cents for children. It may seem that you are losing ten cents on every seat occupied by a child but at the same time I believe there will be enough more people in attendance under this rule to make the average about even if you were able to compute it.

CONDUCTED BY B. F. BARRETT

Former Editor of Photoplay Scenario Magazine.

Note—This department will appear hereafter in each issue of Motography, and will treat of all subjects of interest to the photoplaywright—whether amateur or professional. You are invited to suggest any subjects you desire to have discussed, or ask questions on any matters relating to the writing of photoplays which have been puzzling you. The department is also open to you at any time for the expression of your own ideas or the submitting of ideas of others which have helped you, and will be interesting to other photoplay writers.

Visualizing a Photoplay

By Will M. Ritchey

YOU must be able to see your picture in your mind before you can put it on paper so that others also will know what you have planned. The "camera mind" is essential to real ability in screen writing. The ambitious photodramatist should cultivate, by all means, the faculty of projecting on his mental screen definite pictures of his scenes, and of the action of his characters.

Starting with a more or less formed idea as the basis of a story, the experienced writer turns over in his mind the various stages of his plot, from start to finish. He sees his "leads," "heavies," "character people," introduced to the audience by means of carefully prepared scenes which tell who they are and what relation they bear to each other in the picture. His imagination carries him on through each step in the unfolding drama. If he has a clear picture in his mind, he will be able to see his characters definitely fixed at a certain point, and then answer for himself the question, "What would they do next?"

Upon his ability to answer this question logically, and yet in an interesting, novel manner, depends his success as a photoplaywright.

By being his own cameraman, too, he will avoid calling for scenes or action which it is impossible to photograph. Many things, of course, now are accomplished at the studios which formerly were held impossible. The simpler matter of the difficulty of trying to show that the hero was identified by a blue necktie while the villain wore a green one, is understood in these days of movie publicity. But all scenario editors constantly meet with the most impracticable demands by the writers, and good plots are spoiled by such errors.

An illustration of this is the old stage story of the dramatist who instructed, in his script, an English curate to enter "as if he had just finished his cup of tea!" Could this be pantomimed on the screen by having the actor wipe his mouth as he entered? It might suggest something stronger than tea and put the poor curate in an embarrassing light.

PUTTING A PLAY ON PAPER

With the idea of the story you are going to tell firmly in your mind, it is a good thing to tell that story to yourself first, by writing it out. You need not have literary ability to do this. Start at the beginning, describe generally the plot of the photodrama and do it in such a way that anyone who picks it up would understand the play.

One error to avoid is that of relying on your mind to fill in the gaps. Do not take it for granted that because you know what you are intending to relate, someone else will know also. Put it down on paper, all of it. If you were writing to a friend of some happening in your life, you would explain it to him as completely as possible. Do the same with the screen friends you hope to make through your finished script.

Now, with the story written out, you have a scenario. That, practically, is all a scenario is. It is an outline of the action. It is different from the completed script because it does not describe in detail the action of each scene. But it is the foundation upon which you will build your plot structure.

Read over your scenario very carefully. Make sure that each thing you write is logical. Here I would say that something highly impossible may yet be made to appear probable in a picture, if the development of each step is logical. Thus it would be impossible in real life to take a trip to the moon. But if a picture of such a trip were being made, it would seem probable by means of showing the machine on which he traveled, his flight through the air, and the strange conditions the traveler met on the lunar sphere.

After you have corrected any faults in the weaving of your plot, take your scenario and re-write it. The main theme of the story, of course, is the part which you must state most strongly. Some writers condense this main theme into as few words as is consistent, at the beginning of their script, for example:

"A poor boy from the country finds himself 'broke' in the city. He is befriended by a man of wealth and given employment. His employer's daughter is being courted by the manager of his employer's business, but the daughter is interested in the country youth, who falls in love with her. The manager, who has embezzled his employer's funds, throws suspicion on the youth and he faces jail, but the fraud is discovered by the girl, who saves the youth in time to win her father's consent to her marriage with the country boy."

This is a very poor plot and one which has been used many times, with slight variations. It is an illustration, however, of condensation.

From that brief outline, repeat your story in greater detail. Do not waste words, but do not omit anything of importance. In this expanded scenario you will tell just how the employer befriends the boy, how the money is embezzled, how suspicion is thrown on the employee, and all the other steps.

A detailed scenario such as I have described is the basis of all photoplays of a serious nature.

Wanted—a Square Deal for Writers

By Margaret Foley

EVERYONE interested in motion pictures from the "movie fan" to the aspiring scenario writer, should read the two articles in Motography of July 29 under the captions "Why Not Give the Author a Credit?" and "Are All Pictures Trite and Padded?"

Personally, I do not think the majority of pictures are trite and padded. For instance, take almost any one of the Ince productions—the continuity is good, the settings are wonderful, the picture a perfect whole. I speak especially of Gardner Sullivan's work. The Universal turns out some good pictures—King Baggot was wonderful in "Half a Rogue." The scene that most impressed me in that picture was the death scene of the aunt—no horrible detail, a sudden flash and she had passed away. Famous Players and Vitagraph seem to avoid all semblance of padding—in fact, all the big producers do. It would seem they had decided to leave the lesser lights to do things in the same old way, regardless of personality or station in life.

The letter or telegram piece of business is put over entirely too often, and in just the manner the writer describes. I suppose just so many feet of film must be used, and that is one of the ways.

In comedy, or so-called comedy, it almost drives me frantic to see the policeman forced to do so many absurd stunts. I do not think it is very complimentary to the police force, men who guard our homes and loved ones day and night. But we have them on the screen with their long mustaches, ill-fitting uniforms, sliding down hills, jumping fences, knocking people down, falling into the river and making themselves generally ridiculous. The comedy-dentist is equally revolting.

"WHAT'S THE USE?"

Mr. Shafer voices the plaint of the majority of new writers, and some of the old. One excerpt from his letter gives the key to the present situation: "When buying they offer unreasonable prices to an unknown author, and seldom give him credit for his work on the screen."

When one has submitted good clean work, live action, etc., to companies who have solicited manuscripts, only to have your offerings returned with printed rejection slips stating that your script does not meet with their requirements, you say to yourself "What's the use?" You have made a study of the type of films produced by this same company, have written your story with one of their stars in view, you know it is what they require, yet your script has been returned.

I have been told by persons well versed in the ways of filmdom that it is absolutely foolish for the unknown writer to submit a manuscript to the majority of film companies, for it has no chance by the time the staff writers and a few others affiliated with the studio get through with it. In fact, one of the largest producers is quoted as saying to one of his staff, when asked how he could use the best part of a scenario submitted by an unknown writer and then reject the manuscript: "We're not responsible for where we get our ideas; dress it up a little differently!" Now isn't that encouraging to one who wants to write scenarios? Your idea stolen bodily, and someone else given credit for it!

CREDIT MORE DESIRABLE THAN CHECK

To the average beginner—one feeling certain that Dame Fortune has provided him with pencils and reams of paper to scribble his way into the Hall of Fame—that little check doesn't mean so much. What fills him with pure delight is to see his name flashed on the screen—to know that he has succeeded in bringing his work before the public; that the child of his imagination stands before him, and that all who know him may praise or censure, according to their point of view. The author puts in days of hard work, both mental and physical, trying to turn out a finished product, live action, convincing, snappy cut-ins, perfect continuity, and in the end is often disappointed, both as to remuneration and seeing his name on the screen.

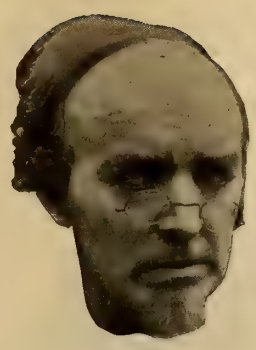
According to motion picture journals there is a constant demand for new ideas and new-old plots with original twists. When the producers finally realize that the young writer demands fair remuneration and square treatment in exchange for his efforts, then we will see clean, interesting pictures—comedy that is funny, not disgusting—pictures that sweet sixteen and her boy sweetheart may see without blushing and squirming in their seats.

The young writer of today realizes the moral effect the motion pictures have on the public, and if they are to be one of young America's pet diversions, why not show life to them as it should be, not depict some morbid, sordid phase of it that repels older people, dims the rose-colored glasses of youth and makes them "wonder"?

The time is nearing when the unknown author will have his chance, but it's a long way to Tipperary, so "Watchful Waiting" should be our slogan.

Universal Pays $1,200 for Synopsis

The Universal Film Company has broken another record and paid $1,200 to Willard Bradley for an eight-page synopsis under the title, "The Beloved Imp." The previous high record for a synopsis alone is $750, and was paid for a five-reel feature. In that case, however, a working script went with the synopsis. Offers of a thousand dollars have been made on various competitions, and under special arrangements, all of them having certain strings attached to them. The Universal paid $1,200 strictly on the merit of the story, and this is in accordance with its new plan for buying scenarios.



Some time ago it became apparent that the "per reel" method of buying scenarios was equitable neither to the writer nor to the company purchasing them. Frequently a script purchased as a five-reeler had to be cut to a two, and it frequently happens that a story intended as a two-reeler is worth five reels in the hands of a competent scenario staff. The Universal intends to depend upon its own scenario staff for guidance as to the value of stories in future, and will pay for the story itself, and not for the number of reels in which the story will be produced. This system is likely to work out very much to the benefit of scenario writers.

Why Waste Your Postage?

The Selig Polyscope Company states that it is not in the market for scenarios as there are now about seven hundred stories, including novels, short stories, and motion picture plots in manuscript in its vaults and this material will last for years.

Hampton Del Ruth, managing editor of scenarios of the Mack-Sennett-Keystone studios, announces that despite the fact that he recently sent out a letter which had wide publication, setting forth the reasons why scenarios submitted by outside writers were unavailable for the use of the Keystone Film Company, his mail continues to be flooded with the offerings of those who seek to see their ideas on the screen.

"My Country, 'Tis of Thee," a two-act photoplay released by Essanay August 15, is based on the call of the National Guard to the Mexican border.

His Honor, Mr. Kolb, is above, in reproving mood, and the view of the factory to consumer soda shower is from "A Million for Mary," the American-Mutual five-act play wherein the two noted humorists display their ungovernable comedianship. On this side is Herr Dill, plotting some diabolical prank.

Mutual to Star Margarita Fischer

FIRST KOLB AND DILL LAUGHMAKER RELEASED AUGUST 21

THE chief attraction on the Mutual program for the week of August 21 will be "A Million for Mary," the first American-Mutual Star production, featuring C. William Kolb and Max Dill, in five acts. Written by Aaron Hoffman and scenarioized by A. Santell, the entire five reels are permeated with unusually humorous situations and interspersed with pathos enough to add the necessary dramatic contrasts in the unfolding of the story. May Cloy, a recent addition to the American-Mutual studios, portrays the chief feminine role.

The second Mutual feature for the week will be released August 24 under the title of "The Mystery of the Riveria." In the cast appear Jane Mae, Paul Manson, Maurice Lugust and Valentine Petit.

Four two-act subjects will also appear on this program, "The Enchantment," with Vivian Rich and Alfred Vosburg playing the leads; "Getting the Grafters," a Thanhouser production in which Doris Grey is featured; "Nell Dale's Men Folks," a Mustang contribution featuring Frank Borzage and Anna Little; and Centaur's "The Spite Husband," in which Crane Wilbur makes his last appearance as the star in a picture of this length. Mae Gaston, Harrish Ingraham, Ida Lewis, Jessie Burnett and Claude Mortonson are members of the supporting cast.

Two Single Reelers

Two single reel comedies will be released August 22 under the titles of "Going to the Dogs" and "Fare Lady." The former is from the Vogue studios, and the last, a Falstaff offering featuring Riley Chamberlain in another of his famous roles of "Conductor No. 378."

The Beauty comedy of the week, "In a Prohibition Town," with Orral Humphrey as the star, will be released August 23. Two Cub comedies, "The Rookie," with George Ovey, for release August 25, and "Harmony and Discord," featuring Billy Armstrong, for release August 27, complete the single reel comedy offerings.

Mutual Weekly No. 86, comprised of a number of interesting news events, and "See America First," the Mutual popular scenic feature, will be released August 27. "Reel Life," the Mutual Film Magazine in pictures, will go to the public Sunday, August 27.

Actual clashes between U. S. troops and Mexican bandits during an unexpected meeting of the two forces furnishes one of the thrilling situations of "Somewhere in Mexico," a forthcoming Horsley-Mutual production starring Crane Wilbur. Other thrills have been injected which show the dynamiting of a river, the destruction of a score of buildings and adobe houses by shell fire, the explosion of a huge powder plant and the destruction of an armored motor car. Mae Gaston plays opposite Mr. Wilbur and Harrish Ingraham, Maria Corteaux and Ida Lews play important roles.

President John R. Freuler, of the Mutual Film Corporation, announces that Margarita Fischer has signed a contract with Mutual and will be starred in at least six five-part features. The first picture will be released late in October, with the others following at intervals of four weeks. Harry Pollard will direct Miss Fischer, and the Fischer subjects will be filmed at special studios in Los Angeles. The first release of the star series will be entitled "The Pearl of Paradise." Miss Fischer was last seen among Mutual features in "The Miracle of Life," released nearly a year ago. Miss Fischer started her dramatic career in childhood, appeared in stock companies, then graduated to leads, and worked in vaudeville before she came to the screen.

Two of the most important roles in "The House of Mirrors," a Mutual multi-reel drama featuring Frank Mills, fall to children, one of whom is just seven and the other six and a half years old. They are Jack Curtiss and Runa Hodges, both of whom possess unusual talents and a wealth of stage experience despite their tender years.

After playing a boy's part in the last three features in which she appeared, Dodo Newton, the six-year-old blonde of the American-Mutual studios, was cast for a "regular part," as she expressed herself, in "A Million for Mary," initial of the Kolb & Dill comedy features. "And I felt right at home in girl's clothes again," said little Miss Newton. In her next appearance, however, she has been cast for another boy's role.

Helen Holmes and her company of Signal-Mutual players will spend the next eight weeks at Eureka, Calif., where they will film numerous exteriors for several productions, as yet untitled, in which she is to star. About fifteen players make up the contingent which accompanied her and Director General J. P. McGowan.

Thomas Chatterton, co-star with Juanita Hansen in "The Secret of the Submarine," the American-Mutual "preparedness" photo-novel, has been cast for the juvenile lead in "Bluff," third of the Mutual Star productions featuring Kolb and Dill.

Edward Earle in First Metro Play

Edward Earle has been studying the Braille system by which the blind read in order to add realism to the portrayal of the blind character he is called upon to play in Viola Dana's forthcoming Rolfe-Columbia five-act photo-drama, as yet unnamed. This will be Mr. Earle's first picture for Metro, although he was associated with Miss Dana and her director, John H. Collins, at the Edison studio. He is a Canadian by birth, his first experience having been gained in the Valentine Stock Company, Toronto, of which Mary Pickford was also a member. Some of his more important engagements have been with Tim Murphy in repertoire, with William H. Thompson in "The Bishop's Move," with Henrietta Crosman, with Bertha Galland, Mary Mannering, James T. Powers, Marie Cahill and De Wolf Hopper, in many Broadway successes.

Edward Earle, who is now with Metro.

Mr. Earle, who is very popular throughout the country among motion picture fans, has played for Famous Players and Pathe as well as for Edison. Among his best-known pictures have been "The Unopened Letter," "The Lost Melody," "The Phantom Thief" and "A Theft in the Dark." He was the Vance Coleman in the "Olive's Opportunities" series.

From Errand Boy to Grand Opera

Sinbad the Sailor, who gained considerable fame as an adventurer, led a drab, colorless existence compared with the melodramatic happenings which have been packed into the short thirty-odd years of Charles Arling's life. Everyone knows Arling as an actor in motion pictures. Few know the romance of the new William Fox photoplayer.

Errand boy in one of Boston's largest bird stores was his first position. Long association with the Hub's most educated and cultured songsters gave him an excellent baritone voice himself, so the erstwhile errand boy jumped voice foremost into the ranks of the famous Bostonian Opera Company. A few years as a roving sailor on the bounding main, with a couple of globe circumnavigations chalked up to his credit; then some more annodominoes on the stage—including seventy-six hours in Glad Brook, Iowa, where he was snow-bound—and thence into pictures. These are a few of the things Arling recalls in an idle moment.

CANADA BARS V-L-S-E FILM

"The Suspect" Condemned Because It Depicts Russian Political Systems—Frank Gotch Appears in Selig Athletic Series

Labor leaders throughout the country have been very much interested in Vitagraph's five-part feature, "The Dawn of Freedom," released through V-L-S-E. This film treats of the subject of capital versus labor, and private showings have been requested by labor heads. The portrayal is presented by contrast with what conditions are and ought to be, and is thereby considerably more drastic than anything that has gone before.

The extent of the implacable censorship set up by England and her allies as the result of the world war was brought home to the film industry when a decree was signed in Ottawa, Canada, permanently barring the five-part Vitagraph feature, "The Suspect," from exhibition in the province. This film is a daring expose of the relentless system of espionage in Russia and the Canadian officials condemned it because of its obvious reflection upon the Russian political system. The V-L-S-E representatives are planning to resubmit the picture to the Board of Appeal at Ottawa.

The manager of the Hamilton Theater, Yonkers, New York, which shows V-L-S-E features, found that the patronage fell off considerably on cloudy nights and traced the cause to the fear of the patrons that they would be caught in the rain. Last week the manager bought up a large supply of umbrellas and had large posters printed and slides made to the effect that umbrellas could be secured at the box office in case of rain, and the attendance has not only been made up but gains have been shown almost daily.

F. C. Burhans, assistant branch manager of the Pittsburgh V-L-S-E office, has been promoted to the managership of that office, succeeding E. O. Child. Mr. Child has been relieved of his duties at his own request because of ill health.

The eighth release of the Selig Athletic series being distributed through V-L-S-E shows Frank Gotch, champion wrestler of the world, in his last match with Jim Essen, champion of Scotland. Willie Ritchie also appears in this release in a scientific boxing match with Lew Steffens. Other champions appearing in this film are Norman Rose and Olga Doffner, male and female swimming champions of the United States; and Mrs. H. Arnold, who has won many national honors in golf, demonstrates her methods of putting, driving and approaching.

Frank Campeau, who enacted the wonderful characterization of "Trampas" in the original production of "The Virginian," will appear in the Selig feature picture "The Light of Western Stars."

Woman's National Screen Club

VIRGINIA PEARSON ADVOCATES PLAN—DIVERSE OTHER FOX STORIES

June Caprice, the radiant little Fox screen-beam.

THERE are four times more women than men in the motion picture studios, according to the estimate of Virginia Pearson, the Fox star, and therefore she believes that there should be some common bond of relationship between the women employed by the various companies. Her idea is to organize a number of local chapters over which a governing board should rule from some well-known motion picture center, as Los Angeles or Fort Lee. There should be a manager for the society who would not be an actress, but would devote all her time to the affairs of the club. After the plan was more or less definitely formulated in Miss Pearson's mind she wrote to several friends, also motion picture actresses, and asked their opinion of the scheme. They all agreed that the suggestion was excellent and decided unanimously to lend their hearty support.

Walter Law, the good-natured William Fox star, has mastered a new art. He learned it from "Uncle Joe" of Portland, Maine. This new talent is the hypnotizing of a lobster. In the film of his new picture Mr. Law will demonstrate for the benefit of an aspiring humanity just how one goes about making a lobster do exactly what one wishes when the crustacean is in a hypnotic trance. Several close-ups show the entire process of the metaphysical act.

Here's Something About Nell

Nell Shipman, who has recently enrolled under the William Fox standard and shares with Gladys Brockwell the feminine honors in William Farnum's final western photoplay, is the personification of ambition. Even while she was of kindergarten age she wanted, in rapid-fire order, to be a boy; to run her father's salmon cannery on the Columbia River; to live on a battleship; to be a bare-back rider in a circus; to go to Paris; and—yes, she admits it—to wear a pink satin gown and stand on a table while a dozen handsome men toasted her and sang.

After a brief appearance in musical comedy, Miss Shipman received an offer of a stock starship and she accepted. For several years she acted in Alaska, Seattle, Portland and Salt Lake City, and then shifted over to the vaudeville stage.

Asked to enumerate the sports of which she is fond, Miss Shipman wrote: Riding, swimming, diving, canoeing, sailing, motoring, hiking, hockey. She must have had writer's cramp, for she stopped there. But Miss Shipman always was ambitious.

The Capricious Wardrobe

Although on the screen June Caprice appears in rags, off the screen she has a most pretentious wardrobe. Especially attractive are a dainty pink tulle evening frock made in five large and wired ruffles, and an afternoon gown of Nile green georgette crepe made Quaker fashion, with tight bodice, rather long twelve-ruffled skirt and a large collar and cuffs of white georgette edged in green of a darker shade. The favorite house frock of Miss Caprice is a combination of old rose jersey silk and white georgette crepe with fine stripes of old rose silk running through it, made in sport style. For street wear she is partial to dark blue taffeta, crepe de chines of delicate shades and white sports clothes. Of the latter she has a large quantity, as the young star is fond of sailing, boating and tennis.

New Pearson Play

Work was begun a few days ago on Virginia Pearson's new photoplay for the William Fox films. Miss Pearson has not only the lead in the picture, but she has the only feminine role of any importance. Walter Law and Glen White are among those in the supporting cast.

Otis Turner, one of the directors on the Pacific Coast whom William Fox acquired recently, is now at work on his first production for the Fox films. It will be a photoplay of sterling dramatic quality, with George Walsh in the leading role.

By permission from Warden Osborne, several hundred feet of film were made at Sing Sing last week, for some scenes in a new William Fox photoplay starring Valeska Surratt, under Director Will S. Davis. The men in the institution watched the work interestedly, as many Fox pictures have been shown on the prison screen. They and Warden Osborne told the players how appreciative they were of the reels which Mr. Fox has donated in the past for the men's entertainment.

Fox's "Daredevil Kate," features Virginia Pearson, who is the lady wearing the coat of arms.

The new photoplay cast includes not only Miss Surratt, but Glen White, Herbert Heyes and Claire Whitney.

Director Richard Stanton, who made "The Beast" and was taken ill almost immediately after the completion of the picture, has entirely recovered and is now at work in the Edendale studio on a new story.

Bill Is on His Last

William Farnum has already begun work on his last western picture. The photoplay is being screened by Director Oscar C. Apfel, who has made most of the Farnum films for William Fox. The story, which is unusually good, is from the pen of Henry Christeen Warnack, a dramatic critic of Los Angeles.

Included in the supporting cast of Madame Kalich's new photoplay for William Fox are Stuart Holmes, Kenneth Hunter and Madeline Le Nard.

Griffith in New York

D. W. Griffith has arrived in New York from Los Angeles with the effects and improvements used in the premier production of his newest work, "Intolerance," presented for the first time at the Liberty Theater on September 5. "Intolerance" is the new spectacle which Griffith has been working on for nearly five years. His action is pictured in four periods of the world's history, Babylon, Jerusalem, Paris and a modern American city. The story is developed along parallel lines but is held together in dramatic sequence. An orchestra of forty pieces will play an accompanying score.

Florida Absorbs Field

The Field Feature Films with studios at Miami, Florida, has been absorbed by a new company and the name changed to Florida Feature Films. All of the property holdings and the three five-reel features already completed and ready for state rights distribution, have been transferred to the new company.

The change in name has been occasioned by the control of the company passing to Thomas J. Peters, a Florida capitalist.

The features already produced, "The Human Orchid," "The Toll of Justice" and "Fate's Chessboard," will be released via the state rights plan as originally intended.

The new company has established a New York sales office in the Candler Building annex, No. 218 West Forty-second street, in charge of M. M. Feely. Mr. Feely states that the Florida Feature Film Company does not claim that "The Human Orchid" is a great masterpiece but what they do claim for it is that it will make a great deal of money for the exhibitors and consequently make money for the state rights buyer. He claims that the worth of a feature is best judged by the magnetism it exerts on the box office and that this influence is greatest when the theme of the story appeals to largest number of the theater's patrons.

If Florida Feature Films keep up this quality they will set a new pace in character studies. The above is from "The Human Orchid."

SUCCESS TO FILM DECAMERON

Constance Collier to Head Notable Cast—Most of the Scenes Will Be Taken Abroad Under Direction of Ralph Ince

Constance Collier has been signed by the Success Films Corporation to take the leading role in their first production, which will be an adaptation of the Decameron of Boccaccio. The picturization has been made by Robert H. McLaughlin, author of "The Eternal Magdalene," in which Julia Arthur made such a success last winter. Mr. McLaughlin has taken the strongest elements from the Decameron and woven them into a story of ten episodes which he calls an oriental mosaic.

Those at the head of the Success Company realize that in this age of remarkable achievements on the screen something far beyond the ordinary must be offered by a new company if it would gain recognition, and neither pains nor expense will be spared in the filming of the Decameron.

John H. Ince, brother of Thomas Ince, has been given carte blanche in the direction of the picture. Practically the entire picture will be filmed abroad, locations along the Mediterranean coast of southern France, in Damascus and other Persian points and on the north coast of Africa have been selected as suitable for the filming of certain of the episodes.

A strong cast composed of actresses of international reputation is being formed and it is probable that the entire company accompanied by Mr. Ince and including at least one assistant director as well as cameraman, will sail for France within a very short time. For many of the scenes an army of supers will be required and in the episode which will cover the crusades it is probable that more people will be seen on the screen than in any other picture that has yet been made.

The final organization plans of the Success Films Corporation are being rushed through. All of the company's offices, except in New York, are now open and these will be within the next few days.

Fox Flimmers Scared

Glen White overhead this dialogue between two of William Fox's camera grinders, at the Fort Lee studio recently:

"Makin' it tougher for us bachelors every day, aren't they Bill?" queried the first.

"What d'ye mean?" asked camera man number two.

"Well, I was reading the other day that there's a lot of talk about how the idea of the single tax is spreading right along."

"The Social Buccaneer," is the title of a five-reel Universal being directed by Jack Conway, starring J. Warren Kerrigan.

Thanhouser Stars on Pathe Program

FLORENCE LA BADIE, GLADYS HULETTE AND VALKYRIEN HEAD LIST

When Pathe annexed Thanhouser some very important planetary territory went along with it. Miss Florence La Badie, for instance, one of those stars whose light is always trimmed.

THE agreement entered into by J. A. Berst, vice president and general manager of Pathe, and Edwin Thanhouser, president of the Thanhouser Film Corporation, whereby Thanhouser is to release two features a month through Pathe has brought two well known players to the Pathe program whose reputations have been made primarily as screen artists. First of these is Florence La Badie, associated with the Thanhouser studios for four years, who will appear in the first Thanhouser Gold Rooster play "The Fugitive." Gladys Hulette, although still a child, has been in motion pictures for nearly eight years. She stars in "The Shine Girl."

Another well known star who will be seen in a forthcoming Thanhouser Gold Rooster play is Valkyrien. "The Hidden Valley," in which she is featured, is not yet announced for release.

Pathe has secured the services of a well-known cameraman, Ralph Earle, to take a series of scenics in the natonial parks of the country. Among the parks visited will be the Yellowstone, Glacier, Mount Ranier, Crater and Lassen.

C. R. Seelye, Pathe's business manager, left New York last week to personally make arrangements to insure prompt service to exhibitors on the new serial "The Shielding Shadow," to be released October 1. Mr. Seelye believes that the vogue for the serial is stronger than it ever was and prophesies that every theater in the country will be running two serials a week in the very near future, just as they are running two or more features each week. Pathe has sent prints of the new serials to all its exhibitors to afford them an opportunity to see the quality of the subject and judge of its pulling power, and the volume of congratulations offered by hundreds of exhibitors proved their delight in "The Shielding Shadow."

Pathe is planning a big advertising and publicity campaign in connection with this serial, which will force the public into the theaters, and believes that these factors working to increase box office receipts make the increase in the rental price justifiable.

As an example of the manner in which the prominent manufacturers who contribute to the great success of the Florence Rose Fashion film, released by Pathe, are co-operating with the makers and distributors of the film, it is interesting to note that Halny, the famous Paris and New York hatter, has gotten out a beautiful piece of advertising matter, in which in a conspicuous place, on an important page, appears the following note: "Halny hats are shown in volume two of Florence Rose Fashions to be released August 21st, and volume three, released September 4th in Pathe pictures at leading theaters."

Florence La Badie has just finished "The Fear of Poverty," a Thanhouser feature to be released through Pathe. In this picture Miss La Badie plays two parts—a mother and her daughter. Nearly 1,200 feet of double exposure work was necessary before Director Frederic Sullivan finished the feature. Miss La Badie's characterization of the two entirely different types, is one of the finest things she ever did.

The story is by Agnes C. Johnston, author of a tale of a happy girl bootblack, "The Shine Girl," in which Gladys Hulette is being starred.

Kathryn Adams, Thanhouser leading woman, was born in St. Louis and educated in that city. She came to New York to take vocal training. Her first stage experience was in "Louisiana Lou," a musical comedy, in which she toured the south. Her first motion picture engagement was with Metro. She also was with Fox, World, Famous Players, Terris and Solax before she joined Thanhouser. She played the lead in the Thanhouser pictures "The Bird of Prey" and "The Phantom Witness."

Miss Adams has an important part in Pathe's "The Shine Girl."

Wayne Arey, leading man with the Thanhouser Film Corporation and appearing in Pathe Gold Rooster plays, made his first film appearance in a Thanhouser production. Before he went into films he had had wide experience on the speaking stage.

The thing of which William C. Parke, Thanhouser director, is perhaps most proud—next to his production of "The Shine Girl," a Thanhouser and Pathe feature in which Gladys Hulette is starred—is the stock company he managed at Pittsfield, Massachusetts.

The William Parke Stock Company was a new thing in theatricals. Mr. Parke was brought to Pittsfield by fifty citizens who wanted to give their city better theatrical productions. He recruited a company of finished players and directed and managed them. He put on good plays, splendidly produced, at a low price. Some of his seats sold for ten cents.

Two Thanhouser luminaries who are now gleaming from the Pathe screens. On the left, Valkyrien, the Danish beauty, and on the other hand, the captivating Gladys Hulette.

Pittsfield, however, did not rise to the occasion. The city was not large enough to support such a company and Mr. Parke left after a year of every sort of success except financial victory. Mr. Parke appeared in stock and later was stage manager and director on the legitimate. Just before joining the Thanhouser forces he rehearsed seven companies of "Potash and Perlmutter."

Pete Ragolli, a 74-year-old cobbler with a little shop in the basement of a Mulberry street tenement in New York, was pressed into service in "The Shine Girl," and he proved to be a true actor despite the fact that for fifty years he has been serving humanity along humble lines.

Paramount Exploits Short Features

LOU-TELLEGEN AND VALENTINE GRANT IN AUGUST RELEASES

HIRAM ABRAMS, president of Paramount Pictures Corporation, believes that short reel subjects of merit are quite as important factors in the building of a motion picture business of quality and permanency as any other feature that enters into the exhibiting of pictures. Surrounding the five-reel feature release with single reel features to make a well rounded program of inimitable quality has been the goal towards which Paramount has been striving, and with the experience during the past year with the Paramount Pictographs, a magazine-on-the-screen, the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures and the Paramount-Bray animated cartoons, Mr. Abrams realizes Paramount has founded its program idea on the right subjects.

Pictures of meritorious and wholesome quality rather than pictures that have length and sensationalism has been the standard Paramount has followed. Single reels of Paramount standard were not on the market and it was incumbent upon Paramount to get them there. The start was with travel pictures and a cameraman sent through South America secured the best pictures of that country that have ever been obtained.

Immediately after this Paramount began the distribution of the travel pictures of Burton Holmes; cartoons from the Bray studios were added to the list; and shortly afterwards began the production of the first magazine-on-the-screen called the Paramount Pictographs.

There should be no wonder in the minds of even the most skeptical that the single reel pictures used on the same program with a big feature, are as important a factor as any other part of the program. If any part is weak, the program is weak.

Another important feature relative to short reel subjects that the Paramount exhibitor has come to realize is that they offer many unique opportunities to advertise the theater and to extend his field of patronage. Motion picture audiences like variety. The exhibitor must give something to please all patrons. This is best accomplished by surrounding the big feature pictures with a variety of smaller subjects that tend to interest every class of patron. That is why Paramount's weekly releases consist of two features, a travel picture, a screen-magazine and an animated cartoon.

All the old folks will chuckle at the old time steeds shown in the Paramount Pictograph, "Bicycles We Have Met."

Paramounts for Last Week of August

Two particularly strong features head the Paramount Program for the week of August 29, in one of which Lou Tellegen makes his return to the screen in the Lasky production of "The Victory of Conscience," and the other in which Valentine Grant, the Famous Players star, will be seen in "Jean O' the Heather."

Short reel subjects for that week will include the twenty-ninth edition of the "magazine-on-the-screen," the Paramount Pictographs; the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel-Pictures, "Climbing the Austrian Alps" and the Paramount-Bray cartoon, "Farmer Al Falfa's Revenge."

The four leading themes included in the twenty-ninth edition of the Pictographs are "The Working of the George Jr. Republic," "How Did You Get That Hat?" "The Settlement and the Slums," and "The Peaceful Dove in War."

In the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel-Pictures, Mr. Holmes takes his "easy-chair-journeyers" on a trip up the Austrian Alps, starting at Salzberg, the birthplace of Mozart, the immortal musician. The party climbs sometimes by rail, and at other times roped to each other and the guides, through the clouds, finally arriving on the peak of Gross Glauchen, 12,460 feet above the sea.

The Paramount-Bray cartoon by Paul Terry, tells the story of "Farmer Al Falfa's Revenge."

Editors of the Paramount Pictographs have scoured the country for interesting subjects. One of their latest is picturing the Japanese method of preserving cut flowers and fruit. Mme. Hisa Nagayama, of Tokio, demonstrates the method used in Japan.

Midnight Matinees

A. H. Hilton, the Paramount exhibitor of Lewistown, Iowa, has inaugurated another new idea, a "midnight matinee." In writing of it he says: "If exhibitors haven't tried the 'midnight matinee' stunt already, they should get busy for it's a sure winner. I open it at midnight sharp, dress the ushers in pajamas, the orchestra burlesques the music, and we give everybody a rattle to keep time with. The police and fire departments were called on the job to handle the crowd; we turned away three times as many people as we played to, in fact they were willing to pay two bits for standing room."

Irvin Cobb Busts Into Films

"THE ADVENTURES OF BILL" AND OTHER VIVID VITAGRAPHS ON THE WAY

IRVIN COBB, the irrepressible ally of good humor, has finally "busted into the pictures" with his first photoplay, the same being an original drama in which the adventures of a piece of change are narrated.

The name of the picture is quite appropriately, "The Adventures of Bill," and whereas there is much to do in the story with actual money, there is nevertheless, a powerful and unusual story concerning the individuals through whom the bill has its adventures.

The photoplay is being produced by Vitagraph under the auspices of the American Bankers' Association, which is waging a nation-wide thrift campaign. In it there will be scenes taken in the United States treasury, which will be the first ever obtained for use in a film drama.

The direction of the play is in the hands of Wilfrid North; it was picturized by Garfield Thompson. Lillian Walker, the star, will have in her supporting cast, Tom Mills, Mrs. Mary Maurice, Walter McGrail and Edward Elkas.

Admirers of Marc MacDermott will be pleased to know that the Vitagraph has listed his latest effort, "The Footlights of Fate," from the novel "Joan Thursday," by Louis Joseph Vance, for Monday, August 21. Naomi Childers co-stars with MacDermott.

The story tells of a young girl, Joan Thursday, who goes on the stage to make a reputation. She meets Matthias, a playwright, whose latest manuscript is about to be produced. He falls in love with her and asks her to become his wife. Joan will not give up her idea of a stage career and is given a part in the play by Marbridge who secretly nurses an affection for Joan. Marbridge invites her to his apartment telling her she is to be one of a party. Upon arriving, she learns they are alone and realizes the real character of the man. Nella, Marbridge's former sweetheart, has followed the unsuspecting couple to the apartment. She enters and in a fit of rage shoots Marbridge and bids Joan to return to Matthias, who is waiting for her.

MacDermott and Naomi Childers are given support by a cast that includes Carolyn Birch, Robert Whitworth, Josephine Earle, Jack Bulger and William Shea. William Humphrey is responsible for the direction of the picture, which is in five parts.

Exhibitor's Romantic Wish

Out of the mail of Earle Williams, who has been working steadily since February on a big serial, "Scarlet Runner," came one letter that is a gem. It is from an exhibitor and has behind it perhaps a commercial motive as well as personal enthusiasm. At any rate it speaks to Mr. Williams earnestly of the fame of the pictures in which he and Anita Stewart appeared as co-stars and reminiscences of the box office attractions these were: "Oh," goes on the exhibitor, "oh that you two would play together again sometime in the same release. Listen, Mr. Williams, there's a check here for $50 for you whenever Miss Stewart becomes Mrs. Williams."

Lillian Walker, whose dimples are continual wells of joy, will be featured in the new Vitagraph-Irvin Cobb story, "The Adventures of Bill."

William Wolbert has just started a five-reel picture of another of James Oliver Curwood's inimitable stories. This one calls for military settings in Arizona and the Philippines and Mr. Wolbert is sparing no pains in getting the necessary details. With the All-Star-Vitagraph cast which he has at his command, it bids fair to be the coup de maitre in his career as director.

Corinne Griffith, who has played lead in so many recent Vitagraph pictures, has been prevailed upon to break in on her honeymoon to take an important part in Mr. Wolbert's new feature and gives the finishing touch to the following cast:

Mary Anderson, William Duncan, Otto Lederer, Corinne Griffith, Jack Mower and George Kunkel.

Alice Joyce Near Danger

A few days ago, Director William P. S. Earle and his company of players in "The Battle Cry of War," were filming some scenes on a country road not far from the studios of the company.

In the picture Alice Joyce, who plays the leading feminine role, is supposed to race along a road in front of the cavalry in a small runabout.

When the signal was given, Miss Joyce released the clutch and away went the machine over the muddy country road which the rain of the night before had left a little slippery.

Coming to a quick and unexpected rut, Miss Joyce, in her desire to save the machine from a jolt which would appear rather unusual in the picture, turned the car's direction quickly with the result that it skidded toward the rugged incline at the side of the road.

The director and cameraman who followed in another machine held their breath, for an accident seemed inevitable. Miss Joyce's presence of mind, however, saved the day.

NEW PICTURE PATRONS

Nazimova, Eminent Actress, Will Interest New Stratum of Society in Powerful Herbert Brenon Production, "War Brides"

By Randolph Bartlett

Not the least important feature concerning the advent of Nazimova on the moving picture screen is the fact that she will bring into theaters a class of patrons who have never been interested in photo dramas. Nazimova's career, previous to her engagement by Herbert Brenon for a photo-dramatization of Marion Craig Wentworth's play, "War Brides," was confined exclusively to the highest forms of modern literary drama. She it was who proved that the great dramatist Ibsen could be made popular. She is the only actress who has presented full length plays by the great Austrian dramatist, Arthur Schnitzler. Her appeal has always been to people of the highest intelligence. When she played "War Brides" in the vaudeville houses of this country she attracted people who seldom, if ever, attended variety shows. Now she will round out her complete appeal to every branch of theater-goers by proving that the same fine methods which she used in the spoken drama can be effectively employed upon the screen.

To bridge the gap between the highly intellectual and the merely superficial spectator of plays, and produce entertainment which will appeal to all equally, is a task calling for the highest genius. In "A Daughter of the Gods," the great Annette Kellermann spectacle which Mr. Brenon created in Jamaica, this progressive director accomplished this feat, a statement which soon will be proved when the million dollar film is released. In Nazimova he declares that he has found an artist who is perfectly adapted to the screen, and expects to carry on this work still farther. Through his efforts the so-called "highbrows" and "lowbrows" among audiences will soon find that they have a great deal in common.

When "War Brides" is released early in October through Lewis J. Selznick, it is predicted by those who are in touch with Mr. Brenon's plans that the devotees of moving pictures, as well as those of the sister art of the stage, will witness a revelation of what has been accomplished in this youngest of the arts.

FREE AUTO DEAL COMPLETE

Overland Company and Consolidated Film Company Co-operate in Big Publicity and Advertising Campaign for "The Crimson Stain Mystery"

S. G. Sladdin, director of publicity for the Consolidated Film Corporation, made a record in rapid-fire business when on a flying trip from New York to Toledo, in which city he spent just seven hours, he put over a big publicity deal with the Willys-Overland Automobile Company.

Through this arrangement the Consolidated Company has purchased thirteen Overland sixes, 1917 five-passenger model, which it will give away in connection with the presentation of the sixteen episode serial, "The Crimson Stain Mystery," which the Erbograph Company is now producing.

Under the reciprocal plan arranged the Overland Company will start a great system working among more than five thousand dealers throughout the country, each of whom will co-operate with the exhibitor in his particular town who books "The Crimson Stain Mystery." In addition to this the publicity facilities in force at the Overland plant will carry thousands of stories, photographs, cuts and mats advertising the serial, all of which will be co-operative with the publicity campaign being conducted by the Consolidated Company.

The first installment of the serial will be released on August 28.

Advertising Doctor for Theaters

C. J. Verhalen, widely known in motion picture and theatrical circles, has been engaged to take charge of the exploitation department of Paramount Pictures at the Minneapolis exchange of the corporation.

C. J. Verhalen.

Paramount management has come to the conclusion that general publicity matter sent broad-cast throughout the country to motion picture theaters does not bring the desired returns. It now is the plan of Paramount to localize this publicity matter, and attempt to place that publicity matter in daily newspapers at the time when it will do the exhibitor the most good.

Mr. Verhalen's duty in Minneapolis will be to give a local touch to all of Paramount's publicity, and to see that it reaches the newspaper offices at a time when it will be live news. He also will act as a service man, and will be at the disposal of theater managers at all times. If a house manager fails to make money on a Paramount release, Mr. Verhalen will attempt to diagnose the situation, and will do everything in his power to point out the weak spots in the theater's advertising campaign.

Mr. Verhalen started his activities last week. His headquarters are with the Famous Players Company, Star Feature Film Company, in the Produce Exchange Building, Minneapolis.

Frohman to Visualize Novel

The choice by President William L. Sherrill, of Booth Tarkington's novel, "The Conquest of Canaan," for the next feature release of the Frohman Amusement Corporation has given unusual opportunities to Director George Irving because of the dramatic vividness with which the book is written.

In the two leading parts, Edith Taliaferro and Jack Sherrill will portray characters that Mr. Tarkington has made noble as they are original. In reading the book, which has exceeded a million copies, one of even small imagination is given the thrill of intimacy with real people living in a real town.

The characters so true to life and a story so varied and clean will have every advantage of making an exceptionally beautiful photoplay, with the splendid cast that has been selected and the technical ability of George Irving and Ralph Dean.

The Kimberley Feature Film Company has begun work in Cleveland.

International Shows Paralysis Film

FIRST THREE EPISODES OF "BEATRICE FAIRFAX" COMPLETED

THE Hearst International News Pictorial released through the International Film Service will give to the public the first pictures of what is being done for the tiny victims of the infantile paralysis plague. Pictures were taken in the baby wards of the Lincoln Hospital and Home, where the afflicted babies are being treated and where everything known to the medical world is being done for the helpless little sufferers. Pictures of the critical, convalescent and receiving wards and "close-ups" of the massage treatment, the hoops used to raise the sheets from the sensitive paralyzed legs of the victims, and other contrivances for the comfort of the little ones will be shown.

J. K. Burger, assistant general manager of the International, has been presented with a magnificent loving cup by the ten branch managers of the International exchanges. The presentation marked no particular occasion but the branch managers just decided that it would be the best way in which they could show their appreciation of Mr. Burger.

Grace Darling, who has been chosen by Beatrice Fairfax to impersonate her in the International serial entitled "Beatrice Fairfax," says that ever since she was a little girl she has had a passionate longing to be a great newspaper woman and to write. She wrote poetry, prose, romance and news and flooded the newspaper offices with these effusions which were always returned to her. Finally one article was accepted, then another and later she secured a small position on a newspaper. Then she turned to motion pictures but did not give up her newspaper work entirely as several times since she has had large assignments for big newspapers. Consequently when she was selected to impersonate Beatrice Fairfax she was highly delighted for here was an opportunity to be a newspaper woman and an actress at the same time.

Speaking of her work in the serial Miss Darling says: "The making of the films of 'Beatrice Fairfax' has been one of the most delightful experiences of my life, and it will be a sad day for me, when I lay aside the role of the real Beatrice and become just a moving picture actress."

"Beatrice Fairfax" Appears August 28

The first episode of "Beatrice Fairfax,," entitled "The Missing Watchman," will be released on August 28. Then will follow "The Adventure of the Jealous Wife," "Billie's Romance," and many others.

Harry Fox, who shares the stellar honors with Miss Darling in the new serial, has decided to go in for the real things in adventure and has joined a class of seventeen students who are studying aviation under the tutelage of Burnside, the famous flier. Mr. Fox has been riding to and from the studio in Mr. Burnside's craft and is very enthusiastic over the sport.

The motion picture camera has been known to do some remarkable stunts, but it remained for Theodore Wharton, of Wharton, Inc., who are producing "Beatrice Fairfax," to make the lens do the apparently impossible.

In the first episode are two characters bearing a striking resemblance to each other. One is George McCabe, an honest bank watchman. The other is San De Farge, a notorious bank robber. Both parts are played by the same actor, George Connors.

In one of the scenes, McCabe is lured into the robber's den and beaten into insensibility. His prostrate form is placed on a couch. On the opposite side of the room is De Farge. One of the robbers crosses the room and takes De Farge by the arm, for the purpose of accentuating the resemblance between the two men.

A double exposure could easily produce the effect of one man assuming both characters and being in the same scene at the same time. But the remarkable trick that Mr. Wharton performed was to have one of the men cross the room in the scene and touch both Sam De Farge and George McCabe. It is the first time that such a thing has ever been accomplished.

City Buys Film

Another triumph has been scored by the motion picture camera. It will play a most important part in solving the San Francisco bomb outrage, perpetrated during the preparedness parade.

The bomb bureau of the San Francisco police department last week wired the International Film Service, Inc., for the original negative made by their cameramen during the parade.

The International had a battery of cameras stationed at the corner of Stewart and Market Streets, the scene of the outrage. Just before the bomb went off, one of the cameramen turned the lens of his camera on the crowd just around the corner on Stewart Street and secured some excellent "close ups." Among those who were suddenly and unexpectedly photographed were several persons suspected of having played an important part in the outrage.

When the picture of the parade was shown in San Francisco that portion of it was not used, but the cameraman called the attention of the police to the fact that he had taken it.

A telegram was sent to New York and the International Film Service, Inc., immediately sent the original negative to the San Francisco police who hope by it to be able to positively identify certain suspects.

"Under Cover," one of Famous Players' recent successes.

Robert Grau Dead

Robert Grau, prominent in theatrical and motion picture circles, died on August 9 at his home in Mount Vernon, New York, at the age of 58 years. Death was due to heart disease.

Mr. Grau was one of the few old-time theatrical men who took an active interest in motion pictures. He contributed several books and many magazine articles on the films. At the time of his death he was at work on the second edition of "The Theater of Science." He frequently acted in an advisory capacity to many of the most prominent producers. "Civilization" was one of the film spectacles he took an active part in promoting. A man of broad interests and striking personality, his influence made itself felt in every branch of theatrical endeavor.

Included in Mr. Grau's works were "Forty Years' Observation of Music and Drama," "The Business Man in the Amusement World" and "The Lure of the Silent Drama." The last named volume was written only two years ago, and then only after Grau's friends had repeatedly urged him to contribute his views on the motion picture question.

In his "The Business Man in the Amusement World" Grau unfolded a series of anecdotes that proved a book of revelation to the Rialto. In this work he said, in part:

"Time certainly works remarkable changes in the show world. I recall going into Colonel Austin's Nickolodeon, in Boston—the original five-cent theater—one day not so many years ago. Al Haynes was the manager, William L. Dockstader put on the afterpieces, and up one flight, whom do you suppose I found running the glassblower's stand? None other than Max Anderson, later a partner in the Hippodrome and millionaire theatrical magnate of the west.

"Up on the next floor, in the fortune teller's booth, was M. R. Sheedy, now a wealthy manager of a chain of eastern vaudeville theaters, while on the top floor, in jacket and apron, making wax figures, was S. Z. Poll, who owns outright a dozen amusement places in the larger eastern cities. About the same time Messrs. Keith and Albee were in the circus field."

Mr. Grau is survived by his widow and two daughters.

New Famous Man in Chicago

The Famous Players office in Chicago has a new publicity manager. He is H. R. Paxton, who formerly held the lively position of advertising manager for the International Harvester Company. Mr. Paxton stated to Motography that he will throw all his energies into carrying out the intensive new policy inaugurated by Paramount to co-operate closely with the exhibitor in his advertising and in making every film pay out.

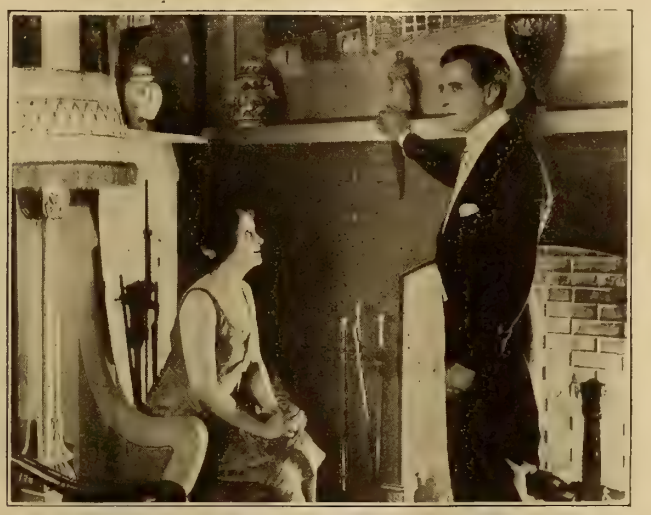
An American consular office in East Africa reports that a firm in its district wishes to receive catalogues and prices on moving-picture machines with films, says Commerce Reports. The cheaper grades of machines are desired.

Clara Kimball Young—Business Woman

WHATEVER it is, "artistic temperament" is universally conceded to be utterly opposed to that exercise of calm judgment and foresight which makes for matter-of-fact business success. "I'm an artist and know nothing of sordid business affairs," is the usual formula in which one of these heaven-born souls excuses himself for having neglected to pay his tailor's bill.

There is a fallacy lurking around the corner of this idea and Clara Kimball Young, the widely known film star, is proof of it. If there was ever a combination of "temperament" and business ability running hand and hand in one human being—she's it. It isn't necessary here to prove the temperamental part of this assertion. Miss Young's many brilliant artistic achievements on the screen are evidence enough of her possession of all the artistic gifts. An hour's visit to the studio where she is producing the first picture of her own film corporation, an adaptation of Robert W. Chambers' popular novel, "The Common Law," would convince the most skeptical.

It is the other side of her character that is so unfamiliar to her millions of screen followers and so unusual in any of her fellow artists. To persons who have seen her running the gamut of emotional expression in such of her great performances as "Trilby" and "Camille," the transition to the brisk, cool-headed Clara Kimball Young, business woman, would appear miraculous.



Three guesses: Who is this Selznick star?

The respect in which all the officers of the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation hold the star's business judgment is a splendid tribute to her sagacity. Mr. Selznick was the first to recognize in Miss Young an unusual faculty for business affairs. He was then vice-president and general manager of the World Film Corporation, a creation of his own, and Miss Young was the greatest individual attraction on that company's program. It was Miss Young who first proposed to Mr. Selznick the organization of a producing company in her name and the advantages to be derived from exploiting her pictures on the open-booking plan.

Mr. Selznick was quick to grasp the idea and to see its benefits, not only for the company but for the theater men throughout the country. Impressed with Miss Young's keen grasp of business detail he not only made her the star of her own producing corporation but vice-president and partner.

In the suite of executive offices occupying the entire floor of the new sky-scraper on Seventh avenue at Forty-ninth Street, New York City, the visitor may see in gold letters on the door of the office next to that of the president the words: "Miss Young, vice-president," and almost any afternon when there is a let-up in the work at the studio the lovely star may be found at her desk, dictating letters, interviewing prospective candidates for positions in the company, or at the directors' table giving clear-headed opinions as to the conduct of the corporation's affairs.

Exhibitor Forms Distributing Concern

Arrangements have been concluded between the Ivan Film Productions and John Pekras, president of the Ohio Feature Film Company, whereby the latter will become exclusive distributors of all Ivan productions in the states of Ohio and Kentucky.

The Ohio Feature Film Company was organized by John Pekras, the largest theater owner in Columbus, in which city he operates the Dreamland, Hippodrome, Rex and Broad Street Theaters. Elyria, Ohio, is another city in which Mr. Pekras controls several motion picture theaters, the most notable being the American.

Offices of this company have been opened in the Belmont Building in Cleveland and in Cincinnati. Other offices will be opened immediately in Louisville, Ky.

The first Ivan subject to be released by the Ohio Feature Film Company will be "The Faded Flower," the all-star cast Ivan. This will be followed by "Her Husband's Wife," after which "The City of Illusion" and "The Immortal Flame" will be released.

Actors Injured in "Stampede"

On motion picture actors' day at the "Stampede" held last week at Sheepshead Bay, New York, two actors were seriously injured in the riding contests.

Art Acord, of the American company, famous as the original "Buck Parvin," sustained a broken nose when he was thrown from a wild horse. He may also be injured internally. He had just won the all-around championship for motion picture actors for the best percentage of horsemanship and cowboyship.

George Rose, an actor with the Peerless company, was thrown and suffered a fractured skull, a broken nose, and possibly concussion of the brain.

SWIMMING A BEAUTIFIER

Annette Kellermann, Star of Fox's Production, "A Daughter of the Gods," Tells How to Utilize Swimming as a Cosmetic

By Annette Kellermann

I want to tell women how they can utilize swimming as a cosmetic, as a course in body-building, a sport and a general beautifier.

The greatest benefit to be derived from swimming is fresh air. Swimming takes you into the air and gives you something to do—something that occupies your mind sufficiently to make you forget that you are trying to benefit yourself. Fresh air, full play for the muscles and an enjoyment of necessary exercise all go toward the establishment of health. Therefore, we have the foundation in swimming.

To swim successfully one must obtain control of the muscles. Control gives poise. And poise is the nucleus of all beauty. Why? Because it establishes dignity. A faithful satellite of poise is confidence. While confidence is not a necessary asset to beauty it is a decided addition to character and an invaluable aid towards success.

Sallow skin is the penalty of possessing a sluggish liver. Swimming arouses the laziest liver from torpidness. Swimming stimulates the kidneys to strenuous action and helps carry away noxious impurities.

Constipation, the universal foe to health and beauty and the cause of unsightly pimples and ugly blotches, is gradually eradicated by the continued exercising of the muscles of the abdomen that are most used in swimming.

Swimming is the only exercise that develops and beautifies a woman's arms without producing knobby muscles and an inclination to masculineness. On the contrary, it results in a rounded, tapering effect.

In developing the arch of the chest it fills in hollow necks and reduces and makes firm flabby breasts. By the continued pull on the muscles around the waistline it removes the ugly rolls of flesh and puts in their place a smooth, firm foundation. That allows at least one size smaller corset to be worn.

If you are really in earnest and have ambitions for any of these things—swim and be beautiful.

apparently of gold. But when they visited the place they found that it was merely the sunshine and that their own hut had golden windows when viewed from the hilltop.

In this play a poor rancher's wife envies the people who live in the mansion and is influenced by her envy to use dishonest means to obtain the spacious house, and then comes her disillusionment. The dishonest means of securing the wealth and beautiful home and the unhappiness which comes with it all happens in a dream, and in truth it is much like a dream, being just about as inconsistent as anything could be. The spectator is uncertain as to whether it is a dream or not until the scene fades back to the point where the discontented wife contemplates the possibilities now put into her hands. The utter improbability of all the developments is the only suggestion that a dream is being depicted.

"The House of the Golden Windows" is one of the finest offerings from a standpoint of production that has ever come from the Lasky studios where the standard, as is well known, is of the highest. The magnificence of the production makes this picture one deserving of more than passing notice. The acting is splendid; in fact, everything about "The House of the Golden Windows" is excellent but the play, which is not even good.

In addition to the charm of many of the exterior scenes a real thrill is furnished by views of an oil gusher. This scene is well handled and when the explosion occurs and is followed by the gush of gallons of the oil the realism and thrill of it has a remarkable effect upon the spectator. George Melford directed the production.

Wallace Reid and Cleo Ridgely are featured and both contribute much to the picture's ability to sustain interest. Billy Jacobs, the clever child actor, is much in evidence. James Neill and Mabel Van Buren are other commendable players in the cast.

"The Far Journey"

Two-Reel Selig Drama Released August 21. Reviewed By Genevieve Harris

A NUMBER of incidents of unhackneyed type, settings out of the ordinary, an appealing human interest plot and very good photography, make this offering entertaining, in spite of the rather confused fashion in which the story has been assembled. The plot too, although containing several improbabilities, gets away from the usual type of screen story.

Harry Mestayer as David Bucklin, a young man who refuses his father's fortune and sets out to win his own way, catches the interest and sympathy at the beginning of the story. His talent for music leads him to fraternize with a company of vaudeville performers. Among them is a child actress, and when her parents are killed in an accident during their acrobatic act, David adopts the child.

David supports himself and the girl by his violin playing. The child proves to be talented, and David educates her as a singer. She becomes successful and for a time is out of touch with her guardian, whose fortunes go from bad to worse. When his ward at last announces her intention of visiting him, David gives his violin to a wealthy connoisseur for the right to live at the latter's beautiful home while the girl visits him.

Later the singer learns of the deception and that her benefactor is really poverty-stricken and she comes back to him and proves to him her real love. In the meantime, David's father has died and left him the fortune, which he at last is persudaed to accept.

There are a number of vision scenes used in the play and while these are cleverly handled technically, in at least one part of the play they confuse the story. The borrowing of the beautiful home is not clearly explained, and this episode is further complicated by flash-back and vision scenes.

The action of the play is swift and the interest is not allowed to wane at any point.

Frank Beal is the director. The supporting cast of players includes Lillian Wade as the child actress, played by Marion Warner when grown up, and William Sheerer as David's father.

Three-Reel "Flying A" Drama Released August 17. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

ROMANCE and mystery lend their charm to this delightful little play. The settings, representing an English estate, are very pretty and well photographed. Alfred Vosburgh and Vivian Rich are the leading players. There are a number of interesting character roles in the picture, especially those representing the village types who congregate at the old inn.

Alfred Vosburgh is Rolin Henderson, a writer who comes to the village in search of material for a novel. Attracted by the "Holly House," a deserted old mansion, he bribes the caretaker to allow him to use its library as his work room. From the men at the inn, he hears the story of the house, how the owner, Lord Sylvester, after a quarrel with his wife during which he drove her from the house, had gone abroad and had never returned. A daughter had been born to the wife, the villagers tell the author, but Lord and Lady Sylvester had never been reconciled.

Rolin uses this story as the theme for his novel, but before he has finished it, he is surprised by the return of the Lady Sylvester and a young woman he takes to be the daughter. Lady Sylvester suffers a paralytic stroke and Rolin becomes an aid and companion of the girl, and soon falls in love with her. Although she is fond of the writer, she refuses to give her promise to marry him.

Then another complication arises when Lord Sylvester also returns. He has never known of the birth of the daughter and when the villagers tell him that Lady Sylvester and the girl are at the Holly House, he is much moved. Lady Sylvester dies before Lord Sylvester reaches the house, and he goes to the girl, believing her his daughter. He is very angry when he learns that the daughter had died and that the girl with Lady Sylvester was only her companion. He drives her from the house, and she goes to the cottage of the gardener. In the morning, Rolin learns the story, but the fact that she is not the heiress makes no difference to him. Then, when he knows her secret, she promises to marry him.

Edward Sloman directed the picture. The cast of players includes Harry McCabe as Lord Sylvester, Gordona Bennett, Hugh Bennett, William Spencer, Madeline Gebhart and Clarence Burton.

"The Alibi"

Interesting Blue Ribbon Feature Released by V.L.S.E. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

ONCE more the voice of conscience comes to the rescue of the falsely accused hero, and "The Alibi," which tells of a young man unjustly convicted of murder in the second degree, ends happily. In striving to create damaging evidence against the innocent bank clerk the writer of this play used more deliberateness than skill, and in his anxiety concerning this point overdid the thing.

"The Alibi" spends much of the time given its treatment in details of the murderer's plans to throw suspicion on the bank clerk, and the only reason all this is not tedious, and we are of the opinion that it is not, lies in the skill of Paul Scardon both as actor and director. Mr. Scardon plays the heavy role excellently and the crooked and terribly base Slayton is interesting whereas he ought to be a nuisance.

The play turns on the villainous scheme of the bank cashier to lay the blame for his crime on a young man who in a moment of distress made a false entry in the books of the bank but realizes his mistake in time to avoid actually taking the money his dying father needs so badly. The plot is so deliberate that it would seem by the evidence to be obviously a "plant" to a good detective. Of course, we are not sure that the detective would come to this conclusion, not being a solver of puzzles ourself, but that is the way it seems. But concessions are being made by audiences continually and there is little doubt that they will do so in this case, which most probable event will make "The Alibi" an interesting and thoroughly satisfactory picture to the average picturegoer.

The falsely accused man is in love with the daughter of the bank president. The girl remains loyal throughout and her confidence is rewarded when Mansfield is cleared by a confession written by the murderer to his wife just before taking his own life. Arthur has escaped from jail and circumstances again go against him, as it is generally believed that he murdered Slayton until the papers are found.

James Morrison gives a very human characterization as Arthur Mansfield, and Betty Howe as his sweetheart has nothing to do but be ornamental and she does that wonderfully well. Edward Elkas scowls too much as Jarboe. Jarboe is bad enough; it is not necessary to make him look like a demon just escaped from the inferno. "The Alibi" is a remarkably well produced picture, the acting is good and the play has the ability to hold the spectator's attention all the time.

the leading characters. During the early part of the story at least each installment left the actors in some perilous predicament from which the next chapter released them, only to plunge them into another even more desperate.

The timeliness of the invention aroused much interest in the opening chapters of the story. The serial then progressed with a certain number of hazardous stunts in each episode. A number of unexpected twists were given the plot in the closing numbers. Although these were without logic or real dramatic value, they serve their purpose of keeping alive the curiosity of the class of audience for which the story has been planned. The characters in the play have been in keeping with the story, being broadly but effectively drawn.

The last installment shows the code explaining the secret found and put to use. Dr. Burke's invention is perfected, and the United States, by obtaining it, is put into a position to whip the world in naval warfare. Cleo, the heroine, appears to have been drowned, but this is a false alarm, for she is rescued by life savers and recovers in time to claim the fortune offered by the goverment and to be married by Lieutenant Hope.

The villains are disposed of in one way or another, and through them their governments defeated. Russia lost out in the preceding chapter when Olga, the adventuress, was slain by her accomplice, Morton. Hope pushes Satsuma, the Jap, out of a fourth story window when the latter shows his treachery at the rendezvous after Cleo has been kidnaped. The terrible secret society gets Mahlin, its agent stabbing him when he fails at the appointed time to bring back the secret. "Hook" is true to his mission to the last, when he brings Cleo back to Hope, who had found the book, learned the secret, and set the invention to working properly. The last flash of the picture shows the Amercian flag waving triumphantly.

"My Country 'Tis of Thee"

Two-Reel Essanay Drama Released August 25. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE timeliness of this play with the patriotic title is its chief point of merit. It deals with the problem which confronts a man who wishes to go with the army into Mexico but whose wife refuses her permission. Richard C. Travers has the role of the adventurous husband, Captain Stone, and Lillian Drew is cast as his selfish, frivolous wife. For Mrs. Stone's reasons for keeping her husband at home are selfish ones.

From this situation, an interesting though conventional drama is evolved in which there is a villain, played by Sidney Ainsworth in his usual suave manner, a scandal which nearly terminates in a tragedy, a melodramatic subplot not very well worked out and dealing with a man from Mexico, and an ending in which the wife is converted to patriotism expressed by promising to be good while her husband is in Mexico.

When Stone's wife quarrels with her husband over his plan to accept a captaincy in the national guard which will take him to Mexico, the villain, Leander Wilcox, sees a chance to win Mrs. Stone. Stone joins the colors in spite of his wife's pleading, and Wilcox pretends to sympathize with Mrs. Stone because of her husband's harshness. Angry because of Stone's action, Mrs. Stone does not hesitate to flirt with Wilcox. Reports of her conduct reach Stone at camp and he returns home to punish Wilcox. But he finds that his wife has grown disgusted with Wilcox, who is also a traitor or something. So the two are reconciled and Stone goes back to fight for his country, with his wife's permission.

"The Rail Rider"

House Peters in World Film Release Directed by Tourneur. Reviewed By Thomas C. Kennedy

IN "The Rail Rider" the spectator follows the events which mark the turning-point in the life of a railroad engineer on whom Fortune smiled, and smiled broadly. According to the words from some sage lips opportunity waits for no man, but for all of that it is no uncommon thing to hear recited a case from which the conclusion is drawn that Dame Fortune plays favorites occasionally. A case in point is that of Jim Lewis, driver of number seven, whose dismissal by the manager of the road is the beginning of a series of circumstances which make the climb to wealth and a happy marriage a none too arduous trip.

This World Film release was produced by Maurice Tourneur from a story by Edgar Franklin. In the light of the leading actor's work and that of the director the play assumes no very prominent position in the eyes of one who would parcel out credit where credit is due for the measure of success this picture achieves. "The Rail Rider" is interesting light comedy with some melodrama mixed in. The mixture is pleasant as visualized by Mr. Tourneur and enacted by House Peters.

The first reel presents some of the picture's most interesting scenes. Occupied entirely with railroad scenes, the opening reel affords the spectator keen enjoyment with its intimate views of a locomotive cabin and flashes of the train at certain points along the line. The trip taken with Jim Lewis, who is driving the train, is realistic and it becomes eventful when a wash-out of the tracks is encountered.

Lewis is not to be daunted by spread rails and without asking for orders he commences the business of repairing the damage wrought by the elements. Immediately after arriving at his destination with a train full of passengers who are all praise for him, Lewis receives notice of his suspension without pay and it is signed "B" as are all like communications. The boys believe this "B" to be Barker, president of the road.

They appoint Lewis a committee of one to visit Barker and demand fair treatment in the name of the employees. Lewis is surprised to find Barker not the tyrant he expected but a sympathetic, cultured and home-loving man. The next day Lewis gets his opportunity. The "B" in the case is one Brown, who has skipped with a fortune in securities. Lewis sets out after Brown and just forty-eight hours later he returns with the securities. Consequently he is appointed assistant to the president of the road and marries the official's charming daughter.

The humor in every situation was appreciated and accorded effective treatment by Mr. Tourneur, who also deserves praise for the quality of the settings and lights in the night scenes. House Peters is real in a none too convincing part. He is well supported by Zena Keefe, an appealing Mildred Barker; Harry West; A. Harrington, and Bertram Marburgh. "The Rail Rider" affords pleasant entertainment.

"Hell to Pay Austin"

An Exceedingly Good Triangle-Fine Arts Comedy. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

DIRECTOR PAUL POWELL, Bessie Love and Wilfred Lucas commend themselves to the gratitude of all lovers of pleasant entertainment via the motion picture, for it is the combined efforts and fine artistry of these three which made "Hell to Pay Austin" such a delightful offering. Mary H. O'Connor supplied a scenario containing good, and in spots splendid, working material, but the play must take second honors to the work of the director and the featured players.

"Hell to Pay Austin" is the tale of a girl reared in a lumber camp and a man whose ability to lead men is as pronounced as is the true nobility of his character. Austin, foreman of the camp, adopts the daughter of the minister whose death came as a shock to the boys. Nettles at one time hated Austin, whom she considered a bully, but his kindness in her moment of sorrow quite changes her opinion of "Hell to Pay."

He arranges the funeral and eulogizes her father at the ceremony. When attention is finally attracted to Nettles, who has been quite forgotten in all the preparations for the "swellest burial the camp has ever seen," Austin is first to carry her into the only meeting place—the saloon. And she decides for the boys the question as to who her foster father shall be.

The time comes when Nettles wishes to receive an education, and Austin, though reluctant, agrees with the rest of the boys. The question arises as to the school, and it is decided to let the cards settle it. They all sit down to a game of stud-poker, which, with the aid of some very clever inserts, proves to be a most diverting scene. Before the end, which finds "Hell to Pay" and Nettles engaged, the girl is threatened with destruction by a dissolute woman and rescued by Austin at a risk of his own liberty.

Bessie Love's performance is of such a standard as would establish her as a star had she never been seen before on the screen or stage. She has done fine things in the pictures, but she here surpasses all former attempts. Mr. Lucas gives his part everything necessary to insure the sympathy of every audience. His comedy is excellent and the dramatic possibilities of every scene are realized through his ability.

There is no such thing as a miss-fire in the entire picture. No effect attempted falls short of the mark, be that mark humor or pathos. "Hell to Pay Austin" will be considered a real treat by all those fortunate enough to see it. It is one of those rare productions which make you feel that you would like to see it again.

Ralph Lewis is particularly good as the minister, and Mary Alden gives a commendable performance as Doris Valentine, the adventuress. Eugene Pallette, James O'Shea, Marie Wilkinson, A. Sears, William H. Brown and Tom Wilson complete the cast. The subtitles are praiseworthy, the staging artistic in all details and the photography all that it should be. "Hell to Pay Austin" puts one in a happy frame of mind; it is a mighty good picture.

"The Patriot"

Triangle Release From Ince Studio. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

WILLIAM S. HART and the stars and stripes are the mainstays of "The Patroit," a melodrama by Monte M. Katterjohn, produced under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince. The vastly popular interpreter of western characters and the flag divide close-up honors, with the decision favoring the flag. We counted eight close-ups of the National Standard and some few less for Mr. Hart.

"The Patriot" will of course please the many ardent admirers of Mr. Hart and the patriotic spirit of the piece will appeal to the entire audience. It takes no second sight to picture the response in hand-clapping after the fading scene, a vision of the flag with Mr. Hart in double exposure in its center, from an audience which has been standing while the piano or orchestra played "The Star Spangled Banner." George M. Cohen has not lived in vain.

Leaving aside the leading actor and the Hip-Hip-Hurrah elements, one finds "The Patriot" a picture presenting some finely produced scenes of the mountains and an army camp, in addition to some stirring moments such as when the erstwhile informer to the Mexican bandit risks his life to stave off an attack upon a colony of women and children. The play itself is of no particular merit. It is a vehicle for Mr. Hart and like most vehicles it leaves much to be desired. If you are enthusiastic about the actor, "The Patriot" is a good picture and if you are not it is only agreeable entertainment, and this mostly because of an effective production and high-class photography.

"The Patriot" tells of a widower who works a mine in New Mexico. He has a little son and to insure the boy against the hardships he has endured Wiley is determined to "pan every grain of gold out of the mountain." A crooked land agent accepts a bribe from a banker and makes representations to Washington which rob Wiley of his claim on a technicality.

While away fighting this condition, his son is left in charge of an old Indian and Wiley returns to find his boy dead. He is now bitter against the country he had so idolized. A year later he joins a Mexican outlaw in a scheme to raid a border town. After arranging it all, circumstances, in which a little boy who reminds him of his dead son figures, lead to Wiley's conversion and how he fights to save the town from the marauders takes up the rest of the film.

The panoramic view of the military camp at night, with the tents which glow white fading at intervals as the lights are extinguished, is a very effective bit of motion picture "stage-craft." Georgie Stone appears as the boy and adds much to the human element. Joe Good-Boy is a real Indian, Roy Laidlaw a vicious greaser, and Milton Ross and P. D. Tabler are villains who look as though they were born and raised in a motion picture studio.

the filming. Stars, author and director are to be congratulated on the success of the production, for a success it will undoubtedly be when shown to the comedy loving picture patrons.

The picture is of high standard in every respect. The featured players have adapted themselves to screen requirements admirably. They prove to be excellent actors, and possessing the facial expressiveness so important in pictures, have little difficulty in making their work effective. In addition, they are cast in sympathetic roles and prove very likeable. As the two kind-hearted old chaps who adopt a dog and then a little girl and who have a drug-store and trouble wished on them, they are truly delightful. There is a spirit of kindliness and gentleness throughout the story which is extremely rare in comedies of this kind and which will appeal to the more intelligent class of audience.

A commendable feature of the story and direction evident from the first scenes is that, instead of burlesquing ordinary scenes, unusual scenes in themselves funny have been selected. There is still plenty of slap-stick scenes to delight small boys and others whose sense of humor is elementary, but much of this slap-stick stuff is new and individual.

The story begins with a street scene in which Louie, a vendor of "hot dogs," and Mike, a sandwich man advertising tents, hurry to the rescue of a dog being tormented by street urchins. When the dog, dubbed Fritz, is found to be injured, the men carry him to a nearby drug store for treatment. This store is a hangout for dope fiends and is in bad repute with the police. Since he has been warned that it will be raided, the owner leaves in haste, telling Mike and Louie that they may have the store if they will stay and take care of his little daughter, Mary. Mike and Louie are soon brought before the police in a raid. They are proved innocent, and the father having been killed in the raid, the store now belongs to little Mary.

For about two reels, the play deals with incidents, funny in themselves and aided by well worded and well placed subtitles, in the career of Mike and Louie, druggists. Dodo Newton, as the little girl, and the adopted dog add many bits of fun to the situations.

In the latter part of the play the story proper is developed. Mary, now a young lady (played by May Cloy), is loved by Bob, the clerk in the drug store (King Clark). Her guardians tell him that in order to win their consent, he must make a million dollars. Then he gets the big idea of combining mental healing with medicine and manufactures a new kind of pill which, combined with prayer and faith, will cure all human ills. The pills are widely advertised, and orders begin to pour in, including orders from well known people, which gives occasion for a number of humorous telegrams.

Then the dog, Fritz, becomes sick, having eaten soap and drunk water from the hydrant, which gave him "hydrant-phobia." To cure him, Mike and Louie give him a number of pills and pray for him. The pills contain a narcotic which puts Fritz into a deep sleep. His owners believe they have killed him, and seeing themselves murderers of all the people who bought the pills, decide to kill themselves too by eating the pills. This puts them to sleep.

The funniest part of the picture appears when they dream that they and the dog have gone to heaven. They believe they are in the wrong place, but they are fitted out with wings, even Fritz having a pair of small ones. But heaven itself proves full of trouble for them, and they are not sorry to be wakened up by the cured Fritz and to learn that Bob has sold his rights to the pills for a million dollars and is ready to claim Mary.

"A Wall Street Tragedy"

Nat C. Goodwin in Mutual Masterpicture. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

"A WALL STREET TRAGEDY" is not so much a question of high finance as the title would imply. This Mutual Masterpicture produced by the Mirror Films tells of a Wall street broker who is ruined by a woman and not by a competitor, though it is a business rival who urges the woman to bleed Norton, who has a reputation in the Street for being somewhat of a shark.

Nat C. Goodwin is starred and it must be said that he gives a thoroughly fine performance. There is something really pathetic about Norton when he is a broken old man, seeking forgetfulness in drink and being ushered from low bar-rooms when he is unable to pay for more drinks. Credit for this is due Mr. Goodwin, and not a play which is in substance and treatment the embodiment of artificiality.

"A Wall Street Tragedy" is strenuously melodramatic. It tells of an elderly man who ruins a certain broker by demanding immediate payment of stocks which are legally and morally due him. Then the younger man proves himself a more efficient white-slaver than business man. He instructs Yvette, his mistress, to use her wiles on Norton.

The result is Mrs. Norton dies of a broken heart when she learns of her husband's affair. Norton then marries Yvette, who immediately turns his home into a scene of debauchery for her numerous acquaintances. Norton's daughter returns from boarding school, but soon takes herself off to make her own way. Yvette is not content with driving Lois from the home, she tells one of her friends to "follow her and put the Rat on her trail." The Rat turns out to be a most repulsive person and he is seen sneaking around after the unsuspecting Lois.

Norton is now ordered out of his own home by Yvette and in the next scene, Yvette, who has shown the greatest devotion to Ransom and obeyed his every wish, is about to make a get-away with a man who has never before been seen by the spectator. Ransom enters the room and in a fight with Yvette he is killed. The adventuress is walked off to jail with the Rat, who has chased Lois all around a room and then down a fire-escape, and her other confident. In the last scene Lois is happily married and Norton receives a letter explaining that a small fortune has been realized from his home, which reverted to him.

"A Wall Street Tragedy" does not concern itself with very pleasant things. Scenes of low revelry, repelling characters and vice abound in the piece. It is not all offensive, but neither is any of it very edifying. All is justified by the ending which punishes the wicked and rewards the virtuous, though we fail to see where and when Norton was anything but weak in his affection for Yvette, because from out in front of the screen she appears to be about as wicked and as vicious a woman as ever could be. The part is over-acted to the degree where Yvette palls on one terribly.

The story is by Adrian Johnson and the direction by Lawrence Marsten. The photography is good and convincing settings frame all of the action. Richard Neill, Zola Telmart, Mabel Wright, Mary Norton, Clifford Gray and J. Cooper Willis make up the supporting cast.

"The Enchantment"

Two-Reel "Flying A" Drama Released August 21. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

ALTHOUGH the theme and many of the situations are very old, this play is so well presented that it holds the interest throughout. It is, in fact, the familiar "triangle" situation concerning two women and a man, presented under two conditions, the first the primitive days of fauns and nymphs, the second, the present time. The opening scenes resemble some of the mythological scenes in "Purity."

A wood nymph is successful in beguiling a faun from his mate for a time. But in the end she loses her power.

Then the scene changes and the characters appear as modern men and women. They are Jack Carewe, an artist, his wife, Helen, and Celeste, a dancer and model. Jack is having trouble painting a masterpiece because he cannot find the right model. He meets a dancer who attracts him and engages her as his model. As in the first story, the girl soon wins the man away from his wfe. There is another character in the modern story, Billy Norbert, who tries to win the affections of the wife.

Carewe paints the dancer as a wood nymph. As the painting progresses, his infatuation grows. At last his wife enters the studio while he is away and destroys the painting. As she does so, Carewe's love for the model dies, and he leaves her to return home.

The photography in the picture is very good. The story is well handled in two reels. Carl M. LeViness directed the production. Vivian Rich, Alfred Vosburgh, Laura Sears and George Periolat have the leading roles.

"Lieut. Danny U. S. A."

Triangle-Ince Melodramatic Romance Laid in Mexico. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

THE Mexican bandit leader whose presence in "Lieut. Danny, U. S. A." accounts for all the action the play contains, should seem very real to the people of this country at this time. Pedro Lopez, "The Butcher," is his title and surely he is a wicked looking individual. And his viciousness does not stop at looks, for he attacks a hacienda, has all the men who are captured shot immediately and coolly plans to take in marriage the pretty daughter of the house.

"Lieut. Danny, U. S. A." is a five reel romance produced by Walter Edwards from the story by J. G. Hawks. The story has a villain, a hero and a pretty girl, while the director supplied numbers of scenes in which there is plenty of action. The battles between the bandits and the American and the servants of the Ventura home employ many extra people. Some of these scenes are effective.

If Danny Ward had any spirit or dash in his make-up, William Desmond, who, with Enid Markey, is featured, failed to bring them out strongly enough. It is probable, however, that they were not there to be brought out. Danny is an officer stationed on the border. He first meets the beautiful Ysobel when she and her mother are making for the Rio Grande with a number of bandits pursuing them. Danny is wearing the uniform of the United States, so there is nothing for the Mexican bandit to do but go away when Danny so orders.

These two meet again. The Lieutenant is visiting his betrothed, Ysobel, when Pedro attacks the hacienda. Danny refuses to flee and remains to fight the lawless band. He is captured and stood up against a wall to be shot with the other defenders. This time Providence instead of the United States is with Danny. The bullet directed at him strikes a religious article given him by Ysobel and he regains consciousness a short time after the Mexicans retire.

The rest of the picture tells of Pedro's efforts to take possession of Ysobel and Danny's rescue of her. In the final scene he points to the American flag floating over the camp he is bringing her to and tells Ysobel that it is now her flag, her protector, though before adding the latter Danny ought to have borne in mind that Ysobel's only enemy is Pedro, a Mexican.

Miss Markey has a part of little consequence and she does nothing to make it distinctive. Robert Kortman is Pedro. Pedro is a most brutal person. Kortman deserves praise for being so consistent in his portrayal. Gertrude Claire and Thornton Edwards have the other prominent roles.

"Beatrice Fairfax"

First Two Releases in New International Series. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

IN considering the show value of the latest series offering of the International Film Service, the wide prominence of the name "Beatrice Fairfax" must be taken into account. Advertising accomplishes wonderful things, and goodness knows no name has ever been more extensively advertised than that of the famous adviser to those suffering from unhappy affairs of the heart.

If the letters and advice column conducted under the name of Beatrice Fairfax in the Hearst papers was able to create the large following it obviously must have, there seems little doubt that this continued picture whose episodes are based on "Advice to the Lovelorn" letters will command a following whose name will be legion.

The first two episodes show that the "Beatrice Fairfax" series was made for that portion of the picture-going public which cares only for the thrills of melodrama of the most pronounced form. They are adventure, or detective stories in which Beatrice Fairfax and a reporter on the Evening Journal are by coincidence led into the midst of some mystery. The stories are by Basil Dickey and are supposed to have been written around some of the letters which daily pour into the office of Beatrice Fairfax.

In the first release a letter received by Beatrice Fairfax is the means of aiding the young reporter and amateur sleuth to solve a mystery surrounding a bank robbery, and in the second the reporter's assignment to cover a Black Hand story inspires the celebrated adviser to young women to look deeper into a letter written by the wife of an Italian musician. In both cases there are villains who use desperate methods in furthering their own nefarious schemes.

The reporter and Beatrice Fairfax working together makes a very efficient mystery-solving team as well as opening avenues for the entrance of the elements of love and thrills. The first episode is entitled "The Missing Watchman," and tells of a young woman who writes to Beatrice Fairfax. The young lady's sweetheart, it seems, has suddenly turned his affections to another woman. A few hours later the reporter learns of a mysterious bank robbery, the watchman having disappeared as well as large sums from the vault. Beatrice and the reporter find that the watchman has a double. This thief captures the watchman, makes him a prisoner and breaks into the vault. The watchman is rescued and restored to his sweetheart and the crooks apprehended through the courage and cleverness of the reporter.

"The Adventure of the Jealous Wife" is the title of the second release. The reporter is sent to cover a Black Hand story. Beatrice remembers this when she receives a letter from a woman who suspects that her husband is having an affair with another woman when he leaves the house hurriedly with all their savings after reading a letter just delivered to him. Beatrice then finds the jealous woman and it transpires that the Black Hand is after her husband. The reporter again leads the band into the police net.

Grace Darling, of whom countless numbers have been reading for a year or more in the Hearst papers, appears as Beatrice Fairfax. She is attractive and pleasing of personality and the supposition is that Grace Darling will be immensely popular with the motion picture enthusiasts throughout the country before long. Harry Fox shows in the first few scenes that his selection for the role of the reporter was most judicious. As was to be expected, he puts lots of spirit and dash into the part. He never misses an opporunity to inject a little touch of comedy, and that in itself is enough to make the character a popular one with the spectator. Harry Fox has many admirers through his many appearances on the speaking stage and now he is about to add greatly to these numbers through the medium of Jimmy Barton, the reporter in the "Beatrice Fairfax" series.

The production is by the Whartons, producers of some of the greatest serials ever released. The stories gain the atmospheric element through the scenes laid in the offices of the newspaper. No more newspaper-like newspaper office was ever shown on the motion picture screen. In fact, some of these scenes were actually taken in the offices of the Evening Journal, one of them being the office of one no less great in the newspaper world than Arthur Brisbane; the "world's greatest editor" appearing in person. Mr. Brisbane does not act, therefore he is one of the best motion picture actors we have ever seen. He consults with the famous cartoonist, Tad, dictates into a phonograph, and engages the ambitious Beatrice Fairfax to conduct an "advice to the lovelorn" column without once looking near the camera or appearing in the least conscious of its presence.

Those who like action even though it is obtained through making the long arm of Coincidence longer than ever, and disregarding the probable altogether will greatly enjoy "Beatrice Fairfax."

"God's Half Acre"

Metro Production Presents Mabel Taliaferro. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

A WELL constructed story, artistic treatment by the director and intelligent, sincere interpretations go to make "God's Half Acre" a picture of much charm and broad appeal. The picture is one of those wholesome offerings whose Cinderella-like heroines so delight motion picture audiences, and though the featured player is an actress of engaging personality and ability, "God's Half Acre" does not suffer from that most common ailment best described as "too much star."

Mabel Taliaferro has never been seen to better advantage since her advent into the silent drama. Her performance is entirely worthy of the excellent support rendered by J. W. Johnston and Director Edwin Carewe, whose handling of the production is of a highly superior character.

"God's Half Acre," written by June Mathis, tells of a novelist of means who fails to see anything wrong in his wife's interest in a society idler named Perry Westley. The latter, pretending whole-souled interest and friendship for Norman, advises him to spend some time at an old people's home in search for material for a novel. Norman thinks this a good idea and he departs for "The Rainbow's End."

There he finds a young girl who works for the house-keeper and who has both imagination and deep sympathy for the old people who make the best of a not too happy station in life. Norman and Blossom become the best of friends and many enjoyable moments terminate after their return from the opera in the city, when Blossom asks her friend if he is going to marry her and make her happy as the hero in his novel said he was going to do in the last chapter. Norman explains that he is not free and begs her forgiveness for giving her cause to misunderstand his attentions.

Blossom is keenly disappointed at hearing this, but realizes that she is to blame for her own disappointment. Norman returns to his home that night. He finds that his wife has eloped with Westley and is further shocked the next morning to learn that both have been killed in an auto accident. Following this are a number of scenes showing Blossom at "God's Half Acre," a home for orphans. They include among some charming incidents a few scenes which lack the spirit and interest characteristic of the rest of the play. In the end we find Norman and Blossom in a curtain embrace which leaves no doubt as to the future course of a perfectly mated couple.

Mr. Johnson, as usual, is highly effective, his interpretation of the novelist figuring largely in the success of the play. Richard Neill does a great deal with his part, Perry Westley. Lorraine Frost is emotional as Bess Norman. This part is impressively played, the only flaw in a fine performance is a lack of restraint in certain of the scenes. Helen Dahl, Miriam Hutchins, John Smiley and Daniel Jarrett are included in the cast.

Through the skilled direction of Mr. Carewe the maximum of effect is realized in the visualization of the story. The interior photography is good but once out of doors the characters seem to have become enveloped in a mist. "God's Half Acre" makes a decided appeal, it will more than satisfy the picturegoing public.

"A Social Cub"

Triangle-Keystone Burlesques Well Worn Love Romance. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

A BURLESQUE of the screen drama which works up to a situation showing a pretty girl lured to a questionable hotel by a dashing villain is the basis for a Keystone comedy of little zest and less originality. "A Social Cub" falls considerably short of being funny and the novelty which stamps the major part of the product of the studio from whence it came is conspicuous through its absence here.

A young, somewhat timid young man and a young girl are engaged and live with their parents at a hotel in the country. The young swain's college chum pays a visit and forthwith sets out to win Gloria away from her betrothed.

Bobby speaks up, but all his fault-finding with Gloria brings him nothing more than the engagement ring. After the engagement is broken both are piqued and write sharp notes. Before the notes reach their destination Bobbie and Gloria are prepared to arbitrate, for Gloria has now found that Reggie is not an honorable man. So it all ends. Bobbie and Gloria perform a curtain kiss while the delighted parents look on gleefully.

Bobbie Vernon, Gloria Swanson and Reggie Morris are the principals. There must always be a certain amount of beauty in a Keystone picture and in this one Miss Swanson proves herself quite equal to supplying the demand. "A Social Cub" has a few good moments, but it contains nothing in excess of what is necessary to make it an acceptable half-hour's entertainment.

"The Shine Girl"

Gladys Hulette in Pathe Gold Rooster Play. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

THE Pathe Gold Rooster release for August 27 is a five-part Thanhouser production featuring Gladys Hulette and entitled "The Shine Girl," a story containing moments of humor and pathos which make a decided appeal. "The Shine Girl" is a product of the tenement district in New York. She is intelligent, capable and self-reliant, and, thanks to the interpretation of Miss Hulette, she is very human and distinctly charming.

While the play depends altogether on the girl who brings sunshine into the lives of people, both rich and poor, who have known no such thing as happiness, it is more than a vehicle. The construction is good and the main character is depicted as being charming through the performance of really noble works. "The Shine Girl" has an intellect and, strange as it may seem to those who have formed their opinions from the majority of screen characters, this does not in the least interfere with her personal magnetism and physical beauty.

"The Shine Girl" works in a shoe-polishing parlor, and she has earned her title through her determination that all things about her be bright. She pins great faith on the smile as a tonic for many of the ailments the human family is heir to. However, she is not all theory, as she proves when later she is taken into the home of a judge of the children's court.

The judge has everything but happiness. He was disappointed in love, the one woman having married another. The husband is one of those tired business men and when he comes home he pays but slight attention to the wife. She is unhappy and finally decides that she cannot live without the judge, just as he believes that there is only one way for him to find happiness and that is with her.

"The Shine Girl" learns that they have determined to go away together and she saves these two deluded people from themselves. In doing this she takes a practical course, refusing to make speeches until the opportune time. The outcome is that the judge finds that most plausible thing in the world, a new love. He marries the girl and the future promises more than it ever did before.

William Parke directed the production. Some scenes were actually taken in a children's court room. As a whole the production is exceedingly satisfactory. Miss Hulette, who has long since shown herself to be a real star, is supported ably by Wayne Arey and Kathryn Adams. As pictures of this kind go, "The Shine Girl" does not become over-sentimental. It is a very pleasant picture.

"Little Lady Eileen"

Famous Players-Paramount Drama Featuring Marguerite Clark. Reviewed by George W. Graves

IN a story which is both romantic and fancifully impressive, Marguerite Clark is seen as a vivacious, altogether alluring Irish miss, whose simple faith in the ability of the fairies to bestow good and to check evil agreeably supplants the charging of coincidence to fate. In order for fairies to exist there must be at least some vestige of a fairyland, and the exquisite bits of countryside which the director has captured on his film agree perfectly with the popular conception of such a land. The interiors are also handled in a Famous Player-like manner. In all ways is the picture masterfully produced.

The precision and clarity of the story gives the picture its power, and Marguerite Clark's youthful, unrestrained acting gives it its palpitating touch of humanness. Especially commendable is the element of suspense. Vernon Steele's acting in the double role of the Churchill brothers is an amazing revelation in character study. Clever double exposures are a feature of this dual role. Others assisting Miss Clark are John L. Shaw, J. K. Murray, Harry Lee and Maggie M. Fisher. We feel that "Little Lady Eileen" is among the leaders of the Marguerite Clark portrayals.

At the outset of the story, Eileen's father, rummaging among the musty tomes in his library, brings to light a will which stipulates that a vast estate will revert to Eileen, in the event of her marriage to the eldest son of the house of Churchill. He sends his friend, Father Kearney, to Dublin to hunt up Stanley Churchill, at the same time summoning home his daughter, who is visiting an aunt in Dublin.

Stanley Churchill, a writer of fairy-tales, enroute to Eileen's home town to secure new material for his next book, meets and becomes well acquainted with the little lady on the train. Meanwhile Father Kearney arrives at the Churchill home and mistakes George, the dissipated younger brother, for Stanley. George has no scruples about usurping his brother's place and accompanies the good father into the country.

Stanley and Eileen have several meetings in the woods, and become hopelessly fond of each other. On being introduced to her future husband, however, Eileen balks. Not intending to marry against her will, she writes a note to Stanley arranging for an immediate marriage. The note falls into the scheming hands of George, who, realizing he must work fast, dons his brother's clothes, shaves off his moustache, fools Eileen into believing he is Stanley and marries her. When the pair arrive at the castle, George brutally confesses his trick, whereupon his wife eludes him and returns to her parents' home.

Stanley discovers his brother's act too late, and the lovers, in misery, declare that the fairies have deserted them. But they are soon to see otherwise, for George, angrily pursuing his stolen wife, meets with a fatal accident. He is brought to Eileen's house in a dying condition and is forgiven by Stanley before expiring. Then the story closes with the lovers' happiness on the estate of their inheritance.

"Gloria's Romance"

Chapter 15 of the Kleine Serial. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

"THE MURDERER AT BAY." This installment of the Billie Burke serial explains Gloria's escape from the barge, where we left her a prisoner at the close of chapter fourteen. She overcomes Trask's daughter, then Trask and his assistant, and locks them in the cabin of the boat. Accustomed as we are to seeing energetic struggles in pictures, Gloria's exploit seems very gentle, and her manner of overcoming her captors, done in the usual Billie Burke fashion, is more amusing than convincing.

Quite the prettiest and best photographed exterior scenes of the serial appear in this chapter, and a larger proportion of the scenes are exteriors. After binding Nell Trask with a table cloth and forcing Trask, with the point of a hot poker, to allow himself to be tied up, Gloria locks them, with their assistant, in the cabin of the boat. Then she cuts the rope by which the barge is being led, and makes her escape to shore in one of the smaller boats attached to the barge. Fortunately, her victims do not free themselves until she is safely away.

In the meantime, her father and Dr. Royce, thinking that Gloria has gone to their country home, also go there, taking with them the little boy and his mother, whom Gloria has befriended. When they arrive and find that Gloria has not been seen, they are quite disturbed.

But Gloria is on her way, riding first in a farmer's wagon, then driving an automobile, which she takes with little ceremony from its owner.

"Sporting Blood"

Five-Reel William Fox Drama Released August 14. Reviewed by George W. Graves

NOVELTY of setting and theme, as well as numerous good situations and very well balanced, convincing acting on the part of the co-stars, Dorothy Bernard and Glen White, will make this offering please. The action does not run as smoothly as it might, but the spirit of the race track is there, together with an interesting study of the human mind obsessed with the desire to flirt with hazard.

Possessing points aplenty which always register with all classes of motion picture audiences, and being produced on a pretentious scale, the picture will be received with warmth by the public. Most of that which comes within the jurisdiction of the director has been handled intelligently and with a view to realism. Frequent injections of irrelevant "nigger" comedy, however, are decidedly abrupt, sometimes detracting perceptibly from what precedes and follows. Besides the capability displayed by Dorothy Bernard and Glen White, we have some more excellent characterization in the heavy part, taken by De Witt C. Jennings. Others making up the cast are George Morgan, Madeleine Le Nard and Claire Whitney. Photography is uniformly good and a number of settings, notably those taken as interiors for the Garrison home, are elaborate and artistic. Bertram Bracken directed.

James Riddle, an ex-trainer of racing horses, is in the employ of Dave Garrison, a notorious personage, who uses corrupt methods to fleece others in gambling deals and a figure on the turf. To square himself with a woman he has wronged, Garrison sends Riddle to her with a large sum of money. A dramatic scene ensues when Riddle discovers the woman is his sister. Filled with rage he sets out to kill Garrison. About the same time Mary Ballard, sister of a young man whom Garrison has ruined financially, comes to confer with her brother. Dorothy meets Riddle and they both unite in a common cause to defeat Garrison.

Later, when Garrison gets the girl into his apartment and commences to force himself upon her, as he has done to many another, Dorothy ingeniously appeals to the man's gambling instinct. The result is that the old man wagers $10,000 against the girl that his horse, Shooting Star, will win in the coming race.

Dorothy sends home for her horse, Bay Belle, a slower animal, but in appearance the double of Shooting Star. The horses are cleverly exchanged; Bay Belle races as Shooting Star and vice versa. After the race Garrison discovers the trick, but at the point of a revolver he is forced to tear up his wager ticket by Riddle. In order not to make the outcome of the race obvious, Dorothy has made the transfer of horses without letting Riddle in on it. Meanwhile Riddle gives Bay Belle a tryout and discovers that the latter makes a better record than Shooting Star.

Lenore Ulrich in New Pallas Picture

Lenore Ulrich upon the completion of the Pallas Pictures film, "The Intrigue," will immediately begin work on her next subject, "The Conflict," a dramatic story by Julia Crawford Ivers. In this play Miss Ulrich will appear in the role of a half-breed daughter of a wealthy white man. A complete Indian village will be built on the shores of a lake in the San Bernardino mountains and a large band of Indians will be engaged for these scenes.

Vivian Martin's next vehicle under the Morosco banner will be entitled "Her Father's Son." The story deals with the period in the South just prior to the Civil War. Supporting Miss Martin appear Herbert Standing, Alfred Vosburg, Helen Jerome Eddy, Joe Massey, Jack Lawton, Lucille Ward and Tom Bates.

Jane Keckley, portrayer of eccentric characters on the screen, is now affiliated with Pallas pictures. Miss Keckley will make her debut under the Pallas Pictures banner on the Paramount Program in "The Parson of Panamint," in which Dustin Farnum has the title role.

"Intolerance" Opening Postponed

The opening of "Intolerance," Griffith's latest production, at the Liberty Theater, New York, has been postponed until September 5 because some of the mechanical innovations connected with the staging of the spectacle could not be completed until that date.

Universal Director Raymond Wells is nearing the completing of "The Saintly Sinner."

J. Warren Kerrigan, the well known Universal City star, is being featured in a five-reel production entitled, "The Social Buccaneer."

Metro Offers Two Five Reelers

"The Pretenders," Featuring Emmy Whelen and "The Upheaval," Starring Lionel Barrymore

TWO five-part features, "The Pretenders" and "The Upheaval," produced by the Rolfe Photoplay, Inc., will be released on the Metro program August 21 and 28, respectively.

In "The Pretenders" George D. Baker

The immortal Juliet returns in lovely reincarnation in Beverly Bayne. Metro-Rolfe are presenting the old, old story.

makes his debut as a Metro director. Emmy Whelen is the star of the production surrounded by a strong supporting cast which includes Paul Gordon, William Davidson, Edwin Holt, Charles Eldridge, Jerome Wilson, Ileane Hume, Hugh Jeffrey and Harry Neville.

"The Upheaval," in which Lionel Barrymore is starred and Marguerite Skirvin featured, was produced under the direction of Charles Horan. In the cast appear Edgar L. Davenport, Franklin Hanna, John H. Smiley, Paul Lawrence, James Malaidy, Howard Truesdall, George Stevens, Frank Lyons and Myra Brook.

The Metro Travelogues, a recent addition to the Metro program, show a varied and interesting group of features. The subjects include, among others, the home and surroundings of Harriet Beecher Stowe, a series of wild animal studies by William T. Finley, pastimes of the Pueblo Indians near San Juan, New Mexico, and Corpus Christi Day in Santa Fe, scenes among the Cape Cod folks, a girl's camp in the Maine woods and the Columbia River Highway in Oregon.

Metro has engaged Frank Mills, noted stage and screen leading man, as the featured player with Emily Stevens in her new five-act photoplay, "Capital Punishment." Mr. Mills starred in the Kay-Bee Triangle picture. "The Moral Fabric," and more recently has appeared in "The House of Mirrors," and "The Flower of Faith."

Two cameramen and an assistant director employed in the Metro-Rolfe studio are professional racing car drivers, and after a long discussion have arranged to have a twenty-mile event on the Sheepshead Bay race course.

B. A. Rolfe, president of the Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., who has personally directed the management of the Strand Theater on Broadway, New York City, has given up that work and is now the commander-in-chief of the Rolfe studio where many of the biggest features are produced for the Metro program. Mr. Rolfe was induced to take up this position because of the ever increasing activities at the studio that made big demands upon his time.

In the past the burden of the duties at the Rolfe studio fell upon the shoulders of Maxwell Karger, the general manager, and his associate Charles D. Maddock, the treasurer. Mr. Karger has now taken charge of the casting of all the stars and players, and the scenario department in the studio. Mr. Maddock will continue in his present capacity. Mr. Rolfe will take over the work of general supervision of all productions and will have immediate charge of all the directors.

Lewis Sealy, who was one of the three first producers of motion pictures in England, is in the cast of the Metro-Quality production of "Romeo and Juliet," starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne.

The five reels of "Mister 44," a new Metro-Yorke wonderplay in which Harold Lockwood and May Allison share stellar honors, embrace more than four hundred feet of film exposed at night.

September Bluebirds

General Manager M. H. Hoffman, of Bluebird, has carefully selected the September releases, for the particular purpose of supplying a strong and varied arrangement of the best films available right at a time when the public is presumed to be "amusement hungry" after the summer vacations.

September 4 brings "The Unattainable," with Dorothy Davenport and Emory Johnson, two players new to Bluebird.

"Saving the Family Name," released on September 11, will be Lois Weber's sixth contribution to the Bluebird series. Mary Mac Laren will be featured, with Phillips Smalley, her leading man, and Miss Girrard Alexander, Carl Von Schiller, Jack Holt and Harry Depp prominent in support.

On September 18 is offered "Behind the Lines," a military drama. Edith Johnson will be introduced to Bluebirds as Harry Carey's leading lady and Marc Fenton will also be prominent in a cast including Ruth Clifford L. C. Shumway, Miriam Shelby and Ray Hanford.

Emilie Gaboriou's novel, "The Clique of Gold," forms the basis of the Bluebird for September 25, but it may not be released under the original title. Elsie Jane Wilson becomes a star in the organization with this release, supported by Francelia Billington. Douglas Gerrard, C. N. Hammond, Sydney Dean and Rupert Julian will be prominent in the cast.

Without definitely announcing the release dates future releases on the Bluebird program, for the autumn months, will be selected from "The Social Buccaneer," with Louise Lovely, now J. Warren Kerrigan's leading lady; "We Are French," from the story by Robert H. Davis, editor of Munsey's magazine; "Idle Wives," another Lois Weber production, with Mary MacLaren leading; "The Eagle's Wing," featuring Herbert Rawlinson and Grace Carlyle; "Spring Song," featuring Ruth Stonehouse; and "Life's Destinies," introducing Roberta Wilson.

One Picture a Month

B. S. Moss, president of the B. S. Moss Motion Picture Corporation, believes it is an impossibility for a producer to put out more than one good picture a month under the state rights basis and, therefore, has adopted the policy of one picture a month. Mr. Moss also advocates a variety of subjects and has, therefore, made his first four productions on radically different themes.

"In the Hands of the Law," is an indictment against the evils of circumstantial evidence; "Boots and Saddles" will show military conditions on the Mexican border; "The Power of Evil" depicts a strong man's battle for life and love; and "The Woman Redeemed" shows the redemption of a woman from the depths of degradation. "One Hour," a sequel to Elinor Glyn's "Three Weeks," is also ready for the exhibitor.

According to the policy inaugurated by Mr. Moss, the state rights man can have the exclusive rights for his territory for the twelve pictures for one price, regardless of what the feature may be.

Mr. Moss has introduced some unique innovations in his motion picture theater, which he is erecting in New York. In addition to the forty-piece orchestra, he will install a new type organ, known as the vibratory magnetic type, operated by giant electric magnets. Another novelty is the access to the balconies, which is gained by an inclining runway up which an automobile can be driven from the lobby to the highest gallery. There will be no stairways. The interior of the theater is designed especially by actinic experts and the floor of the house will have angles which place the audience in such position that the optic range is practically the same wherever the patron may be seated.

Goldfish Advocates Better Films

Samuel Goldfish, chairman of the board of directors of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, is on a trip to the California studios, and will make a survey of motion picture conditions in various sections of the United States, and hold conferences with prominent exhibitors in the west.

Mr. Goldfish believes that the chief feature concerning motion picture conditions at this time is the growing tendency of the photoplay-loving public to exercise a very definite discrimination in its selection of film entertainment, and the time has come when every photoplay offered to the public must possess distinctive qualities of appeal through production and story.

While it is true that many producers are enjoying a financial success from productions of low standard, this is only temporary and is caused by the fact that the demand for motion pictures is so great that even supply, inconsistent with the best standards, has found a certain market. It is self evident, however, that the line of demarcation between productions of merit and motion pictures of footage is being more and more closely drawn. In its last analysis the life of the motion picture industry expresses itself in what actually is shown on the screen of the theaters.

The August releases of the Lasky Company on the Paramount program illustrate the elastic possibilities of the screen. Wallace Reid and Cleo Ridgley will be seen in "The House of the Golden Windows;" Blanche Sweet will be offered in "Public Opinion," in which she appears as a trained nurse on trial for murder; Sessue Hayakawa, the Japanese actor, will be seen in "The Honorable Friend," written especially for him; and Lou Tellegen will be featured in "The Victory of Conscience."

Greiver Going Strong

Simeon B. Greiver, who is directing the destinies of both the Balaban-Hershberg Film Attractions and the General Feature Film Company, has perfected his sales organization by the acquisition of eight live film solicitors.

The roster includes Carl Harthill, who has had experience with both the Standard and Union Film companies of this city, James Salter, Wm. Weinschaker, John Balaban and Harry Charness. Each man has been alloted an individual territory in handling "The Yellow Menace," the big Unity serial and the Ivan releases.

Milo Comedies Coming

The Milo Pictures Corporation, of Baltimore, has engaged some well-known players for work in their comedy pictures, among them Tommy Flynn, former Royal-Mutual star, and with Selig, Keystone and Essanay. He will be starred in one-reelers, and will have in his support such prominent players as, George Ross, for many months with Metro, in plays with Francis X. Bushman, Will Nigh, and Margaret Snow; Lou Marks, popular vaudeville headliner, Marie Josephs, Andy Rice, Bob Hood, and many others.

It is the intention of the Milo Company to make one-reel comedies, and feature photoplays starring prominent players of the stage and screen. Dr. Harry E. Buckner, is president of the company; Frank P. Donovan, general director; A. Kurnick, chief photographer; A. W. Marchant, general manager.

New Stars for Ivan

For the second production to be made by the Ivan Film Productions under their new policy of all-star cast features, a notable cast of screen stars has been assembled.

Anna Q. Nilsson, star of the sensational serial "Who's Guilty?", has been engaged to create the principal female role in the newest Ivan screen play.

Rose Coghlan, legitimate star, who this year celebrates her golden jubilee as an actress fifty years on the stage, and whose work in "The Faded Flower," the last Ivan release, won the universal commendation of the critics, has been reengaged for this new production.

William H. Tooker, star of "A Fool's Revenge" and a principal in countless other screen plays, conceded the foremost delineator of character roles on the silent stage, will enact an important role in this new feature.

Others in the case are Harry Spingler, Wilmuth Merkyl and Frankie Mann.

The vehicle in which this notable cast will be presented is entitled "Her Surrender," to be released through Ivan exchanges in September, from the pen of Ivan Abramson.

Children Traced Through Film

Most photoplays which are said to be true stories of the life of the author have little in them which attract the scenario editor. Such is not the case, however, with a woman living in a city near Cleveland who has written the story of her life into a film in hopes of being able in this way to trace her two children who were taken from her in babyhood when she claims to have been falsely committed to an insane asylum.

The Midland Film Company bought the script and under the title, "Even Unto the Third and Fourth Generation," will produce it as a seven-reel feature. The characters in the play will be taken from real life in Cleveland.

Spingler With Ivan Films

The opposite role to Anna Q. Nilsson in "The Transfusion," the latest Ivan photoplay, will be portrayed by Harry Spingler.

Lovers of the shadow stage will recall Mr. Spingler's exceptionally fine acting with William Farnum in "Samson," "The Thief," and "The Bondman," with Vera Michelena in "Driftwood" and as Fred Probert in "The House of Mirrors." Mr. Spingler hails from Buffalo, N. Y., and is a product of many years of work on the legitimate stage.

Chicago Film Advertising Concern

An excellent service furnishing high-class industrial and advertising films for advertisers is conducted by Laurence E. Rubel of the Laurence Rubel Service Company of 127 North Dearborn street, Chicago.

Laurence Rubel.

Mr. Rubel started in business a little more than a year ago and has made unusual strides. He creates an attention-compelling scenario for any product which any advertiser wishes to place before the public via the screen. The company also distributes an advertising film which is called the "Puzzle Publicity Picture." In these films the various commodities are drawn in a confused manner. Every picture represents some well-known product or advertiser. A prize is offered to theater patrons for solving the "riddle" and turning in all the correct names.

The above is merely an example of the original methods employed by the Rubel Service Company in giving their theater display service to film advertisers.

"Yellow Menace" for Labor Day

Andrew J. Cobe, vice-president of the Unity Sales Corporation, is making an extended tour of the south and southwest in the interest of "The Yellow Menace," the first release of which will be made on Labor Day. An unusual feature which is a great aid in booking this serial is the fact that the entire sixteen episodes are completed and ready to be shown to the exhibitor before he books the picture.

The United Film Service, Chicago, is handling "The Yellow Menace" in this territory, and D. J. Chatkin of that company is making a tour of the principal cities in his district to direct the booking of the serial through the Unity's branch offices in Kansas City, Denver, Seattle and San Francisco.

Villiers Ivan Editor

Victor de Villiers has been engaged by Ivan Film Productions as scenario editor. Mr. De Villiers has had a long training in the dramatic and photoplay field, and is also a writer of fiction and special articles, of ability. He served as assistant editor with Universal, contributing many original plays and innumerable adaptations. From there he joined the Kleine forces as associate editor. Later he joined the International's talented staff of writers.

Albert Jackson, who for years has run the Jackson and Senate Theaters at Pawhuska, Oklahoma, has leased the big Constantine Theater, which has been run in opposition to him for several months. As a result of the new lease, the Jackson will be closed, Mr. Jackson operating the Senate and the Constantine.

Sifted from the Studios

ATLANTIC COAST NOTES

Jeanne Eagles has contracted with the Thanhouser Company to star in a special feature, "The Woman and the World," to be released through Pathe. Eugene Moore is directing the play from a story by Philip Lonergan.

David Dictor, a screen actor, was killed last week in a scene for a photoplay which required him to leap from a fast moving automobile. He fell, fracturing his skull and died a few hours later.

Helen Gardner is to be starred in a spectacular play, the first production of the Phoenix Picture Players, Inc., a new concern promoted and directed by Charles Gaskill, a former Vitagraph producer. Studios have been leased in Florida and New York.

Arthur Brisbane, editor of The Evening Journal, makes his appearance in the newspaper scenes of the first installment of the Beatrice Fairfax series being filmed by International.

Sidney Bracy has rejoined the William Fox players and is now at work in the new June Caprice number.

Samuel Goldfish, chairman of the board of directors of the Famous Players-Lasky Company, has left New York for a trip to the west coast.

Frederick Warde recently sent to England for a shipment of antique furniture to be used in "The Vicar of Wakefield," in which he is appearing for Thanhouser.

Pictures of the Deutschland leaving Baltimore and carrying the German flag are shown on the Hearst-International News Weekly of August 4.

When Edgar Lewis found that he required two half-breed Indian children for important roles in "The Barrier," which he is directing for Lubin, he sent to North Dakota for Alberta and Juanita Meinzer, half Sioux, half white. They brought their pet puppy dog with them, and he too appears in the cast.

Helen Hart, who plays "Nell Trask" in "Gloria's Romance," has appeared in films with the Keystone, Fox, Biograph and Universal companies. Before that she was a stock actress of the speaking stage.

Henry Kolker of "Gloria's Romance" once toured Australia with his own company.

Valkyrien has finished posing for a series of beautifully tinted dry-paint etchings by the Belgian master, Joseph Pierre Nuyttens, whose portraits of Mary Garden and Pavlowa are well known. The Valkyrien series will soon be placed on exhibition on Fifth avenue in New York.

A large man-eating shark was captured alive by Director Theodore Marston of the Vitagraph Company and was used in the first episode of the new serial, "The Secret Kingdom."

Clarence J. Harris, author of the story of the new June Caprice picture, declares that the heroine, "Lucy," is a real girl whom he knew in a Massachusetts town.

Harry Lee, who plays the fairy-story-telling cobbler in the Famous Players production, "Little Lady Eileen," in which Marguerite Clark is starring, says that he has had to tell so many fairy stories that he feels qualified for the job of press agent for a musical comedy show.

Louise Huff and her director, Robert G. Vignola, have departed for northern New York where they found just the location needed for a Quaker village. Miss Huff is playing "Friend Patience" in her next Famous Players production on the Paramount program.

Both Bertram Bracken and Robert Ross, director and assistant director of "Sporting Blood," William Fox's romance of the racetrack, are experienced horsemen. Mr. Bracken was with the Third Texas Regiment during the Spanish-American war, and Mr. Ross for a year and a half was a member of the Fifteenth U. S. Cavalry stationed at Fort D. A. Russell, Cheyenne, Wyo.

Valkyrien, the Danish star, having finished her initial Fox feature, entitled "The Unwelcome Mother," is taking a vacation at the Nassau Hotel, Long Beach, L. I. She has been starred in eight feature productions during this, her initial season in America.

PACIFIC COAST NOTES

Leslie T. Peacock, scenario editor of the California Motion Picture Corporation, has recovered from an operation for appendicitis and is back at work, preparing an eight-reel production of "Faust," in which Beatriz Michelena will be starred.

Charles Clary, who played the leading heavy role in the forthcoming Fox picture, "The Honor System," written by Henry Christeen Warnack, has returned to the Lasky Company.

Will M. Ritchey, chief of the scenario department of the Balboa studios, is writing a series of new picture stories for the Horkheimer Brothers.

"I've earned a rest," said Charles Dudley, Balboa character actor, at the close of the day. "All I did today was to be thrown through a glass window, buried in a sand storm, died of drinking poisoned water, fell off a fire escape (fell off the fire escape before I died), was blown up in the old mill, run over by a stampede of cattle, jailed for rustling, and lost my watch."

Willard Louis, the villain of William Fox western photoplays, declares that his hobby is cooking. He claims to be a culinary expert.

Anna Luther is again at work at the Fox Western avenue studio, after ten days with Director Walter Reed's comedy company at Huntington Lake.

Vola Smith of Universal City has been posing for an artist and will soon be seen on a series of magazine covers.

In a scene from Will M. Ritchey's new play, Ruth Roland, in a tomboy part, puts on the five ounce gloves with Eddie Peters, a Balboa juvenile. In the mix-up Ruth roughs Eddie like a regular boxer and finally hands him a haymaker that puts him almost out. When asked how she did it, Ruth said she had taken lessons from an instructor several years ago, and that she regarded the training as a legitimate part of a girl's equipment to "take care of herself."

Howard Hickman, who played "Count Ferdinand" in Ince's "Civilization," has another military role in the Triangle Kay-Bee feature just completed, "Somewhere in France," from the story by Richard Harding Davis. Louise Glaum has an important role as a spy in the play.

Newest of the extra-length feature films to have its premiere in Los Angeles is "The Daughter of the Don," a ten-reel photoplay directed by Henry Kabierske. The story is based on the history of the early days in Southern California, and much of the romantic history of the Spanish occupation of the state is reflected.

Charles Miller has returned from Thousand Pines where he has been directing Bessie Barriscale and company in scenes for the current fantastic comedy-drama by Monte M. Katterjohn. Arthur Shirley is the leading man in the play.

Frank Keenan has begun work, under the direction of Walter Edwards, on a play which was written in collaboration by John Lynch and J. G. Hawks. It is a modern drama of the underworld type. The supporting cast includes Howard Hickman, David Hartford, Louise Brownell, Jack Gilbert and Walt Whitman.

As the desperado in a new Triangle play by J. G. Hawks, William S. Hart has just spent the most strenuous week in the history of his association with Ince-Triangle plays and has undergone some of the most hazardous experiences he has ever encountered. One of the stunts he performed was that of leaping from the side of a cliff to the back of a saddled horse.

Lenore Ulrich has completed "The Intrigue," for the Pallas Pictures Corporation, and will begin work at once on "The Conflict," a story by Julia Crawford. In "The Intrigue," Miss Ulrich plays the role of the "Countess Sonia Varnli," a foreign spy. In "The Conflict," she will appear as "Alona," the half-breed daughter of a wealthy white man.

Charlotte Burton, with the American Company, began her theatrical career when eight years old. At sixteen, she played in the support of Nance O'Neill at the Grand Opera House, San Francisco, and later played leads in western stock companies. She joined the American players in 1912.

The Signal Film Corporation has shipped east for release its most recently completed five-reel Helen Holmes feature, "The Manager of the B. and A.," from the novel by Vaughn Kester.

Rollin S. Sturgeon, who has been in charge of the western Vitagraph studio, has left for the east, where he will continue to direct. William Wolbert will direct the only Vitagraph company remaining on the coast. Mary Anderson, William Duncan, George Holt, Jack Mower and Otto Lederer are the leading players in the company. Wolbert has begun work on a five-reel picture.

Nell Shipman has signed an agreement with an eastern publication for a series of articles on motion pictures and players.

Bess Meredith, author of the "Timothy Dobbs" series, is to start work on a novelization of the comedies.

Ada Gleason is back in Los Angeles after a month in Chicago, where she appeared nightly at the showing of the Clune feature "Ramona," in which she has the title role.

Richard Stanton has recovered from his nervous breakdown and is at work again. He is preparing his next Fox picture, from a manuscript sent by the eastern office.

George Melford has completed the Lasky picture, "Each Pearl a Tear," starring Fanny Ward.

Hobart Henley of Universal is directing a war drama from a story he wrote for publication in the New York Mail. Henley will also play the leading role, supported by Claire McDowell, Kingsley Benedict, Jessie Arnold and Antrim Short.

George E. Periolat of the American Company, who is noted for his skill in make-up, has played more than a thousand characterizations, each different in appearance from the others.

In the Universal serial, "Liberty," Bertram Grassby plays a young Mexican of wealthy parents who is educated in the United States. He marries an American girl, who refuses to return with him to Mexico. He becomes a revolutionist, leader of a Villista faction.

During his long engagement with that company, Herbert Standing has appeared in all but three of the Pallas-Morosco photoplays.

Neva Gerber has a strenuous role in her picture which will follow "The Last of His Race," nearly completed at Universal City. She will have several thrilling rides, a struggle with the villain, other exciting stunts. Ben Wilson will direct the picture and also play the hero.

The second of the Richard Bennett Mutual Star productions is entitled "His Brother's Keeping," and was written by Kenneth B. Clarke. George Sargent is directing. The supporting cast includes Rhea Mitchell, Adrian Morrison (Mrs. Richard Bennett), and George Periolat.

Edward Coxen will be featured in a Mutual Masterpicture for the first time in "The Shadow," which Edward Sloman is directing. Winnifred Greenwood and George Field are in the cast.

G. A. Hutchinson, business manager of the Signal Film Corporation's Los Angeles studios, has left that city for Chicago on a vacation, while the Helen Holmes company is in Eureka filming "A Lass of the Lumberlands."

Scott Sidney, formerly with Thomas Ince, is directing the Lenore Ulrich pictures for the Pallas Company.

When Balboa began filming Little Mary Sunshine's new play for Pathe, it was found necessary to have a special tripod made for her camera. It looks like a camp stool and is the smallest moving picture camera tripod in the business.

William J. Tedmarsh, having traveled around the world before settling down at Santa Barbara and the American Film studio four years ago, has been out of that city but twice in that time. He says he has at last found the world's choicest spot and is content to stay right there.

Thomas Chatterton, who played the hero of "The Secret of the Submarine," is now juvenile lead with Kolb and Dill.

Frank Keenan is receiving the congratulations of his associate players at the Triangle studios upon the birth of his first grandson, born to Mr. and Mrs. Ed Wynne, the father, the noted vaudeville comedian, the mother, Hilda, Keenan's younger daughter.

After an absence of nearly a month, Director Charles Giblyn of the Ince Triangle staff has returned to Culver City from New York. He will begin at once the filming of a new play.

Helen Holmes, as well as several other members of the Signal company of players, has become much interested in government lands. She intends to file on a desert claim which can be taken up under the reclamation act and worked by hired forces.

Julian Louis Lamothe, now in the free-lance scenario field in Los Angeles, has been engaged to adapt a ten-reel feature shortly to be produced by a western film company.

Preparations are being made at Universal City to film a feature written by Al Jennings, the ex-bandit and outlaw.

William G. Colvin, for the past three years stage manager and actor for the Burbank and Morosco theaters, Los Angeles, has arranged to take charge of the engagement department of Mabel Condon's rapidly growing business of personal representation for photoplay writers, players and directors.

Doris Baker, the clever nine-year-old actress, has one of the biggest roles in the Kolb and Dill pictures, "Glory." She also has a leading role in the Universal picture, "A Daughter of the Night." At present she is working in a Fox production.

The military play starring Crane Wilbur, first announced as "Somewhere in Mexico," has been renamed "The Painted Lie." Robert B. Broadwell directed the production from a story written by the star.

A typical street in a Mexican village was built at the David Horsley studios for scenes in the Cub comedy, "Jerry and the Bandits," starring George Ovey. After a number of "battle" scenes, the buildings were blown to pieces. Milton H. Fahrney is the director.

William Clifford has the role of a photographer of wild animals in a coming Centaur feature in which many of the scenes are laid in African jungles. The famous Bostock lions and elephants appear in the scenes. Margaret Gibson, Alva D. Blake and little Thelma Salter have important roles.

The picturesque scenery of Northern California's coast has been depicted on the screen with great success in the Triangle play, "The Eye of the Night," starring William H. Thompson.

Mary Miles Minter wears an especially beautiful wedding gown, the first she has ever worn, in the American Mutual feature, "Dulcie's Adventure."

So as to be technically correct in the "duel scene" of the masterpicture, "The Painted Lie," a David Horsley production, Crane Wilbur, star and author, devoted every one of his evenings for two weeks at the home of an expert swordsman, learning the art with the foils. In the photoplay Wilbur crosses swords with Harris Ingraham.

Harriet T. Comstock's story, "The Place Beyond the Winds," is being produced by Director Joseph De Grasse, who also plays a leading part, with Dorothy Phillips, Lon Chaney and Jack Mulhall.

According to present plans, Antrim Short, the Universal boy actor, will play the lead in picture versions of such boy classics as "Tom Sawyer" and "Huckleberry Finn."

Frank Borzage makes his bow as a director of five-act features with the filming of "Land O' Lizards," an American Mutual Masterpicture in which Anna Little has the chief feminine role, with Jack Richardson as the "heavy."

Lester Cuneo, who plays the part of an Indian in "Mister 44," wore as his costume during the filming of the five-act play the outfit once worn by Bear Brow, a Comanche Indian. The outfit, which has been in Mr. Cuneo's possession since childhood, was a gift to his father by Bear Brow.

Ruth Ann Baldwin, who has been affiliated with the Universal Film Company for three years, is soon to become one of the directors. Miss Baldwin was formerly associated with the newspapers of San Diego. While in the scenario department of the Universal studios, she was sent to London by President Laemmle to collaborate with E. Phillips Oppenheim in the preparation of "The Black Box" serial for the screen and spent six months there.

During the three years in which Allen Curtis has been a director at Universal City, he has made one hundred and seventy-five one-reel comedies, about one a week.

Eugenie Magnus Ingleton, now of the scenario department at Universal City, is an actress and newspaper woman. When a child, she played with a traveling company in England. While in her teens, she was a contributor to various London magazines. Later she went to South Africa with the late Charles Arnold's company and played leads in Johannesberg and Pretoria. The company appeared in the Boer Republic when the Boer war started and she and her fellow players had many trying experiences, being constantly under the surveillance of the secret service officers of Oom Paul's government. While in Johannesberg, she joined the staff of "The Transvaal Leader" and did editorial work for that publication. Every member of the staff was killed subsequently at Ladysmith.

William Mong, author-actor-producer at the Universal studios, is putting the finishing touches on the big psychological story, "The Husks of Love," written by himself.

Mr. Frederick Palmer, for years connected with the Keystone Companies, has just been added to the staff of the Vogue Films, Inc. Mr. Palmer will devote all of his time to writing two-reelers of the comedy-thrill class, with an occasional special feature.

Henry Kernan, who has been assisting Rube Miller, is now directing his own company, featuring Paddy McQuire, Gypsy Abbott, Arthur Moon, Edward Laurie.

Director Jacques Jaccard, who is directing the serial "Liberty" with Marie Walcamp in the leading role, is having built at Universal City the duplicate of Columbus, New Mexico.

"Big Ed" Sedgwick, the 300-pound Universal comedian, has been given a company of his own, and will be starred in a series of one-reel comedies under the direction of Roy Clements. "The Texas Boy" as Ed is known throughout the Southland brings a wealth of stage experience to the screen, having toured with his own company "The Cabaret Girls" and in vaudeville with the Five Sedgwicks."

Julian Louis Lamothe, recently on the scenario staff of the American Film Company and before that with Lubin, is now free-lancing in the Los Angeles picture colony.

Lucille Young has been selected by the Fine Arts studio to play opposite Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree during the latter's several months' stay at this studio.

Nell Shipman appears as a western camp entertainer in her first Fox play.

Doris Baker, the talented nine-year-old actress, is at Huntington Lake with the Fox Company in the making of several pictures.

Edward Sloman is to direct William Russell in the next three of the series of eight William Russell productions. Russell has directed the preceding pictures himself.

Crane Wilbur, since announcing that he could take an ordinary sales girl or stenographer and make a good supporting actress of her for picture work, is being snowed under with letters from picture-struck girls throughout the country.

Jack Warren Kerrigan, whose contract with the Universal Company expires in October, has received a flattering offer for thirty-two weeks in vaudeville.

Agnes Vernon has returned to Universal City after a month's trout-fishing at Big Bear Lake and is being featured opposite Herbert Rawlinson in a story entitled "The Heart of Big Bonanza," under the direction of William Lowery.

Carter De Haven has the role of a pugilist in the Red Feather five-reel production, "From Broadway to a Throne."

Neal Hart, who has charge of the equestrian service in the production of the Universal serial, "Liberty," was once a cowboy on a horse ranch in the Sioux Reservation in South Dakota. Later he joined the navy and served on the U. S. S. Panther during the Spanish-American war. After further experience as a cowboy, in 1908 he joined the 101 Wild West Show as a bucking horse rider. Two years ago he came to California and joined the Universal forces.

Zoe Rae recently celebrated the sixth anniversary of her birth by giving a party to the children of all the studios in Los Angeles at the Hotel Alexandria. More than fifty little guests were present.

Cleo Madison's invalid sister, Helen, has returned to her home from the hospital, where she underwent an operation for appendicitis.

Al Green, the newest Selig director, who was assistant to Director Colin Campbell in the production of his feature pictures, began the filming of his first picture, "The Temptation of Adam," on his twenty-fifth birthday.

Art Acord, cowboy star formerly with the American Company, will head the Western Gotham Company, whose studio is located at Colorado Springs. Gertrude Bondhill will be the leading lady. Otis B. Thayer, whose production, "The Unborn," attracted attention, will direct.

Gladys Brockwell and Mabel Van Buren are in the cast supporting Nell Shipman in her first Fox picture, which Oscar Apfel is directing.

War plays an important part in five big features being produced at Universal City at present. Director Joseph De Grasse is filming "If My Country Should Call," while Henry McRae is making a Mexican border romance called "Behind the Lines." Robert Leonard is directing a preparedness film entitled "The Eagle's Wings." There are battle scenes in "Twenty Leagues Under the Sea," which Stuart Paton is directing, while the new Universal serial, "Liberty," is a war story.

Thomas Santschi is to be starred in a five-reel Selig production directed by Marshall Neilan, "The Country God Forgot." Mary Carleton and George Fawcett are among the supporting players.

"The Light of Western Stars," by

UNIVERSAL LOSES GUNN

Charles Gunn, who has attained a big name as a juvenile lead both in Eastern and Western stock and productions, has tendered his resignation to the Universal Company after a happy six-months' affiliation with this firm. He had a big part in the big feature, "The Eagle's Wings," now under direction by Robert Leonard.

Charles Gunn, juvenile lead.

His only reason for leaving the Universal Company is his ambition to find the big opportunity for which every one hopes and which, as regards Mr. Gunning, the latter things should be somewhere in the immediate offering. He leaves this company with the success-wishes of its executives.

We might make some such pun as "He's sure-fire," etc., but we restrain ourselves.

Zane Grey, is to be picturized by the Selig Company in from five to ten reels. Kathlyn Williams, Tom Mix, Marshall Neilan and George Fawcett will appear in the cast of players.

Gilson Willets, author of many of the Selig photoplays, once made a journey by sled through Siberia for American publications.

Eugenie Magnus Ingleton, now with the Universal scenario department, is the author of a three-act fairy opera entitled "Aphrodite," built on an old sea legend, which will have its premiere in New York in the fall.

Vivian Rich has severed connections with the American Film Corporation to play opposite Tyrone Power in the twelve-reel feature, "The Wandering Jew," produced by the Dudley Motion Picture Company of Redlands, Cal.

Grace Carlyle, well known on the legitimate stage and in pictures, is Director Robert Leonard's new leading lady for the five-reel production, "The Eagle's Wings." Miss Carlyle's first picture was "The Rosary," produced by the Smalleys.

Marie Walcamp and Eddie Polo, two stars of the Universal serial, "Liberty," which starts August 14, are featured in the three-reel melodramatic Gold Seal feature, "Onda of the Orient," written by Ben Cohn and Walter Woods, and produced by Henry McRae. The background and atmosphere of the story are Hawaiian.

Linnie Lee was thrown and broke her arm while riding in a scene in "The Redemption of Cactus Moore," at Universal City. The slipping of the saddle caused her fall.

The directors, actors and actresses, who recently have reached Universal City from the eastern studios of the company, were tendered a reception and dance by the players at the Big U plant, in the ballroom of the Ebell Club, Los Angeles, August 5th. A number of the leading players from the other studios were among the guests of honor.

CHICAGO GOSSIP

Exterior scenes for "The Return of Eve," five-act Essanay feature, which were started in the Dells of Wisconsin, will be completed in Pennsylvania.

Three Francis X. Bushman reissues are on the Essanay General Film program for August. These include "The Three Scratch Clue," released August 8; "A Man for a' That," August 22, and "His Stolen Fortune," August 29.

Lewis S. Stone has gone hunting and fishing in Canada, several hundred miles above the border.

Bryant Washburn had to show his ability as a tennis player for several scenes in "The Prince of Graustark," which Essanay is filming in five reels.

Eugene O'Brien, Essanay leading man, finds riding, swimming and tennis his chief summer sports.

"Dreamy Dud," the character made famous in Wallace A. Carlson's animated cartoons, is back again and is scheduled to appear twice on Essanay's program for September. He will be accompanied by five hundred feet of scenic.

TWO of the last film exchanges of the small number left on Main Street, have moved into "Film Row," on Commerce street, in Dallas. These are the Edward Earl, vice-president, Nicholas Power Company.

Exclusive Feature Film Service and the United Program Film Service.

This makes a total of fourteen exchanges in the 1900 Block on Commerce Street, and with the Pathe and General in the next block above, "Film Row" (Commerce Street) is much ahead of "Movie Alley" (as the Commerce boys call Main).

The firms in the trade that remain on Main are H. K. Barnett Film & Supply Co., Progressive Feature Film Co., Mutual Film Corp., United Music Co., and the Southern Theater Equipment Co.

L. L. Hensley, the energetic Universal manager at Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, believes in grabbing a good thing when he sees it. Some time ago, the Universal offices in New York City offered a monthly prize of $100 for the exchange manager turning in the greatest amount of gross increase in business for the month. Hensley started things off by winning the first one—and the one he got last month was No. 3 for him. As the general offices of the Universal tagged on to their prize offer, a clause that the manager who won the contest five times would be entitled to $1,000 increase in salary, in addition to the $100 contest, it may not be long before a brand new big touring car of late design will be seen standing in front of the Universal office in Oklahoma City. Not that "L. L." hasn't a car now—he has; but a thousand bucks added to "what you've got" will go a long way toward getting a big car nowadays.

On Sunday, July 9, picture houses in Fort Worth opened at 2 o'clock p. m., the first time since the agitation in March and the election in April, which allowed them to open.

In Texas, there is an old law on the statute books making it unlawful for a large number of businesses to "open" on the Sabbath. Picture shows or any kind of theaters, ice cream parlors, cigar stands, book stores—practically everything except drug stores (and they can sell only drugs), restaurants, and such places that sell "necessities" of life, must remain closed according to this old law. In a large number of towns and cities, in fact almost all over the State, it is absolutely disregarded except in its application to picture theaters. Dallas, San Antonio, Houston and Galveston and a number of other towns, have Sunday theaters, and have not been bothered in a long time. Fort Worth and Waco have been "having it" for several months.

About two years ago, an initiative act was passed in the State legislature, so that cities of a certain population, could decide whether they wanted various things or not. The pros in the picture business claim this permits cities to vote whether they shall have Sunday picture shows or not—the Pastors' Associations (agitators against Sunday theaters) claim the old State law makes it strictly unlawful for theaters to operate on the Sabbath.

In March, Fort Worth had an election to determine whether Sunday amusements would be allowed. The vote was heavily in favor of Sunday theaters, and because of various threats of the Pastors' Association in that city, the houses did not open until the 9th.

All during the day, the streets of Fort Worth's business section were crowded, and the exhibitors had "old time big business." But on Monday morning, bright and early, they were arrested, charged with violating the old Texas statute. They will not be tried until during the last of July, and the outcome is watched with interest all over the state.

"Candy Jim" Athas, who runs the Candy Jim Airdome at Taylor, Texas, was "blown up" on film service July 8. He took on the "I should worry" attitude and with his wife, took a spin in his automobile—to nearby towns. He picked up two-reels at one place, and a single-reel comedy at another, and soon had a full program and to spare. The airdome that night had quite a crowd, showing that the people appreciate "scheming for their pleasure," whether it is in Taylor or Timbuctoo.

Barr & Hughes have bought Otto Heilig's opera house at New Braunfels, Texas, and will make a number of improvements before fall.

The Strand at Fort Worth, Texas, was damaged by fire at 3 a. m. on the morning of July 3. It will be completely remodeled at an early date. J. D. Wheelan owns the house and Jess Warden is manager.

M. L. Oppenheimer has taken over the Strand Theater at San Antonio, Texas, formerly under the Lytle-Eppstein combination.

Jesse Williams, manager of the Majestic at Drumright, Oklahoma, will also manage the new airdome which will shortly be completed.

A new film company has been organized at Muskogee, Oklahoma, the Phoenix Motion Picture Company, with offices in the English Block. Al Bartlett, formerly of Atlanta, Georgia, where he was doing commercial work, is president of the new concern. They will devote their energies at first to commercial work.

W. L. Landers, manager of the Gem, has leased the Princess at Batesville, Arkansas, for another year.

Marion Earle, one of the latest to migrate from boards to screen, and engaged by the Rialto Film Corporation to shed her beauty upon a September release.

SOUTHWESTERN NEWS

By William Noble.

Special Correspondent for Motography.

A blowout on the road when G. L. Keller's big touring car was running at a high rate of speed from Overland Park, in Kansas City, Missouri, where a set of the "Sunflower Princess" is being filmed, caused the car to plunge into the ditch a mile from its destination. There were thirteen persons in the car, Mr. G. L. Keller and twelve pretty Kansas girls, amateur movie actresses, who were to participate in enacting the scene before the camera. The thirteen passengers were thrown from the car into a hedge along the roadside. Miss Maude Davidson, 18 years old, suffered a broken arm and all of the other occupants of the car suffered painful scratches and bruises.

A strike of huge proportions is on at Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, by stage hands and other employes demanding an increase in wages. The White Rats Society has taken a hand, demanding that only White Rats be employed. The strikers have leased the Metropolitan Theater and are showing vaudeville with White Rats vaudeville actors. Managers have advertised for operators to take the place of strikers. Electric pianos have taken the place of musicians in some of the theaters; some of the theaters are using non-union men. Placards have been posted with the names of the two theaters that have signed the scale demanded. The Trades Council has been asked to declare a boycott on the unfair theaters, if the strikers' claims are not met.

THE big Willis Wood Theater at Kansas City, has gone back to stock, and will discontinue pictures after September 17. Motion pictures will be continued however, throughout the summer.

Frank Wilks has leased the Palace Theater at Syracuse, Nebraska.

A new picture theater will be erected at York, Nebraska, in the near future.

Eddie Thieman has purchased the theater at Deshler, Nebraska.

Frank Shedek has commenced the erection of a new picture house at Lost Nation, Iowa.

J. A. Knight has purchased the Gem Theater at Wapello, Iowa.

Victor Pirette has leased the Lyric Theater at Mystic, Iowa.

Edward Quirk has taken over the film house at Vail, Iowa.

The history of Missouri from the date of its discovery in 1941 down to the present time is being depicted in local motion pictures. A local corporation has commenced a series of twelve films, which will be shown in schools all over the state.

W. G. Houck will open a new moving picture house at Conrad, Iowa, soon.

C. R. Scott and F. M. Sanford have purchased Texas rights to show "The Yellow Menace," "Tweedledum and Tweedledee" comedies; "Diana the Huntress," "The Mariage Bond," "Tom and Jerry" comedies, and "My Country First." Scott and Sanford have opened up offices in Dallas, Texas, and also contemplate opening an exchange in New Orleans.

Jacobs, Landry and Marks have taken over the management of the Ideal theater at New Orleans, Louisiana.

The Lyric Theater, New Orleans, Louisiana, was recently sold to the highest bidder to satisfy a court judgment.

W. R. Cushman has taken over the People's Theater, at New Orleans, and remodeled same.

Herman Fichtenberg has taken over the Globe Theater at New Orleans, and will spend about $35,000 in improvements.

The Beverly Theater at New Orleans has closed.

Mesa and Weitkam are erecting a new theater in New Orleans, Louisiana, which will seat 1,000 people.

A new motion picture theater is being built at Montgomery, Alabama.

Leo Salkin, formerly with George Kleine, New York City, has been transferred to New Orleans.

H. G. Cushman is erecting a new picture house at Conway, Arkansas.

The Hippodrome Theater in Dallas, Texas, will soon reopen with feature pictures.

B. F. Tucker has opened a new picture house at Diboll, Texas.

B. C. Lively has opened a new theater at Grapeland, Texas.

J. R. Menke has opened a new picture house at Burton, Texas.

M. M. Killeen has opened the new Pastime Theater at Newton, Texas.

R. R. Hess has opened the new Moonshine Auditorium at Humble, Texas.

R. K. LeSaint will erect a new $10,000 theater at Texas City, Texas.

King and James have opened their new airdome at Broken Bow, Oklahoma, and are showing pictures and stock to big business.

The Star Theater which was burned at Smithville, Texas, recently, is being rebuilt. The new house will seat 600.

Miss E. Johnson has remodeled the Key Theater at Houston, Texas. Miss Johnson also operates the Lincoln Theater at Houston, which shows to colored people only.

T. V. Humphrey has remodeled the Pastime Theater at Canadian, Texas, and installed new opera chairs.

Paul Baracco has opened a new picture house at Houston, Texas. The new house seats 600.

The C. D. Mitchell building, Chattanooga, Tennessee, is to be remodeled and made over into a 1,500-seat picture theater.

Herman M. Rhodes has purchased the Lyceum Theater building at Memphis, Tennessee, from Albert Weiss. The consideration was $175,000.

Ruth Stonehouse, Universal.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than clsasification by makes, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

The Adopted Brother—BIOGRAPH—AUGUST 21.—Featuring Dorothy Gish and Robert Harron. The adopted brother of this family is the sole support, while the old gray-haired father sits by the fire, the young daughter looks after the house and the degenerate brother goes off to the saloon with his questionable companions. The adopted brother saves an author who gets in with his brother and his companions, from becoming a drunkard and is the means of encouraging him into a fresh start. Later he sees his brother and his companions waylay a man and rob him of his money. They pursue him into the nearby bushes and threaten him until he agrees to keep silent, but a strong sense of rebellion against his degenerate brother arises in the boy's mind and he tells the sheriff the truth and the brother and his friends are brought to justice.

The Far Journey—(TWO REELS)—SELIG—AUGUST 21.—Featuring Harry Mestayer and Marion Warner. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

A Man for A' That—(TWO REELS)—ESSANAY—AUGUST 22.—Featuring Francis X. Bushman. Frank Willard, a wealthy clubman, becomes disgusted with society. He chances to see a newsboy sharing his slender funds with a beggar, and this gives him an idea. He will live among the poor and obtain their point of view. Clothing himself in shabby attire, he leaves a note for Grace Meredith telling her he has gone out of the city and then seeks the newsboy. He says he is out of work and starving and the boy takes him into his own home where he lives with his grown sister, Ruth Davis. Willard goes to work as a laborer and continues to live with them. The girl falls in love with him and he reciprocates the affection. One day the boy comes home excitedly displaying a paper with the photographs of Willard and Miss Meredith and the announcement of their engagement. He accuses Frank of deceiving his sister. Willard leaves but is overtaken by Ruth and together they go to his home. There they find a letter notifying Willard that Grace Meredith has eloped with Count Ver Sailles.

The Usurer's Due—LUBIN—AUGUST 22.—Featuring L. C. Shumway and Velma Whitman. Henry Dell becomes involved in debt to Martin Keen, a loan shark, and when he dies his widow discovers that Keen holds a judgment note for $125 for which her furniture is security. On the day that the widow Dell must either pay or get out Larry Finn, leader of a gang, is pursued by the leader of another gang and he seeks safety in the home of Mrs. Dell and when Martin Keen arrives for his money he hears him bullying and threatening Mrs. Dell. Finn tells the widow to follow Keen and tell him that if he will return in a few hours the note will be paid, and then he borrows the money of an Italian fruit dealer in the vicinity. He gives the money to Mrs. Dell and she pays the note and then destroys it. Keen starts back to his office, but on the way he meets an unidentified footpad who relieves him of his purse. Later in the evening Finn returns the money to the fruit dealer and several months later Mrs. Dell changes her name to Finn.

Seven Days—(THREE REELS)—BIOGRAPH—AUGUST 23.—Featuring Charles Mailes and Louise Orth. Jim Wilson secures a divorce from his wife, Bella, and a year later he gives a dinner to celebrate the anniversary of his divorce. On the night of the dinner Talka, Jim's Jap butler, is taken ill and taken to the hospital. Bella, who is passing as Talka, is being taken to the hospital, thinks the invalid is her husband and determines to know the truth. She enters the house and meets Mr. and Mrs. Brown, Tom Harbison and Kit McNair, Jim's friends who have been invited to the dinner. The Board of Health diagnose Talka's illness as smallpox and orders the house quarantined. Bella hides in the cellar and accidentally falls into the coal bin and Jim discovers her and she tells him she came to see the cook. On the seventh day of the quarantine, the occupants of the Wilson home are very nervous and upset, but finally everything turns out all right and Jim and Bella settle their difficulties.

The Fable of How Wisenstein Did Not Lose Out to Buttinsky—ESSANAY—AUGUST 23.—Once there was a Steady who overplayed his Stand-In and came within an Ace of Losing his Ticket. One Evening he took a Friend with him to inspect the One Best Bet. The Friend, a clever two-handed boy, had practiced a few holds of his own. He declared himself in on the Close-up and made it a Three-some. Neither was a Quitter. Wisenstein played a deep system. He painted Buttinsky in bright colors and told the girl that lot of Women were spreading their nets for dear old Buttinsky. When the lady urged Buttinsky to demonstrate his Accomplishments he sang in a tenor that straightened the Princess out and had her biting at the Doilies. He helped matters a lot by advising the Princess to have no Dealings with a man who Drank, meaning Wisenstein. She became indignant because he roasted his friend who had always spoken so Lovely of him, and immediately classed Buttinsky as a false alarm.—Moral: Beware of the Friend who tells how Good you are.

"Nell Dale's Men Folks," the American drama, is at the top; then comes Vogue's "Going to the Dogs," and the Beauty "In a Prohibition Town." All are Mutual releases, of course.

Their Honeymoon—VIM—AUGUST 24.—Featuring Babe Hardy and Billy Ruge. Starting on their honeymoon, young Mrs. Plump decides to carry their cash in the form of gold pieces sewed on her coat as buttons. Attacked by tramps, the coat is stolen and the shock makes Ma-in-Law ill. Wifey telephones to Mr. Plump to hasten home. He is arrested for speeding and put in jail. Here he recognizes one of the thugs, pinched for another crime. The judge is told of the thug's attack and Plump phones to tell wifey of his capture. The lost coat is discovered among the tramp's belongings and Plump, tearing off one of the buttons, cheerfully pays his fine and once more breathes the fresh air.

The Tryout—VIM—AUGUST 25.—Featuring Robt. Burns and Walter Stull. Pokes sees a sign hanging in front of a studio "Extra Wanted." He jumps at the opportunity and is told to report the following morning for a tryout. Jabbs, the director of the company to which Pokes is assigned, is in no pleasant mood when Pokes reports on the following morning. After several rehearsals Jabbs is almost frantic and determines to give Pokes only one more chance. This time when the cameraman is grinding and everything is running smoothly, Pokes really does appear, but instead of following the routine ordered by Jabbs, Pokes runs amuck and starts shooting at everybody in the cast. When Pokes emerges from the set chasing everybody before him at the point of his revolver, consternation reigns on the big studio stage, and all the members of the various companies seek refuge behind wings and chairs. Pokes continues on his wild journey until finally Jabbs in self-defense unites all the studio employes to turn upon the luckless Pokes and succeeds in subduing him after a hard struggle.

The Face in the Mirror—(THREE REELS)—ESSANAY—AUGUST 26.—Featuring Edmund F. Cobb. A letter from the penitentiary informs Helen Terrane that Conway Royle, her first sweetheart, has been drowned while escaping. Hardly does she finish reading it than through her mirror she sees his face as he peers in a window. She mentions it to her husband, who sneers at her. Angered, she tells him she believes it was his treachery that sent Royle to prison, and declares that she married him only because of a letter from Royle urging such. Gail Harvey phones Terrane as he is about to leave his home and by threats of revealing how the two committed the bank theft for which Royle was sentenced, demands money. He goes to the Terrane home that evening. Royle, who was believed drowned because he left his prison clothes near a swamp, has secreted himself in the house. He overhears how the two plotters had him, their fellow bank clerk, accused of the crime. Helen, too, overhears and compels Harvey to telephone a confession to the newspapers. The police arrive, but Terrane picks up the pistol his wife had laid down and ends his life. Royle and Helen begin anew.

Roping a Sweetheart—SELIG—AUGUST 26.—Featuring Tom Mix and Victoria Forde. Vicky Weathers arrives home from the East and Tom and Sid, cowboys on her father's ranch, fall in love with her. Tom secures an ancient ram and Sid a calf, and they practice marriage proposals, not knowing that Vicky, her father and the other cowboys form a hidden audience which greatly enjoys the performance. Finally each resolves to capture Vicky and they engage in a roping contest. Tom ropes the girl and receives nothing but a scolding. Sid believes he has won her hand, but soon discovers that she will have nothing to do with him, and finally the two decide that all women are fickle.

Mutual Pictures

Enchantment—(Two Reels)—American—August 21.—Featuring Vivian Rich and Alfred Vosburgh. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

Going to the Dogs—Vogue—August 22.—Featuring Paddy McQuire. The story opens with the man about town and his wife at breakfast. He has a big head from his celebration of the night before with the dog-catcher's cabaret wife. The dogcatcher starts on his daily work and encounters all kinds of mishaps in dog chasing and is quite a failure until he steals the man about town's wife's poodle. She takes him home to get the license money, where they are caught by the man about town's sudden return home. The dogcatcher is shoved into an ice box, where he enjoys himself while hubby hunts for him. The cabaret singer suddenly comes on the scene, pushes her way into the house and demands her husband. A mix-up occurs, the dogcatcher falls out of the ice box, is spied by hubby, chased with a gun and after a long run finishes, running into the ocean as the sun sets for the finish.

In a Prohibition Town—Beauty—August 23.—Featuring Orral Humphrey. Mr. Boozely, although residing in a prohibition town, manages to keep himself supplied with the demon rum. When Mrs. Boozely, who is a temperance advocate, discovers Boozely taking a nip from a bottle she seizes it and hurls it through the window, striking a peddler. Boozely dashes from the house to find a drink and snatches a bottle from men drinking only to discover that it is ginger ale. He spies men entering a suspicious-looking joint by giving a secret rap, and thinking it is a blind pig emporium he gains an entrance. He barely escapes from this place with his life as it is an anarchist meeting. When he reaches home he finds an express package of rum awaiting him, but he hurls it out of the window and vows "Never again."

Nell Dale's Men Folks—(Two Reels)—Mustang—August 25.—Featuring Anna Little and Frank Borzage. Bart Trevis and Young Remsen are rivals for the hand of Nell Dale, whose father runs a small decent road house on the main trail between distant towns. She favors Trevis and through circumstantial evidence he is involved in a crime. He escapes to the road house and Nell hides him until the sheriff and his posse have left the road house. That evening Bert and Nell leave the country and start life anew in another part of the country.

The Spite Husband—Centaur—August 26.—Featuring Mae Gaston and Crane Wilbur. When Katherine Mortimer, a rich and eccentric young lady, learns that she has been jilted by her fiance, Horace Castlebury, she vows to marry the first man she meets. She is rescued from drowning by Bill, a fisherman. Katherine persuades Bill, who is the first man she met, to become her husband in name only by telling him that her money will further his ambition as an artist. Castlebury and his wife come to the seashore where Katherine is staying and he sees through her ruse and immediately starts another affair with Katherine, whom he finds a willing victim. Bill's attention is finally brought to this state of affairs and he brings matters to a climax when he interrupts a secret meeting and gives Castlebury a thrashing. Bill renounces Katherine in a stormy scene and returns to his fisherman's hut on the shore. It is then that Katherine discovers that she really loves her "spite husband," and the following morning she follows him and pleads with him to take her back.

The Secret of the Submarine, No. 15—(Two Reels)—American—August 28.—Featuring Juanita Hansen and Tom Chatterton. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

Universal Program

A Thousand a Week—(Two Reels)—An Episode of "Timothy Dobbs—That's Me"—August 21.—Featuring Carter De Haven. Timothy arrives in the West, but is not accorded the welcome he expected. Unable to convince anyone of his superior talents, Tim is forced to start as an "extra." Tim's efforts to monopolize the "hero stuff" afford some comical scenes. Finally, when the director's patience will hold out no longer, Tim is rescued from serious injury by his man, Jenkins.

Riding With Death—(Two Reels)—Episode II of "Liberty"—August 21.—Featuring Marie Walcamp, Jack Holt and Eddie Polo. Through the help of Pedro, the faithful servant, Liberty escapes her captors and makes for her camp, which she finally reaches after flirting with death. Rutledge has a chance to put his rival, Manuel, out of the way, but is dissuaded by Liberty from this act. Later Rutledge barely escapes death at the hands of Manuel.

Broke, But Ambitious—Nestor—August 21.—With Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran. Eddie and Lee, shipped as cooks on a yacht, try their best to win the favor of the Captain's daughter. Now one youth, and now the other, pleases the charming girl, but finally she is taken with mal de mer. The captain offers his ship to the one who will procure a lemon for his daughter. Eddie is the fortunate one. He is subsequently made captain, and Lee, seasick, and ignored by the girl, is left miserable.

Brennon o' the Moor—(Two Reels)—Universal Special Feature—August 21.—Written and produced by Francis Ford and Grace Cunard, this picture also features these stars. The main character is a sort of Robin Hood highwayman, stealing from the lords in Ireland and giving to the widows and poor. He becomes a friend of his rival in love, and the latter, realizing that his chances are nil, helps Willy in every way, finally delivering the bandit from the hands of the mayor of the town, who seeks to have him shot. Having evaded death by a cleverly worked plan, Willy takes his sweetheart and escapes to America.

The Castle of Despair—(Three Reels)—Gold Seal—August 22.—Featuring Malcolm Blevins, Neva Gerber and Carl Von Schiller. Produced by Ben Wilson. John Alden neglects his wife and child to become a power in Wall Street. Ruth holds out for a long while against her husband's unbearable indifference, but finally succumbs to the tempter in the person of one Morrison, whose constant attentions to Ruth are the polar opposite of Alden's neglect. Once on the train, however, Ruth regrets her elopement and escapes from Morrison with her child. She supports the child by turning her hands to art for the period of two years, when, her husband seeing his mistake, seeks her out and there is a happy reconciliation.

A Double Double-Cross—L-Ko—August 23.—With Billy Armstrong. This story concerns three men and one girl. Mac, a sailor, gets in wrong with his employer for flirting, thus losing his job to his rival. The later takes the girl for a ride, but while he is out he loses his temper and throws her overboard. Then Mac, in spite of his rough treatment, goes to the rescue.

The Devil's Own—Big U—August 24.—This picture, featuring Harry Carey and Olive F. Golden, is about "Shifty," a member of a gang of outlaws, who is noted for his indisposition to fight. It tells of how the gang loots a stage and the leader captures a girl riding on it. The appealing look on the girl's face arouses "Shifty" thoroughly. His struggle with the leader follows, in which both men are killed, while the girl escapes safely.

You Want Something—(Two Reels)—Victor—August 24.—This story, by Stella Ann Ellis, was awarded the $100 prize offered by the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World. In entertaining and comical style it shows how a young advertising agent convinces an old shoe manufacturer of the virtues of advertising, and is awarded the latter's charming daughter for his compelling efforts.

The Panel Game—(Two Reels)—Imp—August 25.—Featuring G. Raymond Nye and Roberta Wilson. Written and produced by Jacques Jaccard. Vincent Lee, a crook, and Nan Larson, living by her wits, club together at a shore hotel to do mutual business. Jonathan Harkness and his wife, typical country people, are stopping at the hotel. The story proceeds to show how Nan works her wiles upon Jonathan, how she finally lures him to her room and prepares things so that Lee can enter and find them in an embarrassing position. In order that any of this nicely prepared scandal may not be conveyed to his wife, Jonathan hands over $1,000.

Sammy Johnsin in Mexico—(Split Reel)—Powers—August 25.—In this comedy cartoon, Sammy, not heeding a warning of blasting, is blown into the land of cactus. Here he has many adventures trying to capture a bandit, finally being dissuaded from his purpose when a chicken crosses his path. The darky gets neither the fowl nor the bandit, but is nearly killed by ferocious Mexicans. One the same reel is:

Creating Life from a Dead Leaf—This picture shows how a dried lettuce leaf, crumbled in a glass of water, can furnish nourishment for the growth of a whole colony of bacteria.

The Trail of Chance—(Two Reels)—Bison—August 26.—Mary Fuller featured. In this drama an innocent man is about to be hung because he cannot prove his identity. A delayed letter is the cause of the man's inability to prove that he is not the one wanted for murder. But at the last minute fate takes a twist, a lynching is averted, and the man's rival in love, who has planned his destruction, is foiled.

Snoring in High C—L-Ko—August 27.—With Reggie Morris and Gertrude Selby. A comedy in which a loving husband and wife, the latter's jilted suitor, and a eugenic bride selected by Father, not knowing of the marriage, figure. Father's selection falls in love with Gertie, the wife, who has donned men's clothing to avoid discovery. The jilted suitor finally starts on the war path and then the real trouble starts. However, the love between Gertie and her husband has the ultimate triumph.

Feature Programs

Blue Bird

Little Eva Edgarton—(Five Reels)—Bluebird—August 21.—Featuring Ella Hall and Herbert Rawlinson in this adaptation from the well-known book by Eleanor H. Abbott. Eva Edgarton, daughter of a botanist, who has been brought up in an impersonal and studious atmosphere, longs for a home and the things that go with it, but her father is unable to see her viewpoint. A large convention of botanists is to be held in Los Angeles and Eva and her father come here to attend it. Elsa Barton introduces Eva to her handsome and frivolous cousin, James Barton, and he becomes interested in her when she confesses to him that she desires to be as unscientific and unbotanical as possible. Elsa is touched for the girl's longing for a home, and with the aid of a few gowns she transforms Eva into a beautiful girl and immediately James falls in love with her. Doris Pawn, Gretchen Lederer, Thomas Jefferson and Marc Fenton complete the cast. Robert Leonard directed the production.

Fox

Sporting Blood—(Five Reels)—William Fox—August 14.—Featuring Dorothy Bernard and Glen White. This story deals with the defeat of a corrupt racing promoter by the brother of a woman he has wronged and the sister of a young man he has ruined financially. Working together, the man and the girl defeat the corrupt race king at his own game. A wager of $10,000 made by the latter against the girl affords food for a good climax. The picture was directed by Bertram Bracken. Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

SCULPTOR A STUDIO NECESSITY

Several years ago, when the business of making photo-dramas was struggling for a happier existence, the sculptor was unheard-of as an adjunct of a producing plant. He was privileged to command such an astonishing salary that it was little short of impossible to engage him. And aside from that fact, the products of his skill were not in demand. It was a simple matter to make a picture-play without the services of stautuary. But today, the sculptor enjoys an important place in the industry. His work is doing much to embellish otherwise unpretentious productions and he appears to be becoming more firmly established as a necessity.

The use of a sculptoring department in the modern motion picture plant is declared to compel attention in a recent subject from Inceville, "The Captive God," the Triangle Kay Bee play in which William S. Hart is presented as star by Thomas H. Ince. This is an Aztec story and being illustrative of the customs and architecture of the Aztec Indians was severe in its demands on the art department.

An inkling of the importance of the sculptoring department to this play is evident from the fact that nearly 300 tons of plaster were employed in the making of settings. Practically all the settings were made of plaster placques, approximately 1,800 of which were used in one setting alone. Six men are permanently employed in the Ince sculptoring department and they were all busy for nearly six weeks creating the settings for the production.

LOCOMOTIVE BLOWN UP

A spectacular piece of realism is being planned for the filming of several of the important scenes of "The Manager of the B. & A.," the forthcoming Signal-Mutual star production, featuring Helen Holmes.

The plot of the story, adapted for the screen from Vaughn Kester's story of the same name, calls for the actual blowing up of a locomotive while it is moving at high speed. As a result of the destruction of the mogul, a fire, which rapidly spreads to the surrounding country, follows, ending with the devastation of a large section of the forest land.

Because of the vast sum of money required in the filming of these particular scenes, it was at first decided to eliminate the explosion of the locomotive entirely, but when Director General J. P. McGowan realized that the dependent action was regarded as too vital to eliminate it from the production he immediately decided to go through with the scene regardless of cost.

Director General McGowan immediately obtained the necessary permits from the proper authorities and completed arrangements with a railroad company for the staging of the scene.

So far as can be learned, this is the first time in the history of motion picture annals that any film company has completely blown up an honest to goodness railroad locomotive just to get the proper atmosphere.

Rewards of two hundred and fifty dollars each have been offered by the director general to the three men whose presence in the locomotive is essential. These men will remain in the engine cab until but a few moments before the explosion and must trust to luck to get away without injury to themselves.

CHRISTUS

George Fisher, the young actor who played the difficult role of "The Christus" in Thomas H. Ince's masterpiece, "Civilization," is a good looking young fellow who stands six feet in his stockings, has brown hair and eyes and "looks like a million dollars" on the screen.

George Fisher, as Christ in Ince's "Civilization."

Where the least false movement or slightest irreverent gesture would have sounded a jarring note in the huge spectacle of the ravages of war, Fisher carried through the delicate part with a dignity and grace that brought him much praise. The multiple-reel drama was enhanced by his ability to bring the spirit of religion into the impressive scenes.

Fisher was born of English parents at Republic, Michigan. His first position was with a stock company in Milwaukee. After several periods of stock, he reached Los Angeles and was persuaded by Reginald Barker, one of the directors with Thomas H. Ince, to try his hand at pictures. He was engaged by Mr. Ince and has been with him ever since, taking juvenile leads, principally, at Culver City, and Inceville, the two New York motion picture studios. During the eighteen months he has been there he has played all sorts of parts, and is one of the best young actors in the profession.

August 12, the formal opening of Harvey Hanson's new Palace in Antigo took place. The new theater is 174x43 feet and seats 1,200 people.

The Pastime theater company, John G. Froidel and Jacob O. Schmidt, of Sheboygan, Michigan, have dissolved partnership. The theater will be closed for about two weeks for repairs and improvements and will be opened and operated by Jacob O. Schmidt.

Are You Buying Pictures in the Dark?

SELECTING pictures from a "grab bag," with your eyes blindfolded, is not very different from binding yourself by contract to take what is sent you.

In both instances you are relying upon the element of "luck," instead of upon your own judgment and knowledge of the likes and dislikes of your patrons.

When you book V. L. S. E. Features, you eliminate this hazard, because you, yourself pick what you want, instead of having someone else tell you what you will get.

Your only embarrassment is the wealth of good things from which to select.

Brady Made President of Association

PLANS INAUGURATED FOR NATION-WIDE POLITICAL CAMPAIGN

PLANS for a nation-wide political campaign that will take an active part in the coming Presidential election were inaugurated at the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry held on August 16 at the Hotel Astor, New York City.

Representatives of all branches of the trade were present and the importance of the conference was emphasized by the appearance of many delegates from the west representing the interests of the exhibitors. The session began at eleven in the morning and continued without recess until seven at night.

William A. Brady of the World Film Corporation was elected president of the association and Thomas Furniss of Duluth; Adolph Zukor, Lasky-Famous Players Company; Don J. Bell; Hiram Abrams, Paramount; and Arthur James, Metro; were made vice-presidents. J. E. Brulatour of the Eastman Company was elected treasurer; W. M. Seabury, general counsel; and Frederick H. Elliot, formerly executive secretary of the Safety First Federation of America, executive secretary.

William A. Brady, President.

The Presidential candidates will be approached and asked for an expression of their opinion, as will also candidates for governor of every state where a governor is to be elected this fall. A war fund of generous proportions has already been subscribed.

At this meeting for the first time in its history the industry was able to unite on a definite program of defense against oppressive legislation, improper taxation and what the industry considers unfair treatment from public officials. All branches of the industry were represented including film manufacturers, distributors, makers of raw material, accessory men, theater owners, managers, equipment and supply men, stars, directors, cameramen, studio managers and employees. The following directors were present: Producers—Adolph Zukor, William A. Brady and William L. Sherrill. Distributors—W. W. Irwin, P. A. Powers, R. A. Rowland, Hiram Abrams and E. A. McManus. Exhibitors—A. P. Tugwell, of Los Angeles; Thomas Furniss, of Duluth, Minn., and S. H. Trigger and L. L. Levine, from New York City. Supply Class—Jules Brulatour, Don J. Bell and J. H.

Thomas Furniss.

Adolph Zukor.

Hiram Abrams.

Arthur James.

Four of the Vice Presidents

Hallberg. Miscellaneous Class—Arthur James, W. Stephen Bush, Paul Gulick and Fred Gunning. These directors were present: J. Stuart Blackton, Carl Laemmle, B. F. Porter, William H. Moore and Fred Beecroft.

An active campaign will be participated in by 10,000 motion picture exhibitors throughout the United States. The discussion of the exhibitors present was lead by Judge A. P. Tugwell of Los Angeles, Thomas H. Furniss of Duluth, F. J. Herrington of Pittsburg, Peter J. Jeup of Detroit, M. A. Choynsky of Chicago, together with Louis Blumenthal, S. H. Trigger and L. L. Levine of New York.

The protective work in the state and national political campaigns was referred to an executive committee of nine composed of W. W. Irwin, Adolph Zukor, Arthur James, P. A. Powers, William L. Sherrill, Jules Brulatour, S. H. Trigger, L. L. Levine and L. F. Blumenthal.

Temporary headquarters will be selected for the immediate start on the campaign which will include propaganda on 20,000 motion picture screens in the country which it is estimated will reach 20,000,000 people daily. Candidates for office will be asked to state their attitude toward motion pictures fully and frankly, and on their decision will rest the action of the campaigners.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE MEETS

First Meeting of Executive Committee of Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America Held in New York

The Executive Committee of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America held its first meeting in New York last week. The members represented were Lee A. Ochs, A. P. Tugwell, Peter J. Jeup, William J. Sweeney, Alfred Hamburger, Thomas Furniss, Samuel Trigger and William Isenberg.

The monthly meetings of the Executive Committee of the M. P. E. L. of America will hereafter probably be held in conjunction with the monthly meeting of the directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, as a number of the members of the Executive Committee are also directors of the National Association.

Louis H. Frank of Chicago, who was elected exposition manager for the National Convention and Exposition of 1917, has announced the definite date of hold the 1917 Exposition as July 7 to 15 inclusive. The exposition will open, therefore, on the Saturday after the Fourth of July. The convention of the National League which will be held simultaneously with the exposition, opens on July 10. Mr. Frank arrived in New York last week and turned over to President Lee A. Ochs a check for $5,000 which represented the fifty per cent share of the National League in the net profits of the 1916 Exposition. This is the largest amount ever received by the National League from any trade exposition previously held.

The exhibitors and exchangemen of New York tendered a dinner at Feltman's, Coney Island, on August 17 to all the exhibitors in attendance at the first meeting of the Executive Committee of the M. P. E. L. of America and the first directors' meeting of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. Those present included:

Thomas Furniss, A. P. Tugwell, Frank J. Rembusch, Peter J. Jeup, M. A. Choynsky, Fred J. Herrington, William J. Sweeney, William Isenberg, Ben Zerr, Alfred Hamburger, Ernest G. Horstman, Gus Koenigswald, Henry Haring, Aaron Corn, Sam Spedon, William Hilkemeier, I. Hartstall, Lee A. Ochs, M. Abeles, Charles Haring, L. S. Blumenthal, Charles Steiner, L. A. Atwater, Tom Howard, T. A. O'Donnell, Sam Zeigler, Morris Needles, Al Harsten, Samuel H. Trigger, Harry Danto, W. Stephen Bush, John Miller and Messrs. Stein, Lesselbaum, Kramer and Sanson.

Edgar Lewis Has Enviable Record

"The Light at Dusk" and "The Bondman" are great pictures. So are "Souls in Bondage," "The Great Divide," "The Nigger," "The Littlest Rebel" and many others bearing Edgar Lewis' name, and principally because Edgar Lewis and his cameraman, Edward Earle, working on production of Rex Beach's, "The Barrier," released through Lubin-V-L-S-E.

Edgar Lewis is a producer rather than a director. He is at present working on a ten reel film version of Rex Beach's "The Barrier," which will be a special Lubin release.

His year contract with this concern expires in September.

Instead of directing a picture along certain cold typewritten lines and making a mechanical effort of a play, Mr. Lewis supports his stories with everything that should go towards bringing out their full strength and interest.

When he accepts a story for production he assumes entire responsibility for its success with it. He selects the cast, picks the locations and supervises the creation of the "atmosphere." Assured that his implements of production are of the right material, he proceeds with the visualized action of the play, the length of the picture and the time to be spent on it taking care of themselves.

The results are not theoretical. The features mentioned above and "The Gilded Fool," "The Plunderer," "The Flames of Johannis," "Samson," "Those Who Toil," "Northern Lights" and "Captain Swift" prove that his work is artistic and his product, dependable and popular. Mr. Lewis believes that a good motion picture can be every bit as dignified and magnetic in its interest as a stage success. He has ideals, as has every real artist, but they do not carry him to the mad flights of temperament.

A pronounced vain of human interest and a keen sense of what people like to see keep his pictures out of the dreary dreamy altitudes.

Artcraft to Handle Pickford Films

ON NO PROGRAM BUT RELEASED INDEPENDENTLY

ALTHOUGH many and varied rumours have been rife for some time regarding Mary Pickford and her plans for the future in the film world not until last week was the announcement officially made that Miss Pickford had formed her own company to be known as the Mary Pickford Film Corporation and gone into the producing business for herself.

The little star's contract with the Famous Players Company expired last March but she stayed with the company until she had completed "Hulda from Holland."

Most of the capital for the new organization has been furnished by the actress herself, and she will not receive a salary under the new arrangement but will share in the profits of the company.

She plays the title role in the Mary Pickford Film Corporation.

Further developments of the new organization bring the announcement this week that Miss Pickford has arranged with the Artcraft Pictures-Corporation to handle and distribute all of the products of her company. This means quite a radical departure from the general distribution of the films and will differ materially from that of most releases. It means that Miss Pickford will be the part of no program but will be presented to the distributor everywhere.

The Artcraft Pictures Corporation was organized by Walter E. Greene and others and is capitalized with $2,000,000. Mr. Greene has long been an active and prominent figure in the motion picture business. The company has offices at 729 Seventh Avenue. Al Lichtman, is assisting Mr. Greene in the organization of the company and will continue to look after the formation of the operating arrangements. Branches are to be established in the following cities: Boston, Philadelphia, Washington, Atlanta, Seattle, Denver, Minneapolis, Chicago, Kansas City, Detroit, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh and the principal cities of Canada. It is its purpose to see that every exhibitor in this country and Canada will have an opportunity to present Pickford films to his patrons.

Speaking of the alliance of concerns, Mr. Greene says:

"Heading her own film corporation, Miss Pickford with her art and experience, will bring to productions a new life, a stronger drawing power and a more lasting charm. Being alone and on no program she will completely pervade the entertainment presented, making its attractiveness all the stronger. It is the purpose of the Artcraft Corporation to give these pictures the best, broadest and widest distribution in our power.

Walter E. Greene.

"It is Miss Pickford's desire that her new productions shall be seen in every theater and motion picture in the land. These will surpass anything yet done on the screen, having supporting casts of distinction, master direction, and in all completely harmonizing every detail of the art in which Miss Pickford stands alone as its most popular and loved star.

"In presenting Miss Pickford and her productions to the exhibitors, the Artcraft Pictures Corporation does so with full confidence that it will give to motion pictures exhibitors and their patrons the highest attainments of this art industry. No personality so dominates motion pictures as that of Mary Pickford and the advent of a new play in which she appears is always an event in any theater."

Mary Pickford now has in preparation the first release which is being photographed at her studio in New York. It is promised that it will be the best production made for motion pictures. The director is John Emerson and the cast is one of distinction. It is the little star's plan to produce a limited number of productions each year but those at an unlimited cost, and the best brains, skill and resources of the industry will be secured to make her presentations the best that have ever been seen on the screen.

In explaining her decision to form her own company Miss Pickford stated that she believed the exhibitors who have so long co-operated with her and the great public who have been so loyal to her, will appreciate her work all the more when she stands along pervading the whole production, and not being part of any program.

Wells Hawkes, who some weeks ago was engaged as representative for Miss Pickford, will also direct the publicity of the Mary Pickford Film Corporation.

"Little Mary" feels sure of the success of her new undertaking because of the encouragement she has always received in the past from the exhibitors and the motion picture-loving public. In speaking of this support she expressed her gratitude for the affectionate interest and approval of her work which has always been an incentive to her and which now gives her confidence that she can reach still higher and give to the public the supreme in art endeavor.

"CIVILIZATION" TO BUYERS

Spectacle Offered to State Rights Buyers Quoted as a Gilt Edge Security Equal to United States Bonds

State rights buyers will rejoice to hear that Thomas H. Ince's spectacle, "Civilization," is now to be offered on the state rights basis. Although a few territorial rights have already been disposed of, they were accidental more than anything else, as it was Mr. Ince's original plan to retain the whole proposition for himself and his associates and thus take the gross profits for the benefit of a few chosen friends. However, a cold analysis of facts, coupled with pressure brought to bear by enthusiastic buyers, materially altered the initial plans. It was found that at least sixty prints would be necessary to accommodate the demand and that an organization of vast proportions would have to be formed. Then, too, it was pointed out that Mr. Ince's best interest could be guarded by allowing individuals to continue to dominate their own territories rather than for him to enter direct competition with them where it was not necessary.

The nation-wide publicity campaign which has been waged in the interest of "Civilization," admittedly the greatest ever accorded a motion picture production, had enhanced the money value of "Civilization" at least 1,000 fold and consequently permitted shrewd buyers to organize themselves into units and take advantage of an opportunity that comes but once in a lifetime.

As above stated, certain rights have been snapped up by smart showmen, but there is enough unsold territory to permit of half a score of men making fortunes out of "Civilization" along with Mr. Ince and his associates.

At the Thomas H. Ince New York offices in the Times building applications for territory and bookings receive prompt attention by J. Parker Read and Alec Lorimer, who are on the job twenty-four hours daily. To quote a very apt and fitting statement of Mr. Read: "'Civilization' is not simply an investment; it is a gilt-edge security. It is as good as U. S. bonds." To which a well-known Wall street banker sagaciously adds: "It is the safest proposition ever offered in the motion picture business."

Vitagraph Sues Ford for Million

On the ground that Henry Ford has injured the reputation and business of the Vitagraph Company of America by causing an advertisement to be inserted in over two hundred and fifty newspapers of the country to the effect that the feature picture, "The Battle Cry of Peace," was inspired by munitions manufacturers and backed by their capital, the film company has started suit against the automobile manufacturer for one million dollars.

J. Stuart Blackton, vice-president of the Vitagraph Company, states that the suit is being brought for two reasons; first, to vindicate his own reputation, and second, to demonstrate that the possession of money and power does not carry with it the right to publish false and malicious statements that have no foundation whatsoever.

Mr. Blackton states further:

"The cost of producing the picture and presenting it in an elaborate manner with extensive advertising for three months in New York, Boston and Chicago before its general release to the motion picture theaters amounted to hundreds of thousands of dollars. The investment was borne entirely by the Vitagraph Company of America, and this extensive advertising campaign resulted in a larger subsequent distribution than any other film production we have ever put out.

"Mr. Ford's printed statement, however, that munition manufacturers were back of the picture prejudiced many persons against 'The Battle Cry of Peace' and damaged the business of theaters in many cities."

McCLURE STARTS PRODUCING

Will Issue a Superseries of Seven Five-Reel Dramas Portraying the Seven Deadly Sins—Wide Publicity Planned

McClure Publications have already started work on their first production which will be the first of a superseries of seven five-reel dramas, entitled "Seven Deadly Sins."

The following statement of the plan of production is authorized by the McClure Company:

Nance O'Neill and Charlotte Walker have been added during the past week to the McClure Program. These, with Ann Murdock and Holbrook Blinn, will appear in the first pictures of our new superseries of seven five-reel dramas, entitled "Seven Deadly Sins."

While issued as a series, each McClure play will be complete in itself.

For instance, the first McClure play, in which Ann Murdock, the Frohman star, is to appear is called "Envy." The second one, in which Holbrook Blinn is the most important player, is called "Pride." Charlotte Walker is to play "Sloth," Nance O'Neill "Greed," and so on until all of the Seven Deadly Sins have been portrayed on the screen. The continuity of interest is further strengthened by the appearance in each play of a pair of young lovers played by these sterling young actors, George Le Guere and Shirley Mason.

We expect, through our advertising campaign in magazines, trade papers and newspapers, to insure the success of these pictures at the very beginning of the campaign. Before these pictures reach the theaters in the big cities the people will not only know that the productions are up to the established McClure quality and that they are played by stars gathered from all the best picture programs, but they will know all about the pictures themselves, what they are about, what lessons they are trying to teach, whether they want to see them themselves and whether they want their children to see them. Thus we expect to assure the man who exhibits the pictures of an absolutely certain attendance at his theater and to be able to guarantee the public against the evil results of indiscriminate theater going.

The motion picture of the future is to be the advertised picture.

Arrangements have been made with Thomas A. Edison, Inc., for the use of their studios. No definite steps will be taken for some time toward a studio of their own but several propositions are now under consideration for the use of studios in California for the winter work of the organization.

Ruth Clifford New Stock Player

One of the newest additions to the Universal stock company is Ruth Clifford, who for a number of months has appeared in different productions at the big studios and previously was a player for the Edison Company in the east.

Miss Clifford recently appeared in Director Henry McRae's company, playing a leading part in his production entitled, "Behind the Lines."

Miss Clifford is very young and pretty and is an actress of ability.

The Smalleys are producing in five reels Universal's "Idle Wives."

V-L-S-E Takes "Fall of a Nation"

LUBIN COMPANY IN YUKON PRODUCING "THE BARRIERS"

V-L-S-E has just completed a contract whereby Thomas Dixon's spectacle, "The Fall of a Nation," will be released through that organization. The Big Four has done a great deal to further the propaganda of Preparedness by such films as "The Battle Cry of Peace," "The Nation's Peril," and "The Hero of Submarine D-2" and it believes that the need for such object lessons is daily increasing and their appeal to the public is steadily heightening.

In announcing the acquisition of this spectacle Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the V-L-S-E, said:

"The Fall of a Nation" is a masterful and fascinating production and we are greatly gratified that it has come to us as an addition to our list of notable offerings, and that our exhibitors are to have the benefit of the returns to be gained from such a picture.

The picture has had a remarkable reception wherever shown, and it now is placed upon the open market with the fullest measure of proved success back of it. It is compelling in theme, and thrilling in its presentation.

Particularly gratifying, also, is the fact that the picture came to us unsolicited. Dr. Dixon has been flooded with proposals from states rights buyers and prominent distributing concerns to handle the picture on terms that were most flattering.

But after canvassing the entire field, Dr. Dixon of his own initiative came to us and asked us to take over the picture upon terms that were most advantageous to the V-L-S-E.

In speaking of his decision not to handle his production himself Mr. Dixon said that his object was to place his war drama before the greatest number of people as quickly as possible and while it will be most timely, and when he turned to the distributing end he found that it would take a year to perfect an organization to handle the inquiries in the number with which they poured in upon him. Therefore, after making a thorough investigation of the field he decided that through the V-L-S-E with its open booking policy the picture would be available to all exhibitors everywhere rather than limited to a few contract customers.

"The Fall of a Nation" will be released by the Big Four on September 18. An adequate number of prints have been provided to insure a quick and thorough distribution of the production and with it there will be available the specially prepared score by Victor Herbert.

Director Edgar Lewis and an all-star company of Lubin players has arrived in the Yukon country, Alaska, and started work on "The Barrier," which is being adapted from the novel by Rex Beach and will be released through V-L-S-E. Director Lewis has not yet decided upon the length of the feature but intends going ahead with the photographing and let the length of the picture take care of itself. It may run as high as ten reels and perhaps more. Mabel Julian Scott, a young woman of wide stage experience, has been chosen for the leading role. Victor Sutherland will play opposite her and others in the cast include Rosemary Carr, Howard Hall, Mitchell Lewis and Russel Simpson.

The "Masked Marvel," the wrestling champion who created such a sensation during the recent tournament in the Manhattan Opera House, will appear in the ninth release of the Selig Athletic Series, to be distributed through V-L-S-E on August 21. The "Great Unknown" will be seen in a match with Joe Wallace. In this same film will appear Frank Kramer, who has held the championship for bicycle sprinting for a number of years; a pony polo match between the Westmoreland and Washington, D. C., teams; a demonstration by Miss Dulcie Hall, the Australian physical culture expert, of jiu jitsu methods and holds for the benefit of women; the annual regatta between Yale and Harvard; and a three-cushion billiard match between Joe Capron of Chicago and Frank Hahman of Minnesota.

That the motion picture industry is thriving in Japan and that V-L-S-E features are playing a large part in upholding the high standard of the American product, was borne out recently by the receipt in the Big Four offices of an attractive motion picture magazine from Tokio. Although no one in the office was able to translate the articles anyone can read pictures and three in the book were of Charlie Chaplin in "Carmen," Edna Mayo and Bryant Washburn of the Essanay Company. They proved to be encomiums on Chaplin in "The Burlesque on Carmen," on Edna Mayo in three of her Essanay subjects, and of Bryant Washburn, who appeared with her in "The Blindness of Virtue."

Tom North, manager of the Seattle branch of V-L-S-E, was very much pleased on a recent visit to Spokane, Washington, to find that out of the twelve motion picture theaters in that city nine were using Big Four pictures. V-L-S-E features were appearing simultaneously in the following theaters, charging 10 cents or more: Liberty, Clemmer, Hippodrome, Majestic, Lyric, Best, Casino and Natatorium Airdome. This left three small five-cent houses in Spokane without a V-L-S-E show, namely: Unique, Empress and Rex.

A WOMANLESS TRIANGLE

"The Patriot" Requires No Women Stars—Bessie Barriscale and Charles Ray Play Together for the First Time

The Triangle Film Corporation has achieved what has always been declared an actual impossibility in the filming of the latest William S. Hart vehicle, "The Patriot." It is a story without a woman. In this play there is not a single suggestion of romance and the only women seen on the screen are there for a very brief period toward the close of the picture. Hart plays the title role in this play. Next to the star in importance are Georgia Stone and Francis Carpenter, two well-known child actors. Others in the cast are Joe Goodboy, Roy Laidlaw, Milton Rose, P. D. Tabler, Charles K. French, and "Rags", the clever dog performer of Inceville.

"Home", will mark the first appearance of Bessie Barriscale and Charles Ray as co-stars. This is a seriocomic play which is also unusual for these two players who have always been seen in strongly dramatic offerings. Supporting the two stars are Clara Williams, George Fisher, Agnes Herring, Thomas S. Guise, Louise Glaum and J. J. Dowling.

Virtually all the accoutrements of modern warfare are used to a greater or less extent in "SHELL 43!", the spectacular Triangle war drama by C. Gardner Sullivan, in which Thomas H. Ince presents H. B. Warner and Enid Markey as co-stars. The story deals with the spy system, as it is believed to be employed now on the battle fields of Europe.

Three of the prettiest actresses of the Ince forces are cast in "Honor Thy Name," an Ince Triangle play in which Frank Keenan and Charles Ray take the leads. The trio is made up of Louise Glaum, Blanche White and Dorcas Matthews.

"The Payment," the Triangle Kay Bee drama by C. Gardner Sullivan, in which Thomas H. Ince presents Bessie Barriscale as star, was given the benefit of two experts' experience. It was directed by Raymond B. West and photographed by J. D. Herriot.

Hon. Charles E. Hughes' "double" is the name given to Will Bray, the veteran character actor of Inceville. Mr. Bray's resemblance to the presidential candidate is very striking. The character actor takes an important part in "The Thoroughbred" in which Thomas H. Ince presents Frank Keenan as star.

Norma Talmadge, the well-known Triangle-Fine Arts star, will be the guest of honor at the regular monthly meeting of the Professional Women's League, Monday, August 28th, at the League's headquarters, 1999 Broadway. Mrs. Susan Westover Allen, sister of Lillian Russell, who is president of the League, extended a personal invitation to Miss Talmadge, who is spending a brief vacation at Long Beach prior to starting work on a new feature picture in which she will be starred. During the course of the year the Professional Women's League make it a practise to invite each month some woman who has earned distinguished honors in her particular work to be its guest. Miss Talmadge is one of the very few motion picture actresses that have been less honored.

Pictures in Japan, China and Russia

An enlightening insight into motion picture conditions in Japan, China and Russia, in which countries each picture fan spends over one-third of his day's wages every time he pays admission to a picture house, and where he encounters what in this country would be considered hardships, was received recently by Tom North, Seattle manager of the V-L-S-E, from one of the exhibitors he serves, who is traveling in the Asiatic countries.

To the average American "movie fan," who enjoys everything of the best when he attends a picture show, it will be surprising to learn that in Japan there are no seats in picture houses—that patrons sit on the floor, which is reserved just as are the seats in American theaters.

The letter says in part:

I have made a complete study of conditions in Russia, China and Japan, and the more I go into the study the more do I find cause for wonder that Americans are not more pleased with what is being done for them in the exploitation of motion pictures.

In Japan, for instance, where the rate of wages is only a small fraction of what it is in America, one has to pay fifty sen, or half a yen, for a good seat (on the floor). There are no seats and all the people squat on the floor. The prices range from twenty sen to fifty sen a seat, according to its location.

As a first-class mechanic or clerk in Japan gets only one and one-half yen a day, when he spends twenty sen for himself and the same for his wife in admissions to a picture theater, he spends over one-third of his day's pay, but they go just the same, and the show houses are usually packed to the doors.

In Russia seats range from 45 kopek to one ruble, on each ticket for which there is a war tax. Each ticket has a stamp on it calling for a tax, and the people pay the tax, not the theater owner. This, in my opinion, is a more equitable manner of taxation than our own.

The ruble in Russia is about equal to the American dollar, and I find that the most patronized seat is the 55 kopek seat, which is about 55 cents in our money. The houses are all making money.

IVAN INCREASES PRODUCTION

Anna Nilsson Added to Cast and Victor de Villiers Made Head of Scenario Department—New Studio Purchased in Los Angeles

The Ivan Film Productions, Inc., are extending their operations and adding to their force in all departments. Ivan Abramson will continue to produce pictures as director general for this company and arrangements have been made with a well-known director who will shortly sever his connections with one of the largest film manufacturing companies to direct all-star productions under the Ivan banner. The scenario department has been increased by the engaging of Victor de Villiers as editor-in-chief. Several original scenarios have been purchased of L. V. Jefferson and the department is corresponding with a number of well-known authors with a view to acquiring screen rights to popular books and plays. A new studio has been purchased in Los Angeles and will be under the supervision of W. A. Norton.

Anna Nilsson, who has just completed her work in the Pathe serial "Who's Guilty?" has been engaged by the Ivan Company to portray the leading female role in the next all-star cast production to be released by that company. The first vehicle for Miss Nilsson will be "Her Surrender," a photoplay written and directed by Ivan Abramson. An all-star cast supports Miss Nilsson including Rose Coghlan, William H. Tooker, a delineator of screen character roles; Wilmuth Merkly, who has been leading man for such stars as Mme. Olga Petrova and Virginia Pearson; Harry Spingler, who was co-star with William Farnum for over a year; and Frankie Mann, formerly with the Lubin organization. This picture will be released shortly as the regular scheduled Ivan feature for September.

Arrangements have been completed between the Ivan Film Productions and John Perkas, president of the Ohio Feature Film Company, whereby the latter will become exclusive distributors of all Ivan productions in the states of Ohio and Kentucky. The first Ivan subject to be released by the Ohio Feature Company will be "The Faded Flower," an all-star production. This will be followed by "Her Husband's Wife," after which "The City of Illusion" and "The Immortal Flame" will be released.

The entire company of "Her Surrender," under the direction of Ivan Abramson, have been in Asbury Park utilizing the beautiful sunken Italian gardens on the Duveen estate for locations. Sing Sing prison has also been obtained and a number of interior settings will be made within the prison walls.

Success Captures Edna Goodrich

Edna Goodrich, long a favorite on the legitimate stage, has capitulated to the lure of the screen. Miss Goodrich has signed with the Success Films Comporation and will be presented as a star in one of the first releases of the newly formed motion picture organization.

Nell Shipman, the new star with the William Fox forces, is a relative of the late Sir Walter Besant. Like her illustrious kinsman, the motion picture actress is also an author. She has already written one book, and in spare moments is busy completing another.

Pauline Frederick—Picture Fan

WHY ONE "LEGITIMATE" STAR PREFERS SCREEN TO STAGE

By Genevieve Harris

BECAUSE she can do a larger amount of creative work in pictures than on the stage;

Because she can reach a greater number of people in pictures than she possibly can on the stage;

Because she can lead a more normal personal life as a picture actress, working in the daytime and sleeping at night;

Because of the variety of her work and the absence of monotony;

Because of the outlet it gives for her abundant energy;

Because pictures are more realistic than the stage.

These are a few of the reasons why Pauline Frederick, one of the most brilliant of the younger women on the American dramatic stage, has, after a year of studio work, elected to continue in this field and has signed a contract binding her for two years longer in the Famous Players' camp.

When Pauline Frederick does a thing, she does it with her whole force. There are no half-way measures with Miss Frederick. When she tried pictures, she brought all her energy and radiant vitality into the work. When she found that she had come into a field where such attributes win for their possessors success, health and happiness, she decided that this was a good place to stay. And because that's her fashion, she became a "fan," a booster for pictures with whole-hearted enthusiasm.

Pauline and her "pal."

Miss Frederick is the sort of person one terms a "live wire." That is not an expression usually applied to a beautiful emotional actress, and the combination of the imagination and temperament of an artist with a personality as frank and enthusiastic as a boy's is a most fascinating one. That it is a fortunate one, this mixture of feeling, intellect and vital energy, her rapid rise in her profession and her high rank as a dramatic artist attest.

The first impression this young woman gives is that she enjoys just being alive. She is a most refreshing person to meet, who wakes you up a bit, and communicates to you something of her own buoyant spirit. She is lithe and active, and although slenderly built, gives an impression of force. While on the screen, she appears to be a brunette, in reality she is, as she says, "just medium," having light brown hair and grey eyes which are very clear and meet yours frankly.

"I am thoroughly a picture fan," Miss Frederick stated, on her recent Chicago visit, when she came to take part in the exposition. "I've seen scarcely six stage plays this year, and I go to picture shows every week. Do you know, the stage settings seem so crude and artificial to me now, after seeing the 'real thing' in the pictures. So many things on the stage now seem unnatural. Pictures have spoiled me. I want reality. Some people think my love for the screen a pose, but they're wrong. I can't resist seeing a picture-play. If it's a Douglas Fairbanks play, I simply have to see it, and I never miss Mary Pickford, and oh, don't you love that little Marguerite Clark?" Sounds very much like an ardent "fan," doesn't she? But I wanted to talk about Pauline Frederick.

"What sort of roles do I like to play? I like strongly emotional ones into which I can put feeling and energy. The role I happen to be playing gets into my spirit, somehow, even while I'm away from the studio. For instance, when I played the countess in 'The Moment Before,' I went around moping as though I'd lost my last friend, but when we came to the part where I played the gypsy, mother said I simply was not fit to be lived with, I was that saucy and wild!

"I enjoy working in pictures very much. For one thing, I have a chance to interpret so many different roles, to create more characters than on the speaking stage. It would have taken me years on the stage to attain the variety I've had in this year of pictures. And then I like the normal life, getting up in the morning and going to work and coming home tired at night and sleeping, instead of turning night into day and getting up at noon, as you must in stage work. At first, of course, there was the wild longing to play before an audience, but that's gone. I don't want to be before an audience. You know, I really get stage fright now when I have to be before a crowd. All these people, who rushed up when we got off the train today, all this publicity, why it frightens me to death! All I want now is just a word of approval from my director and the people playing with me. It seems so much more sincere than the applause of an audience. The approval of my audience now comes through letters from fans. I wish they could all know how deeply I appreciate these letters. I answer many of them, but I can't all." Then Miss Frederick told of her pleasure in hearing from a group of southern girls who had named their club after her and who had given a costume party at which each girl appeared dressed as a character their favorite had played.

"I sent them a club banner of my favorite colors, special shades of blue and of yellow. Oh, wouldn't I love to have walked in, unannounced, at that party!

"I like the fun there is in pictures, too," she continued. "I had the time of my life making 'The World's Great Snare,' that western play. Of course, I was suffering with the poor girl, (especially my feet in those great boots!) but I enjoyed the activity of it. I'd like to play in a regular 'thriller,' like the wildest of Keystone comedies! And they just must let me tear through some picture in my racing car! My motors are my hobby and I insist on getting them into the pictures!

"The sort of role I don't like? A 'pretty clothes' role! Ever since 'Bella Donna' they want to dress me up like a doll. None of that! I won't be a doll!"

She is far too live, too keen for a "doll" role, is Miss Frederick, either filmed or in real life. And it is the fresh, wholesome things which appeal to her, outdoor sports, tramping, motoring and hunting. She loves horses and she loves dogs. "Towsi Mongolai," who succeeded in getting into this picture, is her "pal," and he seems as keen for a good time as his mistress. In brief, Pauline Frederick works hard, and plays hard, and has a tremendously good time.

Priest to Handle "Civilization"

Robert Priest has been appointed by Thomas H. Ince to the position of director of publicity of the "Civilization" companies.

Unlike many who essay the onerous work of motion picture publicity, Mr. Priest has slowly but surely graduated from his old lines of work, theatrical press work, to his present responsible position by some useful preliminary experience in the film field. He directed the publicity campaign of the Captain Scott Antarctic Pictures in this country, and managed the entire enterprise when those films were brought here after the tragic death of the intrepid explorer.

Robert W. Priest.

In addition to handling the Captain Scott feature, Mr. Priest achieved success in the exploitation of Paul J. Rainey's African Hunt Pictures (series 1914) and Pathe's biblical masterpiece, "The Life of Our Saviour." He has also been identified, in a managerial capacity, with the Gaumont Company and was for a limited period a member of the Pathe sales force. Prior to his entrance into the film industry, Mr. Priest exploited such stage celebrities as De Wolf Hopper, William Faversham, Mordkin and his Russian ballet and many others equally as famous, including New York Winter Garden stars and attractions. He was also film director at the New York Hippodrome when that amusement temple was converted to the feature picture policy.

One of the oldest actors at Universal City is W. H. Boyle, 81 years of age.

FLORIDA FEATURE A SUCCESS

First Production of This Company Pleases State Rights Buyers—Two Other Features Completed and Fourth Started

The success of the Florida Feature Films' first five-reel production, "The Human Orchid," has been marked. Bids from state rights buyers from all parts of the country have been received and the consensus of opinion among the exhibitors appears to be that at last they have found a product full of punch and quality at a price which will allow them to make money.

Work has now been started on the fourth five-reel production of this company, the title of which has not yet been decided upon.

The second and third features of the Florida Feature Films Company, "The Toll of Justice" and Fate's Chessboard," have both been completed, but will not be shown until most of the territory for the "Human Orchid" has been sold. The reason for this as explained by Thomas J. Peters is to avoid confusion and at the same time give the buyers of the first feature an opportunity to test its pulling power in ample time to submit their bids for the future releases of the company. This as he explains is one of the measures taken by the company to protect the buyers of their features in their respective territories.

Another rule in the selling policy of this company that is intended to work to the mutual benefit of both buyer and seller, is that no contracts will be accepted for any territory at any price until after the release of the film has been announced for at least two consecutive weeks. This time is considered by the company to be necessary for all buyers who have become interested through their advertising to make screen examinations and be in a position to make their bids intelligently.

Glantzberg Undergoes Operation

Ernst Glantzberg, president of the Typhoon Fan Company, has just recovered from a serious operation.

While attending the Chicago exhibition, Mr. Glantzberg was stricken with an attack of appendicitis. He did not take it very seriously and not only stayed until the finish of the exhibition, but stopped at Detroit, closing up contracts for two theaters there, as well as stopping another day in Cleveland, Ohio, where he closed up contracts for the Alhambra, Standard and Mall theaters.

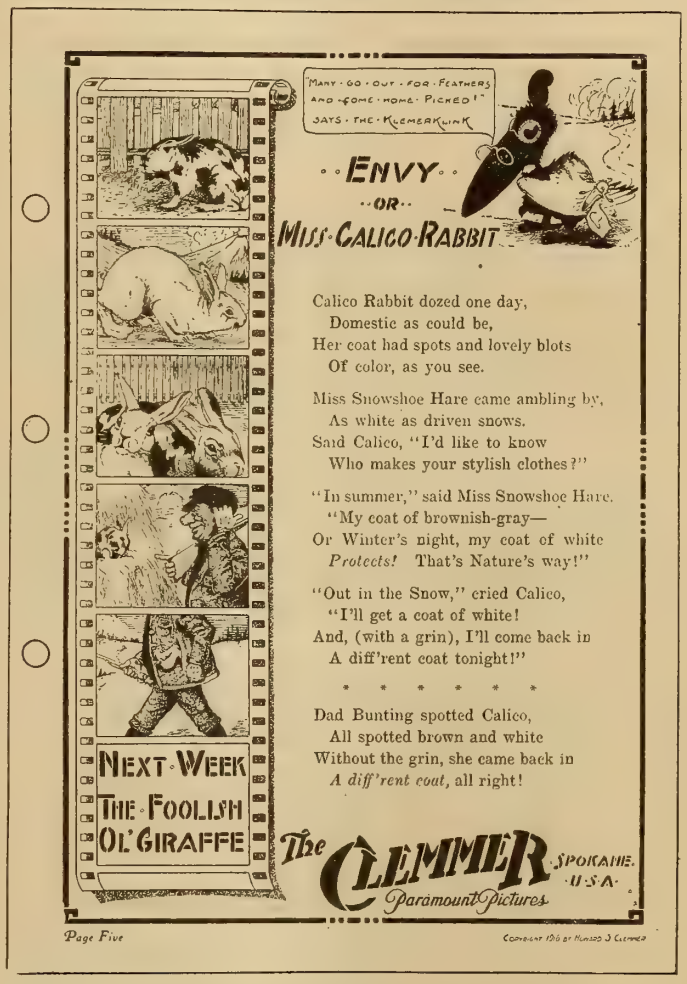
He did not give up until the day that he returned to New York, when the doctors advised immediate necessity for going to the hospital. He drove his own auto to the Roosevelt Hospital and was operated on immediately.

Mr. Glantzberg not only surprised the doctors by attending to business, keeping two secretaries busy at the hospital taking dictation two days after the operation, but a week later he was dressed ready to leave the hospital and in two weeks' time he was in his office attending to business in the usual way.

Anthony P. Kelly, the photoplaywright, who has been at Lake George for the past few weeks following all lines of least resistance, has returned to New York and officially announces that he is getting ready for a big autumn drive on eastern studios. Kelly's last screen play, "The Blossom and the Bee," was recently completed by Astra-Pathe with Pearl White in the leading role.

Holding the Children's Attendance

EXHIBITOR HOWARD CLEMMER UTILIZES THE "KLEMMER KLINK BOOK"



WHEN the matinee especially for children was first inaugurated it was a novelty in itself and the grown people and the children all came out of curiosity to see what the manager was offering in the guise of a children's program. The parents as well as the children were delighted with the efforts of the exhibitor and for a while the theaters were crowded at every entertainment of this kind. The little folks were proud that the theater man considered them of enough importance to give an entertainment arranged especially to please their fancy and the parents felt that at last the problem of the child and the motion picture was solved.

But with the children's hour as with everything else planned to please the fickle public, as soon as the newness wore off the interest began to wane. First the older people ceased coming, they had tested them and found that these afternoon entertainments were all that could be desired for the children, they did not care to attend them any more and so they sent the children alone. Gradually the children began to lose their interest. It was only a motion picture show after all and they had seen lots of those and were beginning to tire of them and look for new fields of interest. If some actress was playing whom they particularly liked they would go, or if they had nothing better to do, but the children's hour was no longer the big thing in the week to which they looked forward.

When this stage is reached the exhibitor has to begin to work for their patronage, which before had been so easily gained, for although the parents have lost their personal interest they would immediately resent it if he discontinued these special programs after they were so well established, and also the conscientious manager felt that it was a step in the right direction toward establishing a higher standard for his house. A great many managers run these special programs Saturday mornings and it means that much more profit added to their weekly earnings if the interest of the children is held and the theater filled for this extra performance. An added advantage is that it keeps the children out of the theaters in the evening to a great extent so that the exhibitor gets full price instead of half price for his seats at the evening performance.

Therefore the exhibitor is forced to look around for some way to hold the interest of the children and to keep them coming as regular patrons every week to this show arranged for them. The ingenuity and originality of the theater man is often taxed more to find "stunts" which will draw the children than to keep the patronage of the older people. Many clever schemes have been devised by the managers to keep their houses filled. Contests have been started, free tickets given away for meritorious work in school, ice-cream parties, crackerjack matinees, candy afternoons have been tried, and numerous other schemes which would appeal directly to the child.

Howard C. Clemmer, manager of the Clemmer Theater, Spokane, Washington, has demonstrated his versatility in a number of unique and attractive means of pleasing the children but the cleverest of them all is the distribution of a twelve-page book called the "Klemmer Klink Book." All children love stories and picture books and Mr. Clemmer was wise enough to cater to that desire. The book, 7x10 inches in size, is of the loose leaf variety and consists of twelve pages and cover. It is printed in red and black on tan stock, each page is profusely illustrated with clever sketches and contains a little jingle about animals or other subjects which especially appeal to the child.

This artifice not only attracts the children for one performance but keeps them coming every week for thirteen weeks because they want to complete their book. The first week the cover is distributed, on which is a picture of Klemmer Klink, a new kind of "woofen-puf-like-pelliken." Each succeeding week any child purchasing a ticket is given another page until the whole book is complete. Clasps come with the cover and the additional pages can be put together.

But with the end of the thirteenth week does not come the end of the plan. Then Mr. Clemmer offers a prize of a season pass to the theater to any child who will write an essay of one hundred words on "Why I Like the Clemmer," and return it to him accompanied by the complete Klemmer Klink Book.

Contestants in the essay contest must be between the ages of five and twelve, and all contestants have their books returned. The winner of the prize is announced on the 14th week, the announcement being made on the screen.

In speaking of his work with the younger generation Mr. Clemmer says: "I have accomplished great things with the children of my city, as the parents realize that I have the interest of the little ones at heart, and would not put on the screen any kind of a picture that the smallest tot could not see and go home and tell mother that they had the time of their young lives. It's the greatest performance of each week, and it is surprising how many mothers and big sisters and big brothers come to that single performance. I hold this children's hour on Saturday morning, but I do the business of a Saturday night performance. Three times I have been compelled to raise my order for Klemmer Klink Books and as soon as that idea is over, there'll come another that's better yet."

And right in that phrase, "As soon as that idea is over, there'll come another that's better yet," lies the fundamental secret of Mr. Clemmer's great success not only with the kiddies but with the regular business as well. It is not the carrying out of one plan that brings lasting success, but the steady building, following one scheme with another just as good—or better— and when that has done its part being ready with still another.

Bergen and Goodwin on Unity Program

The Unity Sales Corporation will release "The Lottery Man" the second week in September. This five-reel comedy, an adaptation of the stage success, was produced by the F. Ray Comstock Photoplay Company. Thurlow Bergen takes the principle role assisted by Elsie Esmond.

"The Barriage Bond," produced by the Mirror Films, Inc., and starring Nat C. Goodwin supported by Margaret Green, will be released the first week in September. The story is in five parts and contains many striking photographic effects and scenes.

In addition to the heralds, banners and oriental novelties issued in the exploitation of "The Yellow Menace," the Unity Company has produced a book of twenty-four pages which contains in brief form a general synopsis of the entire story written and signed by Louis Tracy, the author; a composite photograph of the stars and scenes from the play; and on separate pages are given a short synopsis of each one of the sixteen episodes, also written by Mr. Tracy, and a still picture from each. This is but one of the many plans which this company has inaugurated to help the exhibitor.

William Steiner, general manager of the Serial Film Company, and supervising director of "The Yellow Menace," announces that his company has added a new exterior glass covered studio and doubled the stage space of the interior studio in its plant at Cliffside, N. J. These additions make it possible for four producing companies to work at the same time.

A new exchange has been opened in Atlanta to be known as the Unity Film Service. R. M. Savini will take charge of this exchange and handle "The Yellow Menace" in the southeastern territory, as well as other productions of the Unity Corporation.

The general offices of the George Kleine Company are now located at 80 Fifth avenue, New York City. The new telephone number is Chelsea 6155-6156.

Powell Discovers Veta Searl

Frank Powell, the man who first saw the picture possibilities of Theda Bara and Blanche Sweet, believes he has made another discovery.

This time it is Veta Searl, a young woman hitherto unknown to stage or screen. Miss Searl will be seen in a prominent part in the support of Creighton Hale, Linda A. Griffith and Sheldon Lewis in the first feature of the Frank Powell Productions Inc.

Veta Searl; to appear in support of Creighton Hale in Powell films.

"I have always believed," says Mr. Powell, "that one of the most important factors contributing to the success of the player in pictures is that intangible something, which, for lack of a better term, we call personality. Given that and with it intelligence, add an inherent sense of the fitness of things, and you have the stuff that makes stars.

"Take, for example, Miss Sweet's case. In 1909 when I was directing comedies for the Biograph, Miss Sweet came to the studio job hunting. I saw and talked with her and decided to give her a chance. She played Cupid, and appeared in three scenes. They were enough. The next day she was cast for the lead in 'Too Many Husbands.'

"A friend wrote me of Miss Bara. She had never been on the screen. At my suggestion she waited three months until we were ready to picturize 'A Fool There Was'. She immediately was cast for the vampire and the rest is screen history.

"Recently I met Miss Searl. She impressed me as possessing in abundance those qualities which make for prompt and lasting screen success, and I engaged her on the spot."

Pictures Getting Better

President H. M. Herkheimer of the Balboa Amusement Producing Company, recently made some interestingly optimistic statements:

"I am of the firm belief that as this year's photoplay productions are better than those of last year," he said, "just so you will find next year's showing a distinct advance over those of the present. We know there is no such thing as standing still. We either go forward or backward. It is one or the other. I feel sure that it is not the latter.

"As for the future of the motion picture industry, that is largely a matter of speculation. But it looks to me that we are soon to see a big shakedown. I would not be surprised if, almost any day, some of the generally regarded strongest companies retire from the field. Only those producers who are honestly organized for picture making can hope to continue. As in every other activity, the fittest will survive. But the stock-jobber must go."

No Price Too High for Satisfactory Pictures

BY SIDNEY M. NUTT.

Proprietor New Central Theater, Hot Springs, Arkansas.

I HAVE been successful because I have given the picture business my time and attention. I have kept up with the trade and its people; with the various companies and the stars they employed; with the big features that were being made and with those contemplated.

SERVICE—THAT'S WHAT COUNTS!—has been my motto.

The price of no feature has been too high if I reached the conclusion it would give satisfaction to my patrons.

I am a firm believer in printer's ink. I can truthfully state I set the pace among local picture managers where advertising is concerned. I have a daily standing "ad," two columns, five inches, in the morning and afternoon paper, but there is never a week when I do not plant a "streamer" for some feature, and I have taken on exceptional features as high as a half and a full page display.

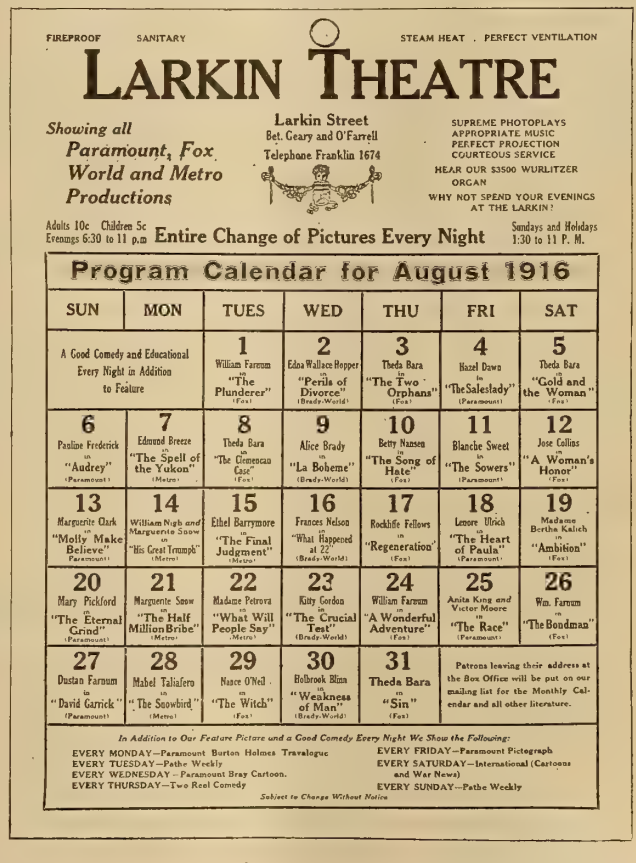
I believe humanity is interested in human features. I look for the human interest in a picture, scan the advance "dope," pick out some human note and play it up big. It gets me results. I insist my press agent shall write heads for my picture readers that will catch their eye. Let me illustrate. We have in this city a very progressive church organization in one of the denominations known as "The Ladies' Aid." All Hot Springs knows of it. Well, in featuring "Susie Snowflake" I came out with a startling headline in 30 point, thus:

LADIES' AID WAS RUDELY SHOCKED

TINY ACTRESS PUTS ON HER TIGHTS AND DOES HOT ACT AT CHURCH SOCIAL.

You can see the headlines caught 'em! Of course, when they read the story they soon wised up to the fact that it was, after all, a "movie" and the whole town had a good laugh, the Ladies' Aid included. It made them curious, with the result that "Susie" showed to a big business.

I try, however, never to "overplay my hand." I make a conscientious effort to get the best pictures. I feature Paramount to the limit. I get results, too. Friday I give what is considered the biggest and most varied program in the city, for instance: "The Mysteries of Myra," the Paramount "Pictograph," with its wonderfully entertaining and instructive features, its merry animated cartoons, its Travalogue features, and also the Hearst International News Pictorial. I am booking, too, the V-L-S-E features.



I guess one reason why exchanges regard me as successful is because I am never back in my payments. The day a picture is run, that same day a check goes to the exchange. If this were not so I would not dare state it for publication.

A Clever Monthly Program

One of the greatest problems of the theater manager is getting the people to take his printed program home with them and hang it in a conspicuous place as a constant reminder of what is going on at the theater.

C. W. Goodwin, manager of the Larkin Theater, San Francisco, showed his ingenuity in devising a monthly program which was out of the ordinary and decidedly different from most house organs.

Working on the theory that there is nothing which is consulted oftener than a calendar, Mr. Goodwin conceived the idea of keeping his program before the public in this way. A sheet is mailed to his patrons and distributed at the theater each month and shows just what feature will be shown on each day of that month. It also carries all the other announcements of the theater. This plan not only calls especial attention to the feature—and the feature is what brings the people into the theater—but the general statement of "a good comedy and educational every night in addition to the feature," and the added announcement of specials in the way of weeklies, travelogues and cartoons on specified days, gives all the information required. The calendar is artistically arranged and well planned to bring the important items into prominence, and the hole punched ready to be hung over a nail in a convenient place is a good added touch.

How to Get a Mailing List

"We have secured our mailing list," writes H. P. Wareham of the Wareham Theater, Manhattan, Kansas, to Paramount Progress, "with the aid of telephone directory, the city directory and by making it known through the use of a slide and a note in our weekly program that that we were issuing a mailing list and would be glad to have the name of anyone interested. The fact that we had a mailing list soon became known, and we received many names by mail, telephone, and some called at the office and left their names. When we got these together we had no trouble in selecting a list of 500 which we felt were the best prospects.

"We have had this mailing list in use for about two years, always keeping it up-to-date, and find it to be a very successful method of advertising.

"For our weekly program we have a specially designed electrotype border, size 6x9, and on this we give an announcement of each day's attraction. We also use three or four thumb-nail cuts of the more popular stars of the week, or trademark cuts to make the program as attractive as possible.

"We have our house organ printed at the local newspaper office on first-class stock which costs us $3.75 per thousand. We also run this program in the Saturday issue of our local newspaper.

"For mailing we use the No. 9 one-cent stamped envelopes, which we buy at the post office for $12 per thousand, printed. We have an addressograph which we use for addressing the envelopes. We deliver these to the post office so they will reach our patrons on Saturday afternoon.

"We think everyone of our patrons looks forward to receiving this program every Saturday."

Explains to Patrons

The Parkway Theater of Baltimore takes its patrons into its confidence and explains to them just what "contract booking" means. In departing from that method of securing its service the Parkway printed the following explanation on the back cover of its weekly program. People like to be made confidants and are brought into closer touch with the house that makes its policies clear.

Following are some interesting facts relative to future film presentations at the Parkway:

First: The Parkway stands for clean, wholesome, artistic photoplays, presented amid luxurious surroundings, and in the proper manner.

In order to maintain the standard which we have striven to keep up to the very highest quality, we have discontinued the so-called contract booking arrangement.

By contract booking we mean that we have been compelled in the past to run pictures made by a certain company, whether they be good, bad or indifferent. Very often we have taken the pictures that were sent to us, and after examining them found them to be unfit for our clientele, paid for them, sent them back and substituted another film at a tremendous extra cost.

By our new arrangement we will not contract to take any one company's films.

We have secured the privilege of viewing every picture that we contemplate showing, and will only present such plays that contain the very highest artistic and dramatic values, and which are sure to appeal to our refined and discriminating audiences.

Such stars as E. H. Sothern, Otis Skinner, William Gillette, Mary Gardner, Mme. Nazimova, Clara Kimball Young, Mme. Petrova, Charlotte Walker, Mary Pickford, Wallace Reid, Francis X. Bushman, Harold Lockwood, Mary Miles Minter, House Peters, Alice Brady, Ethel Clayton, Carlyle Blackwell, Kitty Gordon, Anita Stewart, Earle Williams, Peggy Hyland, Marshall Neilan, Irving Cummings, Edith Storey, Antonio Moreno, Lillian Walker, Gail Kane, Viola Dana, Douglas Fairbanks, William S. Hart, Lillian Gish, Dorothy Gish, Norma Talmadge, Mabel Taliaferro, etc., will be seen at the Parkway the coming season.

Parkway performances are all run on schedule time, as follows:

First performance, 2:15; second, 4:00; third, 5:45; fourth, 7:30; fifth, 9:15. Main feature picture presented 2:50, 4:35; 6:20, 8:05; 9:50.

You will never miss a picture if you come at the advertised time.

The Parkway Management.

Doesn't Believe in Contests

Manager W. B. Martin, of the New Star Theater, Modesto, California, does not believe that contests pay a house in the long run. Mr. Martin was one of the first in the country to use prize and contest schemes in connection with newspapers and has tried them in all parts of the country.

"When worked fairly," says Mr. Martin, "they are not really good business getters for houses that have the future in view, for, no matter how careful one is in conducting them, the element of chance is there and the losers are likely to complain that they were 'fleeced.' They will go among their own friends and spread this impression, which is anything but envious for the manager of the newspaper or theater. On the other hand, you have only a few boosters, those who have won, and they generally realize that their friends and family have paid dearly for the prizes they have won.

"For houses that are figuring on 'unloading' it will get them the money, at the time, but woe unto the one who buys. Contests of this character are generally promoted by outsiders who make this their business and whose only thought is to get the money. The nature of the game itself makes the public feel that it has been cheated.

"Summing up the entire scheme, I believe that it generally proves mighty dear experience and that any house would be better off to leave it alone. I figure that when I am compelled to give away automobiles, diamonds, houses and lots, I am no longer competent to run a theater, and that it is time that I seek other means of livelihood.

"Bearing out this contention, I will say that I have been approached by a number of so-called 'business-getters' during the past several years while in the theatrical business, and that I do not even give them the time to explain their plan when they say 'contest' for, should I want one, I would certainly run it myself and not let an outsider clean up the public at my expense.

"Theater managers can make no mistake in leaving these schemes alone, and I would consider myself lucky if a competitor ran one, for I know that in the long run I would be much ahead, having conducted my business along legitimate lines.

"I hope that this advice will be of some assistance to brother exhibitors who might think of using this plan."

Films That Were Ahead of Their Time

THE percentage of film output that classifies technically as "educational" is much less today than it was six or seven years ago, when the producers were groping for the key to the public interest. At that time the foreign makers were sending over subjects ranging from the adaptation of popular science to purely esthetic visualizations of poetic inspiration. Not many of the costly and complicated subjects of the present hour surpass in artistic merit and intellectual value some of those comparatively early productions.

Yet at the time they were marketed these classic bits were generally regarded as commercial failures. Crude as were most of the contemporaneous dramatic productions, the people infinitely preferred them to the "high brow" demonstrations that appeared on the same program. The appearance of an "educational" on the screen, indeed, often was the signal for a general exodus from the theater. Even the exhibitors of education and culture—not so common then as now—soon recognized the impossibility of giving the people what was good for them when they did not want it, and abandoned the attempt. For which concession to vulgar taste many of us (we plead guilty, for one) condemned the exhibitor with all the argument we could find.

And we could always find it. The showing of travel pictures, for example, was saturated with logic, in spite of the apparently luke-warm attitude of the public; for we know that everybody wants to travel and few have the opportunity. If the people would not accept the vicarious journeyings of the screen, it must be because they didn't know a good thing when they saw it. And as for the scientific and poetic productions that also registered vaguely under "educational" for want of a better classification, their very interest and beauty was sufficient argument. That people did not take kindly to them did not change our viewpoint; it merely reduced our estimate of human nature.

So the subject of educational pictures gradually lost its significance as a vital issue. In the increasing stress and pressure of dramatics we almost forgot that it had ever been a definite problem.

And then, as so often happens with such problems, when the subject was neglected it began to develop. The pictures became more pretentious and the theater kept pace with them; and presently we found that we were showing to a different class of people from those who helped us establish our five-cent shows. Perhaps the class was not really different; perhaps it was the same group of people improved by the education of the screen, and augmented by those who had heretofore regarded picture shows as vulgar. At any rate, the public taste improved; there was no denying that fact.

Today we have screen newspapers and screen magazines whose educational features are their strongest hold on popularity; and in that popularity they vie with the most sensational of dramas. The educational picture—so-called, as we said before, for want of a more expressive term—has come into its own. Where the people used to walk out upon the showing of a popular science subject or a study of strange lands, they now walk in, in increasing numbers.

The producers are keenly alive to public temperament, and the newly awakened demand for cultural productions is being satisfied. On that score we have no criticism to offer. Particularly do we commend the excellent work of a few producers who are making the screen a successor to the best of our current literature; and in this connection it is not amiss to point out that the highest grade magazines are never all fiction. The best of care is being taken of those esthetic aspirations that the screen itself has crowned.

Our only regret—and it is one that must be equally potent in literary circles—is that so many good films were apparently wasted because they came before their time. When we recall the splendid examples of earlier educational production that were greeted so coldly, we wish it might be deemed expedient to make new prints of those old negatives and give them definite release dates again, so that those who once scoffed might return to praise and the world not lose by its indifference.

And when we realize how many of those productions were completed in full knowledge that there was no monetary profit in them—works of true inspiration—we are doubly eager to see them put back upon a more appreciative screen. For we cannot doubt that many of them today would be hailed as marvels of the art—true exponents of the best there is in motography.

Many a modern critic of motion pictures, essaying, out of his store of innocence, to tell the producers what they should do in place of what they are doing, has named as suggestions of the ideal the very subjects that were covered so effectively years past. Why not dust off some of those old reels and show an awakened world what the industry accomplished while the people slept?

Nothing But Opportunity for the Association

THE completion of the work of organizing the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry by the election of a competent set of officers and an aggressive executive committee has cleared the way for the most important accomplishments of the industry's history. The opportunities before these executives are so extraordinary that no one without a proper sense of the stupendous possibilities of motion picture power can realize them.

The decision of the association to take an active hand in political campaigning would mean little without a perfected organization. Knowing that the new organization is, if not perfect, at least sound and practical, we are assured that its efforts will have more significance than the imagination of the average politician can conceive. The impending lesson cannot have other than a salutary effect.

The professional politician's only curb is public opinion, and heretofore the only source of information that gave the public any opinion has been the press. When it is considered that newspaper editorials are read by only a small portion of the country's voting population; that some of those that are read are subsidized; and that many newspaper publishers are themselves in politics and therefore prejudiced, it is not remarkable that our legislative and governing bodies indulge in activities that draw criticism.

To say that it is within the power of the pictures to cure all the ills of our political system is to display an almost supernatural faith in their power. Yet that is the attitude we must take.

For as a machine for combatting evil the motion picture is perfect. Only the element of human weakness, that must tinge all activities, can restrict its usefulness. The "great white light of publicity," that long recognized panacea for social and industrial derangements, becomes a literal fact on the screen.

No type ever used by the press is big enough or black enough, and no copy writer is clever enough to equal its force. It will be the people who benefit when the picture has exercised its strength—even though the motive of the industry be for its own advantage and benefit.

And the opportunity inside the industry, though less spectacular, means nearly as much to the future development of the business. It means, primarily, the greatest achievement of all commercial activity, and the one most rarely accomplished—harmony and understanding between all the branches of the art.

"Split Reel" Notes for Theater Men

HOW OTHERS ARE STEERING THE SHIP

J. E. SCHLANK, of Omaha, Nebraska, who recently sold the Hipp Theater to Hugo F. Bilz, has organized the Fine Arts Feature Film company and will now engage in the feature film business on the state rights basis. The new company will operate in Iowa and Nebraska. Mr. Schlank has already secured the state rights on "The Little Girl Next Door" and "Where Are My Children?"

An ordinance prohibiting all motion picture exhibitions on Sunday has been introduced in Traverse City, Michigan.

A special exhibition of Thomas H. Ince's spectacle "Civilization" will be given on board the U. S. battleship Nevada.

B. A. Rolfe has resigned as manager of the Strand Theater and Harold Edel, manager of the Buffalo Strand, has been selected to succeed him.

William Barry has resigned his position as general manager of the Frank Powell Productions to accept a similar position elsewhere in the trade.

All children under twelve years of age are barred from the motion picture theaters in Baltimore, Maryland, on account of the infantile paralysis epidemic.

Mrs. E. C. Niver, of Charleroi, Pennsylvania, has been reappointed by Governor Brumbaugh as a member of the State Board of Motion Picture Censors.

Nora Bayes had added the "Peace Song," with music by Victor L. Schertzinger and words by Thomas H. Ince, to her reportoire of songs she uses in vaudeville.

The Metro exchangemen held a get-together convention at Atlantic City August 10 to 14. New York was represented by Richard A. Rowland, president; Joe Engle, treasurer, and Arthur James, director of publicity.

Hal Kelly, manager of the Gilbert and Lyric theaters, Beatrice, Nebraska, has presented a petition to the city commissioners requesting that motion picture theaters be allowed to run shows on Sunday. This petition was signed by 750 residents of Beatrice.

M. H. Hoffman, general manager of the exchanges; E. H. Goldstein, his assistant, and Mr. McGowan, general auditor, visited Minneapolis recently in connection with the taking over of the Laemmle Film service by the Universal in Minneapolis and Fargo.

Henry Ford was refused permission to show his Ford weekly pictures and give a concert in the city park of Lincoln, Nebraska, but a compromise was made by arranging to close a street just north of the park and use the high school grounds for the exhibition.

An ordinance is under discussion by the city commission of Ft. Smith, Arkansas, which provides for a monthly license of $10 and a yearly license of $100 for motion picture theaters charging five cents admission. Theaters having a seating capacity of over 400 are to be charged $25 a month or $250 a year.

At the summer home of Mr. and Mrs. Askel C. P. Wichfeld at Beverly Farms, Mass., was given a motion picture performance to which the admission price was five dollars. It was for charity, however, the proceeds going to the fund for wounded French soldiers. The films shown were the official French war films.

Ben H. Atwell, director of publicity at the Rialto Theater, New York, has resigned his position and will go into the field of producing on his own account. For some time Mr. Atwell has been planning to return to active managing, his most important enterprise along this line was the direction of Pavlowa during the Russian dancer's first tour of this country.

The United Film Service Corporation of Chicago, controlled by Messrs. Levy, Shatkin and Feldstein, well-known film men operating a string of exchanges throughout the west, has taken offices in the Plaza Block, St. Louis, Missouri. The new quarters will be known as the L. C. F. Film Exchange, and the company will handle "The Yellow Menace."

The Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company is attaching a little sticker to each letter going out from its office, which reads: "If anything should occur in our handling of your business that is not entirely satisfactory to you be kind enough to let us know at once. Our exhibitors MUST be satisfied for we cannot afford to have one dissatisfied customer and we will not, if there is any way within our power to prevent it."

William Szarka, of Sydney, Australia, representing the Australasian Films, Ltd., is spending about two months in the United States to study the motion picture business at first hand and gather data on civic topics in this country. Mr. Szarka says Australia is totally dependent upon the United States for motion picture films, and the number of exhibitors has increased to such proportions that the industry will soon rank first in the commonwealth.

John A. Herberger, a photographer of Rochester, New York, has obtained an injunction against the Clinton-Mortimer company to restrain them from building the entrance of their motion picture theater as planned. The photographer claims that the proposed plans would necessitate the removal of his show case and that his prospective customers would have to go through the same entrance as the theater patrons, a procedure to which they might object.

Hereafter all the motion picture theaters of Eau Claire, Wisconsin, will be under the management of the Eau Claire Theater Company, with the exception of the Orpheum. Captain E. S. Pearsall, manager of this theater has not entered into the combine. The Eau Claire company will operate the Grand Opera house, Unique, Lyric and O'Klare theaters. Mr. Schwahn will have charge of the contracting for films for all the theaters, while B. J. Bostwick will continue in the management of the Grand.

B. F. Keith's Theater, Washington, D. C., issues a very "classy" program consisting of one sheet of rough edged paper in buff printed in brown. The program evidently is meant to appeal to the "highbrow" and would not please the "fan" as it contains no feature stories. The three numbers composing the program are a cartoon comedy, "Little Stories by Big Men," showing incidents in the life of Mark Twain, and the first showing of "Motion Picture Portrait Studies of the President of the United States and His Cabinet."

In the city of New York alone, one-half million people see motion pictures every day, while only one-fifth more persons attend the formal schools from kindergarten through university. The best figures obtainable indicate that one person in five in the United States sees motion pictures every day. Only one person in five in the United States is supposed to attend the public school system. Twenty million people see motion pictures every day. In all the educational institutions in 1912 there were enrolled 21,102,113 people.

A clever advertising scheme was carried out by the management of the Goedon's Washington Street Olympia Theater, Boston, in connection with the presenting of Mary Pickford in "Hulda from Holland." A float representing a scene from a Dutch village, with a girl made up as Miss Pickford in the character of Hulda and the three little Dutch kids, was drawn through the streets of Boston, and so clever was the idea that not only did the people talk about it, but it was given widespread publicity in all the newspapers.

Edwin Mocsary, treasurer of the Rialto Theater, New York, is very glad that many doctors like motion pictures, in fact he owes his life to this fact. Mr. Mocsary went to dinner at a leading restaurant recently and as he was about to leave was notified that he had been poisoned through the careless use of a cleaning fluid which had been spilled in the soup which he had just eaten. He hurried to the theater and an inquiry at the box office showed that Dr. E. J. Dreyfuss, intestinal specialist, was present at the performance. His prompt work saved Mr. Mocsary from any unpleasant results of a most unpleasant experience.

P. E. Coe, manager of the Theater Louisiana, Baton Rouge, Louisiana, issues a program 2¾x6¾ inches. Two innovations are interpolated into this house organ. One is the announcement that with each admission before 6 p. m. every day are given tickets for Rogers silverware. The other is an appeal for criticisms reading "This program will be mailed you weekly if you leave your name at the box office. Also oblige us by an occasional line of criticism as to our show. Say what kind of pictures you like. Do you like long pictures? What picture or pictures have you seen that you consider ideal, and why? We want to know these things because it is our business to please you."

Dee Robinson, president of the Apollo Amusement Company of Peoria, Illinois, believes that if people look at cool objects they will feel cooler during this hot weather. Mr. Robinson has a cooling system in his theater which makes a great difference between the temperature of the inside of the house and the street and recently in the foyer he erected an aquarium ten feet long, three feet wide and three feet deep, filled with all kinds of fancy fish. A mirror placed back of the aquarium made it look twice as large and gave the effect of there being twice as many fish in the water. It was decorated with all kinds of castles, sea shells and ferns, and above it were hung a number of bird cages in which there were canaries which sang almost continually.

All motion picture houses in the state of Colorado are affected by the demand of the Denver Motion Picture Operators' Union for increased wages and a change in working conditions. The members of the organization claim that their action has received the approval of the International Alliance of Theatrical Employes. In class A theaters the operators demand $25 per week, with an eight-hour day, and 50 cents per hour overtime; class B houses, opening at 10 a. m. and closing at 11 p. m., chief operator, $25; assistant, $15 per week; when split, $20 each per week, with eight-hour day, overtime 50 cents an hour; class C theaters, running nights only and Sunday matinee, $15 per week; extra matinees, $2; loss of supper to constitute a matinee. Demands are made for various other classifications.

A very clever advertising stunt has been bringing results in a number of small towns around Kansas City. In this scheme the manager of the local theater apparently co-operates with the local newspaper for a double-page spread. The theater takes space in the center of the two pages and the local merchants all of the remaining available space. Each and every advertisement carries a cut of a Paramount star and each advertisement has a misspelled word in it. The letters assembled form the words Paramount Pictures. The prize of six dollars' worth of tickets to the theater is given to the reader who assembles the letters correctly and pastes them on a card together with the portraits of the stars with their correct names written underneath.

Under this scheme the theater gets considerable free advertising and in addition pays a minimum rate for the space used, the merchants paying for their ads.

Perfume Named for Valkyrien

Valkyrien is the latest screen star to have a perfume named for her. Vivaudant, the French perfumery connoisseur of New York, has just signed a five-year contract with the youthful Danish diva to star her in a perfume named for her and composed under her direction to insure her favorite odor being composed in the bouquet.

The French connoisseur recently saw Valkyrien as "Diana" in the classic screen allegory by that name, and decided that here was the maiden radiantly supreme in physique and facial beauty to be his perfume star. Valkyrien won the official beauty prize of the Government of Denmark, and was complimented by King Frederick VIII with the now historic remark: "You are the most beautiful maiden in my kingdom."

Valkyrien has been starred in eight screen features during this her initial year in this country. She is now with the Fox Films, and is at present on her vacation at Long Beach, New York.

First Aid to Theater Men

BY S. L. ROTHAPFEL

THE first week in September will usher in the beginning of a new business year for a large number of motion picture theater managers who closed their houses during the warm weather. While you are laying your plans for the coming year as to the redecorating of your house, if necessary, the program you are to run, and so forth, is a good time to look back over your past experience and consider the management of your house. Ask yourself these questions and study the answers carefully:

Have you been making your theater as comfortable as possible for your patrons in every way?

Have you been paying attention to all the little things as well as the big ones?

Have you been exerting every effort to give the public the best service possible?

Has your house been noted for the courteous treatment received there?

Have you been allowing things to run along in a haphazard manner or have you a well-defined system?

Are you holding up the standard of your theater and making it the very best it can be made under the existing conditions?

Are you making your house so attractive that it will stand all competition?

Are you alert to try any new ideas which occur to you or schemes which you learn have brought success to others?

Are you showing the clearest pictures?

Are you putting thought into the selection of the music which accompanies those pictures?

Are you personally supervising the running of your theater or leaving it to your employes?

Before you start on your winters' business take time for retrospection. Think over your sins of omission and commission during the past year and determine to rectify them during the coming one. Take into consideration the fact that the public is demanding more and more from the exhibitor all the time and be prepared to meet that demand. Consider thoughtfully the fact that competition is growing stronger all the time and to hold your patronage and your business you must be able to stand comparison with these competitors and make just as good or a better showing.

If you are going to be an exhibitor be a live one. If you are going to run a motion picture theater make it one of which you and all the people of the neighborhood can be proud. Start out this new business year with high ambitions and aspirations and then work faithfully toward the lofty mark you have set for yourself and your reward will await you in the form of increased business and greater success.

56—My family wants to live in New York and I guess I'll go over there and build a theater. What are the building restrictions? Thanks.

The building ordinance in New York has just recently been changed. Under the old building law every new theater had to have an open court on three sides of the building fronted only upon one street—one to the right, and one to the left of the auditorium and one back of the stage. The new law saves the builders of theaters a space not less than eight feet wide the length and twice the depth of the stage as it does away with the requirement of a court around the stage, confining the requirement to the sides, and only far enough back from the street on the sides to take in all the exits. This new provision also gives increased protection to the public because upon exiting into a side court from a theater there will be no danger of the people turning in any direction but toward the street. When there is an open space entirely around a theater a panic-stricken audience rushing into the courts would be as likely to turn to the rear of the theater as toward the front, thus making confusion and injury almost certain.

Another good point of the new amendment which is causing the theater owners to rejoice is that henceforth the written law must be followed absolutely, and the Board of Examiners and other officials cannot use their own discretion, so the owners will no longer be placed at the mercy of officials with discretionary powers.

Other laws governing the theaters are that every house accommodating 300 persons shall have at least two exits; when accommodating 500 persons, at least three such exits; these exits not referring to or including the exits to the open court at the side of the theater.

Every theater is required to have one or more entrances or exits on the street aggregating not less than twenty-five feet in width. Each exit has to be at least five feet in width and provided with doors of iron or wood, and all doors must open outward.

Restrictions regarding the interior of the theater require the aggregate capacity of the foyers, lobbies, corridors, passages and rooms for the use of the audience to be sufficient to contain the entire number to be accommodated on the floor in the ratio of 150 square feet of clear floor space for every one hundred persons. All aisles must not be less than three feet wide where they begin and increased in width toward the exit in the ratio of one and one-half inches to five running feet.

All seats have to be not less than 32 inches from back to back, measured in a horizontal direction, and firmly secured to the floor. There shall not be more than fourteen seats in any row extending from one aisle to another or seven seats in a row extending from an aisle to a wall.

This covers all the principal points, I believe, and at least will give you an idea of the conditions you have to meet in erecting a house in New York city.

57—I am not an exhibitor and expect I have no right taking up your time, but I am an ardent "fan" and know just what suits me in a theater when I see it. While I was away on my vacation in a small town I stopped in a small theater half in fun for I thought I would find something to amuse me in the way it was run. But instead I found something to astonish me for I never saw more perfect management anywhere, and I was never treated so well in my life. Everyone about the theater from the girl selling tickets who greeted me with a cheery "good evening," to the manager, who was in the lobby as I went in and also as I came out, made me feel as if I was an honored guest and nothing was too good for my pleasure and comfort. I sat down in the back of the house near the door where I could look out into the lobby, and noticed that over three-quarters of the people who came in were greeted by name and some pleasant remark addressed to them. The same way in the inside of the house. There was only one usher because the house was small and there was no occasion for more, but he moved around very quickly and quietly and seated the people with no confusion and no delay. Everything about the program went like clockwork. There was no delay caused by the film running off the reel, and while there was only a piano to furnish the music it was appropriate to the picture and changed as the scenes changed. As the people came out they all spoke to the manager and I could not refrain from telling him myself what an enjoyable evening I had spent. I spoke of the deft way in which the usher handled the people as they came in and the manager explained that one reason for this was that they had a large regular patronage and these people always had the same seats and a special section was saved for the transients.

We are always glad to hear from the "fans" and I do not know who has a better right to offer suggestions or criticize the management of the theater for they are the backbone of the motion picture theater business. Every fair minded exhibitor is always glad to hear of any schemes which have brought success to others or any suggestions which might improve his own theater and make it more nearly conform to his patrons' idea of an ideal theater.

The description you have given certainly is a good example of what can be done with a small house in a small town if the exhibitor exerts all his efforts along the right line. Too often the village manager thinks his is just a small house anyway, he does not have much competition, the people will come anyway, and they should not expect the same programs and same service as they receive in the city, and consequently allows things to slide along in a half-hearted way which is evident all through the theater. These managers mean well enough but are lazy or do not realize in what a slipshod way they are allowing things to run. It may take a little more time in the first place to work out a system covering the management of your house and just what each employe is to do, but it means a great deal less work and much better results when that system gets into good working order.

And the courtesy to the patrons—this costs nothing, you will never find it entered on your list of expenses, but you will feel the results in the box office receipts. A pleasant greeting, a little thought for the comfort and pleasure of your patrons, makes a vast amount of difference in their feeling toward you and your house, in their appreciation of your efforts to please them, and in the coffers of the theater.

The idea of giving the regular patrons the same seats is really a small thing, and yet what a feeling of being perfectly at home it gives them. While it may not be possible always to assign exactly the same seats every time it is possible to seat them in the same section, and a little extra attention like this will add to the number of your regular patrons. Also it facilitates the seating of the audience and assist the usher in placing them quickly.

There is nothing more annoying to an audience when it is very much interested in a picture than to have people going up and down the aisles looking for a good seat, pushing their way into the middle of the row and then almost as soon as seated deciding they do not like those seats and getting up again and disturbing the people in that row and also in the next section which they decide to try. This assignment of the same seats every time will eliminate a great deal of this confusion.

In many ways the usher is one of the most important attaches of the house and more attention should be given to him, his methods and actions, than to any other of the employes. He comes in direct contact with the people and by his manner it is just as easy for him to antagonize them as to make them staunch friends of the theater. Never allow the usher to talk in a loud voice to the people he is seating as this distracts the attention from the screen and annoys the audience. What you want to strive for at all times and in all things is the comfort and pleasure of your patrons and in this connection very often the trivial annoyances assume gigantic proportions.

Bristol Fights Health Law

Up to the middle of August Bristol, Conn., was free from the infantile paralysis scare but one of the health officers on his return from his vacation decided to look into the matter and started an agitation which made the Board of Health practically decide to barr all children under sixteen years of age from the motion picture theaters whether accompanied by their parents or not.

The theater managers immediately were up in arms because there are very few cases of the disease in the city and it did not seem reasonable to take such drastic measures.

Nathan M. Higbie, manager of the Higbie Circuit of pictures and vaudeville, wrote a letter to the editor of the local newspaper in behalf of the exhibitors and the publicity given to his views on the subject, added to other forces brought to bear on the Board of Health, made them decide to postpone the passing of the health law. Mr. Higbie said in part:

The writer bows meekly to the law, but when after careful analysis that which has been made law seems to be in error, such error cannot be corrected unless attention is called by some one to the matter, and if the official or officials who have made the law investigate the friendly protest and find that they have erred in their first judgment it is their duty as servants of the public to recant.

If it is right and proper that children under 16 years of age should not enter a theater even with their parents during the present scare, why should they be privileged to enter churches, Sunday schools, ice cream parlors, drug stores with ice cream tables where the same spoons, dishes and glasses are used after being scantily washed or to congregate in private houses at children's parties or to attend picnics? In the case of the writer's theater it can be readily ascertained that since the present management has controlled it, that each and every morning the place is not only swept but scrubbed and thoroughly cleansed, and all exits and ventilators (of which there are many) left open. In addition to this there are eight large rotating fans. In front of six of them there is a cake of ice placed, with the result that the air is rarefied. Does this condition prevail in the church or Sunday school, or in the back of an ice cream parlor where at the tables are often many children congregated and where there is no ventilation to dispose of the fumes of candies, etc., or does it prevail in a private home where many congregate and visit in a small room? Bristol has up to date not joined in the scare that has burdened other cities, and it is to be hoped it will not.

Mr. Higbie mentioned the fact that as he owned a motion picture theater some readers might think that his motive for writing was purely a personal one and quoted a number of editorials which had appeared in different newspapers of the country which upheld him in his opinions.

The brilliant sun of Southern California no longer bothers Director Al Netiz of the David Horsley producing forces and he has discarded the tinted goggles and eye shade due to a discovery he has made. It is the substitution of a dark green paper in place of the white or yellow for his scripts, which has a most soothing effect on the eyes.

Universal Director Ben Wilson is making "The World's Enigma" in three reels, featuring Neva Gerber, with Edward as leading man.

The Photoplay Scenario

CONDUCTED BY B. F. BARRETT

Former Editor of Photoplay Scenario Magazine.

NOTE—This department will appear hereafter in each issue of MOTOGRAPHY, and will treat of all subjects of interest to the photoplaywright—whether amateur or professional. You are invited to suggest any subjects you desire to have discussed, or ask questions on any matters relating to the writing of photoplays which have been puzzling you. The department is also open to you at any time for the expression of your own ideas or the submitting of ideas of others which have helped you, and will be interesting to other photoplay writers.

The Greater Function of the Screen

BY ROBERT GRAU

Editor's Note:We are glad to be able to give one more message to the photoplaywright from the now silent pen of Robert Grau, through this article which was written shortly before his death. Every writer feels keenly the loss of Mr. Grau for he has long been looked upon as their staunch friend and adviser.

THE average writer for the screen, at least those whose efforts are confined to original stories prepared with the screen alone in mind, would find the task immeasurably less difficult if the writer would endeavor to familiarize himself not only with the literary and artistic requirements for his work, but also he must possess an intimate and first hand knowledge of the business conditions in a new art's ever changing development, as it marches on to a final goal even now none too clearly defined.

It is a tradition of the theater that authors rarely have the gift of managerial perspective. By this is meant that the men and women who write American plays invariably embrace their work with not a thought of the problems a theatrical manager has to cope with. "The stage playwrights ought to be subsidized by the railroad companies for they seem to wholly ignore in their plans of play-making that a play with eight characters can be as interesting and draw the public as well as one which requires from twenty to thirty players to interpret the test."

These words were spoken by one of the few men who still produce plays with profit, and at the time he was speaking a play with seven acting roles and but one scene throughout the four acts was attracting capacity audiences, while but a few doors away a play with forty-seven speaking parts and a maze of costly paraphernalia was being dispatched to the storehouse that night because even the most competent stage direction failed to make the complicated story go over the footlights. The plot was not complicated, but the wide distribution of characters befogged the audience.

With the photo-dramatist—if indeed photoplays are really the greater function of motion pictures—the need of a keen perspective as to the trend of productivity is almost paramount. Moreover there is nothing to indicate that the present mode of procedure on the part of the photoplay producers is likely to obtain throughout another year. The invasion of stage stars, while it has brought perhaps a dozen permanent additions to the screen's acting forces has nevertheless merely emphasized the vogue of the established screen player who more often than not achieved little or nothing in the older field of the theater. Not a few of the veritable stars of the screen never even trod the boards in the flesh until they acted before the cameras.

All of which is of significance to the author of photoplays. Of even greater significance is the temporary resort to stage plays of other days, and even of today adapted to the screen. The writer believes that this movement was a mere accident in the evolution of an infant art. That the photoplaywright should take cognizance of the conditions created by this movement is really the basic purpose of this writing, for who shall say that with almost the very last of stage stars converting fame into cash, yet contributing nothing vital to the new art's development and with practically every available play picturized, that the day is not near when the literature of the screen will be wholly original?

Many there are who believe that photoplays are after all not the greater function of scientific entertainment, others insist that a blase public is gradually acquiring a dislike for fictional productivity with its sameness of story and a tendency to unconvincing simulation of life's realities. Certainly Mr. Griffith did not achieve his great triumph with "The Birth of a Nation" with the aid of stage stars—moreover "The Clansman," as a spoken play, was not a success. It was the distinctly non-theatrical nature of this production which created an epoch.

The same is true of "Quo Vadis" which failed as a spoken play, or at least was but a quasi-success, yet on the screen with not a single well known player in the cast it made several fortunes.

The photoplaywright should take his cue from the public, as he observes the tremendous vogue of the countless brands of war films, most of which are the result of newspaper influence—not one of the theatrical, or even the established film companies, has offered an authoritative production of this nature. It is only a truth to state that the advent of these newspaper pictures of the various sides of the European war has operated to vastly reduce the attendance in the theaters where fictional and adapted stage plays have been vizualized on the screen. As many as 20,000 persons have paid for admission in one day into a playhouse seating less than 1,500 persons. The spectacle of the police being called out to preserve order and handle the crowds has been on view daily at almost every theater where these war pictures were shown.

The very fact that such films are creating an equilibrium to preserve the status of the theater should indicate to the author of picture plays the gold laden opportunity which awaits him when the day comes—as it will come and perhaps soon—that the warring nations get together and peace is declared. Then will come a new literature for the screen for this war will leave as a heritage to the photoplaywright a wealth of story and picture which the speaking stage can embrace only with the limitations of a four-walled playhouse in mind.

Already men and women who never evolved a spoken play in their lives are on the scene in war-stricken Europe—cameramen under the guidance of the world's greatest minds—literary talent heretofore reluctant to harken to the siren call of the screen are at last awakened to what many believe is merely the approach of the motion picture's vital era when the productivity of the screen will be wholly changed.

And as this great war will hasten the day of real life films so it will usher in the growth of the animated news film which is now merely of a primitive character. Some may doubt whether the actor is to find an increased vogue on the screen with this new era, but the real screen player will always be a necessity, but we may well believe that even two or three years hence the type of films we see now will wholly disappear—in short this writer believes, as do not a few others, that the productivity of the screen is not only to be revolutionized, but also to be un-theatricalized.

Tricks of the Trade

By Will M. Ritchey

AT every studio methods of handling the camera differ. Directors, photographic experts and cameramen are constantly studying new ways of artistic "shooting." Some experiments become fixtures. Others are discarded.

Of trick photography there are almost as many examples as there are studios. There is in vogue at some studios now a method of filming a large scene without losing detail that may be adopted generally. This consists in mounting the camera and tripod upon a rubber-wheeled platform, and moving camera and operator about the scene. Thus, first a corner may be photographed; then the camera moves and more of the scene enters the field of vision. Finally, the lens may point only to the chief character in the scene.

In this there is the advantage of holding the connection between the different parts of the scene without interruption. At present, however, there is a sense of mechanics which to some may destroy the illusion of the picture.

There is but one way in which the writer may become familiar with the possibilities of the camera—and this is by constant study of the newest pictures—features especially—exhibited. Having seen something done, he may write a similar action in his script. He need not know exactly how it is done, so long as he has learned when the method is possible and appropriate.

The "cut and flash" method of showing simultaneous action in two or more different localities is widely used—even to excess. In a magazine story or novel one chapter may tell the actions of the hero. The next chapter may reveal how his enemies are plotting against him. The third may swing back to the hero's adventures leading up to his encounter with the villain. So it is in the pictures, except that here the scenes are much shorter and the audience is not allowed to forget what one character is doing while following another.

The "cut and flash" is illustrated best by the "chase" scene. One person is seen hurrying along a street. The scene changes to another part of the street, with the same person running past. That is "cut" and his pursuer is shown passing through the first part of the street shown. Another "cut" and the pursued passes through a third street. This in turn is "cut" to the pursuer again, but now he is on the scene which shows the second part of the street. Continued thus for several scenes, the audience gets the impression of the one closely followed by the other through several streets.

Variations of this method are almost infinite, but it may safely be used by any writer to show what two or more persons are doing at the same time in different places.

Where to Reach the Film Companies

With five letters on my desk which have been received this last week asking the addresses of film companies—some desiring one or two and some asking for all the companies—it appears to be an opportune time to give a complete list of these addresses which can be saved for future reference. As the desire for this information in most cases is to submit scenarios to the companies I am marking with a star the companies which are not buying anything from outside writers, so that you need not waste your time submitting to them.

Mutual Releases Three-Reel Serial

HELEN HOLMES AND WILLIAM RUSSELL FEATURES NOW ARER EADY

THE releases of the Mutual Film Corporation for the forthcoming months promise a number of big feature attractions which will go to the public under the title of Mutual Star Productions. In addition Mutual will shortly release the first chapter of a new series which is to be put out in five releases of three reels each.

Among these features will be the first six starring Mary Miles Minter, "Youth's Endearing Charm," "Dulcie's Adventure," "Faith," "Sunshine," "Fortune," and "Innocence.'

Richard Bennett will also appear in six features, the first of which will be "The Sable Blessing,' to be followed by "His Brother's Keeper."

In addition to the three already released Florence Turner will appear in three feature productions, "Grim Justice," "East Is East," and "The First Settler's Story."

Besides those already produced the Kolb and Dill comedies will include "The Three Pals," "The Bluff," "Beloved Rogues," and "Decent Deuces."

The next production of the Signal Film Corporation featuring Helen Holmes will be "The Diamond Runners," which will be followed by "The Manager of the B. & A."

Will Russell will appear shortly in his fourth feature, "The Man Who Would Not Die." Additional Russell features will be released under the titles "The Torch Bearer" and "The Love Hermit."

A special series of Mutual Star Productions featuring Margarita Fischer is also announced. Miss Fischer will be supported by a specially selected company of players and will work in her own studio at the American-Mutual plant in Santa Barbara. Her first feature will be "The Pearl of Paradise."

"Fantoms" is the title of Mutual's new series of Gaumont productions, the first of which will be released September 7. This will be presented in five releases of three chapters each and the story will be published simultaneously in the newspapers of the country.

Mutual's Last of August Program

Two Mutual Star Productions head the program of this company for August 28. Helen Holmes in "The Diamond Runners," ready for August 28, and William Russell in "The Man Who Would Not Die," for release August 31.

Supporting Miss Holmes appear Paul C. Hurst, Leo D. Maloney, Thomas C. Lingham, William G. Brunton, Katherine Goodrich and Charles G. Wells.

Charlotte Burton plays opposite Mr. Russell and others in the cast include Leona Hutton and Harry Keenan.

Mutual's three-part offering for the week, "The Forgotten Prayer" will be released August 31. Frank Borzage and Anna Little play the principal roles.

Winsome, blonde haired May Cloy has been selected for leading woman to Kolb and Dill, the famous character comedians who are to be starred in a series of five-act American Mutual Star productions.

Three two-part features will be released during the week, "The Key," an American production starring Edward Coxen and Lizette Thorne, ready August 26; "The Gambler's Last Love," a Mustang offering with Helene Rosson and Jack Richardson playing the leads, released September 1; and "The Trap," first of the Horsley-Mutual productions starring William Clifford.

Among the comedy offerings will be found "In Mexico," a Falstaff for release August 29; "Jerry and the Bandits," from the Horsely studios with George Ovey; "The Stolen Booklings," a two-act Vogue laughmaker featuring Ben Turpin and Rube Miller, for release September 3; and "Two of a Kind," a Beauty comedy to be released August 30.

Additional single reel feature releases include Mutual Weekly No. 87, which goes out on August 30, and "See American First," for release the same day. "Reel Life," the Mutual Film Magazine in pictures, will be released September 3rd.

Charlie Chaplin is again seen in his familiar baggy trousers and celebrated brogans in "The Count," the fifth Mutual Chaplin two-act comedy, and once more proves his right to the title of the world's funniest man.

Announcements

Announcement is made that "Youth's Endearing Charm," first of the Mutual Star Productions featuring Mary Miles Minter, will be released in six reels instead of five.

The big military Horsley-Mutual photodrama starring Crane Wilbur, originally announced as "Somewhere in Mexico," will be released under the title "The Painted Lie."

William Russell has resigned as director of the Mutual Star Productions in which he is being featured. Hereafter Mr. Russell will confine his activities to the acting end of the productions while Edward Sloman will look after the direction of the features.

With the release of "The Spite Husband," Crane Wilbur will make his last appearance as a star of two-act Horsley-Mutual features. Hereafter Mr. Wilbur will be featured only in five-act productions, the first of which will be "The Painted Lie."

Vogue-Mutual Notes

Frederick Palmer, former publicity man and scenario editor of the Keystone forces, is the most recent addition to the Vogue-Mutual studios. Mr. Palmer is now preparing a number of rapid fire two-act comedies in which various of the Vogue-Mutual stars will appear.

First of the two-act Vogue-Mutual comedies, filmed under the direction of Harry Kernan, who recently joined the Los Angeles studios, will be released under the title of "Bungling Bill, Grocer." Paddy McQuire had the leading role supported by Gypsy Abbott and Arthur Moon.

Ben Turpin, Rube Miller, Paddy McQuire and Arthur Moon, comedy leads of Vogue-Mutual releases, are to appear at a charity entertainment, arranged by a prominent Los Angeles woman, the proceeds of which will go to the city's poor. Each will appear in the make-up he wears in the roles assumed in Vogue-Mutual comedies.

Signal Players in Lumber Camp

A company of Signal Film Corporation players under the direction of J. P. McGowan are in the Hammond Lumber Company's logging camp making the exterior scenes in their production of the thirty-reel serial "The Lass of the Lumberlands," in which Helen Holmes is starred.

N. Z. "Daddy" Woods, character actor, is dangerously ill in his home in Glendale and it will probably be several months before he will have completely recovered. "Daddy" Woods, as he is affectionately known among the players, was cast for an important role in "The Lass of the Lumberlands," and had already worked in a number of scenes. The cast has therefore been revised and C. H. Wisschussen will appear in the role intended for Mr. Woods.

For some reason which none of the Signal players has been able to determine, practically every member of that company's forces has been ill since arriving in Arcata.

En route, producer J. P. McGowan was taken with what threatened to develop into pneumonia, but he is at work at present and in the vigorous air of the hills is rapidly regaining his health. Helen Holmes was also confined to her bed for two days with a similar illness. She has practically recovered now, but with her recovery, her sister, Florence Holmes, Thomas G. Lingham and Avis Botefuhr have developed high fevers and been enrolled among the hospital patients. Prompt medical attention saved Leo D. Maloney from an attack of the same trouble.

In addition to the above, colds developed en route have settled in several of the players' eyes resulting in conjunctivitis, which, though not serious, prevents them from appearing in any of the scenes now under production. They are receiving the best of medical attention and it is thought that within a few days the entire cast will again be as well as ever.

Doris Grey to Be Starred

Edwin Thanhouser announces that Doris Grey, the beautiful Boston girl, is to be starred in a Thanhouser-made Pathe Gold Rooster play to be called "Her Beloved Enemy." The story, by Lloyd Lonergan, was written expressly for Miss Grey. Ernest Warde is directing the picture.

Miss Grey sprang into public notice at the Moving Picture Exhibitors' ball in Boston last December, when she was chosen as the most beautiful girl at the ball. She was promptly signed by Mr. Thanhouser with the understanding that if she proved to have talent as a motion picture actress she would be given big things to do. She accepted a rare opportunity and made good.

A new picture of Doris Grey.

"What Doris Did" was Miss Grey's first picture and it was such a success that she was immediately given leading parts in other Thanhouser plays. Such natural aptitude has Miss Grey shown that in less than ten months she has taken her place as a real star in the motion picture world. Miss Grey is only 19 years old and Mr. Thanhouses believes she is the "find" of the year.

Five Lasky Productions for August

Changes during the past week in the forthcoming releases on the Paramount program gives five Lasky productions in the month of August.

The Lasky productions for the month and their release dates are as follows:

"The House with the Golden Windows," in which Wallace Reid and Cleo Ridgely are co-starred, August 3. Blanche Sweet in "Public Opinion," August 17; Sessue Hayakawa in "The Honorable Friend," August 24; Lou-Tellegen in "The Victory of Conscience," August 28, and Fannie Ward in "Each Pearl a Tear," August 31.

After a vacation of several weeks, including a trip to New York, Thomas Meighan, leading man of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, has returned to the studios at Hollywood, California, to begin work at once on a new production in which he will be featured.

The next photoplay in which Mr. Meighan will be seen, however, is "The Storm," in which he appears with Theodore Roberts in the principal support of Blanche Sweet.

Notable Stars in Astra Productions

PATHE REISSUES "PALS" ON PROGRAM OF SEPTEMBER THIRD

THE Astra Film Corporation, which produces for Pathe, has built up a notable organization during its six months of existence. Louis J. Gasnier, who was formerly general manager of Pathe Exchange, is president and associated with him are George B. Seitz, author of "The Iron Claw," and George Fitzmaurice, Edward Jose and Donald Mackenzie, each of whom has a number of serial productions to his credit.

The Astra Company has just completed "The Shielding Shadow," Pathe's latest fifteen-episode serial which will be released October 1. Work has also been started on a new military serial written by Guy McConnell and George B. Seitz, in which Pearl White will be featured, and within two weeks Mr. Gasnier expects to start work on still another serial.

The activities of this company have not been confined to serials alone, however, as five features have already been produced for Pathe's Gold Rooster program—"Arms and the Woman," featuring Mary Nash; "The Test," with Jane Grey and Lumsden Hare; "The Romantic Journey," with William Courtenay and Alice Dovey; "Kick In," with William Courtenay and Mollie King and "May Blossom," with Pearl White and Hal Forde. "The Challenge," Al. H. Woods' melodramatic success, is now being produced.

In addition the Astra controls the rights to a number of literary and dramatic successes and also has made arrangements for original scripts. In discussing his plans Mr. Gasnier said the company would keep constantly in mind the importance of good stories. In the selection of stories for Pathe's serials the strength of the plot will be the prime consideration. He believes the day has passed when a lot of disconnected "stunts" can be thrown together and called a serial.

Louis J. Gasnier, president of the Astra Film Corporation.

Among the stars who will appear in Astra productions under the Pathe banner are Leon Bary, Cooper Cliffe, William Courtenay, Grace Darmond, Alice Dovey, Paul Everton, Claude Fleming, Hal Forde, Jane Grey, Lumsdon Hare, Ralph Kellard, Mollie King, Mary Nash, Florence Reed, Norman Thars, Madeline Traverse, Marie Wayne, Niles Welch, Pearl White, Suzanne Willa, Theodore Friebus and W. T. Hinckley.

The Pathe program for the week of September 3 offers a two-reel reissue, two reels of "Grip of Evil," a Luke comedy, another Florence Rose Fashion number, and a split reel scenic.

"Good Pals" is the reissue in which Marguerite Risser, a member of the old Pathe Jersey City stock company, is featured. "In Bohemia" is the title of the eighth "Grip of Evil" series, which depicts the Bohemian life in the artists' colony; "Luke Joins the Navy" is the slapstick comedy made by the Rollin company; "Week End House Party at Betty Young's," the third of the Florence Rose Fashions, shows hunting costumes and a variety of afternoon and evening gowns; the scenic is composed of "Picturesque Havana" and "Picturesque Ghent"; September 6 brings Pathe News No. 74 and No. 75 will be ready September 9.

J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, presented Pearl White with a solid gold mesh bag as a reward for her excellent work in "The Iron Claw." All of the serials in which Miss White has appeared have been very successful, and the Pathe Exchange has a steady sale for her photographs in China, Japan, South America, Australia, the West Indies, South Africa and Europe. When Mr. Berst presented the bag to the star he said: "Miss White, the world knows you as 'Pathe's peerless fearless girl.' We know you here as the easiest player to direct and get along with of any we have ever had. Your popularity is deserved and we all of us are for you, all the time!"

The employees of the Bound Brook, New Jersey, factory of the Pathe Exchange held an outing at the Palisades Amusement Park on August 5th. A number of athletic events were run off for which prizes were offered. The committee in charge of the outing consisted of W. E. Smith, Arthur Miller, Henry P. Kloss and G. Clyde Somers.

The Pathe company recently received a letter from E. M. Biddle, manager of the Gem theater, Paoli, Indiana, in which he said that he has been running Pathe serials for seventy consecutive weeks, and, although he has been ten years in the game, they are the biggest money makers he has ever handled.

Mr. L. E. Ouimet, manager of the Specialty Film Import, Ltd., which handles Pathe's pictures in Canada, was in New York last week. While here he received a telegram from his representative advising him that the trade showing of the "Grip of Evil" to the Canadian reviewers was a big success. Mr. Ouimet expects a record-breaking business in Canada on this serial.

A letter received from the Des Moines, Iowa, branch of the Pathe Exchange states that in the State of Iowa 243 theaters are running Pathe serials, against 82 theaters running competitive serials.

Lesser Extends Operations

Sol Lesser, one of the biggest independent exchange men, has just completed the details and arrangements whereby he assumes state rights control of the Clara Kimball Young Films for the Pacific Coast; the Audrey Munson "Purity" film for Pennsylvania, New Jersey, West Virginia, Indiana, Ohio and Kentucky; "The Little Girl Next Door," in association with Leon D. Netter for Pennsylvania, and the Australasian rights of "Where Are My Children."

Mr. Lesser in the past has confined all his activities to the western coast, with the exception of his exploitation of "The Ne'er-Do-Well," which he bought outright from Selig and paid what was then considered a tremendously large sum of money for the entire United States rights. This feature is being marketed by the V-L-S-E, which is having eminent success with it.

These present plans mean a widening of activities all round, and by his branching out, along these channels and taking on these productions, Mr. Lesser confines himself no longer to the coast extension alone, but begins to get a foothold in the East. Nevertheless, his plans for the office out west mean bigger things, for they will be working in conjunction with his ideas of gradually taking over many of the bigger and more prominently successful features on state rights basis for the entire United States.

Pathe's New Cleveland Offices

Pathe is establishing a model sales organization in Cleveland, Ohio. C. E. Shurtleff and A. M. Holah, formerly manager and assistant manager of the V-L-S-E Cleveland branch, have been put in charge of Pathe's office. They bring with them J. A. Conant and Paul H. Tessier, who were also members of the V-L-S-E staff in Cleveland. In addition they have W. H. Windsor, M. J. Glick and A. W. Kurz.

WARDE IN "KING LEAR"

Thanhouser Presents Shakespearian Actor in Films—Ernest Warde Directs His Father in Production —Other Thanhouser Notes

Another Shakespearian production will be added to the growing list when Edwin Thanhouser releases through the Pathe exchanges, Frederick Warde in "King Lear." Mr. Warde is a noted Shakespearian actor and is well-known throughout the United States and Great Britain. The production was directed by Earnest Warde, son of Frederick Warde, who has had long experience as an actor in his father's companies and as stage director for Richard Mansfield. Ernest Warde also plays the part of the fool in "King Lear." Others in the supporting cast are Lorraine Huling, Wayne Arey, J. H. Gilmour, Hector Dion, Edwin Stanley and Boyd Marshall.

Florence La Badie, the Thanhouser star, has returned from her vacation and has started work with her director, Frederic Sullivan, on a new feature by Agnes G. Johnston. The picture, which will be released through Pathe, goes deep into the problems of free love, discussing frankly, but fighting against radical ideas. It is as yet unnamed.

Here's a bit of scandal from the Thanhouser studio. Jock Girondo, Thanhouser's "daredevil" who risks his neck without batting an eye, recently went fishing and refused to bait his own hook because he was afraid of the worms.

Marie Shotwell, Thanhouser star, has discovered a new thing in pictures. It is "studio tan". During the hot spell, she made a great many scenes in "Through the Open Door", a feature which is to be released through Pathe, under the hot glass of the studio. Strong lights were turned on her while the camera crank turned.

Miss Shotwell found that after several days of this work her face took on a peculiar light sunburn which she calls "studio tan."

Stanley Hand Promoted

Stanley W. Hand, who has been connected with the World Film Corporation for the past year and a half, has been promoted to the managership of the Boston office of that company.

Mr. Hand was formerly a newspaper man, drifting into the sales department of the Ingersoll Watch Company, and from there to the South Bend watches, later becoming eastern representative for the South Bend people.

Believing there was a greater future in the film game, Mr. Hand joined the sales force of the World Film Corporation March 22, 1915, being affiliated with the New York and Boston offices. Was made manager of the Boston office June 15 of the same year, then transferred to New York City as assistant sales manager.

Mutual Chicago Offices Moved

The Mutual Exchange offices of Chicago have moved from the Mallers building, and 117 North Dearborn street, to the entire 18th floor of the Consumers building. The office is under the direct supervision of B. N. Judell, who is the Mutual's western representative. The Consumers building is the same building in which the home office of the Mutual Film Corporation will be housed after September 1.

International Will Present "Jaffrey"

DOROTHY GREEN, MILTON SILLS AND WARNER OLAND HAVE JOINED CAST

THE first of the "Golden Eagle" series of photoplays to be offered by the International Film Service, Inc., will be "Jaffery," an adaptation of the story by W. J. Locke that was last year's "best seller." William Sherrill, president of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, and George Irving produced the film with which William Randolph Hearst was so pleased that he bought it outright for the International company.

Practically every member of the cast is a star. C. Aubrey Smith, class-mate and life-long friend of Mr. Locke, who was the ideal of "Jaffrey," takes the leading role. Eleanor Woodruff plays opposite him, and the balance of the cast is made up of Florence Deshon, Doris Sawyer, Ben Hendricks, Erie Blind, Paul Doucet and Claire Hillier.

"Jaffrey" will be presented in five acts and six reels and will be seen for the first time on September 5.

Three important names have been added to the long list of prominent players now appearing on the screen for the International Film Service, Inc. The newcomers are Dorothy Green, famous for her vampire parts; Milton Sills, celebrated leading man of the legitimate stage and the screen, and Warner Oland, the well known heavy.

All three are supporting Mrs. Vernon Castle in "Patria," the forthcoming serial of the International.

Dorothy Green is the youngest vampire on the screen, being only twenty-one years old. Possessed of remarkable histrionic ability from babyhood she appeared in France and England in pantomime when a little girl, and intended to go upon the legitimate stage in this country but an operation on her vocal cords was bungled by the physician and ever since Miss Green has had a hoarse voice. So the star just naturally drifted into pictures, for which she possessed every qualification.

Tracy Mathewson, staff correspondent of the Hearst International News Pictorial, has been appointed official photographer to the Shackleton relief expedition and will take pictures of the rescue of Shackleton's crew stranded on Elephant Island. Mr. Mathewson sailed for a point on the South American continent, his exact destination being kept a secret in compliance with the orders issued by the British Admiralty, where he will meet the members of the expedition. From this point they will proceed to some point in Uruguay, then to the Flakland Islands and the final dash from there to Elephant Island.

Betty Howe has returned to the studio after being laid up for several weeks with a broken ankle, and will appear in the fifth and sixth episodes of "Beatrice Fairfax." Nigel Barry will also appear in several of the episodes.

Harry Fox, who is making his debut in motion pictures in "Beatrice Fairfax," is so enthusiastic over screen acting that he is writing a morality play. Its title will be "The Screen of Life," and already Mr. Fox is preparing to produce it at Ithaca, Auburn and other towns in that vicinity.

The principal characters will be "Camera" and "Film." Among the other characters will be "Close-up," "Fade-out," "Static," "Dissolve," "Director," "Scratches," "Lights," "Action," "Negative" and "Positive."

The first showing of this film will be made at Auburn prison as an afterpiece to Harry Fox's Studio Minstrels, which he will put on for the entertainment of the prisoners. In the minstrels will appear all the film actors employed by the International. The first three episodes of "Beatrice Fairfax" will also be shown to the convicts.

Bessie Wharton was painfully injured while appearing in "Billie's Romance," one of the episodes of "Beatrice Fairfax." James Sullivan, an eleven-year-old actor, takes the part of "Billie" and is supposed to kill the Indian maid, which role Mrs. Wharton was playing. In his excitement "Billie" pressed the muzzle of his automatic pistol against her back and fired. The wad from the cartridge inflicted an ugly wound while the flames set fire to her waist. Although suffering great pain, Mrs. Wharton played "dead" until the end of the scene but has since been confined to her room.

A marvelous effect in illusions on the screen will be seen in the fashion section of the Hearst International News Pictorial showing creations from the house of "Lucile" (Lady Duff Gordon).

A heavy curtain is first shown which fades away in a misty manner revealing a pretty room and a beautiful young woman seated on a lounge in evening dress. She steps into a flood of light in the entrance and immediately the curtain reappears behind her, shutting off the room.

The model in this illusion is Mineta Timmayo, the fashion star of the International Film Service, Inc. The illusion and lighting effects were directed by H. E. Hancock.

Three Francis X. Bushman reissues are on the Essanay General Film program for August. These include "The Three Scratch Clue," released August 8, "A Man for a' That," August 22, and "His Stolen Fortune," August 29.

Stone hut built on Mount Baldy, Cal., for scene in the current Triangle-Kay Bee play in which Frank Keenan is starring. Reginald Barker is seen in the picture directing Mr. Keenan. All the Ince players who made the trip assisted in the construction work, which required a day.

EVE RETURNS

Essanay Presents Edna Mayo and Eugene O'Brien in "The Return of Eve"—August Program—New Walthall Story

Essanay is soon to offer an unusually artistic production, "The Return of Eve," featuring Edna Mayo. It is an out-of-door play, most of the exteriors of which were filmed in the beautiful Dells of Wisconsin. The best camera experts of the Essanay organization worked on the play and President George K. Spoor considers it a photographic achievement.

Edna Mayo and Eugene O'Brien in Essanay's unique new feature, "The Return of Eve."

A final trip for exteriors will be made to Philadelphia, where an ideal location has been found in a nearby suburb. Sets for the few interiors are now being constructed and filming under the lights will soon begin.

A reissue of Francis X. Bushman's two-reel drama, "A man for a' That," leads Essanay's fourth week in August, followed by George Ade's "Fable of How Wisenstein Did Not Lose Out to Buttinski," and a three-act drama, "The Face in the Mirror," featuring Edmund F. Cobb and Joseph Sylvester.

Marguerite Clayton plays the title role in a pretty two-act drama, "An Old-Fashioned Girl," which is released August 29, a story of love and romance. Follows Vernon Howe Bailey's "Sketch Book of Washington," together with five hundred feet of scenic. "The Higher Destiny," a three-act drama, featuring Warda Howard and Edward Arnold and released September 2, completes the week.

Latest:—Motion Picture University

A recent issue of the Chicago Herald contained the following effusion from Richard Henry Little on the establishment of a university to teach the art of motion picture acting.

Nicholas Vachel Lindsay has written a book, "The Art of the Motion Picture," which there hain't any such thing, and then he wrote me a letter about establishing a moving picture university.

Poet Lindsay says in his letter that we have brewers' colleges to teach boys how to make beer and he has heard the newspapers speak of schools for crime and he knows we have schools for journalism, so why, asks he, have we not a great motion picture school?

He thinks there is the same reason for having a motion picture school as there is of having a brewery school.

I think the movie school ought to be full of endless platforms or whatever they call them. The chief thing to teach the pupils in the moving college would be how to keep running all the time without getting tired. And jumping! The people that go to the motion picture university ought to start jumping three blocks from the school and then keep jumping all day because a motion picture actor that doesn't jump all the time gets fired in three days.

A motion picture class at recitation would be an awful thing to see, Vachel. First they would run like everything on the endless platform and then they would jump up and down for an hour or two and then they would have to make faces registering scorn, sorrow, pity, anger, hate, despair and an "I-am-going-to-vote-for-Wilson" expression, which is a combination of everything else.

I suppose there would be classes in each kind of expression. Think of the Professor of Hate saying: "Pupils taking the advanced course in Hate will kindly step this way, wearing the proper expression."

Imagine seventy-five or a hundred people, all glaring Hate on their faces, jumping down the aisles to where the professor stands, also wearing a look of hate.

Then the professor would say: "The class will now register hating their nice, kind teacher." "Very good." "You will now hate humanity." "Splendid." "The class will now register hatred of self." "Splendid." "Now hate one another." "Fine. Hold that expression fifteen minutes while you jump up and down in the air." "Grand."

One star said with great enthusiasm, "I don't know nothing about this poet guy, but he's certainly got some swell idea, get me? Say, it would be jest grand to have a big youniversity like Harvard an' study all about fillums an' how to act in 'em an' everything. They otto be a department of murder, where they do all the murderin' for the movies, an' they could be some big, swell murderer for professor so's he could tell the pupils how the thing is done right. And there could be a professor of safe crackin' an' train robbin' an' jumpin' offen sky scrapers an' bridges and everything. It certenly is some art to do all them things without breakin' your neck, an how can you learn a art without goin' to school?"

Ralph Bunker Completes Ten Reeler

Ralph Bunker, actor-playwright, has just completed another ten-reel scenario, which has been accepted as the first production of a new motion picture corporation capitalized at $1,000,000, the Riverside Producing Company, which has been formed chiefly to present this picture. Mr. Bunker, in addition to being one of the most successful scenario writers, now has four one-act playlets on the big time vaudeville stage and has just signed a contract to play the leading juvenile role of the Harvard man in "Two Janes," which opens out of town Labor Day and comes to a Broadway theater two weeks later.

Ralph Bunker will be remembered as having created the original role of the Honorable Archibald Graham in Cosmo Hamilton's "Blindness of Virtue." He has recently appeared with pronounced success in "Omar, the Tentmaker," and last season in "The Girl Who Smiles." This summer he has been posing in motion pictures and writing scenarios for the Mirror Film Company.

One Hundred in First Milo Comedy

A cast of one hundred people will appear in the first Milo Comedy, now being produced at the Milo studios in Baltimore, headed by "Tommy" Flynn, the former Selig-Mutual featured comedian, supported by George Ross, from Metro; May Hunt, also from Selig, and an all star cast of supporting players of reputation. The direction is under the personal supervision of Frank P. Donovan.

One comedy production will be produced each week. The first picture, "Busting in Society," is nearing completion.

All About the Vitagraphers

LILLIAN WALKER APPEARS AS REPORTER IN "THE KID"

VITAGRAPH'S releases on the General Film Program for the week of September 2 include a Vitagraph Broadway Star Feature and two comedies. The feature, "A Fool and His Friends," was written by Agnes Johnston and produced by Director William Wolbert with a cast of players of Vitagraph's Coast Division, headed by Webster Campbell, Corinne Griffith, Jack Mower, Louise Owen, Otto Lederer and George Davis.

"The Fair Fare" is a single-part comedy which contains many beautiful scenes showing the harbor of Seattle, Mount Rainier and the North Pacific Highway. The play was written and produced by Frederick Hiller.

"Love and Trout" is the second comedy on this program. It comes from the pen of Josephine Lovett and was photographed under the direction of John Robertson. William Lytell, Jr., Thomas Keog and Julia Dodson assist in the laugh-making.

In "The Kid," a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature released on Monday, August 28, Lillian Walker is seen as a reporter on a large newspaper. An interesting feature of this film is that it affords an insight into one of New York's daily newspaper plants and shows the workings of the various departments employed in the turning out of a great daily. Wilfrid North is the author and producer of "The Kid." Eulalie Jensen, Ned Finley and Robert Gaillard support Miss Walker in its enactment.

E. H. Sothern and Edith Storey are busily engaged in "An Enemy to the King," by Robert N. Stephens. This is the play in which Mr. Sothern has appeared in all parts of the world and is one of his best-liked vehicles. Vitagraph Director Fred Thompson is directing the production of the picture.

Charles Brabin, who has been supervising the filming of a five-part Blue Ribbon Feature in which Naomi Childers and Marc McDermott play the leading roles, will direct the last five chapters of the Louis Joseph Vance story, featuring Charles Richman, Arline Pretty, Joseph Kilgour and an all-star Vitagraph cast.

Director Paul Scardon is putting the finishing touches to the George Randolph Chester and Lillian Chester story, "The Enemy," which, when completed, will be released as a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature. Peggy Hyland, the dainty English beauty, Evart Overton and Charles Kent, are the stars of this photoplay.

One of the largest single "sets" ever erected by the Vitagraph scenery staff, was an interior of a church which was blown to pieces to suit the action of a scene in "The Battle Cry of War," the sequel to Commodore J. Stuart Blackton's famous photoplay spectacle "The Battle Cry of Peace."

It took three weeks' time, the services of thirty men, forty barrels of Plaster of Paris, fifteen tons of rock, four car-loads of lumber, six massive plate glass windows and a number of pews, to erect it, but it only took Herman Rottger, the pyrotechnician, two seconds, with the assistance of fifty pounds of powder to blow it to smithereens.

Director William P. S. Earle, is thankful, however, that Alice Joyce, Harry T. Morey, Peggy Hyland, and the balance of the cast managed to get out in time to escape injury.

Scenes in this picture representing the bursting of shells from enemy guns were photographed at Pittsfield, Mass. To get the proper effect, Wally Van, who, with Earle Williams, journeyed to Pittsfield to take some exteriors for "The Scarlet Runner," in which he used a balloon, decided to photograph the exploding shells from above. With his cameraman he rose to a height of five hundred feet and "shot" down on the missiles as they landed. Wally has expressed the wish that he hopes the public will enjoy as great a thrill in the witnessing of the scenes as he had in the taking of them.

George Randolph Chester and Lillian Chester discussing the picturized version of their widely read novel, "The Enemy," with Vitagraph director Paul Scardon, Evart Overton and Charles Kent.

Western Vitagraph News

Jack Mower who is playing a prominent part in Director Wolbert's big feature, is renowned as one of the best swimmers on the Pacfic Coast. He learned the art at Honolulu and is often called upon by beach authorities to give exhibitions of his prowess as a surf board rider. After saving a number of lives he was honored by being made a member of the United States Red Cross Life Saving Society.

Corinne Griffith was warmly welcomed back to the studio by her "Gang" as she calls her fellow Vitagraphers and the most demonstrative of all was Nigger, the black dog she brought back with her from Truckee last winter where she was featured in "Sin's Penalty." On the principle of "Tall Oaks from Little Acorns Grow," we are anxiously awaiting results.

A gentleman who has been collecting autographs of famous people since 1893, has written Sunshine Mary Anderson, the little Vitagraph Star, for a few words from her together with her autograph. Mary feels quite elated at the thought of her name and calligraphy appearing alongside Roosevelt's and the other president's—Sir Charles Tupper and other Canadian Politicians—Cardinal Gibbons and others of the Cloth—Sir Henry Irving, Sarah Bernhardt, Ellen Terry, Olga Nethersole, De Wolf Hopper, and numerous others of that profession as well as authors, artists, scientists, etc. of various nationalities and descriptions.

EXHIBITORS' COURT

F-I-L-M Club of Chicago Settles Grievances of Both Theater Men and Exchanges—May Expand to Other Cities

When an exhibitor returns a shipment C. O. D., or fails to take up a show that he has contracted for, or is running his theater to the detriment of the business, or, on the other hand, an exhibitor may have a grievance against an exchange, or there may be a claim dispute with an express company—all of these and similar difficulties are now straightened out in Chicago by the F-I-L-M Club. And "fairness" is the slogan.

The membership of the F-I-L-M Club is open to all who are interested in the film business and the promotion of its welfare. The executive committee is at present made up of exchange managers who meet in executive session every Wednesday. E. C. Jensen, World; S. E. Abel, V-L-S-E; I. Van Ronkel, Blue Bird; R. O. Bronton, Metro; M. Fleckels, Universal; F. M. Brockhill, Paramount; J. F. Bowman, International; I. Kuh, E. L. K.; J. M. Hayes, Picture Play House, and M. Flemming, Eagle, constitute this committee at the present time and the work which they have already accomplished has made the F-I-L-M Club of Chicago a strong organization.

In speaking of the scope of the work now being done, S. E. Abel of V-L-S-E said: "There is one thing which the club absolutely will not stand for, and that is the returning of a film C. O. D. by an exhibitor. Yet despite this avowal when such a case comes up (and there is one before the executive committee at the present time) the situation is looked into thoroughly—there are no sudden dictatorial decisions made—but the details are investigated and the exhibitor is treated with extreme fairness. On the other hand, if an exhibitor believes a certain exchange is taking undue advantage of him he may appeal his case before this organization, and feel that he will always be given a fair hearing and if the exchange is at fault the power of the executive committee is sufficient to demand suitable retribution."

Warrants Co-operation of Manufacturers

If the F-I-L-M Club of Chicago can accomplish such splendid work as outlined above—and it is doing it every week—is it not entitled to co-operative recognition from the manufacturers? Just as our federal, state and municipal courts are beneficial for the progress and welfare of the general public, so the work of the F-I-L-M Club is raising the standing and standard of the moving picture industry in and around Chicago and it is sincerely hoped that the work done here will be taken up in other cities by the formation and affiliation of similar clubs, thereby creating the F-I-L-M Clubs of America.

GAUMONT RELEASES MYSTERY

Mutual Will Present "The Mystery of the Riviera" as a Masterpicture on August 24. Boy Scouts Shown in "Reel Life"

"The Mystery of the Riviera," produced by the Gaumont Company, will be released by Mutual as a Masterpicture on August 24. The scenes are taken at Nice, France, and a strong cast was picked from the Gaumont favorites maintained in Paris.

Three Gaumont single reels will be released through Mutual during the week of August 27. The first will be "Reel Life," the Mutual Magazine in Film, with a series of views of boy scout life. This is called "The Oath of a Boy Scout." Another division of this reel shows various animals and reptiles which are becoming familiar to our soldiers quartered on the Mexican border. There is also a Gaumont tabloid photodrama from an episode taken from "Life," the national humorous magazine.

"See America First" for August 30 shows scenes "North of Boston," and on the same reel is one of Harry Palmer's Gaumont Kartoon Komics.

The third reel of the week is the news reel the Mutual Weekly, which shows pictures of the German subsea freighter "Deutschland" and some views of France under war conditions.

New Ince Blossom

A newcomer to Triangle followers is introduced in "Honor Thy Name!" the Triangle drama by J. G. Hawks, in which Thomas H. Ince presents Frank Keenan and Charles Ray as co-stars. She is Blanche White and is seen in the role of "Rosalee Carey," the sweet Southern girl, whom Ray, as Rodney Castleton, in his weakness, shirks for a siren of the New York cafes.

Miss White came to the attention of Producer Ince at a charitable function he attended early in the spring. She appeared in a tabloid and Ince was at once startled by her blonde beauty. The sweet, childishly-innocent face possessed all the requirements set forth by Author Hawks in drawing his character of Rosalee for "Honor Thy Name!" Introduced to the young woman, Ince bade her visit the studio for a "test" before the camera. Miss White presented herself the following day and instantly convinced the producer that she could successfully handle the part. Ince's belief in her, it is said, has been borne out by her delightful performance of the role.

Valeska Suratt nearly lost one of her best hats in a peculiar manner recently. Miss Suratt is an ardent baseball fan and she was attending the last game in the Giant-St. Louis series at the Polo Grounds, when Dave Robertson knocked a high foul. When it came down it landed in the box in which the William Fox actress was sitting—and incidentally bent the rim of her latest hat while in transit.

Joan Sawyer Dances Into Fox Films

FRITZ LEIBER TO PLAY LEADING ROLE IN NEW FEATURE

Valeska Suratt of Fox.

JOAN SAWYER, who is well known to all lovers of modern dances, has joined the William Fox Company and will begin work immediately upon her first picture as leading lady with the Tefft Johnson company. Mr. Johnson is one of the new directors recently added to the staff. Miss Sawyer made her first appearance on the legitimate stage when seventeen in musical comedy, for a couple of seasons graced the vaudeville stage, and then proceeded to become one of the best known dancers in the world within a very short time.

Another new name to be featured in Fox productions is that of Fritz Leiber, the noted Shakespearean star. Mr. Leiber has already started on his first picture under the direction of Bertram Bracken. After a season in stock Mr. Leiber joined the Ben Greet players and later played with Julia Marlowe and Robert Mantell.

Advance September Releases

Three photoplays starring Valeska Suratt, Theda Bara and Walter Law are announced for the first three weeks in September.

Miss Suratt will appear in "The Straight Way," an unusually dramatic play with Glen White and Herbert Heyes in the supporting cast.

Miss Bara's picture, "Her Double Life," shows her in the last of her sympathetic roles before she begins "vampiring" again. Stuart Holmes, A. H. Van Buren, Walter Law and the Lee children also appear in this play.

Walter Law, the new Fox star, makes his second appearance on the screen in "The Unwelcome Mother." Mr. Law is supported by an all-star cast.

Farnum Visits Little Cripple

William Farnum received a very pathetic letter from a little girl twelve years old, a cripple from childhood and an orphan for many years. A film in which the actor starred had been exhibited in the hospital ward in which she lay and immediately Agnes fell in love with the big Fox star, and wrote him a letter pouring out her admiration. When Mr. Farnum received the note he telephoned to the hospital and learned that the little girl had only a few hours to live; her case was hopeless. He made a record dash to the institution and asked for the sick child. When he walked up to her bed she said: "I'm so glad! I been praying you'd come, but I didn't think you would. No one else ever did." These were the last words of the little sufferer, and she died with her hands clasped tightly in those of her hero.

Jane and Katherine Lee, Fox stars.

Governor Pleasant, of Louisiana, saw William Fox's picturization of Ouida's famous novel, "Under Two Flags," at the Empire Theater in New Orleans last week, and praised the photoplay highly. The governor rarely attends a picture show, but he thought that the picture was decidedly worth his while.

George Larkin, who played "Bob" Saunders in "A Tortured Heart," was entered in several events at "The Stampede," in Sheepshead Bay, last week. Mr. Larkin contested in a bucking horse event, the pony express, the half-mile race, and tried for the honor of "most distinguished-looking cowboy." He is now entered in a new William Fox photoplay.

The employes of the World Films fell before the onslaught of the William Fox baseball team at MacCombs Dam Park, score 8-3. Virginia Pearson showed her loyalty to the cause by throwing out the first ball. It wasn't a bad throw, either, when one considers that she had driven her car from Palisades, New Jersey, to perform the feat. About 5,000 persons saw the game. Next week the Fox players will cross bats with the Triangle representatives.

The photoplay which Director J. Gordon Edwards completed for William Fox a few days ago makes the twentieth production in which Stuart Holmes has played. The veteran villain of the Fox Films has acted in 100,000 feet, or nearly twenty miles of celluloid. This certainly must be a record for screen villainy. It is estimated by experts that the hissing power which has been devoted to Mr. Holmes by devoted audiences would supply enough energy to drive a freight train with seventeen cars and a caboose from New York to Nyack, with only one stop for water.

Theda Bara has returned to the vampire role for which she is internationally famous. She is highly pleased with her latest part, and says it was like a home-coming after playing Cigarette and Isabel in "Under Two Flags" and "East Lynne."

The exteriors for many of the scenes in the new Bara picture were taken at Long Beach, New Jersey, and are exceptionally attractive.

Charles Craig, who played the part of Lord Rockingham in "Under Two Flags," the William Fox photoplay adapted from Ouida's novel, will appear again in June Caprice's third picture, now being screened.

Virginia Pearson's new picture of a Scotch girl's adventures during war-time is remarkable for the close-ups which it will show. The southern beauty has never done a finer piece of acting, and Director Kenean Buel takes full advantage of this fact by giving an unprecedented number of views of the star's features at close range.

Arthur Vaughan, assistant director to Will S. Davis, who made "The Straight Way," has been transferred to Tefft Johnson, the new director who joined the Fox forces recently.

Walter Law, the new William Fox star, puts up one of the best film fights yet presented to movie fans, in the ship cabin scene of the picture in which he stars. The photoplay will be released within a short time.

June Caprice is at work on a new picture for William Fox which will deal with a girl's life in an orphanage.

West Recovers from Breakdown

Raymond B. West, who worked with Thomas H. Ince on "Civilization", has returned to Culver City after a six weeks' vacation spent in Honolulu. Mr. West worked night and day for eighteen months on "Civilization" and immediately after the completion and marketing of the picture suffered a complete nervous breakdown, and his physician insisted that he take a long rest.

Upon returning to Culver City Mr. West plunged into the work of making Ince-Triangle multiple reel features. Recently he completed "The Wolf Woman," featuring Louise Glaum.

Hot upon the heels of "The Wolf Woman" Mr. West produced "Home," featuring Bessie Barriscale with Charles Ray. In this Ince-Triangle multiple reeler he introduced some novel lighting effects.

Mr. West now has ready two plays which so far have not been named. The first, by J. G. Hawks, features Charles Ray. The second, by Monte M. Katterjohn, is enacted by three Ince stars—Dorothy Dalton, Enid Markey and Howard Hickman. Some of the scenes are taken aboard the yacht of E. A. Featherstone, a Los Angeles millionaire, whose friendship for Mr. West enabled the director to stage the scenes on the decks of one of the finest yachts on the Pacific coast.

Metro Declares Dividend

At the annual convention of the Metro Film Corporation held at Atlantic City a twelve per cent dividend was declared. The stock of the company will be held in close corporation.

Creighton Hale as a "Stampeder"

Selig Denies Entering Amalgamation

William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company, makes the following statement:

When there is any news interesting to the pictureplay public or to the trade the same will be authoritatively announced. I would say that the many rumors that seem to emanate from New York concerning the plans of the Selig Company are for the most part unfounded. Speaking for the Selig Company, I would state that we have completed no "organization," entered no "amalgamation," despite the many and varied rumors to the contrary. It is true that I am considering plans beneficial to the Selig Company and to the pictureplay public. These will be announced correctly and in detail in due time.

It is true that "The Country That God Forgot," the five-reel western drama, will not be released through V. L. S. E., nor will the original date, August 21, be observed. This photoplay is in my opinion an unusually excellent one and a drama that will long be remembered. In many respects it is a worthy successor to "The Spoilers," although a picture of entirely different atmosphere. The correct date and the method of releasing this picture will be announced at the proper time. I hope to have some definite announcements to make concerning release plans for "The Crisis" soon. This wonderful picture, the best I think I have ever made, will speak for itself.

Rothacker Films Advertising Managers

At the close of the first day's session of the National Dealers Service Conference, held at the Sherman House, August 16, Ed. H. Philippi, sales manager of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, Chicago, addressed the conference, having assigned him the title "Putting Your Story Over."

The conference was called for the purpose of discussing ways and means for manufacturers to render the dealer greater service in their efforts to promote the sale of their goods.

Mr. Philippi spoke on the popularity of the short, dealer-advertising film, now quite generally adopted by some of the largest manufacturers in the country. Following his talk he extended to the advertising managers present an invitation to visit the new plant of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company.

By special arrangement with the Simmons Motor Company, the party was taken to the new plant in a number of new Bour-Davis motors. Upon arrival the entire party was "filmed" and then began a trip of inspection through the film manufacturing plant.

An Automatic Arc Adjuster

"AUTO-ARC" WORKS SIMPLY

AN automatic device that would adjust the carbons of a projection arc, and maintain a light as steady as that obtained through the constant ministrations of an attentive operator has always appeared a most desirable addition to projection technics. Such a device, however, is more easily desired than designed, and of the number of inventors who have tried and failed along this line we have no record. Feeding the carbons of a street arc lamp, for illuminating purposes only, is a comparatively simple problem. The projection arc demands a nicety of adjustment for length (separation), focus (location), and steadiness that has heretofore put a premium on purely manual operation.

However, every purely mechanical problem must eventually be solved by the concentrated application of inventive brains; and this one already seems to have found its answer. The new arc controller known to the trade as the "Auto-Arc" not only claims to care for the projecting machine carbons with all the efficiency of an expert operator, but the simplicity and positiveness of its principles bear out those claims.

The illustration marked Fig. 1 shows, of course, merely the convenient compactness of the finished apparatus as it is installed in the operating room—under the projecting machine, for example, which space easily accommodates its small bulk and puts it out of the way. Fig. 2, showing a square side view of the device with its casing removed, gives some idea of the arrangement of its few parts.

The heart of the machine is a sort of differential relay. This consists simply of a soft iron core on which are wound two separate coils of wire. One of these coils is of heavy wire, with low resistance, and this is connected directly in series with the arc. The other coil, consisting of fine wire of high resistance, is shunted across the terminals. The magnetic effects of these two coils oppose each other, so that normally there is no magnetism in the core. If the current in either coil is increased or diminished, however, the core becomes magnetic at once.

There is a pivoted armature mounted at each end of the iron core, the function of which we will now see.

The Auto-Arc is inoperative until the line switch on the projection machine has been closed and the arc has been struck by hand. The series coil then becomes operative, and the core attracts its armature. This action is merely preparatory, however, and has no immediate effect on the arc.

Presently the arc has burned to a perfect crater, and begins to lengthen. As the space between the carbons increases, its resistance also becomes higher, weakening the current through the series coil. The magnetism of the core decreases, and the armature at the end of the core is pulled away.

When this occurs the armature, thrown backward by its coiled spring, makes a contact through platinum points that sends current into the carbon-feeding mechanism. The carbons are instantly brought slightly towards each other. The current through them, and consequently the current through the series coil, increases again, raising the magnetic flux in the core.

Meanwhile the other armature has short-circuited momentarily the shunt coil of fine wire, and its counter magnetizing influence is neutralized. The core, now at its full magnetic power, draws its armatures back again, and the original conditions are restored. The machine is ready for the next shifting of the carbons. The operation occurs just as often as the arc demands it; and indeed the adjustment each time is so slight because of the sensitiveness of the instrument, that it might almost be called a continuous adjustment, at least so far as the effect is concerned.

The actual carbon-shifting device is simply a solenoid, a lever and a ratchet. When the solenoid receives current it pulls down the lever and moves the ratchet forward one tooth. The crowning feature of the arrangement, however, is that the ratchet is absolutely free except at the instant it is being moved by the dog on the lever. This means that the operator may move his carbons with perfect freedom at all times, without regard for the presence of the Auto-Arc.

Another remarkable feature is the adjustability of the machine for any amperage between 25 and 60, simply by moving a plunger in the core.

Ince Signs Baby Star

The sixteen-months-old baby pictured here is a lucky star. She will receive $1,000 a week when she is 15 years old.

She is Baby Lillian Read, the daughter of J. Parker Read, Jr., of New York, and has created unusual comment and interest for her remarkable performance in play produced by Thos. Ince. Her chubby little hand has just been guided across the face of a twenty-year contract, perhaps the most unique contract ever signed. It reads that Thomas H. Ince's Enterprises are to have Baby Lillian's exclusive services for the next twenty years, the contract to be void and null if she should marry before the expiration of that period. For the eight months remaining before Lillian is two years old, her salary is to consist entirely of monthly presents of chocolate and picture books, but when she is two, she will begin her first picture at a salary of $50 per week; when she is three, $75 per week; when she is five, $100 per week. At seven she will be raised to $250, at ten to $500 per week, and when she is fifteen to $1,000 per week. Between fifteen and twenty the sum is to be mutually agreed upon between Mr. Read, Lillian's father, who is Mr. Ince's personal representative, and Mr. Ince.

Experienced star who has just signed a twenty-year contract with Ince.

Plans are now being formulated to produce a Lillian Read series of a better class of children's films, and it is intended that 11 o'clock Saturday morning matinees of these pictures will be given in New York and throughout the country. Miss Beulah Livingstone, a former kindergarten teacher now engaged on Mr. Ince's publicity staff, and Mrs. J. Parker Read, Jr., will direct Lillian's pictures and organize a company of twenty-five child actors and actresses to be known as "The Lillian Read Child Players, Inc."

Lillian is, of course, blissfully unconscious of all that has been mapped out for her. Just as soon as she is old enough, she will be taught to ride as well as to swim and to do all of the things that may be helpful to her assured career. Then she may elope with some Lochinvar and spoil it all.

Margaret Anglin Studio in Dallas

By S. G. Parker.

Special Correspondent for Motography.

Definite announcement that the winter studios of the Margaret Anglin Picture Corporation will be located in Dallas has been made, following a recent luncheon-meeting to Jas. D. Barton of New York, president of the corporation, at the Adolphus Hotel, by a number of prominent Dallas business men.

Among those at the luncheon were Royal A. Ferris, D. E. Waggoner, John R. Babcock, Herbert Hughes, Judge John L. Young, Edward Titche, Fred Rogers and E. H. Fitzhugh. All made short talks indorsing the proposition and promising aid in bringing the studios to Dallas.

The Margaret Anglin Picture Corporation, has a capital of $750,000. Its summer studios will be located in Detroit. In a recent visit to Dallas, Mr. Barton submitted a proposition to the Chamber of Commerce and Manufacturers' Association that if $75,000 should be subscribed by the citizens of Dallas, the winter studios would be located in this city.

Margaret Nichols Joins Rolin

The Rolin Company, ever increasing its output, has secured Miss Margaret Nichols, to play leads in a new release. She was with the Balboa Company before joining Rolin, and played the leading part in a child picture "Little Mary Sunshine." Before that she was with the Flying-A in Santa Barbara. She is to appear in comedies for Pathe with Fatty Lampton.

The Rolin Film Company will move from its present Hollywood home to the new studio in Los Angeles the latter part of next week. The finishing touches are now being put on the new home, which was the original one, and it is nearly ready for occupancy.

In Hal Lloyd's newest picture a street car accident is used as a base for the story which shows how each person who saw the wreck, explained it in court. Dissolves are done and the different versions shown on the screen in the courtroom. A great mob is used here and some very funny situations arise during the arguments. The different versions of the wreck cause many laughs.

Improvements at Rolin Studio

Improvements at the new hilltop studios of the Rolin Film Company, where Rolin Comedies are made for Pathe release, are nearly completed. A force of workmen are toiling to make the new home of the slapstickers as good and efficient as possible. With new wiring, new stages and lights, and a lot of other things, the studio will be one of the best of the smaller places in and around Los Angeles. The studio is several hundred feet above the level of Broadway, and is far above the smoke, soot, and foul air, yet it is just three minutes by automobile from the center of the business section, so its value is very apparent.

"That fellow would make a wonderful typewriter operator," said Stuart Holmes as the chap in question walked blithely away.

"The Crimson Stain"

Consolidated Film Corporation's Serial Offered by Metro. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

THE first two episodes of the first serial to be released by Metro convinced us of this: Either "The Crimson Stain" will establish a notable success as a sixteen-episode continued photoplay or it will do as some other serials have done in becoming less stirring as the number of episodes released grows larger. We admit the lack of anything unique in the above quoted conviction, but we are not to blame if experience has taught us things about serials.

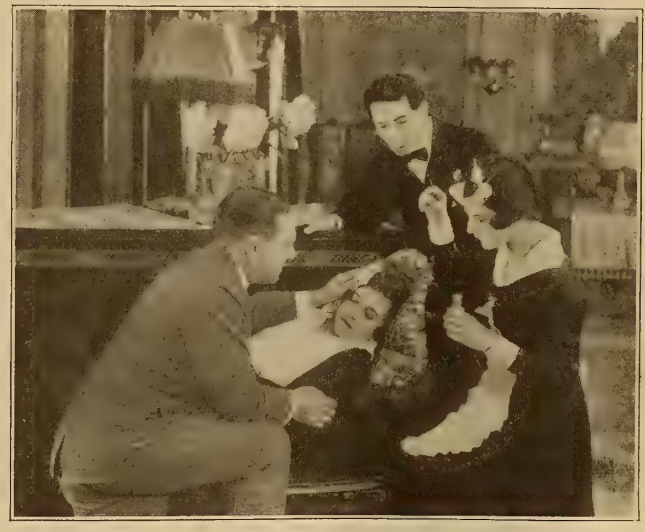
To our mind only one thing is necessary to make "The Crimson Stain" a vastly popular see-the-next-episode picture and that is the maintenance of the standard reached by the first two episodes through the suspense created and sustained by the action, effective realism of the production and remarkably good acting by Maurice Costello, Ethel Grandin and the supporting cast. But let "The Crimson Stain" releases that are to follow live up to the promises furnished by "The Brand of Satan" and "In the Demon's Power" and it will win the patronage of an immense following among those patrons of the screen who are only too anxious to respond to the strange, not easily comprehended appeal of this form of entertainment. No matter what happens there is no denying the fact that "The Crimson Stain" commences its sixteen episode run with a determined bid for honors in the class of serials listed under the word "Successful."

"The Crimson Stain" is a person, a murderous man whose eyes assume a terrifying red hue when the fiend within him is about to manifest itself in some horrible act of violence on those who happen to cross his twisted path. The identity of this man is the mystery of the play. So far, the author, Albert Payson Terhune, shows a most admirable spirit in playing fair with the spectator in that there is introduced here and there a bit of suggestion which may serve as working evidence to those who are desirous of solving the mystery.

The main characters in the story consist of a young man whose father is the publisher of a newspaper, the girl he has an affection for, her father, a scientist and the mysterious criminal. The scientist has discovered an element which he originally believed would greatly improve the human race but his experiments have brought trouble upon him for it turns out that the strange discovery makes those to whom it was administered criminals of a most relentless nature. And to make matters worse these people crave the treatment which is destroying their moral sense.

Two of the confederates of "The Crimson Stain," who is also known as Pierre La Rue, make visits to the home of Montrose and force him against his will to give them the remarkable treatment. The first episode, "The Brand of Satan," tells of the panic existing in a city alarmed by the countless murders, all of them having robbery as their motive, apparently that is, and the police are unable to locate the criminal. Harold Stanley is walking with Florence Montrose and a noise attracts them to a house which investigation shows to be the latest scene of Pierre La Rue's hideous activity. The next day the paper owned by Harold's father scores the police for their inability. Later the journalist is killed while visiting at the home of Montrose.

In the second chapter Harold Stanley, who now has taken up the duties of running the newspaper formerly published by his father, rescues Florence from the mysterious Pierre La Rue, who has lured her to the home of her neighbor, a young painter. The episode closes with Florence at her own home but still under the hypnotic influence of the murderer.



Mr. Costello and Miss Grandin make favorable impressions in the leading roles. Olga Olonova is an interesting Vanya Tosca, the vampire. In several vivid scenes she is mightily interesting. Thomas J. McGrane, Eugene Strong, Wm. H. Cavanaugh, John Milton and N. J. Thompson make up an adequate cast. The production was made by the Consolidated Film Corporation under the direction of T. Hayes Hunter. The producers are to be complimented for the excellent quality of the visualization given these chapters of this promising serial story.

"Husband and Wife"

World Film Offering Has Notable Cast. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

WITH a cast which includes such well known and able players as Ethel Clayton, Holbrook Blinn, Emmett Corrigan and Montagu Love the exhibitor showing "Husband and Wife" should experience little difficulty in attracting people to his theater. Those spectators in the audience who have responded to the magnetism of the posters bearing the names of these celebrated actors will have no cause to be disappointed by the performances rendered by the players, though they will have grounds on which to base regret that all this good acting was expended on "Husband and Wife."

"Husband and Wife" is an adaptation from a stage play by Charles Kenyon. It had a rather brief run on Broadway last season, with Robert Edeson in that role further dignified by having first mention in the title. The adaptation was made by Gardner Hunting and Barry O'Neill directed its production. The play considered on its own merits, if there be any merits, is not successful in exciting any enthusiasm whatever and it is doubtful if either the scenario writer or the producer could have made it a more impressive picture even at the expenditure of more skill than either manifested here.

The story hinges on a misunderstanding between a bank cashier and his pretty wife. One has a deep affection for the other but neither is demonstrative enough, or naturally honest enough to dispell the feeling harbored by each that their love is not reciprocated. The wife spends lavishly on clothes and cards and the husband finds it necessary to resort to embezzlement to pay the bills.

Matters come to the point where Doris decides to leave her husband and go to Japan with a wealthy and socially prominent sportsman. A detective's stupidity is the means of bringing them back to the house where the husband is in consultation with an accountant who has discovered the shortage on the books at the bank. A way out of the tangle is seen by the accountant. He proposes that the sportsman go fifty-fifty with him in making up the shortage, because both really love Doris. The proposition is accepted by Alliston and happiness comes to the Bakers at last.

Ethel Clayton is a beautiful Doris and Holbrook Blinn is as usual interesting as Baker. Both, however, struggle with characters that are barren of any one quality calculated to excite sympathy. They make no impression, both being devoid of strength or weakness in sufficient quantity to distinguish them.

Montagu Love has a rather grateful sort of part and he misses no opportunity to further the interests of Pat Alliston. Emmett Corrigan is also good. Dion Titheradge has the role he interpreted in the stage production and Gerda Holmes is seen as Mrs. Prescott. The settings and photography are up to the best standard of World Film offerings.

"A Welsh Singer"

Florence Turner in Mutual Star Production. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

THE third Florence Turner picture offered by Mutual is an adaptation from a popular English novel by Allen Raine and the character presented Miss Turner is a particularly good one, providing her ample opportunity to display the talents she possesses. She shows her gratitude to the part by rendering its impersonation in the finished style a long experience before the camera has made possible to her.

Mifanwy is a child of the distant hills who, by means of a wonderful natural singing voice, becomes celebrated throughout the land. "A Welsh Singer" presents its story in surroundings of natural magnificence. Pictorially it is as delightful as "Far from the Madding Crowd," and the offering has a good story to tell in addition.

First we see Mifanwy as a simple, poorly dressed country girl and later she is the famous artist with all the pretty clothes and luxuries which go with fame on the stage. Her country-boy friend, Evan, is encouraged in his love for sculpturing by an artist who is wealthy. Evan is now both celebrated and in command of a large income. The years he searches for Mifanwy are not happy ones for him, and many of them are distinctly unhappy for her, for Mifanwy finds that the road to recognition as a singer winds its way through a thicket.

Evan then falls in love with the much admired La Belle Russe, a great singer. La Belle Russe knows Evan well but he fails to recognize in her the object of his many attempts to find Mifanwy. Before the end which brings them happiness, Evan and Mifanwy have a narrow escape when the theater catches fire.

It is an interesting and well told story, and the settings, especially the hills of Wales, have rare beauty, which is revealed by good photography. The picture was produced by Larry Trimble. Henry Edwards, who co-stars with Miss Turner, is a capable screen actor and he makes much of the part. Malcolm Cherry who appears as the grouchy John Powys is very good and the same may be said of Campbell Gullen as Tom Pomfrey.

"The Parson of Panamint"

Pallas Production Offered by Paramount. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

"THE PARSON OF PANAMINT" is a picture of genuine impressiveness. If not the best, it is for certain one of the best Pallas productions Paramount has ever offered exhibitors. Dustin Farnum surpasses by a wide margin the general average he has struck in his previous appearances in pictures from this studio, and mostly because he has opportunities plus a good story. This is a real advantage, since it is always more pleasant to see a good actor act than a certain well known star exploited as such.

"The Parson of Panamint" is a narrative account of a minister who takes up his duties in a western town of a bygone day and it carries the vigor and color characteristic of its author's stories. If "The Person of Panamint" be accepted as a criterion it is to be hoped that more Peter B. Kyne stories will find their way to the motion picture screen.

Mr. Farnum presents a life-like figure as Philip Pharo, the parson who accepts the pastorship of the new church at Panamint, a mining town with a citizenship embracing the elements which go to make up most every citizenship, only in a more pronounced form. There are the gamblers including both men of strong and weak character, the saloonkeeper who runs a place of sin but is above-board in his dealings, the hypocrites and scandal mongers and all the rest.

It is into this camp, which has for years been run on a wide-open basis, that the new mayor, who believes that the institutions representative of respectability—a church, school house and jail—are now necessary, brings Philip Pharo, who proves himself to be the very person Panamint needs. Chuckwalla Bill finds Pharo only after a thorough search in San Francisco. Immediately upon arriving in the camp the parson is of course the objective of an attempt at monopoly by the set headed by Absalom Randall and his sister Arabella.

The parson visits the saloon owned by Bud Deming. Chappie, who runs the roulette game, urges the parson to try his luck and he is so insistent that Philip retorts that he will play Chappie's game if the latter will play his by coming to church next Sunday. It is an agreement and the parson has an astounding run of luck. Before he quits he has won the whole establishment.

Bud is game, he turns the place over to the parson who then decides to run the restaurant, but no drinks are to be served. This episode incites the anger of the hypocrites and they succeed in having the authorities of the church unfrock Philip. This is a severe blow to the parson but he harbors no malice and later dies in rescuing the man who injured him from a burning building.

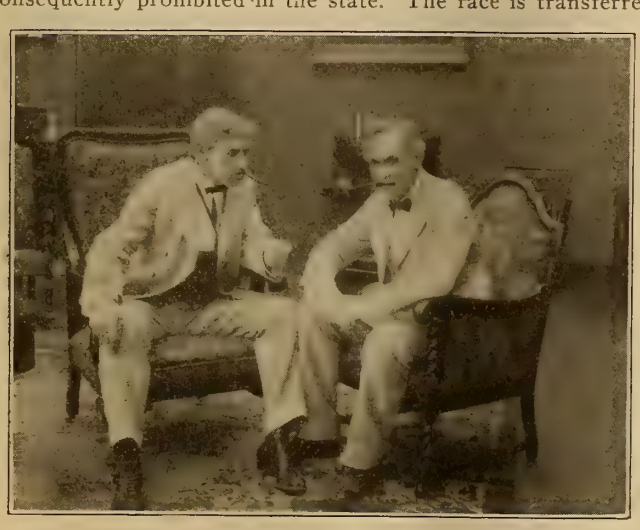
This story is a visualization of an old man's account of Panamint to a friend. Of Panamint no stone remains upon another now, and it lives only in the fond memory of Chuckwalla Bill, now an old man. William D. Taylor directed the production, an artistic and effective one in every respect. Winifred Kingston, Howard Davies, Pomeroy Cannon, Colin Chase and Ogden Crane are members of a praiseworthy supporting cast.

"The Thoroughbred"

Triangle-Ince Production a Story of the South. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy



ONCE more Frank Keenan is seen as the southern gentleman and once more is he a convincing southerner, though by no means does he suggest any of his former screen impersonations. Major Ainslee, the main character in "The Thoroughbred," resembles other spirited sons of America's south only in that he loves a race horse and poverty threatens his home, the home of his illustrious forebears. In general character he is much more logical and practical as to viewpoint than any other fancy waist-coated, soft-hatted gentleman the motion pictures have shown us. Also his face is without hirsute adornment.

C. Gardner Sullivan must be given credit for some originality in so equipping a blue-blooded product of the land lying below the Mason and Dixon Line with a mind capable of looking at things as they should be looked at by all living men who would know some sort of happiness in this present unsentimental age. It is with this character that "The Thoroughbred" ceases to be original to any remarkable degree. The play required amplification to be the subject of five reels of film.

"The Thoroughbred" tells of a man who has lost the bulk of his fortune on a stock investment. Major Ainslee looks forward with much apprehension to the day when he must tell his daughter that they are now without income and must give up the home of which they are proud. Ainslee sees one ray of hope. His mare, Miss Minta, gives great promise and he is banking on her winning the racing classic of the season, which will be run in his native county.

The new minister regards horse-racing a vice and in accordance with his principles he lends his aid to a bill now before the state legislature to abolish the sport. Ere long he and Major Ainslee differ so completely on this point that the minister to his regret finds himself no longer welcome in the Ainslee home. The daughter of the house is of course loyal to her father, but she does experience a certain amount of difficulty in standing aloof while the minister makes all the advances possible to a gentleman to revive the friendship.

The racing bill is passed and the famous sweepstakes is consequently prohibited in the state. The race is transferred to a distant city and as the Major has not enough money to send Miss Minta, things look black for him. But the minister learns this and by persistence combined with a bit of diplomacy he, in a round-about way, advances the amount necessary. Miss Minta wins the rich purse and the minister's manly act comes to the notice of the Major.

Reginald Barker produced this admirably treated play. George Fisher is good in a grateful part, that of the Rev. Hayden and Margaret Thompson is a charming Betty. When the story carries the spectator to the race track it does its best by those who like a picture with zest and color. The action laid there is really exciting.

"The Pretenders"

Metro Crook Play Produced by Rolfe Photoplays. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

ADAPTED from a Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf story telling of the newly rich country folk having a fling at society life in New York. "The Pretenders" is a Rolfe-Metro picture that is not lacking in interesting moments.

Home scene in "The Pretenders."

"The Pretenders" serves another good purpose in that it brings Emmy Wehlen back to the screen after a period of absence her admirers have found to be quite too lengthy. Such loveliness and beauty when blended with an ability to act should not be permitted the luxury of vacations which run into months.

Without becoming too complicated this play engulfs the characters in a network of circumstances that holds their power of sustaining interest intact throughout the picture. There is nothing decidedly novel or original about the story, but the plot is well handled and barring the exuberance of the detective in the matter of putting the handcuffs on people, nothing happens to disturb the pleasurable entertainment afforded by the major influence of the picture.

The Pettingills suddenly become wealthy. Oil is discovered on their farm and as Mrs. Pettingill has social aspirations, they leave the country and take up their residence on Fifth avenue. Of course, father still likes to smoke his corn-cob, and mother's hope of becoming a social leader grows pale because the aristocrats show no desire to call and be chummy.

One night Pettingill indulges an appalling thirst and ventures forth upon the avenue; returning several hours later with a pal, a taxi driver. The next morning he finds it necessary to introduce the chauffeur as Count Erfitt. Having a count as her guest sends Ma Pettingill into the seventh heaven of delight.

A certain crook who is posing as an English nobleman about this time realizes his ambition to become acquainted with the newly-rich Westerners. He is even more welcome in their home than the Count, as his title is "sweller." The scene now shifts to the new country home of the Pettingill family and there a series of complications culminate with the exposure of the crook and the vindication of the chauffeur, who after all turns out to be a genuine Earl. The Earl of Bradford and Helen marry.

The settings are at once appropriate and handsome, while the general direction is of the high character usually attained by George D. Baker. This is Mr. Baker's first production for Metro.

The Helen of Miss Wehlen is a girl of vast charm and haunting beauty. She is well worth all the pains to which Herbert goes in the endeavor to win her. Charles Eldridge contributes much to the amusing phases of the picture and Paul Gordon is a handsome hero. William Davidson, Kate Blancke, Ilean Hume, Harry Neville and Edwin Holt are all equal to the demands put upon them.

"The Diamond Runners"

field and deal with new characters, the diamond mines of South Africa and a band of thieves engaged in diamond running, smuggling the uncut stones from the mines to the ships. Because of these elements, the play will prove interesting to those who like adventure stories. It is in many ways a very good adventure play, but viewing it, one has the feeling that it might have been presented more effectively, that the dramatic material has not been treated in the most dramatic way.

This feeling may be due partly to the lack of the surprise element and to the fact the action occasionally drags. There are also a number of events which appear very improbable, and there are details of action not well worked out. The introduction of the group of society people of exaggerated manners is also a fault.

However, in spite of these defects, the story does make an appeal to the adventurous side of one's nature. And doubtless an audience which cares little about the fine points of a production will be unreservedly delighted with the drama. The exterior settings, especially the shipboard scenes, are very good.

The excitement of the play lies in the story itself. That is, there are no artificial thrills introduced, no straining for effect, a good point. Helen Holmes, an adventuress working with a band of crooks and engaged in diamong smuggling, Paul C. Hurst, the leader of the gang, and Leo Maloney, head of the secret service trying to capture the crooks, have the leading roles. Helen arrives in the mining district with letters to the important people of the city. She also is in communication with Hurst, who directs her work. He tells her that their agent at the mine has a number of the precious stones awaiting her. The next day she visits the mine with young Holsted, the son of one of the owners. She has an opportunity of reaching the hiding place of the stones to be smuggled, and by concealing them in a bouquet of roses, gets them safely out of the mine.

Hurst books passage for Helen on the next ship for the United States, but before she makes her escape, the secret service becomes suspicious of her and searches her apartments. Helen places the stones in a toy balloon which she lets float from the window and which is later recovered by Hurst. He plans to have a messenger deliver them to Helen at the ship.

On the ship the messenger makes a mistake and gives the precious package to the maid of the Holsteads, who are also leaving for the States. Hurst has an opportunity of seeing Helen again, and she tells him she did not receive the package. Believing that she is keeping them for her own profit, Hurst also takes passage on the vessel. Hudson of the secret service is on the boat, believing the Holstead maid, whom he saw receive the package, is the guilty one.

Hudson and Helen become good friends, while Hurst, who does not believe Helen's story, quarrels with her. At last, Helen discovers the package in the maid's possession, regains it, but instead of giving it to Hurst, she turns it over to Hudson, with whom she has fallen in love, and aids him in capturing Hurst.

"Public Opinion"

A Five-Part Lasky-Paramount Drama Released August 17. Reviewed by George W. Graves

SELDOM has the popular dramatic star, Blanche Sweet, appeared in a more sympathetic role than the one created for her in this story by Margaret Turnbull, in which she plays the part of a nurse accused of poisoning her patient, and in which public opinion and the passion for condemning nearly overrules justice. Being the victim of relentless human decision, Blanche Sweet as Hazel Gray, has many heart-affecting scenes which she employs to great advantage. Next to Miss Sweet's part, that of Elliott Dexter will win the audience's sympathies, for it is a pleasing role exceptionally well played. Tom Forman in a part which shows up a very mannish weakness is effective, and will impress his audience if the latter can momentarily forget the more likeable traits contained in the heroic role.

The familiar old word "heart interest" can be applied to every minute of the story's skillfully constructed story, the development of which exemplifies both good artistic and technical direction. In entertaining value, "Public Opinion" stands very high. An excellent story played by a powerful cast, capably directed and lavishly produced is all that most of us require for the appeasing of our playgoers' appetite. Clever photographic work in respect of the spirit form of the murdered wife is worthy of mention, although we feel that the story would suffer none from the absence of this "spirit stuff."

Earle Foxe fulfills every last requirement in the heavy role, while Raymond Hatton gives a remarkable interpretation of a drug fiend. Edythe Chapman portrays the murdered wife.

In the beginning of the story we are shown how a pretty nurse, Hazel Gray, discovering that a doctor she has agreed to marry, is already married, eludes him at the last moment on the train. Later she falls in love with Phillip Carson, who is living apart from his family, having had a quarrel with his step-father, the same doctor who came so near ruining Hazel's life. The latter does not tell her lover of her affair with the doctor.

Next we see the family quarrel appeased for Mrs. Carson-Morgan's sake, and Phillip's return to his sick mother's side.

Dr. Morgan is secretly giving drugs to his wife to get her out of the way and gain free control of her money. Phillip sends for Hazel to care for his mother. The doctor diabolically arranges evidence so that after Mrs. Morgan's death Hazel will be charged with the crime. His plan works out to perfection; the wife dies, evidence against Hazel is found, the latter's former relations with Dr. Morgan are unearthed, and public opinion speedily jumps at condemnatory conclusions.

How, when this same public opinion is about to decide the girl's fate, one of the jury men, led by the murdered woman's spirit, is able to bring the prejudiced jurymen to their senses and thus acquit the girl, follows. Angered because of the girl's keeping something from him, her lover fails to support her in the crisis. The result is that Hazel transfers her affections for good to the man who has delivered her.

"The Dawn of Freedom"

Blue Ribbon Feature Offered by V-L-S-E. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

"THE DAWN OF FREEDOM" reproaches America of today for the utter disregard for the ideals which inspired those heroes of the revolution and founders of the country by introducing into a modern family one of the valiant soldiers who made sacrifice that a nation offering its people Liberty, Equality and Justice might spring up and prosper.

The play is built on a splendid idea, but while the visualization of it compels interest and is possessed of a certain amount of depth, it is a fact that the structure is somewhat frail and void of the masterful touch its theme demanded. For one thing, "The Dawn of Freedom" is entirely too dependent upon its subtitles.

These inserts are remarkably well written, but they are all so long as to impart a heaviness which is ever present during the running of the five reels of "The Dawn of Freedom." Suspended animation is the agency used to bring the soldier who fought with Washington down through the span of years to the present.

The prologue tells of Captain Cartwright's burial by a missionary who has mastered the art of suspended animation, but the priest is killed by an Indian before he can dispell the influence which holds the patriot in a death-like slumber. Cartwright has left a will granting half of his land to his brother and half to his fiancee.

In the present we find a certain Cartwright, descendent of the captain's brother, a wealthy mine owner and oppressor of the working classes. Elizabeth McLean, who springs from the family of the patriot's fiancee, is now living in poverty, her father's land having been secured dishonestly by Cartwright.

A strike at the mine brings on violence in the form of dynamiting portions of the coal plant. The captain still reposing in the leaden casket is cast up from the grave and revives. He then is filled with both wonder and disappointment, wonder at the marvelous inventions such as the telephone and disappointment at the absence of the true democracy dreamed of by his fellows in the strife necessary to free the country from the tyranny of a monarch.

"The Shadow from the Past," marvels at modern invention.

There is a love interest in both portions of the play and there is also much in the way of scenes which were obviously produced only at a considerable cost of money and skill on the part of the director, Paul Scardon. Credit for authorship of this unusual scenario goes to William J. Hurlbut.

Charles Richman is the featured actor. He has a lot to do in making the character seem alive but there his work ceases because the rest is all wearing a blank stare and much shaking of the head in the negative. But Mr. Richman is a splendid actor and he displays his ability in this picture. Arline Pretty and James Morrison head an adequate supporting cast. "The Dawn of Freedom." is out of the usual run of pictures; it will interest alike the serious-minded and the entertainment seeker, but it will not make a great impression on either.

result is a three-reel drama whose construction merits the term excellent. There are two threads of plot entwined, the old hermit and his problem, and the husband and wife, and their tragedy, and the connecting of these situations solves the problems. There is very little irrevelent material introduced. In order to fill three reels, some of the scenes have been lengthened longer than would be necessary otherwise, but the very fine acting of the leading players, notably of Anna Little and Perry Banks, makes this scarcely a defect.

The first scene shows the desert camp of "Mojave" Matt, an old hermit, (Perry Banks). His only companion is his burro, and the loneliness of the desert life has made him eccentric. Recalling by chance that the day is Sunday, he gives his burro an extra feeding and then in honor of the Sabbath, begins the Lord's prayer. He is unable to complete it, forgetting the words which follow "daily bread." The fact that he is unable to recall the prayer so humiliates him that he sets out with his burro for the nearest town to ask aid.

Leaving the old man on his way across the desert, we are introduced to Dan Page and his wife Alice, young ranchers, who are celebrating the fourth anniversary of their marriage. They go together into the neighboring town, where unfortunately Dan meets a stranger, Arthur Sanford (Jack Richardson), a mine inspector, who tells him that Alice was once his mistress. Horrified, Dan confronts Alice with the man's story and judges from her terror that it was true. He forces the man into the desert alone, where later he dies.

Alice explains that she had been tricked by an illegal marriage and that she had hated the man and left him. She had feared to tell Dan the story lest she lose her present happiness. Dan is unable to forgive her deception and the two are estranged.

In the meantime, the old hermit reaches the town. He asks in vain of a number of the townsmen the next lines of his forgotten prayer. Then he comes to the Page home, where Dan repeats for him the lost words, and finally writes them for him. This act of course brings about a change in the attitude of Dan and he forgives his wife for her deception. And "Mojave" Matt, like Browning's "Pippa," wanders back to him home, unaware of the change he has brought into anyone's life.

The very good desert settings aid greatly in giving the play atmosphere. The photography throughout is good. The offering as a whole shows intelligent and thoughtful workmanship. Kenneth B. Clarke is the author of the story.

owner in the West to those in which the tender womanly feelings come to the surface she demonstrates without interruption her versatility and power as a dramatic actress. Quite a complicated story by Philip Bartholomae is Miss Pearson's vehicle. It is not lacking in good dramatic material, although some of these complications as produced on the screen are a bit confusing. This applies to the first reel or so. Direction as a whole is very good, but there are details now and then which are inadequately looked after. There is a corking explosion and fire scene.

The three most important people in support of Miss Pearson are Victor Sutherland, Mary Martin and Kenneth Hunter, all of whom give consistently good performances. The "kid stuff" performed by little Jane and Katherine Lee is bound to captivate everyone. The scenario was written by Clarence J. Harris, and Kenean Buel directed the picture.

"Daredevil Kate" is built along lines which have been tried and proven popular, therefore it should meet with popularity.

At the outset of the play we see how, on their mother's death, two sisters are separated, Kate going West and her younger sister remaining in the East with a benevolent friend. Each sister is given a half of the mother's wedding ring. Years afterward Kate is the owner of a thriving saloon and a friend of the workmen in a munitions plant near by.

The workmen have trouble with the people at headquarters in the East and blow up a munitions storehouse. As soon as two representatives of the company arrive in the town to adjust matters the workmen plot to rid themselves of the intruders. But Kate, who is the most influential person in the community, shortly becomes engaged to one of the newcomers, Cliff Stone, and so the evil operations are held up. Stone's sister, however, who is the wife of the company's other emissary, John West, alarmed by reports of the immoral nature of Kate, succeeds in breaking the match.

Kate, her chances for happiness shattered, now becomes bitter and changes over to the side of the workmen. When about to discredit West in the eyes of his employers in the East and make a fool of him generally, Kate discovers that Irene, West's wife, is her sister, by means of the half wedding ring. Then she sensationally delivers West at the last moment from her own trap. A happy reunion between the sisters follows, matters in general are adjusted and Cliff Stone once more places his engagement ring on Kate's finger.

"Out of the Mist"

Three-Reel Selig Drama Released August 28. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

ARTISTS and their customs seem to have a fascination for a certain class of photoplay patrons as well as magazine readers, and the type of story woven about them seldom departs far from one outline. This play is in no way exceptional. The artist introduced is a rather spectacularly costumed gentleman, being an Arabian and a famous portrait painter. Then there is the artist's model heroine, and a wealthy patron of art, whose critical judgment is supposed to be of much higher quality than his moral sense. The artist's studio furnishes the setting of most of the scenes.

Fritzi Brunette has the heroine's role. She is Louise Dillon, a stenographer, who loses her position and becomes a model for Ben Ali Hashim (Guy Oliver). There she attracts the attention of Arthur Marchand, his wealthy patron, who plots to accomplish her downfall as he had that of her predecessor. The plot of the story is thickened and the villain's plans foiled by the introduction of a hag of the streets whom the Arabian takes a fancy to paint. For when Marchand finds Louise alone in the studio and attempts to take her in his arms, they are discovered by the woman, who denounces Marchand and then reveals the fact that she was his former mistress and that Louise is her daughter and his.

The man is overcome by the shock of the revelation and dies of heart failure. Louise is reunited to a more worthy suitor and takes her mother to live with her.

The story is not planned for a very discriminating audience. It will have little difficulty holding the interest of the other class, who will overlook its improbabilities in favor of its theatrical situations. William Robert Daly directed. William Scott, Gertrude Oakman, Frank Clark and Lillian Clark complete the cast of players.

Joan, a member of a family which works hard to support itself, the father being a fiery-tempered drunkard and idler, loses her job because she refuses to sacrifice her honor. In a fit of rage her father orders her from the house. John Matthias, a kind-hearted playwright, comes to Joan's rescue and she later becomes his assistant.

In a moment of indiscretion Matthias' sweetheart marries Marbridge, a backer of theatrical enterprises, and little by little Joan and Matthias come to mean more to each other. Through the aid of Marbridge, Joan is given a part in Matthias' new play. Matthias, however, tries to prevent Joan from making the stage her career, but she is obstinate, as Marbridge has given her a large part and fame seems near. So the lovers have a break.

After the first performance Marbridge lures Joan into his apartment and attacks her. But Marbridge's cast-off mistress, suspecting something amiss, enters at this moment and mortally wounds her old love. Before he dies Marbridge sends for Matthias, asks his forgiveness and exonerates his old mistress from guilt. Joan returns to her people, who have in the interval of her absence obtained a new hold on life, and the spectator is left to mentally affix any ending he chooses in regard to the reunion of Joan and Matthias.

Two-Act Essanay Comedy Released September 5. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS is another Essanay offering into which the element of timeliness has been introduced. It shows in a humorous manner the probable treatment given to those who carry the peace at any price theory into everyday living. The leading character is a hen-pecked husband, a role which always proves amusing to an audience. Harry Dunkinson plays this part of Henry Alswell in a serious, rather pleading manner which will vastly entertain the spectators.

Henry Alswell, after playing the role of a humble and much trod-upon servant in his own household, is held in good natured contempt by his office force, from his junior partner down to the office boy. Henry spends his spare time writing letters above the signature, "Peaceful," to "The Voice of the People" department of the newspapers, setting forth the value of gentleness in dealing with one's fellow men.

After showing a number of humorous incidents in which Henry, pacifist, figures, there is a scene in which he is forced into a fight, and having tasted blood, figuratively speaking, he becomes a transformed man, ready to stand up for his rights and getting them. As Ward and Clyde Kingsley, Russell has an excellent opportunity to display his histrionic ability, and his work is very satisfactory.

Clyde Kingsley, when the story begins, has married a wealthy girl, Agnes, whose fortune he is rapidly exhausting. He and his friend, Steve Mercer, plan to trick the insurance company and collect the large amount for which Clyde is insured. Before their plans are perfected, Clyde learns of the approaching death of Ward, his brother in the east. Clyde sees in this situation a way to carry out his plan. He visits his brother in the east and, pleading that it is for the sake of Agnes, with whom Ward has always been in love, induces him to go west as Clyde, so that when he dies the insurance can be collected.

Ward submits to the plan and returns in Clyde's place, only Agnes being aware of the deception. Agnes is angry at the plot, but makes an effort to save Ward's life. Instead of dying, Ward recovers his health, and he and Agnes renew their early love for each other.

Clyde, suspicious of affairs, returns to the west. He plans with Mercer and a woman to trick Ward into meeting them in a lonely spot, where they will kill him and throw his body over a cliff. But before Ward leaves for the appointment, Clyde comes home, unexpectedly, and, his jealousy aroused by the apparent affection between his brother and his wife, he shoots Ward. Believing he has killed him, he rushes to warn his accomplices. He goes to the rendezvous and when he approaches Beth, Mercer, mistaking him for the awaited Ward, shoots him. He falls over the cliff, dragging Beth with him.

Mercer then goes to the Kingsley home, believing Agnes will be alone. From his story, they learn Clyde's fate and know that they are free to complete their romance.

"Gretchen the Greenhorn"

Dorothy Gish Is Dutch Girl in Triangle-Fine Arts Release. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

PICTUREGOERS cannot complain that picturesque Holland is at all remiss in the matter of giving them occasion to see their favorite screen actresses in characters such as will give opportunity for the display of innocent charm with all the beautifying qualities of quaintness, enthusiasm born of a healthy state of both mind and body, sympathy, self sacrifice and all the other virtues calculated to endear their possessor to all who have the good fortune to see her upon the screen.

"Gretchen the Greenhorn" is Dorothy Gish's latest starring medium and whatever it may lack in depth of theme or originality of treatment is compensated for by this dainty and engaging little actress. Gretchen is from Holland but she is not here long before the Fatherland ceases to be anything but a pleasant memory. She lives with her father in the downtown district of an American city.

Gretchen's beau is named Peitro and as one of the titles states, "He courts her with her native songs rendered in English with an Italian accent." The family up-stairs is a large one and on many occasions Gretchen comes to the rescue with bread and cake when the family cupboard fails to provide enough to go around. Her father is an engraver and in his simplicity becomes the tool of a counterfeiter. The villain kidnaps both the engraver and his sweet daughter but Pietro enlists the aid of the police and all ends happily.

Bernard McConville is the author of the play and the production of it was in the hands of C. M. and S. A. Franklin. There is charm to this offering even though there is little to grow enthusiastic over after Dorothy Gish has been excluded from the calculations. We see America as a Melting-Pot in the scenes depicting life in the neighborhood of Gretchen's abode. Japanese, Italian, Irish and Germans, as well as representatives of other nations are seen in the pictures.

Ralph Lewis is John Van Houck, Gretchen's father, and he is effective in the part. The only trouble with Van is his persistence in wearing spectable-frames which are void of the optical glasses for which they were built. Frank Bennett as Pietro shows that practice makes for improvement. He is by far a better actor than he was six, even three months ago. Eugene Pallette, Kate Bruce and the Fine Arts children are in the cast.

"Rolling Stones"

Five-Part Famous Players-Paramount Comedy. Released August 21. Reviewed by George W. Graves

EDGAR SELWYN'S "Rolling Stones" was a huge success on the New York stage, and no less can be said of the motion picture version given it by Famous Players. Few comedies heretofore put out by this company have contained such a succession of laughable situations, evolved, as they are, through rapid, flawless action. The latter is well regulated as to time and place.

The real feature of the picture, standing out as a beacon light in its prominence, is its direction, which fires each scene with that vivifying element known as "punch." Del Henderson (formerly with Keystone) has worked every ounce of comedy material in each situation to its greatest possible capacity in comedy effect.

The story relies for laughs upon its big situations and the innumerable little touches of comedy brought out by the actors personally. Neither the incidents nor characters, however, are sufficiently freakish to bring the picture into the realm of slap-stick comedy, as picture-goers have come to know it.

Marguerite Courtol in her first Famous Players role.

Owen Moore's acting in the part of Dave Fulton places him securely in the top-notch class of screen comedians. Mr. Moore is responsible for a volume of laughs. The parts taken by Denman Maley and Alan Hale are both well played. Marguerite Courtot's part is small but perfectly handled. Others in the cast are Gretchen Hartman, W. J. Butler and Ida Fitzhugh.

The whole trouble is based on a will which stipulates that its two beneficiaries must marry within the space of five years in order to jointly inherit a large and prosperous candy factory. The will also states that if either of these parties marries otherwise than provided therein, the entire fortune will go to the unmarried person. It so happens that the male party involved, Braden, is already married, so it is up to him to do something desperate to force the girl to marry at once and keep her from receiving the whole inheritance. He receives an unlooked-for aid when, after a report has gone out that he has been killed in a railroad wreck, his place is brazenly usurped by a man of leisure, or "rolling stone," in league with a pal.

In letting the impostor have full reign, Braden sees a way out of his difficulty. Many ludicrous situations follow, difficulties finally being straightened out when the impostor marries the girl and becomes Braden's partner in the factory. The other "rolling stone," attempting to double-cross his own pal by looting the factory safe, barely escapes alive.

"The Test"

Pathe Gold Rooster Play Produced by Astra. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

FOR its first offering on the Pathe Gold Rooster Program the Astra Film Corporation presents an admirably produced and finely acted film revival of "The Test," a melodrama produced a number of years back on the speaking stage by A. H. Woods. The latter theatrical producer has every reason to feel kindly toward "The Test" and other plays of its type, and there is no doubt about the motion picture exhibitor's affection for them. For picturegoers find this kind of play eminently satisfactory.

"The Test" is a melodrama containing suspenseful situations, spirited action and it presents a love romance which ends happily in spite of the heroine's early misfortune. Add to this the fact that it is acted by a highly efficient cast and produced by George Fitzmaurice and nothing more should be necessary to convince the exhibitor that "The Test" will send his patrons away pleased with the entertainment furnished them.

There is little contained in the play that is convincing.

Put to the test, "The Test" is found to be piffle mostly. The heroine is the wife of a weak sort of young man who works as clerk in a hotel. The ownership of the hotel passes into new hands, and they are not very gentle or sympathetic hands. For the rich Freddie Wayne simply must have the affection of women who attract him, regardless of whether they care for him or not. Furthermore, he holds the bonds of matrimony rather lightly.

The clerk has a habit of overdrawing his account and Freddie, to serve his own ends, fashions a trap which the clerk walks into. He is then sent to jail. The hunted wife of the clerk is finally caught in the net spread with such pains by Freddie. But the skies begin to brighten for the girl. She frees herself from Freddie and later becomes the secretary of a novelist who falls in love with her. In order to save the sister of the novelist from Freddie, who is posing as the fine gentleman he should be but is not, the girl exposes the past. But the novelist is a broad young man and the girl at last achieves the happiness every spectator will sincerely wish her.

Jane Grey heads a cast which includes such well known players as Lumsden Hare, Claud Flemming, Inez Buck and Ida Darling. Miss Grey plays her part excellently. It is a performance leaving no room for improvement whatever. Mr. Hare is a most convincing novelist and Claude Flemming a not too heavy Freddie. Miss Buck and Ida Darling also deserve praise. Thanks to Mr. Fitzmaurice and the cast, "The Test" is a mighty good screen melodrama and it will be liked.

"The Almighty Dollar"

World Film Drama Produced by Paragon. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

SCENES depicting panic resulting from fire in a New York subway train are by no means usual to the picture-going public, and the very novelty of such scenes as are presented in "The Almighty Dollar" tempts one to give them first mention in commenting on this World offering produced by Paragon. Director Robert Thornby accomplished a great deal when he made these pictures showing the interior of a train as well as a portion of the station to which the passengers fortunate enough to escape make their way. There is as much realism to the pictures as possible and the more familiar one is with the subway the more real are the scenes.

"The Almighty Dollar" may display originality only in the spectacular scenes mentioned above, but taken as a whole it is a picture whose ability to entertain is too pronounced to be passed over lightly. The story is by E. M. Ingleton, who has devised, of familiar material, a convincing and appealing drama. The construction of the piece is admirable indeed. The play merited the effective production and fine interpretation given it.

"The Almighty Dollar" cocerns itself with two sisters who have been reared in a convent, but following the death of their mother, a woman who has led a frivolous life and given them little attention, the girls make their home in the apartment occupied by their mother. The younger girl marries a prosperous man, though she rather suspects that Harwood is really in love with her sister Nan.

Harwood spends most of his time at his office and before long Masie wearies of being alone so much. When her husband returns home injured from a tussle with two thugs Masie has occasion to call in Dr. Thornton, a man whose insincere attentions to the unsuspecting Masie were discontinued by the interference of Nan.

Thornton then becomes a frequent visitor to the Harwood home. On one of these visits he finds Masie in an excited state. She is certain her husband is meeting her sister secretly and proposes to leave him. The doctor asks her to take a motor ride with him and she agrees. They go to his apartment and are followed there by Nan and later by Harwood and Nan's fiance. This situation leads to a better understanding between Masie and her husband.

The acting is uniformly good. E. K. Lincoln is a convincing John Harwood, and June Elvidge as Nan gives a performance that leaves absolutely nothing to be desired. Miss Elvidge can well be proud of her acting in this picture—if one can call a characterization so decidedly natural "acting." Frances Nelson is as effective as she is usually in the role of Masie. George Anderson is Dr. Thornton and a player whose name is not to be found in the cast does splendidly as Harwood's partner.

The photography, barring the western scenes which contain so much static, is good and the settings are commendable. "The Almighty Dollar" is a picture of no little merit.

Paramount Passes Second Birthday

Specialized Series of Productions that Have Made the Big Company's Program Famous

PARAMOUNT Pictures Corporation is receiving congratulations on its second birthday and good wishes for its continued success. The growth of this company, distributor of the productions of the Famous Players Film Company, Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company and Pallas Pictures, is wonderful even in the film industry.

It was the first organization to consistently distribute a program of feature pictures throughout the entire United States. In the two years of its existence it has issued 208 features, two each week, ranging from four to eight reels each. The stars represent the best known players in the industry: Mary Pickford, Geraldine Farrar, Marguerite Clark, Mae Murray, Lenore Ulrich, Marie Doro, Pauline Frederick, Hazel Dawn, Fannie Ward, Jack Barrymore, Lou Tellegen, Theodore Roberts, Dustin Farnum, George Beban, Victor Moore, Sessue Hayakawa, Edna Goodrich, Ann Pennington, Myrtle Stedman, and others.

Paramount began in a small way with its offices in the World Tower Building on 40th street, New York, two years ago. It was founded upon the highest of ideals, clean, wholesome, better pictures, for both young and old. Its policy was not the result of guess work, but a carefully studied out plan with a definite goal ahead. It proposed to give the public on the screen the best in literature, art, science, and travel; to produce feature photo-dramatic plays that were above the standard of the industry and to encourage a better grade of motion picture theaters, by catering to the better class of people and charging higher prices than were then obtained in the nickelodeon and giving the exhibitor handling its productions a protective franchise in a restricted district.

When the idea of Paramount was first formulated five-reel pictures were a rarity, but the organizers realized that the feature picture of four, five and six reels was the trend toward which the industry was moving. Such progressive ideas injected into the business two years ago caused the better public to be interested in picture houses for the first time.

Through its perfected distribution, its pictures are seen not only in the best theaters in the big cities, but also in the best of the smaller communities, until now its pictures are shown in the largest and most beautiful theaters in every big city and also in communities that have less than 500 population. They are shown in nearly 3,000 theaters each week, the largest number of theaters showing one brand of pictures in the industry.

From its foundation two years ago Paramount has grown to an enormous size. It now occupies a beautiful office at 485 Fifth avenue, and is planning for greater things for the coming year than came in either of the two just past.

Besides its features Paramount has released a new grade of single-reel productions, among which are the Paramount Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen; the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures; and the Paramount-Bray cartoons, all of which have rounded out the Paramount program.

A charcoal sketch of Mae Murray, Lasky luminary, by James Montgomery Flagg. It is to be hoped that more work of this kind will be seen in the future in the art produced by producers in presenting stars and plays.

The same five men who began Paramount, were its first officers and directors, are the five men who are conducting its progressive policies today. The officers recently elected were Hiram Abrams, president; vice-president, William L. Sherry; treasurer, James Steele; and these three officers, with W. W. Hodkinson and Raymond Pawley are the Board of Directors. The last two named were formerly president and treasurer, respectively.

Two five-reel features head the program for the week of September fourth; they are "The Big Sister," a Lasky production in which Mae Murray is featured, and the Pallas production of "The Parson of Panamint," in which Dustin Farnum plays the title role.

Surrounding the big pictures will be three short-reel features: the thirtieth edition of Paramount Pictographs showing "Following the Bee Line," "New York's Floating Hospital for Sick Babies," "Yacht Racing in the Park" and "Dueling with the Sword Fish"; the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures take the travelers to the sunny south of England and show 101 places of interest in this vicinity; and the Paramount-Bray cartoon, from the pen of Earl Hurd, tells of "Bobby Bumps and the Stork."

Paramount has recently added four New England theaters and four Pennsylvania houses to the list of those using the Paramount program. These include the Crystal Theater, Worcester, Mass.; the Gordon's Washington Street Olympia, the Gordon's Scolly Square Olympia, and the Fenway theaters of Boston; Carr and Schad theater, Reading, Pa.; Grand Theater, Chester, Pa.; Grand Theater, Camden, N. J.; and a new house to be opened by Mrs. George Krupp in Lancaster, Pa.

Horsley Produces Jungle Picture

A thrilling tale of the wild beast infested jungle is told in the Centaur feature "The Jungle Flash-Light," a David Horsley production co-starring Margaret Gibson and William Clifford, to be released through Mutual the week of September 9. The Bostock collection of wild beasts play a very important part in this drama.

"Making Things Hum," starring George Ovey, will be the comedy offering of the same week by the Cub Company. The cast includes Claire Alexander, George George, Arthur Mund, Janet Sully, Jefferson Osborne, Harry Jackson and Ray Lincoln.

An exact duplication of one of Los Angeles' big cafes, including singers, dancers and orchestra, will be shown with the release of Crane Wilbur's latest starring vehicle, now in the course of production at the David Horsley studios.

Close to two hundred persons were employed for this one scene. In filming the scene the same program as is used at the cafe nightly was ordered by the director, everything being identical to that which is offered white light frequenters.

The story has not been named as yet but it is a comedy drama in five reels and was written by Mr. Wilbur. The principals of the supporting cast are Florence Printy, Nan Christy, Ida Lewis, Harrish Ingraham, Jode Mullallay and James Fawcett.

A new company of players was placed under the direction of Alvin J. Neitz, this week, at the David Horsley studios, and work was started on a two-reel Centaur feature from the pen of Elsie M. Callaghan. Although playing the part of the "heavy," Alva D. Blake will be seen in the most important characterization, the story having been written expressly to fit him. The new members of the company are Edith Calvert, T. H. Gibson Gowland, Harry Davenport and F. A. Johnson. The camera work is by Chester Lyons and assisting in the direction is Dave Allen.

Here are some Metro faces familiar to your screen. From the left they are Ralph Herz, Sidney Drew and his wife, who always have a deal of humor in their home, Edgar L. Davenport, the captivating Emmy Wehlen and Edwin Carewe, the powerful director.

Metro Holds Annual Convention

Plans Laid for a Strenuous Fall and Winter Campaign of Big Picture Producing

PLANS for its fall and winter campaign were laid at the annual convention of the Metro Pictures Corporation held at Atlantic City August 9 to 16. President Richard A. Rowland called the convention to order at the Hotel Traymore on Wednesday morning and immediately the business of the year was reported and discussed.

The first announcement for the future was the appropriation of $500,000.00 for the Bushman and Bayne series of 14 episodes of two reels each together with the announcement of W. Christy Cabanne as its director. The foundation work has already been done and active production will start on September 1. A world wide advertising and publicity campaign will be undertaken in connection with this series.

Announcement was made of the completion of the $250,000.00 production of Romeo and Juliet with Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in the titular roles, which will be the first of a series of big productions of big subjects undertaken in a big way.

The trip to Atlantic City from New York was made in automobiles and Herman Jans, the New Jersey manager had caused both routes to be decorated with Metro banners, streamers and pennants. On Sunday night the Consolidated Film Corporation, which is making "The Crimson Stain Mystery" for release through Metro, gave a crimson banquet at the Traymore. After dinner speeches were made by President Rowland, Joseph W. Engel, O. E. Goebel, president of the Consolidated Film Corporation, and Crimson Sladdin. The first two episodes of the serial were shown on the screen.

O. E. Goebel, President Consolidated Film Corporation

Participating in the convention from all parts of the country were President Rowland, Louis B. Mayer, of Boston; John D. Clarke, of Philadelphia; David Reede, of Dallas; James B. Clark, of Pittsburgh; Joseph W. Engel, L. Lawrence Weber, Harry J. Cohen, C. K. Stern, W. E. Atkinson, J. H. Tooker, E. M. Saunders, of New York; J. A. Fitzgerald, of Detroit; Joseph Skirboll, of Chicago; O. N. Davies, of Minneapolis; Herman Jans, New Jersey; R. M. Watkins, Chattanooga; Carl G. Bugbee, New Orleans; Arthur S. Dickinson, Chattanooga; Henry James, New York; L. M. Day, Washington; Arthur James, New York; J. Robert Rubin, Metro's general counsel; Arthur S. Sawyer, Canada; O. J. Connell, Chicago; and others.

W. Christy Cabanne, for seven years associate director with D. W. Griffith, has signed a long time contract with the Metro Company. Director Cabanne, who is in Los Angeles, will leave for the east immediately, and will begin work on the Bushman-Bayne serial the early part of September. At the conclusion of this serial Mr. Cabanne will produce five-part Metro features in which this stellar combination will be starred.

Nance O'Neil, the famous star and screen star, who has signed a contract to appear on the Metro program, has been married to her leading man, Alfred Hickman, a well known dramatic actor. The couple will spend their honeymoon at the Popular Plays and Players studio, where they are at work on a five-part Metro production, "The Iron Woman."

Mabel Taliaferro is now at work in the Rolfe Photoplays studio, on "The Light of Love," a Metro wonderplay. This play will be released late next month.

Harold Lockwood and May Allison are at present busy at the new Metro-Yorke studio in Hollywood, filming the last of the interior scenes to be used in "Mister 44," a forthcoming Metro wonderplay. The company began work on the interiors immediately on their arrival from Lake Tahoe, California, where the exteriors for the five-part production were made.

Brady States World Policy

Concerning the production policy of the World Film Corporation—to which part of the operation of that concern he has been devoting a large percentage of his personal attention for several months—William A. Brady, director general of the company, said:

"It very soon struck me upon entering the motion picture field that 'preparedness' as a watchword would be even more useful here than anywhere else in business life and I have proceeded consistently along this line. The result up to the present moment is that we have fifteen pictures finished, edited and ready for the screen. It would be a simple matter for us to release all these tomorrow if we were so disposed or such an act fitted in with our plan of business.

"But of course nothing of the sort is to be thought of. Our plan was undertaken and carried to its present stage solely with the idea of making it a sure thing that we would always be in a position to deliver to distributors on the day and at the hour specified. It is a practical impossibility under present conditions for the World Film to be caught napping.

"The list of completed plays includes 'The Rail Rider,' with House Peters starred and Ethel Clayton featured; Marie Dressler in 'Tillie's Night Out'; Lew Fields in 'The Man Who Stood Still'; Alice Brady in 'The Gilded Cage' and 'A Woman Alone'; Robert Warwick in 'Friday the 13th'; Ethel Clayton in 'Should She Have Told'; House Peters and Gail Kane in 'The Velvet Paw'; Frances Nelson and Arthur Ashley in 'The Revolt'; Gail Kane in 'The Scarlet Oath'; Robert Warwick and Gail Kane in 'The Heart of a Hero'; Ethel Clayton and Holbrook Blinn in 'Husband and Wife'; Frances Nelson and E. K. Lincoln in 'The Almighty Dollar'; and one other.

"The first-come-first-serve principle adopted by some film companies is suicidal for the exhibitor, while the manufacturer who sticks to it cannot possibly succeed in the long run. Going further, what do you imagine would happen if the World, General, Mutual and other companies were to abandon the program system and adopt the catch-as-catch-can method?

"In my own instance it would be entirely possible to go out on a wildcat campaign and get all the money in a month or so, any old way, but that is not my manner of doing business.

"I want the confidence of the small town exhibitor as well as the man who runs the biggest theater in the country. I want him to know that if he is due to get a World Film release next Wednesday, or six months from next Wednesday, it will be there and will represent the very best effort that is in us. I am quite satisfied, and the company is quite satisfied to take the profits as they come, year in and year out, on a fair basis of charges, without following any get-rich-quick scheme that must inevitably increase the exhibitor's expense two, three, or even four times over.

"Put this down as a certainty: The World Film Corporation will never weaken its program by issuing special releases. And when you have put it down, go and bet on it."

As the result of a newspaper popularity competition in Melbourne, Australia, Robert Warwick of the World Film Corporation led the film actors, and Mary Pickford the actresses. The two nearest competitors of Mr. Warwick were William Farnum and Francis X. Bushman with a tie just 380 votes short of the total registered by the World-Brady star. Mary Pickford led by 260 votes over her closest opponent, Olga Petrova. Pearl White was third.

Essanay's For September

George K. Spoor, president of Essanay, has just announced the company's September releases. Besides a feature they include a strong assortment of short reel subjects, one, two and three acts in both comedy and drama.

The first September release is "The Higher Destiny," scheduled for the 2nd, and it includes in the cast Warda Howard, Sydney Ainsworth, Edward Arnold, Gertrude Glover and Patrick Calhoun.

"The Pacifist," released on September 5, is a comedy based on one of the topics of the day. It features Harry Dunkinson, one of the strongest comedians to be seen on the screen.

On September 6 Essanay offers Canimated Nooz Pictorial No. 15 by Wallace A. Carlson, a caricature on the leading men and events of the day.

"A Million for a Baby," is the three-act offering of September 9, a strong drama featuring Bryant Washburn, Marguerite Clayton, Lillian Drew and John Lorenz.

On September 12 comes a two-act drama, "The Greater Obligation," featuring Edward Arnold.

Dreamy Dud, one of the humorous cartoons by Wallace A. Carlson, reappears on the screen on September 13.

On September 16 there is a three-act drama entitled, "The Woman Always Pays." Miss Drew and Sydney Ainsworth take the leading roles. Miss Drew and Sydney Ainsworth are also presented in a strong two-act drama "When Justice Won," on September 19.

A Canimated Nooz Pictorial, No. 16, appears on September 20 and on September 23 there appears one of the best three-reel offerings of the month, "The Way of Patience," featuring Nell Craig, Ernest Maupain and Darwin Karr.

In the last week of the month beginning with September 26 there is a two-reel comedy drama, "Peter the Hermit," featuring Nell Craig, Harry Dunkinson and John Junior; a Dreamy Dud on September 27; and a three-reel drama on September 30, "Twin Fates," featuring Sydney Ainsworth, Edmund F. Cobb, and Virginia Bowker.

Essanay's five-act feature for the month is "The Return of Eve," presenting Edna Mayo and Eugene O'Brien.

Chester Issues Travel Series

C. L. Chester, the executive head of C. L. Chester, Inc., on November 6 will issue the first of a series of travel films, which will hereafter be out at the rate of one a week. Mr. Carpenter made most of the travel film for the Edison Company, the first organization to go into the travel stuff extensively, and later with the aid of two cameramen made a South American travel series for Paramount.

C. L. Chester.

Six months ago he engaged three of the leading scenic cameramen, trained them thoroughly for the work, and as a result already has 54,241 feet of new negative. His idea is to bring the travel film up to the standard of the big up-to-the-minute features, and instead of taking scenery haphazard, every scene is being carefully planned in the office before the cameraman goes out.

"Mr. Chester was fortunate in securing as cameramen three of the best motion picture photographers in the industry. They are Victor Miller, W. O. Runcie and Raymond Agnel. Miller was with Pathe for many years; Runcie, with Gaumont for several years, and Agnel made many of the best scenic and industrial films turned out by the Paris Eclair.

Mr. Chester, although he has had such a wide experience, is only 39 years old. He is a native of Iowa, and while a student at the Iowa State University, he assisted the professor of physics and chemistry, and thus became interested in the chemistry of photography. He went in for original work with the camera and made several important inventions for the photographic art. He then became a lecturer for the Pond Lyceum Bureau, and for five years continued this work in various parts of the world, illustrating his lectures with his own photographs and motion pictures. After that he toured the world for pleasure with a motion picture camera and got such fine results that he decided to join the film industry. His latest picture was "America Preparing," which he made for the Kemble Film Company.

The Grand Theater has been reopened by James Calnay at Atlanta, Georgia. The Grand, which seats 2,800, will show pictures for 5 and 10 cents.

Selig's General Releases

William N. Selig announces an interesting program of Selig productions for the weeks of September 11 and 18. These pictureplays will be released through regular service of the General Film Company.

"The Pony Express Rider," released Monday, September 11, is a multiple reel Diamond special featuring daring Tom Mix in a strong story of plot, counterplot, fast riding and sensational marksmanship. "In Jungle Wilds," is a thrilling wild animal drama released Saturday, September 16.

"Into the Northland" will be the Diamond special, in three reels, to be released by the Selig Company on Monday, September 18. "Into the Northland" features an exceptional cast of players, including Lillian Hayward, Fritzi Brunette, Leo Pierson, James Bradbury and others. "A Corner in Water" is a Selig one-reel western drama with Tom Mix in the principal character role supported by Victoria Forde.

The Selig-Tribune, the animated news reel, will continue to be released every Monday and Thursday through General Film service. All the latest news pictorial events are presented.

The Selig series of Tom Mix western comedies closed with "Taming Grouchy Bill," released in General Film service Saturday, September 9.

HELENE ROSSON IN OCCULT FILM

Helene Rosson, the charming favorite of American Film fame, has an opportunity in "The Light" to prove that she is a well-read student of occult science. She is cast to play the role of Lucille, whose affections for her husband are undermined by a Parsee nobleman, Prince Zarak.

As the husband, Franklyn Ritchie, steadfastly maintains the reputation he has earned on the stage and in pictures. Encouraged by the winning personality of Miss Rosson, he gives the screen a portrayal of a loving, dutiful husband, which should serve as an inspiration to all benedicts. With precise knowledge of dramatic values, both Miss Rosson and Mr. Ritchie will be a delight to all photoplay fans.

George Webb, who had an important part in the chaptered photoplay, "The Secret of the Submarine," and Miss Eugenie Forde, well known screen star, are foremost in the supporting cast of this production.

HUNDREDS OF BOYS IN FILM

Thomas Ince wanted five hundred boys ranging in age from fourteen to eighteen, during the making of "The Eye of the Night," for such were the prescriptions set forth in his scenario by C. Gardner Sullivan, author of the drama. The task of engaging them loomed up as monumental, when it dawned upon the producer that virtually all youths between fourteen and eighteen attend either school or work. "Well," thought Ince, "we'll get the scenes on Saturday." But when his aides made efforts to make appointments with five hundred schoolboys, they learned that the beaches are more popular during leisure hours. Eventually, it became necessary to tempt the lads with very attractive wages.

ATLANTIC COAST NOTES

Robert Elliott, who was last seen with Irene Fenwick in "The Child of Destiny," and who is now playing with William Nigh and Irene Howley in a five-act Metro, is to appear in a play on Broadway later in the season. His last appearance on the speaking stage was with Margaret Illington in "The Lie."

Stuart Sage, who recently joined the Fox players, was formerly a stock actor. He was born in Sioux Falls, S. D., and is twenty-three years old.

It took two and a half weeks to erect a scene for the new William Fox picture in which Valeska Suratt is starred, and about that many minutes to destroy it. It was the exterior of a house, built of granite, put up merely to be struck by lightning. Six sticks of dynamite were placed in the heavy masonry walls, the lights turned on, and the fuse lighted. The effect was very realistic.

Arthur Donaldson, well known on the screen, is returning to the speaking and singing stage, having been engaged by the Eta Producting Company for an important role in the Japanese romantic opera, "Moto," which opens September 14. Donaldson, who has a baritone voice, was the original "Yon Yonson," and the original "Prince of Pilsen."

Henry E. Dixey, star of the Mutual Masterpicture, "Father and Son," began his stage career as a magician. He has played in every type of entertainment from extravaganza to vaudeville. He played in many light operas, being especially successful in "The Mascot," and in the all-star revival of "Pinafore." His most recent speaking stage success was in "One Thousand Years Ago," which ran for a season on Broadway.

Roma Raymond, who plays the heavy lead in "Circumstantial Evidence," the next Metro play starring Emily Stevens, is one of the best known woman scenario writers in the country. Although her forte is writing comedy, Miss Raymond excells in vampire roles on the screen.

Creighton Hale, now starring in pictures for the Frank Powell Productions, Inc., is an enthusiastic motorist. He appears in many picture scenes as a racer in his National special roadster.

Having completed "The Fear of Poverty," a Thanhouser feature to be released through Pathe, Florence LaBadie is taking a well-earned vacation, to be spent motoring through the Adirondacks.

Frederic Warde, now on a lecture, has found in Vermont ideal locations for scenes for "The Vicar of Wakefield," in which he is soon to be starred by Thanhouser.

To prove his fearlessness, Stuart Holmes, the Fox villain, will umpire a baseball game between the employes of the Fox and the Peerless studios. Virginia Pearson has promised to throw out the first ball.

"The End of the Trail" marks William Farnum's thirtieth photoplay for the William Fox Company.

"Hidden Valley," in which Valkyrien will star for Thanhouser, is a South African story dealing with the white goddess of an African tribe. Ernest Warde will direct the play, to be released September 10.

Constance Collier has been engaged to play the lead in a picturization of "The Eternal Magdalene," by Robert McLaughlin, which will be the first big production undertaken by the Success Film Company. Miss Collier made her first screen appearance as "Lady Macbeth" in the Triangle production of "Macbeth."

Gladys Hulette, who is starring in Pathe's "The Shine Girl."

Ann Murdock is getting twenty or thirty new gowns for her appearance in the McClure production of "Envy."

Olga Gray of the Triangle Fine Arts studio arrived in New York last week from the Pacific Coast. She will remain in the east about a month.

PACIFIC COAST NOTES

Director Harry Harvey of Balboa is filming "Boots and Saddles" for B. S. Moss.

Jackie Saunders will begin work in "The Lily of the Coal Fields," by Father Will W. Whalen, as soon as she escapes from "The Grip of Evil.'

Norman Manning, business manager of Balboa, has secured a new bear to support little Mary Sunshine in her next play.

Director Alvin J. Neitz has started his third picture at the Horsley studios, with William Clifford and Margaret Gibson co-starring. Elsie M. Callaghan is the author of the story. Nan Christy and Al Blake have important roles.

In Cleo Madison's next play, to follow "The Chalice of Sorrow," the Bluebird version of "La Tosca," she appears first as a convent girl, later as an adventuress and woman of the world.

James L. Farley, who had an important role with Helen Holmes in "The Girl and the Game," has left the Signal Company and is now with Universal, appearing in the drama, "Hard Rock."

Clune's next big feature, from Harold Bell Wright's book, "The Eyes of the World," is progressing well, under the direction of Donald Crisp. Monroe Salisbury has the leading role, supported by Jane Novak, Jack McDonald, Kathleen Kirkham, Lurline Lyons, Jack Livingston and Edward J. Peil.

The newest Grace Cunard-Francis Ford serial, "My Lady Raffles," has been begun. It will be in twelve or fifteen episodes.

Nell Shipman is author of "The Gunman," a novel one-reel script full of action, production of which has just been completed by Director Douglas Gerrard, featuring Francelia Billington, at Universal City. Miss Shipman originally wrote "The Gunman" as a vaudeville sketch, played in it herself out of New York, and a year ago sold it to the Universal Company for screen production. Thus she has realized salary, royalty and purchase price for this one story.

Vola Smith is being featured in a Universal three-reel drama under Harry Millard's direction.

Babe Sedgwick, now appearing in Bluebird features, began her picture career a year ago, doing small bits in comedies.

Claire McDowell, formerly with Biograph, is to play the leading feminine role in a Universal feature directed by Hobart Henley, who will also be leading man. Miss McDowell will be a Red Cross nurse, Mr. Henley a surgeon.

William Christy Cabanne, after six years' affiliation with David W. Griffith, tion of a serial featuring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne.

Cameron Coffey, five years old, world's champion child swimmer and diver, is now a member of the Keystone company. He is now working in the new Charlie Murray picture.

William V. Mong, author-actor-producer of Universal films, now working on a three-reel drama, "The Husks of Love," is to write a series of articles dealing with world politics for a magazine.

Gilbert P. Hamilton, director-general of the Century Company of Montana, is cutting and editing his latest feature, "Inherited Passions," in which Dot Farley and William Conklin are featured. The picture was filmed in Los Angeles and Round-up, Mont.

Henry Kabierske, who directed the ten-reel Monrovia feature, "The Daughter of the Don," has directed pageants in many of the largest cities in the United States, and only recently gave his attention to motion pictures. In one scene in this production, he used more than two thousand people.

In one scene in "Her Father's Son," Vivian Martin, the star, falls through a bridge on horseback. William D. Taylor directed this picture for the Paramount program. The supporting cast of players includes Alfred Vosburgh, Helen Eddy, Lucile Ward and Herbert Standing.

Julian Louis LaMothe has nearly completed the ten-reel adaptation of Herman Whitaker's novel, "The Planter," for the Nevada Film Company. Tyrone Power will be the star.

Roy Fernandez, who won the Universal's "handsomest man" contest, has severed connections with that company.

Roy Stewart has finished his work as heavy lead in the Universal "Liberty" serial and has left that company.

Edward Sloman, now a director with the American Company, played the role of the "heavy" in the Universal "Trey of Hearts" serial.

George Sargent has completed the direction of the third Richard Bennett picture at the American Mutual studios and is taking extra time to prepare another story for the actor.

Webster Campbell, who recently left the Vitagraph Company, has been engaged by the Famous Players-Lasky management and will make his first appearance in support of Blanche Sweet.

Carol Halloway has been chosen as leading woman of a light comedy at the L-Ko studios.

Margaret Shelby, the sixteen year old sister of Mary Miles Minter, has completed an engagement with Oliver Morosco in his Burbank theater production, "The Fibber," and is considering entering picture work. Miss Shelby is a brunette.

Charles Clary is at present playing the heavy lead in Cecil B. DeMille's multiple-reel feature being produced at the Lasky studios.

Lule Warrenton, who has been directing a juvenile Universal company, has severed connections with that company and will produce juvenile plays independently.

Louise Glaum, Triangle's deservedly popular star who has made an enviable reputation, particularly in portraying vampirish roles, has become an ardent devotee of aviation and has not only made several flights with Glenn Martin, the aviator, but has taken a systematic course of instruction in aviation as well. As soon as she becomes proficient enough to attempt flights alone, Miss Glaum intends to purchase an aeroplane.

Helene Rosson of the American forces is starting in a new picture, "Esther of the People," with Frank Ritchie playing opposite, directed by Frank Thorne. She has just finished "The Light."

"Big Tremaine," the novel by Marie Van Vorst, will be the next picture filmed by the Harold Lockwood-May Allison company, to follow "Mister 44." Henry Otto will direct.

Richard Stanton, recovered from his illness, is arranging to produce his second feature with the Fox Company, the star of which has not been chosen. His first Fox picture was "The Beast," with George Walsh and Anna Luther.

Helen Ware has been engaged to play the leading role in the Selig production of "The Garden of Allah," which Colin Campbell will direct. She will have the role created on the speaking stage by Many Mannering.

Leo Pierson has been appointed assistant to Director E. A. Martin, who is filming the Selig production, "The Light of Western Stars."

RICH GIRL LIKES "POOR PARTS"

Do you know what a "Cinderella" story is? Lots of people don't, so I'm going to tell you. It is a photoplay story (now-a-days) where the heroine starts out as a poor, little, abused, ragamuffin girl, and then later in the story is "adopted by the old millionaire" and wears just oodles of diamonds and beautiful gowns and things.

Vivian Rich, of "Flying A" fame is happiest when she can have "Cinderella" parts. Perhaps the reason she likes them so much is because she is just the type of girl who looks pretty, charming and lovable in rags and then, when she gets all dressed up in the beautiful clothes of affluence, she is adorable.

While Vivian has never been obliged to experience the sorrows of hunger and want, she has the big sympathetic heart of one who actually had suffered poverty.

In "The Little Troubador," a two-reel "Flying A" drama, Miss Rich acts just as though she had lived the part some time, and will be all the more loved by her admirers when this compelling story is given to the screen by the Mutual on August 7.

W. E. Drummond has let contract for erection of a new theater at Knoxville, Tennessee, to cost about $18,000. The building will be strictly modern and completed by October 1st.

Miss Lillian Kemble, imported from the stage, who makes her bow as a Mutualite in the chief supporting role to Frank Mills in "The House of Sorrows."

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by makes, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

A Change of Spirit—BIOGRAPH REISSUE—AUGUST 28.—Featuring Blanche Sweet and Walter Miller. Denied by her narrow-minded father all associations except that of her chaperon, the girl, while strolling in the park, indulges in a little flirtation with a young man who is one of a couple of gentleman thieves. A self-introduction comes when he gallantly picks up a book she has dropped. In restoring the book he cunningly takes her handbag in order that he may have an excuse to call on her later and return it, giving her the impression that she had lost it. When he calls her father is away, and so in a spirit of bravado she invites him in. While there he surreptitiously secures the key to the house, intending to return later with his partner. However, upon accidentally meeting the girl the second time, he becomes deeply impressed and the thought of his promise to his chum to enter the house that night palls. As can be imagined, the work laid out is odious in the extreme, but it is the means of causing in him a change of spirit.

Out of the Mist—(THREE REELS)—SELIG—AUGUST 28.—Featuring Fritzi Brunette and Guy Oliver. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

Enoch Arden—(TWO REELS)—BIOGRAPH—AUGUST 29.—Featuring Wilfred Lucas, Linda Arvidson and Frank Grandon. This Biograph reissue tells of the betrothal of Enoch and Annie, the despair of Enoch at his inability to cope with the demands of his increasing family obligations, and his sailing away to recoup his fortunes on a vessel bound for China. A storm is encountered, the vessel wrecked and Enoch and his two companions are washed up on a tropical island, where they are forced to stay. Annie all the while is ever hopeful of his return, while Philip, though an unsuccessful rival, shows a kindly interest in the little grief-stricken family. Finally Annie accepts Philip for the sake of her children, and when her new baby came, Philip's child, she is Philip's all in all. Meanwhile a ship in quest of water puts in at the island and Enoch now alone, his comrades having died, is rescued. His homecoming is sad indeed, and he welcomes the death that keeps Annie in happy ignorance.

His Stolen Fortune—(TWO REELS)—ESSANAY—AUGUST 29.—Featuring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne. Frank Wentworth, an adventurous young American, is left a vast fortune by an uncle. After enjoying it for six months and engaging himself to a society girl he discovers a letter from the deceased relative confessing that the fortune was stolen from a Pole named Max Illuski. Frank is ordered to return it. He advertises for the rightful heir and hundreds of Illuskis appear. Mrs. Holcombe, his prospective mother-in-law, denounces him publicly. His experiences in seeking the lost heir give him a thrilling twenty-four hours, at the end of which he is found exhausted by the attorney for the estate. The latter informs him the letter was merely to test his honesty and that he is the rightful possessor of the fortune. All ends pleasantly.

Vernon Howe Bailey's Sketch Book of Washington and Science—ESSANAY—AUGUST 30.—The internationally famous beauties of our capitol, repeatedly photographed, are here pictured more graphically than ever before in these motion drawings. They offer the best idea of what the seat of government is like from an architectural standpoint, attaining this result by perfect development of perspective. This split reel, picturing as it does the White House, the Capitol proper and the various department buildings, together with the numerous embassies, legations and such, is highly educative and is the next best thing to a trip there in its vivid description. The other 500 feet of the reel is made up of beautiful scenic.

An Aerial Joyride—VIM—AUGUST 31.—Featuring Babe Hardy and Billy Ruge. Runt is a sport and he leads his girl to believe that he is about to buy a swell auto. He examines several, but the prices do not suit him and he finally gets what he thinks is a bargain—a broken down flivver for a small sum. Plump, an out of work chauffeur, is engaged as driver and they sally forth for the girl's house. Being a two-seated car, Runt is obliged to sit on the axle and during the ride is lost. He calls the police and they pursue the flying couple, who leap through the clouds in their attempts to escape. A shot from below blows up the flying flivver and in the ensuing excitement the police car is driven clean through the wall of a garage just in time to catch Plump and the girl who unfortunately drop through the ceiling.

The Reward—VIM—SEPTEMBER 1.—Featuring Robt. Burns and Walter Stull. Jabbs conducts a nefarious gambling den in one of the most exclusive districts of the city, and although warned that the hand of the law is about to grasp him, Jabbs refuses to leave. Jabbs entices Mabel to come to his office, and once he has her inside he drops his mask and attacks her. The girl's cries are heard by Pokes, a secret service agent assigned to run down Jabbs. He breaks his way into Jabbs' office and a fight takes place. Pokes finally makes his getaway with Mabel and Jabbs is handcuffed by another secret service man and receives his just reward.

The Higher Destiny—(THREE REELS)—ESSANAY—SEPTEMBER 2.—Featuring Warda Howard and Sydney Ainsworth. A physician advises Helen Blair to seek a different climate. She is without money. Philip Cobb, her daughter's sweetheart, tells them his employer, Richard Standing, has refused him an increase. Thus Mrs. Blair discovers the whereabouts of Standing, whom she rejected years before to marry Blair. Standing treats her savagely when she appeals to him. His son John overhears the conversation and, seeing the girl, forces them to take the necessary funds to save the mother. The father discovers his love affair and sends him to Honolulu. The jealous Cobb gets a letter from a friend there and forges a new note telling that young Standing has become a drunkard. Ailene and Cobb are married. John Standing returns after months and he and Ailene learn of the deception. Cobb repents his deceit and drowns himself.

Tom's Strategy—SELIG—SEPTEMBER 2.—Featuring Tom Mix and Vicky Forde. Tom Miller, a cowpuncher, saves the life of Betty when the latter's horse runs away and he is seen stooping over her by his sweetheart, Florence Munton, who thinks he is kissing Betty. She tells Tom she will have nothing more to do with him, and sometime later he writes a note to Florence that he has been clawed by a bear. Florence and her friends go to Tom and as she takes him in her arms he smiles and tells her it was only a joke. Florence is again angered, but just then Betty's husband comes upon the scene and thanks Tom for saving his wife's life and then Florence realizes that Tom is loyal to her and they are reunited.

Mutual Pictures

The Key—(TWO REELS)—AMERICAN—AUGUST 28.—Featuring Ed Coxen, George Field and Lizette Thorn. Douglas Stallman, a U. S. Secret Service man, talks over old times and some of his past experiences with a friend whom he has not seen for years and he tells him the story of his big case. Stallman's aid is sought by the local chief of the government secret service in an effort to discover and break up a gang of counterfeiters and the only clue is the suspicion that a girl known as Cleo Langdon is in some way connected with them. Stallman manages to make the acquaintance of Cleo and she introduces Stallman to the gang. He later is caught listening, and Jamison, the leader, orders Stallman to be searched and the apartment key of Cleo's apartment is found on his person. Stallman is bound and thrown into a room. He manages to throw a chair out of the window and a passerby notifies the police. When they arrive the gang is rounded up, but Cleo is saved from being caught by Stallman, who has become interested in the girl and shortly after she became his wife.

The Stolen Booking—(TWO REELS)—VOGUE—AUGUST 29.—Featuring Rube Miller and Ben Turpin. Ben and Rube steal the suitcases of Kelsey and Ryan, two prominent legitimate actors, and finding a contract and a wallet containing two dollars they leave the place to join the troupe, which left some time before. They arrive in a small town and pose as Kelsey and Ryan and are informed that the troupe had been driven from town, but they suggest that Rube and Ben produce a benefit performance and gathering together a few of the town folks they start rehearsals, they taking the leading parts. A series of amusing incidents follow and finally Ben and Rube are forced to leave the town and thus ends their career as famous actors.

Two of a Kind—BEAUTY—AUGUST 30.—Featuring Orral Humphrey. This is a short story of mixed babies resulting in a sad mix-up for the hero, Mr. Henpeck. He was the unfortunate possessor of a bridge-playing wife and a squalling baby. Left at home to take care of the child, his misery multiplied when he received a note from his friend Smith asking him over for a little game of poker. Desire finally overcomes discretion and he goes to Smith's, taking the infant along. There this baby is placed in the hands of Bilkins, the butler, who takes it to the park for an airing with a wry face, as he does not like the job. At the park Bilkins flirts with Tootles, a maid in charge of Mrs. Billings' baby. It is at Mrs. Billings' house that Mrs. Henpeck is spending hre afternoon at bridge. Bilkins and Tootles finally part but as they do so they mix the babies. The exchange results in mad confusion for two families, but Mrs. Henpeck at length sees the humor of the situation and much to Henpeck's delight smiles and forgives him.

The Forgotten Prayer—(THREE REELS)—MUSTANG—AUGUST 31.—Featuring Anna Little and

Edward Arnold and Marion Murray in "The Greater Obligation," dated September 12; Eugene O'Brien in "The Return of Eve," September 4; and Lillian Drew in "The Woman Always Pays," for September 16, are the Essanay's shown in left-to-right order above.

"The Kid" (Lillian Walker), left end, is a five-part Blue Ribbon feature. "Love and Trout" is a one-part comedy. "A Fool and His Friend" is a three-part Broadway Star feature. All Vitagraphs, and dated August 28, September 1 and September 2.

Frank Borzage. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

The Gambler's Lost Love—(Two Reels)—Mustang—September 1.—Featuring Jack Richardson, Queenie Rosson and William Marshall. Helen secures a divorce from Jim, her husband, and later she calls to mind the man to whom she has been previously engaged, Tom; their petty quarrel, and how out of pique she had married Jim. Helen goes to their trysting place and through curiosity puts her hand into the hollow of the oak and this time she finds the note that Tom had left for her, asking forgiveness and telling her that he has gone into the hills where gold has been discovered, but that he would return as soon as possible. Helen meets Tom and their love is revived and again they plan to marry. Jim had married Tina and one day after a fight in the saloon he returns home to find that a child has been born and Tina dead. Helen hears of the situation at Jim's home and concludes that she must help him. She takes the baby to her cabin, and later when Tom is urging Helen to marry him she refuses and crossing over to where Jim is kneeling beside the baby's home-made cradle, she stands by him. He asks her forgiveness and as the picture fades it is evident they are to be remarried.

Universal Program

Song of the Woods—Big U.—Featuring Vola Smith and G. Raymond Nye. Leafy, a wild girl of the woodlands, loves Joe, but on the arrival of a stranger from the city she allows her head to be turned. Finally the girl agrees to elope with the stranger, but at the last moment she realizes what she is doing and saves herself from a terrible fate. Her father then relates to the united lovers his bitter experience in early life, an experience which is calculated to make the lovers more careful in the future.

American Blood—(Two Reels)—Episode 3 of "Liberty"—August 28.—Marie Walcamp, G. Raymond Nye and Jack Holt featured. In this episode the Mexicans attack the border town of Discovery, but Liberty sends the Texas Rangers there in time to rout the rebels. Jose Leon and Major Winston are Liberty's guardians. Winston has run into debt heavily in gambling on the strength of Liberty's money. As Jose's son Manuel is desirous of wedding Liberty he and his father decide to use Winston's gambling notes against him to force him to allow the marriage. But Winston refuses to acquiesce.

The Terrible Turk—Nestor—August 28.—With Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran. A comedy in which a valuable ruby, thought by those involved to be only a cheap stone, figures. A Hindu, in search of the gem, puts in appearance and creates no end of trouble, as Lee is impersonating a Hindu in a scheme he is playing upon his pal's girl and her father.

The Heart of a Show Girl—(Two Reels)—Universal Special—August 28.—This picture, featuring Ella Hall, tells of how a young premiere danseuse who has been severely flayed by a dramatic critic, meets this man later at the seashore, and not knowing his identity, falls violently in love with him. On arriving at the office of the justice of the peace the two learn each other's real identity for the first time. The girl cannot forget her past wrath and she defies her lover for a time, making him pay in full for his former attack, but all ends happily.

The Chance Market—(Three Reels)—Gold Seal—August 29.—Featuring King Baggot. In this drama the star takes a double part. Jim, a burglar, robs the house of John Marmaduke, a wealthy bachelor, and is shot by the latter. Marmaduke, noting the exact resemblance between himself and the thief, makes the latter's dead body appear to be his own, the result of a suicide, and exits in the role of a thief. John, in this role, tricks Jim's sweetheart by taking his place in the girl's affections. When the substitution is discovered the girl denounces him. But John is able to prove his worthiness in the happenings which follow and the story closes with the union of the two.

A Lucky Leap—Victor—August 29.—With Nell Bennett and Ed Sedgwick. Fatty buys a watch of a crook and later gives it to a girl he meets in the park. Unfortunately the girl happens to be the daughter of the woman from whom the watch was stolen. So the girl's mother and her father, who is a detective, give Fatty all he is looking for. But at last Fatty finds the crook, accounts for himself fully and receives a large reward.

The Right Car but the Wrong Berth—L-Ko—August 30.—With Dan Russell and Katherine Griffith. Mr. Cowbull, a floorwalker, who is overzealous with his lady customers, is warned by an irate husband that he has about five minutes to get out of town. Unfortunately the husband is on the same train with the floorwalker. In the mishaps which follow a flirt, porters, conductors, etc., figure and such things as handcars, steamboats, aeroplanes and automobiles lend their aid to the speedy action.

The Call of the Past—(Two Reels)—Imp—September 1.—With William Lowery and Agnes Vernon. Donohoe, leader of a band of crooks, marries a girl while on his vacation in the country who knows nothing of his past life. Decided that he will make one more haul before settling down to honest living, Donohoe comes to the city. His pal, Logan, greatly admires his wife, although he does not know she is his wife. Donohoe is at last cornered by the police, but Logan, for the sake of the little wife, who does not yet believe anything is amiss, takes the responsibility for Donohoe's crime and leaves the couple to pursue their way in honesty in the future.

Little Brownie's Bravery—Powers—September 1.—Featuring Arthur Allardt and Elizabeth Janes. The story deals with the efforts of little "Brownie," an expert girl swimmer, who dives after coin to gain money enough to pay for an important operation on her father. When she saves a doctor from drowning this obviates the necessity of her struggling any farther and a successful operation is made by the doctor.

The Desert Rat—(Two Reels)—Bison—September 2.—Pete, a weary searcher for gold, saves a young man from dying of thirst in the desert. He afterward learns that the young man, Roy, is his son, but withholds his identity from him, for years before Pate's wife had bestowed her affections on another man. Later, in defense of his sweetheart, Roy is badly wounded, and as the boy incessantly calls for his mother Pete realizes that only her presence will save him. So he sends for his former wife and then departs, unable to bear the pain of a meeting.

He Becomes a Cop—(Two Reels)—An Episode of "Timothy Dobbs, That's Me"—September 3.—Featuring Carter De Haven. This episode relates the harsh experiences of Timothy, the would-be movie actor, in the role of a cop. His day's work in this role ends after he has been dragged behind an automobile for some miles and deposited in a sand pile. Timothy's ardent wooing of the landlady in order to prolong his stay in her house is a big concern of the story.

The Elixir of Life—Joker—September 3. William Franey and Gale Henry featured. A comedy, written by Harry Wulze, in which a girl, dressed as an Egyptian dancer, takes the place of a missing mummy in an ancient mummy casket and fools a "nut" doctor. The latter is certain he has discovered the "elixir of life" in bringing the Egyptian queen to life. The doctor's wife, discovering her husband with the queen, prepares an awful death for both which is only averted in the nick of time.

Arthur's Desperate Resolve—Victor—September 3.—When the father of Arthur's girl absolutely refuses to have him as a son-in-law, the young man takes a poison which a chemist is experimenting with. It is lucky that the poison turns out to be harmless, for soon after he has quaffed it he learns that he has inherited a large sum of money, as does the prospective father-in-law, who immediately cancels his former decision.

A Marriage for Revenge—Joker—August 26.—William Franey and Gale Henry featured. This story concerns what two wilful young people do when they are ordered by their parents into what they think is a distasteful marriage, neither having seen the other. The girl adopts the same tactics as the youngq man, that is, she decides to marry right off for spite. The result is that they both marry of their own will, unwittingly complying with the old folks' demands.

The Lady from the Sea—Big-U—August 26.—With Claire MacDowell and Nobel Johnson. A shipwrecked girl is thrown up on an island, the only other inhabitant of which is a man. Although the latter tries his best to be kind to her, she is in perpetual fear of him. So, when one day a yacht rescues the girl, the male inhabitant of the island is left in solitude on the shore with nothing but a cherished memory.

Feature Programs

Blue Bird

The Girl of Lost Lake—(Five Reels)—Blue-bird—August 28.—Myrtle Gonzales and Val Paul featured in this picture, which has to do with the romance surrounding the love of Vaughan McAndrews, a sojourner at Lost Lake, for the girl, Jude. She is betrothed to another, but when she poses for an itinerant artist, who changes the picture and makes it appear that she posed partially undraped, Bean, her affianced, spreads an evil report concerning her. Jude's father goes to revenge himself upon Bean and both are killed. Vanghan returns to the lake and marries Jude. Judge West, who has acted as her protector all along, and has taken her into partnership after her father's death, in his mining claim, which has never yielded anything, brings about the meeting of the young people, after his claim has suddenly become a paying one and both he and the girl are made wealthy over night.

Fox

Daredevil Kate—(Six Reels)—William Fox—August 21.—This story features Virginia Pearson in the role of a woman who is saved from ruining herself to ruin someone else. Misunderstandings are finally cleared up and it is proved that she is only bad on the surface. The role is a clever character study. The story is written by Philip Bartholomae. Kenean Buel directed.

International Film

Hearst-International News Pictorial No. 65—August 15.—Boys and girls perform police duty to aid in the cleaning up of the east side and to stop the spread of infantile paralysis, New York, N. Y.; third of a series of interesting pictures by Nelson E. Edwards, showing activities on board the flagship of Admiral Scheer and Hipper, Wilhelmshaven, Germany; the flexible car, a new means of motor transportation is inaugurated in Fresno, Cal.; Scotch troopers who are members of the British army perform the difficult sword dance before a large assembled crowd, Versailles, France; British and French troops move into position for the start of a terrific drive against the forces of the central powers in the Balkans, Salonika, Greece; men and girls compete in diving contest for the state championship of Michigan, Macatawa, Mich.; the signal corps of Uncle Sam's border forces are efficient in transmitting messages over the mountainous countries in Nogales, Ariz.

Kleine

Gloria's Romance No. 16—(TWO REELS)—GEORGE KLEINE—Featuring Billie Burke. "A Modern Pirate." A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

Mutual Masterpictures

The Diamond Runners—(FIVE REELS)—SIGNAL—AUGUST 28.—Featuring Helen Holmes and Leo Maloney. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

The Man Who Could Not Die—(FIVE REELS)—AMERICA—AUGUST 30.—Featuring William Russell and Charlotte Burton. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

Mutual Star Production

A Welsh Singer—(FIVE REELS)—MUTUAL STAR PRODUCTION—AUGUST 17.—Florence Turner here appears in an adaptation of a popular English novel by Allen Raine. Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

Paramount

The Parson of Panamint—(FIVE REELS)—PALLAS—SEPTEMBER 1.—A strongly appealing western story by Peter B. Kyne. Dustin Farnum plays the name role. Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

Rolling Stones—(FIVE REELS)—FAMOUS PLAYERS—AUGUST 21.—Owen Moore and Marguerite Courtot featured. An entertaining, keenly humorous and excellently directed picturization of Edgar Selwyn's play. The story deals with a ludicrous fight to conform circumstances to the stipulations of a peculiar will. Del Henderson directed. Others in the cast are Denman Maley, Alan Hale, Gretchen Hartman, W. J. Butler and Ida Fitzhugh.

Public Opinion—(FIVE REELS)—LASKY-PARAMOUNT—AUGUST 17.—This story dealing with the unrighteous judgment of a newspaper-biased populace, gives Blanche Sweet an exceptional opportunity to exercise emotional ability. The story was written by Marquerite Turnbull. In her support we have Earle Foxe, Edythe Chapman, Tom Forman, Elliott Dexter and Raymond Hatton.

Pictographs—PARAMOUNT—AUGUST 27—Pictures of an exciting sport have the opening position on this release of Pictographs. "Dueling with a Swordfish" shows the hooking, fighting and landing of one of these peculiar creatures. Incidentally the swordfish landed is the record catch of this season for size and weight. "Following the Bee Line," hunting and procuring honey as practiced by mountaineers; "Better Babies" and "Yachting in the Park," a race held by builders of sailboat models, complete the release.

Climbing the Austrian Alps—PARAMOUNT-BURTON HOLMES—AUGUST 27—This travel picture presents some of the most remarkable views ever projected. One follows a climbing party to the top of Gross Glockner, highest of the Austrian Alps, and from there looks down upon a perfect sea of clouds.

The Almighty Dollar—(FIVE REELS)—WORLD FILM—A modern drama enacted by E. K. Lincoln, June Elvidge and Frances Nelson. Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

The Pretenders—(FIVE REELS)—METRO—Emmy Wehlen stars in a story by Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf. Produced by Rolfe Photoplays under the direction of George D. Baker. A Review appears on another page of this issue.

Pathe

Luke Joins the Navy—PATHE-ROLIN—Lonesome Luke here joins the Navy not so much from the promptings of a patriotic spirit as from a desire to gain prestige in his home town and particularly with the one, and only, girl. He and his pal are put through the regular paces on shipboard and between the two of them diversion is afforded the spectator. "Luke Joins the Navy" is a good slapstick comedy.

Some Foreign Birds—(SPLIT REEL)—PATHE—Intimate views of the Finch Ringed African Sparrow, and White Sparrow (a rare bird) make up the first half of this educational offering. On the same reel with:

Historic St. Augustine—(PICTURESQUE AMERICA)—PATHE—Its history and its architecture make this city an interesting subject for a scenic offering.

Caught in a Jam—PATHE-STARLIGHT—Heinie and Louie comedy in which the former aids beauty in distress and is rewarded by a reception at the home of the grateful lady. Louie is jealous and he formulates a plan whereby Heinie is accused of stealing a jar of precious jam. The picture reaches its most amusing moment when Heinie wallows in the muddy pool whose slimy bed furnishes the ammunition with which he pelts Louie.

Good Pals—(TWO REELS)—PATHE—This melodrama tells of a man who leaves his daughter in charge of her aunt and travels off on some business. He is attacked by bears and carried to an Indian camp where he is nursed back to health. He returns to find his daughter robbed of her income and independence by the wicked aunt. A fair plot, crudely handled, produced and acted. The picture has all the appearances of having been produced about ten years ago.

Triangle Program

The Thoroughbred—(FIVE REELS)—TRIANGLE-INCE—SEPTEMBER 10.—Frank Keenan in a southern drama by C. Gardner Sullivan directed by Reginald Barker. A review appears on another page of this issue.

Gretchen the Greenhorn—(FIVE REELS)—TRIANGLE-FINE ARTS—SEPTEMBER 3.—Dorothy Gish gives a characterizatoin of a Dutch girl who comes to this country. Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

Skirts—(TWO REELS)—TRIANGLE-FINE ARTS—This comedy by Anita Loos is enacted by Fay Tincher, Tully Marshall and Edward Dillon. The story tells of a police captain who by mistake courts a slavey in a wealthy household, where a crook works as butler. The butler makes use of the slavey, her striking and striped skirt, and also her immunity to arrest as long as Sam is captain of the police. All sorts of robberies are committed by women in striped skirts but Sam makes no arrests until forced to and for this act he is made chief. It is not a very amusing comedy, to say the least. Try as they do the actors simply cannot be funny in such parts.

V. L. S. E. Inc.

The Footlights of Fate—(FIVE PARTS)—VITAGRAPH BLUE RIBBON—AUGUST 21.—This story gives Marc MacDermott and Naomi Childers an excellent opportunity to do some polished acting. It deals largely with the unaccountable happenings of fate. The entertaining story was written by Louis Joseph Vance. Others in the cast are Templer Saxe, William Shea and Katherine Lewis.

World

Husband and Wife—(FIVE REELS)—WORLD—AUGUST 28.—Ethel Clayton, Holbrook Blinn, Montagu Love and Emmett Corrigan in a modern drama adapted from the stage play of the same name. Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

TRIANGLE PLAYS

Triangle Plays are so Good They Have Made All Other Motion Pictures Better

Two million people will see Triangle Picture Plays today—and again to-morrow and the day after that. These two million are discriminating American folks who know what they want and when they want it.

They have been patronizing Triangle Plays in ever increasing numbers because they found them to be of the highest type.

Triangle Plays have come to mean what the word "Sterling" means to silverware—the very highest in dramatic quality and personal talent.

Are you sure you are getting your share of the motion picture patronage in your city?

Vitagraph Absorbs V-L-S-E

ESSANAY AND SELIG TO JOIN ANOTHER DISTRIBUTING COMPANY

THE tail has wagged the dog.

On second thought we have decided not to make the above maximical statement because it would seem to indicate a lack of respect for the main factor in our story. And that is, of course, furthermost from the fact.

As the headlines have already told you, Vitagraph has absorbed V-L-S-E.

All the final arrangements have been completed for the taking over of the offices of the big distributing company through which Vitagraph has been releasing its productions. The good will and the output of the Lubin company have been purchased and Selig and Essanay have confirmed the news of their withdrawal from the "Big Four." According to the latest report, Vitagraph will keep the distributing organization intact and will continue to release through its channels. Productions made by the former Lubin companies will also, of course, appear through the same medium, but will be separate from the Vitagraph productions.

The absorption of the Lubin company was accomplished on August 24 at a stockholders' meeting held in Philadelphia. The shares in the V-L-S-E company owned by Essanay and Selig have also, it is understood, been completely swallowed up by Vitagraph, although it has been admitted in the offices of the Vitagraph company in New York that the V-L-S-E deal has been consummated and Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, vice president and secretary of the Vitagraph company, is reported to have confirmed the news, there are as yet no details available. Benjamin B. Hampton, a prominent New York financier and a large stockholder in the Vitagraph company, neither denies nor affirms the reports. It is generally understood that because of the large amounts of money being spent on Vitagraph productions and because of the extent and quality of its organization, Vitagraph will release an independent service, through V-L-S-E, and at the same time will distribute another class of productions made by the former Lubin and other companies, and including such spectacles as the Dixon-Herbert "The Fall of a Nation."

There has been a great deal of unofficial speculation anent the future releasing mediums of Essanay and Selig. One bit of gossip declares that President Spoor of the Essanay company has been negotiating for the purchase of the George Kleine exchanges and that Selig will join Essanay in this deal. Another statement is to the effect that Essanay and Selig have merged with the Success Film Company and that Thomas H. Ince is to be the guiding genius of production. All that is certain now is that Essanay and Selig will very shortly become members of another distributing concern.

Selig's Statement

William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company, has issued the following statement:

"The Selig Polyscope Company has withdrawn from the V-L-S-E and will release Selig Red Seal Plays, of five reels or more in length, through other channels which will be announced in the near future. It can be stated that a number of very attractive propositions made the Selig Company are being carefully considered and in due time a decision will be arrived at which may not only be surprising but will also be interesting to all those interested in the motion picture art. The Selig Company leaves the V-L-S-E with the best of good feeling and we can only state that the decision to withdraw from that organization was not one hastily resolved.

"The Selig company has in preparation, and also ready for release a number of unusually excellent pictures, including "The Country That God Forgot," and other powerful five-reelers."

The Essanay Angle

Essanay's withdrawal from V-L-S-E is to take effect September 16. George K. Spoor, president of the Essanay company, gives "business reasons" as the cause for his move. He states that a new organization for releasing Essanay features will be announced in the near future. When seen in his Chicago offices by a representative of MOTOGRAPHY, Mr. Spoor stated that an announcement of the new plans would be made just as soon as they had been perfected in detail. He outlined some of the plans for Essanay's coming work.

"There will be no abatement in the work of Essanay," he said. "In fact it will be conducted on a larger scale than ever before. And we aim to put out greater features.

"Essanay already has contracted for the rights on a number of large features and is planning to start work on them shortly. Two features are already under way and three others are completed for release through the new organization.

" 'The Sting of Victory,' featuring Henry B. Walthall, supported by Antoinette Walker, which just recently was released through V-L-S-E, will after September 16, go out through the new releasing company.

" 'The Return of Eve,' which features Edna Mayo, supported by Eugene O'Brien, and 'The Prince of Graus-tark,' featuring Bryant Washburn and Marguerite Clayton, the novel by George Barr McCutcheon and a sequel to Essanay's feature 'Graustark,' have been completed and an announcement of their release will be made as soon as the new organization is perfected. These plays are both in five reels.

"Two other features are under way. They are 'The Chaperon,' taken from the stage success of Marion Fairfax and featuring Edna Mayo and Eugene O'Brien, and 'The Breakers,' by Arthur Stringer, one of the best of the Saturday Evening Post stories. These also will appear in five acts. Other features will be announced later. Several of these, already purchased, will feature Henry B. Walthall."

Essanay has three studios, having just completed the third large one. The features previously released through V-L-S-E, which after the sixteenth of September will be distributed through the new organization, include Charlie Chaplin's burlesque on "Carmen," "The Sting of Victory," "According to the Code," "That Sort," "Sherlock Holmes," "The Little Shepherd of Bargain Row," "The Havoc," "The Discard," "Vultures of Society," "The Misleading Lady," "Captain Jinks of the Horse Marines," "A Daughter of the City," "The Alster Case," "The Raven," "The Crimson Wing," "The Man Trail," "The Blindness of Virtue," "In the Palace of the King," "The White Sister," "The Slim Princess," and "Graustark."

SCREEN SUPERS ORGANIZE

New Industrial Union Ready to Strike if Not Given More Pay and Shorter Hours—Issue a List of Demands

A new industrial union has been organized composed of 10,000 film laborers, extras, supers and "studges." It is estimated that every year nearly 800,000 persons participate in the mob, battle and riot scenes of the big film productions and many of these are society folks who just come in for the fun of being in the pictures and asks for no pay and so are spoiling the business of the regular people.

Some of the mob scenes demanded of supers involve the risk of limbs and even life. There is said to be no casualty safeguard for the men and women who play in these scenes at the wage of common laborers. Therefore the 10,000 motion picture "supers" have organized as a labor union and put forth a list of demands as follows:

1. Any super called upon to do duty in a dress suit is to get $5 per diem.
2. Any super who is called upon to do "bumps" is to get $7.50 per diem.
3. Any super who is called upon to work in civilian dress is to get $3.50 per diem.
4. A mob of supers, coming in numbers of from 1 to 15, must get $5 per diem for each super; in mobs of 15 to 50, $4 each per diem, and in crowds of 50 to 100, $3 each, and in greater numbers, $2.50 per man, or woman, working in populous scenes.
5. In a scene that calls for summer apparel, supers must get $5 a day. A Tuxedo, or walking suit, calls for the same wage.
6. "Tramps," or "gangsters" are to get $2 apiece up to 50 in number. If more than 50 work together, the day wage shall be $3.
7. Every studio is to be obliged to feed the supers such meals as the duration of work calls for.
8. Night work calls for $1 extra over day work, the hours to be from 6:30 p. m. until 2 a. m. The daytime hours are to be from 8:30 a. m. until 5:30 p. m., and all overtime on these schedules is to command double pay.

Big Reel Fellows Ball

With the most representative enrollment of members since the inception of the club, which is composed of persons from all branches of the photoplay industry, the Reel Fellows Club of Chicago, through M. G. Watkins, secretary, announces the club's second annual ball will be held November 10 in one of the prominent hotels. This event promises to be the most elaborate photoplay affair of the year in Chicago.

The committee, which now is making arrangements to secure a ball room to accommodate more than 800 persons, is composed of Richard Travers, Essanay leading man; H. C. Miller, manager of the Moyer Theater; Frank J. Flaherty, of Bluebird exchange, and M. G. Watkins, manager of the American Standard Motion Picture Corporation.

Mr. Travers and some popular leading lady of another company will lead the grand march. Henry Walthall, Edmund Cobb, Bryant Washburn, of Essanay, and many other stars will be present. The proceeds of this affair will be added to the fund for a new club house. At present the club has quarters in Hotel Morrison.

It also is announced that during the latter part of January, the club will put on a show in one of the leading loop theaters for three nights. In the cast will be Richard Travers, Henry Walthall, four leading men from other companies, and three popular leading ladies of the screen. The proceeds of the show will also go into the clubhouse fund.

Throughout the winter the club will put on features of general interest to the public. Each affair will be to secure more money to bring the club house fund up to $50,000.

Restrain Use of Title for Film

The Supreme Features Film Company, Inc., of Minneapolis, the owners of the rights of "Where Are My Children?" for the states of Iowa, Minnesota, Wisconsin, and North and South Dakota, and the Supreme Feature Film Service of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, the owners of the rights of this same production in Nebraska, Missouri, Kansas and Oklahoma, have instituted legal proceedings in the United States Courts of Omaha to restrain and enjoin the Fine Arts Feature Film Company and J. E. Schlank of Omaha, from advertising, exhibiting or offering for lease, hire or disposition, the motion picture film production known as "Where Are Your Children?" or any film production of similar or colorable title to that name, or of similar or colorable title to the film production "Where Are My Children?"

Through an error in the September 2 issue of MOTOGRAPHY it was stated that Mr. Schlank controlled the rights to "Where Are My Children" in the western territory.

Gordon Handles Powell Publicity

Kilbourn Gordon, well known in newspaper and theatrical circles, is now handling publicity for the Frank Powell Productions, Inc. Mr. Gordon was for four years on the Washington Post and the Washingto Herald. He left the latter to do the press work for Richard Bennett's production of "Damaged Goods," and the following season publicized and managed Arthur Byron and Edmund Breese in the Broadhurst play, "To-Day." Recently he has been associated in like capacity with David Bispham.

Epidemic Still Gripping the East

THEATERS FEEL NO RELIEF FROM RIGID RULINGS

WHILE the western territory still appears in general to be immune, the grip of the infantile paralysis epidemic is tightening on the eastern motion picture houses. There is little abatement of the disease in New York City and the surrounding states are beginning to feel the effects to a great degree.

Philadelphia is now becoming hard pressed and the laws there are practically as stringent as in New York and the struggle equally as hard for the exhibitors. The theater men have held a number of "get together" meetings to devise ways and means of combating this blow to their business. The exchange men have also met with the exhibitors and are offering all the aid in their power. The exhibitors asked a fifty per cent reduction on all films as long as the children are barred from the house, but although the exchanges did not feel that they could make this a general rule they offered to show every leniency to the individual exhibitor, and help to tide him over his troubles.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Philadelphia appointed a committee to wait upon Dr. Krusen of the Department of Health to discuss with him the big loss now being sustained by the motion picture men owing to the ban placed on children under sixteen years of age from entering picture shows, to see whether the age limit could not be moderated and reduced to 10 or 12 years. The reason for this is that 80 per cent of the infantile paralysis cases have been among children under six years of age.

The exchange managers and exhibitors in Philadelphia are indignant because the health law has been aimed only at the motion picture theaters and Dr. B. H. Jones, the well-known specialist of Pittsburgh, has been called to Philadelphia to confer with medical authorities and film men on the subject. Dr. Jones has been lecturing in New York for the purpose of combatting the panic over infantile paralysis and trying to nullify the destructive methods of the Health Department in keeping the children away from the theaters. The doctor claims that infantile paralysis is not a germ, is not a disease and is not infectious or contagious and that when the general public learns the real nature of the malady it will cease to be afraid of it and will no longer fear any contagion or orders controlling the action of the public in the cases of so-called "epidemics" of the disease.

In Philadelphia the authorities have gone as far as to close the Sunday schools and virtually every church and Sunday school in the city, Catholic and Protestant alike, is closed to children under sixteen years of age.

Pottsville, Pa., is also feeling the effects and all the Sunday schools have been closed until all danger of the disease has passed.

In Baltimore, Maryland, the Board of Public Safety has been a little more lenient in their age limit and has issued an edict that all children under twelve be prohibited from entering the theaters. A quarantine has also been established against children from New York, Philadelphia and the Jersey coast. In a meeting of the Board of Health it was decided to wait a while before adopting such drastic measures as would seriously affect the business interests of the city.

The Montclair Theater, Montclair, N. J., is doing its best to help in the prevention of the spread of this dread disease by publishing in its program a full page warning from the Board of Health and exhorting the citizens to observe the health rules there set forth.

Flint, Michigan, is one of the few western cities to be affected by the scare and a rule has been made that children under sixteen shall be barred from the picture houses. The exhibitors report, however, that they are having fair business in spite of the ruling.

So far Chicago exchanges report very few houses closed in the middle west, and there seems to be but a small number of cases of the disease in this part of the country.

OMAHA EXHIBITORS' STRIKE

Win Fight Against Admitting City Street Cleaners and Laborers Free of Charge Accompanied by Their Families

The exhibitors of Omaha, Nebraska, have risen up in righteous indignation to fight against the admitting of all city employes to their theaters free of charge because they wear the badge of a public servant.

J. R. Corliss, manager of the Nicholas Theater, sent a letter to the City Council in behalf of the exhibitors, in which he pointed out that while they did not object in the least to the occasional free visit to their theaters of policemen and municipal officers of the higher grade, they did most strenuously object to having the street sweepers, laborers and teamsters come with their families, sweethearts and friends and be charged no admission. He pointed out that these employes are receiving a regular salary and why should not they pay as well as any other man working on a salary? He called attention to the fact that motion picture entertainments cost the managers money to present, it is the commodity they buy and sell the same as the merchant buys goods and sells them, and what right would the city employes have to go into a store and take the merchant's goods?

The councilmen after a hearing gave the exhibitors the right to use their own discretion as to what badges they would honor.

Exhibitors Lunched

On August 28 the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the Northwest served a luncheon to the Twin City theater men, with the result that a large number of exhibitors joined the Association and pledged their help in all matters.

Several prominent men spoke, amongst them being Thomas Furniss of Duluth, I. H. Ruben, Theodore L. Hayes, D. G. Rodgers and James Gilosky. Each one was enthusiastically received.

Several important matters were taken up with the exhibitors for settlement.

Mollie King will next be starred with Robert Warwick by World in "All Man."

BRENON DENIED INJUNCTION

Justice Sets Precedent by Refusing to Interfere With the Showing of William Fox's "A Daughter of the Gods"

Justice Mullan of the supreme court denied the motion of Herbert Brenon to restrain William Fox from releasing the film "A Daughter of the Gods." Mr. Brenon has sued Mr. Fox for half a million dollars and also entered an injunction to prevent the showing of the film by the Fox Company, claiming that he was damaged to that amount by the erasing of his name from the advertisements and film title of the play.

Mr. Brenon resigned from the Fox Company some time ago. He admits he received a salary of $750 a week but says that sum amounts to nothing when compared with the benefit and prestige he would receive if given the publicity to which he believes he is entitled for the success of the drama.

Justice Mullan in refusing to grant the injunction held that Mr. Brenon had no contract of any sort with William Fox, that the engagement was oral, for no definite period, and contained no provision to insure the plaintiff the publicity for himself upon which he laid so much stress. It is felt that by this ruling a precedent of far-reaching importance to the motion picture and amusement world in general was set.

Mutual Main Offices in Chicago

During the first week in September the main offices of the Mutual Film Corporation, formerly located in New York City, will be established in that company's new headquarters in Chicago. Announcement was made in MOTOGRAPHY several weeks ago of Mutual's intention of placing its main offices in the geographical center of the country. President Freuler has for sometime been convinced that Chicago is the logical distributing center of the United States for films as well as for the other industries which have long recognized it as a business vantage point.

Beginning with September first the main offices of the company will be located in the Consumer's Building where the Chicago Mutual exchange is now ensconced.

Before "Terry" Ramsaye, the w. k. Mutual publicity man, left New York for the wilds of the west he was tendered a complimentary luncheon by the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc. The event was held at the Hotel Claridge on August 29.

Bennie Jumps

Bennie Zeidman, formerly Fine Arts publicity man, has accepted a new position with F. J. Balshofer, of the Yorke-Metro Hollywood studio, to take charge of the latter's press department. Zeidman has been associated with David Wark Griffith for the past two years, first with the Reliance and Majestic, and remained with the famous producer after he joined the Triangle and started to make Fine Arts pictures. The young publicity purveyor leaves the Fine Arts Company with the best wishes of the entire studio.

Former League President in Chicago

Fred J. Herrington, former president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America and now an organizer for that body, passed though Chicago on August 29 and made an extended call on MOTOGRAPHY. He discussed at length the critical censor situation in Kansas, from whose state motion picture convention he was returning to his home in Pittsburgh. The complete story of the Kansas convention appears on another page in this issue.

SAVING SUNSHINE

Universal Sets Clock Ahead—Thousands of Dollars Will Be Saved in Electric Light Bills by Earlier Closing Hour

Beginning September 1 the employes of the Universal Film Corporation will have to set their alarm clocks an hour ahead, for the directors of that organization have decreed that after that date the clocks in all their plants and offices should be set one hour ahead in accordance with the European policy of daylight conservation.

It is estimated that under this new plan the saving on electric light bills at Universal City, California, and at the local plants will run up into the thousands, for by closing up shop at four-thirty it will practically eliminate the necessity for lights even in the short days of the winter months.

When this plan was first proposed there were many protests, for many of the actors and actresses in the eastern studios live out in the suburbs, some of them having to travel from points on Long Island, and they declared they never would be able to get to work by eight o'clock. However, when it was pointed out that the earlier closing hour would bring them home that much earlier and allow them to avoid the traffic crush of the rush hour, they were soon won over.

SERRANO JOINS THANHOUSER

Two Florence La Badie Features for September—O. A. C. Lund Added to Staff of Thanhouser Directors

To satisfy the many demands for pictures in which Florence La Badie appears, Edwin Thanhouser, president of the Thanhouser Film Corporation, will release two Florence La Badie features through the Pathe exchanges in September. The first to be released on September 10 will be "The Fear of Poverty," a five-reel drama in which the star is supported by Robert Vaughn, George Marlo, Edwin Stanley and Ethyle Cooke. In the second, "Saint, Devil and Woman," Miss La Badie has in her cast Wayne Arey, Hector Dion and Ethyle Cooke.

Vincent Serrano, well known for his portrayal of Lieutenant Denton in "Arizona," has been engaged by Edwin Thanhouser to be starred in a five-reel feature called "A Modern Monte Cristo." Mr. Serrano has appeared only once before in pictures—when he was co-starred with Pauline Frederick in "Lydia Gilmore."

Another newcomer to the Thanhouser fold is O. A. C. Lund, who has been added to the force of directors. Mr. Lund has written many plays and directed features with the Metro, World and Eclair companies.

"The Revolt," one of the Shubert Broadway successes, is now being made into a five-part motion picture feature by the World Film Corporation with Frances Nelson, Arthur Ashley, Clara Whipple, Frank Beamish and George McQuarrie in the cast.

Kansas Convention Attacks Censors

STATE BRANCH JOINS M. P. E. L. OF AMERICA

By H. E. Jameyson

ON August 22, 23 and 24 the Kansas Amusement Association, composed of exhibitors, exchange men, supply men and all businesses allied with motion pictures, met in joint convention with the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Kansas. The convention was held at Topeka. There were about one hundred exhibitors present and at least sixty representatives of Kansas City exchanges.

The convention was a decided success. The chief question of interest was that concerning censorship as it now exists in Kansas. Ways and means were taken up as to the best methods of securing for the exhibitors freedom from this obnoxious law.

Fred J. Herrington, former president and now national organizer for the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, was present and brought the Kansas exhibitors under the protecting wing of the National organization. The Kansas League has not been an active member of the National League for several years, but continued to hold meetings and maintained a working organization.

There was no election of league officers, the convention being held on a special call in order that a plan might be formulated to learn the opinions of the various candidates to state offices on the question of censorship. It was decided that the fight against the present censorship law should be made an issue in the coming election if possible and that every man running for office would be made to explain his views on this question.

Mayor House Speaks

At the first session Mayor House of Topeka spoke. He is a frank and open enemy to censorship. He stated that he had never been moved to blushes at the sight of a motion picture, but that he never passed the windows of some of the dry goods stores on the main street of Topeka without blushing. "By cutting out of films the display of a shapely ankle, I presume the women of the state wear longer dresses," remarked the mayor sarcastically. "I also suppose that eliminating cigarette smoking on the screen has caused the youths of the state to cease smoking them. Personally I think the legislatures of the state were in need of money and made you the 'goats.'"

Secretary of State Botkin was the next speaker. He is also a member of the appeal board. He stated that he believed in censorship, but that sometimes the power was not properly exercised. He also admitted that he might have passed pictures that should have been rejected, and voted to reject pictures that should have been passed. By admitting this he aided the exhibitors, their contention being that no man or set of men is capable of passing on the merits of motion pictures.

Fred Herrington, the guest of honor, made a stirring speech. He pointed out the defects in the present censorship laws, showed how pictures that had been condemned in Kansas had been passed by other states having censorship laws, and vice versa. He pointed with emphasis to the fact that motion pictures are an enemy to vice instead of a partner, as some radical Kansans insist.

The real sensation of the convention, was when E. R. Pearson, manager of the V-L-S-E office in Kansas City, and chairman of the convention, introduced Mrs. A. B. Mitchner, president of the Kansas Branch of the W. C. T. U. At the very outset of her speech Mrs. Mitchner told the exhibitors that she was in favor of censorship and that she represented 10,000 women that were going to fight for it. She admitted that she believed the censorship fees were too high, and that they should be reduced at least one hundred per cent. She took issue with Mayor House and said that she did not believe that the law was enacted because Kansas needed the money derived by the fees, but that it was enacted to protect the young men and women of the state.

"I represent mothers whose chief ambition is to raise fine upright children" said Mrs. Mitchner, "and therefore am interested in anything that pertains to the child and its welfare. We believe that censorship of the motion picture is necessary and desirable. I am a professional lobbyist and am allowed access to both the senate and house of representatives and intend to fight for the maintenance of this bill."

Mr. Herrington, in an impromptu reply to Mrs. Mitchner, stated that the exhibitors had no quarrel with the W. C. T. U. and both organizations were working toward the same ends. "The trouble is not," said Mr. Harrington, "in the pictures, but in the morals of the patrons. You want to make the morals better by censoring the picture. What you should do is to make the morals better and the pictures will take care of themselves. If you look for evil you will find it. That's where the board falls down. Composed of an exminister and church people it looks for evil and finds it."

E. R. Pearson told the exhibitors what the exchanges of Kansas City are doing to kill the bill. He told them how all the money that has been paid in recently has been paid under protest. The amount now tied up in this manner totals about $20,000. Suit has already been started to recover this money. A rather peculiar circumstance arises in this connection. Attorney General Brewster has also brought suit against the censorship board to force them to turn this money into the general treasury. The censorship board now finds themselves in an embarrassing position, with both the exchanges and the state fighting for the money. No salaries or expenses can be paid by the board until these suits are settled.

The convention was held in the legislative chambers of the state, the same rooms in which the censorship laws were enacted. Many prominent exhibitors of the state took part in the heated discussions. And if the enthusiasm of the delegates is any criterion, the men who want to become legislators this fall must run the dangerous gauntlet of the picture men.

Besides the convention many other affairs took the interest of the attendants. Richard Travers of Essanay, Gene Gauntier of the Gauntier Feature Players, Miss Leota Lorraine, formerly of Essanay, and Miss Ethel Quinn of the Pageant Film Company, attended the convention. They rode in the parade which was held on the second day and which was viewed by twenty thousand people.

One the evening of August 23 a big "movie ball" was staged in the open air pavilion. At least three hundred couples attended the ball and several thousand watched from the outside. Governor Capper, his wife, Mayor House of Topeka, and several other prominent executives of the state were also in attendance. The grand march was led by Mr. Travers and Gene Gauntier. Several vaudeville acts were staged by various film men of Kansas City. The hit of the evening was Mr. Reese, assistant manager of the Universal exchange, who sang several popular numbers much to the delight of the crowd.

All of the Kansas City exchanges had displays put up in the Throop hotel, the convention headquarters. The most elaborate displays were in the rooms occupied by Universal, V-L-S-E and Paramount.

Exchange Men and Exhibitors Present

The Universal exchange was represented by R. C. Cropper, manager; H. D. Reese, assistant; George Bowles, publicity man; C. A. Jones, A. M. Dodson and Phil Ryan, travelers; William Emrich, manager Bluebird, and O. K. Mason, manager Wichita branch.

V. L. S. E. was represented by E. R. Pearson, manager; Lester Scott, publicity man; A. L. Reed and O. Randall, travelers.

Paramount sent Lee Balsly, L. B. Flintom and Gerald Akers.

Mutual—F. L. Kiltz, manager; L. B. Douglas, manager Wichita Branch; D. M. Magers and Harry Young, travelers.

Fox was represented by E. H. Wacther, manager, and B. E. Edwards, representative.

The World Film Corporation sent Ted Morse and General sent E. M. Ware.

C. S. Edwards, Jr., manager; H. E. Jameyson, publicity man, and Fred Pickrel, representative, were at the convention in behalf of Pathe.

Kleine was represented by A. C. Melvin.

H. W. Gill was there for himself, selling machines, and C. D. Struble was getting business for the Monarch Feature Film Company.

Chas. Hardin, old time film man, manager, and "Bill" Warner, representative, was there to plug for Metro.

Among the prominent exhibitors present were Fred Savage, Hutchinson; Chris Glamann, Wellington; Roy Burford, Arkansas City; W. B. Moore, Galena; Lee Gunnison, Atchison; Harry Rogers, Marion, Kansas; Stanley Chambers, Wichita; T. K. Fredorvitz, Hays; C. F. Pattee, Lawrence; O. A. Ford, Wichita; Joe Girard, Arma, Kansas; O. A. Bandy, Pittsburg, Kansas; Dick Liggett, Kansas City; R. B. Biechle, Kansas City; Bill Meyn, Kansas City; Chas. Barron, Augusta, Kansas; Howard Dull, Augusta; J. J. Marshall, Manhattan; J. J. Filizola, Ft. Scott; W. R. Rowell, Eldorado; Wm. Giradot, Wilson, Kansas; C. B. Yost, Hutchinson, and F. J. Wanen, Leavenworth.

Fox Director Severely Burned

Oscar C. Apfel, who has directed nine of the fifteen Farnum photoplays, was burned severely about the hands and body last week in the filming of Farnum's last "western." The presence of water, plus that of mind, saved him from serious injury.

Mr. Apfel took his company of William Fox photoplayers from the Hollywood studio to the Silver Lake district above the San Bernadinos, about two hundred miles northeast of Los Angeles, for some night scenes in the new picture. One of the most dramatic situations in the photoplay is that in which a band of outlaws lock Farnum and Nell Shipman in a jail and then set fire to the building. The photographing of the blazing prison was responsible for the trouble. While the director was scurrying around to be certain everything was in readiness, he himself became drenched in the gasoline spraying.

Torches were then thrown into the building and as the flame roared up through the prison, the actors and spectators were horrified to see that Mr. Apfel, working with a firebrand, had caught the flames. His clothes flared up like a great candle, but before his friends could reach him, the director was groping and plunging as best he could, with eyes closed tight, toward the Silver Lake reservoir.

Fortunately, the water was only twenty or thirty feet away, and Mr. Apfel saved himself by leaping head foremost into the lake.

Something New—Futuristic Play

During the week of August 21 Vitagraph released two one-part photoplays on the General Film Program. A comedy from the Bay Shore Studio called "Did He or Did He Not?" and a decorative playlet from the Coast Division entitled "The Yellow Girl," were the pictures listed.

In "Did He or Did He Not?" William Lytell, Jr., plays the part of Adam Bluffer, an office clerk, with whom work is as agreeable as a visit from a bill collector.

Here's something new. Vitagraph's "The Yellow Girl" is a black and white futuristic impression.

Besides Mr. Lytell, Director Frank Iurrier employed the services of Shirley Moore, Dorothy Lang, Florence Natol and Ralph Whiting in the production of the picture.

"The Yellow Girl," was designed and produced by Edgar Keller with a cast of Western Vitagraphers that includes Webster Campbell, Carmen Phillips, Corrine Griffith, Florence Vidor and Alva D. Blake. So far as we know, it is an entirely new idea for it is the first of its kind we have ever seen. It might be termed a study in black and white with a tendency toward the futuristic. Mr. Keller, who is an artist of repute, not only supervised and assisted in the painting of the scenery used, but also designed the costumes worn in the piece. The clever little story has to do with the love affairs of an artist, a popular song writer and two models.

"Musty" Sticks

Harry Watson, Jr., who plays the title role in George Kleine's "The Mishaps of Musty Suffer," denies a report that he has returned to the legitimate stage. Mr. Watson emphatically states that he is in the picture game "for all time."

TO PRODUCE AND EXHIBIT

New $300,000 Motion Picture Producing, Releasing and Theater Owning Company Formed at Jacksonville, Florida

One of the most important recent movements affecting the motion picture industry in the south is that of the organization of the Southeastern Film Corporation in Jacksonville, Florida. This company will produce and release pictures as well as own a string of motion picture theaters in the states of Alabama, Georgia and Florida.

The corporation will be affiliated with the Garrick Studios Company, who will immediately start the erection of a large plant which will be capable of taking care of twelve companies at once. There has been a great demand in Jacksonville for a rental studio on account of the many producing companies visiting that city from New York and Chicago during the year. The erection of the studios by Mr. Garrick has been commented favorably upon by the managers of the Vim, Kalem, Gaumont, Eagle, Palm and U. S. companies who are now operating their own plants, and who declare this step should have been taken some time ago.

The officers and directors in the Southeastern Film Corporation are among the most prominent men in the state of Florida, and Richard Garrick, president of the Garrick Studios Company, is well known in the film world, having been supervising manager for all Gaumont studios in America prior to his resignation in the spring.

Those interested in the organization are: J. E. T. Bowden, Mayor of Jacksonville; Forrest Lake, president of the Seminole County bank; Judge H. B. Phillips, county judge of Duval county; W. R. Carter, editor of the Florida Metropolis; W. S. Hilands, president of the Florida Soft Phosphate and Lime Company, of New York; W. L. Whitehead, owner of a string of theaters; Jno. T. Alsop, Jr., president of the Jacksonville city council; and James R. Collins, treasurer of the Florida Abstract and Title Insurance Company.

Syd Visits Charlie

The former Chaplin has left New York for Los Angeles to visit his brother, a Mutual comedian.

Syd's errand in the west is principally a matter of outing and secondarily a matter of business, in that he is Charles' financial adviser. Charles is making a number of important investments and has considerable sums invested in a wide range of securities, including Anglo-French bonds, commonly known as "war loan."

Incidentally Syd's visit to Los Angeles is a further refutation of the gossip of picture scandal mongers to the effect that the brothers had "split."

Pickford Pictures Open to All

NO EXCLUSIVE SELLING SCHEME—TWENTY-FIVE BRANCHES TO BE ESTABLISHED

THE announcement that Mary Pickford had organized her own company for the production of better motion picture plays, has stirred up an unusual interest among exhibitors the country over. The office of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation at 729 Seventh avenue, New York, has already received hundreds of inquiries regarding the new films. Thus have the exhibitors of the United States attested their confidence in the personal and box-office magnetism of "Little Mary," who, as everyone knows, has millions of followers.

Every exhibitor in the United States may show in his theater the Mary Pickford productions of distinction and originality. Miss Pickford has said that she wants no bars erected against the exhibitor who is ambitious to improve the quality of his entertainment and clientele.

"We are carrying out her wishes to the letter," President Walter E. Greene adds. "It is to correct any misconception that there exists a favored class to whom Miss Pickford's pictures will be distributed that Artcraft emphasizes the statement that the field is open. Soon 25 branch managers will be combing their territory. All applications received at the main offices will be turned over to them in order of receipt and the man who has never shown a Pickford picture in his theater has just as much chance to have territorial protection as will his previously more fortunate competitor."

The universally beloved star whose name is a household word.

Close observers of the development of the film industry are unanimous in their opinion that no announcement of recent years has created such a response of spontaneous approval as Mary Pickford's determination to work alone, unhampered by restrictions of policy other than those traditions which she shall hereafter lay down as the result of her own artistic experiences and achievement. Mail and telegraph inquiries reach Artcraft in a steady chain. Eventually these applications will all be referred to the various branch managers, who are being recruited from the best known and most skillful film men in the sections which they will handle. In the light of his successful experience in the distribution of features Mr. Greene is confident that the system of putting Mary Pickford's pictures before the public will be most comprehensive and satisfactory to producers, distributors, exhibitors, and theater goers.

"In a short time the Mary Pickford Film Corporation will announce the character of the picture the star and her company are now working on," Mr. Greene says in conclusion. "I may not reveal the details now but I can say that this first production will set the highest standard for notable direction and acting of distinction. It will be a genuine master work, presenting Miss Pickford in a characterization that will increase the affection of her unprecedented following. We believe that its presentation will mark the beginning of a new era in motion pictures."

To which Miss Pickford adds briefly:

"I am working from sun-up to sundown in rehearsals and actual filming of scenes for my first very own release. These are long nights of study, too, but I don't mind because I have never had a role in which I was happier."

MAKERS OF PATHE FILMS

Three Balboa Directors—Henry King, Harry Harvey and Sherwood MacDonald—Produce Only for Pathe Program

The Balboa Company is among the best known of those companies which J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, has assembled under the proud title "Producers of Gold Rooster Plays." Three years ago when Pathe was still releasing through the General, Mr. Berst purchased from H. M. Horkheimer some of the very first photoplays which had been made under the Balboa mark. Since that time Balboa pictures have been almost continually upon the Pathe program.

It has been said that a director is more than half of a picture, yet he usually receives but little mention. Following out the Pathe policy of best authors for the stories, the most famous players in the casts and the highest quality of production, Mr. Berst has always insisted that the best directors only be put upon the pictures made for the Gold Rooster program. Three Balboa directors are identified with these Pathe productions.

Henry King, who first became famous as a star playing in Balboa pictures, by reason of his length of service with his company deserves first mention. Mr. King was one of Balboa's first players and it was only a little over a year ago that he joined the ranks of the directors. His education as an actor was gained in stock company work in Atlanta, Buffalo and New York. Then he went on the road for several seasons as leading man. During his summer vacation, three years ago, he was pressed into service by an eastern studio on a very few hours' notice to replace a player who had taken sick. He liked work before the camera so well that he has never returned to the stage. Coming to Balboa in July, 1913, he has remained in the employ of the Horkheimer Brothers ever since. First he played "leads," but he was advanced to stardom after a year.

For the last twelve months Henry King has been directing his own productions.

Bert Ensminger is Mr. King's assistant director, Joseph Brotherton, of the famous Brotherton family, is chief cameraman, and Jack Blake, assistant.

Harry Harvey, another Balboa director of Pathe Gold Rooster plays, resigned from the army to enter the motion picture game, then in its early infancy. He served his apprenticeship with the first company that made pictures on cards which were turned through a machine to get the effect of motion.

Mr. Harvey is one of the most experienced directors in filmdom. As an actor and stock producer, he learned the rudiments of the business. Since joining the Horkheimer Brothers at their Long Beach studio, he has put on some of the most notable things the screen has seen, such as the "Who Pays" series and the "Neal of the Navy" serial.

His crew is composed of Harry MacPherson, assistant director; Roland Groom, chief cameraman; Cullen Landis, assistant, all experts.

It was while practicing law in New York that Sherwood MacDonald, the third of Balboa's directors of Gold Rooster plays, was bitten by the moving picture bug.

At every studio where he applied for work at the directing game they looked him over and offered him a place in stock. It finally got on Mr. MacDonald's nerves and he went to work as an extra just to learn the technique of the game.

One day he appeared at the Balboa studio, Long Beach, and was put on in stock. This was the beginning of Mr. MacDonald's real career in the movies, for he manifested so much intelligence and resource that he attracted the attention of the Horkheimer Brothers and was very soon promoted to a directorship.

His big chance came when Pathe contracted with Balboa to film the great animated picture book "The Grip of Evil," and his deft touches and masterful management may be noted throughout the stupendous productions.

Mr. MacDonald gives much credit to his assistants for his success. They are: Assistant Director Jack Reach, Chief Cameraman William Beckway, assistant cameraman Jake Wiese.

Pathe Club "Outs" Again

The Pathe Club will soon have another outing. September 9th has been selected for the date and club members and their friends will go by auto to Coney Island where the afternoon will be spent in various amusements. Dinner and dancing have been arranged for at the Brighton Beach Casino.

This will be the third affair of the kind which the Pathe Club has had since J. A. Berst was elected president, and others are contemplated before the end of the year.

Ministers Condemn Children's Programs

BY M. L. SPARR

Manager, Village Theater, Wilmette, Illinois

IT PROBABLY seems almost unbelievable to those who are working for better films for children that an exhibitor who is willing and anxious to meet the public half way in this matter, and goes as far as to inaugurate the special matinee for the little ones as part of his regular program for the week, not only cannot get the support of these same people who advocate the movement but even is condemned for his efforts along this line. I say this probably seems almost unbelievable to the advocates of this special performance but I am sure that it seems most plausible to the exhibitors who have tried to cater to the public in this way.

My experience along this line is not an unusual one although it is probably an exaggeration of that of many of my fellow theatermen because my house is located in an exclusive suburb of a large city, and I have no competition. The commuters did not want me there in the first place and they fought valiantly against the theater being erected. They considered a motion picture house too plebian to be allowed within the bounds of their aristocratic demesne. But I will say in their defense that once established, although I have had to fight all kinds of opposition, they are now supporting the house and seem to enjoy the program I am furnishing them.

As soon as the people had decided that although I was a nuisance perhaps I was a necessary and not unpleasant nuisance—a committee of women from the Women's Club and the Parent-Teachers' Association waited upon me and asked that I run a special performance for the children. I was very anxious to please the people and get their good will and also I myself fully believed in these entertainments for the little folks, and knowing that the population of the town was made up to a great extent of children—and dogs—I consented very readily. I set aside Saturday morning for the children's hour and charged ten cents admission. The women were very enthusiastic about the proposition and were willing to co-operate with me in any way I desired. I pointed out that the chief difficulty was managing an audience composed of four hundred children, and the women agreed to have two or three chaperones, selected from their club members, present each Saturday morning to help look after the kiddies.

I went into the proposition with a will and scoured around to find subjects which I knew would delight the children—and I did not look for the goody-goody, namby pamby, teach-a-moral films that so many people think children thrive on for I knew from my experience as a showman that the younger generation does not like these; they want thrills as well as their parents, and it was the children I was striving to please. I chose a number of fairy stories, a historical film of the landing of Columbus, some cartoon comedies—which the kiddies always love—and some simple plays in which there was absolutely nothing that could be objectionable for children to see and would lead to no undesirable questions, and yet contained a punch. I advertised the performance extensively in the daily papers and also in the weekly sheet which I issue from my theater and the women told all their friends about it so that everyone in town knew the Village Theater was going to have an entertainment especially for the children on Saturday morning.

The result was all that could be desired, practically every child in town came and their mothers came with them, also the club women chaperones were present as they had promised. The performance was a great success—no one could ask for more either in the pleasure expressed by the children, the commendation of the mothers, the satisfaction of the club women, or the box office receipts. I looked forward to a season of extra profits and a strengthening of the good will of the mothers toward the theater.

But the second performance brought the same sad awakening that I find most managers have had who have been inveigled into this proposition of looking after the desires of the children. The attendance was absolutely cut in two on this second morning. The mothers did not come with the children. The chaperones did not appear. They said I managed the children so well that they did not think their presence was necessary.

And to cap the climax the following day from their pulpits the ministers preached against the special matinee for children. They condemned motion pictures in general and especially for children. They said that Saturday morning when the children were out of school that time should be spent in the homes with their mothers. They said they were much better out of doors than inside a theater seeing pictures which were not good for them to see—and I wager not one of those ministers was in my theater at either of those performances and did not know what the children were seeing.

I had fought all kinds of opposition to get my theater started in the first place and determined to fight this condemnation also for I felt that it was unjust and unwarranted. But after struggling along through four of the special programs when there was not a handful of children in the house, I capitulated, and the special program for children was no longer a part of my weekly program—I had given four entertainments of this kind and only one was a success. I discontinued the children's performance but no committee waited upon me and asked me to start them again, to try once more.

And what of the club women who had been so enthusiastic about these performances? Did they come forward and uphold me and stand by me? Did they wait upon the ministers who condemned me and say that they had agitated this movement because they believed it was for the good of their children? Did they point out that the program I was running was an education to the child and at the same time was giving them good, pure, wholesome entertainment? No. They kept closely in the background. They said not one word in my defense. They forgot about the co-operation they had promised me. They tried to forget themselves and help everyone else to forget that they had anything to do with the starting of this movement for better pictures for children.

The difficulty with the women is that they are faddists. They are very enthusiastic and full of ambition to start things but they will not stand by the scheme and see it through. The trouble is not with the little folks. If left alone they would support the entertainment. They enjoy the performances at which they know they are going to see pictures which they will enjoy and not have to sit through long stories which they do not understand, but the parents instead of encouraging them in this rather repress them. Perhaps it is inconvenient to get them ready Saturday morning, or they live too far from the theater to go alone and there is no one to take them over, so they have to stay at home. Any trivial excuse is sufficient to keep them at home.

After I decided that the children's program certainly was not a success in my house I tried the plan of letting the parents know on which nights I showed pictures which were especially suitable for children, thinking this would allow them to be their own censors and use their own judgment whether or not to bring the small folks with them. In my weekly program I marked the pictures which the children would especially enjoy, those which were not objectionable but might not interest them, and those which it was better they should not see. This was all very fine for a while, the mothers approved of the plan and at the same time the children were getting something out of the program. But there came a night when I ran a film which I did not think was a very good one for little folks to see. It was not a pink slip play by any means but there were scenes which I did not think it was especially good for children to witness and I let the parents know by putting a line in the program to the effect that it was not suitable for children. And my good intentions brought a hornet's nest about my ears. The very idea of foisting disreputable pictures upon my audience. A manager who would show pictures of that class ought to be run out of town. They would put me out of business if I did not run clean pictures.

I then and there, once and forever, washed my hands of any responsibility in the solution of the problem of the child and the motion pictures. I shifted all the burden upon the shoulders of the parents. They could be their own censors for their own children. I am very fond of children and I like to see them happy and getting what they want but my efforts along this line all seemed to be in vain.

However, there was one great good which arose from the turmoil. The patrons had seemed to me to be chronic kickers. Although I tried to please them I did not seem to be able to satisfy them. But after this attempt at running children's performances they appeared to realize that I was trying to please them, that I did follow out their suggestions to the best of my ability, and I guess it also dawned on them that they had been unreasonable and perhaps they did not know what they wanted themselves. At any rate since that time I have had very few kicks. There is a much better feeling of good will and contentment than there has ever been before. And I am glad of my rather unpleasant experience along this line if it has brought about this co-operation and feeling of good fellowship between my patrons and myself for which I have been striving.

No, this is not the village fire department getting a new engine. It's the apparatus secured by Signal from a near-by city for several big scenes in the coming Helen Holmes Mutual Star production. Director Husband J. P. McGowan is seen in the foreground bossing the unloading job.

Motion Picture Forum Formed

Charles R. Macauley, a political cartoonist, has started a campaign to bring the 20,000 motion picture screens of the country closer to the lives of the people. It is his intention to provide the exhibitors with a means of reaching out for a new public, one that has not before been attracted to the film theaters to any great extent. At the same time, it is expected that a new interest will be created for all which will place the motion picture screen on a plane of national usefulness along with the press, the book and the public speaking platform.

In line with this idea Mr. Macauley and his associates have incorporated the Motion Picture Forum and through the organization several pictures embodying the forum idea will be presented within the next month.

Mr. McCauley does not think enough attention is paid to the topics of the day on the screen and he makes an appeal to the exhibitors to dedicate fifteen minutes of their programs at least three days of each week to the service of their patrons by opening wide their screens to the discussion of topics of national interest. He believes that the public will respond by a generous increase of patronage and that a new theater-going public will be created.

Wallace MacDonald Lost in New York

Wallace MacDonald, who plays the juvenile lead with Mary Miles Minter in the six reel Mutual feature "Youths Endearing Charm," has arrived in New York and claims that he has had at least one hour of sleep each night he has been here, which is a passable record considering that this is his first visit to the "big village."

Mr. MacDonald made an extensive vacation of his trip and included a ten-day jaunt to his home in Halifax, Nova Scotia, a surprise visit to his mother who lives there.

By request he will appear at the intial showing of the aforementioned feature at Loew's New York Theater, Broadway and 45th street, Monday evening, September 4. Mr. MacDonald has received several favorable offers for New York engagements, and may remain here even though he claims that California has a wonderful hold on him.

Bonus Checks for Pathe Exchanges

One reason why Pathe's branches report such splendid business is that twenty of them have just gotten bonus checks. Here are the lucky ones: New York, Newark, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Washington, Cincinnati, Detroit, Milwaukee, St. Louis, New Orleans, Dallas, Kansas City, Omaha, Des Moines, Denver, Salt Lake City, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland and Seattle.

Antoinette Walker, who plays in support of Henry B. Walthall in "The Sting of Victory," five-act Essanay feature, has been asked to appear with David Warfield in a revival of "The Music Master," in which the two made such a hit some seasons ago.

What Theater Men Are Doing

AN OPEN FORUM

This is a department of, by and for exhibitors. We want YOU represented here. Other managers and proprietors of picture theaters want to hear YOUR experiences, your opinions and your advice. Write to this department telling us your story, how you started, how you grew and all about your theater and how you manage it. Mention your advertising methods and your lobby displays. If possible send in photographs of yourself and your house. Address, The Forum, MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago.

A "Comment" Contest

BY BRUCE GODSHAW
Manager, Cosmopolitan Theater, Chicago, Illinois.

FROM my many years of experience as a motion picture exhibitor and my study of both the managers and the patrons, I have come to the conclusion that the chief difficulty with most of the theater men is that they are not students of human nature. The manager should study his people individually and collectively. He should find out what they like and dislike. He should know what will arouse their interest and hold their patronage. And then he should make a direct appeal to the individual.

People everywhere are alike from the standpoint that they are always pleased to get something for nothing and they are anxious for individual glory and publicity. Taking these two characteristics into consideration, I devised a scheme which has been very successful in my theater in increasing the attendance, arousing competition among the patrons, and so holding their interest. I advertised in my program and also on my screen that I wanted criticisms on the theater, the way it was managed, the programs shown, any discourtesy of the employees, and suggestions for the bettering of these conditions.

The criticisms or suggestions were to be sent in in the form of a letter to the manager and the following prizes were offered each week for the best comment:

First prize, $2.00.
Second prize, $1.00.
Third prize, $1.00.

The prize winning comments to be published each week in the neighborhood newspaper.

Every comment received, whether winning a prize or not, entitled the writer to two free admissions to the theater.

This was a direct appeal to each person's egotism. They were getting something for nothing; they liked to feel that their opinion was important enough for consideration by the management; they were anxious to have the honor of winning the prize over the other competitors; they liked the publicity given them in the neighborhood paper; the prize money could be used for some little unexpected pleasure; and if they didn't win a prize at least they received two free admissions to the theater.

The people responded readily to this appeal. Many letters were received each week, a number of really helpful suggestions were made, and at the same time the theater was being extensively advertised, people came to the theater who had never attended before and some new regular patrons were the result.

As soon as a comment was received in this contest the following postal card was sent to the writer:

We hereby acknowledge receipt of your "Comment." We are sincerely pleased to have you present this card, which permits you and one other to attend any performance, at this theater as our guest. Assuring you that your "Comment" will receive consideration, sooner or later, and thanking you for same, we are appreciatively, Ascher Bros., Cosmopolitan Theater.

Good any day except Saturday, Sunday or Holiday.

Of course there were a great many of these suggestions and criticisms which were worth nothing at all but some were very valuable. For example a man wrote in and said that as he was riding by on the elevated train it looked to him as if the large sign which hangs out over the sidewalk in front of the theater was sagging on one side, as though some of the supports were weakening. He apologized for this suggestion, saying that it might be simply an optical illusion caused by the swiftly moving train. An investigation proved that one of the supporting chains was loose and a serious accident might have resulted from the falling of the sign. Needless to say he received first prize for his "comment" that week.

Some of the things the people picked out to criticise may contain suggestions to other exhibitors.

One letter shows the value of courtesy:

I like your theater because the attaches make me feel as though they were pleased to have me come there. Passing from the sunny, smiling face at the ticket window to the ticket taker and on to the ushers, I have the consciousness that here are people who really like to see me walk in. At so many places one is herded around and "bawled" at like so much cattle, but not at the Cosmopolitan. That is one reason why the mile and a half walk down there is a mere trifle.

Should cater to the automobile trade:

As a regular attendant at your show I feel privileged to kick once in a while. May I inquire why Mary Pickford is always billed for Sunday? Those who own machines do not have a show of seeing these for we are never willing in good weather to be home, when roads are good, etc. Would like to have a chance at these plays. Also a few of the pious might be better satisfied to have some other day to see Mary. Think this over. Also run a little mite slower off the reel if you have no objections.

Children sometimes annoy:

I have always felt comfortable in the Cosmopolitan, and at home. The ventilation is first class. I think the place is conducted almost without fault except in one or two cases at which children predominated in the audience. Then there was rather too much talking and other noise, but such cases are so rare as to be hardly worth notice.

Appreciate thoughtfulness of manager:

I wish to thank you for the courtesy shown my family several weeks ago on an occasion when they were in your theater and it rained hard and the folks were not aware of the fact. Their auto was at the entrance with the top down. When they came out the top was up and the machine kept dry. You will see my little Henry (Ford) in front of your theater about three nights a week.

An interesting fact in connection with these comments is that two or three of the best criticisms have come from children. They seem to be much more cynical than the elders and no detail however small escapes them. By sifting the wheat from the chaff in these epistles the manager is able to get a pretty good idea of the average opinion of his theater, and also discover just what the people like. This is a simple plan but an effective one, and it very often is the rule that the simplest things bring the best results.

Theater Produces Star

The Victoria Theater of Rochester, New York, has placed a new star in the film skies.

Last May, Manager J. J. Farren and other officials of the Rochester Theater Company arranged a popularity contest. The winner, Miss Corrine Parquet, was given an opportunity to work in a Keystone comedy to prove that she is not only popular with Rochester folk but also has ability as an actress. The young lady developed so rapidly into a real comedienne that she has been given a place opposite Roscoe Arbuckle in Keystonery. "The Millionaire's Wife" is the first picture which shows the Rochester girl in a strong part.

Exhibitors See Production

Four successful Triangle exhibitors from Northern California were among the interested visitors who this week inspected the new half million dollar producing plant of the Thomas H. Ince forces at Culver City. They are Emil Korhlein and his son, Emil, Jr., who operate the Fresno Kinema Theater of Fresno, California; William Southern, proprietor of the Grand Theater, Bellingham, Washington, and Rex Midgley, who controls the Franklin Theater of Oakland, California. All expressed astonishment at the magnitude of the plant and declared that they had no idea of the tremendous expense involved in the making of Ince Triangle plays.

"I always have recognized ostentation in the Ince plays," said Korhlein, senior, "but never did I imagine that you required practically an entire city in itself which this plant seems to be."

STANDARD ADDS HOUSES

Richards and Flynn Join Company and Add Wonderland and Richland Theaters to Their Possessions

The Standard Amusement Company of Kansas City has been enlarged by the entrance into the company of Richards and Flynn, proprietors of the Wonderland and Richland Theaters. The Standard Amusement Company sold their Tenth Street Theater to C. G. Bard, and Richards and Flynn sold their Subway a few weeks before the merger.

E. E. Ennesser continues to handle the Twelfth Street and Palace theaters for the company and Richards and Flynn continue to run the Wonderland and Richland, the latter, however, is showing only Saturday and Sunday during the summer, and will be redecorated before fall.

The Twelfth Street and Palace have been run as five-cent houses but recently the former has been putting on features Saturday and Sunday and charging ten cents and is getting good business under the new rule.

"Philo in Philms"

William Steiner, general manager of the Serial Film Company, which produced "The Yellow Menace," has secured through Mrs. C. C. Wilkenning all photoplay rights to Ellis Barker Butler's "Philo Gubb, the Rising Sun Corrospondence School Deteckative" in twelve lessons, and will release it through a well known distributing company. Mr. Edwin Stevens will appear as "Philo," the Riverbank paper hanger and decorator who combines "deteckating," as he terms it, with his other trades. Pierce Kingsley will picturize and direct the series, three of which are now ready for the screen.

Changes in Universal Exchanges

When the last of the Chicago convention delegates returned to New York City, a gold watch was presented to him by two bodies of men, over whom he exercises general managership. This delegate was M. H. Hoffman, and the reason for his late appearance was the fact that he had been engaged in taking over the Laemmle and Powers exchanges for the Universal. The splendid watch was presented jointly by the exchange managers of the Universal, who met in Chicago, and the Bluebird exchanges represented there. On the back is a combination of the two emblems, an orange enamel U, and a blue enamel bluebird flying through it.

Here are the latest correct facts regarding Universal.

E. H. Goldstien will retain his office as assistant general manager of the Universal exchanges. Art Schmidt, of the Victor Film Service of Buffalo, will be district manager of the Eastern division, with principal offices at Buffalo, Albany, Syracuse, Rochester, Pittsburg, Cleveland and Wheeling, W. Va. His headquarters will be at Buffalo. M. L. Markowitz has charge of all the exchanges west of Denver. R. C. Cropper, district manager of the Intermountain Division, has his principal offices at Kansas City, Oklahoma City, Wichita, Fort Smith, Omaha, St. Louis and Cairo, while George W. Weeks, district manager of the Central Division, has his chain of offices at Detroit, Grand Rapids, Toledo, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Cleveland and Louisville.

The South will be under the management of William Oldknow, whose principal offices are located at Atlanta, New Orleans, Dallas, Memphis, Jacksonville, San Antonio and El Paso. Maurice Fleckles has the important territory lying directly about Chicago, with his principal distributing centers located in Chicago, Minneapolis, Des Moines, and their several branch offices. Several exchanges purchased by Universal, which were not included in the previous announcements, are the Rex Exchange of Albany; Central Film Service, Louisville, Kentucky; Victor Film Service, Rochester, New York; Victor Film Service, Syracuse, New York; Colonial Film Exchange, Sioux City, Iowa; Laemmle Film Service, Davenport, Iowa; Cincinnati Buckey Film Company, Charleston, West Virginia, and Laemmle Film Service, of Fargo, North Dakota.

Mendel Joins Universal

Deserting the vaudeville stage, where he has been a well known figure for a great many years, Jules Mendel has joined the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, and will appear in comedies with Al Frank, another well known actor.

The comedian will be directed by M. L. Forrester, with Viola Lind as leading lady. They will start work on a one reel comedy.

Rolin Director Hal Roach, who turns out comedies for Pathe, has returned to Los Angeles from New York.

Enemies Against Which the Picture Must Prepare

THAT motion pictures have made vast inroads upon the profits of the liquor trade, by the simple process of substituting a wholesome for an unwholesome entertainment, is a well established fact. The bitter complaints of the liquor people alone would reveal the condition, even if we lacked police reports and general statistics on the subject.

There is reason for much gratification in this condition, since no one without prejudice will deny that picture shows are better for society than liquor. The vote of the women and children on this question is particularly strong.

But pleasing as is the sense of well-doing that accompanies this work of uplift, this gradual undermining of the liquor establishment, it must be recognized that the motion picture has unwittingly made enemies whose political power is not to be lightly reckoned.

The motion picture has strictly minded its own business. In that it has been singularly unlike the press, though press-like in its ability to throw the white light of publicity upon offending institutions. In its power, indeed, it out-presses the press; only its unconsciousness of its strength has encouraged attack by those who have had good reason to object to its progress.

The liquor interests claim that the motion picture has maligned them, has gone out of its way to depict the "evil side" of liquor—inferring, of course, that there is a good side. That claim is not true. Beyond the few isolated examples that were screened because their story was attractive, the motion picture has never attacked any institution, good or bad. Some day it will and then its real strength will be revealed; but as yet it has not.

What harm the pictures have worked upon liquor has been the result of natural evolution. It has been the cleanest kind of competition—the gift to the people of something they liked better and knew was better for them.

Naturally, however, the justice of the case does not interest the liquor people. Overtaken by calamity, or at least its threatening shadow, their only thought is retaliation.

Because the picture's injury to the saloon has been wholly unpremeditated and without study, the picture interests are not conscious of the liquor people's malice. It is doubtful if any of the film men who are so busy with the problems of their own product realize what a virulent brand of opposition they have put to work.

The liquor business is one of the largest industries of the country. The value of its retail trade approaches two and a half billions of dollars a year. It is a business that, constantly subjected to attack, is constantly prepared for war. It uses its vast resources for the unremitting control of legislatures, city councils and influential politicians. The ramifications of its system extend from the tax makers to the bench. Its methods of gaining its ends are subtle and ruthless, and it has a long arm.

When the federal tax on pictures was inserted in the revenue bill before Congress, the liquor interests frankly appropriated credit for it. Whether they were entitled to credit or not, they showed their hand, with a knife in it. That the pressure of their political influence has already been felt by more than one board of censorship is also a matter of knowledge.

That the liquor interests will not stop at any measure that promises to harass, embarrass, and impoverish the motion picture interests, we may be assured. The campaign of persecution that the liquor people are alleged to be planning is apt to show its horns in strange places.

So widespread is the political and financial organization of the clan that the diagnosis of all future troubles of the picture industry, be they classified as unjust legislation, unreasonable taxation, arbitrary censorship or stringent regulation, must consider liquor as the possible disease behind the visible symptoms.

The good fortune of the motion picture is that it needs neither defense nor defender. Whatever criticism of its weaker phases may be afloat among the busy idle of society, the net result of its works has been wholly for good. Its fault has been an over-generosity that gave the public all it craved and saved nothing for the strengthening of its own industrial fortifications.

It is needful now that the motion picture be used to demonstrate the strength of the motion picture!

The press of the United States has never been successfully attacked—cannot be successfully attacked. The press is its own defender, its own weapon. Yet in all respects the motion picture potentially is stronger than the press, stronger than any agency of publicity that has ever been conceived. When will it take stock of its power and learn its own possibilities?

Will it emulate this great, luxurious nation of ours, and wait for some fateful emergency before it looks in the powder horn?

Only the enemies of the picture—made enemies by a sense of its potentiality — realize what it can do to them when it awakens. They are praying that it will not awaken—and working hard to make its sleep permanent.

If There Is a Railroad Strike

A GENERAL tie-up of transportation lines would affect the motion picture industry quite seriously. The same thing may be said, however, of all other industries; and on the whole the picture industry would probably be better off than many—at least from the exhibitor's standpoint.

With the railroads practically out of commission, the transportation of films from the producer to the distributor would necessarily be interrupted. The shipping rooms of the producers deal with long distances, of which the railroads have a monopoly. It is a foregone conclusion that new films would be at a premium in the event of such a strike as the railway employes appear to contemplate, and release dates might be expected temporarily to lose their significance.

But even that extreme calamity, which we all devotedly hope may be avoided, would not necessarily mean dark houses for a majority of the exhibitors. Most of the exchanges have enough old stock in their vaults to make up programs for their customers for a considerable period of time.

The transportation of films from the exchanges to the theaters, while of course it presents difficulties, is not wholly dependent upon the railroads. In a crisis it will be discovered that a good many states—nearly all of the densely populated ones—have remarkable networks of trolley lines, with which arrangements for the shipment of films could be made.

Out of Chicago it is possible to reach by interurban electric most of the important towns in the service radius, including all of the "North Shore," most of Indiana and part of Michigan, as well as the country west, northwest and southwest for a hundred miles or more. The New England states are literally honeycombed with electric car lines; indeed, the list of localities so served might be carried on to fill a page or more.

And then, of course, there is the flivver, which we have always with us. There may not be much profit to the exchanges in delivering and calling for films by auto; but the main thing is to keep the show going. That fact is thoroughly appreciated by the distributors, as we all know, and the exhibitors may rest assured that they will leave no stone unturned to see that service is maintained, strike or no strike.

"Split Reel" Notes for Theater Men

HOW OTHERS ARE STEERING THE SHIP

THE inhabitants of Huntington, Indiana, are more exercised than the exhibitors over the fact that motion picture theaters are closed on Sunday, and in all parts of the town there has been lively discussions regarding this much-mooted question.

At Atlantic, Iowa, the picture theaters will show films on Sunday for the first time in the history of Atlantic.

Elliott-Sherman's interest in the Independent Film Corporation of Minneapolis has been purchased by Nelson & Moor and others interested.

A. J. Lang, the genial and aggressive representative of the Nicholas Power Company, has returned from a vacation spent in the Catskill Mountains.

Henry Ford has nominated Thomas Ince as a likely candidate for the bestowal of the Nobel peace prize, because of his production of "Civilization."

Mr. and Mrs. Henry J. Breilein of the Faust, Verdi and Victoria theaters, St. Paul, Minn., recently entertained all their employees at a picnic at Lake Josephine.

M. E. Maxwell and E. S. Flynn, who have long been associated with the Minneapolis branch of the V-L-S-E as road men, have severed their connection with that office.

John C. Moore, formerly with the Feature Film Company, St. Paul, Minnesota, has accepted a position as manager of the Independent Film Corporation of Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

Of 794 reels of motion pictures viewed by the Board of Censors in Portland, Oregon, during July only seven were condemned. The 794 reels represented 372 subjects and eliminations were required in 16 subjects.

The United Film Company is planning to open branches all over the west especially for the booking of "The Yellow Menace." Offices are already established at Kansas City, St. Louis, Denver and San Francisco.

A lecture descriptive of the Knight sleeve valve motor illustrated by motion pictures made by the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, is being given in various cities throughout the country by Harry H. Hower of the Willys-Overland company.

The Ohio Bankers' Association, which meets in Columbus, Ohio, will be entertained with a motion picture entitled "Story of a Dollar," which tells the story of the manufacture of a dollar and traces its journeying up and down the country.

A. W. Goff, assistant manager of the V-L-S-E, has returned to New York after a tour of the Big Four branches in Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis, where conferences were held with the sales forces and comprehensive plans laid for fall business.

The newly formed Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., received its charter from the New York Secretary of State, August 16. The incorporators and their affiliations are: Arthur James, of Metro; Carl Peirce, Morosco; E. Lanning Masters, V. L. S. E.; Harry Reichenbach, Frohman, and E. Richard Schayer, Selznick.

Jones, Linick and Schaefer, through their experiment with the Studebaker Theater, Chicago, Illinois, have proved that the double feature program is very popular with the public. The business has been growing rapidly and capacity audiences are the rule at the Studebaker now.

The branch managers of the V-L-S-E- seem to be very enthusiastic members of the screen clubs as four of them are at the head of this organization in as many cities including E. R. Pearson of Kansas City; C. E. Holah of Cincinnati; Frank B. Spurrier of Washington; and C. E. Shurtleff of Cleveland.

C. E. Carragher, motion picture theater proprietor at Clear Lake, Iowa, arrested for running his theater Sunday, filed information against every class of business open last Sunday, including druggists, confectioners, garages, restaurant keepers and the band hired by the citizens to give concerts all summer. Forty informations in all were filed.

Leo Appel, well-known among exhibitors in New York, is now assistant manager and treasurer of Fox's Audubon Theater. Mr. Appel became connected with the Plaza Theater in 1912 as treasurer. After six months he became manager, which title he held until his Fox affiliation. The Audubon Theater is the largest theater on the Fox circuit.

J. P. Nevils, secretary, has announced that motion pictures of Washington state institutions will be a new feature at the Western Washington fair this year. The state board of control has had 3,000 feet of film taken this summer showing buildings, vocations, recreations and industries, which will be shown daily in a room in the educational building with a seating capacity of 500.

The Chicago committee on ventilation found that the relative humidity of indoor air should be from 40 per cent to 75 per cent. The "comfort zone" is about 64 degrees Fahrenheit, with a relative humidity of 55 per cent. If the humidity is less the temperature demanded rises toward 70 degrees. Naturally economy in heating is closely related to the maintenance of about 55 per cent relative humidity which may be secured by the use of free steam or water sprays in the air intake.

The Publicity Film Company has been incorporated to take commercial motion pictures. The officers of the corporation are F. Holmboe, of Bismarck, N. D., and Alfred Andresen of Minneapolis. The company will make moving pictures of North Dakota celebrations and historical events to be used in the encouragement of immigration. Mr. Holmboe, who was official photographer of the Norway Centennial celebration, will do the photography work.

A fight is now being waged in Shelbyville, Kentucky, to keep all motion picture theaters on the ground floor. The only picture house in Shelbyville is located on the second floor and the City Council is planning to refuse a renewal of the license which is soon to expire. The excuse is advanced that there is greater danger to the public in case of fire when a theater is located on the second floor.

The branch of the American Federation of Catholic Societies, with headquarters in Milwaukee, has started a crusade against motion picture theaters which show vulgar and suggestive plays. A committee composed of Otto P. Seifriz, president of the Milwaukee County Federation; Prof. R. J. O'Hanlon, and Dr. Henry J. Gramling will investigate these types of theaters in this city, and if inquiry shows that the plays presented here are injurious to young people the committee will take action in courts and legislative bodies if necessary to stop these performances.

For the purpose of developing a machine for the cleaning of motion pictures, a patent for which has been applied for by the inventor, Maurice S. Rosenfeld, of Elizabeth, N. J., and is now pending, papers of incorporation for the Kleanwell Film Machine Company, 215 Broad street, were filed on August 10 in the Union County Clerk's office. The capital is $20,000 and Judge Abe J. David is the agent. Mr. David believes that the process will prove superior to any heretofore used for cleaning films. Elizabeth Robertson of New York, Messrs. Rosenfeld and David and John A. Schwartz are the incorporators.

The Quebec Board of Censors is rigidly enforcing the bi-lingual order demanding that all films displayed in Montreal theaters bear titles and subtitles in both English and French. Some of the exchangemen have complained that this will mean an added cost of $175 to $200 for a film of ordinary length, but the board states that the film manufacturers claim that it will cost but six or seven cents per foot per subtitle, and would not mean more than twenty-five dollars or fifty at the very most. This is the cost of the initial film and other films may be made with only the ordinary cost of the film.

V-L-S-E Pals tells a good story of the popularity of E. H. Roth, proprietor of the Portola Theater, San Francisco. A story and cut of Mr. Roth recently appeared in the Big Four house organ and the picture was cut out, pasted on a postal card and simply the address San Francisco, California, added. The card was delivered to Mr. Roth after 25 employees at the post office had all said they recognized the picture but could not locate the individual and finally one man mentioned the Portola Theater. Mr. Roth sent enough passes to Uncle Sam's employees to pay them for attesting to his fame.

Motion pictures have become a bull argument on the munition shares. At least one stock market trader is basing his bullishness on this class of securities on what he has seen on the screen. He says that photography cannot lie (he apparently does not know the ins and outs of the moving picture business) and that therefore when he sees a motion picture showing billions, he estimates, of all sorts and descriptions of war material ready for shipment from this country his profits on the bull side of the war issues run into big figures. And when he sees on the screen also millions upon millions, he estimates, of the soldiers of England and France marching to the front he figures nothing can stop more millions upon millions of money coming to this country for the guns and shells which will be used up by those vast armies.

Maintaining that the order barring children under sixteen from motion picture houses is discriminatory and unreasonable, in that the Bureau of Health allows children to collect in playgrounds, Sunday schools and other places without molestation, W. H. Yonker, manager of the Fifty-sixth Street Motion Picture Theater, New York, is allowing children under sixteen years to enter his house. Mr. Yonker posted a sign when Director Krusen issued the order regarding the picture houses, notifying the public that children under sixteen years would not be admitted. When he saw, however, that children were meeting on playgrounds, in Sunday schools and swimming pools and at picnics and in other places, he came to the conclusion that the order as it applied to motion picture houses was discriminatory. He then removed the sign and now allows many children, most of whom are accompanied by their parents, to enter the theater.

Vitagraph Comedies on General

Vitagraph releases on the General Film program for the second week of September consist of two one-part comedies.

Mary Anderson in "It's a Bear," from the pen of Mark Swan and produced by Dave Smith, starts off the week.

Hughie Mack again lives up to his reputation of laugh-maker in "A Villainous Villain," the latest effort of the Graham Baker-Lawrence Semon combination of authors and produced by Semon. Hughie as a detective goes through an awful deal at the hands of a villainous gang, but comes out on top when an auto filled with the lawless ones goes to the bottom of the ocean. Even in the water's depth they "pull off some dirty work."

Exhibitors Plan Film Ball

Lee A. Ochs, acting for the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, has signed a contract with the manager of Madison Square Garden, New York City, for the use of the hall on Thanksgiving eve. At that time a motion picture ball of huge proportions will be given by the New York branch of the league under the auspices of the national organization. The committee in charge is composed of Mr. Ochs, Louis Blumenthal, L. L. Levine, Samuel Trigger, Isaac Harstall and others. A portion of the proceeds of the ball will be donated to the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry as the first present of the Exhibitors' League to the new trade organization.

Anti-Vice Film Approved

Lieutenant Dan Costigan, the members of his vice squad, Dr. C. H. Parkhurst, officials of several societies interested in the welfare of unfortunate girls and of the American Federation of Catholic Societies, now in conference in New York, have expressed unequivocal approval of the first production of the Anti-Vice Motion Picture Company.

This company has just been organized for the purpose of assisting in the fight against the white slave traffic.

First Aid to Theater Men

BY S. L. ROTHAPFEL

NOW that the fall is almost upon us and the young people will be going back to school the exhibitors will find quite a falling off among the children at the evening performances during the week as many of the parents do not want the younger members of the family to be out any night except Friday, when school is in session. Of course this means more seats to be sold at ten cents but it may also mean more seats left vacant at five cents. Why not turn these vacant five-cent seats into a nickel apiece profit by running some special attraction for the children on Friday evening when they are allowed to come to the theater? I do not mean to make the program one especially for children but see that on that night you have a feature which would not be objectionable for them, and run a special subject of one or two reels which will especially please them. It might be a comedy or a fairy story or an extravaganza of some kind —but it must have a direct appeal to the child. You need not fear that the adults will object to this plan because you will find in nine cases out of ten the older people enjoy this class of pictures fully as much as the children do. They enjoy the fairy tales. They take them back to their childhood days and the stories they used to read and the characters whom they loved.

Try out this scheme. I think you will find, as have many others who experimented with it, that it will prove very attractive and your house on Friday nights will be just as good as it is on Saturday.

58—Bathing suit girls may be very artistic on the cover of a magazine but I can't say that I see anything very beautiful about them—or men either—in a motion picture theater. But my house has been filled with practically nothing else this summer. The bathing beach is just at the foot of the street on which my theater is located and about two blocks away and it has become quite the fad to stop in for the last show on the way home. I haven't dared to say anything because a good share of them are regular patrons and I don't want to make them mad. I am afraid though that it will lower the tone of my house for anyone coming in and seeing a whole house full of people in all kinds of costumes, is liable to think there is something queer about the place. I started to put up a sign that no one in a bathing suit was allowed in the theater and went as far as having the sign printed but then got cold feet and was afraid to put it up. It does make it nice though to have a full house almost every night for the last performance.

With a summer as hot as this one has been I imagine your problem is one which has had to be met by a number of exhibitors who are anywhere near bodies of water. But how many hundreds of managers do you think there are who envy you this patronage? A great majority of the exhibitors are objecting because they have such very poor attendance during the summer and a large number of them have to close their houses entirely because they cannot even make expenses. It seems to me that in your case the bathing beach has rather solved the problem of getting summer business instead of presenting a problem to worry over. Many exhibitors are objecting to beaches for exactly the opposite reason. They claim that the people do not care to be any place but at the beach during these hot nights and consequently they cannot get them to come inside their theaters. Fate has certainly played into your hands in that the popular fancy has just happened to include the winding up at the picture show after the evening spent on the beach and I would look at it this way rather than as an affliction.

I do not doubt but that the audience is a motley crew in their abbreviated and variegated garbs but I do not believe this will necessarily harm the reputation of your house in any way.

You will find that most of the world is at play in the summer and in the neighborhood of the bathing beach everyone is so well accustomed to the sight of bathers on the streets leading to the beach that they no longer notice it and will quickly recognize why your audience is not garbed in the conventional fashion.

There may be an objection from the standpoint of the damp clothes of the bathers working havoc with your seats. Here you may have a real problem to deal with according to the kind of upholstery you use. If there is any feasible way of overcoming this difficulty—if it exists at all—I would do so, and hang out the sign "All bathers welcomed" instead of "No one in a bathing suit admitted." This may be a blessing in disguise, but nevertheless I believe your net profit for the summer will show that it is rather a blessing than a disaster.

59—I have been a ticket seller in a motion picture theater for the last year and now the boss has fired me because he thinks that a girl would be better in that position. He says it is because some of the patrons have complained that I was a grouch and won't give them the information they want but I know it is because he wants to put a girl in. I told him it was a funny thing that the regular theaters always had a man in the box office and they seem to have all the business they want. I am sure I have answered all the reasonable questions the people have asked but no one person could answer all the fool questions that they come back with three and four times so I just appear too busy to answer those—they are not worth answering anyway because most of them don't mean anything. I would just like to know your opinion as to whether a girl is as good as a man at the ticket window because the boss always reads your department in MOTOGRAPHY and I know he would be convinced that what you say is right. You see I would rather keep this job here where I have been than look for a new one and I would like to get him to take me back.

I certainly appreciate your compliment in the assertion that the "boss" has great confidence in my judgment, but I am afraid under those circumstances you would not like to show him what my opinion on this question really is, for I agree with him that a girl is much better than a man in the ticket booth of a motion picture theater, and one of the principal reasons why she is better than a man is that she has more patience and will answer all the "fool questions" and not just those that seem worthy of an answer. I am perfectly willing to admit that these questions are exceedingly annoying and very unreasonable but at the same time the very fact that you do not make the inquirer believe that all you are there for is to answer questions of this kind is liable to make an enemy for your house—or at least a discontented patron. The first representative of the theater with whom the public comes in contact is the ticket seller—they gain the first impression of the management of the house and the courtesy or lack of courtesy which will be shown them from his attitude. And if they are not given the attention which they think is due them they will carry the resentment into the house and be in a mood to find fault with everything that appears on the program. You have made a dissatisfied customer, when every effort should be exerted to satisfy all coming to your house no matter how unreasonable and erratic their demands may be.

The principle of having a girl in the ticket booth is rather a case, I believe, of following in the beaten path. The theaters started out with this practice and so all follow. There is, however, a certain attractiveness about a girl, especially if a pretty one is chosen, that helps to give a good impression of the house.

I am sorry that you have lost your position and hope that the manager will take you back if you so desire. I am afraid, however, that like too many of us you have locked the stable door after the house is stolen. If you have been in the habit of ignoring the questions showered upon you and have gained the reputation of being a "grouch" it is going to be hard, uphill work to lose that misnomer. The time to get rid of that was before it was fastened upon you. Even though you do change your manner it will be some time before those people whom you have antagonized by your attitude so that they have gone to another theater will be convinced that you really have changed your policy. It will be much easier for you to start out fresh in another position and never let the same appellation be rightfully applied to you. Check this loss of your position up to experience, with a little declaration on the side that it will be the last time you will ever be dismissed on this same charge.

60—Is there any law or theater ordinance or any authority of any kind whereby I can keep negroes out of my theater? I have had a great deal of trouble lately because of the attendance of negroes and on several occasions some of my oldest patrons have left because a colored person came in and sat next to them. I do not want them in the audience but I do not know how to keep them out, or whether there is any authority to back me if I exclude them.

I think you will find that in no state or city—with possible exceptions in the south—is there any ordinance whereby negroes may be excluded from the theaters. They have as much right there under the law as the white people, and they have a right to be treated just as courteously as the white people. There are ways, however, of getting around this matter without any trouble or seeming friction. The negroes as a race are docile and not apt to assert themselves. You cannot refuse them entrance to the theater if they come up and buy a ticket but you can place them in the theater so that the other patrons will not object. If you have a balcony set one portion of this aside for the negroes so that they will be segregated. Then instruct your ushers that all colored people are to be seated in that portion of the balcony. Give instructions that they are to be treated courteously but simply told that they will have to go up in the balcony or have the usher lead them there and say nothing. If they refuse to go and insist they sit where they please downstairs then simply tell them that you will have to refund their money and quietly hand it to them. I think you will find that they are reasonable and will respond readily to courteous treatment of this kind if you bluff it out. It really is a matter of tact and bluff for if they wanted to fight your authority they would have a perfect right to do so and you would have no real and legal backing for your action. If you have no balcony you might set aside a certain number of seats in a particular section of the house so that the other people would not have to sit next to them if they objected. If you antagonize them they can and are liable to make trouble for you. If you treat them civilly but at the same time let them see that they are not welcome they will very quickly go to some other house where they feel that their money is considered just as good as that of the white people.

Advance peep at World's "The Almighty Dollar."

Infantile Epidemic Stops Star

The Thanhouser Film Corporation expected to secure health certificates for Ethel Mary Oakland and Tula Belle every time they left the studio to go out on a location because of the precautions to check the infantile paralysis epidemic in New York, but they did not figure on Gladys Hulette coming under the ban.

Miss Hulette is making a picture in which she plays the part of a girl of twelve and many of the scenes are being taken over in New Jersey. For several days, Miss Hulette, who motored to the location fully made up, was stopped every time she entered a ferry house and forced to explain that she really was more than twelve years old. One day she was delayed until William Parke, her director, arrived and got her out of difficulty. He suggested that she get a health certificate in order to prevent further delays and she did.

Now she presents her documents and passes the guards unhindered.

Griffiths' Wife Powell Star

Linda A. Griffith, film star and writer, and the wife of David W. Griffith, who produced the "Birth of a Nation," has returned to the screen to play the lead in a new seven-reel feature soon to be released by the Frank Powell Productions, Inc.

Mrs. Griffith has been a prominent figure in the film world for the past eight years, both as an emotional actress of marked ability and as the author of several important scenarios. For more than two years she has been investigating, compiling data, and studying at first hand life among the poor of our larger cities in preparation for her latest scenario.

The picture will be the first release of the new company formed by Frank Powell, the well-known producer.

Leaves Theater for Studio

B. A. Rolfe, president of the Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., who has personally directed the management of the Strand Theater in New York, has given up that work and is now the commander-in-chief of the Rolfe studio at 3 West Sixty-third street, where features are produced for the Metro program. Mr. Rolfe was induced to take up this position because of the ever-increasing activities at the studio that made big demands upon his time.

The Photoplay Scenario

The Naked Truth of Scenario Writing

By Charles E. Moyer

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

SHE was crying.

She had been told the truth.

If all men told the truth, the tears of women would create another flood.

That is why Leo Joyce, director of the scenario department of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, kept a motto on his desk, and looked at it a hundred and one times each day.

The motto read, "It is better to lie a little, than to make people unhappy."

"I don't want to take too much of your time," smothered sobs, "but I have worked hard on my scenarios ever since I left school. I was sure they were just the kind your producing companies wanted. Even though disappointed, I am rather pleased, for you are the first person who has treated me civilly in the many offices I have been, and I realize that your constructive criticism of my work will be a big help to me."

The remark did not astonish Leo, for he was that sort of man. "Naturally, I did not want to be unkind," he said, "for by telling you the naked truth without any veiled illusions, it was not my intention to hurt your feelings. I am sorry you cried. All I can say is, I am sorry, but it is impossible for us to use any of your scenarios."

"I don't want to take too much of your time, but it is absolutely necessary that I know where I am wrong, for I must do something quickly, or I won't be able to go ahead and live. I am near the end of my rope now," she replied.

It was really a pitiable occasion. Because she was all wrong. Like thousands more, this young girl, even with her college education, had made herself believe that she was capable of sitting down, and without preliminary preparedness, write stories for the screen to be enacted by a Pickford, a Clark, a Frederick, or a Ward. She was wrong. That was the only thing. She was wrong. Absolutely wrong. She lacked sufficient knowledge of the ethical, esthetic and technical elements of the photodrama; she was not versed in unity, and her incapacity for writing intelligently upon a theme, its proposition and the plot, was really marked. Yet she was not different from thousands of others. She made herself believe she could do it better than a Turnbull, a DeMille, or a Beban. She thought writing for the screen was an easy proposition. She looked upon it as being a "cinch." It would have been far better if she had tried to translate the Bible into Chinese, loop the moon in an aeroplane, compose a brand new opera, stop the war in Europe, or make the Dove of Peace settle down for life in Mexico, if it was a "cinch" she was looking for.

And she learned that.

She had climbed many stairs during those many weeks in the hope there would be some editor to whom her scenarios would appeal. Fate has an inexplicable way of shaping the fortunes of people. She had been severely treated by many, but she kept on walking dejectedly along the "gay white way" of New York City, that avenue of many promises and hopes in the hearts of the aspirants. Her steps led her from one office to another, and being unknown, she was met everywhere with gruff refusals. And then when she was, for the first time treated kindly and courteously, and was given her first constructive criticism, she cried. She had been told the truth.

"Near the end of the rope? What do you mean?" Leo asked.

"I'm hungry."

"What?"

"I must sell one soon, that's all."

Leo took the batch back, and told her to come in the morning. He read every one over again—there were five of them. He found there many, many mistakes. He thought of the hungry girl, and he too, was soon believing there must be something real in her work, and he determined at least to get her something to do in the corporation, for he now had himself feeling she had the capacity to write, and there was a short-story writer needed in the publicity department.

Without any preliminaries the next morning, he told the girl he could not use her scenarios but that there was a job waiting for her which would at least pay her enough to eat and live well.

But the job did not suffice, for in less than a month she wanted to know what really was wrong with her scenario work. Leo was kind, and didn't tell her what was absolutely wrong, but he did tell her what was required to write a good scenario.

"There are only four things necessary," he said. "Only four things. They are struggle, heart interest, suspense and ultimate justification."

"That's not much, is it? Only four requisites!"

"Give them to me in a scenario, and I will see that you get real money for it. For the life germ of a picture is its struggle, which is its action, the life nourishment of the story is its heart interest, the life stimulant of the story is suspense, and the life joy of the whole is its ultimate justification."

That is the naked truth of a scenario.

Make Your Scenario Look Business Like

IT IS with a very apologetic feeling that I even mention this threadbare and moss covered subject that should have been peacefully laid to rest years ago, and still in this last week alone I have received six inquiries as to whether it is absolutely necessary to have scenarios typewritten before submitting them to the film companies, and I want to ward off the possibility of receiving that many each week.

It cannot possibly be that the questioners have not read or been told again and again that this is absolutely necessary. I think it is a case where they know it is so but hope that by asking just once more someone may tell them that it isn't so and they will be saved this expense.

Why are people always wanting special dispensations for themselves? If you are going to play the game at all play according to rules. If you have no pride in doing the thing in the right way, following the usual beaten track of custom, and having your script go out looking as business-like as possible, at least have mercy on the poor readers. How would you like yourself to have to sit down and read about a hundred manuscripts that were written in all sorts of hieroglyphics.

This typing is not such an appalling item of expense as many try to make it appear. There are any number of people who are now making a specialty of doing this work, or are doing it as a sideline, and they charge only about ten cents a page for an original and one carbon copy. Any friend who is a stenographer or typist would probably be glad to earn a little extra money doing this work for you.

And right here let me advise those who do not know any of the rudiments of typewriting to have someone else do this work for them and not try to "whack it out" themselves with one finger with the resultant erasures, blurs, rewriting, crossing out, writing one letter on top of another, poor arrangement, etc., which too often disfigures otherwise good scripts.

Just as when you are meeting a person for the first time their neat, well groomed, appropriately dressed appearance attracts you to them at once, so with the film editor. An attractively arranged, well typed, neat and business-like looking manuscript will immediately meet with commendation, and the first step toward acceptance is taken.

Starting Your Story

By Will M. Ritchey

SO FAR, in my talks on script writing, I have dealt mainly with the form and fundamentals of a scenario. Now for the substance.

You have been told briefly some of the requirements which all scripts must have if they are to be made into moving pictures. I have tried to explain a little of the uses of the camera. Now, how to begin your story in such a way that it will have the greatest effect with least that is not essential!

Suppose we take that outline of a plot I gave in an earlier chapter. It will do as an illustration, though I doubt if it could be sold to anyone in these days. You remember, it is the story of the adventures of a country youth who finds himself "broke" in the city.

First, how shall we introduce him to the audience so as to tell who he is, and what he is doing, as quickly as possible. We must not waste scenes with too much introduction. It depends, too, on whether our story is for one, two or three reels, or for a five-part "feature." The shorter our photoplay, the less we can take up with preliminaries.

If for a "five-reeler," we might show the lad leaving his home on the farm. There are good-byes, with his mother and father gazing proudly, though with tears in their eyes, as he trudges down the road to the station. He walks with his head up, confident that he will make his fortune in the city.

Thus we learn on the screen that the boy has left home to make his fortune. We see him on the train, and arriving in the city, awed by its hugeness. Perhaps, to explain why he is "broke" we show an encounter with a "confidence man," who strips him of his savings, or with a "card-shark." Or we may save time by having him start bravely away from the railroad terminal, and then show a sub-title, with some pharse like "A month later, with no job and his money gone." Following the sub-title might be a scene of the youth on a park bench, sitting discouraged with his head in his hands.

Thus we have "registered" the fact that the boy has left a farm and has gone "broke" in the city. But all this has taken time and film footage. There may be another way of getting to our story more quickly.

Suppose we open our picture with the boy on the bench. He is discouraged—rather shabby in dress—perhaps has no overcoat, with snow on the ground. He stares into vacancy and as the picture "fades out" by means of the camera iris, has a "vision." Now a scene is "irised in" and we see the boy leaving his country home. The scene is short, and "dissolves" into his arrival in the city. This in turn "dissolves" into the encounter with the confidence man, and of the youth's discomfiture when he realizes that he has been swindled. Then we see him applying for work, and being refused. The last scene "irises out" and we have a "fade in" of the boy on the bench again.

This is shorter than the other, but still explains why the boy is on the bench, and tells us he has no money. In each method, however, there are details which must be met with and handled properly. Do not take it for granted that the audience will jump at ideas unless they are expressed. It might be possible to make the introduction still shorter by means of a sub-title which would tell in a few words just what has happened to the boy after he was first shown on the park bench. It might help, too, to have his "countryness" expressed by his costume. Only here there would be danger of overdoing it. Probably only in the pictures and in fiction are country boys arriving in the city in the conventional "rube" make-up. And even in the pictures the "rube" attire usually is left to the comedy field.

Not Buying at Present

Thomas A. Edison, Inc., writes: "We have a large amount of scenario material on hand and until further notice will not be in the market for scripts. Will you please change our market notice to read: 'Not buying for the present.'"

Manager Rollin S. Sturgeon has left the western plant of the Vitagraph Company and will direct in the eastern studio. This will leave but one company at work at the Hollywood studios, under the direction of William Wolbert, who has just started work on a five-reel story sent from the New York offices, and expects to follow it up with others, already on hand from headquarters. This makes a scenario editor unnecessary and definitely puts the Vitagraph western studios out of the market until further notice.

Date of Contest Extended

The date to which entries will be received in the Photoplay Contest announced sometime ago by The Public, Ellsworth building, Chicago, Illinois, has been advanced to December 31, 1916. The Public is offering a $250.00 cash prize for the best photoplay illustrating the single-tax idea. Colonel Jasper E. Brady, head of the Vitagraph Company of New York, assisted by Ray Stannard Baker, Frederic C. Howe, Grace Isabel Colborn and other well known single-taxers are to be judges.

Two advance glimpses at "Youth's Endearing Charm," the first Mutual Minter play, and a view of Mary Miles herself.

First Minter Mutual Appears

OTHER ITEMS OF MUTUAL INTEREST

"YOUTH'S Endearing Charm," the first of the series of Mutual Star productions filmed at the studios of the American Film Company, Inc., in which Mary Miles Minter makes her debut as a Mutualite, will appear on September fourth. The play will be released in six acts instead of in five, as originally planned.

This production, in which Miss Minter has the role of a little orphan whom fate transforms from the slums to a mansion, was adapted from the story of the same name by Maibelle Heikes Justice, a noted author and writer of scenarios, and screened under the direction of William C. Dowlan.

For Miss Minter's initial appearance in Mutual releases, an unusually capable company of players were chosen for the support, chief among them Wallace MacDonald, a talented young player of juvenile leads; Gertrude Le Brandt, Harry Von Meter, Alfred Ferguson, Bessie Banks, Harvey Clark, Margaret Nichols and others of equal note.

As "Orphan Mary," Miss Minter gives a fascinating interpretation of the role of a desolate girl, who, after a battle with starvation in the slums of the city, is committed to an orphan asylum and later bound out by the institution to a cruel family of farmers.

Finally, after months of drudgery, untold hardships, long spells of loneliness and no reward for her continued toil, the hapless little girl attracts the attention of a wealthy and kindly woman who adopts her as one of her own.

Abounding in interest and human appeal, "Youth's Endearing Charm" affords the golden-haired young star one of her best opportunities of demonstrating the unusual dramatic powers with which she has been gifted. Many little touches of a sympathetic nature have been injected into each of the six acts by means of "Zippy," the little tramp dog which shares with its charming mistress all her sorrow and joys. "Youth's Endearing Charm" was screened without regard to expense or effort on the part of the director and his assisting force.

Realism to the Nth Power

Motion picture devotees who are always crying for realism need have no fear that foreign made sets in the studio are used in the scenes of "A Welsh Singer," Florence Turner's most recent Mutual Star production, for many weeks were spent in Wales, London and Rome while the production was being filmed.

The Welsh scenes, in particular, are unusually true to life, most of them having been enacted on the exact spots mentioned by Mr. Raine in his novel, which is based on the rise to fame and fortune of the lowly little shepherdess. In the filming of these scenes, Director Larry Trimble engaged as "extras," numerous natives of the hills, who bring to the story a striking variety of interesting types.

Next of the Mutual Star productions featuring Helen Holmes was released late in August under the title of "The Manager of the B. & A." This production, a filmization of Vaughn Kester's widely read story of the same name, is being screened at the Signal-Mutual studios under the personal direction of Director-General J. P. McGowan.

Director-General McGowan appears in the chief supporting role opposite Miss Holmes in "The Manager of the B. & A."

More About Charlie

When it comes time to write the autobiography of Charlie Chaplin, king of laughmakers, the world is going to read a romance of real life, the like of which is seldom found among the covers of a novel.

It was only a few short years ago that Chaplin, then a knockabout comedian with a traveling company, was earning the munificent salary of $20 a week. His rise to fame and fortune is a striking illustration of the caliber of the man. Adversity—and he has his share of it—never acted as a detriment in preventing Chaplin from carrying out his ambition of some day getting on top of the pile.

"I determined that I wouldn't remain poor all my life," said Chaplin. "I was certain that with just a fair share of luck I could get out of the heap and stretch my legs a bit."

And Chaplin did. From $20 a week to $670,000 a year is a big leap to make within a period of four years.

"I realized that if I could create something, a new type of comedian, that it would get across," said Chaplin. "So, as with an engineer, an architect, an artist or a writer, I set to planning my work. And I 'put it across,' so to speak.

"Since I first attained some measure of popularity I have been subjected to considerable criticism, the chief objection that I was considerable of a 'rounder.'"

Chaplin is, as a matter of fact, one of the cleanest and quietest living men in the world. The Mutual comedian, however, lays no claim to being perfection personified, but he believes that some credit it due him for holding a level head above water despite the popularity that is his today.

Speaking of contrast between his present day affluence and the days less fraught with happiness. Chaplin declared:

"I remember the very first job I ever had. My employer hardly paid me a salary, nevertheless I was glad to do it, because, as my mother would say, I was keeping out of mischief. Fortunately, those days weren't of long duration, but you can imagine how real they were when my efforts for a week's work with the days constituting anywhere from twelve to eighteen hours, would yield me on the average $1.50."

Of Mutual Interest

Two of the world's largest and most famous trick elephants and the smallest of screen stars are featured in an animal drama now being screened at the Horsley-Mutual studios.

The elephants, "Tweedledum" and "Tweedledee," are members of the Bostock collection of jungle animals.

The young screen star, who is also a featured player of this picture, is Thelma Salter.

The title of the feature, as yet, is undecided.

Mary Miles Minter and her director, James Kirkwood, together with all the members of her company, will spend a week in the Arlington Gardens, at Santa Barbara, Cal., enacting various scenes for "Dulcie's Adventure," second of her Mutual Star productions.

Considerable Newport-Tuxedo atmosphere was needed for a number of the exterior scenes and the Arlington Gardens were chosen by Director Kirkwood as the most appropriate in that section of California. In these particular scenes, more than two hundred "extras"—men and women—attired in all sorts of "high society" get-ups, are being brought into play.

Four persons, three women and a man, who are well known in society circles of Santa Barbara, are included among the "extras" just, as they announced, "for the fun of the thing."

David Horsley announces a reorganization of his studios for alignment of his facilities with a policy of quality feature production.

Operations at the Los Angeles studios have been reduced to a minimum for a period of a few weeks. Mr. Horsley is now in Los Angeles making preparations for the important changes to be instituted in the early autumn. He will come east in September for the purpose of closing new contracts and conducting various conferences with President John R. Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation.

It is announced that Crane Wilbur will remain with the Horsley concern and that he will be starred in a series of special feature productions to be made this fall. Mr. Horsley also expects to conclude negotiations now in progress with two widely known actresses of the stage who are to be cast in Horsley feature productions.

Marie Shotwell of Thanhouser

If Marie Shotwell had obeyed the traffic policeman at Thirty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, New York, she would have remained upon the legitimate stage instead of becoming a moving picture star. She disobeyed the cop—so now she is a leading woman with Thanhouser.

Thanhouser captured Miss Marie Shotwell by chance.

Here's how it happened. A year and a half ago a Thanhouser company was working in Savannah, Georgia. Miss Shotwell was resting at her Savannah home after a successful stage career. The Thanhouser company used Miss Shotwell's home for a location, and while the picture was being made Miss Shotwell and Florence LaBadie became great friends. When the company left Jacksonville Miss LaBadie lost track of Miss Shotwell.

Enter the cop. A few weeks ago Miss Shotwell, who had come to New York to return to the stage, was walking down Fifth avenue. At Thirty-seventh street she started to cross the avenue.

"Come on," said the cop.

Miss Shotwell spied a crowd on the other side of Thirty-seventh street. A woman was speaking. Miss Shotwell turned.

"Look out! Come this way!" the policeman called.

Miss Shotwell disobeyed. Dodging a motor car she made her way over to what proved to be a suffrage meeting. There she became acquainted with a suffrage worker. A few days later the suffrage worker took Miss Shotwell to a ball at the Plaza. Florence LaBadie was there, delighted to see her old friend.

"Why don't you go into the pictures?" Miss LaBadie said. "Out at the Thanhouser studio they're looking for a girl of just your type."

Miss LaBadie took Miss Shotwell's address. The next day Edwin Thanhouser sent for Miss Shotwell—and now she's a picture star. Thanhouser soon will present Miss Shotwell in a feature that will be released through the Pathe Exchanges. It is a play by Emmet Mix in which Miss Shotwell plays the part of a fiercely emotional Italian girl.

Miss Shotwell's first stage experience was with James K. Hackett and Kathryn Kidder in "Madame Sans Gene." Daniel Frohman saw Miss Shotwell in this play and signed her for five years.

Pathe Inaugurates Film Library

MARIE EMPRESS GLORIES IN VAMPIRE ROLES

A FILM library is the latest innovation of the industry, and the Pathe Freres of London is the originator of the idea. All films of historical interest are carefully stored and preserved with a view of thus compiling a living record of the events of the day. The time is not far distant when it will doubtless be necessary to have a special building for these films which are now rapidly accumulating.

The idea is fascinating. Perhaps at some distant time the historian in search of first hand knowledge of the events of the past will go to a National Film Library and ask to have certain films, the contents of which he has learned from a card index, shown to him in the theater which will be a necessary part of the library. Then on the screen will be unfolded the leaves of life of a past generation, and monarchs, soldiers, statesmen, authors, and famous men of the past will for the time awake from the dust of bygone years.

J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, Exchange, Inc., is said to be contemplating starting a similar Pathe film library in the United States.

The Specialty Film Import, Limited, distributors of Pathe films in Canada, recently received a letter from a commander of a British warship, stationed on the North Atlantic seacoast, requesting the loan of Pathe's "Who Pays?" series. A number of his men had seen one or two of the episodes while on shore leave and petitioned him to secure the entire series, so that all on board might see them. The Specialty Film people granted his request, and the commander wrote that the films had been very much admired by everyone on board.

Thurlow Bergen, who has had leading parts in a number of Pathe features, will again be seen in "A Woman's Fight," the five-reel Pathe Gold Rooster play made by Herbert Blache, in which he plays opposite Geraldine O'Brien.

Pathe is the first of the big companies to "follow up" a picture with a press sheet after release. "The Woman's Law" is the picture in question.

J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, felt that the experiment was worth trying and selected "The Woman's Law" as the subject of it since it was felt that this Arrow-made picture was one of the strongest productions of the year.

Grace Darmond floating through Pathe's new wonder serial, "The Shielding Shadow."

The "follow up" press sheet is designed not only to help book the picture, but also to aid the exhibitor to adequately advertise it.

Pathe's September Program

Pathe has a generous program consisting of thirteen reels for the week of September 10.

The feature "The Fear of Poverty," is a five-reel Gold Rooster drama featuring Florence LaBadie in a dual role, produced by Thanhouser.

"A Change of Heart" is a two-reel Pathe drama in which Thurlow Bergen is the star.

The current release of "The Grip of Evil," "The Dollar Kings," is built around a very strong theme.

"Busting the Beanery" is a slapstick Heinie comedy.

"Pear Growing" and "Historic Mobile" make up an excellent split reel.

The Pathe News No. 74 on Wednesday, September 13th, and No. 75 on Saturday, September 16th, finish out the program.

A vampire more "vampirish" than the one made famous by the "rag and a bone and a hank of hair" description of Kipling's, is Marie Empress, who glories in the execrations she wins from motion picture audiences. She has become known in the film world as the true "vampire" type.

Miss Empress, whose real name is Marie Keene, is a niece of Edmund Keene, the celebrated English actor. When she went on the stage she decided she would carve out a career for herself and win on her own merits and not as a relative of Edmund Keene.

She has had important roles in comedy, drama and opera. She was a London favorite and member of some of the most famous British theatrical organizations. She won laurels on the dramatic stage in America before entering the motion picture field and was selected by the Balboa company to portray the "vampire" roles in "The Grip of Evil."

Owing to the great success of "The Iron Claw" and the great popularity of Pearl White and Creighton Hale, Manager Wessling of Pathe's Cincinnati office has booked "The Romance of Elaine" at the Mary Anderson Theater, Louisville's foremost house.

It is no longer possible to deceive motion picture audiences by throwing a dummy over a cliff or substituting for the leading lady, when the scenario calls for a hazardous feat.

"The public is familiar with the tricks of the camera," says Louis J. Gasnier, president of the Astra Film Corporation, which is producing "The Shielding Shadow" serial for Pathe, "therefore we must give them exactly what the scenario calls for.

"In 'The Shielding Shadow' we have combined everything which experience has shown that the motion picture public wants. We have a beautiful girl in the lead, supported by two splendid actors and an actress famous both on the stage and screen, Grace Darmond, Ralph Kellard, Leon Bary and Madeline Traverse.

"We have adventure, love, mystery, and a strong element of suspense throughout. There are more thrills, greater thrills, than there ever have been in any other serials. Each one of the fifteen episodes of 'The Shielding Shadow' is a big feature in itself."

FILM "CONQUEST OF CANAAN"

Frohman Amusement Corporation Will Feature Jack Sherrill and Edith Taliaferro in Film Translation of Tarkington Novel

"Clock-made" features seem to have no place in the lexicon of the Frohman Amusement Corporation. "Time enough to do everything essential if it takes a year," is the slogan of that concern, and under the direction of George Irving, the next production, "The Conquest of Canaan," is nearing completion after seven weeks of perfect weather conditions, ideal work on the part of the cast and more than satisfactory studio arrangements.

Having created "Jaffery," William J. Locke's delightful story, for William R. Hearst's International Service and having seen this production granted the honor of initiating that company's feature releasing, Mr. Sherrill, head of the Frohman concern, again sought the market of popular novels for a following feature and Booth Tarkington's story was secured.

"The Conquest of Canaan" in its celluloid form will have a cast of players, almost of the all-star variety.

Edith Taliaferro, the princess charming of that historic theatrical family, Jack Sherrill, famed for his work in "Just Out of College," and "Then I'll Come Back to You," are handling the two principal roles, with Ralph Delmore playing the virile part of Judge Pike.

Edith Taliaferro and Jack Sherrill in "The Conquest of Canaan," a filmy version of Tarkington's popular novel.

As a novel, "The Conquest of Canaan" was easily the best seller of its period. Its powerful appeal, the peculiarly attractive construction of the story and the unusual plots, counterplots, situations and climaxes, compelled more than any of Tarkington's books up to that day. It was selected for films by the Frohman company from a possible market of over sixty well-known rhetoric works.

Just what form of releasing the Frohman Amusement Corporation will assume, is not definitely known as yet. Mr. Sherrill and Harry Reichenbach are holding daily conferences with several of the program heads. Since "Jaffery," "What Happened at 22," "Then I'll Come Back to You" and "Body and Soul" created so favorable an impression all over the country, various concerns have endeavored to secure options on Frohman material, but the concern's policy will not be shaped until further activities in the industry show whether open market or program are to dominate.

The Frohman Company have under option now five big plays which were secured last week from one of the foremost theatrical producing concerns. These plays are all of sufficient importance to receive special treatment and will be given the same thorough production as have those made under Mr. Irving in the past.

In addition to those mentioned above, the cast of "The Conquest of Canaan" will contain John Sutherland, May Price, Madeline Cadieux, Ralph Dean, Howard Meemimir, George Melville, Frances Lincoln, Walter Hiers and Jack Hopkins. The story contains three hundred and fifty-one scenes and will, in all probability be in six reels.

When Star Friends Meet

E. H. Sothern, America's great actor, now doing a series of dramatic photoplays at the New York studios of the Vitagraph Company, was visited by an old friend the other day in the person of Douglas Fairbanks, the Triangle comedian, who has been a friend of Mr. Sothern's for many years. Fred Thomson, Mr. Sothern's director, and Miss Charlotte Ives, his leading woman, were also prominent among those who welcomed Mr. Fairbanks.

The group above as a matter of fact, represents four friends of long standing.

Keller with William Fox

Brooklyn Keller, who has been in film for years, has enlisted under the William Fox banner. He is cast for a part in William Farnum's final western picture.

"My first job," he confides, "was that of a cartoonist on a Socialist newspaper. Then I had juvenile leads in 118 plays on the road and in stock.

"Time was when I could run a hundred yards in ten flat."

Wonder whether acting in stock was responsible for this fleetness of foot.

Simultaneously with the release of "The Yellow Menace," sixteen episode serial, produced by the Serial Film Company, the story will appear in a large number of prominent newspapers throughout the country.

Ford Asks Transfer of Film Suit

GIGANTIC BATTLE SCENES FILMED FOR "BATTLE CRY OF WAR"

AS a second step in the suit of the Vitagraph Company against Henry Ford for one million dollars for libel in connection with advertisements published by him condemning "The Battle Cry of Peace" as being backed by munitions manufacturers, Mr. Ford, arguing he is a resident of Michigan, applied to the Supreme Court of the County of New York for an order to remove the case to the District court for the Southern District of New York. As the moving papers are in regular form the order for removal will be entered on August 31.

J. Stuart Blackton made the following statement regarding the suit:

Mr. Ford caused full-page advertisements to be printed in newspapers all over the United States saying that "The Battle Cry of Peace" was inspired by munition manufacturers and backed by their capital.

I have sued him because his false and malicious allegations have injured both my reputation and my business. I am bitterly opposed to his pacifist views and think that his propaganda is working damage and injury to this country but I do not print false statements and page advertisements stating that he is assuming his present spineless attitude for the purpose of increasing the sale of Ford cars.

Every sane man wants peace but the man who preaches against patriotism, who urges young men to refuse to protect their families and homes, who tells his employees that if they answer their country's call they will not get their jobs back when they return is beneath contempt and not entitled to manhood sufferage.

I wrote and produced "The Battle Cry of Peace" to further the interests of practical preparedness, to arouse in the hearts of American citizens the sense of their strict accountability to their government, and through the tremendously powerful medium of the motion picture to counterbalance the pernicious influence of the apostles of "peace at any price."

The accusation that munition interests are responsible for the picture is absolutely without foundation. In the latter part of April, 1915, Hudson Maxim sent me a copy of his book, "Defenceless America." It contained many valuable and remarkable statistics about the deplorable condition of this country's defenses and I realized that a motion picture illustrating the facts set forth in the book would reach millions of people in a short period of time.

Mr. Maxim was paid a stated sum for the use of the material in his book and around these facts, I wrote the drama of "The Battle Cry of Peace." That was the only connection Mr. Maxim had with the affair.

This was in April, 1915, and the Maxim Munition Company of which I had never heard until Mr. Ford's advertisements appeared, was not in existence until about December, 1915.

The cost of producing the picture and presenting it in an elaborate manner with extensive advertising for three months in New York, Boston and Chicago before its general release to the motion picture theaters amounted to hundreds of thousands of dollars.

The investment was borne entirely by the Vitagraph Company of America and this extensive advertising campaign resulted in a larger subsequent distribution than any other film production we have ever put out.

Mr. Ford's printed statement, however, that munition manufacturers were back of the picture prejudiced many people against "The Battle Cry of Peace," and damaged the business of theaters in many cities.

This suit is being brought firstly to vindicate my own reputation and secondly to demonstrate that the possession of money and power does not carry with it the right to publish with impunity false and malicious statements that have no foundation whatsoever.

Big Battles in Big Feature

The inhabitants of Staten Island turned out en masse to witness the gigantic battle scenes being filmed for "The Battle Cry of War."

J. Stuart Blackton, who is personally producing this spectacle, had the co-operation of the 13th Coast Defense Command, N. G. N. Y. and a company of "regulars" from the United States Army. The 550 men of this command went into camp near Grassmere, Staten Island, and lived there for two weeks under strict camp conditions. Besides the militiamen, who had a battery of 3-inch guns, there were soldiers from Fort Wadsworth and a force of 500 extras in the greater scenes.

The biggest day was when the turn of the tide of battle was staged. Besides Commodore Blackton, who directed all the action as a whole, assisted by Director Wm. P. S. Earle, certain details were looked after by others, among them being A. Victor Smith and J. Stuart Blackton, Jr. Chief of the onlookers was Colonel Sydney Grant of the command, who observed the proceedings from the headquarters stand. The soldiery was handled by Captains Johnston, Comstock, Cunningham, Clifford and Meeks, and Lieutenants Austin, Edwards, Patterson, Saunders, Ross, Smith, Alman and Clark. New York fire marshals were on hand in an official capacity. The extremely delicate explosion work was handled by Herman Rottger of Vitagraph assisted by Dick Peterman, Tommy Fisher, Charles Gardner and Ivor F. Lynn. The Vitagraph players participating in the battle scenes as principals were: Harry Morey, Joseph Kilgour, James Morrison and Walter McGrail.

On either side are scenes of Vitagraph preparing for the filming of "The Battle Cry of War." From the triangle peers the likeness of Barney Bernard, the popular Hebrew comedian, who makes his screen debut in Vitagraph's "Phantom Fortunes."

A number of powerful attacks were staged, and after them the ground was seen pitted with craters from mines and shell-fire effects. There were many furious clashes, but, strange to say, not over a score of men were hurt, so carefully and scientifically had everything been conducted. Director Earle, however, got a bad bump from a flying rock. Harry Morey, as an example of sardonic fate, was not in a certain scene and suffered injury. Surgeon Costigan congratulated the Vitagraphers for depriving him of any major surgical practice.

Barney Bernard, the Hebrew comedian of "Potash and Perlmutter" fame makes his motion picture debut in the latest Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, "Phantom Fortunes."

Bernard has won many friends through his tours on the legitimate stage and by his dialogue records on the phonographs.

Samuel Tauber, who has been associated with Bernard for some time, is author of "Phantom Fortunes," and through his knowledge of Barney's "passed performances" gives him an opportunity to bring into play the same droll expressions and gestures which made him famous in a number of characterizations.

Paul Scardon, who produced the photoplay, has introduced many interesting phases of life in the workshops of New York's East Side.

An all star cast of Vitagraphers including: James Morrison, Adele DeGarde, Mary Maurice, and Edward Elkas, with Lester Bernard and Mrs. Moscovitz, who have appeared with Barney on the legitimate stake, make up the balance of the cast.

Anita Stewart Convalescing

Not until she became ill and her life seemed dispaired of did Anita Stewart, young Vitagraph star, learn the full depth of regard in which she is held by her following.

Miss Stewart's new home "The Wood Violet" is the center of the attention of those who flock to Bay Shore. Miss Stewart's mail has tripled since her illness, both at home and at the studio. Two nurses, Miss Stewart's mother, her secretary and the maid are kept busy answering all kinds of sympathetic communications.

Graduation Exercises Screened

Part of a public school's graduation exercises will be shown in the new William Farnum picture now being screened. A "visiting superintendent" bestows the diplomas, tied with a neat pink ribbon, upon fifty little girls, clad in white. The Fox photoplayers in the Hollywood studio watched the proceedings with real interest when the scene was being screened. No one could forget the picture the children made, and after the day's work was completed, reminiscenses of "the little red school house" were in order.

Joan Sawyer Working

Joan Sawyer, world-famous dancer, who has just joined the William Fox forces, is now busily at work under the direction of Tefft Johnson.

COMEDIES FOR PARAMOUNT

Single-Reel Weekly Comedies to Be Produced by Klassic Komedies and United States Motion Picture Corporation

Paramount Pictures Corporation will supply the last link in its chain by the addition of single-reel comedies each week to its program, now composed of five and six-reel features, produced by the Famous Players Film Company, the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company and Pallas Pictures, and three single-reel features each week, the Paramount Pictographs, the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures and the Paramount-Bray cartoons.

Contracts have been signed with the Klassic Pictures, Inc., producing the Klassic Komedies, and the United States Motion Picture Corporation, producing the Black Diamond Comedies. The first release will be issued September 25.

Since the inception of the Paramount company two years ago the officers have been looking for just the right kind of comedy to conform with their policy of better pictures for better theaters for a better public, and now believe they have found them. Every one of the productions contain the four fundamental requisites of good photoplay comedies, action, comedy, heart interest, comedy suspense and the ever necessary ultimate comedy justification.

The two chief features on the Paramount program for the week of September 11 will be the Famous Players production, "The Reward of Patience," in which Louise Huff will be starred, and the Morosco production, "The House of Lies," in which Edna Goodrich is featured.

Surrounding these six-reel features are Paramount single reel features—the thirty-first edition of the Paramount Pictographs shows "Raising Better Pigs;" how to "Keep Well Babies Well;" how 1,200 boys are being taught military standards; and the microscopic "wonder-picture" showing the microbes contained in the water we drink.

The Burton Holmes Travel Pictures show "Glimpses of English Town and Country," and the Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoon, "Colonel Heeza Liar's Bachelor Quarters."

Jesse L. Lasky is very much pleased with the production of "The Victory of Conscience," in which Lou-Tellegen is starred. He says it is a film classic and the most effective Lasky production since "The Cheat." This picture was released by Paramount on August 28.

Burton Holmes, whose pictures have been released exclusively through the Paramount Pictures Corporation, has returned from his summer journeyings which were spent in Canada, taking pictures of the principal points of interest from Nova Scotia, "The Land of Evangeline," to Victoria and Vancouver. His lists of new subjects will be comprised of "Canada, Coast to Coast," "The Canadian Rockies," "La Belle France," "The Fatherland, the Germany of the Germans," and "Imperial Britain."

Beginning with September, Mr. Holmes' first four Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Picture releases will be devoted to Scotland and Ireland. Two releases on Scotland, one release on Ireland and another divided between the two countries.

Vitagraphs on the V-L-S-E

FIRST EPISODE OF NEW SERIAL PRESENTED AND MANY FEATURES

THE first episode contribution of the new and greater Vitagraph releases on the Big Four schedule for September include "Phantom Fortune," a five-reeler in which Barney Bernard, the popular Hebrew comedian, is starred. The picture will be released on September 4.

"His Wife's Good Name," starring Lucile Stewart and produced by Ralph W. Ince, is to be released the following week, September 11. This is also a five-reeler.

On September 18 will be presented to the public "Through the Wall," with Nell Shipman, George Holt and William Duncan in the principal parts. On this same date Earle Williams appears in the first episode of the new serial, "The Scarlet Runner." This will be released in twelve episodes of two reels each. Margaret Blake is featured with Mr. Williams in the first release called "The Car and His Majesty." Charles Kent and L. Rogers Lytton are also in the cast.

On this same date also will be presented on the V-L-S-E program "The Fall of a Nation," which is now in seven reels.

E. H. Sothern's debut on the screen occurs on September 25th in the five-part Blue Ribbon feature "The Chattel." In this picture Mr. Sothern is supported by Peggy Hyland, Charles Kent and Rose Tapley.

V-L-S-E recently has entrenched itself in the majority of the first run downtown houses in a number of cities. In Boston for instance, Manager George Balsdon has placed Big Four productions in every first-class theater in the downtown district out of a total of sixteen theaters, V-L-S-E productions are being shown in eleven, the remaining five being Class C houses booking second and third runs. In Los Angeles all of the big downtown houses are booking V-L-S-E regularly. These include Tally's Broadway, Clune's Broadway, Clune's Auditorium, Superba, Empress and College theaters.

Tom North has placed V-L-S-E at the top in nine of the twelve big houses in Spokane and recently these nine houses all used Big Four pictures on the same day so that the front of practically every photoplay theater in the city was devoted to this service. Several important shifts in the personnel of the V-L-S-E's selling organization, were made during the past week, the principal ones of which were the transfer of C. W. Sawin to Atlanta as manager of the exchange in that city, and the elevation of W. K. Howard of the Chicago office as manager of the Minneapolis branch.

Selig's "The Country God Forgot," a strong new Western drama.

Internal V-L-S-E Changes

C. A. Meade, recently transferred from the Dallas office to Cleveland, has appointed J. R. Johnson, formerly branch manager of the Pathe Exchange, for his assistant branch manager.

Paul Hayes, who has been handling the publicity work for the Boston exchange, has been appointed to the sales staff. L. A. McCracken of the shipping department has been made booker, and J. R. Grindley advanced from poster clerk to shipping clerk.

TWO EASTERN TRIANGLES

Norma Talmadge and Douglas Fairbanks Finish Their First Productions in the East—William Hart in Two Releases for September

Two pictures made in the eastern studio are included in the Triangle program for the month of September. The first of the eastern pictures is "The Social Secretary," in which Norma Talmadge is starred, and the second "Manhattan Madness," starring Douglas Fairbanks.

William S. Hart will be seen in two pictures during the month, "The Patriot," scheduled for release on September 3, and "The Dawn Maker," due on September 23.

"Gretchen and the Greenhorn," in which Dorothy Gish is starred, will also be ready on September 3.

September 10 brings Mae Marsh and Robert Harron as co-stars in a Triangle-Fine Arts feature, "The Little Liar," and the same week Frank Keenan scores again in "The Thoroughbred."

"The Wolf Woman" will be the Triangle-Ince feature on September 17, and at the same time Louise Glaum will be launched as a full-fledged star.

Lillian Gish will next be seen on the Triangle program on September 23 in "Diana of the Follies," and Bessie Barriscale will be featured in a Key-Bee drama the release date of which is not yet set.

In addition to making pictures the Triangle-Ince players are having one grand outing after another. The latest was a picnic to Topango Canyon. The trip was conceived and managed by Business Manager E. H. Allen and the picnickers consisted of virtually all of the stars and directors and a number of the principal supporting players from the Ince organization.

Mr. and Mrs. Vincent Astor turned the ball room at their Newport home into a motion picture theater and over six hundred society devotees attended a showing of the Triangle film, "Our American Boys in the European War." The picture was most enthusiastically received.

Among the Triangles promised for the near future, which are now under production, are "Old Folks at Home," featuring Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree; "Rummy," in which Wilfred Lucas is the star; Bessie Love in "The Defenders;" William Desmond has a piece in which he is to be seen as the sole star;

Clara Williams in an Italian drama; and a feature in which Dorothy Dalton, Howard Hickman and Enid Markey are tri-stars.

Realism in Keystone Comedies

The art of putting the "finish" on film comedies at the Mack Sennett-Keystone studios provides an education for the casual student of motion pictures and laymen who may hold the opinion that close adherence to detail is followed only in film dramas of serious action. The truth is quite the contrary. This fact is given emphasis in "The Manicurist," now being filmed, in which Ford Sterling is the star and director.

Among the scenes is a gents' furnishing section of a big, modern department store. At Mr. Sennett's suggestion, the interior of one of Los Angeles' large department stores was studied carefully for days by several Keystone artists, and an exact duplicate has been reproduced on one of the studio stages.

Nothing is missing in the scene, from the characteristic aisle signs to the counter mirrors. Instead of painted effects, everything used is identical with that found in a regular store, from the general fixtures to hat and shirt boxes, scarf racks, price tags, order blanks, brand advertisements, ties, socks, collars, caps, belts and other articles of masculine adornment. The very store atmosphere has been developed to add to the realistic effects of the act.

This is only an example of the lengths to which Mr. Sennett goes in securing "finish" for his famous comedies. The same consideration for detail is shown in every Keystone picture.

Sutherland Likes Screen

Years ago, Victor Sutherland, who plays opposite Virginia Pearson in "Daredevil Kate," the William Fox photoplay, wore the blue uniform of a messenger boy. When he wasn't treading the pavements of Paducah, Kentucky, his native city, he was treading water in some swimming pool so that he can now dive from sixty-five to seventy feet. Questioned about what he thinks of motion pictures, Mr. Sutherland replies, "I like them. They give one a chance to be human."

Pantages Books "Yellow Menace"

An announcement from the Unity Film Service's office in Chicago states that "The Yellow Menace," Unity Sales Corporation's sixteen episode serial, has been booked by the Pantages Circuit for a week's run of each episode in each of its theaters. Pantages has one of the largest chains of theaters in the country with houses in twenty-six cities throughout the West.

International to Issue Scenic

FIRST SHOWING OF "BEATRICE FAIRFAX" IN NEW YORK

IT is only since the great war shut off travel to Europe that the American people have begun to realize that the most beautiful scenery in the world can be found right here at home.

Realizing the desire of Americans to become better acquainted with the wonders of their own country the International Film Service, Inc., will shortly issue a series of four scenic features under the title "Seeing America," and depicting the wondrous beauty of this country.

Edward S. Curtis, author and photographer, was chosen to make these films because he knows the wonderlands of American as does no other artist and photographer. He has just returned from a trip to the west and northwest where he has made a series of remarkable pictures. The films are beautifully tinted and realistically produced.

First Release September 9

The first of the scenic features, "Nature's Miracle," will be released on September 9, showing the scenic mysteries of Yellowstone Park. Following this will appear "The Giant at Sunset," showing a series of pictures of animal life in Yellowstone, the canyons and other remarkable scenes in America's wonderland. Next will come "In the Valley of the Yosemite," with the forests of gigantic trees. The final feature of the series will be "The Canoe Indians of Alaska," showing the life and customs of these picturesque and historic people who are intimately known by Curtis.

"Beatrice Fairfax," the new photoplay series of the International Film Service, Inc., will be seen in the New York district for the first time August 28th. The series was to have been shown simultaneously throughout the country on August 7, but was postponed in New York because of the infantile paralysis scare.

In other cities throughout the country, where it is now appearing, "Beatrice Fairfax" is pronounced the most humanly interesting production of its kind ever offered. Its success is already assured, and exhibitors and patrons have received it most enthusiastically.

Harry Fox and Grace Darling have the principal parts in all of the episodes.

Brilliant Editor In Prologue

The first episode is entitled "The Missing Watchman." It is preceded by a prologue in which Arthur Brisbane, editor of the New York Evening Journal, and other famous newspaper workers appear. "The Missing Watchman" will be followed by "The Adventure of the Jealous Wife." Then in order will come "Billie's Romance," "The Stone God," "Mimosa San," "The Forbidden Room," and others that are now in course of preparation.

Basil Dickey, who is writing the scenarios of the episodes of "Beatrice Fairfax" from letters received by the famous confidante, has been recalled from his vacation, which included an automobile trip to the Pacific Coast.

In addition to Harry Fox and Grace Darling, who will appear in all of the episodes of Beatrice Fairfax, the International Film Service, Inc., has decided to introduce a number of other promnent players as co-stars. The first of these will be Betty Howe, who has prominent parts in two of the episodes, "The Stone God," and "Mimosa San."

Whenever it is necessary, Mr. Dickey will strengthen the parts in which these co-stars appear. In this way, the International Film Service, Inc., proposes to offer practically all-star casts for the various episodes of "Beatrice Fairfax."

A Day of Work With William Fox

JUANITA HANSEN AND GLADYS COBURN HIS NEWEST STARS

JUANITA HANSEN is now a William Fox star, and is busily at work in the California studios with Otis Turner, one of the new Fox directors.

She will have the chief role opposite George Walsh in a forthcoming feature. Miss Hansen, who is already well known to the film world, can smash all records at dancing and driving an automobile, is an adept at canoeing and the surf is rarely too turbulent for her. Another recent addition to the William Fox studios is Gladys Coburn, who will co-debut with Fritz Leiber in the leading feminine role in a new feature now under way.

William Fox has purchased a large site of land on East Fourteenth street, New York City, on which he will erect one of the largest motion picture theaters in the world. The house will have a seating capacity of 5,000 persons. The new theater will have an entrance on Fourteenth street with stores on either side of the entrance. The building will be absolutely fireproof and will be designed by Thomas W. Lamb. Building operations will be begun immediately. The William Fox Realty Company has been organized with offices at 130 West Forty-sixth street to handle Mr. Fox's realty matters.

The Man Who Forgets to Sleep

This is the story of William Fox, the magic-worker, the story of the Man Who Forgets to Sleep; the man who sees twenty thousand feet of film a day; the man with his summer capitol at Woodmere, Long Island, who had a projection room and a screen built in back of his home for his three hardest critics; the man who works from nine in the morning until one, two, or three the next morning; the man who supervises personally every important detail connected with the ramifications of one of the greatest film corporations in the motion picture industry.

"William Fox presents," the signs read. These three words are no blind fiction. They tell a great truth. Behind their use lies the steady, daily drive of sixteen to eighteen hours which have made them so meaningful. It is William Fox who presents. There is nothing at all about him that would suggest the "absentee landlord."

A bit of June sunshine caught by the camera. Her last name is Caprice and she glimmers for Fox.

When you frame Juanita Hansen on your screen after this it will be following the name of Fox.

For such a man as William Fox, who supervises personally every important move undertaken by his corporation, who reads every script before it is given to the director to be screened, who casts many of his players for their roles, who sees every foot of film which bears the stamp of his corporation, there can be no seasons.

Woodmere is his summer capitol, to be sure, but it is primarily for strenuous work, secondarily for play equally rigorous.

The projection room and the screen, thirty or forty feet before it, are typical of the energy and the surpassing efficiency of the man's methods. Space in back of his home is utilized in the same full measure as the minutes in the day. The outstanding features of the landscape in the rear of this magic house of Woodmere are undoubtedly the fireproof booth, the rainproof screen, and the mosquitoproof, wire-netted, "wheelable," room in which Mr. Fox sits huddled in a great wicker chair when he views the picture.

William Fox is his severest critic, but associated with him in this home process of constructive destruction are three other persons, critics all. This triumvirate consists of Mrs. Fox and the two youthful aids in the black-eyed daughters, Mona and Belle.

When affairs in the office are so pressing that they prevent the Man Who Forgets to Sleep from seeing the films at an hour when four-fifths of the metropolis is slumbering, the reels are shot out to Woodmere to be run off at the first opportunity. Often the criticism in the Forty-sixth street projection room is merely antecedent to the harsher judgment of those on the Woodmere "projection-lawn."

In Woodmere distance seems to make the criticism harsher. Here Mrs. Fox and the children do the appraising while the master producer takes mental notations.

Mr. Fox says: "If my family is pleased, I am, because I know the public will be."

At nine o'clock he leaves his Woodmere home.

At eleven he has gone over every financial report and box office sheet of the twenty-odd motion picture and vaudeville houses that he owns throughout the country.

By twelve he has dismissed the scenario writer and the stenographer.

The next half hour is lunch time. Sandwiches from a Broadway restaurant suffice, and frequently, in the bustle of an extraordinary heavy day, the samover in the office has furnished the only noon-day nourishment.

By two o'clock Mr. Fox knows every important comment made by any newspaper in the United States, dealing with anything turned out by his organization.

By six he has seen five thousand feet of film and mentally blue-pencilled every part which he believes requires changing.

At night comes the conference with the contract man, with the casting director, with half a dozen department heads. And after these consultations follow four or five thousand more feet of film.

He delights in baseball, out-of-door sports, and everything active, for he is only thirty-seven, is this Man Who Forgets to Sleep.

New Policy for World Rumored

MARIE DRESSLER AND LEW FIELDS FOR BRADY PRODUCTIONS

NEWS has just been received of the severe injury received by William A. Brady of the World Film Corporation in an automobile accident at Dunellen, New Jersey. Jules Eckert Goodman, a playwright, and John Turk, Mr. Brady's manager, were also injured. This accident may cause some delay in carrying out the plans for a revision of policy in the World Film Corporation. Mr. Brady has refused any definite announcement of these new plans, simply stating that he is not yet ready to talk.

The recent simultaneous engagement of two such prominent stage luminaries as Marie Dressler and Lew Fields for separate Brady productions was a matter of quite sufficient moment to occasion remark, the more so in connection with the coincident expiration, without renewal, of the contracts of several minor stars in the World firmament.

It is perfectly well known that the World powers were not in the least dissatisfied with the work of these players or the popularity of the plays to which they had been contributing their services. It thus becomes evident, even in the absence of official corroboration, that something is in contemplation which does not as yet appear to the cursory view.

A persistent rumor has it that Mr. Brady has already contracted with a number of very conspicuous stars of the dramatic stage in addition to Miss Dressler and Mr. Fields, and that the names of these are being held back for announcement at the most propitious moment. If this report is correct, it probably means that the new stars will be seen in plays already made familiar to the public through the "regular" theater.

Of these Mr. Brady personally controls a large number, either produced originally by himself or acquired since his association with motion picture work. Quite naturally the value of these plays would be very greatly enhanced if their principal roles were to be personated by nationally famous actors or actresses.

For instance, it is entirely clear that "Tillie's Night Out" by itself might be a screen attraction of doubtful quality, while with Miss Dressler heading the cast and breezing through all the principal scenes it arouses immediate and general interest. Precisely the same situation applies to "The Man Who Stood Still," with Lew Fields acting the character played upon the speaking stage by Louis Mann.

Meanwhile persons most familiar with the Brady process of dealing with problems of management are in daily expectation of some radical and important departure connected with World pictures.

The World Film Corporation will release for the week of September 11 one of the most timely subjects of the year, "The Velvet Paw," with House Peters and Gail Kane in the leading roles, being a play dealing with a woman lobbyist and the havoc she raises in Washington pending the passage of the Child Labor Bill.

For the local atmosphere required in the taking of this picture Director Maurice Tourneur of the Paragon studio took a company of thirty players to Washington, where they remained for three weeks taking pictures in and around the Capitol. Then an exact replica of the senate chamber was reproduced at the Paragon studio, where characters most resembling the leading lights of our national political center were chosen, giving not only the senate atmosphere but also characters representing all the prominent politicians at the Capitol.

The gallery, built to hold 300 persons, and the main chamber required more than half the entire floor space of the spacious Paragon studio. The sets had to be built so solid that an infuriated mob of spectators could set upon a maddened ex-senator and throw him over the railing into the assembled body which had just voted for the child labor bill.

Besides House Peters, Gail Kane, Ned Burton and Frank Goldsmith, Charles D. Mackay, Charles Edwards and Alex Shannon also play prominent parts. The photography is exceptionally good, due to the good work of cameraman John V. de Brock.

Alice Brady will be starred in the principal feminine role of "Bought and Paid For," upon which work has been begun by World Pictures Brady-Made.

"Bought and Paid For" was Mr. Brady's initial offering as producing manager at his then new theater, the Playhouse, and the extraordinary favor into which it sprang from the very first night went far toward establishing this resort in the high regard which it has since maintained.

Mr. Brady will also superintend its transit to the photodrama in the studios of the film corporation of which he is the director general.

Frances Nelson and June Elvidge, two St. Paul girls, who left the western city to seek a livelihood on the stage and succeeded, after several years on the legitimate, joined the World Film Corporation, and now, for the second time in the past year, will both be starred in the same photoplay feature, in this case, they both being co-starred with E. K. Lincoln in "The Almighty Dollar," an original scenario by E. M. Ingleton and directed by Robert Thornby at the Paragon studio, which will be the regular release on the World Film program for September 4.

PREPARING FOR STRIKE

Film Manufacturers and Distributors Making Extensive Plans to Keep Theaters Supplied with Films in Case of Railroad Trouble

Film manufacturers and distributers throughout the country have been making extensive plans to supply the exhibitors with films and with the least possible delay should the railroad strike, which appears to be almost a certainty as MOTOGRAPHY goes to press, materialize.

None of the manufacturers expects to be able to give the splendid service made possible when trains are running on schedule time but all agree that their plans are such that it will not be necessary for a single showman, unless in almost inaccessible localities, to darken his house.

It is not the intention of the manufacturers and distributers to make any attempt at delivery of recently made films not yet in the hands of the branch offices but every branch has been supplied with a tremendous quantity of old films which are of sufficiently diversified nature to give every house a fairly good program without resorting to the reshowing of films to their patrons.

The distributers also have made extensive plans to take advantage of the network of trolley lines and third rail systems that cris-cross the country almost from end to end. Through the electric systems it is expected that many deliveries will be made.

It is not expected that New York and the East will suffer to any appreciable extent in case the strike materializes, except where films have been booked and have not been delivered from the western coast studios. By the judicious use of automobiles and electric lines it is possible to cover almost every city from New York east through New England and southwest along the Atlantic coast line to Baltimore and Washington.

Chicago is in much the same position, it being possible to make Chicago the hub of a large wheel which will be served by the Chicago branches.

C. H. Bunn, local manager for the Pathe Exchange, Inc., at Chicago voiced the sentiment of the entire field when he said:

"We are making every effort to take care of our customers. We have enough films on hand to serve all of our own customers and to take care of some others. While we may not be able to place films booked far in advance, and not yet received at this office, in the hands of the exhibitors we will be able to supply them with acceptable substitutes.

"If the strike should be of any duration I anticipate that I will receive orders from New York headquarters to purchase a fleet of automobiles in order to assure every delivery and see that Pathe lives up to its side of the bargain. All of us in this office have the greatest faith in J. A. Berst and we know that he will find a way to circumvent all difficulties."

New Idea in Selig Play

There is an idea presented in "The Country That God Forgot," the Selig five-part feature drama soon to be released, that probably has never before been seen on the screen. Tom Santschi, who stars as "Steve Brant," a miner, battles for several minutes with a western renegade. The hand to hand struggle is thrilling in the extreme and yet one doesn't see a blow struck and neither does one see the principals in the exciting combat.

It is predicted that when "The Country That God Forgot" is released that other film manufacturers will be following suit. There isn't a dull moment in "The Country That God Forgot." Tom Santschi, Selig's athletic star, has perhaps his best character role since he played in "The Spoilers." He is very ably supported by such stars as Mary Charleson, George W. Fawcett, Will Machin and Victoria Forde.

"The Country That God Forgot" will not be released through V-L-S-E and the date originally set for August 21 has been changed. Full details concerning the date for this picture's release will be announced in MOTOGRAPHY later by William N. Selig.

ENLARGE ASSOCIATION

More Members Encouraged to Enter National Association of Motion Picture Industry—Membership Committee Meets in New York

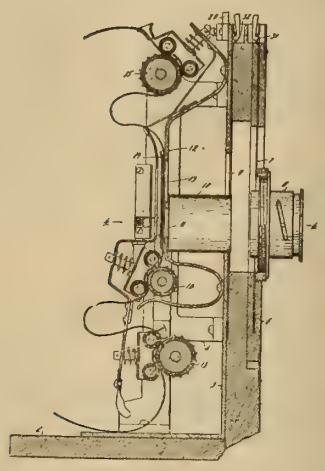
More members from all branches of the business are to be encouraged to enter the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. This was decided at a meeting of the association membership committee held in New York City on August 24.

The committee met at the haedquarters of the Exhibitors' League to continue the consideration of dues and entrance fees, tentative suggestions having been made at a previous meeting.

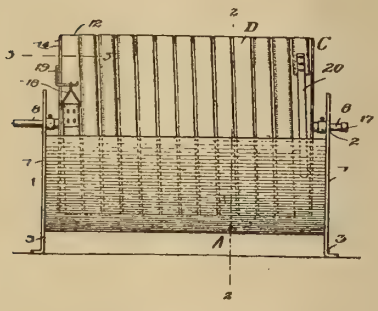
The question of new members was also considered at length and in speaking of this feature W. W. Irwin said:

"We must co-operate with Lee A. Ochs, president of the Exhibitors' League, in building up that organization wherever it is not already flourishing. We must enlist the aid of the members of the national association in various districts, such as Judge Tugwell in California, in getting new members for the association in their particular localities.

"In the matter of dues and initiation fees, the latter should be nominal and fixed. Then the prospective member should be told that the dues will be fixed by the branch committee, of which he will become a member, and thereby he will have a voice in the matter. No man will object to undertaking such a responsibility if he feels that he is to have something to say as to the amount of taxation."



The meeting was not for the purpose of coming to any definite conclusion, but to gather suggestions and refer them to the branch committees which met late last week at various offices throughout the city.



Fred Hawley acted as chairman of the session and F. H. Elliott as secretary. The minutes of the meeting of the previous day were read and commented upon. There was much discussion as to the amounts of entrance fees named in the minutes, some feeling that in certain instances they were inadequate, while others believed them to be too high. These questions are to be thrashed out in branch committee gatherings.

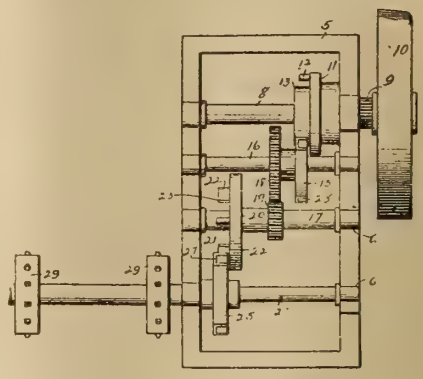
New Things in Picture Mechanics

BY DAVID S. HULFISH

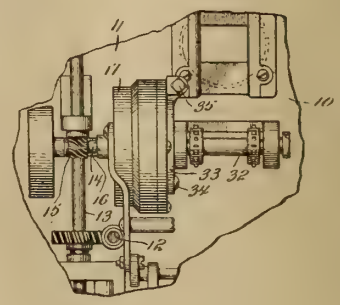
Reading from the top, these new patents are: No. 1,165,147, projector; 1,168,286, method of handling film; 1,166,453, intermittent movement; 1,166,701, a two-audience theater.

THOSE who are familiar with the mechanics of picture making and the handling of film will find some devices of especial interest among the recent patents. Exhibitors will be particularly interested in the theater plan—No. 1,166,701—which allows two audiences to see the same pictures.

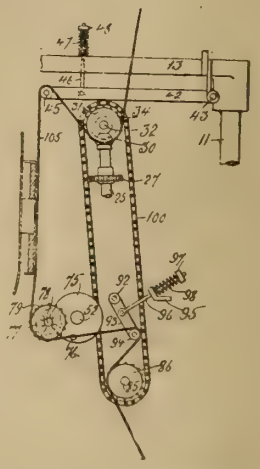
Nos. 1,165,146 and 1,165,147. Projector. Issued to J. T. Wells, assignor to Edwards Manufacturing Co., Cincinnati, Ohio. The complete projector comprises front and rear parts, the rear unit carrying film reels, intermittent mechanism and film gate, and the front part carrying lens and shutter and being movable for framing the picture. The form of the assembly is such that the one device may be used by amateurs as a camera, a printer, and a projector.



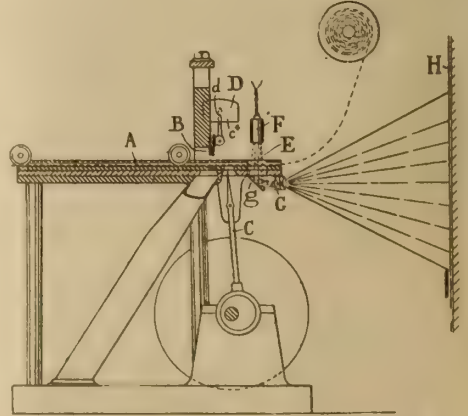
1,165,513. Shutter. Issued to Leo Kamm, London, England. The shutter is constructed as a fan to drive air against the film in the film gate. The film feed may be discontinued and the shutter alone may be run.



1,165,629. Film-Loop Device. Issued to Eberhard Schneider, New York, N. Y. (Application filed May 18, 1910.) The upper and lower feed sprockets revolve at varying speed to reduce the maximum feed loops. Spring pressed arms then keep the film taut in the loops between sprockets.



1,166,120. Convertible Kinemacolor Projector. Issued to W. F. Fox, assignor of part to Kinemacolor Co. of America, New York, N. Y. The Geneva gear has two pins, one of which may be rendered inoperative. When both pins operate, the film moves at double speed for color projections, the steady feed speed being changed also by dependent mechanism.



1,166,121, 1,166,122 and 1,166,123. Kinemacolor Slow Films. Issued to Wm. F. Fox, assignor to Kinemacolor Co. of America, New York, N. Y. The title "Kinemacolor Slow Film" has been used in this review because the film covered by these patents is a film for projection in an ordinary projector at the usual speed of projection instead of at double speed as has been required of Kinemacolor film as publicly used up to the present time. These three patents are patents upon the processes of making the new color film. The finished film is coated upon both sides, the red image upon one side of the film just matching the green image upon the other side, the images carrying their own color and no color screen or color shutters being required. This invention promises much for the future popularity of Kinemacolor, as it presents the Kinemacolor film in new form available to all exhibitors and to all film exchanges, without the handicap of a special projector.

1,166,453. Intermittent Movement. Issued to Leon Gaumont, assignor to Societe Etab. Gaumont, Paris, France. The Geneva movement is used, with this modification: The pin is withdrawn from the face of the pin wheel half the time and the star wheel shifts only on alternate revolutions of the pin wheel. The pin wheel runs at double speed and the shift of the star wheel is made in one-eighth of the total picture time instead of one-quarter.

No. 1,167,854, a new intermittent mechanism, is at the top; then, reading down, comes 1,168,086, an intermittent and framing device; 1,165,629, a fan shutter; and 1,169,097, arrangement for perforating prints.

1,166,569. Screen. Issued to Arthur Wright, assignor to Luna-Lite Co. of America, Dover, Del. A substance called willemite is phosphorescent and becomes slightly luminous briefly after a strong light has been thrown upon it. The improved screen of this patent has a surface containing willemite or an equivalent substance. The slight luminosity following each projected image decreases the shock of the dark interval of film shift.

1,166,701. Theater. Issued to V. L. P. A. M. Mansfield, Berlin-Steglitz, Germany. It is obvious that one may arrange chairs both back and front of a translucent screen, such as ground glass or wet canvas, and by one projection show a picture to two audiences. To one audience, however, the titles would read reversed. Mr. Mansfield remedies this by placing a mirror at a forty-five degree angle back of the screen and then arranging his two audiences at right angles to each other, the audience back of the screen then seeing the picture reversed again by the mirror.

1,167,643. Projector. Issued to W. B. Featherstone, Washington, D. C. The projector is of the type in which the film moves at uniform speed, without intermittent mechanism. Two projecting lenses are used, moving vertically with the film and each traveling less than the width of one picture image. A condenser for each lens reciprocates with its lens.

1,167,854. Intermittent mechanism. Issued to R. P. Stineman and O. O. Taylor, San Diego, Calif. The main drive shaft (with flywheel) drives a Geneva movement, which in turn drives another Geneva movement to turn the intermittent sprocket. A very quick shift is produced, and furthermore the Geneva locking flange touching the sprocket shaft is motionless during the picture interval and does not tend to jiggle the picture when the Geneva is a little loose.

1,168,086. Intermittent Device and Framing Device. Issued to E. E. Maggard, Morehead, Ky. The intermittent mechanism is contained in a pivoted casing and framing is effected by shifting the entire intermittent mechanism upon its axis.

1,168,286. Method of Handling Film. Issued to J. I. Crabtree, assignor to Eastman Kodak Co., Rochester, N. Y. The film strip is wound upon a rubber-covered air-tight drum. The drum then is inflated and the inflated drum and film are immersed in solution for acting upon the film. By this method, the back of the film strip is protected from the solution which is applied freely to the face of the film.

1,168,607. Safety Device. Issued to D. D. Daniel, assignor of part to C. B. Haynes, Richmond, Va. A roller presses upon a taut portion of the film; should the film break the roller would move to stop projection. Another roller is near the lower loop; should the lower loop tighten the second roller will stop projection.

1,169,096. Developing Color Films. Issued to J. E. Thornton, assignor to J. O. O'Brien, Manchester, England. The color film is made wide, with rows of images each of a separate color. A machine is provided for developing the rows of images independently, without permitting the developer or dye belonging to one row to flow over a neighboring row of images.

1,169,097. Perforating Prints. Issued to J. E. Thornton, assignor to J. O. O'Brien, Manchester, England. The negative and the print are made unperforated. The print (or the negative) is perforated by projecting it upon a screen, registering the image with guide marks upon the screen, and then perforating for that image while thus registered. Where a print is made from negatives of several cameras (field cameras alternating with title cameras) the discrepancies of fractions of margin-hole distances may be eliminated.

1,169,098. Color Prints. Issued to J. E. Thornton, assignor to J. O. O'Brien, Manchester, England. A picture film of three widths such as is described in patent No. 1,169,096, is split into three strips, the strips are superposed and glued together, then perforated as described in patent No. 1,169.097.

The union fight at Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, is still unsettled and much bitterness is being shown on both sides. Francis Gilmore, traveling deputy organizer of the White Rats Actors Union, has taken charge of the situation. Late developments from Oklahoma City indicate that the union forces are holding their own. A number of men and women doing picket duty have been arrested by the police and released under bond. All of the combined unions in Oklahoma City have formed a theatrical department with 84 members, which will handle the Oklahoma clash. Most of the unions are fining any member $2 if he or she or their family patronize the stores whose clerks are patronizing the non-union theaters. The fight still goes on and the end is not in sight.

CIRCUS FOR ANN PENNINGTON

"From Foot-lights to Sawdust" in one jump and no reels might be the title of a production giving the contemporaneous history of Ann Pennington, star of the Ziegfeld "Follies" and of Famous Players-Paramount productions. Anyone with a good strong pair of glasses and a quick eye could see the petite star flitting from her hotel in the morning to the Famous Players studio and thence to the New Amsterdam Theater for her dancing acts.

After her debut in "Susie Snowflakes," it was decided to star Miss Pennington in a circus story to be called "The Rainbow Princess," which is being staged under the direction of J. Searle Daley. In this picture Miss Pennington plays a little waif who has been adopted by the wife of the proprietor of a circus and is forced to do a great deal of the mean work around the place in addition to learning to do tricks with the animals.

NEW BLOOD FOR UNIVERSAL

There have been several new players added to the list at Universal City. They include Ruth Clifford, charming ingenue who has been added to general stock; Walter Clinton, a juvenile; Hal Cooley, who has worked for the Universal before on several occasions, has gone into general stock; Irene Aldwyn, William E. Parsons, who has been engaged for character roles; Yvette Mitchell, who will be remembered for her characterization of Chinese girls, and Lillian Concord, formerly star of "The Red Widow," and "The Midnight Girl" on Broadway.

"The Shielding Shadow"

Pathe Offers New Serial Produced by Astra Film Corporation. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

WITHOUT a doubt there is no greater influence contributing to the cheerfulness in the lives of the adherents of the serial form of film entertainment than the remarkable (remarkable to say the least) imagination of George Brackett Seitz. Mr. Seitz has won honors as a writer of serial scenarios. He could even dash off a poor one or so without fear that another for some time to come could force him to relinquish his claim to first position in this field.

Apparently Mr. Seitz has no desire to rest on the laurels won by "The Perils of Pauline," "The Exploits of Elaine" or "The Iron Claw." For now comes "The Shielding Shadow," whose first four episodes convinced us that it is superior to any serial thus far offered by Pathe.

The first four episodes are in every way sufficient to make "The Shielding Shadow" a huge success. For the elements which made other continued pictures so popular are there and they are there in a much more admirable form than usual. Back of a story of love and adventure is a highly fanciful idea, and the fanciful never had a more congenial and advantageous medium than the motion picture serial. Moreover, the thing is not overdone in "The Shielding Shadow." By this we do not mean that the fanciful element is here more plausible than usual, but in making dramatic use of it the author and the producers have applied methods that, at least, are more legitimate than those hitherto utilized.

For some time we have been hearing that the serial was making strides, artistically that is, since commercially its strides were in proportion with the other types of motion pictures, but we must confess that these "artistic" strides failed to attract notice as they made their way across our own perhaps broad, perhaps narrow field of vision until we were shown the beginning of "The Shielding Shadow." In "The Shielding Shadow" the exhibitors have an opportunity to give their patrons a serial showing that which every other kind of photoplay has shown—improvement.

Those who amuse themselves by inventing alliterative phrases—we hope they amuse themselves for the fruit of their labor seems to contain no other reason for existence—in a few months to come may receive an inspiration from an established fact and write out "Shielding Shadow, Serial Success." This picture seems to contain the possibilities of emphatic success and could anything be more comforting to their hopes of realization than the fact that Pathe is releasing the film?

"Treasure Trove," "Into the Depths," "The Mystic Defender" and "The Earthquake" are the titles of the opening episodes. The story told in these four releases of two reels each is of a young girl who lives with her father in Havana. She is in love with an impecunious novelist but her father urges her to accept the wealthy Sebastion Navarro. The novelist, Jerry Carson, is aboard the ship owned by the girl's father when it is wrecked. He is washed ashore on a barren island and there finds a manuscript in a bottle. The notes tell of the location of a certain island where is hidden a great treasure.

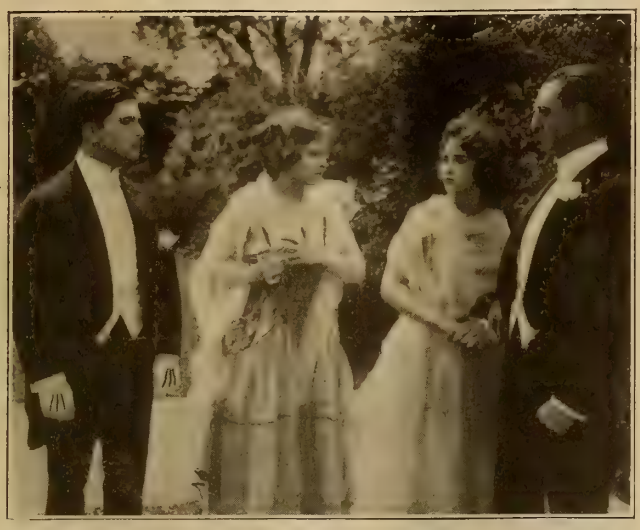
Carson makes his way back to Havana and in a struggle with a man who is doing Navarro's bidding in misrepresenting Carson, an accident occurs. The man is killed and Carson is convicted of murder. The struggle is witnessed by "One Lamp Louie." This person thereafter has no trouble in getting money from Sebastion. Carson makes a sensational escape and the newspapers print the story which makes it look as though the novelist was killed. Leontine now consents to marry Navarro.

Carson makes for the treasure island and in addition to a hoard of gold he finds some wonderful discovery which gives him power to be aware of actions beyond the scope of his eyes and to project his will-power through space. The last actually seen of Carson is when he is being drawn under the water by an octopus. Thereafter there is an elderly gentleman who on several occasions comes to the aid of Leontine. These occasions present tense situations.

The production of the picture surpasses other serials, both in the expenditure of directorial skill and money. Though perhaps it is the skill of the directors that gave the picture the finish to settings and action that is often attributed to a free hand in paying for the necessities of staging. Certainly, the shipwreck is a fine bit of spectacular production. Louis J. Gasnier and Donald Mackenzie are the directors.

Ralph Kellard, Grace Darmond and Leon Barry are the leading players. Kellard is all that the word "excellent" implies as Jerry Carson. Miss Darmond lacks none of the good looks and appeal to be a successful heroine and Leon Barry has our greatest admiration for the manner in which he plays Sebastion Navarro. The supporting cast is remarkably good.

"The Fear of Poverty"



Pathe Gold Rooster Offering a Drama of Merit. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

ONE of the grandest and most comforting little sayings we know of is "money is not everything." We have no intention of here going into a discourse relative to the reason for our fondness for the oft repeated phrase. This is to be a review of a picture, not an essay. And to be perfectly frank and above-board the review was not started that way because we are in the frame of mind that usually turns to philosophy, one might call it that for it is, more or less, but we had to have a starter for a review on a quite admirable screen drama dealing with wealth versus happiness and that bit of truth received the "first come, first served" treatment.

"The Fear of Poverty" will be released by Pathe on September 10. It is a Gold Rooster Play produced by Thanhouser and featuring Florence La Badie. From a story by Agnes Johnson, Fred Sullivan, the director, has made a picture that commends itself to praise of no ordinary character, because "The Fear of Poverty" is a screen drama that is better than good as the word is ordinarily used in speaking of a photoplay.

The story tells of a young woman who refuses to marry the man she loves because she has seen so much disaster result from poverty. She dreads the very thought of bringing children into this world of want in which both move. Then Jim Lane tells the girl that he is working on an invention that will make him rich and she marries him with but one idea in mind, and that is to help him grow rich. They toil for years and finally realize their goal. But the wife is disappointed. The beautiful things she has fail to give her the pleasure some cheap little trinket afforded her in her youth. The husband is prematurely aged. He dies suddenly from an attack brought on by years of over-work.

The future holds one ray of hope for Mrs. Lane. Her child, a girl, is born after the death of the father. Florence, the daughter, knows no such thing as an ungratified desire and the result is she makes a spoiled, unreasonable young woman. An artist proposes marriage to her and she is on the point of marrying him when she is piqued at a rejected suitor's indifference. Now her one idea is to marry the supposedly wealthy young man. In doing this she is playing into his hand, as she realizes when he confesses that he married her for her money a year or so later. Financial troubles drive her husband to suicide. This awakens both the mother and the young wife to the face that real happiness is a flower springing from the seed of love and contentment, and she has had experience enough to know that money has no power to bring either.

The story is consistently interesting, logically developed and presents some splendid dramatic situations. The production and enactment of the play are of a high order of quality. Miss La Badie is delightful in her portrayal of the dual role given her. She plays both mother and daughter and her acting is ample reason for being pleased that she did, the only condition working against this order of things being some defects in the double exposure scenes and those requiring a "double." Robert Vaughn, Edwin Stanley, George Marlo and Ethyl Cook are included in the cast.

"His Brother's Keeper"

Three Reel Selig Drama Released September 4. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

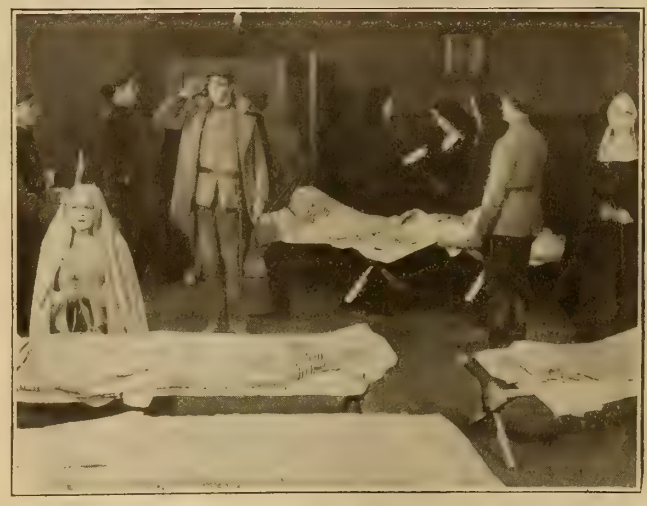
THIS is a crook play with much action and a number of exciting situations. A girl whose mother has trained her as a thief is the heroine, a role played by Fritzi Brunette. The story has sufficient complication to hold the interest, although occasionally the plot and situations could have been made clearer by a few more subtitles. The acting is the best feature of the release, the players interpreting their roles well. Eugenie Besserer appears as the mother who lives a dual life of a society woman and thief. Harry Lonsdale plays "The Fox," her accomplice. Leo J. Pierson is Edward McElroy, who falls in love with Julia, the daughter of the thief, and Edward J. Piel is Will McElroy, police lieutenant, who knows the history of the girl and her mother and tries to prevent the marriage of his brother and Julia.

William Robert Daly directed the play from a story by I. K. Friedman.

The Story: Mrs. Vantine, who poses as a society woman, and who is really a thief, has trained her daughter, Julia, as her aid. But although she was willing for her daughter to be a thief, she did not wish her to marry one, and she and her partner, "The Fox," quarrel when the latter wishes to marry Julia.

Dr. Edward McElroy falls in love with Julia, not knowing who she is. His brother, Will, a police lieutenant, warns Edward that the girl is a thief. "The Fox," jealous, plans to discredit Mrs. Vantine and Julia. He plots with Mrs. Vantine to rob a residence, then informs the police. Also he manages to lure Julia to this house, so that she may appear a party to the robbery. But his plans go wrong, for Julia has enlisted the aid of the doctor, who arrives on the scene in time to rescue the girl. In the struggle which follows, the mother is killed. The doctor remains true to the girl, in spite of her parentage and training.

"The Victory of Conscience"



Love Romance Featuring Lou-Tellegen Offered by Lasky-Paramount. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

THE distinguished Lou-Tellegen makes his latest screen appearance in "The Victory of Conscience," a Lasky-Paramount offering adapted by Margaret Turnbull from an original script by Alexandro de Jannelli. Mr. Tellegen has a role such as most stars of the screen delight in playing since it allows him to be the center of all interest the story creates, but his personality does not stand out above the story and he must be credited with a life-like and sincere characterization.

A love romance of good construction and one whose theme is productive of dramatic effect, "The Victory of Conscience" despite its realistic visualization falls just short of being impressive. And a search for the reason serves only to render timorous one who would say that the picture is unimpressive. But the fact remains that "The Victory of Conscience," while admittedly a picture artistically unfolding an interesting romance, fails to take hold of the spectator. Perhaps the ever present promise which never is fulfilled causes the spectator to live in the future to the exclusion of a true appreciation of the action going on before his very eyes.

Mr. Tellegen is cast as a care-free Frenchman who, with a friend, practically kidnaps a little dancer from a tavern in the country and brings her to Paris in his motor. The innocent Rosette is in love with Louis, but he has no idea of it and he is surprised when she asks him the following morning if he is going to marry her soon. Rosette, her faith in both God and man shattered, immediately leaves Louis.

Remy, whose love for Rosette is not returned, locates Louis and attacks him. The young nobleman barely escapes death as a result of his injuries and when he does recover he enters the priesthood. A year or so later he meets Rosette again, and from the time he discovers that she is famous—or notorious—throughout Paris as a cafe dancer he is tortured by his conscience. He decides that she must be saved from herself and to this end he follows her about; even entering the cafes in the hope that he may have an opportunity to speak with her.

After many open insults thrust at him by her, Louis pleads with her to enter the convent. She loves the priest and always has loved him and it is only because of her love for him that she becomes a nun. The remainder of the play tells of the death of both at a field hospital which Louis, now wearing the uniform of France, protects single-handed.

The action has every advantage in the way of artistic settings and fine photography. Cleo Ridgely as Rosette plays opposite Mr. Tellegen and she is highly successful in all her scenes with the exception of those in which she is called upon to dance. Louis is attracted to Rosette because he is told she dances like an angel, but unfortunately Miss Ridgley, who cannot be expected to do everything as well as she can act, gives terpsichorean exhibitions which fail to bear out the account given to Louis. This may seem like carping over small matters, but we think it just as important for a dancer to dance as it is for the settings to be realistic and the other details of staging correct.

Elliott Dexter is a convincing and rather colorful Prince Dimitri. The other parts are effectively played by Thomas Delmar, Laura Woods Cushing and John McKennon.

"The Little Liar"

Triangle-Fine Arts Offering is Unusual. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

quently it is rather out of the run of average film offerings. The play is not episodic but the situations it contains are not presented with emphasis upon their dramatic effect, but instead they are touches contributed to the depiction of an unusual girl.

Mae Marsh gives a truly fine characterization of the orphan around whom the story is built. Maggie is the daughter of a worthless sort of couple. She is a confirmed liar, but she does not lie to deceive, which may bring one to ask whether or not she really tells lies. Maggie has an imagination and it surely plays her tricks.

The girl lives in a dream and it is only when some incident or circumstance produced by the practical influences which govern man that she awakes to find herself a real being of this earth and then she is as likely as not to tell whoever is about that she has just been having the grandest lunch. Consequently, all those around her come to one conclusion and that is that she is a terrible liar.

Her parents entrust her to a boarding house mistress, but Maggie is not a success as a waitress and the mistress, after an unsuccessful attempt to give her back to her parents, finds her a position at a department store. The floorwalker is in league with a light-fingered woman and one of their thefts is charged up to Maggie. She is arrested and in the cell is given some poisonous tablets by a jaded woman who advises her to eat them in preference to going to jail. She is convicted but before taking the poison she writes a wonderful document in which she explains her peculiar attitude. Poor Maggie is cleared of the theft attributed to her and her document is found to show positive genius, but this comes too late, for by the time the judge and the editor who finds the manuscript so remarkable reach the cell Maggie has succumbed to the deadly effects of the drug.

The ending is not depressing even though the last scene is laid in the room where the dead girl's parents and those who knew her gather about the casket to pay the usual maudlin "respects" to one whom, after all, they could not be blamed for misunderstanding. Regardless of the public's aversion for unhappy endings, there was really no other course for the author. Maggie possessed a mind that undoubtedly was capable of great things if only it had been properly harnessed, but as long as it was not she was little more than a simpleton.

The story is by Anita Loos, who is deserving of much credit, for it is an admirable story of the type and the fact that the "type" is not the most successful from a standpoint of entertainment takes nothing away from the real achievement. Lloyd Ingraham gave the piece a thoroughly artistic visualization, while Mae Marsh and her supporting cast are entitled to high praise. Robert Harron, Olga Gray, Carl Stockdale and Jenny Lee have the important roles.

"The Wolf Woman"

Triangle-Ince Production Features Louise Glaum. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

NO type, not even the sweet little waif, has won a more prominent niche in the hall of film fame than the vampire. She is now a staple character for the scenario writer to construct a play around because the picturegoing public has placed its stamp of approval upon her. Therefore one has no right to speak slightingly of the vampire even if one finds it impossible to regard her as anything more than a theatrical property. All of which leads us up to the statement of a conviction that in "The Wolf Woman" we have seen the vampire have her innings, and going still further our belief that Louise Glaum's "Wolf Woman" is to date the vampire supreme.

"The Wolf Woman" is by C. Gardner Sullivan and Mr. Sullivan has devised a sound play for Miss Glaum. She has every opportunity to display her talents both as an actress and artistry in dressing for the occasion. Miss Glaum wears a variety of the most remarkable gowns and her ability to really wear such clothes is by no means the most unimportant factor in her success in depicting vampire roles. "The Wolf Woman" gives Miss Glaum her opportunity and to sit before the screen and behold her effective utilization of that opportunity is to be really fascinated.

The story pits goodness against evil and as virtue triumphs in the end the moral effect is good. There is nothing offensive in the working out of the theme but while the producers are to be complimented for making the play so inoffensively vivid the Board of Review Committee would probably make a mark after the Yes following the line on their ballot which reads, "is this picture suitable for adult audiences only?"

"The Wolf Woman" sways men by her great physical attraction. We see one example of her heartlessness in the racked John Morton, a once brilliant lawyer. Her next victim is a young man. The youth's brother calls on Leila prepared to give her any sum she may ask to loose her grip upon the now completely enslaved Rex Walden. He, like the rest, finds her attractive and even after his younger brother kills himself Franklin calls upon Leila. But a girl of high mental qualities at the request of Franklin's mother wins his affection, not through her material charm but by intelligently playing mentality and goodness against the physical and the evil. When Leila loses in this contest she loses the confidence in herself that accounted for much of her power. In a state of intoxication she has an accident which horribly disfigures her and in the end she is a broken and dispirited shadow of her former conceited and ambitious self.

The settings are splendid, especially so are the apartments of Lelia Aradelle. Leila's callers always find the stage set, for she has made a study of this. The production is by Raymond B. West, and the supporting cast includes Charles Ray, Wyndham Standing, Marjory Temple and Howard Hickman. "The Wolf Woman" shows the vampire in all her savage glory, and the public she claims for her own will find the picture fascinating.

"Youth's Endearing Charm"

Mary Miles Minter in Six Reel American Mutual Drama. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE popular and very youthful leading lady of this feature is its chief attraction. Mary Miles Minter has a strong following and her first appearance under her new management will win attention. The play, whose story was written by Mabel Heikes Justice, contains many incidents which are full of opportunities for Miss Minter. Both story and direction may be said to emphasize the star, showing her in a variety of poses, moods and costumes. This system is damaging to the production more from the artistic than from the box office standpoint, however, and little Mary is so pretty and so appealing that few of her admirers among picture patrons will quarrel with this feature of the play.

The story of the play is lacking in logic. The plot follows somewhat the outlines of an Horatio Alger book, except that the leading character is an orphan girl instead of a boy. The story begins with the heroine in an orphan asylum and ends with her in the arms of a millionaire's son, to whom she is affianced. The intervening incidents are highly improbable, and of themselves only moderately interesting. But they contain a number of incidents which have an appeal.

Miss Minter puts her points across with much skill. Whatever she does is effective. Also she photographs beautifully and is always a pretty picture. Her acting is sincere, and she plays the pathetic scenes especially well. A more generous allowance of humor in the play would have emphasized these, however.

The supporting cast of players is headed by Wallace MacDonald as Harry Disbrow, a wealthy man's son. In appearance he is well fitted to play the role in this story, and very little acting is required of him. Margaret Nichols appears as a society girl, Mary's rival. Harry Von Meter, Gertrude Le Brandt, Alfred Ferguson, Bessie Banks and Harvey Clark in character roles are good. A very important member of the cast is Mary's pet dog, Zippy.

The settings and photography are good and the plot clearly presented. William C. Dowlan directed.

The Story: Mary Wade is taken from an orphan asylum by a hard hearted farmer and his wife. She enjoys many of the incidents of farm life, but is so harshly treated by her employers that she runs away. She earns her way to the city by caring for an unruly baby on the train. In the city, she imitates a blind beggar, whom she notices at the station, and with an "I am Blind" sign and tin cup, begs from the passersby, an amusing incident. As a result of the trick, she lands in jail. There she meets the hero, Harry, arrested for drunkenness. He assumes responsibility for the girl and takes her to his home, where she becomes a servant. Harry falls in love with her, although he is engaged to marry the daughter of his father's partner.

The last two reels contain most of the action of the story, and disclose the crookedness of the partner, which endangers the firm's wealth. The engagement of the young people is broken, and little orphan Mary, who has won the hearts of the parents as well as the son, becomes Harry's bride, but not before she had gone back to the orphan asylum, heart-broken, where she is found by Harry and his father and where a touching reconciliation forms the last scene of the picture.

The release date is September 4.

"Beatrice Fairfax"

International Serial's Third and Fourth Episodes. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

THE third and fourth episodes of the International serial, "Beatrice Fairfax," are, generally considered, much along the lines of the opening releases. This is so in regard to the development of the plots, which of course differ essentially in the material used—the acting and the direction.

The third episode tells of a criminal who escapes from prison and seeks revenge upon the judge who sentenced him. Jimmy Barton, the star reporter of the Evening Journal, is sent out to get a story on the jail-breaking crook and as he is somewhat of a sleuth he delves deeper into the affair than if he was merely working for a story on it.

Barton and a detective pick up a clue which they successfully follow and are hot on the trail of the crook and his associates who have kidnapped the Judge's little daughter when Beatrice Fairfax is by coincidence led to the scene of the crook's revenge. A messenger boy is in love with the little girl and has written to Beatrice Fairfax for advice and he is the means of bringing her to the hut near the river's edge. These two are captured, but Barton and the detective come to the rescue of all. The ending is quite stirring and throughout the picture there is plenty of action.

"The Stone God," which is the fourth release, is even more lively than "Billie's Romance." "The Stone God' utilizes that well worn story of the Hindu Prince who follows a man who has stolen an idol from one of the altars in India. When Rajo Jaibel arrives here Barton is sent to interview him, but it seems a hopeless job. The daughter of the Englishman with the stone god writes to Beatrice Fairfax for lovelorn advice, as her father has forbidden her to marry the man of her choice.

The girl's address interests Jimmy, for he has seen the Prince write it out on a slip of paper. Jimmy and Beatrice arrive at the house to find the Englishman dead and the daughter's lover held for the crime. They do not agree with the police and at considerable risk to their own lives locate the real murderer of McRay.

Both of these episodes are if anything more interesting than the first two in the serial, and there seems little doubt that the following "Beatrice Fairfax" will attract will find them very satisfactory entertainment.

With both Grace Darling and Betty Howe appearing frequently in "The Stone God" there is no deying the fact that that picture displays a quantity of beauty. These two pictures seem to do more justice to Miss Darling's well known attractiveness as well as her ability to act before the camera, though to be frank about it she is much more pleasing when she makes no attempt at acting. The Jimmy Barton of Harry Fox continues to be pleasantly prominent.

"The Honorable Friend"

Five-Part Lasky-Paramount Drama Features Sessue Hayakawa. Reviewed by George W. Graves

IN THIS drama by Elizabeth McGaffey we have a novel cast headed by Sessue Hayakawa, the finished Japanese actor, who is given ample scope to exercise his dramatic ability as well as his muscular strength. It is safe to say that those who will see this picture will come at least to one conclusion—that Mr. Hayakawa is a top-notch, forceful actor, eminently suited to motion picture work.

Playing opposite him is the demure Tsuri Aoki, whose glistening coiffure is quite a feature of the picture. Her acting is refined and distinctive. Two other Japanese, G. Kino and M. Matsumato, complete the cast's foreign talent, while Raymond Hatton in the heavy character part instils the proper emotions in his audience.

The situations in the story only key one up to a moderate interest—the star's excellent performance, the artistic production and good, but slow-timed direction, do the rest. Therefore it can be conceded that the whole offering will please and entertain, but not thrill, the average movie-goer.

The story deals with the plotting of a wealthy, unscrupulous Japanese, Kayosho, who, realizing that his face will afford meager inducement to bring the beautiful Toki-Ye across from Japan, uses the photo of his handsome gardener, Makino, to get her into his power in America, the understanding between him and Makino being that the latter is to have the girl for his wife.

Toki-Ye and Makino are really married legally upon the former's arrival in this country, although Kayosho makes them think later that the ceremony has not been genuine. Toki-Ye is the niece of Goto, Kayosho's business manager, and her presence in America is carefully kept secret from Goto. The latter, for reasons of blood and tradition, incensed at his employer's retraction of his long-promised consent to marry his (Goto's) daughter, kills Kayosho, but the spectator is led to believe that Makino is the murderer. In the process of a third degree examination Goto confesses his guilt, Makino is set free and the lovers enter the land of uninvaded bliss.

ordinarily connects with Hindoo mystics. The sets showing his apartments are quite elaborate.

His influence over a young bride, played by Helene Rosson, forms the theme of the play. Occultism, Far Eastern mysticism, undoubtedly has a fascination for certain people, and these will enjoy the play very much. Their attention should be called to this element in the drama. Others will not be so much impressed by the story.

William C. Dowlan directed the picture from a story by Clifford Howard. George Webb has the role of the artist husband, and Eugenie Forde is again a "vampire." The acting is generally good. The photography is very beautiful.

The Story: Prince Zarak falls in love with Lucile Cartier whom he meets at the studio of Cyril Edwards, portrait painter. The prince resolves to win the girl eventually, and seemingly is not much disturbed when she marries the artist. He sets about to break up their happiness, and uses as his instrument Zonia (Eugenie Forde), a former favorite. She poses for the artist, and by the use of a magic potion, for a time wins his love.

As a result, Lucile goes to discuss her troubles with the prince, who places her under a hypnotic spell. When Zonia learns that the prince is in love with Lucile, and that she has been only the tool to carry out his plans, she warns the artist and together they rescue Lucile. Then Zonia stabs the prince and herself.

neighbors. "Little Miss Happiness" may bring cheerfulness into the homes of those about her, but owing to a story which has an amazing disregard for continuity and reality she is not so successful in making the spectator glow with enthusiasm or the "pure love of living."

The story is by Clarence J. Harris and John G. Adolfi directed its picturization. Mr. Adolfi injected many pretty touches and they serve to show that the play as well as the players had possibilities but there was no concerted or persevering effort to bring them into actual being. Before the picture proceeds very far the spectator becomes prepared for most any episode that may arise and we for one were not in the least surprised when a scene showing the hero leading a cow on whose back Lucy sits faded into a letter from the villain who married and deserted Sadie Allen. The letter clears the cloudy sky hovering over the innocent Lucy and all ends happily.

The direction, the play and the acting have their good spots, but the space separating them is filled with a blending of disconnected episodes, commonplace situations and crudities. Lucy White lives with her impoverished grandmother. Lucy sells yeast to the neghbors and though her grandmother does not believe in saving, her doctrine being that the Lord will take care of her, Lucy puts her money aside. The girl takes care of an ill woman's baby and there is much gossip about this. With her savings, Lucy pays the interest on the mortgage and so foils the villainous plans of Squire Allen. The husband of the deserted wife reforms and returns to Sadie and Lucy is vindicated. She marries Dave Allen.

Harry Hilliard is Dave Allen. Mr. Hilliard mars what might have been a good performance by glancing at the camera most every time he comes into the picture. The acting honors go to Sara Alexander as Grandma White. Zena Keefe is a sincere Sadie Allen; Sidney Bracy is cast as Jim Butterfield, who is a sort of punching-bag for Dave, and the balance of the cast is made up of Robert Vivian, Lucia Moore, Genevieve Reynold and Grace Beaumont.

"A Million for a Baby"

Three Reel Essanay Drama Released September 9. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE author of this story seems to have striven for originality, even when he had to sacrifice all probability to gain it. The play is not especially pleasing, although its various complications may hold the interest of some audiences. The turn of events is not obvious, but neither is it very logical. The photography and settings are good, the acting satisfactory. Bryant Washburn and Marguerite Clayton have the leading sympathetic roles, while John Lorenz and Lillian Drew are villians of darkest hue.

The Story: When Edna Gallard's father dies, he leaves a will by which his son-in-law, Hugh Gallard, is deprived of any portion of his wealth. Edna (Marguerite Clayton) is provided for by an allowance, and the fortune itself it left in trust with an attorney, Daniel Druce (Bryant Washburn). If the Gallards have no children, the property will go to charity.

Hugh spends his time planning a way of circumventing the will and getting the money. He suggests that his wife adopt a baby, a plan to which she agrees. Apparently they abandon this scheme, and Hugh pretends to go away on a business trip, on funds supplied by his wife. In reality he stays in the city with his friends, among whom is the adventuress, Sylvia. He gambles away the money, and asks for more.

In the meantime, Edna and Druce have fallen in love with each other. Hugh plans to compromise them and then resort to blackmail. Edna goes away on a visit and returns with a baby. Hugh claims control of the fortune, as guardian of the child. Druce, in order to clear up the situation, disappears with the fortune left in his care. After Hugh, thinking the money lost, has divorced Edna, Druce returns and marries her.

"The Kid"

Blue Ribbon V. L. S. E. Release With Lillian Walker. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

"THE KID" was written and produced under the direction of Wilfrid North, who apparently strove to make a vehicle for Lillian Walker. Miss Walker appears as a girl newspaper reporter who drives the invisible head of a meat-trust from under cover only to learn that Robinson is her own father.

Robinson had won the confidence of her unfortunate mother and then betrayed her. "The Kid,' as she is called by her foster parent, does not learn the conditions under which she was born until she has reached young womanhood. Her first big chance after becoming a member of the staff of the New York Herald comes when she sets out to discover something about the murder of Mrs. Robinson. The Kid causes the arrest of the murderer, a Mexican who is really the tool of Robinson in raising the price of meat, and then the truth about Robinson, or Dunster as he is otherwise known, comes out.

The intention of the author was to follow the adventures of the girl in winning recognition as a reporter and consequently the interest must center upon The Kid if the picture is to entertain. The intrigue of the meat pirates and the murder fail to move the spectator to any appreciable extent, though the introduction of this melodrama was made with an eye to adding color and action to the narrative of the girl's adventures.

Miss Walker is a pleasing actress and she has many admirers, but it is doubtful if she alone can carry "The Kid" to even average success with the patrons of the screen. "The Kid" starts and travels the distance of six reels at a slow pace and it must be said that there is nothing in the way of situations to relieve the tedium of action that is both listless and pointless.

The staging of the picture is good and the acting is of an order high enough to suit any picturegoer. Ned Finley, Eulalie Jensen and Robert Gaillard support Miss Walker. It is not very likely that the absence of the so-called love interest will create the remarks—remarks flavored with more or less admiration that is—caused by a certain recent offering featuring a male star. The present-day visitors to the picture theatres are, doubtless, keen for love interest, but at the same time it is possible to make pictures that are entertaining in spite of an ending that is kissless.

pretty exterior scenes. There is little action in the first reel, but in the second the plot is given a new twist when Gloria begins to discover new phases of the situation. There are a number of scenes which go back to the early part of the story, as Royce and Judge Freeman tell Gloria their version of the murder mystery.

The Story: Trask, whom Gloria is pursuing as the murderer of Freneau, was wounded in the fight on the barge in the preceding chapter, and is brought to the Stafford home. Dr. Royce, still endeavoring to shield Gloria from the disillusioning truth, forbids her to question Trask. Royce has in his possession the package containing the letters from Lois to Freneau, which he took from the dead man's pocket. By chance, Gloria's little protege, Staas, gets possession of the letters and shows them to Gloria. Then Royce is forced to tell the girl the truth, that he had discovered the love affair between Freneau and the wife of Gloria's brother.

Gloria next interviews Judge Freeman, Lois' father. He at first tries to evade her, but at last tells of his knowledge of the affair between his daughter and Freneau, and of his fear that David would kill Freneau. He also reveals the fact that it was he who removed the murdered man's body. He believed that David had hired Trask to kill the villain and that a scandal would break should Trask be captured. Gloria is now in terror lest her brother and not Trask is the guilty one. When she goes to Trask to learn the truth, she finds that he had been spirited away. For Judge Freeman is determined to save his daughter's reputation at any cost.

"The Count"

Chaplin Typical in Latest Mutual Release. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

IN "The Count" Charlie Chaplin comes back with his famous make-up, shoes, cane, hat and all; the only change we noticed being in the hat, which is brown. When we entered the projection room we carried along a determination to count the big laughs the picture produced, but no sooner did Chaplin start to measure the new customer to the ladies tailor shop than we, like the other spectators, were too absorbed with being amused and diverted to think about anything else for the period of two reels, or one-half hour.

The reviewer who starts in to tell how funny Charles Chaplin is, whether he be in this picture or that, is not only dissipating time but also good white paper which, from all present indications, will soon be the luxury the Ford was as far back as the once-upon-a-time days. There is only one avenue open to the describer of Chaplin pictures and that is to compare it with previous releases. Therefore our conscience is unburdened with the statement that "The Count" is as funny as "The Fireman."

The opening scene shows the truly great comedian in a tailor shop. From there he goes to call on the cook of a wealthy and socially ambitious household. To escape another visitor he jumps into the dumb-waiter and in no time is raised both physically and socially—which only goes to show that a dumb-waiter has something on an onion, for that vegetable, as Nat Wills would says, builds up physically, but socially—words are not adequate.

The boss of the tailor shop comes to the house and represents himself as the Count Broko, or rather he expects to represent himself thus, but Charlie gets there first and the tailor must needs be satisfied with being the secretary of the illustrious nobleman. The banquet table, the dance floor, in fact, the entire affair given by the Moneybags family is a whole world for Chaplin to move about in, and the moving is all good fun for the spectator.

Signal Entertains "City Dads"

As a token of their appreciation of the many favors accorded them by the business men and citizens of Arcata, California, where they are now quartered, the Signal Film Corporation last week gave a ball at the Arcata Hotel to the city chamber of commerce, the Business Men's Club and allied organizations who have combined to make the film company's stay in their midst as pleasant as possible.

To attempt to enumerate the many things which the citizens of Arcata have done to co-operate with the Signal forces since their arrival is a difficult task. Perhaps the most thoughtful act of them all, however, was the donating of a lot to the company by the Chamber, to be used as a studio. The donors not only arranged for the company to use the lot for as long a period as they cared to, but in addition had built for them a stage on which to construct the interior sets necessary to the production of their serial feature, "The Lass of the Lumberlands," in the title role of which Helen Holmes is to be featured.

Nearly two hundred guests from all over the county gathered in attendance at the ball and danced till a late hour. A banquet was served at midnight and short speeches of welcome and appreciation were delivered by Director General J. P. McGowan of the Signal forces and by various members of the business men's associations.

Advertising Aid for Exhibitor

The latest move of Wm. L. Sherry in carrying out the general Paramount plan of co-operation and advertising for the Paramount houses is the installation of a brand new department for the express purpose of conducting local advertising campaigns centered about each theater. E. V. Morrison, originator of the business report system known as Manager's Screen Reports, has been engaged to conduct this department.

The establishment of the new department is in keeping with the Paramount's recent inaugural of local advertising managers for each exchange. Mr. Morrison's position is a new one and his duties will be those of co-operating with the exhibitor in all local advertising work and bringing the fruits of the general advertising to bear right down on the individual house as well as creating new press material to suit local conditions.

The advertising problems of theaters are so distinctly individual that Mr. Sherry has decided the best way to assist a house in advertising the Paramount program is to have a man from the home office of the exchange visit the house, learn the exact conditions which the house must meet and co-operate with the house manager in solving these problems.

The members of the Signal Film Corporation are at work rehearsing for a production of the well known drama by Eugene Walters, "Bought and Paid For," to be given in Arcata, California, as a benefit performance, the Signal corporation's part towards beautifying the wonderful natural park which lies within the limits of the city of Arcata.

Advertising Your Theater

VALUABLE EXPERIENCES

UNTIL recently only the larger theaters have been advertised properly, but with the coming of the cinema spectacles presented in a way to attract quarters and dollars instead of ten-cent pieces, more attention has been paid to proper profit-promoting publicity. So there has sprung a group of advertising men who have been successful in swelling box office receipts. And they have centered their efforts on the building of business for motion picture theaters. The following article, signed by Mr. Fullerton, the advertising manager for the Greater Theaters Company, Inc., of Seattle, Washington, operating the Alhambra, Coliseum, Liberty and Mission theater, is one of a series MOTOGRAPHY proposes to offer to its readers.

The Daily Newspaper

By GORDON F. FULLERTON.

NEWSPAPERS, it is admitted, are the ideal medium to convey the picture exhibitors' message to the prospective patron. It goes direct to the home; is received with welcome arms because of the news it contains and above all in importance is a part of daily life. The modern American newspaper is a habit. There is no other advertising medium that can qualify that way except the newspaper.

The morning and afternoon newspapers have different values in different cities. Which is the best for the exhibitor advertiser can only be determined by actual testing of the mediums—not once but for several months in which time the value of the shows will balance. Much time can be saved and money as well, by investigating the circulations of the different mediums. The one having the largest local circulation usually being the most valuable for it gives quicker results and gets to real prospects who can act on the impulse created by the ad.

The newspaper that carries a photoplay column (all other things being equal—circulation and prestige) is far more valuable to the exhibitor advertiser than a paper which does not. A photoplay column will attract the fans, like light will attract a moth—and it is best to hunt where the game is.

Cuts should be used, either pictures from the play, of the star who is featured, or even a fanciful piece of art work suggested by the title of the play. This not only enlivens the ad, making it more readable, but increases the value of the ad by at least 100 per cent. An example of this is the prevalence of cuts in high-priced mediums—for instance, the Saturday Evening Post, which costs more than $125 an inch, and is written by the highest salaried advertising men in the world.

The cut value (pictures) is figured two ways—for hundreds and thousands of years our ancestors could see pictures, and draw pictures, hence a picture is quickly read, its message "gets across" quicker, because we have in a sense inherited the instinct of reading pictures through uncounted generations, while reading of type is only the accomplishment of about fifty years considering the race as a whole.

The average newspaper is gray-white paper and black type, so a clear-cut picture that is attractive, with black, flashy type, and lots of white space is a combination that is hard to beat. It gets attention, then it's up to you—what you have said—whether your ad pulls people into your theater or not, assuming that you have a pulling production.

A question that is asked often, and seems to be a puzzle, is how to get stories across in the papers. Making allowances for the personality of the editor to be dealt with, the rest is a simple formula. Write short, snappy articles, make them newsy. Don't try to write the name of theater in every other line, one mention is enough. If the article is read at all it will be seen.

For pictures select subjects that are clear and printed in black and white. As a rule pretty women stars, and scenes with plenty of action appear to the best advantage in the newspaper ad and have the best chance of being accepted. Don't try to force an article on the editor "because you are an advertiser." Give him newsy stories and the right kind of pictures and you will be welcomed instead of shunned.

Sometimes the best stories are side-tracked when a big news story breaks, so don't get discouraged or peeved—your newspaper men have troubles of their own. A paper with a "late break" is like your house, playing to capacity business—both would like to handle more—one is news—the other people; but it can't be done and consequently somebody is disappointed. As a usual thing the newspapers are willing to accept stories and pictures of your features provided the stories are written with a news angle.

Women stars—young and pretty—in pictures apparently pull stronger and attract more attention, create more comment than the men stars do—possibly because both men and women are interested in pretty women stars.

The truth always pays and pays big dividends too, when it comes to newspaper advertising. You might fool the public—once or even more times, but you'll lose in the end.

BILLBOARDS. Billboards are a medium of general advertising whose strength lies in the repetition, pictorial and color effects. It is essentially used to back up newspaper advertising, for it cannot explain, it cannot elaborate on a feature—practically all that can be said on a billboard (that can be seen and read by the passerby) is the name of the theater, the name of the star playing, what he or she is playing in, and the date.

The billboards are placed along the highways of the greatest travel, which in cities means the street car lines. This must be born in mind in selecting pictorial paper and making up your stands, because your reader under these conditions only gets a limited chance to read your message. Your pictorial paper, to be understandable, must be simple in design, flashy in makeup and your type matter short and to the point.

Mr. Street Car Rider, going to or from work, gets your message repeated time after time. Then sees your ad in the newspaper, it explains and presto, he's on his way to see your show, and there's another dime or dollar in the box office.

Keep your paper fresh! Never let stands become a part of the scenery. Make them stand out like a price tag on a new suit! Another point don't let your paper live after the show is taken off. It hurts your business. The public soon thinks that they cannot depend on your billboards for accurate information. Then your boards are worse than useless—they are untrustworthy.

Get your stands on the best traveled routes, as close to the corner where the car stops as possible, because they will have a better chance of being seen and read, and also of being seen and read at night as the street corner is always the best lighted part of any city block.

The Liberty theater in Seattle uses 50 28-sheet stands, each week, these stands selected by the rules above noted. As the Liberty changes twice a week, the stand is divided, a seven-sheet streamer, taking the entire top, with the word "Liberty" while the remaining sheets are divided into a nine-sheet and twelve-sheet stand, for the Sunday, Monday and Tuesday show, and the four-day show respectively.

Usually pictorial paper is used on one show, placed so that it divides the two shows, for instance:

Streamer—

Pictorial

The pictorial paper, like pictures in the newspaper ads, not only enlivens the stands, but attracts attention where the plain type stand would not.

Different colors each week, or different colors in combination is another way of keeping your stands fresh and attractive.

Lobby. The lobby being the first impression a patron gets of the house, should be like your shirt and collar—spick and span, attractive and changed often.

Pictorial paper, mounted on heavy cardboard, in cut-out effects can be used in the lobby to advantage. The cut-out gets away from any billboard effect, and if the subject is chosen rightly is very striking.

By experience it has been found it pays best to advertise the coming show on the inside lobby, and the program which is playing on the outside. It is not only more effective (no good salesman tries to sell two things at the same time—it can't be done) but does away with any possible misunderstanding. Those on the outside are influenced by the one show advertised, and after they have seen your show they will be interested in what is coming.

Heralds. Heralds are given out as the person is leaving will give details of your coming show, telling your patrons through print and pictures, what you have to show them next. If you dealt in audiences of tens, you would not need heralds. The heralds issued by the film manufacturer are much better than anything you could hope to put out. His are printed in hundreds of thousands, written by high salaried men, who make that their business, the cuts and general makeup of these heralds represents an art cost that would surprise the laymen.

Slides. A slide on the screen is along the same line as the herald. It talks to a selected audience of people, who have proven by their presence that they are interested in pictures. Make your slide as simple, as brief, but still as convincingly strong as possible. It is without doubt your single strongest method of advertising. Get a good slide man. Design your own ideas (usually in reviewing the film there are many good ideas—or points of contrast—that can be built into your slides), write your own copy. Leave your slide man enough leeway to improve on your ideas, and you will get slides that create business. If you can't get the right kind of slide manufacturer, of course, you are up against it, with nothing but the film exchange slides staring you in the face.

Here Are a Few Dont's—Don't run old, cracked, or soiled slides. Don't run cheap slides. Usually a one-color slide is more dignified, easier read and is consequently more effective.

Electric Light. Electric lights attract business, like a candle attracts moths. Who wants to go into a dim, poorly lighted theater? Broadway, New York City, is the mecca of all amusement lovers. It is called the "great white way" because of the millions of electric lights that make it bright as daylight. Take the case of any city you might think of. Isn't the busiest streets there the best lighted streets? Sure they are. It's up to you, to make your theater the best lighted spot in the whole city—a regular beacon light to the amusement-loving moths of your city. Light up the front in nitrogen or mazda lights, outline your theater in lights, install a moving sign (motion gets the eye quicker). Make your theater exterior so bright and cheery looking that it will be an advertising asset—a business getter.

Clergy and Films Should Agree

"There is no reason why there should be any jealous competition or hateful contest between the church and the films," said E. D. Horkheimer, one of the producers of Balboa features, when his attention was called to the recent attack made by a well known clergyman on the screen entertainment. "The inference that the world has gone pleasure mad, because of the picture play's popularity, is hardly warranted.

"There is no reason to condemn pictures because a few of them offend. Nobody would think of condemning all books just because a few are objectionable. Its largely a matter of taste; some like this, others that. In a sense, the cinemas have replaced the lecture platform. Now, just because a bad lecturer has brought reproach on his calling, it would be manifestly unfair to berate all lecturers.

"The world's ideal of an editor is one whose life is devoted to uplift, who writes the truth no matter how it affects his business, whose mission it is to wield the power of the press for the good of his fellows. Now, if it happens that in doing so, his paper makes money, it is hardly fair to denounce that same editor as a money grabber. In like manner, it isn't right to condemn picture producers as gold-greedy, because they happen to succeed in a material way. The average silent drama can drive home a moral more forcibly than the average preacher can make his sermon, for the eye is more receptive than the ear. I doubt if there was ever a stronger sermon preached on the text 'and a little child shall lead them' than Balboa's production of 'Little Mary Sunshine,' recently released by Pathe.

"Dusty" Farnum was doing a scene in "Davy Crockett" in which a number of colored persons took part when suddenly Director Taylor threw a bomb among the colored contingent. One little chocolate-colored actor made a mistake and Taylor, using the expression meaning merely to cut out a certain part of the scene—exclaimed excitedly: "Kill that nigger!" The little dark person hasn't stopped running yet.

"Romeo and Juliet" Ready for Release

Ethel Barrymore and Emmy Wehlen, Eminent Actresses, on Long Time Contracts for Metro Program—Viola Dana in New Play

A MORE extensive program and a greater variety of activities than ever before prepared is promised by the Metro Pictures Corporation for the coming year. The first step in this plan is the announcement that the $250,000 screen production of "Romeo and Juliet," with Francis Bushman and Beverly Bayne in the title roles, will be released the first week in October.

May Allison, Harold Lockwood, Director Otto and the Metro-Yorke camera aimers at Eagle Falls, Lake Tahoe, California.

Also $500,000 has been appropriated to be used in the production of the Bushman-Bayne serial which will consist of fourteen episodes of two reels each. W. Christy Cabanne has been engaged to direct this serial.

In the meantime Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne have begun work on another five-part Metro wonderplay called "A Diplomatic Romance."

Ethel Barrymore, who is under a long time contract to appear in Metro wonderplays, will next be seen in "The Awakening of Helena Ritchie." This will be a five-part picturization of the play of the same name by Margaret Deland.

The fall releases of features in which Mme. Petrova is starred will include "The Secret of Eve," "Extravagance," and "The Weaker Sex."

Emmy Wehlen, the Viennese star, has signed a long time contract, and hereafter will appear regularly upon the Metro program.

Viola Dana will be seen on the Metro program September 4 in "The Light of Happiness." "Mister 44," with Harold Lockwood and May Allison in the stellar roles, will be released September 11.

"The Wheel of Justice" is the name of the sensational five part feature in which Emily Stevens is starred. She is supported by Frank Mills and big cast. "The Wheel of Justice" deals with the subject of circumstantial evidence and will be released September 18.

Mabel Taliaferro, who is now working exclusively in Metro screen productions, will next be seen in "The Light O' Love." Edwin Carewe is directing the production and it will be released September 25.

William Nigh, the versatile Metro director, who not only writes and directs his own features, but stars in many of them, will be seen on the Metro program in "Life's Shadows" on October 2. Irene Howley is starred with Mr. Nigh. There is a strong supporting case, including Robert Elliott, Roy Clair and Kathleen Allairs. David Thompson assisted in the direction of the feature.

Nance O'Neil, who is a new star on the Metro program, will make her first appearance in "The Iron Woman," October 9. Miss O'Neil is supported by a cast which includes Alfred Hichman, Christine Mayo, Evelyn Brent, Louise Hale, Einar Linden, and others.

"A Diplomatic Romance," with Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne, released October 16, will be followed by "Gates of Eden," with Viola Dana in the starring role. Mr. Collins is directing this feature and it will be released October 23.

Lionel Barrymore will be seen in "The Brand of Cowardice" on October 30. This will be followed on November 6 with "Big Tremaine," with Harold Lockwood and May Allison starred.

Emily Stevens will be seen again on the Metro program November 13 in "Infelice." Miss Stevens is to star on Broadway this season in "The Unchastened Woman," which proved a tremendous success in New York last season.

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, the foremost purveyors of refined comedy on the screen, will be seen every week in a new one-reel comedy. Ralph Herz, the popular comedian, will also make a one-reel comedy every week under the direction of "Billy" Quirk. The weekly Metro Travelogue will continue as an attractive feature on the Metro program, and some startling novelties are promised for early release.

Metro has taken over another studio in New York City. The old Victor studio, located at Forty-third street and Tenth avenue, has been engaged and after it is overhauled and rearranged it will be the home of the Bushman-Bayne players. The Herz comedies will also be produced there on the third floor of the studio.

Consolidated's Team

O. E. Goebel and Ludwig G. B. Erb, heads of the Consolidated Film Corporation, are a redoublable team. The Consolidated Film Corporation is about to release the first episode of the 16-episode serial, "The Crimson Stain Mystery"—the company's first picture.

Ludwig G. B. Erb is a pioneer film man. He began his career when films first became a practical proposition. He specialized along the technical line and today is well known for his remarkable work. Every thing that he has attempted has been a success. He was one of the first independent managers in the business. Today he is the owner of the Erbograph Company, which is conceded to be one of the most completely systematized laboratories in the country. During Mr. Erb's busy life of putting over big business concerns, he found time to work out several inventions for the practical end of the film business.

Mr. Goebel is young but is filled with tremendous energy. His entrance into the picture field was a more or less picturesque one. He was graduated from the St. Louis university of law. He became interested in films through a client who asked him to investigate the field.

Mr. Goebel shortly formed the St. Louis Motion Picture Company, which made several pictures. Later Mr. Goebel bundled off his entire company to the far west where he continued to make pictures.

Ludwig G. B. Erb, treasurer of the Consolidated Film Company.

Recently Mr. Goebel decided to come east where he formed the Consolidated Film Corporation with Mr. Erb.

Elizabeth Burbridge with Powell

Elizabeth Burbridge, long known to film fans through her work in Essanay and Ince productions, has been engaged by Frank Powell and will appear in support of Creighton Hale, Linda A. Griffith, and Sheldon Lewis in the first feature of the Frank Powell Productions, Inc.

Miss Burbridge early commenced her career before the camera. She worked as an extra for D. W. Griffith, went into dramatic stock, and returned to pictures to play leads for Lubin. She next was leading woman for Kinemacolor during the regime of the late David Miles, and also for the Frontier-Universal company. After six months in comedy she signed with the New York Motion Picture Company under Thos. H. Ince. An engagement for Mutual Masterpictures, in which she featured, followed, and she also played ingenue roles in several of the Triangle productions. With Essanay Miss Burbridge played opposite Henry Walthall.

Miss Burbridge has written several successful scenarios.

Famous Players Three Years Old

President Zukor Declares That Every Branch of Photoplay Industry Must Be Improved If Business Is to Progress

THREE years as a producer of a program of motion picture features will be the record of the Famous Players Film Company with the coming of September.

The first organization to devote itself exclusively to the production of feature pictures in which celebrated stage stars were presented, the Famous Players Film Company likewise formed the nucleus and the inspiration for the organizing of that great distributing company, the Paramount Pictures Corporation, on the program of which it is associated with the Lasky, Morosco and Pallas productions. The present Paramount organization is based upon the original Famous Players exchanges which were originally established to distribute the products of that concern.

With the decision to expand that method of distribution and to enlarge the program to 104 productions a year a meeting of these various exchange heads was called in New York in July, 1913, by Mr. Zukor, with a view to determining upon a mutually satisfactory basis of operation. Out of this meeting there grew the Paramount system which is today the distribution medium of the Famous Players, Lasky, Morosco and Pallas pictures in the United States.

One of the earliest and biggest effects upon the trade directly traceable to the inauguration of the feature program was the erection of new theaters and the conversion of old legitimate houses to the presentation of feature photoplays. When it was realized that large theaters could be built with the certainty given by the program of being open week in and week out throughout the entire year, the interest of exhibitors and the devotion of capital to the project naturally resulted. Thus many of the most prominent photoplay theaters in existence today were literally built upon the feature program.

In all, the Famous Players Company has introduced upon the screen over thirty well-known stage favorites during the course of its three years of existence and has produced 135 feature photoplays. Concerning these achievements, Adolph Zukor, the guiding spirit of the company, is very modest. Mr. Zukor says:

"While it is true that we have, in a measure, scored a success, still that record of achievement during the last four years is only of interest insofar as it sets a mark which must be surpassed during the future.

"If the motion picture is to hold the position which it now occupies in the realm of public amusement, it seems inevitable to me that all branches of the business, production, distribution and exhibition, must be improved. Perhaps the most serious question today is that which pertains to the method by which the exhibitor can get the most out of every picture which comes to his house.

"When you consider that men of every walk of life have gone into the motion picture business and that even the veterans of the industry are only its first generation, so to speak, there is small wonder that a great many loose ends should develop in every branch. Especially is this true of the exhibitors, many of whom are men who jumped directly from commercial pursuits to the management of their own houses. It cannot be expected of them that they would readily learn the secrets of a very complicated and hazardous undertaking and it is only natural that they should have to be shown.

"When I make these observations I want it distinctly understood that I am not criticizing or condemning the exhibitor, but stating facts which I sincerely trust will be remedied. Far from decrying the exhibitor I am rejoicing at the fact that we are nearer together than we ever were before in the history of the industry and I am glad that there is every prospect of our being linked even closer together in the future.

"What I am hoping and striving for is the time when 100 per cent of the value of a picture will be gotten out of it in the theaters and as we improve the quality of our pictures it will be inspiring to know that their increased value will be realized by the exhibitors."

Cobe Visits West and South

Following the Unity Sales Corporation's policy of doing everything to aid the exchange men and the exhibitors to properly exhibit the features put out by its company, Mr. Cobe, vice-president and general manager, has left for a tour

The shooters shot. of the southwestern and middle western states. While away, Mr. Cobe will visit the Unity exchange offices in Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City and Dallas. Mr. Cobe has but lately returned from a similar visit to the southeastern territory and before "The Yellow Menace" releases Labor Day, every exchange handling "The Yellow Menace" will have received a personal visit.

Holding and Williams

Thomas Holding, who for the past year has been appearing in leading parts for Famous Players, has been engaged to co-star with Kathlyn Williams at the Thomas Holding, who with Kathleen Williams forms a splendid new Morosco-Pallas team.

Morosco-Pallas studios for the Paramount program. Immediately after signing the agreement in New York, Mr. Holding left for the Los Angeles studois of his new associates.

Mr. Holding made his motion picture debut in "The Eternal City." As leading man for Pauline Frederick and Marie Doro he appeared in various Famous Players successes, including "Sold," "The White Pearl," "Bella Donna," "Lydia Gilmore" and "The Moment Before."

Prior to his advent to motion pictures, Mr. Holding enjoyed a most successful career on the speaking stage in this country as well as in England and Australia. His first appearance in New York City was under the management of Oliver Morosco, for whom he will now appear on the screen. At the Manhattan Opera House as leading man in Mr. Morosco's "Peg O' My Heart," he won immediate favor which resulted in an engagement with this company running thirty-eight weeks. Later he again won considerable prominence over here in the title role of "Ben Hur," in which he appeared for a run of two years. Among his most successful appearances in England were those in "A Chinese Honeymoon," "Are You a Mason?" Shakespearean repertoire with George Musgroves, "The Tempest," as Ferdinand with Sir Herbert Tree, "Still Waters Run Deep," and other plays with Mr. and Mrs. Kendall for three years, "Loaves and Fishes," Charles Frohman's play at the Duke of Yorke, London, and many others of equal prominence.

Sladdin Takes a Trip

Spencer G. Sladdin, director of publicity of the Consolidated Film Corporation, presenting "The Crimson Stain Mystery," the 16-episode super-serial, left last week for Chicago to supervise the placing of a big publicity campaign. Paid advertisements will be inserted in more than ten thousand newspapers, and the novelization of the serial, done by Albert Payson Terhune, will be started in more than four thousand representative newspapers.

Mr. Sladdin expects to be gone about ten days. While his temporary headquarters will be in Chicago his activities will take him over a large territory in the west.

During his absence Arthur M. Brilant will be acting director of publicity.

Another Weddin'!

Mary Brooks and Alan Fisher are married. This does not mean much until it is explained that Mary Brooks is Anna Little of the Flying A and Alan Fisher is Alan Forrest. Miss Little was given away by Richard Willis, her friend and business representative, while Rena Rogers (Mrs. Frank Borzage) and Rhea Mitchell made the necessary background and shed the usual happy tears on behalf of the bride. Frank Borzage handed Alan the ring at the proper moment.

New Monmouth Series

The Monmouth Film Corporation is soon to release a novelty serial entitled, "Jimmie Dale, Alias 'The Grey Seal.'" It deals with the adventures of a modern Robin Hood and each chapter will be a complete story.

Among the actors who will appear in the series will be E. K. Lincoln, former Vitagraph lead, the charming Edna Hunter, Paul Panzer and Doris Mitchell.

The first story will be released by Monmouth on October 16. It will run for sixteen weeks.

Powell Captures Court

During the filming of the forthcoming feature photoplay of the Frank Powell Productions, Inc., it was necessary to obtain a scene in a court room and as Mr. Powell, the director, is a firm believer in the "genuine" in his pictures he made a flying trip with his company to Augusta, Georgia, for this particular scene.

Mr. Powell was extremely fortunate in securing the use of a court room while court was in session and also the services of the presiding judge, sheriff, bailiff and the jury.

The Powell company contemplates the location of a studio in Augusta and while there Mr. Powell investigated certain conditions which will doubtless determine whether or not he will decide on that place.

W. O. Cox, stage manager of the Gaiety Theater, and Miss Etta Mae Lenhart of Weatherford, Texas, were married on the stage of the Gaiety Theater at Dallas, July 27. About 500 people were present and applauded long and loud and threw showers of rice at the happy young couple.

Join Condon Exchange

Ernest Shipman, in the capacity of general manager for the Mabel Condon Exchange, has left Los Angeles for New York to open New York and Chicago offices. Mabel Condon's success along publicity lines, her unique personal representation of players grew into such a success that the establishment of the Mabel Condon Exchange, Inc., has become necessary.

William Colvin, who has an intimate acquaintance with nearly every professional in the photoplay business, and on the stage today, will assume charge of the engagement department. Charles R. Condon, New York representative of Ernest Shipman.

MOTOGRAPHY, will have charge of the New York office. The exploitation of feature pictures on a states' rights basis will be included.

During the past month over eight hundred photo dramas were handled in the play department and forty-eight sold.

The new exchange handling "The Fall of a Nation," Thomas Dixon's spectacle, in the Southwestern territory, which was recently purchased by W. K. Sheppard, formerly of Brownsville, Texas, has opened offices in Dallas in the Southwestern Life Building, corner Akard and Main Streets, "far from the maddening crowd" of exchanges in Exchange Row, on the 1900 Block on Commerce Street.

W. M. Byrd is managing the affairs of this company, in association with Mr. Sheppard, and they have plans for a big "offensive" movement in the theatrical line in the Southwestern section.

Frank Powell has bought the Majestic at Ponca City, Oklahoma, from Chas. Barron. Mr. Powell formerly was interested in the Mission, a competitive show in Ponca.

R. C. Cropper, local manager of the Universal Exchange at Kansas City, has been promoted to district manager of the territory embracing Oklahoma, Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri, Kansas, with supervision of the exchanges at Oklahoma City, Kansas City, St. Louis, Des Moines and other points in the states mentioned.

ATLANTIC COAST NOTES

Robert T. Thornby has completed directing "The Little Comrade," a World production starring Gail Kane and Carlyle Blackwell.

Florence Turner, who is featured in the Mutual Star production, "A Welsh Singer," has become a British war nurse. She is at present assigned to a home station at one of the big hospitals in London.

After a summer vacation of two days, Lionel Barrymore has begun work on another Metro play, a picturization of the short story, "The Woolworth Diamonds," by Hugh Weir. Mr. Barrymore has just completed his work in "The Upheaval," soon to be seen on the Metro program.

Irene Fenwick, who was the first woman to fly from London to Paris, has a great desire to be featured in a picture dealing with aviation.

Florence La Badie has started work with her director, Frederic Sullivan, on a new feature by Agnes C. Johnson, having free love as its theme. Miss Johnston is the author of "The Shine Girl," recently released.

Emily Stevens will appear next in "Capital Punishment," an original story written for her by Katherine Kavanaugh. Miss Stevens has been seen twice on the Metro program, "The House of Tears," and "Destiny or The Soul of a Woman."

Ethel Barrymore has begun work on another Metro play, a screen version of Margaret Deland's novel, "The Awakening of Helena Ritchie."

According to rumors from the Famous Players studio, Owen Moore's next play will give him an opportunity to do aerial stunts. He and Director Del Henderson have been frequent visitors at the aviation field at Mineola recently.

Henry Ford has nominated Tom Ince as a candidate for the Nobel peace prize because of his production of "Civilization."

"The Whip," the spectacular English melodrama produced originally at the Drury Lane theater, London, and which appeared later with success in this country, is to be made into a ten-reel photoplay by the World Film Corporation, under the direction of Maurice Tourneur. Dion Titheradge, Irving Cummings and Alma Hanlon have strong roles.

Gail Kane, the World film actress who will be seen next in "The Velvet Paw," is to leave film work for a time, and will be leading woman for John Drew in a new play at the Empire theater, New York.

Helen Greene, late of Lubin, has an important role in the Niagara Film Company's serial, "The Perils of Our Girl Reporters," starring Zena Keefe.

Roshanara, whose dances have been popular in vaudeville, is at work collaborating on a scenario for a five-reel picture featuring herself as an East Indian princess. The play will be called "A Daughter of Lhassa."

Pathe has obtained the services of the well known cameraman, Ralph Earle, to take a series of scenics in the National Parks of the country, among them Yellowstone, Glacier, Mount Ranier, Crater and Lassen.

Ann Pennington's second screen vehicle under the Famous Players' banner is a circus story, "The Rainbow Princess," being staged under the direction of J. Searle Dawley.

Irene Fenwick, who was recently elected the "ideal" of the 1917 class in Cornell University, will play several college scenes in her next Metro picture, and is hoping her director will take the company to Cornell for campus scenes.

Hattie Delaro, who appears in Metro pictures, lately playing the irate landlady in "The Quitter," with Lionel Barrymore, was the "Pitti Sing" of the first "Mikado" production in America, Richard Mansfield being "Ko Ko." She appeared in all the Gilbert and Sullivan operas, was starred in musical comedy, farce comedy and played important stock engagements before taking up motion picture work.

Mme. Petrova is now working under the direction of Burton King in a five-part Metro production, "Extravagance."

Gladys Hulette is still searching for the world's ugliest pup, who, when found, will appear with her in the coming Thanhouser play, "Prudence the Pirate," released through Pathe.

Frederick Warde, now on a Shakespearean lecture tour in New England, is carrying a trunkful of books with him, all referring to customs and costumes of the period of "The Vicar of Wakefield," which will be Mr. Warde's next Thanhouser picture.

Charles R. Jones of the Columbia School of Journalism, invading the Metro-Rolfe studio for a feature article, was mistaken for an actor by Sidney Drew and put into scenes for the comedy being made, "Crosby's Best Cure."

Ned Burton has been engaged by Herbert Brenon to play the part of the Captain in his big film production of "War Brides," with Nazimova.

Ormi Hawley has returned to New York from a hunting trip in northern Maine. Accompanied by two women friends and a guide, the actress went game hunting with a camera. Most of the journey was made in a canoe, camping wherever a location appealed to them. Some remarkable pictures of deer were obtained.

Edith Storey, accompanied by her mother and brother, has moved to her new home at Eden's Neck, Long Island. The house is of frame finished in stained shingles and rests upon a heavy cobblestone foundation, with wide veranda supported by massive cobblestone pillars; and contains ten rooms. The living room is a feature, being 20 by 30 feet, with a 9-foot wide fireplace of cobblestone construction in harmony with the general design of the building. Adjoining the living room is a spacious billiard room. This home is situated right upon the shore of Long Island Sound, and the front yard runs right down to the water's edge.

Forty-one students, comprising the summer session class of the Columbia University School of Journalism, led by Professor Franklin Matthews, made a trip last week to the William Fox studios in New Jersey to get material for "copy," as part of their reportorial training.

Hughie Mack, the heavyweight comedian of the Vitagraph Company, denies the report that he gained his weight from drinking goat's milk. Hughie says he never made such a claim, for it would not be doing justice to a number of other drinks he could mention.

Lillian Walker visited Boston recently and appeared at a number of theaters where her latest play, "Hesper of the Mountains" was shown. She also spent some time with Mayor Curley, and took tea and talked psychology with Professor Muensterberg.

June Mathis, the scenario writer, although she is blond, cheerful and wholesome looking, declares that the ambition of her life has been to play "Carmen."

Pauline Frederick plays a dual role in her next Paramount picture, "Ashes of Embers." In the story, written by Forrest Halsey, she impersonates two sisters, one a working girl who goes to jail for another's crime, the other a gay little butterfly.

A large number of Sioux Indians have been engaged for Bertram Bracken's next William Fox play, in which the action revolves about a white girl's infatuation for an Indian.

Robert Vivian, who appears with June Caprice in her next Fox play, "Little Miss Happiness," has had an international education, having attended school and college in England, France and Germany.

Zena Keefe, who plays the leading role in the Niagara Film Company's "Perils of Our Girl Reporters" series, to be released in fifteen two-reel installments by the Buffalo Times Newspaper Syndicate, was given regular assignment work on a New York daily paper and, accompanied by a regular reporter, visited every nook and corner of New York. Later she gave a luncheon to the various girl reporters she had met, and also had them appear

Seitz dictates his scenario work to his secretary while riding in his automobile between his Long Island home and the Astra-Pathe studio, about three hours during the day.

PACIFIC COAST NOTES

Wilfred Lucas, in his new Triangle play, "Rummy," has the role of a newspaper reporter who struggles against his love for strong drink. Pauline Starke, a newcomer to the screen, is the leading woman. Paul Powell directed.

Fay Tincher has completed her seventh two-reel Triangle Komedy. In it she affects the mannerisms and dress of a Parisian milliner who in reality is just an ordinary Irish girl. Edward Dillon directed the play and also appears in the cast. The story is by Anita Loos, who has written all the preceding Fay Tincher comedies.

Robert B. Broadwell, director of Horsley-Mutual features starring Crane Wilbur, was at one time a member of the United States Secret Service.

Margaret Gibson, who appears in two-act Horsley-Mutual features, recently celebrated her twentieth birthday.

C. Gardner Sullivan, of the Ince-Triangle scenario staff, is keeping two stenographers busy in his dictation of a new play for Clara Williams.

"Destiny's Boomerang," the most recent Centaur two-reeler co-starring Margaret Gibson and William Clifford, deals with a situation wherein a father, seeking social prestige, attempts to marry his daughter to a title.

Alma Reuben, who will be remembered for her good work in "The Half Breed," starring Douglas Fairbanks, will be leading woman in the next play starring William S. Hart.

Lucy Payton, who has been playing leads for Balboa, has been called to her home in Dallas, Texas, by the illness of her mother.

Lillian Gish's latest Triangle play, called temporarily, "Diana of the Follies," is considered one of the best stories of the year by the Fine Arts scenario department.

Mildred Harris has an important role in the Fine Arts adaptation of Rupert Hughes' story, "The Old Folks at Home," which stars Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree. Chester Whitey is the director. Elmer Clifton, Josephine Crowell, Lucille Younge and Spottiswoode Aitken are in the cast.

Lloyd Ingraham of the Fine Arts staff of directors departed for the New York Triangle studio after completing the staging of "The Little Liar," starring Mae Marsh and Robert Harron. Frank Urson, the well known photographer, accompanied Ingraham. They will remain in the east for several pictures.

The new summer home of Thomas H. Ince at Inceville has been completed and is now occupied by Mrs. Ince and the three Ince children. The estate is situated on the crest of one of the mountains overlooking the Pacific Ocean.

Gil Pratt, directing the Fatty Lampton company is making a comedy around a hick depot, station master, baggagemen, and others about the place coming in for a bit of laugh making.

A three-reel fish story: A reel actor with a new reel, catches a real fish. Dustin Farnum landed this old boy—so he says—in 22 minutes. The Pacific Ocean bass was shipped to a Los Angeles restaurant, where Kathlyn Williams, Edna Goodrich and a number of Dustin's other prominent star-friends feasted on his dainty little minnow.

May Cloy, leading lady in Kolb and Dill comedies made at the American studios, has been in pictures less than a year. Previous to screen work, she was a member of a stock company of the speaking stage.

Charlie Chaplin declares that he will never return to the stage. When his motion picture days are over, he wishes to write and produce a serious artistic play.

Frank Borzage is directing and playing the star part in "The Land o' Lizards," a coming American Mutual Masterpicture.

Explosion of a giant steam engine, destruction of a large area of forest land from the flying sparks, burning of a round house especially built for the occasion and the devastation by fire of an entire town of one and two-story buildings, are a few of the more spectacular scenes in "The Manager of the B. & A.," a forthcoming five-act Mutual Star Production featuring Helen Holmes.

Bessie Love is featured in "The Defenders," which C. M. and S. A. Franklin are directing for the Triangle program. A Mexican ranch has been leased for some of the exterior scenes. About five hundred supernumeraries will appear in the big scenes. Ralph Lewis, Frank Bennett and the Fine Arts kiddies have important roles. Bernard McConville wrote the story.

Gordon Sackville, leading man in Balboa plays, was formerly leading man in light opera with Fritzi Scheff.

Margery Wilson has an especially strong role in the new Triangle play starring Frank Keenan, under the direction of Walter Edwards. She appears as his daughter, a role which gives her emotional opportunities excelling those of "The Eye of the Night," in which she supported William H. Thompson.

Juanita Hansen, now with the Fox players, has gone with her company into the mountains back of Fresno to work in exteriors for her first picture under this banner. She has the role of a mountain girl who leads an infidel into the ways of religious peace.

The capture of a notorious mountain bandit by a young girl is the theme of the Mustang-Mutual drama "El Diablo." Jack Richardson as the hero has a strong role.

"November, 1915," is the title given to the Universal neutral war picture written and produced by Hobart Henley and starring Claire McDowell as a Red Cross nurse. The locale is war-ridden Serbia.

William D. Taylor, the Pallas Morosco director, having cut and assembled his picture in which Vivian Martin is starred, has disappeared for a few weeks' vacation.

A first run of "Inherited Passions," produced by Gilbert P. Hamilton for the Century Company, is said to have revealed a very satisfactory photodrama. There is much Montana scenery, with incidents of ranch life. Dorothea Farley plays a role of dual character. William Conklin is the leading man. The film is to be further edited, then shipped to New York for further distribution.

Bessie Barriscale is to appear in a series of semi-comedy roles, first as a little slavey, then as an Irish girl.

Hal Roach, director general of Rolin comedies, has left for a ten day business trip to New York.

The Selig series of Tom Mix western cemedies closed with "Taming Grouchy Bill," released on the General Film Service, September 9. One western comedy was released weekly for ten weeks.

Alan Forrest, having completed a leading role opposite Mary Miles Minter, is playing a juvenile part in a comedy drama with Kolb and Dill.

Ollie Kirby has gone east to join the Kalem Company at Jacksonville, Fla.

George Sargent, who directed "The Secret of the Submarine," the American serial, and the first two Richard Bennett features, is taking a short vacation.

Myrtle Stedman sang before a congregation of three thousand people at the Trinity Auditorium in Los Angeles recently.

Richard Stanton is preparing for his second Fox photoplay and is awaiting his two leads who are en route from New York. In the mean time he is visiting El Paso where, with his assistant, he is selecting locations.

A ball room setting so large that it occupies virtually all of the floor space of one of the big glass enclosed stages at the Culver City plant is being built for scenes in the Triangle play in which Raymond B. West is directing Dorothy Dalton, Howard Hickman, Enid Markey and a strong supporting cast.

Crane Wilbur recently paid two dollars to rescue a small boy's dog from the city pound. Then he paid thirty dollars and bought the fifteen dogs remaining in detention. What happened then, and when the dogs were taken to the studios, will be shown in a coming Horsley Mutual Masterpicture.

Anna Little and Alan Forrest were married at Santa Barbara on August 19. Rhea Mitchell and Rena Rogers (Mrs. Frank Borzage) attended Miss Little and Richard Willis of Los Angeles gave the bride away. Frank Borzage was the best man. The marriage is the outcome of a romance lasting over two years.

Neva Gerber is featured in the latest Universal production made by Lois Weber. The picture will be a large affair to be released on the states rights system, and is said to teach a strong lesson through unusual means. The action is woven around the lives of several characters, each of whom is vitally affected by seeing a motion picture in a small town theater.

Tom Chatterton is to play in the sequel to "The Diamond from the Sky" serial, although he did not appear in the original cast. Chatterton has completed his role in the third Kolb and Dill American comedy, "Bluff."

Cleo Madison's sister, Helen Bailey, has recovered from a recent operation and will return home this week. The sister, who is an invalid, has been in a sanitarium for several weeks, and it is hoped that the operation may finally restore her to full strength and activity.

Helene Rosson will be featured in the American five-reeler, "Esther of the People," with Franklin Ritchie opposite and Orral Humphries and Eugenie Forde in the cast. Frank Thorne is directing.

Bessie Barriscale, the Ince star, is taking a week's vacation to cure the case of sunburn which she acquired while making her last picture, in which she impersonated a mountain girl.

LeVan Walker has [illegible] in this picture. They let her into the United States Treasury for a minute and look what she walked [illegible] The Vitagraph's next starring [illegible] the making of Dean Collins' "His Adventures of Bill."

The expedition of the Signal Film Company to Eureka, in the heart of the California big tree lumber region, has begun inauspiciously. J. P. McGowan, director-general of the players, is laid up with the grippe and is confined to his room in a small hotel in the industrial village there. Ford Beebe, press representative, has an inflamed eye and says he can't see a piece of film news, while Helen Holmes is homesick.

William F. Russell's next work at the American Film studio at Santa Barbara will be as lead in the $10,000 prize sequel to "The Diamond from the Sky," with Edward Sloman as director.

Margaret Shelby is playing opposite her sister, Mary Miles Minter, in Director James Kirkwood's new picture, "Faith," now being produced at the American studios. Margaret is a brunette and is sixteen years old. She has just completed an engagement at Oliver Morosco's Burbank theater in Los Angeles.

Nine-year-old Doris Blake is playing her first comedy role in the Fox Company's two-reel picture just completed by Walter Reed. Doris has an important role in a big feature soon to be released, "Inherited Passions."

Charles Gunn has been engaged for leading roles at Thomas H. Ince's Culver City studios where he is now playing opposite Clara Williams.

Gilbert E. Murdock, scenario writer, has written a new sketch which will introduce a famous dancer to the vaudeville stage in New York in September.

Roy Fernandez, winner of the Universal "handsome man" contest, was the model for the Harrison Fisher cover of the Hearst monthly supplement of August 13.

Roy Stewart of the Universal "Liberty" serial, has signed with the Phillips Smalley company to play heavy lead in the current feature.

Kolb and Dill are directing themselves with the aid of a good assistant in their fourth American comedy drama.

Frank Lloyd, who formerly directed Morosco and Pallas pictures and who is now with the Fox Company, has begun work on his first five-reeler with the new company.

J. Warren Kerrigan and his company have returned from the big timber country of Humboldt county, California, where they filmed exteriors in a forthcoming Bluebird, "The Measure of a Man."

Charles Ray has completed his latest starring vehicle with the New York Motion Picture company in which he will appear as a young Englishman, a new sort of role for him. The new play has many comedy touches.

Vivian Rich has been engaged to play the leading feminine role in the picturization of Peter B. Kyne's latest novel, "A Man's Man." The play will be produced at Redlands, California, and released as a Gold Feature on the Pathe program.

Eileen (Babe) Sedgwick, who has been appearing in comedies, is playing the leading role in a Universal drama, "The Isle of Life." She is cast as an Italian girl who rises from obscurity to a position of wealth and influence.

VILLAIN'S TRICK HORSE DISGRACED

Jack Richardson, known as the "most-killed" villain of the movies, boasts a trick horse with manners and etiquette which could only be acquired by association with the most exclusive equines.

That Jack loves his steed, is eloquently attested by the glossy coat and well-groomed hoofs which "Chief" presents to view whenever out of the stable, as well as by the fact that Jack spends considerable leisure in the saddle, when not being filmed in "Flying A" dramas.

President Carl Laemmle smiling as he welcomes Governor Hughes to Universal City. H. O. Davis, vice-president and general manager of Universal, is on the left. Mr. Hughes stated that he realizes the magnitude of the motion picture industry and is particularly pleased with its power for the education of the masses.

One wonderful Sunday afternoon recently, "Gentleman" Jack was invited to visit some of Santa Barbara's elite. He rode "Chief" over to the mansion, and dismounted before the admiring guests. He carelessly dropped the reins on the ground and "Chief" wandered causually across the beautiful lawn, nibbling the grass here and there, while Jack chatted pleasantly with the guests on the spacious veranda.

Suddenly a scream from the hostess curdled the blood of her guests. She dashed down the steps with Jack in close pursuit.

Eternal disgraces! "Chief" was down on his back struggling to roll over in the magnificent, formal garden it had taken seasons to beautify. He had found an ideal spot to roll in—the cool, mellow earth about the roots of the tenderly cultivated tropical plants.

The thoroughbred's master coolly led the miscreant onto the roadway, humbly apologized to his hostess for such conduct on the part of "Chief," mounted, and road away. "Chief" was probably punished; but in such a manner as a genuine horseman understands can correct such social errors on the part of his loving servant—the horse.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by makes, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

Iola's Promise—BIOGRAPH RE-ISSUE—SEPTEMBER 4.—Featuring Mary Pickford. Iola, the little Indian girl, is held captive by a gang of cutthroats, from whose clutches and abuse she is rescued by Jack Harper, a prospector. She is truly grateful to Jack, for she regards him as something different from the white people she has seen. Jack's sweetheart and her father are parties of a wagon-train headed for his place, and as luck has been against him, he is somewhat gloomy. Iola learns the reason, and promises to help him find gold. He is amused at this and says, "Will you?" "Yes." "Cross your heart?" This cross-your-heart action mystifies the little Indian. She thinks it is a sort of tribe insignia and tells her people that "cross-heart" people are all right. Iola surely pays her debt of gratitude, not only in finding gold, but in giving her life to protect Jack's sweetheart from her own people, who are embittered against all whites.

His Brother's Keeper—(THREE REELS)—SELIG—SEPTEMBER 4.—Eugenie Besserer, Leo Pierson and Harry Lonsdale featured. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

Canimated Nooz Pictorial, No. 5—ESSANAY—SEPTEMBER 6.—Canimated Nooz camera men film the pleasures of being incarcerated at Sing Sing, N. Y. The daily rock-pile golf tournament on the prison course is shown in progress. "Lifer" McNutt's record drive is spoiled when No. 968 gets his head in the way. Pink tea is served after the game by the Young Ladies' Anti-Cruelty to Animals Society. Luther Leatherlungs is caught by the camera as he delivers a speech on "Preparedness." Dreamy Dud tries a trip in a submarine and blocks all the traffic on the ocean. Five hundred feet of beautiful scenic share the reel.

The Pacifist—(TWO REELS)—ESSANAY—SEPTEMBER 5.—Featuring Harry Dunkinson and Camille D'Arcy. Peaceful Henry Alswell's supine nature makes him merely a servant in his own household and his wife and son hold him in contempt. He even is compelled to arise and serve breakfast for them. At his office, Bill Mars, his partner, holds the same attitude. Peaceful Henry finds his principal delight in writing letters pleading for peace to the "Voice of the People" columns of the newspapers. Willie Mars, like his father, is a bully, and picks on the smaller boys at the old swimmin' hole. Clarence Alswell is their champion. The elder Mars threatens to thrash his son unless he thrashes Clarence Alswell. Henry Alswell sees the fight and hastens to separate them. Mars attacks him. The blood of the pacificist arises and he takes a few wallops at Mars. To his great surprise he vanquishes them. "You're some scrapper, Dad," Clarence yelps in delight, and Alswell, a transformed man, swaggers down the street looking for another fight. When he reaches home Percival Footease, a matinee dancer, is sympathizing with his wife on her possession of a weak-willed spouse. The weak-willed spouse hurls him into the street. Now the erstwhile henpecked Henry has his breakfast served in bed, all fear him and his son is proud of his fighting father.

Man's Enemy—(THREE REELS)—BIOGRAPH—SEPTEMBER 6.—Featuring Lillian Gish and Franklin Ritchie. Harry Stanton, the son of Sir Arthur Stanton, is warned by his father that drink was the besetting sin of the Stantons and Harry promises to be guided by his advice. Tom Warriner, who believes that Sir Arthur killed his father years before, determines to be avenged, and with the aid of Sarah Banks, he manages to ruin Harry and while under the influence of liquor Harry marries Sarah, who later on is killed by Tom, when he attempts to flee to America without her. Harry is found by Grace Lisle, Sir Arthur's ward, and to whom he was engaged, and she is the means of saving him from further disgrace, and later she becomes his wife and Sir Arthur at last has his fondest dream realized.

Side Tracked—VIM—SEPTEMBER 7.—Featuring Babe Hardy and Billy Ruge. Mr. and Mrs. Runt, newlyweds, start on their honeymoon and longing for a smoke the bridegroom strolls to the smoker. Here he falls asleep and the switching during the night of his end of the train leaves him miles away from his wife. Plump, a drummer, on the same train does all in his power to comfort Mrs. Runt and escorts her to a hotel and promises to find her missing spouse. Runt arrives at the hotel just in time to see Plump leaving, and jealousy, rage and murder fly through the air and the innocent drummer makes a hurried exit. Exhausted after his murderous chase Runt returns to his room and seeing his loved one in tears relents and takes wifey in his arms.

These new American-Mutual dramas are, descending, "The Light," five reels; "The Man Who Would Not Die," and "Matching Jim."

A Deluded Wife—(THREE REELS)—KNICKERBOCKER—SEPTEMBER 8.—Edith Carroll, fiance of Joe Brooks, a wealthy contractor, meets Hubert Ranston at a function given by Mrs. Ness and the two become great friends. Even after her marriage she meets the social favorite clandestinely, much to her mother's annoyance. She tells Joe and cautions him about his wife's indiscretions. Business calls Joe from town one day and that evening Hubert invites Edith to accompany him to a concert. She does, and when they return Hubert asks her to leave her husband for him, but she refuses and begs him to leave. Hubert leaves and after the butler has locked the house we see an unknown intruder in Edith's bedroom picking up her valuable necklace. The next morning Edith misses her necklace and raises the alarm and Joe sends for a detective, who proves that Hubert stole the necklace. After the stolen necklace is recovered, and Hubert is led away to prison, Joe looks comfortingly at his wife, who now gives him a loving embrace.

A Bag of Trouble—VIM—SEPTEMBER 8.—Featuring Robert Burns and Walter Stull. Pokes finds a beautiful handbag and gives it to the maid living next door, little realizing that it was one which his wife had just purchased, and lost on her return home. Later, however, he regrets that he gave the bag to the maid when he meets Melba in the park and returns to gain possession of it. Pokes secures the bag, but on his way to the park he meets Jabbs, a local policeman, and terrified he drops the bag and Jabbs brings it home to his wife. When the maid sees Mrs. Jabbs displaying the bag she demands an explanation of Jabbs. Mrs. Pokes in the meantime has been frantically searching for her bag and forces Jabbs to assist her. Coming upon Pokes and Jabbs struggling for possession of the bag, Mrs. Pokes proves her ownership to it and marches away in triumph leading the unfortunate Pokes with her.

A Million for a Baby—(THREE REELS)—ESSANAY—SEPTEMBER 9.—Featuring Bryant Washburn and Marguerite Clayton. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

Taming Grouchy Bill—SELIG—SEPTEMBER 9.—Featuring Tom Mix and Victoria Forde. After seeing "Grouchy" Bill upbraid his wife, Mary, Tom Merrill, a cowpuncher, and his pals, decide upon a plan to tame him. Tom takes Mary into his confidence for the purpose of posing as Bill's mother-in-law. Bill is grouchy from the moment his mother-in-law arrives and when he refuses to carry her grip and follow orders he is overpowered by the muscular woman and made to obey her will. Bill asks the cowboys to saddle up the worst bucking horse on the ranch and he will take mother-in-law for a ride, but Tom in the role of mother-in-law rides the horse with ease. Bill finally comes to understand that his supposed mother-in-law is really Tom Merrill and he is thoroughly tamed.

Selig-Tribune, No. 68—AUGUST 2.—German submarine mine layer U. C. 5, which was captured and brought to London, England, is placed on exhibition at Temple Pier; civilians, who are to learn, in four weeks' time, how they may aid Uncle Sam in case of war, make preparations to leave for cruise on battleships Maine and Kentucky. Navy Yard, Brooklyn, N. Y.; President and Mrs. Wilson entertain the Democratic Campaign Committee at the White House, Washington, D. C.; Brigadier-General James Parker reviews the troops of the Illinois National Guard, stationed in Brownsville district, Brownsville, Tex.; one hundred tractors of all types plow and harrow 160 acres of land at the National Tractor Farming Demonstration held at Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

Selig-Tribune No. 69—AUGUST 28.—President Poincare and distinguished French army officials inspect the battlefields in the Somme region, on the River Somme, France; Governor Dunne, of Illinois, visits the training camps at New Braunfels, Tex., and with his son, Richard, participates in a swimming race in the Guadalupe River; the Ohio building, weighing more than 1,000 tons, is placed on giant scows and moved down the bay to the San Carlos Country Club, where it will be used as a club house, San Francisco, Cal.; railway presidents leave the White House after conferring with President Wilson concerning methods to avoid a strike of 400,000 railroad employees, Washington, D. C.; huge mortar guns hurl projectiles weighing 1,046 pounds at an imaginary fleet, Fort Totten, L. I.; Walter C. Hagen, of Rochester, N. Y., wins the Western open golf championship tournament, Milwaukee, Wis.

Mutual Pictures

Atonement—(Two Reels)—American—September 4.—Featuring Alfred Vosburgh and Vivian Rich. Richard Stanton, the son of a millionaire, falls in love with Colette, a cafe dancer, and his father, who wishes him to become a minister, buys her off and when Richard discovers her drinking wine with a young man in her dressing room he becomes angry and hits him over the head with a wine bottle. Thinking he has killed the man he flees and hides on the dock. He is knocked unconscious by several wharf rats and placed in a boat which is set adrift. He is rescued by fishermen and is taken to the home of the Rev. Bergold. Undine, the minister's granddaughter, falls in love with him, but Dick, thinking he is a murderer, realizes he can never ask her to become his wife. Later he discovers, however, that the man was only injured and he prepares to leave for his home. Undine, through love for her grandfather, will not leave him, and that night, as a good-night and a good-bye prayer is being said at the Bergold home, Dick, who is to leave on the morrow, receives a call to take up the work of the aged clergyman.

Matchin' Jim—(Two Reels)—Mustang—September 8.—Matchin' Jim, who received his name because of his mania for matching, meets Phyllis Ellings, a child of the backwoods, and they become the best of friends. Hawkins, a gambler, about this time comes to "Flying A" ranch and at once becomes interested in Phyllis, who cares nothing for him. Jim learns that he has a rival and thinking his only chance is to get Hawkins out of the way, he makes him a proposition. Jim tells Hawkins he will match him to see which one shall court Phyllis, and Hawkins wins, and Jim packs his belongings and leaves, being unable to bear to see Hawkins and Phyllis together. He comes upon an old shack and he stops for something to eat and discovers the place inhabited by a young woman and a new-born baby. She tells Jim that she has been deserted and at once Jim suspects Hawkins. He returns to the ranch and forces Hawkins to accompany him to the shack. When Hawkins learns that a child has been born to him he begs his wife's forgiveness and Jim returns to Phyllis.

Rolling to Ruin—(Two Reels)—Vogue—September 10.—Featuring Paddy McQuire. Paddy, the owner of a grocery store, gets in Dutch with his wife when he makes love to Gypsey, the cashier. The cashier is discharged and later she meets Paddy and the two proceed to a skating rink, where skating in bathing suits is the rage. They create excitement galore and have a splendid time until Moon, Gypsey's sweetheart, and Paddy's wife arrive. Paddy and Gypsey escape to a roller coaster and a fierce fight starts and continues while the car is going at lightning speed. Suddenly the car crashes from the rails and tumbles into the ocean. Paddy and Gypsey struggle from the surf only to be met by the wife and police, who take them in hand.

A Boomerang Gold Brick—Beauty—August 6.—Featuring Orral Humphrey. Armed with a couple of bank rolls, Si Green and his wife, Mandy, come to the city, and they soon fall in with a pair of slickers who believe Si and his rubles are easily separated. Si flirts with one Ima Deville and on the pretense of going to put his roll in the bank escapes from the protecting wing of Mandy. She conducts him to a place which she designates as her home and just as they reach the most interesting stage of the proceedings, U. R. Dunn, Ima's supposed father, arrives on the scene greatly depressed for ready cash. Si buys a gold brick and it later does some good service in tapping the nut of U. R. Dunn, when he attempts to get Mandy's roll. The picture ends with Si and Mandy kissing the gold brick that proved a boomerang.

Universal Program

Dead or Alive—(Two Reels)—Episode 4 of "Liberty"—Universal Special Feature.—In this episode, Liberty consents to marry Manuel to save her American guardian from disgrace. It is decided she is only to be Manuel's wife in name, however. Captain Rutledge witnesses the wedding and departs in sadness. The episode closes with the U. S. troops marching into Mexico to punish the insurrectos who attacked the town of Discovery, and the savage attempts of Manuel to force his attentions on his unwilling wife.

From the Rogues' Gallery—(Two Reels)—September 4.—Featuring Carter De Haven. In this episode of "Timothy Dobbs, That's Me," Timothy once more gains entree into a studio. He is dressed in an outfit which happens to resemble that of the Eel, a notorious safebreaker, and is taken by the director into the slums. Poor Timothy is dragged by the Eel's henchmen into their dive, but his make-up comes off and the men find they have been deceived. Whereupon they surmise he is a detective and treat him accordingly. Meanwhile, the director has left in disgust at the non-appearance of his leading man.

The Boy from the Gilded East—Nestor—September 4.—With Eddie Lyons, Priscilla Dean and Lee Moran. Many comical situations are built up around the arrival of an innocent Eastern soda clerk in the West. After a peculiar experience, he is taken for a noted bandit and is about to be strung up when the sheriff discovers his mistake. The story ends with the boy being given a position in the saloon of his newly found sweetheart.

The Code of the Mounted—(Three Reels)—Gold Seal—September 5.—In this drama of the mountains, Thornton, a member of the R. N. W. M. P., is forced to arrest the brother of his sweetheart, who has committed murder. This is largely a part of a design which Sergeant O'Rourke has formed to make Thornton's sweetheart, Marie, pay the price for her brother's release. But while O'Rourke is attacking the girl, he is shot, and the murderer is allowed to go free. Then Marie and Thornton are left in happiness, for the freed murderer is none other than Marie's brother.

Love's Boomerang—Nestor—September 5.—With Harry Depp. This story deals with the defeat of an obstinate father by the young people whose happiness he is trying to thwart. After the father is fooled into marrying his ugly housekeeper, thinking it is someone else, he does not feel so important.

Circumstantial Justice—Laemmle—September 6.—With Irene Hunt. Moreland has killed the man who has won his neglected wife's love. Mrs. Moreland pleads with the judge, as she believes she is largely to blame, but the judge is adamant and will allow no leniency. However, his wife promises Mrs. Moreland help. She writes her husband that she has eloped with her love. Whereupon, the judge, manlike, seeks to slay the person who has stolen his wife. The latter afterward explains the reason for her ruse and the judge promises lenience with Mr. Moreland.

The Triumph of Love—(Two Reels)—Big U—September 7.—With Cleo Madison and Tom Chatterton. In this drama of the seashore, a fisherman claims the honors for saving the girl he covets from drowning, when, in reality, he only witnessed the saving of the girl by another man. The latter never knows how his deed has been made stock of by the fisherman until he returns the following year. This time the girl saves the stranger, the two come to a sweet understanding, and the deceitful fisherman is out of the race forever.

Making a U. S. Soldier—Powers—September 7.—This is a complete picturization of the training of the men who form the fighting force of the United States army. Various preliminary drills are followed by the rigorous training which makes the finished soldier.

He Became a Regular Fellow—Victor—September 7.—Pat Rooney featured. This comedy concerns itself with the way in which a confirmed "sissy," on being sent to college, gets really rough with the help of a chorus girl, who, dressed as his mother, fools the principal and takes the young man out nightly into the gay life. When the principal finally discovers how matters stand, word is sent to father, who, instead of being grieved, is delighted.

The Pinnacle—(Two Reels)—Imp—September 8.—With Myrtle Gonzalez and Richard Stanton. This story concerns a young lawyer, who, urged on by his wife to reach the pinncale of his profession, clears a wealthy man, Feldman, of a crime of which he knows the latter to be guilty. In return for this, Feldman sends him rich clients and his success is assured. The lawyer being forced to neglect his wife, the latter is led astray by Feldman. When at last the husband discovers Feldman's actions, a fight ensues, Feldman is killed and the wife and husband are reconciled.

His Country's Call—Rex—September 8.—With Edith Roberts and M. K. Wilson. This story deals with a French peasant, his wife about to become a mother, who temporarily places love before patriotism. The man later realizes his duty to his country, comes out of hiding and reenters the army. He wins honors on the battlefront and returns alive to his wife and baby.

The Laugh of Scorn—Big U—September 9.—Featuring Ben Wilson and Edna Hunter. When Dixie, a resident of a mountain village, falls in love with the new school teacher, her old flame, Steve, does everything he can to discredit the newcomer. Failing in his attempts he tries to shoot the teacher, but wounds Dixie. The story closes with the disappearance of Steve and the lovers' happiness.

The Princely Bandit—(Two Reels)—Bison—September 9.—Featuring Francis Ford and Grace Cunard. The "madcap" queen of Crona is much vexed because she must marry Prince Frederick within a week. She is bound she will marry whom she chooses, regardless of anyone. The story goes on to show how, in an unconvntional manner, she marries the man of her choice, even though it does happen to be Frederick.

The Deacon Stops the Show—Joker—September 9.—Gale Henry and William Franey featured. The members of the Anti-Sin League attend a burlesque show with a view to determine whether or not it is fit for the public. After the show they all start for the sheriff's office, with the exception of the deacon, who has secretly received an invitation to visit one of the dancers in her dressing room. It finally devolves upon the sheriff to go in and save the deacon. After the league members have waited an indefinite period they rush behind the scenes to find the two men in their seventh heaven of delight with the chorus girls.

Mountain Blood—Big U—September 10.—Molly Malone featured. Jack and Burt, two brothers, are at last run down by the revenue officers for illicitly manufacturing whiskey in the mountains. Molly, in love with Jack, although Burt also loves her, is unable to prevent the fight which takes place with the officers. In this fight Burt sacrifices himself for his brother—a testimony of his great love for both his brother and the girl.

As the Candle Burns—Imp—September 10.—With Jean Herbert and Irene Hunting. In the beginning of this film we see John Ayres about to be taken to the poorhouse. Then a look into his past is taken—we see how his son was arrested for embezzling funds from a bank and how the son's actions killed the mother. The old man took his entire savings to the bank president to make good the shortage. As the film is about to close, the poorhouse officers come for Ayers, but only find a corpse.

Finishing touches are being put on Portland's new moving picture theater, the Elm. It is scheduled to open September 11. The new house has a seating capacity of about 1,000, the main floor seating 600 and the balcony the remainder. Undoubtedly the outside front of the house is one of the most beautiful in this state. It is done in gray fire brick with concrete trimmings with an ornamental stone Face of Mirth as the keystone of the big arch which embodies both window and doorway. Hundreds of electric lights will outline the whole front as well as the copper finished marquee which extends over the entrance. This marquee is suspended by massive copper chains. A large tree made of electric lights will be one of the unique features of the front of the house. This sign of the tree is 28 feet high, and will be lighted with green in the summer and red when the leaves turn in the fall.

"CIVILIZATION'S" STAR

When Thomas H. Ince selected the players for his huge spectacle, "Civilization," he chose Howard Hickman for the most striking role in the multiple reel feature. To this young actor the N. Y. M. P. producer gave the difficult part of Count Ferdinand.

Howard Hickman, lead in Ince's "Civilization."

As aristocrat-inventor of a deadly war machine, Count Ferdinand is the dominant character of the story. Hickman's earlier work as the autocratic officer of the warring forces was artistic. Later in the picture he sacrifices himself rather than take the lives of innocent women and children which the submarine, of which he is commander, is to blow up.

Hickman's training equipped him well to meet the requirements of the Ince picture. First, he was born in Missouri, the "show me" state. He started his stage career at the Grand Opera House in San Francisco, playing boys' parts. He toured with stock companies, and had engagements with Melbourne MacDowell, Amelia Bingham, Robert Mantell, Charles Richman and Eva Tanguay, and was in vaudeville.

Otis Turner, an old friend, persuaded him to join the Universal company, where he had many good pictures. Then he was engaged by the New York Motion Picture Company and has taken the lead in other important productions.

In private life Hickman is the husband of Bessie Barriscale, also an Ince star. He is a polished and capable artist.

ATLANTA FILMERS AT DALLAS

During the week beginning July 24, the trade in Dallas, Texas, was visited by several Atlanta film men, some of them taking up their duties as executives in Dallas exchanges and the others, visiting Dallas representatives of their companies on short business trips.

W. M. Byrd, manager of the Fox Film Corporation, resigned to take charge of the new film company in Dallas, handling Dixon's "The Fall of A Nation." Succeeding him is O. P. Hall, former Fox manager in Atlanta, and recently managing one of the larger Atlanta picture theaters.

Wm. Oldknow, general manager of the Consolidated Film & Supply Company, with headquarters at Atlanta, is visiting the Dallas office of his company.

Jos. L. Marientette, southern district manager of the World Film Exchanges, with headquarters in Atlanta, came to Dallas to take charge of their office here, upon the resignation of R. H. Logan. Following him a few days later, Nat Barasch, recently road man in Atlanta territory for the World, arrived to take the managership of the local World exchange. Mr. Barasch formerly was in the Dallas territory as road man for the Fox company, and he knows personally a large number of Southwestern exhibitors, who will be glad to hear of his coming back to Texas.

Warren Shorts, formerly in Atlanta, with the Cort productions, "The Whirl of Life," and "The Melting Pot," is in Dallas, handling his "The Whirl of Life" in the Southwest. He has an office in Memphis and is still running the office in Atlanta.

Some more changes in the film line-up in Dallas are in the V-L-S-E and Consolidated exchanges.

C. A. Meade, until last week manager of the local V-L-S-E exchange, left on July 27 for New York, where he will take an executive position in the New York office of the V-L-S-E organization. J. B. Dugger, assistant manager, has been appointed to the managership. Mr. Dugger started with the organization when the Dallas office was opened, as road man, and was later promoted to assistant manager.

On July 25, the employees of the Dallas office met in Mr. Meade's office and presented him with a fine gold watch. Mr. Meade was so overcome with their gift that he could not find words to express his appreciation. The Dallas V-L-S-E exchange is known as the "exchange of friendliness"—everyone employed in that office is loyal and untiring workers, and the atmosphere of friendliness prevails from the manager down to the shipping department.

C. R. Scott, who recently came back to Dallas from New York, and in association with F. M. Sanford, started the Unity Film Exchange, in Dallas, handling the Southwest on "Diana," "The Yellow Menace," etc., from the Unity in New York, has accepted a position with the Consolidated in Dallas to exploit "The Dumb Girl of Portici" and "Where Are My Children?"

The Unity exchange, having "Diana" and a Chaplin film, is being operated by F. M. Sanford alone.

Motion pictures of the civic pageant opening the eighth annual Cotton Carnival at Galveston, machine gun practice at Fort Sam Houston and militia movements at El Paso and other border towns, were featured in the Pathe News No. 58, taken and presented in collaboration with the Dallas News. This series of pictures were shown during the week of July 23 at the Queen Theater, Dallas, to large crowds.

VALKYRIEN AGAINST STUNTS

How would you like to have a villain chase you for hours over sharp rocks until your bare feet are as sore as an ulcerated tooth, and then be commandeered by a trumpeting director to finish the scene on "those wave-swept cliffs down yonder," where mazes of slimy eel-weeds jerk the feet from under you, baring your prostrate body to the onslaught of a thousand razor-edge barnacles encrusted on the rock under the weeds; and how would you feel if right then and there—when you feel more like a pulp than a person—you are finally commandeered to jump from the looming crag into the swirling undertow of the Atlantic Ocean at a temperature of 54½ degrees Fahrenheit? When in addition you are expected to make a clean-cut dive with lacerated, bleeding feet and swim away from the villain in water cold enough to paralyze a bull, you will begin to sympathize with Valkyrien, the Danish Screen Diva, who survived this form of torture and came out triumphantly in order to add the zest of veritable realism to the great Fox sea-drama, which she has just finished.

Valkyrien has decided to do no more "stunts," however. "If you succeed at it, you do not get any credit for it," says this young and gloriously beautiful star. "If producers want acrobatic effects they should hire acrobats for the scenes requiring them. A veritable actress, who has earned her reputation on histrionic merit, should not be required to do acrobatics, for even if she is successful at it the audiences will gradually drift into the habit of expecting 'stunts' from her in place of real acting."

NEW ENGLAND FILM MAN

Earle B. Tinker needs no introduction in the New England territory. Mr. Tinker is one of the pioneers of the picture industry in the east. Back in 1909 Tinker ran a picture show up in that portion of the Pine Tree State referred to as "Aroostook," and which is noted chiefly for its potato crops and the quantity of its murders. Notwithstanding the fact that Tinker hailed from the north of Maine, he has most assuredly made a name for himself among the film folk of the down east district.

Earle B. Tinker.

In addition to his theatrical interests, Tinker has been associated with several of the leading distributors. He has been salesman, publicity man and branch manager. His present connection with the Phoenix Film Corporation of Massachusetts, has extended over a period of a year, during which time so much business was turned in from the Maine territory that the Phoenix officials deemed it advisable to open an office in that section, and accordingly last winter a distributing branch was opened in Ellsworth, Maine, under Mr. Tinker's management.

A peculiar thing about Mr. Tinker is that he has never aspired to be a city salesman or manager. He is content to do business and to be associated with the exhibitors of the smaller cities and towns.

Israel Cobe has been appointed special representative for the Unity Film Service to handle "The Yellow Menace" serial and the other features put out by Unity in New York state.

Mr. Cobe will look after the Unity branch offices, making his headquarters in Albany for the eastern part of the state and Buffalo for the west. Mr. Cobe is well known to exhibitors in this territory and claims that he is going to make a record with "The Yellow Menace" serial.

In August Henry Mayer became the owner of the Star theater in Lamberton, Ohio, having purchased same from Carver & Groebner.

The Greater Vitagraph

The Welding of Two Gigantic Business-Building Forces.

THE name, "VITAGRAPH" has been all you have had to know about a film for the past twenty years.

The name, "GREATER VITAGRAPH" is a title which tempts the imagination.

The name, V-L-S-E stands for all that is Fair, Square and Upbuilding in moving picture business practices — for SERVICE — HELPFULNESS — COMMERCIAL EQUITY.

On September First Vitagraph and V=L=S=E Became One

Vitagraph brings to the absorption, unequalled resources in capital, capacity and experience. It offers the exhibitors of America the superlative productions of a twenty-five million dollar corporation.

To this allegiance, V-L-S-E brings a selling organization of twenty-three exchanges and a large sales staff, every one of whom has been carefully schooled for one purpose — THE FULLEST AND MOST CONSCIENTIOUS SERVICE TO THE EXHIBITOR.

To it also, the V-L-S-E brings sales policies which, by reason of their equity, have won for this company probably the greatest volume of good will ever achieved by any organization of any kind in a similar period of time.

The union of these two great forces into one compact, smooth-running WHOLE throws open the door of OPPORTUNITY to the exhibitors of America as it has never been opened before.

New Distributing Company Born

KLEINE, EDISON, SELIG AND ESSANAY FORM FOUR-CORNERED COMBINE

HERE it is—the new distributing combine that everybody knew was coming.

Kleine, Edison, Selig and Essanay pictures will hereafter radiate from the same renters. The new releasing concern was formed at a meeting of the executive heads of the interested companies held in Chicago last week. The combine will make its first releases on September 16.

Following the withdrawal of Essanay and Selig from V-L-S-E and the absorbtion of the latter by Vitagraph, as announced in MOTOGRAPHY last week, it was expected that the two Chicago producing companies would immediately form a new connection. As prophesied last week, Kleine plays a role in the new "releasing drama." As stated before, Lubin will hereafter release through the new Vitagraph.

The Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay amalgamation is for the purpose of distribution only, each company retaining its individuality as formerly, but releasing through the same exchanges. Besides the new features of the four companies all of the Selig and Essanay feature productions, formerly released through V-L-S-E, Inc., will, after September 16, be released through the new organization.

The distributing offices of George Kleine will be utilized for this purpose in addition to releasing the Kleine-Edison features. Offices are located in Chicago, New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Atlanta, Toronto, Montreal, Minneapolis, Dallas, Kansas City, Denver, Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Indianapolis, Salt Lake City, Detroit, St. Louis, Washington, New Orleans and Cincinnati.

Limited Number of Quality Releases

"The policy of the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service throughout the United States and Canada will be the placing on the market of a limited rather than an unlimited quantity of meritorious feature plays of five to eight reels in length," said George K. Spoor. "These will be presented at irregular intervals but sufficient in number to place before the public annually a great number of stars and desirable productions. In other words, it is our aim to give the public quality rather than quantity.

"Among Essanay's new features which are already finished and which will be released through the new organization are 'The Return of Eve,' featuring Edna Mayo, supported by Eugene O'Brien; 'The Prince of Graustark,' featuring Bryant Washburn and Marguerite Clayton; 'The Breakers,' featuring Bryant Washburn and Nell Craig, and 'The Chaperon,' featuring Edna Mayo and Eugene O'Brien. Other new features are now under way, one in which Essanay's great star, Henry B. Walthall, will appear.

"All of these features will be released under the open booking system. There will be no program whatsoever. Every exhibitor will have the privilege of looking at any or all features and booking and rejecting what he wishes.

"I am a thorough believer in merit and our pictures will stand wholly on merit. There will be nothing crammed down the exhibitor's throat and no attempt at any such system. Exhibitors know best what will please their individual audiences and are the best judges of what pictures they should show.

Favors Open Booking

"I might add that I believe that in the very near future that every picture will be offered on the open booking plan. The day of trying to foist a program on the exhibitor, trying to make him take good, bad and indifferent plays, is now past. The sooner producers and exhibitors recognize this fact the better it will be for the motion picture business. It can mean nothing but better pictures.

"Exhibitors are too intelligent to stand for the program policy in features much longer. I think I am safe in saying that practically all of them prefer the open booking plan and the only reason that programs are used at all is because conditions have been such that they have scarcely been able to help themselves.

"Essanay is planning to give the exhibitor and the public none but excellent pictures. That we are staking our reputation and our future on this is evidenced by the fact that we are giving the exhibitor absolute liberty to reject any film that he does not think is up to standard. In other words, while we are claiming all excellent pictures, we are making the exhibitor the final judge in this matter. It is not our say so that will decide whether the picture has merit or not; it is the decision of the exhibitor after he has seen the picture. On his decision we stand or fall.

"Our aim in the new organization, therefore, will be, in the first place, to produce pictures that never will disappoint, and to give the exhibitor such service that he will be able to make the utmost profit out of their value."

Selig's Statement

William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company, made the following statement to MOTOGRAPHY:

"I received a number of offers from prominent booking exchanges," said Mr. Selig, "but, after careful consideration I selected the Kleine list of offices. These exchange offices are located in twenty-two of the principal cities of the United States and Canada, are up-to-date and enterprising in every way, and the Selig new releasing affiliations cannot but be successful in every respect. It is my purpose to place all our Red Seal Plays previously released through V-L-S-E, into the Kleine list of exchange offices. These Red Seal Plays will number over twenty and will include such productions as 'The Rosary,' 'Thou Shalt Not Covet,' 'The Prince Chap,' 'Into the Primitive,' 'At Piney Ridge,' 'The Cycle of Fate, 'No Greater Love,' 'Sweet Alyssum,' 'A Black Sheep,' 'The Circular Staircase,' 'House of a Thousand Candles," 'A Texas Steer,' 'The Millionaire Baby,' 'The Carpet From Bagdad,' and others.

"Not only will our past successes be released through the Kleine exchanges," continued Mr. Selig, "but I am completing plans for some forthcoming Red Seal Plays that will make the industry sit up and take notice. I propose to spare no time, expense nor money in making Selig feature films of five reels or more, up to the highest standard in every detail."

BIG FILM FIELD IN CHINA

Native Subjects and Low Prices Make Sure Appeal to Oriental Audiences—American Productions Now Used in Chinese Theaters

The motion picture business in China is practically confined to the treaty ports and more especially to the large commercial centers such as Shanghai, Tientsin, and Hongkong, according to Commerce Reports. It has developed almost exclusively in the higher priced theaters charging from 50 to 75 cents a seat. In Shanghai there are probably six such motion picture houses, while Tientsin and Peking have smaller numbers. Many Chinese frequent these theaters, and special inducements are offered at Sunday exhibitions by reductions in prices.

The films displayed in these houses prior to 1914 were almost entirely of French manufacture and furnished by French firms. Subsequent to the outbreak of war several American film companies succeeded in creating a demand for their films among the picture theaters in the Orient. So far as the foreign populations in China are concerned, and this may be interpreted also to include a certain number of the wealthy Chinese, there is probably not much opportunity for increased business.

It is believed that there is an excellent opportunity to work up a motion picture business for the Chinese population. In order to do this, prices of admission would have to be very low. The Chinese people are great theater-goers and are extremely fond of theatricals. The native playhouses are money-making institutions and the Chinese sit for hours enjoying the native melodramatic productions. Their theaters are on the order of cafes, tables being provided and tea and Chinese delicacies served. The price of admission is nominal; in fact, many charge no fee for admission, but depend entirely on the profits from the sale of drinks and food products.

It is evident that the motion picture is especially adapted to Chinese audiences, as many of the plays have the character of pantomimes. They also have a species of crude motion picture which was introduced centuries ago and might be called a transparency. Chinese figures are painted on an oiled transparent silk and manipulated behind a screen in such a way as to produce a motion picture effect. These are on a miniature basis. They are very popular and are used universally throughout China.

The Chinese are essentially an agricultural people and live in villages rather than in cities, although there are some large cities. The largest cities are provided with buildings erected for theatrical purposes. They have not developed the idea of scenery for use on their stages, so that the Chinese actor may often be seen standing on a chair frantically grasping at some imaginary object, which the audience has been taught to understand indicates the scaling of a precipitous mountain. Armies are depicted by a single file of soldiers walking in one door and out of another. The dress of the Chinese actors is very spectacular and in a way makes up for the lack of scenery and other decorative features on their stages. They are very fond of melodrama, applaud their heroes, and rejoice in seeing the villain get his just deserts.

There is a big field in China for the development of native films, and it is along this line that the greatest opportunity undoubtedly exists for American film producers. A few foreign films will always find a place in the Chinese motion picture show, but it is not probable that the Chinese public would continually patronize these theaters if they exhibited foreign films only. In fact, about two-thirds of the performance should be given to native films, and one-third to foreign productions. At present a few Chinese theaters are displaying motion picture films, but, generally speaking, the films are badly worn, the machines poor, and the exhibitions not creditable. If the business of producing native films for Chinese audiences is to be made a success, the Chinese public must be given good pictures on good machines at cheap prices.

Hart in a New One

William S. Hart soon will be enabled to give his many admirers an opportunity to study him in a brand new characterization when he is presented by Thomas H. Ince as the star of an unusual Triangle Kay Bee play by C. Gardner Sullivan, entitled "The Dawn Maker." The production has been heralded from the Ince studios as one of the most beautiful film dramas ever seen on the screen and is being counted upon to win additional laurels for the already famous Hart.

Arrow Signs Sidney Bracy

Sidney Bracy, who will be remembered for his magnificent work in "The Million Dollar Mystery" and other Thanhouser serials and feature pictures, has been signed by W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, for work in a number of new features which will be produced under the direction of Howell Hansel at the Arrow's studio in Yonkers, New York.

The following persons attended the luncheon given on August 31 at the Hotel Wallick in New York by Harry Fox of the International Film Service, Inc.:

Harry Fox, Earl Gulick, W. W. Johnston, Basil Dickey, Theodore Wharton, E. B. Hatrick, Wid Gunning, James Beecroft, Wen Milligan, Charles Condon, Jim Milligan, A. L. Haase, Fred Beecroft, J. E. MacBride, J. K. Burger, Peter Milne, A. H. Shirk, T. E. Oliphant, Manny Chappelle, J. I. Greene, Mr. Kracht, T. C. Deitrich.

Let's Get Back to Prosperity

BY FRANK J. REMBUSCH

THERE are many questions affecting this industry as a whole that need immediate consideration; and ninety per cent of the problems are those that affect the manufacturer, the distributor and the exhibitor. The distributing and manufacturing branch on one hand and the exhibiting branch on the other must naturally be foremost in fixing the standards and shaping the policies of this industry. For the first time exhibitor and manufacturer meet face to face. Neither one understands the other and this is the reason why there are no standard methods of doing business and such inconsistent ideas are prevalent in reference to the earning possibilities of this business.

Censorship

The first work should be combating censorship. The specter of the most drastic censorship, that will practically ruin this business if it is brought about, stands before us. In every state professional reformers are collecting money to be used against us. We are being slandered by these persons daily. The public's conscience is being aroused. Look what the Federation of Women Clubs, the Federation of Catholic Societies, and other organizations are saying about motion pictures. The Ladies' Home Journal just issued, numerous magazines and papers, are all talking censorship. The propaganda work of the severest kind against motion pictures is being formulated and we are not even holding up a finger against it.

Propaganda work must be met by propaganda work. We know that censorship is impossible and impractical; that the motion picture is generally clean and wholesome, but when only one side of the story is heard by the public what can we expect?

We should have our side of the censorship question told in the best magazines and newspapers from our standpoint, by the best writers we can secure. We should have on hand literature available for any exhibitor at any time to distribute to his patrons, and then we should use the power vested in the screen to defend ourselves in an actual way, and quit just talking about it.

The Picture Story

There are also reasons why the public conscience is being aroused, and the manufacturers of film, by organized efforts, could eliminate these objections without detriment to their business.

These are the four principal objections to the motion picture today:

1st. The use of cigarettes by the great stars, who appear in the eyes of children as heroes. Less use would make them just as great.

2d. Nudity. Much is unnecessary.

3d. The theme of infidelity and unfaithfulness between husband and wife in the eternal triangle. Censorship is always advocated by persons past the meridian of life and they resent their children seeing this form of story so frequently. The picture story in times past mostly started with love's young dream and ended in a happy marriage. Now it generally starts at the marriage altar and ends at the grave. People want recreation and not study. Ninety per cent are pleased with pictures that make them happy and contented. If you will talk to people who are not going to picture shows you will find one reason why the box office receipts are dwindling.

4th. What is particularly disappointing and annoying to the public is the fact that they have no way of knowing what kind of picture they are going to see. A new form of publicity is needed. Clean pictures should be advertised as clean pictures—a vampire as a vampire. Up to now publicity tends to bring out the sensational features alone. If we have a picture that will appeal to the church going people we ought to say so and get them to come. If it is a picture that bumps the line let them know it and they will not criticise. Look at the public conscience on every moral question. It is becoming keener every year. We will do well to prepare ourselves. For example, the saloon—it is passing. If we don't sometimes call attention to the fact that we are showing clean pictures every picture will soon be a dirty picture in the eyes of the public and we will also pass away.

Too Much Broadway

We are all influenced too much by the experience of the "legitimate" stage and Broadway standards. A film that passes on Broadway without criticism will often raise Ned in a tank town. Under the present system Mr. Exhibitor is forced to run a picture whether or no—because it is in line on the program and the exhibitor cannot help himself even though it ruins the business for him.

This is propaganda work because it is in the rural community that we are going to find the greatest objections to motion pictures and from the amount of money the manufacturer and exhibitor have had to pay so far it seems we should certainly lose no time but use good business sense and work fast.

Standards of Doing Business

Popcorn is worth five cents a sack the world over but we are still buying and selling film like horse traders. Whoever is the best trader cleans up on the other. A film whether good or bad should have a price on it which should be quoted upon release. Exhibitors could then do their own buying instead of present continual dickering and bickering. He could buy more and not overbuy and buy better to his needs and could buy ahead and have his program filled up for weeks and months ahead.

There should be a credit system to eliminate the dead beat and encourage good pay exhibitors by giving cash preference.

There should be a universal method of paying for service which in my opinion should be cash in advance, but not deposits. There should be a universal form of contract or as near that as we can get and the Federation should force every manufacturer and exhibitor to hold to the contracts that are made between the exhibitor and manufacturer.

The Price and the Program

The manufacturer sits at his desk in New York and dictates policies that are impossible to follow; ruinous to himself and to exhibitors. He makes film regardless of what the people want. The success of any manufacturing institution is in cutting down the cost. The film producer works the other way. He is notoriously wasteful; excessive and lavish in his expenditures for film production; and we exhibitors are expected to foot the bills. He seems to think there is no limit. Last week I heard about film service at $100 a day. Today it is quoted $1,000 a week. The price of film service climbs higher and higher and the market price of stock in film companies is quoted lower and lower and the people go less and less to the picture shows.

The economic conditions of the business are deplorable. In face of the general prosperity in all other lines of business the motion picture business becomes more of a losing proposition every day. We are in that period of the industry where we have overreached ourselves. We have over-estimated the possible earnings of this business and we must, if we are going to save ourselves, have some standard method of doing business. For lack of any other word I want to say that the manufacturers and producers are often ignorant of what the people really want and what the exhibitor needs. The business is slipping everywhere and there is no hope to save it except through organization and an organization that every one connected in the business will have confidence in.

In conclusion, I would like to see some pictures made that would be particularly suitable for the whole family; in fact, the function of the moving picture was to entertain the whole family. That is how we made our money and that is how we will make it again. But it can't be brought about spasmodically, and nothing would ruin this business more easily than an upheavel in which everybody changed their policies at once. But if we get together once a month and talk over the things that pertain to our business and really and truly "lay the cards face up" we will soon accomplish a great deal.

I said to one manufacturer, "Your program is too fine. It goes beyond the comprehension of most people." But he answered, "You get a higher class of people in your theater." There is where we are all wrong. We live and prosper by catering to the most people and not a special class of people. Today the film offerings cater too much to the higher class alone and most subjects are made in so many reels that most people haven't the time to go and see a motion picture show.

We need the long show and the short show; the one-reel and the five-reel. Every manufacturer should specialize in a certain way, and then the exhibitor can specialize in his daily program. One day he can cater to one class of people and the next day to another class and in that way he will get all the people into the show.

Therefore I reiterate that if the exhibitor and manufacturer around the same table take up questions affecting the whole industry censorship will soon cease; programs that appeal to more people will develop; more people will go to picture shows; expense and overhead will be lessened; manufacturing and exhibiting costs will be cut down and we will all prosper again as we did in the good days gone by.

More Plans for Exhibitors' Ball

A special committee of arrangements, consisting of I. N. Hartstall, Louis Blumenthal and Wm. Hilkemeier, has been elected by the New York City Exhibitors' League for the Thanksgiving ball to be held at the Madison Square Garden. Thomas Howard was appointed chairman of publicity, printing and program, and Otto Lederer has charge of the badges.

At the last ball over 25,000 people attended, and the arrangements made this year will allow a much larger attendance without crowding. The arrangements committee promises some unique and fascinating "stunts" to be pulled off at the big party.

Sunday Shows Lose in Wichita

By H. E. Jameyson
Special to Motography.

The exhibitors of Wichita, Kansas, lost their fight for Sunday shows. At a special election held August 29 the opponents of Sunday shows polled 1,600 more votes than did the showmen. The election was the consummation of a bitter fight extending over three months.

The exhibitors claim that had the election been held with the primaries, as was intended, they would have won. They had prepared at that time a large petition, with something over six thousand names, and all of these people had been registered. However, the city clerks did not have the time to check over the petition before the primaries, so the election was postponed. This delay caused the interest on the part of some of the petitioners to die, and at the same time allowed the Ministerial Association which fought Sunday opening a chance to strengthen their forces.

The exhibitors carried every ward and precinct in the city except that portion of Wichita known as the "West Side." In this section is located The Friends' University, a Quaker school. This neighborhood is largely populated with Quakers, and it was these precincts that defeated Sunday pictures.

The exhibitors say that they intend to hold another election next year, and in the meantime strengthen their organization so as to be able to carry on a broader campaign.

Terre Haute Exhibitors Organize

A new exhibitors' association has been perfected and promises to take its place among the other strong organizations in the field. The Exhibitors' Association of Terre Haute, Indiana, was officially launched on August 26.

William E. Keating was elected president, Bennie Van Borssum vice president, Nat Wolf secretary, and G. Boland treasurer.

This organization gives Terre Haute its first film club; the organization has several plans for the betterment of the business in that city.

The grievance board consists of Will E. Keating, Nat Wolf, Ike Ades and Sam Drifuss. This board is to act on all troubles that arise in any phase of the business. The committee has just settled a dispute between the musicians' union and the theaters, and has also authorized the secretary to write to F. J. Rembusch, president of the state league, that the new organization will work hand and hand with him.

Big Metro Serial Coming

William Christy Cabanne announces that he has been engaged by Mr. Fred J. Balshofer, president Quality Picture Corporation, to produce a half million dollar photo serial starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, for release on the Metro program.

Mr. Cabanne has been associated with David Wark Griffin ever since the early Biograph days, and until recently as producer of Fine Arts productions. A partial list of Mr. Cabanne's recent productions include "The Lamb" and "Flirting With Fate," starring Douglas Fairbanks, and "Sold for Marriage" and "Daphne and The Pirate," starring Lillian Gish.

If There Had Been a Strike

INTERESTING DELIVERY PLANS MADE BY DISTRIBUTORS TO CARE FOR EXHIBITORS

EVEN though the nation-wide railroad strike has been prevented, the plans laid by producers, distributors and various organizations to deliver films to exhibitors in case of a tie-up are extremely interesting. They reveal the great efforts all the big companies will make to protect business and to aid the exhibitor in case of an emergency, and also show the spirit of co-operation which is growing up in all branches of the motion picture industry.

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry held several meetings in New York City to discuss the question as did also the executive heads of practically all of the distributing companies. The F-I-L-M Club of Chicago, composed of ninety per cent of the exchange men of that city, issued a call for a special meeting which was to take effect immediately upon receipt of the news that congress had failed to pass the eight hour law demanded by the railroad brotherhoods of employes. The distributors were relieved to learn that the emergency meeting would be unnecessary but were ready with plans for complete auto truck service for the Chicago territory in case of necessity.

National Association Calls Exchange Men

When the strike seemed certain, meetings of the exchange men were called by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, at which the situation was discussed in detail and committees appointed.

It was determined that motor trucks and boats could be obtained to care for conditions, embracing the states of New York, New Jersey, Massachusetts, Connecticut, etc. The plan practically perfected was to establish distributing agencies in all central cities where films could be delivered by motor trucks and called for by exhibitors. The idea was communicated by wire to all parts of the country, and in many instances it was found that exchanges in various cities had already put similar plans on foot.

The representatives of various releasing companies reported upon the policies of their respective concerns in event of the strike being called in the matter of new releases. Some planned to continue releasing, others to stop or only to release a part of their output. It was ascertained, however, that in nearly every case the exchanges were well supplied with material, sufficient to keep the exhibitors going until the trouble should be settled.

The first meeting to discuss the situation was held at the new offices of the association in the Times building, with Don C. Bell, vice president, presiding. On motion the following committee was appointed to confer on the question and act accordingly. Messrs. Hoffman, Abrams, Parsons, Buxbohm, Partridge, Graham, Schafer, Justice, Weiss and Saunders (chairman). This committee held a later meeting and appointed sub-committees to look into the matter of trucks, boats, to confer with heads of traffic and express companies, and so on. They reported in the evening that while the railroads could give no satisfaction, at least one express company promised to care for the film business. Also they found that it would be possible to obtain trucks and other conveyances in sufficient numbers to take care of all the deliveries.

A spirit of co-operation was evidenced by all concerned, and if the strike should be called the film men will be in readiness. No houses will be obliged to close their doors for want of pictures, and business will not suffer to any appreciable extent.

The companies represented at the meetings were the V. L. S. E., Universal, Paramount, Fox, Metro, Pathe, Mutual, World, Triangle and General.

Aeroplane Service Arranged

The most spectacular of the arrangements made to take effect in the event of the railroad employes' vacation were those of the Fox and International companies. These concerns had provided for an aeroplane service between New York and Chicago and they claim the plan to be entirely feasible. The professional aviators with whom the tentative arrangements were made declared that regular trips could be made with little danger of serious irregularity.

International completed arrangements with Capt. Thomas F. Baldwin, president of the Atlantic Coast Aeronautical Station, for an aerial line between New York and Chicago.

Captain Baldwin agreed to hold in readiness his three crack fliers, Victor Vernon, Victor Carlston and Johnston, the sensational Californian. He also held for immediate use a twin-tractor aeroplane, capable of making from 90 to 100 miles an hour.

"While I would deplore a railroad strike," said Captain Baldwin, "I would welcome an opportunity of demonstrating the practicability of an aeroplane service of this kind. Only two days ago Victor Carlston covered 700 miles in 8 hours and 40 minutes. We can do even better than that. If the strike comes, I am satisfied that the International Film Service, Inc., will experience no difficulty in distributing its films throughout the country."

Adolph Zukor, president, and Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, had perfected plans for the establishment of a coast to coast bus system for the carrying of films to exhibitors. Five hundred automobiles were to be utilized for this purpose.

P. A. Powers, of the Universal Company, adopted the same measures for his own organization and dispatches were sent out to the district managers to get into touch with the Universal exhibitors and ascertain just how they would view the system of transporting their films by truck.

A good example of the plans laid by the more progressive exchange men of the various large cities is found in the advance arrangements made by Harry Lehnhart of the western Fox territory and the men in his Chicago office. A complete and practical plan of trolley routes was laid out covering the entire Chicago territory. Time was estimated down to the minute and all connections were carefully recorded. To test the arrangement a dummy film was sent by electric railway from the Chicago office to Terre Haute, Indiana, which happens to be the location of the Fox customer furthest, by trolley, from the Chicago Fox office. The dummy arrived on schedule time, after zig-zagging through a maze of connections.

The four Chicago Fox road men were called in and each was to keep on the jump supplying his houses with shows. Centers were planned from which the adjacent territory was to be covered. It was even expected to send two trunkfuls of film down the Chicago river to Joliet, Illinois. Manager Lehnhart stated to MOTOGRAPHY that, with the additional help of motor services, there would not have been a single Fox show in the Chicago section missed on account of the strike.

All the above plans to serve the exhibitor is gratifying news for him because it is assurance that no brain will be left unturned to take care of his shows in case a strike or other tie-up ever does occur.

Danish Producer Looks Over U. S.

Benjamin Christie, one of the heads of the Dansk Biograf Co. of Copenhagen, Denmark, is here to look over the American producing field in general, with a view to establishing producing branches here in particular. The Dansk is anxious to erect studios in this country and put out big features. It is backed by a syndicate of Danish millionaires, who already are operating three studios in Copenhagen and putting out big features, one of which, in seven reels, "Blind Justice," Mr. Christie brings with him. This feature the versatile Mr. Christie, who will be recalled as the star of "Sealed Orders," wrote, directed and starred in himself. It deals with Victor Hugo-like power with the grip of the law on an innocent man.

The war has not affected the motion picture business in Europe, says Mr. Christie. He added some interesting details of European studio work.

In Russia the actors refuse to work except from 3 to 4 p. m. In Denmark the hours are 9 a. m. to 3 p. m.

Several of the Fine Arts studio boys answered the call of President Wilson in his announcement for the militia to advance towards the Mexican border.

A Season's Fishing—

SYMPATHIZE WITH THE COERCED CAMERAMAN

WANTED: A motion picture actress who has not had her picture snapped in her bathing suit.

"Hello, Mr. Editor!"

Who's that?

"This is Anna Little talking, and I want to tell you that I have never been caught on any old film or plate in my bathing suit, so there!"

Pardon us, Anna, we'll withdraw the want ad immediately.

Nevertheless, in spite of Original Anna, it's not difficult to get beach photographs of ninety-nine and forty-four one-hundredths of the beauties of the screen, particularly those upon whom an artist would look with an eye full of aesthetics. It is an atrocious habit these fair screenesses have fallen into, aided and abetted by the press agent. It's a terrible bore to be forced to gaze upon Venusian forms clad—almost—in chic and diversified bathing suits and the whole tantalizing combination crowned with a keen and mischievous smile.

We repeat—it's an atrocious habit. (Boy, bring me them nymph pictures again.)

You know how to sympathize with me when I was commissioned by MOTOGRAPHY

That right toe coyly digging the sand belongs to Fay Tincher of Triangle. In a minute Eve Strawn, the Pallas poiser, will disappear hat first into the water; and next to her the fair Foxess, Juanita Hansen, is contemplating the sea of matrimony. The highland lassie is sparkling Norma Talmadge.

Exchange Men Organize Club

Managers of the various film exchanges in New York City and vicinity held a meeting at the Astor Hotel in August and organized a social club. It will be known as the Film Club of New York City. Meetings are to be held twice a month. The object is purely social.

On August 31 a second meeting was held in the form of a luncheon at Hotel Astor, followed by a business meeting.

Every exchange manager and assistant manager or any higher official is eligible; and those who have not already joined can do so at any meeting.

A. T. Beck of the Mutual Film Corporation was elected presiding officer and W. E. Raynor of George Kleine, secretary and treasurer. The members are as follows:

A. T. Beck, Mutual; W. E. Raynor, George Kleine; E. M. Saunders, Metro; W. L. Sherry, Paramount; S. Eckman, Triangle; S. P. Kramer, Bluebird; P. J. Schaeffer, World; H. Boxbaum, General; E. H. Goldstein, Universal; M. F. Tobias, Mutual; Joseph Engle, International; Jules Bernstein, Monmouth; M. Hoffman, Universal; H. Gainsborough, Universal Exchange; S. Zieler, Universal Exchange; S. Abiles, Pathe; Mr. Hamil, Pathe; Joseph Partridge, V-L-S-E; Jack Levy, Fox Film; Phil Meyer, B. S. Moss; H. R. Ebenstein, B. S. Moss; Wm. S. Seymour, Jersey Paramount.

Fox Exchanges Expand

Harry Lehnhart, Fox manager of the central western territory, has returned to his Chicago headquarters from a trip to the exchanges at Denver, Kansas City, Omaha, St. Louis, Salt Lake City, and Minneapolis. In each of these exchanges additional space has been arranged for. In Denver an entire new building has been secured. The Chicago office in the Mallers building is also to expand in the near future.

Here's the Catch

to make a tour of the beaches of America and capture the pictures of some of the classiest of the darlings of the dip—I almost said dippy darlings. Darn, I hated it! It became necessary for me to observe carefully thousands of amphibious Aphrodites in magnetic array breaking the breakers, leaping through the air with head down and limbs straight to pierce the water, or bewitchingly reflecting the sunshine upon the sand. I gnashed by teeth in rage whenever I caught a number of timid beauties hugging the shore. I never could stand beach nuts as a regular diet. They're too rich.

In my travels hunting the nymphs in their native habitats I left my footprints on the sands of quite some Time at most of the beaches in America. Practically every one of these was near some body of water. I saw all the places where it is popular in summer to don a coming out costume, jump into the lake and gulp down water from its original source without the aid of the water works system.

With my eagle eye out for stars who had left the screen for the sand I paraded along the water's edge at Atlantic City and was reminded of the beautiful young film angie noo who asked the Los Angeles librarian for the book "Twenty Thousand Legs Under the Sea." The book keeper gave her a descriptive pamphlet of the above popular resort.

No proud beauty who habitually plies the waters of Long Island and all its environs escaped capture by my capacious camera. One of the Vitagraph girls described me as a very snappy person, and she was so gracious about it that I allowed another punster to run at large, much as I hate 'em.

I codded the girls at Cape Cod, and kept the star swimmers in the blue lakes of York from getting blue. I paroled the North Shore at Chicago; haunted Long Beach and all the others on the sunset edge of Califilmia. It was a long and tiresome trip and I suffered many inconveniences. For instance, I was forced to get up at four o'clock one morning to get the fifteenth view of a certain American star who is too beautiful to mention. My camera is cumbersome so I left it at the hotel that day and the trip weakened my eyes from much straining.

And here's the season's catch, simmered down to make room for the rest of the magazine. Although these well-sculptured beauties form but one and four-tenths per centum of the season's number of the screen's bathing belles, we do claim that the group gamboling across MOTOGRAPHY's fair pages represents the lion's share of all the types of pulchritude that dipped pink toes in this summer's waters.

On the whole, I had dastardly luck on the trip. I didn't get a single over-exposure on my plates. But I did my best, and there they are.

CENSORSHIP SETTLED

Minneapolis Film Men, Exhibitors and City Representatives Hold Peaceful Meeting and Splendid Results Obtained—Mayor Has Final Say

While censorship has never been a real serious question in Minneapolis, nevertheless it has been hanging over the industry in the Northwest like a small threatening cloud. Whether it would disappear altogether or develop into large proportions was keenly watched by all interested in the business.

A meeting at which Mayor Nye of Minneapolis participated was held by the film men of all the prominent exchanges, and the social, religious and charitable organizations of the city on September 1 at a noon-day luncheon.

In view of the fact that censorial conditions could not be avoided, it perhaps developed into one of the broadest and sanest situations that has arisen in the motion picture industry at any of its vital stations in this country.

The outcome of this gathering, as it will be taken into consideration by the mayor, is that in the main censorship will rest with him. The censor board will be able to demand eliminations, but the mayor alone will have the power to condemn. Assisting him in his work of determining the merits or demerits of the photoplays will be volunteers of the various organizations present at the meeting. There will be no official permits issued; there will be no fees; neither will each and every picture be viewed by the censors.

Every picture brought into Minneapolis will have to be registered with the mayor's office, with the name of the picture and the name of the manufacturer. The trade papers will be consulted by the mayor and his assistants as to whether the picture contains anything objectionable; they will also rely to some extent on the national board of review's opinion. Their chief source of information, however, will be the reviews of the trade papers.

Should anything be found that is seemingly not what it should be in the reports of the trade papers concerning a picture, the firm or person handling that photoplay in Minneapolis will be requested to submit it to a board at which the owner of the picture or his representative will be allowed and permitted to offer any explanations that he might see fit. The theaters will also have to submit a list of the pictures they intend showing in advance of exhibition date.

Briefly, the entire situation is that of a registration of all pictures with the mayor.

It was not only acknowledged by many of the film men but enthusiastically stated by them that the meeting was one of the broadest and most reasonable gatherings that could be imagined. It progressed most harmoniously, and resulted in anything but a hardship being imposed on the industry in Minneapolis. There was no tendency shown at any time by either faction to open up hostilities which would offend any one. There was a united action and a reasonable and broad view assumed by every person present.

Among those present representing the film industry were: Mr. Bradford of Triangle; Davis of Metro; Friedman of Pathe; Robinson of Fox; Stafford of Mutual; Knapp of General; Barnett, Sr., of Famous Players. The censor board was represented by Mayor Nye, Miss Michaels of the Jewish Women's Club, a representative of the Drama League, Mr. Nelson of the censor board, the secretary of the censor board, and others.

CHILDREN ADMITTED

Children Over 12 Years of Age May Attend Shows in New York—All Restrictions Off Soon

The exhibiting situation in New York City is now somewhat relieved. The health commissioner has announced that children over 12 years of age may now be admitted to motion picture theaters, and that as soon as schools are opened, probably on September 25, all restrictions may be removed.

While incalculable harm has been done the exhibitors, particularly the smaller ones, as well as the exchanges, which have in the majority of instances rallied to the support of the showmen and cut the prices of films to meet the exigencies of the situation, the film business has stood up well under the conditions.

In Brooklyn particularly the exhibitors were hard hit, and many houses closed their doors altogether, while others gave only night performances.

Now that the embargo is to be removed, exhibitors look forward to a rapid restoration of normal business conditions, and it is believed that a few weeks at most will see the largest attendance in months at the picture shows.

The film men, in the face of a consistent injury to their business, have been scrupulous in obeying the mandates of the health department. This, too, in the face of their belief, as they have in several instances claimed, that children were permitted to assemble in other places than theaters, where the danger of infection was greater.

All over New York state exhibitors are anticipating and preparing for a big fall season, which they hope will to some extent reimburse them for their losses during the summer months.

It is a notable fact that since the community scare over the inroads of disease started in New York not one case has ever been traced to the theaters.

The United Film Service, who are distributing "The Yellow Menace" in the fourteen western states, are having fine reports from their managers in their various branch offices regarding the demand which has sprung up in all parts of that territory for "The Yellow Menace."

Mutual Moves Into Chicago

CENTER OF SIXTY-EIGHT EXCHANGES TRANSFERRED FROM NEW YORK

CHICAGO has gathered the headquarters of the Mutual Film Corporation into her inevitable fold. The big distributing concern is one of the first to take action to capitalize the unique position of Chicago as an efficient center of film distribution. Other industries have seen the value of a central radiating point for a long time.

Mutual's executive offices run 68 exchanges in the States and Canada. The office staff and equipment were transported on a special express train, moved at "war speed" to avoid possible delay incident to the threatened railway strike. The new headquarters now occupy a floor in the Consumers building.

The removal was accomplished without interruption of the operations of the big concern, save as time was lost when desks were in transit from offices to station at each end of the line. On the journey across the country the clerks and accountants were busy on the "office train."

Among the officials to come to Chicago are John R. Freuler, president; J. C. Graham, assistant to the president; D. J. Sullivan, general manager of the serials and Charles Chaplin departments, and Terry Ramsaye, director of publicity.

The removal of the Mutual offices to Chicago is part of a program put in operation by Mr. Freuler soon after his election to the presidency of the corporation in June, 1915. It is really a homecoming, for the Mutual Film corporation was born of a conference of film men held by Mr. Freuler at the Hotel La Salle in 1907.

"Chicago, for many reasons, principal among them location, shipping facilities and general service, is the best point from which to direct any great national distribution," observed Mr. Freuler. "Location is particularly important to a motion picture concern, because time is almost as big an element as in newspaper service. We shall continue, however, to operate export offices and to hold official representation in New York, which because of the war has taken the world market for film from London."

Universal presents some unusually beautiful scenes in "Black Friday," the five-part Red Feather which gives Dorothy Davenport the center of the screen.

Other Concerns May Move West

While the Mutual is the first of the big motion picture concerns to move westward, similar steps may be expected from others, according to the gossip that spreads itself about the Longacre region in New York, which until recently has been the undisputed film capital.

The coming of the Mutual brings ninety-seven officers and employes and fifty families to live in Chicago. The concern distributes approximately 900,000 feet of motion pictures a week and does a business of about a million dollars a month, which will hereafter be reflected in Chicago bank clearings.

One of the interesting items of the big film shipment west is 10,000 feet of negatives of Charles Chaplin comedies, from which prints for the use of theaters are made. This shipment was insured for $179,000, although this represented but a small fraction of its value.

21,000 Miles for a Deck of Cards

Twenty-one thousand miles to get a deck of playing cards.

This is the unique record held by Walter Law. It took him more than seven years before he got the cards, and he handles them now like so many precious pearls. Mr. Law is enthusiastic about the deck, and considers it the only one of its kind in the entire world.

The bewhiskered star of the photoplay picked the cards up in stray places throughout the United States between 1900 and 1907, when he was a traveling man for a big commercial house. He says he wouldn't part with them for the throne at Delhi.

"Thirty-one states are represented in my queer assortment," the William Fox actor says, "and Ohio is the only one that has three cards. For the most part the deck is composed of cheap fifteen cent variety. I have the name of the city and the street in which each was found, with the date on the back of every card. There are fifty-two good stories in that deck, too.

Cleveland Exhibitors Meet

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Cleveland held a short meeting last week, at which Ernest Schwartz, chairman of the committee of eight appointed to deal with the operators' union in regard to their increased wage scale demand, made his report. The committee has served its demand for arbitration upon the Federation of Labor. This will prevent any immediate hostile action on the part of the operators, as neither a strike nor a boycott order can emanate from the labor union while they are in the state of arbitration.

The committee consists of Ernest Schwartz, chairman; S. Aubrey, John Sliney, Henry Lustig, W. J. Slimm, S. F. Deutch, Sam Bullock, Wm. Miller and Benjamin Sawyer, president of the league.

In the Triangle Fine Arts production, "The Defenders," Bessie Love permitted a clay water jar to be demolished in her arms by a pistol shot.

To Sell Clothes at Big Ball

In connection with the Reel Fellows' Club's second annual ball, which is scheduled to be held in one of Chicago's loop hotels on November 10, a fancy bazaar will be held at which many of the leading photoplay stars will sell all sorts of bric-a-brac, autographed pictures of themselves and parts of costumes they have worn in their most noted character delineations.

It is expected that one of Charlie Chaplin's canes and several of the discarded comic derby hats he has worn from time to time in pictures will be raffled off. With each of the Chaplin articles will be a card telling in what plays he used them.

With the Mutual headquarters now established in Chicago, it is announced that Charlie Chaplin will be here a week prior to the ball, and from present indications it is stated he can be prevailed upon to add a special impetus to the ball.

The receipts of both the bazaar and ball will be added to the "new club house fund," which, before the end of the year, it is expected will amount to about $50,000.

"Unlike the big motion picture exposition which was held in the Coliseum, and which was attended by a coterie of popular stars, the public will be able to meet the stellar lights of the screen at this bazaar and ball," says Richard Travers of the Essanay Company, who will lead the grand march.

The other novel attraction of the club, the show which will be put on in one of the loop theaters, in which leading photoplay stars will appear, will go into rehearsal shortly after the ball and bazaar is held.

The new club house will be in a leased building in the heart of the loop. A sport lodge on the shores of Cedar Lake (Ind.), fifty miles from Chicago, has already been secured for the benefit of members next summer.

Chicago Company Reorganized

Reorganization of the directorate of the Eagle Film Manufacturing and Producing Company, Chicago, bringing the control of the company into the hands of thoroughly practical men in the motion picture field, is announced by that company. At a meeting of stockholders held recently William J. Dunn, Frank Zambreno, J. J. Aman, Howard A. Brundage, J. Leitch, N. Salopoulos, Charles M. Ross, J. B. Enders, Frank G. McClure, Theodore Hochstetter and Thomas F. Fleming were chosen directors and given full power to direct the affairs of the company according to their ideas of the best interests of the stockholders.

As one of his first acts in his new position Mr. Dunn has contracted with the Unity Sales Corporation for the release of a new comedy series featuring Fernandez Perez, a Spanish comedian long associated with Pathe Freres, Eclipse, Eclair, Ambrosia and other European companies and the star of "The Near-Sighted Cyclist," said to be a record holding film with the sale of 950 copies to its credit. Ten pictures of the series already have been delivered and accepted.

Vincent Serrano, the new Thanhouser star, is at work at the New Rochelle studios on "A Modern Monte Cristo," a feature by Lloyd Lonergan that will be released through the Pathe exchanges. Eugene Moore is directing Mr. Serrano.

Lorimore, Ince Executive

An important executive position in the Harper Film Corporation, which is the official title of the body handling Thos. H. Ince's million dollar spectacle "Civilization," projects Alex Lorimore right in the forefront of the picture industry of today.

Alex Lorimore, Ince Executive.

It is little more than four years since Mr. Lorimore entered the American film business. English by birth, his earlier associations were of a strictly commercial nature. Still well under forty years of age, he had the great advantage of starting his business career in the Bank of England. Mr. Lorimore came to Canada and after a prosperous career there became publicity and advertising head of the Gaumont Company in New York. This was a step to the general sales agency for the same company and this again led to the position of becoming assistant to the general manager. Mr. Lorimore was next with William Fox, then became president of the National Movement Motion Picture Bureau, a concern which handled the well known "Boy Scout" picture that created so much interest in the United States last year.

Then came the presidency of the Colonial Motion Picture Company, a million dollar concern in which Mr. Lorimore once more demonstrated his rare organizing and executive abilities. Finally when Thos. H. Ince went to New York in June last with "Civilization," and wished to enlarge his staff by including in it a man of integrity and organizing ability, who was familiar with every angle of the motion picture business, he selected Mr. Lorimore.

Mr. Lorimore handles some administration and detail ends of this great enterprise "Civilization." He has made the state right marketing of motion pictures a special study.

"You know," said Mr. Lorimore, "many great pictures have been released on this market within recent times, and they have lost out, simply because the people who handled them did not know the business. The records of the industry for the last two or three years include scores of instances proving the truth of this."

"You see," said Mr. Lorimore, "showmanship is really an art and science in itself, demanding its own formula for success. Mr. Ince, great producer as he is, has also been a showman all his life. That is one of the many reasons why he is successful. Let's take a case in further emphasis of my point. Suppose Mr. Ince sold the rights of 'Civilization' to some of these rich seekers after it and they were unsuccessful with it in their territory. Don't you think this would damage the experienced showman in the next territory? That's why we're mighty careful in selling state rights."

A tale of a girl of triple personality, "Saint, Devil and Woman," will be released by the Thanhouser Film Corporation through the Pathe exchanges on September 24. Florence La Badie, the star, is supported by Wayne Arey, Hector Dion and Ethyle Cooke.

What Theater Men Are Doing

AN OPEN FORUM

This is a department of, by and for exhibitors. We want YOU represented here. Other managers and proprietors of picture theaters want to hear YOUR experiences, your opinions and your advice. Write to this department telling us your story, how you started, how you grew and all about your theater and how you manage it. Mention your advertising methods and your lobby displays. If possible send in photographs of yourself and your house. Address, The Forum, Motography, Chicago.

For Colored Folks Only

HAVING become fully imbued with the belief that the colored people will like better to patronize an entertainment of the films when all the surroundings are above the average, Paul Majewski who is probably the youngest exhibitor in Florida, has purchased a fine lot in the colored district of West Palm Beach and will erect a building having a stage for vaudeville as well as a curtain for films.

The building will be located near the Star Theater which Majewski has been so successfully conducting for the past year. In size it will be 30x100, and there will be space for two concessions in the front. The construction material will be in part hollow tile—and in all ways it will be comfortable, attractive and well-equipped in all that goes to make up a good business proposition. It will have alley emergency exits—and will cater to the better class of the colored folks.

Two Oregon Houses Buy Out Competitor

By Ralph R. Cronise
Special to Motography

Introducing Albany, Oregon, to Motography let me state that this is a pretty little home city of 7,000 population located in the center of the beautiful Willamette Valley, one of the richest farming sections of the United States. The principal industries are farming and lumbering, and some small manufacturing establishments operate in the city. Albany is termed the "Hub City," because railroads radiate in all directions. It is on the main line of the Southern Pacific, and a round house and car shops are located here, giving the city considerable of a railroad population.

Speaking in the matter of moving pictures, Albany enjoys among the best services. At present there are two beautiful theaters running, the Globe and the Rolfe. These two recently combined managements and bought out and closed up the Hub Theater, an unnecessary third party with just enough patronage to drain the profits from the other two houses. During the summer months the Rolfe remained closed for five days out of the week, playing Fox features each week-end.

The Globe Theater plays Paramount pictures the first four days of each week, with Pathe News and Vogue comedies to supplement the bills. The Rolfe also runs Mutual "Seeing America" series and Mutual comedies. Beginning a short time ago Charlie Chaplin Mutuals are shown at the Globe with Paramount bills. The opening was "The Floorwalker." Triangle pictures hold the boards at the Globe from Friday to Sunday, and this excellent program with a good drama and Mack Sennett's inimitable comedies never fail to please the patrons. Fifteen cents is the price charged to all evening performances here.

"The Birth of a Nation" ran at the Globe for two days in August, the advance men billing the country and flooding the newspapers like a circus.

Recently an old theater man said to me that the moving picture business had reached a climax, and that from this point on the industry would mark time and start on a downward grade. His idea is that the people have had enough of the silent drama and that living, speaking forms are wanted on the stage. He points to the vast amounts expended on "The Birth of a Nation," "Civilization," "A Daughter of the Gods," and "Intolerance," the new release of D. W. Griffith, and argues that since no greater sums can be profitably or wisely expended, and that since no more similar investments can be made with profit, that the public will gradually lose interest in photoplays. I agree with him in that there may be a reviving interest in the legitimate, but cannot see the logic in his reasons for a decline on the shadow stage. It may be that the limit has been reached in lavish expenditures for big features, but I cannot conceive of how the public can lose interest in the dramatic abilities as presented on the screen of Theda Bara, Wm. Farnum and his brother Dustin, of Madame Bertha Kalich, Virginia Pearson, Mae Marsh, Blanche Sweet, Mary Pickford, Marguerite Clarke, Wm. Hart, or a multitude of other stars; or the comedy of "Fatty" Arbuckle, Charlie Chaplin, Mabel Normand, Fay Tincher and the rest of the fun brigade. His guess seems a long ways off to me.

The New Regent With the New Manager

An item of particular interest just now is the announcement that Lionel H. Keene of Baltimore, Md., will be manager of the Regent Theater, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. The Regent, which is located on Market street, below Seventeenth street, is being remodeled at a cost of nearly twenty thousand dollars, and the claim is that it will be one of the prettiest houses of its size in the country.

Among the many novel features is the new seating plan, termed "the saucer," including the very latest in orchestra chairs. There will be a selected orchestra of talented musicians, in addition to the splendid Kimball organ (the first to be installed in the city of Philadelphia), which when improvements are completed, will be an attraction of no mean importance.

Unique lighting effects, ladies' rest room with a matron in attendance, water boy, and lady ushers in military uniform, will all go to make for the comfort and pleasure of Regent patrons. The program will include first presentations of Metro and World photoplays, and a selected number of short subjects.

Mr. Keene has been associated with the Stanley Company of Philadelphia since the beginning of last season. While only twenty-five years of age, his experience in the theatrical business has been varied, covering associations with E. H. Sothern and Julia Marlowe, the inimitable Shakespearean artists now retired, and S. Z. Poli, the stock magnate of the east.

Exhibitor Installs a "Bar"

If all exhibitors would give their patrons such a treat as a certain Philadelphia house, summer business would never drop below par.

Joseph McCready and Mr. Yonker, of the Fifty-sixth Street Theater, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, made up their minds that they would give their patrons a treat during the hot months, a treat that has eventually turned into a great advertising idea for the theater. It is a "bar." At least that is what Mr. McCready calls it, although it is in reality a bower in the rear of the promenade; a bower made of lattice covered with flowers. In this bower is a "barmaid" who serves grape lemonade to the patrons without any cost. From the very first night it made a big hit, and all the people in the neighborhood talked a great deal about the pleasant innovation.

An English Advertising Idea

Smith Lord, the manager of the Cross Lane Picture House and the Elysium of Bradford, England, has some new ideas in regard to theater advertising and his methods are attracting a good deal of attention in his section. We give an example of his effective "readers" in which one reads "between the lines." This particular bill was printed in blue and red on a white background, and plastered all over the town.

The main principle in building up this kind of advertisement is to get it to "hold together." Anybody can write some striking message irrelevant to cinema advertising, but the difficulty is experienced in connecting it with the theater. Unless the two join up properly the whole thing falls flat and unconvincing. You will notice how smoothly the bold lettering reads on to the smaller "stuff" in the reproductions.

Booth Saves House from Fire

Fire damaging films to the estimated amount of $2,500, broke out in the operating booth of the Schade Theater of Sandusky, Ohio, recently. The blaze started with an explosion of a film. Thirteen reels were completely destroyed and the inside of the booth was badly scorched. Two machines were wrecked, bringing the total loss to $4,000.

No one was injured, although the theater was filled almost to capacity. As soon as it was discovered that a fire had broken out the audience moved quietly to the exits. No panic resulted. Some remained to watch the firemen.

The films destroyed were owned by the Metro, Lubin and Fox film companies. They were covered by insurance.

Operator Nelson Geise and Charles Frohman played heroic parts in extinguishing the flames. As soon as the explosion occurred Geise was forced to vacate the booth. Running quickly for a fire extinguisher he again entered the booth and in spite of the suffocating smoke from the films fought until firemen reached the scene. Charles Frohman also took a fire extinguisher and fought through a small film window, with flames dashing about his face. The fire-proof construction of the film room proved its worth, the theater proper not being damaged or in any way endangered. The destruction of the films, however, prevented further performances for the afternoon.

Smoke did not reach the big auditorium, the only odor being that of the pyrene from fire extinguishers. Six of these extinguishers and two chemical tanks were used.

It is said that the burning of so many films is very rare, but even though they made a very hot fire, the absolutely fireproof construction proved effective.

Manager Schade at once ordered new machines and films, and he opened his house in the evening as usual.

Lee and Harris Get Corning N. Y. House

The Corning Opera House, at Corning, New York, with a capacity of 1,100, has been leased for a term of years to Messrs. Jack Lee and L. E. Harris, of Albion, N. Y., under the firm name of Lee and Harris.

These hustling young men have had years of experience in the show business, having owned theaters in several towns of western New York. Mr. Harris is at present proprietor of the Family Theater at Albion.

The Corning Opera House has been refurnished, redecorated and reseated with elegant leather upholstered opera chairs and the management expects to open about October 1 as a combination moving picture, vaudeville and road show house. The house will be glad to hear from all managers on open time.

Special Run for Actors

By C. H. Dubois

Symphony Theater, Los Angeles, Cal.

We run Metro pictures exclusively. One Friday evening in August we made a special run after our regular performance of "Mister 44," starring Harold Lockwood and May Allison, which was attended by the full Metro force from the Yorke Studio here and their friends, all of whom were anxious to see the picture before it was sent to New York for the regular release. This picture was made by these Metro stars in and around California and is, I believe, the best and strongest picture these actors have appeared in. Henry Otto, the director, received congratulations on all sides.

The Co-operation of the Public

MAGAZINES which give attention to social betterment—most of the women's magazines do—have found a veritable mine of material in the motion picture. Their subjects range from discussion of children's programs to outright advocacy of censorship. Universally they are marked by a positive ambition to effect some sort of change in present conditions. Apparently none of them is satisfied with either the available output of pictures or the theaters in which they are shown. Their dissatisfaction is, in most cases, highly optimistic and wholly without malice; indeed, it is quite friendly as a general rule. But always there is the suggestion that the people should take a stronger hand in the regulation of pictures and picture theaters, or that the exhibitor should assume the initiative and secure the advance approval of his patrons to everything he shows.

Because magazines of the type indicated have considerable influence upon their readers, it is fortunate that the editors of their motion picture uplift departments are governed in the main by a pure and whole-hearted enthusiasm—which is more than the average newspaper would dare to claim. But misguided and half-informed enthusiasm is a dangerous thing. It puts irresponsible people into responsible positions, and lends an air of profound truth to assertions that will not stand analysis.

There is no thought in the motion picture business more beautiful than the co-operation of the exhibitor and the public—the partnership of parents and clubs and churches with their entertainers in the selection of ideal amusements. It is so easy to talk about, so few obstacles to it are apparent, that the co-operation enthusiasts wonder why it takes so long to work out, and shows so much resistance. And because their theories do not materialize, and their best efforts at constructive work seem to manifest only destructive results, they blame the exhibitor and the film manufacturer.

Co-operation with the public, of the sort idealized by these magazine writers and social workers, is a chimera, a will of the wisp. It cannot be practical, because the public—the lay partner in the co-operative scheme—never knows anything about the business, and cannot make political suggestions.

The public's end of the arrangement usually takes the form of a women's club, or at least a club committee, organized to give advice to the exhibitors. Sometimes it goes so far as to dictate programs for the whole community—which is beyond the privilege of any club or organization. Generally it presumes to dictate only the programs its children shall see—which is entirely within its rights if it can prove competence, and within its power whether it is competent or not.

Co-operation is a much abused word. The social workers use it freely when the thing they are trying to put over is coercion. They say "We are going to co-operate with you in the running of your show, and tell you what you can run and what you must not run, and we will let our children come after we have picked out the program for them." And having established that rule, they break their end of the contract by neglecting their self-imposed duties, and then keep the children away because they have not had time to pick out the show.

Running a program for children is no bed of roses, as many an exhibitor has already discovered; and running any kind of a show is beginning to demand diplomatic training. The exhibitor who has had offers of co-operation of the kind we have described is almost forced to accept them; his only alternative is the unpleasant and questionable one of rebuffing the good ladies and taking his chances with the "low-brow" part of the population. But he should hold no illusions as to the value of the "co-operation."

The good showman selects his own program with care, and then makes the people like it. That autocratic method, backed by reputable and responsible producers, is more satisfactory in the end to the public and everybody else concerned.

What Is the Matter with Kansas?

THE classical and immortal question we borrow for our heading might be equally fit for any state in which the principle of censorship prevails. We are satisfied to confine it to the home of Carrie Nation this time, though, because the censor board of that enlightened commonwealth has lately displayed a particularly arbitrary attitude.

The latest report is that Kansas allows its censor board to reject a film because it "sees no reason why it should pass!"

The situation is not entirely without precedent. History records that a loyalist jury once tried a certain rebellious Irishman for treason, acquitted him of the charge, and then sentenced him to hang anyway because they could see no reason why he should go free. And, of course, some brands of human nature have not changed since that time.

But possibly we do the Kansas board an injustice. It may be that it conceives its duty to lie in selecting pictures for Kansas as a citizen selects pictures to hang in his house. A discriminating art buyer, of course, might study a thousand paintings before he invested in one. The state of Kansas doubtless wishes to be as discriminating as the next one. It assumes that the motion picture producers find it no trouble to show goods. If its duly appointed agents, the censors, select one here and there as fit for the culture that is Kansas, and reject the rest, doubtless the producers should feel properly elated that any of their products have met the stern approval of the connoisseurs.

It may, as we say, be a misconception of censorial duty. It may be a spirit of antagonism. It may be plain boneheadedness. Whatever it is, it is not censorship. Fearsome and unreasonable as censorship really is, it is better than the thing they serve under that title in Kansas.

The system that finds a man or a film guilty without evidence, because it can see no special reason for a verdict of innocent, is a disgrace to this century. Even under the most arbitrary censorship, the picture that is up for trial without ever having been accused has at least the same rights as the prisoner at the bar, against whom some charge has been brought. The accused man is considered innocent until he is positively proven guilty. The picture, without accusation, is considered guilty until it has been dissected and analyzed and found to be innocent. And then—in Kansas—it is condemned anyway, because "we see no reason why it should pass."

In the light of this inquisitional procedure, it is interesting and relieving to turn to the system just adopted by one of the most modern and enlightened communities in this country —Minneapolis, Minnesota. The censor board in that city will be able to order eliminations, but the main function, the power of condemnation, will rest with the mayor alone. Volunteers from the film trade, the churches, and the social and charitable organizations of the city will assist him. There will be no official permits and no fees and the majority of the pictures will not be inspected at all.

It is to the trade paper reviews that the mayor of Minneapolis will turn for information as to the desirability of each release. The established integrity of those columns provides a highly efficient substitute for the projection room in the conduct of a reasonable censorship. Only when the review as printed reflects some doubt as to the desirability of a picture will a request be made for its showing, with an explanation by its representative.

The trade paper reviewers, as is evidenced by our own columns, reveal the merits and demerits of each picture with absolute conscientiousness. That they are more competent to judge of a picture's value and virtue than any board of appointed censors is a matter not of argument but of record. The mayor of Minneapolis will find that their analyses serve his purpose well and that the novel and ingenious project cannot fail to give general satisfaction.

"Split Reel" Notes for Theater Men

HOW OTHERS ARE STEERING THE SHIP

IN order to keep open on Sundays "cinema houses" in certain sections of England are required to divide their profits for the day with some charity designated by the city council.

C. J. Bauer, manager of the Lyric Theater, Sutton, Nebraska, was killed in a motor car accident on August 9.

The La Salle Opera House of Chicago is now on its second big month with "Where Are My Children?", the Universal drama.

Albert Castle of the Minneapolis Pathe exchange has recently been promoted to the position of assistant to Manager Friedman.

S. A. Louis, of the Rialto Theater Supply Company, Minneapolis, has secured the exclusive agency for the northwest to distribute the "Transverter."

Professor Sato Terkichi of the Japanese Imperial University at Sensai, has invented a process of manufacturing incombustible celluloid from bean cakes.

In spite of the heavy falling off of business this summer on account of the heat, Pittsburgh exhibitors state that they expect a record business this fall and winter.

The Friars Club sent Daniel Frohman, president of the Actors' Fund, a check for $7,200 as its donation to that fund. This was the net proceeds of the Friars Frolic Benefit.

Here is an innovation in programs: The Strand Theater of Altoona, Pennsylvania, runs each week in its program society notes, which are eagerly read by local residents.

The beautiful Colonial Theater of Chicago last week ran International's "Jaffery" to good business. On September 9 "Ramona," the big Clune spectacle, will be put on.

C. J. Verhalen, formerly publicity man for the Raver Film Corporation and Kriterion of New York City, is now with the Famous Players Star Feature Film Service of Minneapolis.

Aaron J. Jones, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, and Max Ascher, of Ascher Brothers, both firms running several Chicago picture houses, have been sojourning in New York for a few days.

Aaron A. Corn, late of the International Film Service, and formerly with the Pathe Exchange, has been added to the sales force of the Wm. L. Sherry offices, and will cover Manhattan and the Bronx for the Paramount program.

Kansas is advocating municipal ownership of motion picture theaters. One town in this state already owns its picture house and refuses to let any private competitor come in. Three other towns are arranging for municipally-owned houses.

The Pathe Film Exchange of Cleveland, Ohio, has leased the entire eighth floor of the Belmont building. The floor contains about 6,000 square feet of floor space and will afford a large screen room and offices.

Manager Aronson of the Cameraphone Theater, Pittsburgh, and George Panagotacos, who runs two houses and a candy company in Johnstown, Pennsylvania, visited Universal City last week to see "just how it is done."

The Tremont Theater of Boston has been rebuilt at considerable expense and "Civilization," the Ince spectacle, was shown as the opener on Labor Day. Governor McCall of Massachusetts and other distinguished officials attended.

Mike Rosenberg, of the De Luxe Feature Film Company, Seattle, Washington, has secured the rights for "Purity," "The Little Girl Next Door," and also the Clara Kimball Young productions, for Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana.

The Artcraft Pictures Corporation is negotiating for branch offices in Boston, Philadelphia, Washington, Atlanta, Dallas, San Francisco, Seattle, Denver, Minneapolis, Chicago, Kansas City, Detroit, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh and the principal cities of Canada.

The stage setting at the Rialto in New York, if that term can be used in a theater where there is no stage, was replaced last week with a new one just completed by the Lee Lash studios. The new setting shows a pergola and grape arbor and is very beautiful.

The French syndicate of the various cinema associations have begun to take steps to prevent the importation of German films into France after the war. It is claimed that a German picture will never again be allowed to be projected in France, and probably not in Great Britain or Russia.

Medford, Mass., is now coming in for its share of the infantile paralysis scare. Fourteen new cases of the disease were reported and an ordinance has been passed excluding all children under fifteen years of age from the motion picture theaters. The schools also will remain closed until the latter part of September.

Thomas H. Ince, wearing a blue striped collar, dropped in at the Rialto in New York last Sunday night to see Bessie Barriscale and Charles Ray play "Plain Jane." Tom supervised the production at the studio but wanted to see it with a Rothapfel setting. He left the theater smiling, if that means anything.

William Sherrill is carrying out the general Paramount plan of co-operation with the theaters running its pictures by installing a new department for the purpose of conducting local advertising campaigns centered about each theater. E. V. Morrison is to have the management of the new department.

"No form of picture theater advertising is so valuable as a well printed and smartly edited program," states Epes W. Sargent, an authority on advertising. "And," he continues, "practically every organ of that kind can be made self-supporting or more, by means of the advertisements of local tradesmen."

Benjamin S. Garetson has been engaged by the Eagle Film Company to take charge of its publicity department. Mr. Garetson will have his headquarters at the Chicago offices at present and later will go to Eagle City, Florida. He will handle the comedies for release through the Unity Sales Corporation.

Dr. A. G. Bennett, pastor of the First Methodist Church at Salina, Kansas, is a firm believer in motion pictures as an adjunct to the church service and for over a year has used one or more reels regularly in his evening services. His congregation is building a new $40,000 church, which is being fitted up so that pictures may be shown.

Manager R. W. Woodley, of the Woodley Theater, Los Angeles, transformed his ticket booth into the lower part of an old Dutch windmill for the showing of Mary Pickford in "Hulda from Holland." The mill's "fans" were kept moving by means of a small motor. Good business was the inevitable result. The lobby was also filled with blue and white paintings in keeping with the subject.

A leading theatrical trade paper recently sent a letter to S. L. Rothapfel at Forest City, Pennsylvania, where he ran a nickelodeon seven years ago. The missive was forwarded to him at the Rialto and he received it yesterday. From manager of a one-horse picture show to managing director of "the Temple of the Motion Picture" in seven years is not such bad going, but at that Rothapfel feels that somebody on the trade paper should have heard of it by this time.

Recommendations concerning a more rigorous censorship of films made by the general purposes committee of Birmingham, England, have been approved by the city justices. One recommendation was that every license granted should contain conditions to the effect that no film should be exhibited which the justices might prohibit on the ground of its objectionable character; and another that children should not be allowed to be in cinematograph exhibitions after nine o'clock.

The Triangle Company of London has decided to show its films to the trade in its own theaters. There will be forty shows a week. There are three private Triangle theaters in London, one at Leeds, one at Birmingham, one at Manchester, one at Glasgow and another at Newcastle. At each of these theaters five shows will be given each week, and at each show will be seen one Triangle-Drama and two Triangle-Keystones.

The Strand Theater of Altoona, Pennsylvania, pulled a very clever stunt in connection with the Famous Players production, "Under Cover," a Paramount picture in which Hazel Dawn is featured, by reason of which they packed their theater every performance. In the lobby of the house they installed a brass bed with mattress and bed clothes complete. They placed a picture of Hazel Dawn on the pillow and covered the lower part with covers. This aroused much interest in the production and J. Silverman, the manager, states that it affected his patronage considerably.

Harold Edel has been appointed managing director of the Strand Theater in New York to fill the vacancy created by the resignation of B. A. Rolfe, who is leaving the Strand to devote all of his time to Rolfe Photoplays. Mr. Edel will have as his assistant Warde Johnston, who will aid in the selection of soloists and matters pertaining to the musical program. Mr. Edel comes to the Strand from the Strand Theater, Buffalo, where he has held the position similar to the one that he now assumes. Previous to that time Mr. Edel was manager of a theater in Cleveland and other theaters controlled by Mr. Mitchel H. Mark, president of the Strand Corporation.

S. L. Rothapfel, managing director of the Rialto Theater, New York, went to Indianapolis last week to supervise the opening of the new Circle Theater there. The Circle is a large house, seating three thousand, and will be operated along the lines which Mr. Rothapfel has made the standard for motion picture exhibitors throughout the country. The owners of the house sent for him last month and he made a flying trip to Indianapolis to advise them on certain points of construction. On his last trip he devised the musical setting for the first week's bill, drilled the ushers, planned the light effects, and in short gave the entire institution a first hand touch of Rialto efficiency.

The Universal Film Mfg. Co. wishes to call the attention of exhibitors to the fact that pirated prints of Universal releases are being offered for sale by persons who have no right thereto, and who have no right to dispose of them. Warning is given them and to all exhibitors that all Universal pictures are copyrighted and protected from infringement by law. Wherever any Universal film, negative, prints or pictures are found for sale outside of regular distributing channels, i. e., exchanges, the offenders will be prosecuted to the limit of the law. Any exhibitor found showing any such Universal picture is also liable under the law, and the Universal will take legal action against them as well as against the seller of the same.

Thanhouseran Promoted

Edwin Thanhouser announces that Wayne Arey, Thanhouser leading man, has been promoted to stardom, and that he will hereafter be co-starred with Doris Grey, the Boston girl who leaped to fame by being selected as the most beautiful girl at the Boston exhibitors' ball.

Mr. Arey has appeared on Broadway in Belasco and Frohman productions and has had wide experience in stock companies throughout the country.

"Her Beloved Enemy," now being directed by Ernest Warde, will be the first production in which Miss Grey and Mr. Arey will be co-starred. The feature will be released through the Pathe exchanges.

First Aid to Theater Men

BY S. L. ROTHAPFEL

IT is interesting to note the different attitudes which the various exhibitors take toward competition. Some of them crave it as an athlete always seeks a worthy opponent to arouse him to his best efforts; others complain about and run from it like a coward afraid to fight. As a matter of fact we need opposition. We need the fear constantly held before us that the other fellow is going to win, to spur us on to our best efforts. If left alone to jog along in our individual rut we would soon lose all desire to change, we would neglect the talents which lay dormant within us, and be content to leave undeveloped the higher side of our nature. The man who has no competition is to be pitied rather than envied. He may be getting his money with little effort, but how much more could he make if there was some one ever at his elbow urging him on to greater effort. The exhibitor should court competition rather than avoid it. Do not be a sluggard, but let the keen wits of the other theater man whetted against yours form an incentive to you to work toward better and higher things at all times.

61—I am running one of the best little theaters in the northwest in a town of about 6,000 people. There are two theaters in the town and recently the other house put in a nursery as part of its service. They keep a white-capped maid in attendance and no charge is made. I have neither room nor time to put in such service. The other house is getting all the business because the older children can take the whole family, leaving the younger ones in the nursery. What do you think about this?

You will have to admit that the other man certainly was "on the job," studied his neighborhood and found out just what would bring the people to his house. The only thing for you to do is to find some attraction which will draw better than his. Do not start a nursery for that was his idea and you do not want to appear simply to follow in his footsteps and so gather the profits left over from his house. You must create your own ideas—you want to lead and not follow.

I do not like your expression, "I have neither room nor time for such service," for it sounds like a rather polite way of saying, "I don't want to be bothered with anything that means extra work." If this is your attitude you never will overcome the sharp competition which it is evident you have to meet.

The thing for you to do is to get right down to good hard work and deep thought. If that other theater is now getting all the patronage then you must devise some scheme which will turn the tide your way once more. It is time for you to begin to make a careful study of the people to whom you cater. Perhaps you can please them through your program. It is very comfortable to feel that the children are being taken care of while you are seeing the pictures, but this will not compensate for a poor or uninteresting program for the public has been educated to expect good pictures and are demanding more and more every day. Perhaps a program including the players they particularly like to see or a good strong serial showing one night a week would tempt the people back to your house. Some special attraction in the way of souvenirs, the giving away of pictures of the players, or a prize contest of some kind might draw. Artistic and out-of-the-ordinary decorations might help, or special music. Make a list of all the schemes you can think of and then decide which will have the most direct appeal to the people of your community.

If after due deliberation and a fair trial you find there is no attraction of any sort strong enough to counteract the service rendered by your rival in taking care of the children then turn your attention also to the children. If you have not enough space in your theater to carry out any plan which you conceive then rent a vacant stort or some small space nearby and utilize that. Do not simply start a nursery as the other man has done but plan something which will appeal to the youngsters themselves, so that they will demand to be taken to your theater. Probably they are not particularly keen about simply being kept out of mischief by a nurse so go a step or two farther and provide something for them which they will like, something which will amuse and interest them so that they will object strenuously if taken to the nursery at the other theater. If you cannot influence the grown people through their own interests you may be able to influence them through the children.

You evidently have a "live wire" to work against, and it is up to you to prove that you are the better manager of the two, or else let him take the business away from you.

You may feel just now when your receipts are poor that you cannot afford any more expense—that it will be a case of throwing good money after bad. There are two ways of looking at this. It will mean the expenditure of extra money for a short time until you get your patronage back, but nevertheless it will be more than made up in the increased receipts later on. Of course if you dare to risk it you can struggle along for a time with the small following you have and see if after the novelty wears off the nursery idea the people will not come back to you of their own accord. But you have an energetic man with whom to compete and as soon as he sees that this scheme is losing its pulling power he undoubtedly will be ready with another which will be just as good a business getter. You would better combat this competition now when it has just started than to let the people become firmly established as patrons of the rival house.

62—I seem to be able to get the crowds to come to my house whenever I have a special feature, but there appears to be something the trouble after they get there. Some of the people always become disgusted or angry before the evening is over. And just at the time when I want everything to go along so smoothly one thing after another goes wrong, and the performance just hitches along. I expect the matter is with me somehow, but I am sure I can't find out just what it is.

This is but one of the many plaints along the same line which I have received lately. The exhibitors get the crowds into their theaters and then don't know how to take care of them. One thing goes wrong and another quickly follows, and soon the people become irritable and discontented. In most instances I think it is a case of poor management brought about by lack of a well planned system to meet just such emergencies.

One exhibitor who has worked out a most comprehensive and complete system for handling crowds has shown his good fellowship by being willing to share it and I am herewith passing it along to other managers to whom I believe it will be a great help.

The following letter was written by Emery N. Downs, manager of the Knickerbocker Theater, Cleveland, Ohio, to H. I. Day, editor of Paramount Progress, issued by Paramount Pictures Corporation. In it Mr. Downs gives his plan of handling crowds.

"The Knickerbocker has a system which, though it may not apply to every theater, will give you an idea of how we handle the large crowds attending our theater. You may be able to apply some of these ideas to your own use.

"In the first place, the crowds should be handled before they arrive. Patrons should be given explicit information both by slides and program as to just the minute the feature will start at each show. The 'when to come' slides should be shown at each performance for at least a week before the crowd-getting attraction is to be exhibited.

"On these days the doors should be opened five or ten minutes before the usual time, and as the patrons are seated a close observation should be taken for two conditions: First, ushers must see that no single seats are left between parties who do not happen to be together. Second, the volume of patronage as the first show progresses should be carefully watched in order that one may know how the seats will be vacated as the second show starts to empty the house.

"If the house fills before the finish of the first show there should be an usher standing at the ticket window announcing, 'There are no seats for the first performance; the second show will start at ——, when there will be seats for all,' or some clear, short sentence informing patrons of the conditions.

"Every effort should be made to avoid excitement and confusion. Extra ushers and special signs should be prepared in advance. If the production is to be shown for more than one day, a sign should be displayed over the box office—Mary Clarkford Will Be Shown Tomorrow Matinee and Night. Then the house manager should carefully instruct his crew, and especially the extras, that on this night every one should be cool and courteous under all circumstances.

"Many a good patron is turned into a 'knocker' because one extra usher bullied him, with the idea that he was handling a gang of work house inmates 'and was not going to let anyone put something over on him.' Therefore ushers should be instructed to treat every patron as though he were the 'host' at a happy gathering and the patrons were his rich aunts and uncles.

"Do not 'speed up' your projection so that it affects the action of the picture. Rather dress your 'fillers' to shorten the length of the program. If you show two other subjects besides the feature, select two split reels and use the most desirable halves in place of two full reels. If one is a weekly, . . carefully cut out the uninteresting subjects and run only the 'meat' (being careful to replace the cutouts in their proper position when finished with them).

"The price of admission is so small that overcrowding or a speed projection will net the exhibitor not more than three or four dollars; therefore, let him bear in mind that, considering the great value of patronage, it is far more profitable for him to make a good impression on those he can handle with comfort, sending them away pleased than for him to worry about the two or three hundred who cannot gain admission.

"The individual manager must work out for himself in his own house the best way in which to rope off his lobby and empty his house, so it really works out to the all-important issues. First, educate your patronage to the fact that on 'crowd nights' they must have dinner early and be in their seats before —— o'clock for the first show, or else not come until after —— o'clock for the second show. Second, make a comeback impression on crowd nights so as to get a stronger patronage on off nights. And lastly, don't over-sell a house. A house can handle just so many, and if you sell more tickets than that, 'the house is mismanaged,' 'you are a robber'—and 'never again' will do you more harm than the four or five dollars can ever win back."

63—Will you please tell me where I can get in touch with some bright, to-be-depended upon operators? I am remodeling an old theater and since this is my first venture into the motion picture business, and also as I am a woman, I do not care to be at the mercy of inexperienced employees.

You will find that there is an ordinance in practically every town and city to the effect that a man is not allowed to operate a motion picture machine without a license, and to obtain that license we must have had just so much experience and pass an examination before some official of the town as to his ability to handle a machine. These ordinances were made to protect employers against inexperienced employees.

An advertisement inserted in your local paper or one of the trade papers will undoubtedly bring you a number of applications for the position. Also you will find that in almost every large city there is an organization of projection machine operators, and a letter addressed to the head of the organization in the nearest city will give you any information you desire along this line and also probably put you in touch with some efficient and worthy operators.

New Woman Director

Ruth Ann Baldwin, who has been affiliated with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company for three years, shortly will join the ranks of women directors, Vice-President and General Manager Davis being confident on account of her thorough knowledge of all branches of the screen industry that she will be able to create satisfactory productions.

Before coming to the Universal Company, Miss Baldwin was associated with the newspapers of San Diego, and for two years was connected with the scenario department of the Big U organization. Miss Baldwin was sent to London by President Laemmle to collaborate with E. Phillips Oppenheim in the preparation of "The Black Box" serial for the screen, and spent more than six months there.

Kind Words from President Ochs

Lee A. Ochs, president of the Exhibitors' League of America, has written to the Pathe Exchange, Inc., congratulating the big distributing company on the "Who's Guilty?" series produced by Arrow. In his letter he says:

It gives me great pleasure to express by unqualified approval of "Who's Guilty?" which I consider a series of two-reel feature dramas of remarkable strength. All three of my New York theaters have shown "Who's Guilty?" and we found it a powerful box-office attraction. Also my patrons were greatly pleased with the series, which I feel safe in recommending to any exhibitor desiring a feature of unusual strength.

The Photoplay Scenario

CONDUCTED BY B. F. BARRETT

Former Editor of Photoplay Scenario Magazine.

NOTE—This department will appear hereafter in each issue of MOTOGRAPHY, and will treat of all subjects of interest to the photoplaywright—whether amateur or professional. You are invited to suggest any subjects you desire to have discussed, or ask questions on any matters relating to the writing of photoplays which have been puzzling you. The department is also open to you at any time for the expression of your own ideas or the submitting of ideas of others which have helped you, and will be interesting to other photoplay writers.

That Elusive Originality

ORIGINALITY—the bugaboo, spectre and hoodoo of the amateur writer—the rock on which his craft is too often wrecked—the word which so often spells discouragement and relinquishment of ideals.

What is meant by this awe-inspiring "originality" which the writer is constantly advised he must embody in his scenario—the factor which he is told the film companies demand—the one thing which will make his script salable? How is he going to interpolate this originality into his scenario? The writer has been constantly warned that he must have originality, but has he been helped by any hint as to the way in which he can obtain that originality?

The author in turn rebels and exclaims, "Always this great hue and cry for original themes, original ideas, but where can I find them? There are no original themes. They have all been used before and all I can do is to use them over again."

And as a matter of fact the hard pressed writer is correct—there are no original themes. There is a saying that there are only six real plots in existence and all literary efforts must necessarily be a revising and rebuilding of these same plots. Why, then, the constant demand for something which does not exist? Is it to spur us on to greater effort?

LOOK AFTER THE LITTLE THINGS

If you cannot create a theme which has not been used before then do the next best thing—which is to make that theme over so that you can fool the editor into thinking it is new. Take the young girl going to a party, she wants a new dress very badly but knows it is impossible to have one, so she does the next best thing. She takes the old dress, perhaps a piece of lace and some ribbon, and with a little touching up here and changing there, a bit of color added, she makes the worn dress pass for a new one, and only the very careful observer discovers it is just the same old dress freshened and remodeled.

This is just what you can do with your scenario. Never mind the original theme—or the lack of it—but find out where you can freshen up this theme, where you can add to it and by changing it here and there make it look like new. Never mind the big things but just take the small points and see what you can do with them. You will be astonished after you have gone carefully over the entire scenario with a touch here and there, the addition of some new incident, the interpolation of some different action, how materially the whole play seems to be changed when you look over the final production.

IS YOUR TITLE CATCHY?

Let us start in with the title. Have you ever thought that an original title is as important as an original plot—that the title is the first thing read and if this is clever and original it predisposes the reader in favor of your play? Strive, then, to keep away from the commonplace and conventional. Think long and deeply on your choice of a title, and see if you cannot make it a little unusual, give a clever twist to a word or expression that will attract attention and interest.

ARE YOUR CHARACTERS PROSAIC?

Next study your cast of characters. Are the people in your photoplay just the commonplace, ordinary, prosaic sort of persons used in plays every day? See if you cannot create some new ones or introduce some little eccentricities, some mannerisms, that will make them different, or their manner of dress may be varied. Have you not met some people recently who fascinated you because they were odd or original? Put them into your play. After you have carefully refurbished your cast see how many new ideas you have inserted just here—they may be very small changes which you have been able to make but if they are a little out of the ordinary they will count just the same.

IS YOUR SYNOPSIS STEREOTYPED?

In your synopsis why write simply a story of your plot in a stereotyped and stilted manner? There are many different ways of expressing the same thing, so why not try to make use of a new way? Diversify your synopsis simply by the turn of your phrases or a clever mode of expression. We all like to read clever, snappy articles or items. Why not, then, make your synopsis come under this head and show the editor that at least you are a clever and original person, and so make him hope that you have written a clever and original scenario—and perhaps be able to prove it to him? By this I do not mean that you should try to be facetious in the writing of your synopsis but simply be alive for the opportunities for originality here.

IS YOUR ACTION DIFFERENT?

In the action of your play try to have things done in an unusual way. For example, if you must have a love story, and the time-honored proposal forms part of your play, at least have the man make love a little differently. It is such a surprise, relief and pleasure in real life to find a man who makes love in an individual manner, one who does not say just exactly the same thing that every other man has said—how much more will it be hailed with rejoicing in the film. If you are a girl—or could be transformed into a girl—how would you like to have a man make love to you? Perhaps you have some original ideas on this subject, if so put them into the actions of the lover in your play.

ACTORS LIKE ANOMALOUS CHARACTERS

Keep in mind the idea that the actors and actresses are always eager for any action, mannerism, eccentricity, which will attract attention and make them appear different from the other members of their profession. An actor's success is based on his popularity, and therefore he is very anxious to make an impression on the audience—he wants to make a lasting impression. Players like to enact scenes about which the remark may be made a year later, "I never will forget —— in that scene." This means fame for them, it means the working up of a great following, and you can assist them to reach this goal. It is true to a great extent that the actors make the play, but how eager they are for plays in which they feel there is a chance to make good. It is not fair to ask them to do it all, you should be willing to do your share and help them to the extent of introducing everything new you can create or devise. Every comedian or tragedian on the stage is fully aware of the fact that they must change their act just so often, must instill new life and interest into it to meet the constant demand for variety from a fickle public. Otherwise the plaudits will be directed toward the actor who can produce something new to tempt the jaded appetites.

The film companies desire to gain the reputation of turning out new and different films, and naturally they are going to assist the author who will assist them in gaining this reputation.

BE ON THE ALERT FOR THE UNUSUAL

Therefore, it behooves you, Mr. Photoplaywright, to be constantly on the alert for little incidents, happenings, characteristics, ideas, actions, mannerisms, peculiarities, eccentricities, anything which appeals to you as being out of the ordinary or a little different. Jot these things down, start a file of original ideas, gather all of these possible. You never can tell when they will fit right into a scene or an idea which is old and furnish just the desired twist to make it different.

Take the old themes and work them up to a different ending, work in new complication. The original characters you have introduced will of their own accord help you create new situations. Never mind the happy ending; it is true the audience always seems better pleased to have them "live happily ever after," but just for a change try the sad ending, the unexpected finale, and see if it does not help you in working along different lines. Weave into your plot at unexpected places some of these different incidents you have been storing away until the psychological time came to make use of them.

Never mind the big things, forget to worry about them for a while and go over your scenario carefully with an eye to the minor details and insert here and there a new turn, a different act, a clever sub-title, a little different setting. See how many of the small things you can freshen up and make different, and before you know it your scenario will begin to scintillate, it will take on a new aspect, it will blossom forth in a new dress, and it will be difficult to tell that it is an old one made over, for now your play will bear the stamp of the clever, original, out-of-the-ordinary scenario.

Latest News from the Markets

Arrow Film Corporation, Times Building, New York.—Arrow is committed to clean plays and does not believe in the exploitation of sex. Arrow does want clean, healthy, American dramas, portraying problems of every-day American life. Arrow is not committed to a policy of fitting its plays to its stars, but casts its pictures after they are completed in scenario form. It writes all its own scenarios, sometimes rewriting scenarios it buys from outsiders; but usually writes its own scenarios from start to finish from complete working synopses. Arrow also is committed to a policy of allowing its features to run their natural length, its scenarios not, in any case, being marked with reel endings. These divisions are taken care of in the final assembling and cutting of its pictures, not in the scenarios. Arrow will produce pictures from five-reel final length upward: it does not want shorter length pictures except in serial form. Comedies are not acceptable unless they are exceptional in character, slapstick being utterly barred. To tell all this briefly: Arrow wants complete synopses of clean, American, modern drama, feature length, five reels and upward; no comedy or one or two-reel subjects except fourteen to sixteen-episode serials.

Famous Players Film Company, 124 West Fifty-sixth street, New York.—In market for five-reel features suitable for their stars, Marguerite Clark, Pauline Frederick, Hazel Dawn, etc. A good working synopsis of the themes is sufficient. We give decisions promptly and pay the market prices immediately upon acceptance. Just now we are only in need of ideas which call for modern characters in American locations.

Fox Film Corporation, 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York, N. Y.—Always in market for good, strong, five-reel modern dramas, comedy dramas or good western stories, same to be submitted in five or six page synopsis form.

Juvenile Film Corporation, 110 West Fortieth street, New York, N. Y.—Are looking for wholesome children stories with a vein of comedy and in which all the principal parts would be taken by children. If grown-up support is necessary it should be limited to as few characters as possible.

Pathe Exchange, 25 West Forty-fifth street, New York, N. Y.—In the market now for ideas for serials and is willing to pay a liberal price for any ideas that meet its requirements. Pathe looks to the trained writer for material for the young writer has only a vague idea of the great amount of action that is required for a thirty-reel serial.

Rialto Film Corporation, 218 West Forty-second street, New York, N. Y.—In the market for synopses only for five-reel feature photoplays dealing with modern life or sociological and psychological subjects. After reading the synopsis, and if acceptable, will then arrange for the reading of the complete scenario.

$10,000 Prize Soon to be Awarded

THE winner of the prize of $10,000 for the best sequel to "The Diamond From the Sky," the Mutual Film Corporation's sixty-reel film novel, is shortly to be chosen.

The board of judges sitting in Chicago has narrowed the contest to a choice between the efforts of forty scenario writers. This has been the result of a painstaking survey of the vast mass of scenarios, totaling 101,716 in number, which were received while the contest was in progress.

A decision from the judges naming the winning scenario is to be expected in a short time, as soon as choice can be made between the forty particularly meritorious scenarios now under consideration.

Prize Winner Guest of Lasky

DR. R. RALSTON REED, winner of the Columbia University Prize Play Contest held last winter under the auspices of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, is leaving this week for the Lasky studios at Hollywood, California, to be present during the making of his prize photoplay, "Witchcraft," in which Fannie Ward will appear soon as the star.

The Columbia University-Lasky Photoplay Contest has attracted wide attention by reason of the fact that it was one of the first serious efforts on the part of a big motion picture company to stimulate the work of college students in writing for the screen.

When the photoplay class at Columbia University was established the Lasky Company, through Samuel Goldfish, offered to produce the best play written during the school year and as a prize to send as its guest the winner to the Lasky studios in California.

England Pays $500,000 for Chaplin

BRITISH RIGHTS TO MUTUAL COMEDIES SOLD

CHARLIE CHAPLIN will earn half a million dollars in England this year. Now none will rise up and cast aspersions at the business sagacity back of Charlie's vast salary.

The British rights on the Mutual Chaplin comedies have been sold for $500,000.

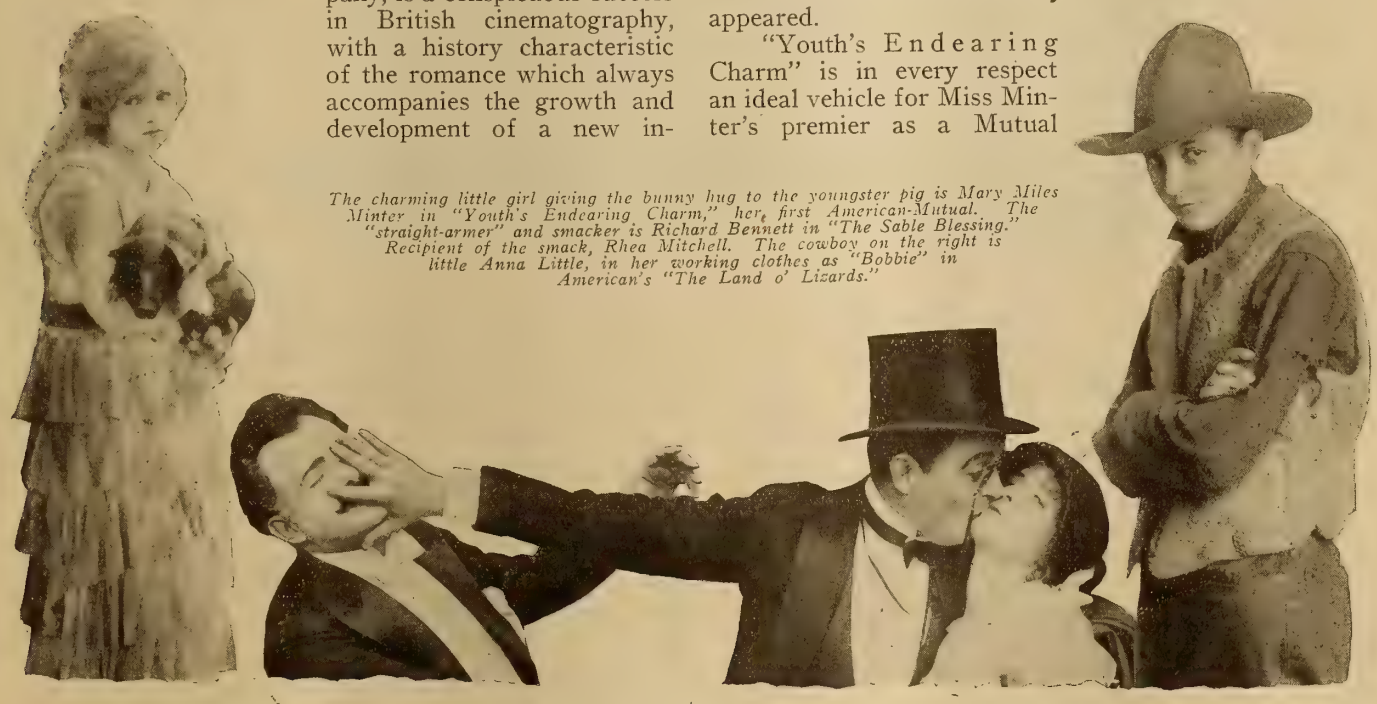
The announcement was made in an interview given a representative of MOTOGRAPHY by Fred Bolton of London at the Hotel Walcott in New York, who conducted the negotiations with John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, and the Lone Star Corporation, which makes the Chaplin comedies.

Mr. Bolton is a director of Walker's Mutual Chaplins Ltd., Film D'Art of America and Canada Ltd., and Anglo-Italian Films. Walker's Mutual Chaplins is the name of the newly formed concern which will handle the new Chaplin comedies, taking its name from J. D. Walker, known as the premier renter of the United Kingdom.

The deal was put through by Mr. Bolton prior to his departure from London. The Chaplin deal, amounting to a half million dollars, is said to establish a record for single film transactions in the United Kingdom. The rights thus acquired by Walker's Mutual Chaplins, Ltd., covers the series beginning with "The Floorwalker" and continuing through the twelve two-part comedies to be made under the Mutual's $670,000 contract with Charles Chaplin. The Walker territorial rights under the deal just closed take in the British Isles, India, Burma, Ceylon, Siam and Africa.

As is customary in the Walker ventures, Anglo-Italian Films of Reynold's House, Great Newport Street, London, will handle exploitation in all territories outside of the United Kingdom.

J. D. Walker, president of the English Chaplin company, is a conspicuous success in British cinematography, with a history characteristic of the romance which always accompanies the growth and development of a new industry. "It is the determined intention of the company to give Chaplin a 'fair crack o' the whip,'" observed Mr. Bolton. "Hitherto Chaplin has universally been used in these territories as an umbrella under which inferior releases were foisted upon exhibitors. For the first time it will be possible to book a Chaplin per se, and the enterprise will, I am sure, be amply compensated by an assured success."



The Film D'Art which Mr. Bolton also represents has about two hundred and fifty thousand feet of subjects in New York on which he proposes to dispose of exclusive rights for America and Canada. Another enterprise in which Mr. Walker, Mr. Bolton and their associates are interested is the British Home and Beauty series of half reels showing British scenes and industries.

"I am decidedly pleased with the plans which Walker's Mutual Chaplins have announced for the distribution of the Chaplin comedies," observed President Freuler after the conclusion of the negotiations. "It is particularly pleasing to know that the Chaplin product will be marketed abroad just as it is here, strictly on its own merits, and with 'a fair crack o' the whip,' as Mr. Bolton says."

"Youth's Endearing Charm," initial of the series of Mutual Star Productions featuring Mary Miles Minter, were released in six acts on September 4, according to advance announcement made by the Mutual Company.

This production adapted from the story of the same name by Maibelle Heickes Justice, popular novelist and frequent contributor to various of the popular magazines, finds the young star in the role of "Mary," an orphan, bound out to a family of cruel farmers. It is one of the most appealing and sympathetic roles in which Miss Minter has yet appeared.

"Youth's Endearing Charm" is in every respect an ideal vehicle for Miss Minter's premier as a Mutual star, for the part assigned her gives her unusual opportunities to display the wide range of her capabilities.

The charming little girl giving the bunny hug to the youngster pig is Mary Miles Minter in "Youth's Endearing Charm," her first American-Mutual. The "straight-armer" and smacker is Richard Bennett in "The Sable Blessing." Recipient of the smack, Rhea Mitchell. The cowboy on the right is little Anna Little, in her working clothes as "Bobbie" in American's "The Land o' Lizards."

The entire production filmed at the studios of the American Film Company, Inc., in Santa Barbara, California, has been staged on an exceptionally elaborate scale under the masterful direction of William C. Dowlan. Numerous of the sets used in "Youth's Endearing Charm" were built especially for this screening of this production, and many days were spent by the star and her company in the lower Santa Ynez Valley, where all of the important exteriors were enacted.

In Miss Minter's support in her final Mutual feature production are a number of prominent players. Wallace MacDonald, a juvenile player of prominence, and possessing unusual dramatic abilities, appears in the chief supporting role of Miss Minter.

Carnival life in Nice—very different from American festal occasions—is presented in all its gayety in various of the scenes of "The Mystery of the Riviera," a new Mutual masterpicture. In this photoplay, different in every respect from any other produced, there are shown pictures of the great parade with its gorgeous floats, the thousands of gaily attired merrymakers, culminating with scenes of the world famous masked ball which marks the height of the carnival.

In addition to placing the action of this production in surroundings of unusual beauty at a time when the whole world seems to be in a merrymaking mood, a thrilling story has been provided for a remarkably strong cast of players especially selected from a big company of players engaged at the Gaumont-Mutual studios in Paris.

"The History of the Rivera," presenting a battle of wits between a noted Paris sleuth and an arch-criminal, deals with the theft of a valuable necklace from a woman of the nobility. He is assisted in his work by a woman, who masquerades as a governess. After a series of thrilling adventures the detective succeeds in obtaining a clue to the identity of the crook.

The big climax comes with the assassination by the crook of his co-conspirator at the masked ball and later his arrest.

CENSORS LAUD FOX FILM

Congratulatory Letter Sent to William Fox by Members of the Board on the Beauty of "A Daughter of the Gods"

The first audience to witness the million dollar Fox production, "A Daughter of the Gods," composed of members of the National Board of Review, a dozen or more owners of theaters, and a few invited guests, were loud in their praise of its beauty. The members of the Board of Review not only approved it in its entirety without change or suggested alteration of any sort, but put this approval in writing in the form of a congratulatory letter to William Fox.

Coincident with this approval by the National Board, it may be said that William Fox is now virtually ready to make announcement of the opening date for "A Daughter of the Gods," the name of the New York theater in which it will play and other details of interest throughout the industry and to the American public.

For the last two months William Fox has maintained a discreet silence about his big picture. During all this time, has been sitting in judgment and examination of his tremendously costly film. It may be related as an interesting sidelight, that he has personally seen and examined every inch of the 223,000 feet of film taken by his directors for this picture and that every minute detail of putting "A Daughter of the Gods" into the 10,000 foot form in which the public will see it has been attended to by Mr. Fox himself. This applies also to the titling and captioning of the picture which is being done in its entirety by him.

He has also been the constant companion of Robert Hood Bowers, the composer of the musical score, for three months, and feels that Mr. Bowers' music constitutes an achievement in the music, which contains a succession of themes that blend into each other and suggest the beauties of the best and most popular of the Viennese operattas.

It is the belief of Mr. Fox that the musical numbers from "A Daughter of the Gods" will be whistled and played all over America during the next year, being, in consequence, the first film music that has ever become nationally popular.

Exhibitors Praise "Who's Guilty"

The "Who's Guilty?" series produced for Pathe by Arrow has just closed a remarkably successful engagement at the Strand Theater, Milwaukee. In a letter to the Pathe Company, Philip O. Grass, Jr., the manager of the Strand, writes:

"We sincerely trust that in the near future it will be possible for us to obtain a series which will create as much interest as 'Who's Guilty?' has done."

This opinion is shared by other exhibitors throughout the country, for instance, Manager Savin of the Piedmont Amusement Company, Winston-Salem, N. C., who says:

"Not only in my estimation, but in that of the general public, who has attended and followed the production, 'Who's Guilty?' is without doubt, one of the best pictures the Pathe Company has ever put out. In conclusion, let me say that it has been a wonderful drawing card at my house, my only regret is that it will not last longer."

Wallace MacDonald's Varied Career

Wallace MacDonald, who played opposite Mary Miles Minter in the American-Mutual Star production, "Youth's Endearing Charm," received his first histrionic training in a stock company and later joined the Alcazar Stock Company at San Francisco. After a year with this company he went to Los Angeles, where he heard fortunes were to be made in pictures. Here he was given a chance with the original Keystone Comedy Company in which were Charlie Chaplin, Mabel Normand, "Fatty" Arbuckle and others who have grown famous on the screen. He next turned his attention to directing and started a producing company which was made up mostly of enthusiasm, as no money resulted from the ventures. After this failure he joined the American-Mutual forces, where he has been ever since.

Camera Records Searchlight

The most powerful beam of light in the world will be shown on the screen in Mutual Weekly No. 88—but not in its original intensity. The Gaumont camera man caught for this issue the test of the powerful searchlight installed recently in Brooklyn, N. Y., for experimental purposes. It measured 1,280,000,000 candlepower.

Pathe Completes 1916 Serial Program

TWO SERIES FOR 1917 ALREADY BEING PRODUCED

THAT J. A. Berst, vice president and general manager of the Pathe Exchange, believes in preparedness is demonstrated by the fact that Pathe's five-million-dollar serial program for 1916 is completed and the first two series for 1917 are under way.

The first of the 1917 serial productions will be based on "The Journal of a Neglected Wife" and its sequel, "The Woman Alone," written by Mabel Herbert Urner, and also adapted by her.

The serial will feature Ruth Roland and is being produced by Balboa with the assistance of W. A. S. Douglass, who has been assigned by Mr. Berst as Pathe's representative at the California studio.

The Astra Film Corporation, producers of "The Shielding Shadow," will film the second of the 1917 series. The story is founded on Gilson Willett's novel "The Double Cross." Leon Parry and Mollie King will be co-starred in this serial. Donald Mackenzie will direct the production.

Pearl White plays the leading role in the last Pathe serial of 1916 scheduled for release in November. Theodore Friebus will be another member of the all-star cast. This serial, from the pen of Guy W. McConnell, will have a military setting. As a part of the national advertising campaign this story will be published in the National Sunday Magazine simultaneously with the release of the picture.

Pathe's serial, "The Shielding Shadow," features a quartette of stars, including Grace Darmond, Leon Barry, Ralph Kellard and Madaline Traverse.

Grace Darmond made her first appearance on the stage as little Eva in "Uncle Tom's Cabin" and has been acting ever since.

In "The Shielding Shadow" Miss Darmond flees death through fifteen episodes. She made a parachute descension from a balloon that was a mass of flames; jumped from a wagon at the very verge of a 150-foot cliff; plunged from a boat into the water as the boat was blown up; was rescued from a fire in a laboratory just a moment before possible danger became imminent peril; was knocked unconscious by a falling beam in the earthquake scene; was floated out from a sluice into a river with rats swarming around her; and grew so accustomed to danger that she no longer knew the feeling of fear.

A charming Pathe family group. Seated, Grace Darmond; in the halo, Madeline Traverse; below, Ralph Kellard—all important elements in the big serial, "The Shielding Shadow."

Leon Barry is noted for his finished character work. His first theatrical engagement as a child was with Sarah Bernhardt and he later became lead in her company. He was with her for twelve years and accompanied the Divine Sarah on three of her tours of the United States. Three years ago he left the "legitimate" for motion pictures and for two years was a director in London. His first motion picture experience was with Pathe in France.

Ralph Kellard came from the head of his own stock company to motion pictures. He has played with David Warfield, Charlotte Walker, Virginia Harned, as well as many stock companies. Among the principal parts he has played are Captain Spicer in "Sweet Kitty Bellairs," John Lathrop in "Out of the Fold," Charlie Wickham in "Charlie's Aunt," Horatio in "Hamlet," Fritz in "The Prisoner of Zenda," Don Luis in "Rose of the Rancho," Friedhelm Helfen in "The First Violin," Charles Darney in "The Only Way," Clarence Colfax in "The Crisis," Count von Asterberg in "Heidelberg," Dr. Lathamin in "Before and After," Jack in "Mistress Nell," Mr. Haversham in "Little Lord Fauntleroy," and Captain Sharp in "Mrs. Temple's Telegram."

Madaline Traverse has been called the "Maxine Elliott of the screen." She has had a varied career on the stage since her first appearance at the age of six. Her first big motion picture part was the lead in "Three Weeks." Later she was featured with Robert Warwick in "The Fruits of Desire" and "The Money Master."

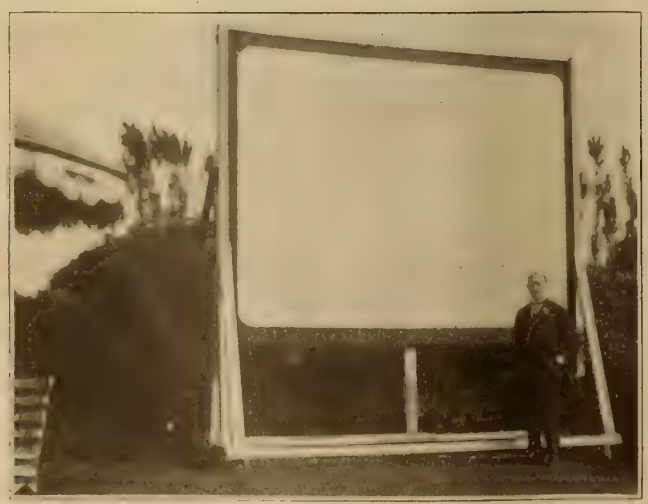
These four players form a cast of principals such as has rarely been seen in a serial motion picture. That they are supported by actors of unusual excellence is seen in the fact that Lionel Braun, who played the slave in Granville Barker's production of Bernard Shaw's "Androcles and the Lion," and Frankie Mann, well known for her work on the screen, are seen in minor parts while all the types have been carefully picked by Louis J. Gasnier and Donald MacKenzie, under whose direction "The Shielding Shadow" was produced.

Pathe will not release the twelfth, thirteenth and fourteenth chapters of the masterplot "The Grip of Evil" in serial form but the story will continue to its climax as a masterplot combining the interest compelling elements of a serial with the strong points of a series.

The total collections on Pathe's serial "The Iron Claw," produced by Edward Jose from the scenario by George B. Seitz, have already exceeded those on "The Exploits of Elaine," which up to this time held the serial record.

This statement is of particular interest in view of the announcement that Pathe will release the Astra Film Corporation's production of Mr. Seitz's "The Shielding Shadow" on October 1st with full confidence that it in turn will prove of even greater drawing power than "The Iron Claw."



NEW GAUMONT SERIAL

Mutual Producing Company Announces "The Vampires" in Nine Episodes to be Released Weekly as Following Present Series, "Fantomas"

The Gaumont Company has planned to follow "Fantomas," the Gaumont series in five episodes of three reels each, with a second series under the general title of "The Vampires, the Arch Criminals of Paris." This second series will be in nine complete episodes of three reels each. They will be released weekly, and as the last "Fantomas" picture will reach the screen October 5 it is likely that the first, "The Vampires" episode, will be released soon afterward.

Again the American exhibitor is offered a series which is a proved success. "The Vampires" has been successfully exhibited abroad. When released by Gaumont abroad it broke all records at the Gaumont Palace, Paris, the largest cinema theater in the world, and duplicated its success in Marseille, Lyon, Bordeaux, Toulouse, Tours, Nantes, Angers, Rouen, Orleans and other important cities in France. "The Vampires" was released in England by the Gaumont Film Hire Service as "The Crime Investigator."

It is a series of detective stories which follow the fortunes of a reporter of a Paris newspaper in his efforts to unravel the mysteries surrounding the criminal exploits of The Vampires, a notorious gang of criminals. The scenes, full of exciting incidents, are typical of the methods of French criminals.

William Fox is so much of a moving picture fan that he has a little screen in his bedroom, one letter by his bed and one in his back yard at Woodmere, Long Island. At least here's proof of the latter.

In Triangle Camps

Fay Tincher has turned vampire! Louise Glaum must look to her laurels, for Fay can successfully "vamp" clad in calico, without the aid of spectacular gowns. In "The Village Vamp," Triangle Komedy, she has a career which would make Cleopatra jealous. Eddie Dillon, who directed the comedy, has the role of a village swain who is jilted by the heartless one for Max Davidson as the town sport.

In his role of a crook in "The Rescuers," Triangle Comedy just finished, Tully Marshall uses a gun formerly owned by Jesse James, the outlaw. Marshall has begun work on another comedy, also directed by Browning, "The Fatal Glass of Beer" (which may or may not deal with prohibition).

"The Defenders," the first picture to feature Bessie Love, is growing rapidly at the Fine Arts studio. The entire Spanish quarter of Los Angeles was searched for types to appear in the fiesta scenes of the play. A Spanish barbecue with dancing girls in costume in which hundreds of players participate is one of the features of the production.

"The Old Folks at Home," the Fine Arts version of Rupert Hughes' story featuring Sir Herbert Beerhohm Tree is finished under the direction of Chet Withey and is ready for early release.

A noteworthy addition has been made to the Triangle-Keystone stock company in the person of "Slippery Slim," known in private life as M. Potel. He will be known on the Keystone list, however, by his famous nickname. His first production contains a number of roller skating episodes. Edward Biby, assistant director in Mabel Normand's company, has gone hunting. He is in pursuit of frogs which will be the subjects of certain inserts in Miss Normand's next Triangle picture, and they must be live frogs, the livelier the better.

Movie Teaches Health Lesson

A lesson in hygiene for mothers forms part of the film of Madame Bertha Kalich's new photoplay for William Fox films. It is a preachment against the ills that bring on infantile paralysis, and the causes of contagion are shown vividly in the drama.

Gladys Hulette, the Thanhouser star, is soon to appear in "Prudence, the Pirate," a feature that will be released through the Pathe exchanges. The story is by Agnes C. Johnston, author of "The Shine Girl," in which Miss Hulette is making such a success. William Parke, who directed "The Shine Girl," is Prudence's director.

President Smith Talks

CONFIRMS VITAGRAPH V-L-S-E DEAL NO NEW LUBINS ON PROGRAM

A. E. SMITH, president of the Vitagraph Company, and Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the V. L. S. E., have confirmed the purchase by the former company of the interests of the Lubin, Selig and Essanay companies in the V. L. S. E. organization.

A. E. Smith, president of Vitagraph.

In addition to outlining the plans of operation of the V. L. S. E. as a part of the Greater Vitagraph, Mr. Smith's statement contains the intimation of even larger things to come.

The absorption of the V. L. S. E. by the Vitagraph interests, while actually in effect at the present time, so far as any additional releases of the Lubin, Selig and Essanay companies are concerned, technically does not become operative until September 16.

The Lubin pictures which have been released through the V. L. S. E. will remain on its program, although no new or additional Lubin features will be offered. Bookings on the Essanay and Selig pictures will continue up to September 16.

It is stated authoritatively that the amalgamation of the V. L. S. E. and the Vitagraph Company will in no way affect the personnel of the distributing organization. The executive staff will remain the same, and the branch offices in the twenty-three cities with their complement of Big Four representatives will continue intact.

One Feature a Week for Present

For the present, and up to at least the first of October, there will be released one feature per week. After that it is probable there will be offered two features per week, and in addition sufficient shorter products to enable an exhibitor to obtain an entire day's service.

It is stated, however, that this will be determined entirely on the basis of merit. In other words, if it is found possible to release two pictures a week, measuring up to the superior standard which has been set by the Vitagraph, then the service will be eight productions a month. If, however, it is found that the high degree of merit determined upon might be in any way impaired, the service will be limited to four productions a month.

Another announcement of importance is that there will be instituted a widespread national advertising campaign to augment the value of the Vitagraph's already extensive reputation and well-known trademark, and to create for Vitagraph pictures the maximum consumer demand.

President Smith's Statement

Discussing the Vitagraph's purchase of the interests of the other three companies which have made up the Big Four combination, President A. E. Smith said:

Vitagraph has acquired the V. L. S. E. and several important producing organizations, to be operated absolutely under its control, because it is convinced that the best interests of exhibitors and of itself can be served only by having all of its activities, selling as well as producing, concentrated under one management.

The moving picture industry has grown too big, and the standard of the screen has advanced too far, for a producer to work in combination with other independent producers in the distribution of this product. Such a co-operative arrangement handicaps him, not only in the standardization of his product, and in his advertising and selling service to his patrons, but also interposes a barrier between the most direct and sensitive responses to the exhibitors' needs.

When it was determined, some time ago, to increase the Vitagraph capitalization to $25,000,000, in order that we might insure the highest degree of merit for every one of our productions, we automatically determined at the same time to have our own distributing department, in order that we might keep in the closest and most constant touch with the pulse of the public and the demand of exhibitors, and that we might be free to shape our course to the best advantage of all concerned.

V. L. S. E. was the natural selection for such a distributing organization. In the seventeen months of its existence it made swift progress in service to exhibitors, and in the confidence and good will which it had gained from the trade as a whole. In transferring it as a department of Greater Vitagraph we, at the same time, enlarge the scope of the V. L. S. E.'s possibilities for service, and make it possible for that organization to do many things which it has long sought to do, but which were manifestly impractical when it was acting as the selling agent of four independent concerns.

We have pledged to the representatives of the V. L. S. E. who now become Vitagraph representatives that they will have the strongest offerings to present to exhibitors that have ever been placed in the hands of any film salesman—that they will have pictures that are virtually self-selling, and that, therefore, they will be able to give the maximum of time to aiding their clients in making the most of these splendid productions.

We realize that the most important partner in the moving picture business is the exhibitor, and that success is primarily dependent upon how closely allied he is with the manufacturer. It is this close and constant contact which has been sought in the absorption of the V. L. S. E. by the Vitagraph Company—a contact that will make more intimate our knowledge of the needs of the exhibitor in order that we, as a producer, may co-operate to an even greater degree. We believe that it will mark a new era in the motion picture industry, and that it will promote a degree of prosperity for exhibitors and for ourselves such as has never before been attained.

Walter W. Irwin Talks

General Manager Walter W. Irwin, of the V. L. S. E., in discussing the amalgamation, said:

Greater Vitagraph means Greater V. L. S. E. The V. L. S. E. remains intact—the same offices, the same personnel. It is geared to do big things—spurred to greater efforts by the knowledge it has back of it, and is a part of one of the world's most substantial and pre-eminent business institutions. Furthermore, it will now be possible for us to focus and concentrate the energies which were formerly divided in advancing the interests of four companies, upon promoting the maximum results for the patrons of one organization—an organization controlling its entire service from script to screen.

In other words, the only result to the V. L. S. E. of this change will be that by virtually becoming a department of the Vitagraph Company we multiply our possibilities of service, because we will be in constant touch with the producer, so that we will be able to make suggestions and to eliminate any and all difficulties which are in any way a handicap to our patrons.

To the broadening of the principles of commercial equity which the V. L. S. E. has always espoused and the multiplication of our service to the exhibitor there will be added one of the most widespread and efficient national advertising campaigns ever instituted by any company in any field.

We enter upon this amalgamation, therefore, not only with unbounding confidence and enthusiasm for our own selves, but for what we shall be able to do for the many exhibitors with whom we have come into such friendly touch, and for the large number of others whom we hope it is to be our privilege to serve.

NORTHWEST EXHIBITORS MEET

Large and Successful Meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the Northwest Held at Minneapolis

The exhibitors of the northwest are congratulating themselves on the very successful meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the Northwest, assembled at the West Hotel in Minneapolis. This meeting was held at the call of the executive board and its success was due in a large measure to the efforts of Secretary William Koenig.

About sixty proprietors of theaters had luncheon in the Pheasant Room and then adjourned to the seventh floor.

Thomas Furniss, of Duluth, was the principal speaker. Mr. Furniss has just returned from New York City where he attended the session of the new National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, of which he is a director, and the first monthly meeting of the executive board of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, of which he is chairman.

Other speeches were made by I. H. Ruben, of Finkelstein & Ruben, owners of most of the Twin Cities large down-town theaters; Theodore Hays, one of the best known theater men in the Twin Cities; David G. Rodgers, and D. W. Chamberlain, exhibitors; and Thomas J. Hamlin, managing editor of Amusements.

Among those present from outside the Twin Cities were: Thomas Furniss of Duluth, Frank Nemec of St. Cloud, Jay Gould of Glencoe, etc.

Those from St. Paul were: I. H. Ruben, James Gilosky, J. B. Reisman, Hiram Harris, M. Marks, Chas. Ellsworth Cameron, A. Engler, R. J. Howden, etc.

Those present from Minneapolis were: Theodore Hays, William Koenig, D. W. Chamberlain, Henry P. Greene, Harry Green, W. A. Steffes, Ed Hinz, David G. Rodgers, W. G. True, Clyde Hitchcock, Harry Billings, E. A. Calvert, William Koch, Andrew Campion, George Granstrum, S. S. Wolfson, John J. Campbell, Harry McClasky, E. H. Roeaback, Al Kells, J. Kahn, J. Lifpitz, C. E. Marr, Fred Upham, Billy B. Watson, Buckman and Fosdick, Frank Thayer, W. A. Sobelman, Joseph Cohen, Otto Stelzner, O. P. Agnew, L. D. Isham, R. J. Broms, George Carisch, Al. Hill, Jacob Barnett, Harry Marks, O. A. Lee, L. H. Preller, George Briggs, Thomas J. Hamlin.

Every Monday noon the executive board meets in Secretary Koenig's offices, Bijou Theater building, Minneapolis, and all exhibitors are cordially invited to attend.

Exhibiting Big Griffith Spectacle

And now, according to the critics, D. W. Griffith has made photoplay history again. He presented his new spectacle, "Intolerance," at the Liberty Theater, New York, for the first time on September 5. The engagement is for an indefinite period with afternoon and evening performances daily, including Sundays.

This new work is the largest production Mr. Griffith has ever made. For over four years he has been evolving the theme and completing its details. The director brings out something which departs from all forms of construction that has been followed heretofore in the theater.

The motivating theme is of the twentieth century and realistically presents some stirring phases of every day life. Paralleled with it are three additional stories which trace back through earlier periods of the world's development.

The ancient periods show medieval France, Jerusalem at the birth of the Christian era; and Babylon about 539 B. C. when Belshazzar's forces were overpowered by the Persian armies.

A year of research was followed to provide authentic data for these scenes. In building the walls of Babylon, the glimpses of the Holy Land and the picturesque atmosphere of old Paris, the production becomes of historic value. It is probable that such scenes have never been shown before in the history of the theater.

"Intolerance" is described as a combination of the poetic and dramatic in epical form, designed to indicate the visions that could flash across the mind while contemplating a crisis in one's personal affairs. It reveals that anyone can be the victim of the intolerant forces which led to the Fall of Babylon, the midnight massacres of medieval France and the dominant tragedy on Calvary.

Enormous backgrounds embellish his narrative in a way that could not be portrayed in any other form of art possible of condensation into the time covered by an evening's entertainment in the theater.

An orchestra from the Metropolitan Opera House accompanies the production with a score specially composed for this work, and over 100 people are employed behind the scenes to lend realism to the story's progress without intruding into the picture.

Marian Swayne Joins Arrow

Miss Marian Swayne, well known to the American stage for her performances as "Effie" in "The Blindness of Virtue," as "Cicely" in the Wilde play, "The Importance of Being Earnest," and as the "Squaw" in "The Squaw Man," has become a member of the Arrow Film Corporation forces in Yonkers, New York. Miss Swayne was associated with the screen for some time, having played a year with Blache and a year with Gaumont. She appeared in her first motion picture role under Howell Hansel's direction. On her return to the screen, after several years of stage successes, Miss Swayne again finds herself under his direction, this time with Arrow.

Tree Off for England

Sir Herbert Tree has completed his performance in the Triangle version of Rupert Hughes' "Old Folks at Home," and the English star has departed for New York, where he will arrange for his passage to England. This Fine Arts drama marks his second appearance on the screen. He made his debut in "Macbeth" under the direction of John Emerson. Before leaving for the east he was the guest of honor at a farewell dinner given in his honor by Director Chester Withey, who directed Tree in "Old Folks at Home." Present at this dinner were a number of the Fine Arts celebrities.

Dorothy Gish has started on the opening scenes of a new Fine Arts drama written by Tod Browning.

Ten Companies Working for Fox

SIX GROUPS IN EAST—FOUR IN WEST

TEN different companies are busily at work this week making photoplays for William Fox—six in the Eastern studios, four in the West. In the New Jersey plants pictures starring Theda Bara, Madame Bertha Kalich, June Caprice, Valeska Suratt, Joan Sawyer and Gladys Coburn are being filmed. Across the Continent George Walsh, William Farnum, Gladys Brockwell and Gretchen Hartmann, a recently acquired Fox player, are acting before the camera in new productions.

Eleanor Crowe is the "little girl" upon the left, while sparkling Gladys Coburn smiles from the middle. You have already recognized Theda Bara on the right and you also know that they are all Foxesses.

Miss Sawyer, world-famed danseuse, is making her first appearance in the silent drama, and Director Tefft Johnson, in turn, who is screening the picture, is at work producing his first William Fox photoplay.

On the West coast directors Frank Lloyd and Otis Turner, "Grand Old Man," are making production debuts. Miss Brockwell will have the leading role in the Lloyd picture, while Juanita Hansen will play opposite Walsh in the Turner photoplay.

At present the Turner company is in the high Sierras on location work, and some wonderful scenes have been photographed. The Stanton photoplayers, headed by Miss Hartmann, are in a Texas town, near the Mexican border, which has practically been bought up for moving picture purposes.

Stuart Holmes has the featured part in Madame Kalich's third appearance for the William Fox films, and the hero of a thousand villainies is giving his usually finished performances. Walter Law, who had the lead in "The Unwelcome Mother," has completed his work in the new Pearson picture, and his famous beard has been trimmed down to an aristocratic Van Dyke for use in the Valeska Suratt photoplay. Mr. Law will play a trader in stocks whose income is so large that people will have to talk of it in whispers.

"The Unwelcome Mother," by the way, marks the tenth photoplay in which little Jane Lee has appeared for William Fox.

Besides Mr. Law, there will be Velma Whitman, among others, in Miss Suratt's supporting cast. Miss Whitman was in the Fox picturization of "East Lynne." She is a native of Richmond, Virginia, and has had a brilliant career on the stage and in the world of the motion picture.

George Clarke, stage manager for the late Charles Frohman for many seasons, is another of the new Fox actors. He was born in Birmingham, England, and is a direct descendant of Sir George Downing, after whom the far-famed Downing street of London is named.

Joseph R. Darling, special representative of the Fox Films in England, left London last week for an extensive tour of South and Central America, in the principal cities of which he will open branches for the corporation.

Mr. Darling will visit Rio de Janeiro, Buenos Aires, Montevideo, Santiago in Chile, La Paz in Bolivia, Quito in Ecuador, and Panama for the purpose of developing the Fox Film interests in the Latin-American Republics. The trip will require nearly a half year.

"Big Jim" Fails as Animal Trainer

"Big Jim" Marcus, three hundred pounds big, to be exact, who thought he was a friend of every animal that ever shook a claw, is chagrined because he has failed conpletely to tame a wild coyote.

The coyote was captured in the mountains of California, and for many weeks thereafter was an inmate of the William Fox studio in Hollywood, where Marcus was working in Director Otis Turner's first photoplay under the Fox banner.

A special diet was given the wild creature. It consisted mainly of cream and beaten eggs. Everyone thought that if anything should tame an animal it was cream and eggs. The coyote ate at night, for during the day he was chained and afraid of humans; all the pleadings of all the studioites failed to bring him out of the shrubbery into which he retired as far as chains permitted.

The coyote never once smiled.

So Mr. Marcus took it home with him. He was determined that it should be tamed. Night after night, when he had done with posing before the camera, the actor labored to make the coyote friendly. He petted it, soothed it, and tried in a dozen ways to make it realize that at last it had found a genuine friend.

The coyote seemed to respond to the treatment. It became so that after weeks of work Mr. Marcus could pick up the little animal in his arms and do it without a great deal of struggling. Then the coyote appeared so content that the actor summoned some studio colleagues to watch the creature perform.

Mr. Marcus went out, collected his coyote and brought him into the room. The show was about to start when Mr. Turner's sense of humor was aroused by this titan of a man lugging in a speck of animality, so he let forth a whoop of joy. Whereupon the coyote bit Marcus's thumb and vanished.

"Thought you had him trained," said the director.

"I have," replied Marcus. "He bit me two weeks ago, but he's getting tamer now. This time he didn't bite half so deep."

Pathe Announces "The Test"

"The Test," a play by Jules Eckert Goodman, the well known dramatist, as produced by A. H. Woods, enjoyed marked success for two whole seasons from coast to coast, and will be remembered by theater-goers.

Jane Gray, starring in Pathe's "The Test."

George Fitzmaurice of the Astra, who produced for Pathe such sterling successes as "Via Wireless," "At Bay," and "New York," was entrusted with the direction of the motion picture adaptation of this famous play. No one who has seen it in its new form will deny that it was put into worthy hands. In selection of cast, in choice of settings and locations, in photography, in sustained interest, in climaxes—in everything that goes to make the very best quality of pictures, Mr. Fitzmaurice has lived up to the reputation which he has acquired of being one of the best directors of the day.

Jane Grey, the star, was a fortunate choice. Her emotional resources are extraordinary, and her classic beauty screens more than ordinarily well. She will be best remembered, perhaps, as the "Molly Hughes" of "Kick In," the A. H. Woods play which has enjoyed such notable success. In "The Test" she has the part of "Mrs. Tretman," the young and lovable wife of a weak scoundrel who stops at nothing to gain his own ends, and is willing to sacrifice his own wife in an attempt to evade the retribution of the law. The supporting cast is notable, including as it does Lumsden Hare, the English actor, Claude Fleming, Carl Harbaugh and Inez Buck.

Speed in Bara Picture

Those who see Theda Bara's new photoplay, which is now being filmed, will enjoy an unusual sensation of motion, almost as good, if not better, than a taxicab ride, and certainly cheaper. Part of the picture shows the famous William Fox star riding for miles in an automobile for moving picture purposes. The camera men rode in another car alongside her machine, grinding out their film in spite of the "rough riding."

The result is such a startlingly realistic effect of motion that most of the spectators will probably fear getting arrested for exceeding the speed limit. They need not be frightened, however, as Miss Bara assures everyone that her chauffeur was within the law throughout the drive.

EXHIBITOR PRAISES WORK

Herbert Brenon Production of "War Brides" With Mme. Nazimova Given Private Showing and Receives Sincere Commendation

Herbert Brenon has completed a sufficient number of consecutive scenes of "War Brides" to give a definite idea of the nature and power of the picture, and last week he invited Lewis J. Selznick, who controls the release, and Mitchell Mark, president of the Mark Strand Theater Company, of New York, to the projection room at the studio on Hudson Heights for a private view. Mr. Mark, as a disinterested spectator, said:

"This is a superb production of a wonderful picture. I was thrilled as I have seldom been thrilled by a photoplay. It reveals the combination of two unusual geniuses—Brenon the director, Nazimova the actress. It is difficult to decide which has contributed more to the results, the man who has reconstructed the drama from its original form, or the tragedienne whose art shines out here with all the clearness that it has in her presentations of spoken drama."

Mr. Selznick was equally enthusiastic. "There never was any question in my mind as to what Mr. Brenon would accomplish with this play and this star," he said, "and what I have seen more than confirms my expectations. It is a picture which will make big reputations for everyone connected with it, from the director to the exhibitor."

Notwithstanding all the difficulties and innumerable details which confront a producer in launching a new corporation and organizing everything from properties to scenario, Mr. Brenon has been able to maintain the swift schedule which he set for himself, and has assured Mr. Selznick that "War Brides" will be ready in plenty of time for the October release.

Kansas Censor Board on Rampage

By H. E. Jameyson
Special to Motography

The Kansas Censor Board is getting rampant, presumably on account of the "flings" that were taken at them during the recent exhibitors' convention held in Topeka. Miss Carrie Simpson, the only member of the board that has ever shown any degree of interest in the motion picture, is away. The work of censoring has been left in the hands of Rev. Festus Foster and a new member of the board, Miss Evans, a retired school teacher.

Recently Pathe's picture, "The Woman's Fight," was brought before the board, and on Miss Evans' vote was rejected. The appeal board sustained the censors. The sixth episode of "The Grip of Evil," entitled "Hypocrites," was rejected by the board also. Rev. Festus Foster was willing to pass it, but Miss Evans was not. Assistant Superintendent of Instruction St. John was called in as the third member. He looked the picture over and said, "I see no reason why it should be passed."

First of "Beatrice Fairfax" Released

AT THE FRONT IN EUROPE WITH A CAMERAMAN

"THE MISSING WATCHMAN," the first episode of "Beatrice Fairfax," the new photoplay of the International Film Service, Inc., has been shown for the first time in New York in more than 150 New York theaters and approximately 1,500 houses throughout the United States.

Harry Fox, famous as a Broadway comedian, makes his film debut in "Beatrice Fairfax," as "Jimmy Barton," a newspaper reporter. His work is of the highest order and there is every indication that he will achieve as great success on the screen as he has as a comedian.

Grace Darling, who appears in the title role, is smart and shows marked dramatic ability. The photography and lighting of the picture is exceptionally good.

"Visiting Star" System for "Beatrice Fairfax"

William Randolph Hearst has decided to introduce into the motion picture industry the system of "visiting stars" that was years ago such a success in the great dramatic stock companies in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, San Francisco and other cities. These "visiting stars" will appear in the various episodes of "Beatrice Fairfax."

Betty Howe was the first of the "visiting stars" selected to appear with Harry Fox and Grace Darling in "Beatrice." The experiment was such a decided success that Mr. Hearst decided to continue it in the other episodes. To that end, Miss Cranston, one of the most beautiful women in the country and winner of a number of beauty contests, has been especially engaged. She will make her first appearance with Harry Fox and Grace Darling in the seventh episode of "Beatrice Fairfax," "A Name for a Baby."

Other prominent screen favorites will be added to the cast of "Beatrice Fairfax" later on, although, in every episode Harry Fox will be the principal star with Grace Darling ranking next in stellar honors.

Miss Yumiko Nagahara, diminutive and very pretty Japanese lady, has been engaged to play the part of "Mimosa San" in the episode of "Beatrice" of that title.

Yumiko was born in Tokio less than eighteen years ago. At the age of nine she was brought to this country by her parents and spent several years in Seattle and Los Angeles. She has marked musical talent and appeared in concerts as a piano and cornet soloist in Los Angeles and San Francisco. She also appeared throughout the country in classical and ballroom dances. Her first appearance in pictures was in "Madame Butterfly."

Mrs. Vernon Castle in "Patria"

Mrs. Vernon Castle, famous beauty and dancer who is being screened in the great serial, "Patria," for International, has designed the "Castle Preparedness Suit" in which she appears in several of the episodes.

"Patria," in addition to being the last word in artistic motion pictures, has preparedness as its keynote, and is declared to be the most inspiringly beautiful and intensely interesting serial ever presented. It is from the pen of Louis Joseph Vance.

With a War Cameraman at the Front

Ever since the inception of the present day journalism the public has been thrilled with the tales, told and written, by war correspondents of their adventures at the front. With the outbreak of the European war, however, a new figure was introduced. This is the motion picture cameraman.

While it was simple enough for the officers in charge of various movements to prepare statements for the war office, giving the gist of the movements, it was not possible for them to photograph them and make a permanent historical record for posterity. For this reason the various governments appointed official cineamatographers and while some of this film has been released much of it is still in the archives of the various war offices.

While thousands have tried for the privilege of taking these pictures, very few have been successful as the various governments have employed their own men under the supervision of the War Department. Up to date there has only been one American photographer with the Allied forces. This is Ariel Varges, staff photographer of the International Film Service, Inc. Mr. Varges has undergone all the hardships and dangers of the war correspondent and for two years he has been actively engaged in filming the activities of the various European armies on the front.

It was in December, 1914, that Mr. Varges sailed for London. Owing to the strict censorship rules he was unable to make a move until through the friendly offices of Sir Thomas Lipton, he was accorded the privilege of Official Photographer with the Lipton Red Cross Expedition that sailed to the relief of Serbia. While in Serbia Mr. Varges became very well acquainted with Crown Prince Alexander and through his kindness was sent to the front with the Serbian army. Here he made many pictures while actually under fire. At this time the great typhus epidemic was raging in Serbia and thousands were dying of the terrible scourge. Mr. Varges was sick for some time but fortunately escaped the disease. He returned to London with the Lipton party and shortly after went to Italy. Here he succeeded in getting a number of films of the Italian army. It was during his stay in Italy that the Abyssinia earthquate occurred and Mr. Varges made some thrilling film on this terrible disaster.

In the meantime, his work in Serbia had attracted the attention of the British war office and he was summoned before the Admiralty and accorded the privilege of the official cinematographer with the British forces at Salonika. He sailed for this point and has been there ever since. Some of the most remarkable pictures that have come out of the war zone have been made by Mr. Varges, and despite the circumstances under which they were taken their quality is A1. Another handicap under which he has been working is the fact that he has never seen any of his own film projected. The film is made and sent to the British Admiralty office in London where it is censored, a positive print taken and the negative shipped to this country.

Future stories of the war will be told not by the correspondents but by the moving picture operators who are the only ones to reach the front and who do not give a word picture of their impressions but give you a vivid living scene of what actually happens.

The last scenes of "Rummy," starring Wilfred Lucas, have been photographed at the Fine Arts studio.

Arrow Gets English Actor

Derwent Hall Caine, named by the London Post as "England's greatest romantic actor," and only son of Hall Caine, the celebrated Manx author whose books have sold into the millions of copies, has been brought to the United States by the Arrow Film Corporation to play in a number of its forthcoming feature productions. Included in these may be some of the best known books and plays of Hall Caine, the exclusive motion picture rights to which have just been secured by W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow company.

Derwent Hall Caine, noted English actor, starred in Arrow's production of one of the novels of Hall Caine.

Derwent Hall Caine was born at Greeba Castle, Isle of Man, where the family has resided for centuries. Although inheriting and developing unusual literary ability, Derwent Hall Caine early in his career showed that he preferred the stage to the pen as a medium of expression. His debut was made at Drury Lane, London, just ten years ago, when he appeared in "The Bondman." His power as an actor increased and he branched out, too, as a manager-producer, concerning himself mostly with plays written by his father. He played the character of John Storm in "The Christian," more than 800 times in London and the English provinces, and followed this astounding success with another just as big when, as "Pete," the title role of his father's play based on his own book, "The Manxman," Derwent Hall Caine appeared for four successive seasons in London. Then on his own account he leased the Aldwych, a big West End theater in London. There he produced "The Bishop's Son," playing the role of Dan Mylrea in his father's own dramatic version of "The Deemster." There followed a starring tour in "Drake," written by Louis N. Parker especially for Derwent Caine.

When the American film version of "The Christian" was taken to England it did not meet with the approval of Hall Caine, and an English screen version of "The Christian" was made with Derwent Hall Caine playing the role of John Storm, which he had played so often on the stage. An instance of the popularity of this Derwent Hall Caine film may be cited in the fact that to date its gross receipts in England alone have exceeded $100,000.

When England entered into the war the Isle of Man, which is not much larger than the Island of Manhattan, on its own account declared war on Germany, and Derwent Hall Caine equipped a small ship, organized its crew, and offered the services of ship and crew to the British Navy for duty as a scoutship. The government accepted the ship and its crew —all but Derwent Hall Caine, whose injuries at St. Moritz rendered him, in the opinion of the service, unfit for the rigorous duty he had volunteered to perform. For a while he was in charge of an English naval training station, but when the navy again decided him physically unfit for this arduous labor he retired from the service.

Mr. Caine then became an army chauffeur. But the strenuous toil told on him and he again was compelled to retire. After a rest of six months, once more having had his services refused by both army and navy, Mr. Caine returned to the stage in a revival of "Pete." His services then were secured by Mr. Shallenberger.

Director Joseph De Grasse and a company of about sixty players from Universal City have returned to the studios from Big Bear Valley, where they filmed a number of scenes for the five-reel feature, "The Place Beyond the Winds."

TWO PARAMOUNT FEATURES

Blanche Sweet and Pauline Frederick in New Productions on Paramount's September Program—Burton Holmes Promises New Journeys

The two leading features on the Paramount program for the week of September 18 are the Lasky production of "The Storm," in which Blanche Sweet plays the leading role; and the Famous Players production of "Ashes of Embers," in which Pauline Frederick is starred.

The single reels include the thirty-second edition of the Paramount Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen; the Burton Holmes Travel Pictures, in which series of "easy chair journeys" all around the world, Mr. Holmes takes his fellow-travelers this week, from Glasgow to Edinboro, and the Paramount-Bray Cartoon, "Farmer Alfalfa's Wolfhound," drawn by the well-known cartoonist, Paul Terry.

The Paramount Pictographs for this week will contain special features, the first of which will be "The Greatest American Exercise," showing every stage of making chewing gum; "The Light That Never Failed," showing how warnings are given to sailors from a lighthouse; and the other feature pictures the training by military standards of 1,200 boys at Washington Camp, Plum Island, N. Y.

World Earns Unusual Prosperity

WILLIAM A. BRADY ADVOCATES ON-THE-DOT DELIVERY

A NEW Clara Kimball Young play, "The Dark Silence," will be issued shortly by the World Film Corporation.

This will signalize the reappearance of Miss Young in the motion picture theaters after an absence of four months' duration, her last previous photoplay having been issued by the World at the beginning of May.

"The Dark Silence" is to be a regular World Picture program release. It is a Parisian drama containing scenes of peace and war, and its heroine, an exceedingly successful young artist in the French capital, also becomes a nurse of the wounded soldiers.

The love story of which the setting is thus indicated illustrates the rivalry between a young physician and a nobly born Englishman for the heart and hand of the beautiful artist-nurse. It is through the girl's broken hearted disappointment at the supposed desertion of the man she really loves that she throws herself into the work of caring for the battle-torn soldiers..

This blending of tender romance with the grim realities of armed conflict is what makes "The Dark Silence" an unusual drama of the screen. The new World Picture is produced under the direction of Albert Capellani, who has devoted his utmost care and effort to making "The Dark Silence" a perfect exhibition of the stagecraft of which he is so famous an exponent.

President Brady Talks

"An era of extraordinary prosperity has set in for the World Film Corporation," said Director General William A. Brady last week, "and I ascribe this gratifying condition of affairs to several distinctly separate causes, the first of which is forehandedness.

"From the beginning I have worked incessantly to establish efficiency in all departments. Long experience as a theatrical manager handling large numbers of traveling attractions had taught me that the railroads which captured the biggest as well as the choicest patronage were those that rarely failed to land their passengers on time. To be on time to the dot was one of the principal points I went after in the early stages, and when this was accomplished—and safeguarded by the completion of an unheard-of number of pictures in advance, all ready for release—we were able to doubly assure the exhibitor of on-the-minute delivery. I figure that this alone has made a marked difference in our financial support.

"Another point to which I may refer with pardonable satisfaction is the improved quality of World output. Our directors have been making noteworthy progress in this work, and we hear from it every day, from many sections of the country. It was only last week that one of the very big New York exhibitors came in here to see a picture upon which he had received a pointer from some quarter or other—a man whose name is familiar to all who are abreast of the times in the motion picture industry.

"During the progress of the picture this famous exhibitor broke in several times with enthusiastic interjections, and at the end he exclaimed, 'If Brady goes on making such pictures at the rate he is going, the markets of the world will be seeking him—not he seeking them'—and we had to show him three or four more of our completed plays.

"Then again, we are giving practical demonstrations to exhibitors of our desire to meet them half way. Not long ago in an interior city something happened to one of our films when it was not quite completely run off, and the local manager wrote us about his disappointed audience. We wired him to select any one of our releases, free of cost, and exhibit it as a substitute."

ENTER, "WITCHING HOUR"

Frohman Amusement Corporation to Produce Popular Augustus Thomas Drama as Six or Seven Part Feature—Designs on Warfield

After two years of refusal and disdaining offers that exceeded five figures for his dramatic masterpiece, "The Witching Hour," Augustus Thomas, noted playwright and directing general of the Charles Frohman interests, has turned over to the Frohman Amusement Corporation the film rights to this powerful play and that vehicle will be the next production of the Frohman Company.

"The Witching Hour," which enjoyed a three-year run at the Liberty Theater in New York, several years ago, is the most important dramatic document Augustus Thomas is responsible for. Producers have for a long time been offering Mr. Thomas large sums for the screen rights to this play, but Mr. Thomas has resisted every offer. He was firm in his belief that "The Witching Hour" could be revived and that it would run again on Broadway. Recently, however, William L. Sherrill, head of the Frohman Corporation, induced Mr. Thomas to enter into serious consideration regarding the screening of the piece, with the result that contracts have been closed.

Efforts are going forward now, through George Irving, of the Frohman Company, to secure as many of the original cast as he possibly can to portray their original roles.

John Mason, who starred in the piece during its long run, is engaged to open soon in "Common Clay" in which he starred last season. If arrangements can be made so that Mr. Mason can divide his time between the theater and the studio, Mr. Sherrill will endeavor to prevail upon him to play his original role.

The role of "Jack" which stood out so forcibly in the stage piece, will be handled in the screen version by Jack Sherrill, and Edith Taliaferro will, in all likelihood, be seen in the ingenue part.

Work will begin immediately on the production. Anthony Kelly is completing the scenario. "The Witching Hour" will be followed by another dramatic tale, equally as important, but from the pen of another famous author.

The Frohman Corporation recently offered David Warfield one hundred thousand dollars to play in "The Music Master." Phillip Klein, son of Charles Klein, the author, was also communicated with. As yet nothing tangible has resulted. Mr. Sherrill, head of the Frohman Company, however, is anticipating hopefully.

Terry Mutual Ramsaye Dined

On Tuesday, August 29, Terry Ramsaye, director of publicity for the Mutual Film Corporation, was dined by the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers as an expression of fond affection prior to his departure for Chicago. Arthur James acted as toastmaster, and allowed Hopp Hadley, Carl Pierce and Harry Reichenbach to speak touchingly of Mr. Ramsaye's good work and pleasing presence while a New Yorker, later giving that gentleman a chance to vindicate himself.

Terry Ramsaye has spent a little over a year in New York film circles, and in that time has put many big things over in addition to keeping his routine work up to a high standard. Previous to his entrance into the motion picture business, Mr. Ramsaye served in an editorial capacity in some of the biggest daily newspapers in the country.

The following were present at the dinner at the Claridge:

Mr. Kopfstein, Ivan; V. M. Shapiro, V-L-S-E.; Arthur James, Metro; Henry James, Metro; Bill Barry, Dramatic Mirror; L. O. Fiske, Dramatic Mirror; Geo. Blaisdell, Motion Picture News; Harry Ennis, New York Clipper; James Milligan, Billboard; H. K. Tootle, Gaumont; Wm. Wright, Kalem; E. L. Masters, V. L. S. E.; J. Solomon, Morosco; Paul Gulick, Universal; A. L. Haase, Exhibitors Herald; Pete Schmid, Pallas; C. R. Condon, Motography; Wm. Milligan, Motion Picture News; Sam Spedon, Harry Reichenbach, Frohman; Nat Rothstein, Universal; Hopp Hadley, Mutual; R. M. Vandivort, Motion Picture News; Sol. Harris, Variety; John Flinn, Lasky; Carnier, Morning Telegraph; Gerald Duffy, Picture Play Magazine; C. H. Pierce, Morosco; Leslie Mason, Motion Picture News; Wallace Thompson, Paramount; C. C. Burr, Paramount; B. P. Schulberg, Famous Players; Wid Cunning, Wid's; Richard Schayer, Lewis J. Selznick; P. A. Parsons, Pathe.

Selig Sells Share in "The Crisis"

William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company, has sold an interest in "The Crisis" for the United States and Canada to H. A. Sherman, president of the Elliott & Sherman Film Corporation, of Minneapolis, Minnesota. It is understood that Mr. Sherman, representing a syndicate, paid more than a quarter of a million dollars for an interest in the play.

Mr. Sherman when interviewed said: "I consider 'The Crisis' one of the greatest films ever released and in this statement I bar none. It was only after we had seen the drama that we concluded to pay the very high price demanded by Mr. Selig for an interest."

It is proposed to release "The Crisis" in the near future just as soon as some elaborate and novel exploitation plans are completed.

Unusual Pathe Story

"The Fear of Poverty," the Pathe Gold Rooster release for September 10, has a title which in itself commands attention. If it is true, as it is said, that over 80 per cent of the population of the United States is either wholly or partially dependent in old age, then the fear of poverty may be considered as an almost universal characteristic. Taking this as a theme Miss Agnes C. Johnston, the author of "The Shine Girl," a recent Pathe release, has written a story which will excite wide interest.

Florence LaBadie, star of "The Million Dollar Mystery," as well as many successful features, is the central figure of this production. Her part is unique since she is required to play four separate and distinct roles—first that of a young girl brought up in poverty, secondly the same girl married to a wealthy man and taking an active part in society, thirdly that same girl a middle-aged mother and fourthly her young and frivolous daughter, capable of great depths, but as yet not aroused to her inner self.

"Work and Grow Young"

Nothing is so restful as two or three hours' housework after a strenuous day at the studio," is Virginia Pearson's defi to the world.

Following the housework, which is a physical diet to offset the mental fatigue caused by a day before the cameras, Miss Pearson takes a sort of demi-tasse in sixty minutes on a dairy,—her own.

"I believe that in order to rest the mind after the high nervous tension which accompanies dramatic work, hard manual labor must be indulged in," she says. "The occupation indulged in must be as purely physical as possible.

"The best way to appreciate thoroughly one's success is to forget it. I know that I lay myself open to the charge of 'commonplace' 'would-be serious thinker' and so on, but a good way to keep the freshness of youth and enthusiasm is to wipe out for just a few moments each day all things pertaining to one's profession, and live as near to nature as one can. See me pitch hay in back of my home in Palisades if you don't believe it."

Florida Sets Good Example

Speaking of the results thus far obtained through the advertising announcements of the Florida Feature Film Company, Thos. J. Peters, who is personally supervising the production of all the company's five-reel features, says: "During the two weeks that the pictures of our company have been offered to the trade, through the advertising columns of the trade papers, two things have been proved to my complete satisfaction. One is that there is a good market for business-producing and money-making features and the other is that truthful advertising pays.

"All the buyers who have called for screen examinations of 'The Human Orchid,' our first production, in response to our advertisements, were not disappointed by seeing a feature that did not live up to what we claimed for it and in consequence they are now more willing to take our word on future productions.

"Where confidence does not exist all business transactions are slow of consummation and modern business must be transacted quickly and in the shortest space of time to insure the maximum of profit. So above all other considerations we intend to establish confidence first, and we believe that the quickest way to accomplish this to keep elaboration out of our advertising."

Sherman to Produce in New York

A new producing company is soon to start work in New York. Harry Sherman has arrived there and will immediately complete all the arrangements necessary for the beginning of actual production. He is said to have secured the services of several stars and directors of unusual ability.

More information will be given regarding the new producing company as soon as its further plans are completed.

Artcraft Exchanges Organized

"LESS THAN THE DUST" TITLE OF FIRST PICKFORD PRODUCTION

MARY PICKFORD has named her new play—the first one to be made by her own company.

The Artcraft Pictures Corporation, which will present all the new productions to be made by Mary Pickford with her own company as an independent star, announces the title as "Less Than the Dust," written by Hector Turnbull, who credits his inspiration for the plot to the poem of the same name by Laurence Hope.

It is also announced that the picture will be ready for distribution by Artcraft early in October. Miss Pickford is giving "Less Than the Dust" an artistic and costly production, and has assembled a notable supporting company. John Emerson is in charge of the production, which when completed will furnish a complete entertainment. Miss Pickford promises a new characterization as a little English girl whom misfortune places in an East Indian setting; her popular personality will have full play in situations that give ample scope to her ability for the portrayal of impressive pathos and delightful comedy. Her director has taken full opportunity for the display of picturesque settings and has endeavored to inject and retain all the atmosphere and mysticism of the far east.

The Genesis of the Story

In view of the interest with which Miss Pickford's newest picture is awaited the poem of inspiration is reprinted herewith:

Less than the dust beneath thy chariot wheel,
Less than the rust that never stained thy sword,
Less than the trust thou hast in me, my Lord,
Even less than these!

Less than the weed that grows beside thy door,
Less than the speed of hours spent far from thee,
Less than the need thou hast in life for me,
Even less am I!

Since I, my Lord, am nothing unto thee,
See here my sword. I make it keen and bright.
Love's last reward—Death comes to me tonight.
Farewell, Zahirudin.

Plans for the distribution of the productions of the Mary Pickford Film Corporation are practically completed, and Walter E. Greene, president of Artcraft Pictures Corporation, announces the organization of a chain of Artcraft exchanges from coast to coast. Within a very short time the fifteen exchanges provided for in the original plan will be in operation. Many of the branch managers are already in their territory. Al Lichtman, Artcraft general manager, who has just returned from a swing around the circuit, reports that for the handling of the first of the new Mary Pickford productions the following cities have been selected as centers of distribution:

New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Washington, Atlanta, Dallas, Chicago, Cincinnati, Detroit, Minneapolis, Kansas City, Denver, Seattle and San Francisco. The Canadian agency for distribution will probably be announced soon as negotiations are well under way.

Exchanges Organized

Extensive space has been set aside in the main offices of Artcraft at 729 Seventh avenue for the New York manager, Arthur G. Whyte, and his assistant, Charles S. Goetz. They will handle the entire state and northern New Jersey. Mr. Whyte is well known in the motion picture industry as producer, manufacturer and distributor, and his selection as head of the important New York exchange is proof of Mr. Greene's desire to recruit the most capable staff that is available in the film field. Mr. Goetz was formerly with World Film and more recently with Bluebird.

Samuel Bernfield takes over New England, with headquarters in Boston. He has had charge of Pathe distribution in that section.

To the Philadelphia exchange comes B. C. Cunningham, for four years manager for the Mutual in Washington. Eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey are included in this compact territory.

In Washington exhibitors in the District of Columbia, Maryland, Delaware, Virginia and a part of North Carolina will deal with V. P. Whitaker, formerly of the Paramount forces.

Two quiet sidelights on Miss Pickford as she will appear in the first production of her new company.

The rest of North Carolina, Tennessee, Mississippi and all the territory south of these states and east of the Mississippi River are grouped in the Atlanta exchange. That part of Louisiana which includes New Orleans will be served from Atlanta. C. W. Brandon, who has been successful as southern manager for V. L. S. E., is manager.

In Pittsburgh Samuel Plame goes from Paramount to Artcraft. He will have charge of western Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Ohio, adjacent to Pittsburgh.

Headquarters for southern Ohio, Kentucky and southeastern Indiana is to be in Cincinnati, with Harry M. Berman as manager. He has represented Universal there, and was Kansas City Metro manager.

Northern Ohio, northern Indiana and the state of Michigan will be served by Frank Rutledge in Detroit, where he is well known as manager for George Kleine's enterprises.

Chicago and Minneapolis have been combined under the general supervision of Max Goldstine, who will organize staffs from the most successful film men in that territory. Mr. Goldstine is to have charge of distribution in Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, North and South Dakota and the adjoining section of Iowa.

The rest of Iowa, all of Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska and the northern part of Oklahoma are in the Kansas City district. P. C. Wreath has been placed in command here. He has a wide acquaintance, gained as manager of the Kansas City Feature Film Company.

From Dallas the destinies of Pickford Pictures in Texas, Arkansas, southern Oklahoma and Louisiana west of the Mississippi will be directed by J. Rotchford. He has represented Pathe and Kleine in the section to which he has been assigned by Artcraft.

Arthur S. Kane is organizing exchanges in the Rocky Mountain and Pacific Coast states. He will select managers for branches in Denver, Seattle and San Francisco, and will supervise their operation. In a long career in the film industry Mr. Kane has been general manager in New York for Pathe and assistant general manager for the General Film Company.

Essanay at Work on Features

Work now is under way for another big feature at the Essanay studios, the rights for which play were recently purchased by George K. Spoor, president of the company. The play is "The Breakers," by Arthur Stringer, which recently was published as a continued story in the Saturday Evening Post.

This is the second five-act feature just started by Essanay and the two are being put on simultaneously. The other play is "The Chaperon," taken from the stage success by Marion Fairfax. It features Edna Mayo, supported by Eugene O'Brien and is being directed by Arthur Berthelet.

"The Breakers" will feature Bryant Washburn and Nell Craig. It is being directed by Fred E. Wright, who has just finished the five-act play "The Prince of Graustark," a sequel to "Graustark," also an Essanay feature. Both plays were written by George Barr McCutcheon. "The Prince of Graustark" features Bryant Washburn and Marguerite Clayton.

All of these new plays will be released through Essanay's new releasing organization which will be announced in the near future.

Amateur Camera Uses Paper Films

A motion picture camera designed especially for amateur use is being made by the Kinak Motion Picture Company of New York City. It is meant to fill the demand for moving picture films in the home and school. The films used are made from paper and are claimed to be easier to handle and safer. In projection they give a picture three by four feet in size.

The tenth and last episode of "Timothy Dobbs," has been completed at Universal City.

Witness these extensive construction scenes. Universal is still growing. On the right is a view of one of the two big new stages in the making. This is to be 100 feet long by 50 feet wide. Below at the left are glimpses of new buildings for the busy production department. At the right is seen one corner of stage number seven, one of the two now building. These new ones will give Universal 8 big sunshine stages.

Electrical Equipment for Projection

BY A. M. CANDY*

IN THE early days of the motion picture industry the source of light was in many cases of the well-known calcium type. Gradually, however, it became necessary to use some source of illumination which would develop a light of greater intensity. It was for this reason, primarily, that the electric arc was adopted for motion picture work.

In 1914 one authority estimated that there was installed in this country a total of 60,000 kw. of motion picture machines. By this time, no doubt, this figure is very low. An average motion picture arc lamp (using direct current) consumes about two kilowatts, but owing to the losses in various necessary devices interposed between the arc lamp and the supply circuit there is required from the supply line approximately 4.5 kw. per machine. The average picture theater operating eight hours a day, 312 days a year, will consume in a motion picture machine alone approximately $350 worth of electricity, based on a rate of three cents per kilowatt-hour. The power used in the arc will be, as a rule, at least one-half of the total power used in the theater, including that used for illuminating lamps, fan motors, etc.

In most localities the commercial source of electrical energy is a 110 or a 220 volt supply circuit, either direct or alternating current. An alternating-current arc can be operated most successfully at a potential not much in excess of 30 to 35 volts, and a direct-current open arc can be operated most successfully at a potential not much in excess of 50 to 60 volts. It was, therefore, for a time customary to use a large resistance in series with each arc to reduce the line voltage. This method is obviously very inefficient and, furthermore, the heat generated in the resistor is very objectionable. Hence, auto-transformers (commonly known as economy coils) were introduced. This type of apparatus, although reducing the power bills and eliminating the objectionable heating feature, did not permit the production of as good results on the screen as could be obtained where the rheostat was used and power obtained from a direct-current circuit.

Superiority of Direct Current—Direct current is much more satisfactory and effective than alternating current for a projecting arc lamp. First, the light produced is of a much better quality, as the greenish tinge is entirely absent; therefore, the light more nearly approaches that of sunlight. Second, the light is much easier to focus, due to the fact that the arc is much steadier and does not have a tendency to travel around the periphery of the electrodes; also the arc forms a crater in the positive electrode which produces approximately 85 per cent of the useful light, 10 per cent being produced by the negative electrode and 5 per cent by the arc stream. Third, the current in an alternating-current arc reverses and becomes zero twice during each cycle, thus producing a decided flicker which may be observed on the screen if the revolving shutter on the motion picture machine is not properly designed or operated at the correct speed. Fourth, there is no crater formed when aternating current is used, and hence the light must be obtained from both electrodes and from the arc stream. As a result, the light is not concentrated in a point, and hence cannot be as easily focused. Owing to these characteristics and the cooling effect when the current is zero, approximately three times as much alternating current is required to produce an illumination equivalent to that produced by a given direct current.

Direct-Current Apparatus—Because of the physical advantages of the direct-current arc, numerous types of apparatus have been introduced which will supply direct current at a reduced potential. These comprise rotary converters, mercury arc rectifiers, mechanical rectifiers and motor-generator sets of various mechanical and electrical characteristics.

The electric arc possesses a unique electrical characteristic, namely, a negative resistance coefficient. In other words, as the current in the arc increases, the resistance, and hence the potential across the arc, decreases. It is evident, therefore, that if the arc were connected to a constant potential circuit having an infinite capacity, the current through the circuit would tend to build up to infinity. Therefore, it is necessary to provide characteristics in the apparatus supplying power to the arc, such that the arc current will be maintained practically constant.

The ideal apparatus for this service is a strictly constant-current generator driven by a suitable motor or engine. This type of generator, however, is com-

AUTO-TRANSFORMER—A transformer with but one coil, which is used like a regular transformer for raising or lowering voltage.

BALLAST RESISTANCE—An electrical resistance which increases with the current through it, thus balancing or ballasting the arc, whose resistance decreases.

CAPACITY—As the word indicates, the ability of an electrical circuit to absorb electrical energy, apart from the apparatus in the circuit.

COMMUTATION—The process by which an electrical generator makes its currents flow in one direction.

COMPOUND WINDING—A double winding on the field magnet of an electrical generator or motor, one coil of which is in series with the armature and the other in parallel.

DROOPING VOLTAGE CHARACTERISTIC—The characteristic of a generator so wound that its voltage tends to decrease rather than increase when the resistance of the circuit is reduced below normal.

ELECTRODE—The working terminals of any circuit; as, either carbon of an arc.

EMPIRICAL FORMULA—A formula or arithmetical system based on experience and observation.

POTENTIAL—Voltage.

REACTANCE—A resistance in an alternating current circuit which depends on magnetic effect and does not absorb energy.

RECTIFIER—A device for changing alternating current to direct current.

RESISTOR—A known and useful resistance intentionally inserted in an electrical circuit.

ROTARY CONVERTER—A mechanical rectifier consisting of an alternating current motor operating a direct current generator; often combined in a single machine.

SERIES WINDING—The winding of a generator or motor field magnet connected in series with the armature.

SHUNT WINDING—The winding of a generator or motor field magnet connected in parallel with the armature.

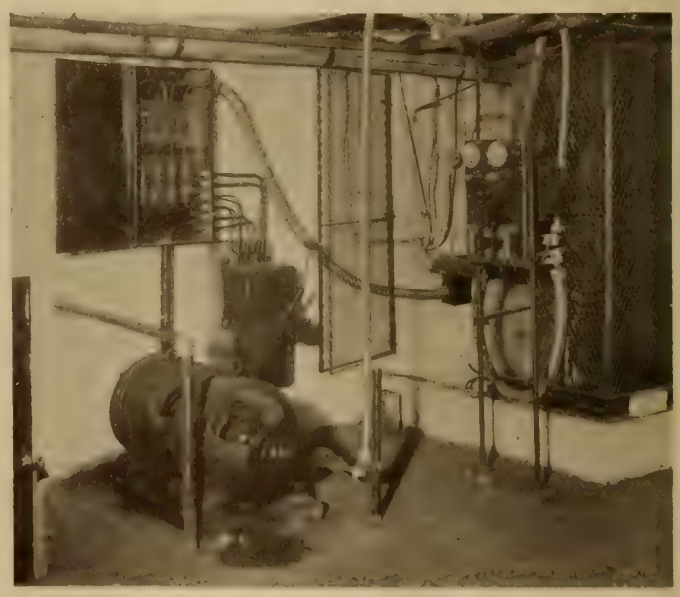
paratively expensive to build and, furthermore, in the usual forms is quite complicated. There are several generators on the market which are designed for characteristics approaching those of a strictly constant-current machine. These generators are provided with special field windings and armature windings having a comparatively high reactance, which results in an extremely drooping voltage characteristic such that the generator will develop about 55 volts at full-load current and will not be damaged when short-circuited, because the current will never be much in excess of full rated potential generload. Constant potential generators and rotary converters are also designed to develop 70 to 80 volts direct current, a ballast rheostat being interposed in the circuit to each arc lamp. This ballast resistance neutralizes the negative resistance characteristic of the arc so that the current remains appreciably constant at all times. For this service mercury arc rectifiers are also supplied. The direct current produced by the mercury arc rectifier is maintained practically constant by the reactance of the auto-transformers which are used for supplying power to the bulb. This makes the rectifier inherently more efficient than if a balast resistance is used in the direct-current circuit; furthermore, the apparatus is self-contained.



Typical motor-generator equipment located in balcony of motion picture theater.

Types of Direct-Current Apparatus—The majority of theaters projecting feature films desire to have a continuous performance, which is obtained by using two motion picture machines alternately. Before the end of one film is reached, the second lamp will be started up and made ready for projecting pictures. This requires either duplicate generating equipment for the two motion picture machines or generating equipment which will successfully carry large overloads for a short period of time; also the potential of the generator must not be appreciably affected at the instant when the arc is struck. The potential of the generator must also be practically independent of the usual commercial speed variations of the motive power, such as would be produced by a voltage variation of the supply circuit to the motor driving the generator.

For any installation using two machines alternately very successful operation will be obtained by using a motor-generator set and a ballast resistor in series with each arc lamp, the generator to be flat or slightly over-compounded and to develop 75 volts at full-load. Neither the rotary converter nor the shunt-wound generator having a drooping voltage characteristic is as satisfactory for several reasons. First, the voltage of the rotary converter will vary almost directly with changes in the alternating supply voltage, thus resulting in fluctuations of the arc. Second, the actual overall efficiency of the rotary converter, including auto-transformers and ballast rheostats, is not greater, and in many cases is actually less, than the overall efficiency (including ballast rheostats) of a motor-generator set composed of a compound-wound 75 volt generator and a polyphase, 60 cycle induction motor. Third, the voltage of the shunt-wound generator of the drooping voltage characteristic type is quite sensitive to speed fluctuations. If, therefore, such a generator is driven by a motor whose speed varies perceptibly the set will not give perfect satisfaction. This characteristic is particularly objectionable where the motor is supplied with power from a trolley line. Fourth, when two motion picture machines are used alternately it is necessary to provide a series field and ballast rheostats for the shunt-wound drooping voltage generator. Just before striking the second arc the operator must manipulate the switch on the control panel, which makes the series field operative and at the same time introduces the ballast resistors in the circuits of the arc lamps. This then produces practically the same characteristics as are obtained with the compound-wound sets. For the 75 volt, compound-wound sets the entire control consists of a single switch mounted on each motion picture machine within convenient reach of the operator.

In addition to the requirements which have been cited, it is advisable that each 75 volt, compound-wound generator be provided with properly designed commutating poles to insure perfect commutation when the machine is subjected to the severe overload imposed at the instant of striking an arc, particularly when the generator is already supplying current to a motion picture machine in operation.

For installations requiring arc currents within the limits for which the mercury arc rectifier is built, the features of securing the required drooping characteristics by reactance instead of resistance, and of delivering a direct current to the arc without the use of rotating parts, make this apparatus inherently an efficient and simple equipment for the service. Partly offsetting these fundamental advantages which arise from the nature of the apparatus is a secondary and minor characteristic arising from the manner of securing the drooping characteristic. It is impossible to operate two arcs simultaneously from a rectifier, not because of any lack of overload capacity, but because the stabilizing reactance is in the primary circuit, and hence not between the arc and the transformer. For this reason separate stabilizing reactances cannot be used for the two arcs, and no means of balancing the current in the two arcs is available. In fact, if the carbons of one arc are closed while the other arc is operating the current will merely be transferred from one to the other. This fact suggests a method of using a single rectifier equipment to operate two lamps, a method now in quite wide use and entirely successful. The arc is merely "stolen" from the machine with the completed reel by starting the arc in the machine to be used. This same object has been accomplished by another scheme in case the operator insists on having his arc started a short time before starting the reel. In this case the picture is shown practically complete on direct current from the rectifier and finished on alternating current, while the second arc is being heated by direct current from the rectifier. The change-over is made by reversing a double-throw switch.

Current Rating—When a new motion picture theater is contemplated the question naturally arises—how much current is required for the arc lamp? The light (produced by the current) which must be developed by the arc depends upon a number of factors, as—

1—Size or area of the picture.
2—The color-producing scheme, and tinted films.
3—Length of throw in feet from motion picture machine to the screen.
4—The density of the film.
5—The material of the screen.
6—The design of the revolving shutter on the motion picture machine.
7—The quality of the condensing and objective or projecting lenses.
8—Size of carbons, their adjustment and size of "spot."
9—The amount of general illumination in the theater; also the location and arrangement of lighting fixtures.

Size of the Picture—The size of the picture projected is probably the most important factor of those cited. It is fixed by the aperture of the motion picture machine; by the focal length of the objective or projecting lenses and by the distance from the objective lenses to the screen. Motion picture machines have an aperture approximately $\frac{11}{16}$ inch high by $\frac{15}{16}$ inch wide, and, therefore, the height and width of the picture projected will be proportional to 11 and 15, respectively. Assume for an example an installation wherein the picture projected is 10 feet high and 13.6 feet wide. If the objective lenses are replaced so that the picture is enlarged to 13 feet in height, then the area of the picture is 70 per cent greater than it was formerly, although the height has only been increased 30 per cent. Therefore, 70 per cent more light must be developed to produce the same brilliancy on the screen. The size of the picture required depends upon the size of the theater, both width and depth, and also upon the particular desires of the manager.

Colored Pictures—Where revolving colored filters are used for producing color effects, only a certain portion of the light spectrum developed by the lamp reaches the screen. For this reason, therefore, a much more intense light is required, varying from two to three times that required for ordinary black and white projection. Where tinted films are used the required amount of light is increased, but not to such a degree as just cited for the color scheme.

Length of Throw—There is no general agreement as to the effect of the distance from the objective lenses to the screen upon the amount of light which must be developed by the arc for a given illumination upon the screen. In fact, many contend that where the length of throw is between 50 and 125 feet, there is very little difference for a given motion picture machine projecting a picture of the same dimensions in each instance. Theoretically, this is undoubtedly true. However, due to the fact that objective lenses are not perfect, there is a diffusion and dispersion of the projected light which is more evident at greater distances. Furthermore, in the average theater the air is always more or less dusty and, in fact, in some theaters where smoking is permitted, the air becomes quite dense at times. It has been found, therefore, that the length of throw does actually affect the quantity of light which much be developed.

Density of Films—There is a considerable difference in density produced during the process of developing the films. It is obvious that the amount of light required for a dense film will be greater than for a more transparent one. However, the light used under ordinary conditions is generally found sufficient to give satisfactory results with almost any commercial film.

Type of Screen—Seeing a motion picture is entirely dependent upon the light which is reflected from the screen into the eyes of the observer. It is obvious, therefore, that if the percentage of the total light reflected in all directions (by the so-called diffuse reflection) is increased, then the light developed may be decreased and yet produce the same result. Therefore, when a plain white mat screen of canvas is used, a greater amount of light must be developed than if some one of the semi-mirror screens is used. Screens which have a yellow or gold-colored tint usually do not require as much illumination, simply due to the fact that a light having a yellow or orange tint gives the effect upon the eye of being relatively much more brilliant than a white light of equal intensity in candlepower.

Design of Revolving Shutter—The design of the revolving shutter on the motion picture machine materially affects the amount of light which must be developed, because shutters of various types permit from 50 to 65 per cent of the light passing through the objective lenses to reach the screen. The flicker is eliminated to a greater degree, however, when a properly designed shutter in the 50 per cent class is used.

Quality of Condensing and Objective Lenses—Not only the quality of the condensing and projecting lenses, but also the size of the condensing lenses, affects materially the quantity of light which must be developed. The quality of the lenses determines the amount of light lost by absorption and diffusion. The size and design of the condensing lenses determines the percentage of the total light developed, which is collected and concentrated for the "spot."

Size of Carbons and Adjustments—When direct current is used a crater is formed in the upper or positive electrode. This crater is a molten spot of carbon, which is at a temperature of nearly 6,500 degrees F. This crater is the hottest portion of the arc, as the negative electrode seldom, if ever, reaches a temperature in excess of 4,500 degrees F. The carbon must be of a size best suited to the current required, because if the positive carbon, particularly, is too large, an excessively large current is required to heat it sufficiently to produce the crater from which the major portion of the light is secured. On the other hand, if the carbons are too small, sufficient light cannot be produced. Furthermore, in this latter instance, difficulty will also be experienced if the operator attempts to secure a brighter light by adjusting the carbons more closely together, as this will result in a hissing and sputtering arc, which is unstable and is unsatisfactory for projection work. The only alternative in such a case is to operate the arc at abnormally high potentials, varying from 60 to 70 volts, under which conditions a larger current can be used. This is not satisfactory, however, because the arc voltage is too near that of the usual generating equipment, and hence the arc has a tendency to become unstable, requiring very frequent adjustment of the carbons.

Experience has indicated that carbons which give most satisfactory results for various direct currents are as follows:

Amperes through Arc	Diameter of Carbon—Inches Upper	Lower
25 to 30	5/8	1/2
40 to 60	3/4	5/8
70 to 100	1	3/4

The lower carbon can be smaller than the upper, as it is subjected to a much lower temperature, and hence is consumed much more slowly. With inclined carbons the lower electrode then interferes less with the light.

The two carbons are usually adjusted in the holders at an angle of 15 to 30 degrees from the perpendicular to the axis of projection, the positive carbon being located slightly behind the negative. This adjustment results in turning the plane of the crater more nearly perpendicular to the axis of projection, and gives the condensing lenses the best opportunity to collect the light. The size of the "spot" should, of course, be no larger than is absolutely required to eliminate dark corners, because all light developed which does not hit the film is wasted.

General Interior Illumination—The effect of brilliant pictures will be materially modified if the interior of the theater is illuminated more than is absolutely required. It is desirable, therefore, to keep the general illumination, especially in the front of the hall, to a minimum consistent with the safety and convenience of the patrons, and to keep all light sources out of the direct line of vision.

Empirical Formula—The factors which have been considered undoubtedly seem quite complicated. In actual practice, however, the selection of the proper size generator or motor-generator set is not nearly as difficult as it appears. A study of the average conditions existing in the majority of theaters has led to the development of an empirical formula, which has proven reasonably accurate for practically any installation wherein the general illumination is not excessive and a plain white canvas screen or its equivalent is used. The formula is:

$$I = \frac{A + 2L}{10}$$

where A = area of picture in square feet.
L = length of throw in feet.
I = direct current in amperes required through the arc.

For installations wherein semi-mirror screens or screens of a similar character are used the constant 10 should be increased to 12.5.

Newspaper Women Serial

"Perils of Our Girl Reporters," an entirely new idea in photoplay series, has just been completed by the Niagara Film Company at its studio in Brooklyn, and will shortly be released through the Buffalo Times Newspaper Syndicate. This series of stories, consisting in all of fifteen episodes of two reels each, are based on melodramatic adventures that have actually happened to girl reporters on big metropolitan newspapers.

The girl reporter roles are played by Zena Keefe, whose splendid work with the Vitagraph and World Film Companies has won for her a great deal of popularity, and Miss Helen Greene, a former Lubin star. Earl Metcalfe has the chief male role throughout the series. Other screen favorites in the cast include William H. Turner, Arthur W. Matthews, Edith Sinclair, Mabel Montgomery, Louis Huntington, Julia R. Hurley, George Arvine, Felix Hainey and George Richards.

Each installment of the story is complete in itself.

They Kept A-Kissing On!

The other day Shirley Mason, the ingenue of McClure Pictures, and George LeGuere, who plays a leading juvenile role for the same company, were preparing for a scene that a young miss would describe as "very confectionery."

The arc lights glared and sputtered; the camera man was busy; the director was shouting instructions to LeGuere to shower kisses upon Shirley.

After the young lady had been almost smothered, a roar of laughter from the onlookers sent the lovers apart.

"What's wrong?" shouted LeGuere, noticing that the camera had stopped.

"Nothing wrong I assure you!" chuckled the director, "except that the camera wasn't working any of the time."

A Tri-Star Ince

For the first time since "The Edge of the Abyss," in which Mary Boland, Frank Mills and Willard Mack were presented, a tri-star combination soon will be offered in a Triangle Kay-Bee play. It will consist of Dorothy Dalton, Enid Markey and Howard Hickman, all three of whom are established stars of the Ince constellation. Production of the vehicle in which they will be presented was begun recently at the Thomas H. Ince Culver City studios under the direction of Raymond B. West. It is a new type of vampire story from the pen of Monte M. Katterjohn of the Ince staff of authors. The supporting cast will consist of Will H. Bray, Gertrude Claire, Roy Laidlaw and George Elwell.

Film Concert at Wanamaker Store

Through an arrangement entered into between John Wanamaker and Thos. H. Ince, producer of "Civilization," a concert of the special "Civilization" musical score composed by Victor L. Schertzinger was given at the Wanamaker store on Broadway, New York, recently. The capacity of the Wanamaker auditorium is tested with 2,000 people, hence it was necessary to give the concert in the rotunda, where the thousands could see and hear from the balconies. Business in the big store was discontinued for a period of one hour.

"Each Pearl a Tear"

Lasky-Paramount Drama Features Fannie Ward. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

IF "Each Pearl a Tear" was as dramatically strong throughout as it is in the first two reels there would be but one verdict. The verdict would be to the effect that "Each Pearl a Tear" rises to the heights of greatness. But in view of the fact that there is a noticeable let-down from the moment the wealthy broker discovers his ward and his secretary in each other's arms, "Each Pearl a Tear" is, while a remarkably good picture, not great.

The story builds up wonderfully to the point mentioned but from there on it goes no further and relies upon its beginning for the appeal and force of the action that follows. In other words the play "pans out." Never-the-less, "Each Pearl a Tear" is a picture of distinct merit. It could not be otherwise with such a start as it gets. The scenario by Beatrice C. De Mille and Leighton Osmun is based on a story by E. Lloyd Sheldon.

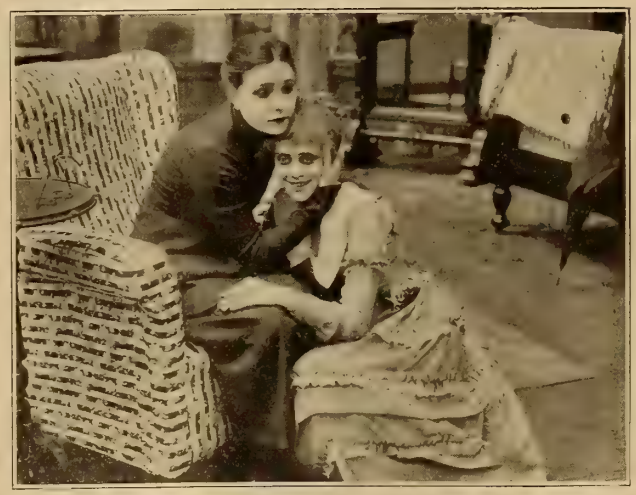
In a role affording her opportunities Fannie Ward appears to marked advantage. She is seen as Diane Winston, whose father has been employed for many years in the offices of Lorillard, a wealthy broker. Diane returns from boarding school a young woman, and her father introduces her to Lorillard, who has not seen her since she was a mere child. Lorillard has just purchased a wonderful string of pearls and these he exhibits to the beautiful Diane, who is not so taken with them as he expected.

The broker's opportunity comes when a society woman requests the use of his sumptuous home for an affair for charity. He complies and adds that he has a little friend whom he would like to take part in the tableaux. On the evening of the affair Lorillard asks Diane if she will honor him by wearing the pearls and she agrees. The girl is the hit of the evening; small wonder, for looking as she did in that tableaux Diane would have been the hit of any evening.

In the excitement of hurrying home because her father is ill she neglects to return the jewels. When she arrives home she discovers her error and her father insists upon returning them to Lorillard at once. Winston succumbs to a paralytic stroke just as he is about to hand Lorillard the pearls. The broker places them in his pocket and sends for Diane. Her father dies from shock, the shock being caused by the broker's statement that he has not received the jewels. From here on the play tells of her attempt to repay Lorillard by working for him. She is in love with his secretary but the latter is discharged. The secretary then determines to make enough money to pay for the pearls by playing the stock market. Lorillard tries to ruin Clark but he is himself ruined, and through the pearls, which Diane has discovered in his safe.

George Melford gave the piece able handling. The society affair is (perhaps) the best, the most convincing ever seen on the screen. The direction all through is splendid, though it does not appear to good advantage once the financial battle starts, but that is the story's fault. Charles Clary is a convincing Lorillard. Many of the actors who interpret "heavy" roles in pictures could learn much and thereby ingratiate themselves to the picture-goers by watching Mr. Clary. The star is delightful in her part. Jack Dean, Paul Weigel and Jane Wolff complete the cast.

"The Social Secretary"



Triangle-Fine Arts Production is of High Quality. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

IN "The Social Secretary" Anita Loos made the girl who must earn her own living in New York an object of sympathy, that is the girl who is good looking, for such a girl has more than her share of this life's trails in finding a position in which she can make a living legitimately. There is no doubt that the girl around whom Miss Loos wrote this melodramatic comedy makes an irresistible bid for the affection and sympathy of the spectator but one cannot be so sure that this fact is traceable to the author's efforts. The medium has a lot to do with it and in this case the medium is Norma Talmadge. At any rate the scenario is a good one and the author cannot be forgotten when praise is being handed out even if one is quite dazzled by the sheer brilliance of the actress.

"The Social Secretary" was directed by John Emerson, which makes it seem a bit like wasting time to go further and say that the very best that was in the play has been brought to the surface. There are some delightful humorous moments and a goodly supply of dramatic ones. The climax of the play is in all particulars a situation very familiar to the patrons of screen plays, but as it is presented there is no detracting sign of wear about it. The interest is carried unflaggingly up to this point and it goes beyond, to the fading scene in fact, and after that comes the very satisfying and wholly pleasing feeling accompanying the impression that your time has been spent in viewing an emphatically good picture.

Miss Talmadge is the stenographer who has learned by experience that men employers are things to be avoided, but on the other hand the board bill cannot be avoided so Mayse starts right in to look for a new position. It so happens that the wealthy Mrs. Du Puyster has a deal of trouble keeping a social secretary. Just when one becomes valuable she announces her intention of marrying. Jimmie Du Puyster has an idea, he adds "must be unattractive to men" to the end of his mother's advertisement for a secretary.

Mayse reads the ad and applies for the position a very different Mayse. Jimmie looks at her and assures his mother that marriage will not take her away. But one night the secretary comes to the aid of Jimmie, who is in distress, he returning from a party at the club quite a little jingled. Now it's Jimmie's turn to play wicked employer, but he surprises Mayse by acting the part of a real gentleman. There are later complications in which Mayse saves the daughter of the house from a disastrous match with a worthless count, and Mrs. Du Puyster loses another secretary via the marriage route, but by the same token she acquires a wonderful girl for a daughter-in-law.

Miss Talmadge is a genuine artist and there could be no plainer evidence of this than her performance as Mayse. We are quite certain that in her enactment of this part we beheld the finest and most effective performance any actress who worked before a camera has shown us. The story and the part both have superiors in previous offerings, but not so Miss Talmadge's interpretation of the role. An adequate supporting cast includes Gladden James, Eric Von Stroheim, Kate Lester, Herbert French and Helen Weir.

"The Big Sister"

Mae Murray Features in Famous Players-Paramount Romance. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

IN "The Big Sister" we are presented with a rather polished version of the little waif who makes her way into the home of an astoundingly wealthy bachelor, wins his heart, separates herself from him because of a blot on the family name, her father being in jail, but before the end is reunited for keeps. With a play of this kind of course there can be nothing startlingly dramatic, but under certain conditions there is a possibility of the play being pleasant and capable of affording an hour's enjoyment.

"Betty, I've been searching the world for you."

"The Big Sister" is the first Famous Players production in which Mae Murray makes her appearance. Miss Murray is the waif and this is another reason for believing that the picture will take well with audiences, for if the waif be pretty and charming, why about half the battle is won. Miss Murray is a charming Betty Norton and if there is anything to be said against the part it is that she does not get enough opportunity to wear the style of gown she sets off—attention is called to the fact that we did not say the "gown which sets her off"—in the closing scene.

The story is credited to William Hurlburt and tells of a daughter of the slums. She has a little brother and makes a brave attempt to earn enough for both herself and Jimmy after her father is sent to jail on a fake charge trumped-up by "Nifty" Mendez, who is very anxious to get her in his toils. Betty escapes from the city and Nifty. On the road Jimmy is struck by Rodney Channing's motor. The injury is not serious but Jimmy must remain in Channing's home for some time.

During the visit love grows up between Channing and Betty, who is now of course very happy. But a newspaper announcement and the author send Nifty again into her life and simultaneously with his entrance comes the exit of happiness. Betty fears to tell her fiance that her father is in jail, so she gives Nifty the pearl necklace lately presented to her and leaves the wonderful home. "As the days pass" however, Channing's cousin finds it necessary to visit a modiste's shop in search of a wedding gown and Channing accompanies the bride-to-be. There he finds Betty, for she is the model who displays the gown.

The settings and locations are quite all that they should be and perhaps a little more. There is beauty in this picture. Harry C. Browne is a very good Rodney Channing. Matty Roubert plays well as Jimmy Norton and Ida Darling contributes much to the picture as Mrs. Spaulding. Florence Flinn is a pleasing Edith, Armand Cortes is a good, albeit repulsive "Nifty" Mendez and Tammany Young justifies the prominence given him as Joe Kelly by a splendid performance. Betty's worthless father is real in the hands of J. Albert Hall.

"The Unwelcome Mother"

A William Fox Drama in Five Reels Released Sept. 18. Reviewed by George W. Graves

JUST why Walter Law's part in this picture should be announced as the featured role is more or less of a conundrum, for, although he does what he has to do with a great deal of zest and displays much brawn in the fight scenes of the opening reels, the part sinks into oblivion later, to make only a brief reappearance at the finish. Furthermore, this role is only indirectly connected with the main theme, which has to do with the enmity shown a wealthy man's second wife by his children, who cherish their deceased mother's memory too much to put up with a successor.

In the role of Elinor, the girl who has such a chilly reception in her husband's home, but who finally wins the children's affections, is Valkyrien, which role we think the spectator will assume to be the featured one. Her characterization, the chief magnet drawing upon our sympathies, is handled in an unforced and generally convincing manner. She performs a few arduous "stunts" on the rocks and in the sea which show the actress' gameness to go through with the requirements of her part. John Webb Dillion, as the wealthy man who first educates the "child of the sea" and then marries her, and Warren Cook as the children's tutor, are well cast. Also the work done by Violet de Biccari (Fox's thirteen-year-old starette) as the eldest sister is deserving of favorable mention. Little Jane and Katherine Lee produce the comedy, composed of childish pranks which are surely true to life.

The direction as a whole is praiseworthy, realistic effect always being a paramount consideration, but it is to be regretted that such little slips as Valkyrien's emerging from the sea clad in dry apparel and other bits of incongruity have to appear. Foremost in the pieces of realism are the thunder-storm scenes in which the illusion is perfectly maintained.

At the outset of the story we are shown some brutality on the high seas, the outcome of which is the bestial captain's murder by his mate (Walter Law) in self-defense. The latter escapes from the ship and swims to land, where he has an exciting romance with "the child of the sea" and gains her promise to marry him on his return, whenever that may be. Then comes the other man into Elinor's life, her marriage to him and her subsequent misery in the home as an "unwelcome mother."

When the wife at last decides she can never make the eldest sister, Ann, love her (the other two children having since succumbed to her lovable nature) she prepares to leave. Then it is that her old seaman lover puts in appearance and claims her. Just as Elinor is in a quandary to know which way to turn, Ann, who has witnessed her step-mother's affection for her father and at last suffered a change of heart comes and begs forgiveness, speaking for her younger sisters in the words,

The eldest sister pleads forgiveness.

"We love you." The seaman relinquishes his claim and leaves the happy family to themselves.

The story is simple, but its humanness and resemblance to the things of actual life give it its power. Excellent production and the uniform good acting of the cast do the rest in preparing an offering which will make an hour's good entertainment in any house.

will be interested in learning of other important events on that tragic night, the meeting of Royce and Lois, for instance.

For the rest, the installment is on a par with those preceding it. There is one spectacular event, Lois' attempted suicide by throwing herself before a locomotive and Gloria's rescue of her, which is presented in an amateurish and unconvincing manner. Mulry, Freneau's entertaining partner, again comes into the story, and Freneau, in shadowy form, comes back to straighten out a few of the tangles his reckless life had caused.

The Story: Gloria (Billie Burke), having interviewed Royce and Judge Freeman in the preceding chapters, in this goes to Lois, her brother's wife, and the cause of much of the trouble. Lois confesses her affair with Freneau and asks Gloria's forgiveness. Gloria demands that she tell the story to David, and Lois, usually resourceful in getting out of difficulties, this time admits herself beaten and throws herself before the oncoming train. Gloria persuades her to reconsider, before the train comes very close, and Gloria gives her the package of letters, promising to keep the secret.

Suspecting, as Judge Freeman had, that Trask acted by David's orders in killing Freneau, Gloria leads her brother to the room in which Trask had been placed. Finding the man gone, she concludes that David had aided his escape, to save himself. Grief-stricken, she gives up her effort to follow the mystery, sure that her own brother is the slayer.

"The Pony Express Rider"

Selig Two-Reel Drama Released September 11. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

A WESTERN drama of the familiar type, with the "thrills" which have become conventional in cowboy pictures, together with some unusual ones put in for good measure, is this latest Tom Mix offering. There are many picture houses in which films of this sort are sure of a welcome, and we can easily imagine certain audiences, especially those in which many young boys are present, moved to excited applause by the hero's riding exploits.

Having this element of entertainment in good measure, the audiences mentioned will not be greatly disturbed over the fact that the story is presented in a confused fashion, and is at times difficult to follow. They will be thrilled by the situation in which an innocent man escapes being hanged when his friends after a swift ride arrive just in time, even though they have seen similar rescues countless times before.

Tom Mix directed the story and played the hero's role. Others in the cast are Victoria Forde, Sid Jordan, Joe Ryan and Pat Chrisman.

The Story: Tom Orbig, an outlaw, arrives as a stranger in a western community, and makes a friend of Ed Wilson, wealthy ranch owner. He wins the ill-will of Jim Blake when the latter is discharged as pony express rider and Tom given his place. Blake and Wilson also are enemies, being rivals for the favor of Grace Miller. Happy Jack, another cowboy, and Wilson have a quarrel at a dance, and the next day when Happy Jack is found dead, Wilson is accused of the crime. Before he died, Jack had written a note, explaining that he had accidentally shot himself, but the note is lost, to be discovered by Tom later.

While Wilson is in jail, his enemies become impatient and decide to take the law into their own hands. They plot to kidnap Wilson, take him into the hills and hang him. Grace overhears their conversation and tells Tom, who organizes a rescue party and saves his comrade's life. Then the note is shown, and Wilson freed, while Blake, for his part in the affair, is put in jail.

"The Woman Always Pays"

Three-Reel Essanay Drama Released September 16. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

MELODRAMATIC in plot and presented in a manner so theatrical that sophisticated audiences may find it humorous, this offering is not up to the usual Essanay standard, in spite of a clever cast of players, good photography and settings. The producers evidently had a laudable desire to give the play a swift and interest-compelling start by plunging the spectator into the heart of the situation, but in doing so, they left many points of the story obscure and for too long a time the viewer strives in vain to grasp the thread of the story.

Besides this lack of clarity, there are in the early scenes of the play a number of "thrills" which miss fire, particularly the scene in which the persecuted heroine, attempting to end her life, is seen at the edge of a very high cliff, then at its base, supposedly having thrown herself over. She is not much damaged by the plunge, evidently, for she picks herself up and walks away, to be overtaken on the road by a party of automobile tourists, who take her to the city where she becomes a "vampire."

The other thrills are the pursuit of the villian by the angry mountaineers, and the kidnapping of a baby by the villain.

The situation which develops in the latter half of the play, when to avenge herself on the villain, the woman plans the ruin of his young daughter, of course not knowing that this girl is her own stolen child, has a dramatic element which will interest some sensation loving audiences. In fact, the play as a whole is suited to theaters whose patrons like excitement and sensation regardless of probabilities and the finer elements of photoplays.

Sydney Ainsworth's acting is especially good as William Gregory, the villain, while Lillian Drew handles her role of The heartless villain is unafraid.

Elsie Lyons, the mountain girl turned adventuress, with her usual skill.

The Story: Elsie Lyons, a daughter of a mountaineer, has a love affair with Gregory, an ambitious young lawyer. Gregory refuses to marry Elsie, and when her baby is born, she will not confess that Gregory is its father. Nevertheless, Gregory rightly fears the wrath of Elsie's father, who plans to trap and kill him. Gregory escapes from the trap and, having stolen the baby, leaves for the city. Elsie's home is burned while she is away, and never suspecting that Gregory has taken the baby, she believes that it perished. After her unsuccessful attempt at suicide, she becomes an adventuress in the city.

Years later, when Gregory is a prominent attorney, he meets Elsie, now notorious. She learns that he has a young daughter and plans to injure him through this girl. After plotting the girl's ruin, she goes to Gregory's home to tell him of her revenge. Then he explains that the daughter is the child she thought dead. He reaches Elsie's apartment in time to save his daughter, but when he returns home, he finds that Elsie has killed herself.

Richard Bennett in American Five-Reeler Released September 11. Reviewed by G. Harris

IN THIS Mutual feature picture, Richard Bennett gives a very amusing, very delightful character sketch, with a fineness, a skill too infrequently found in screen comedies. There is excellent humor throughout of the kind that appeals to all classes because of its many human touches. And while Bennett in the leading role of the good hearted ne'er-do-well could carry the interest of the feature, fortunately the play also shows able directing, for which George L. Sargent is responsible, and has clever situations and captions which add their share to the humor. The supporting cast of players is a worthy one.

Aaron Hoffman, who wrote "A Million for Mary" for the first screen appearance of Kolb and Dill, is also the author of this sketch. In this play he shows the same happy selection of humorous but realistic situations. This time a cheap boarding house furnishes many of the settings. The hero is a very likeable happy-go-lucky chap without a trace of ambition. He falls in love with a servant girl at his boarding house, and when he begins to save for their marriage, he becomes so unkempt in appearance that he is the object of much ridicule in his office.

Rhea Mitchell plays very well the role of his sweetheart. Alfred Hollingsworth and Charles Newton have important character parts. Adrienne Morrison and George Periolat also are clever in their roles. Another player not to be overlooked is the dog, Teddy.

The Story: John Slocum is an unimportant clerk in an office who had begun work at fifteen dollars a week and is now getting eight. However, neither business nor finance worries him. When he falls in love with Mary, a servant at his boarding house both begin to save from their meager wages. John's Uncle Henry is very ambitious for his nephew, and wishes him to marry Bess, once John's playmate, now a successful picture actress. But John is satisfied with present conditions and Mary. And Bess ridicules the shiftless John.

Then Mary finds a lottery ticket which wins a sable overcoat. John wears the fine garment, and its influence on him is the theme of the story. For it arouses his ambition. He begins to associate with those who wear sable. His appearance in other respects improves to equal the style of his coat. At last, through his new associations, he receives a tip on the stock market, risks the money saved for his marriage, and wins a fortune. Then, after a few complications when Bess changes her mind and decides to win John and his fortune, he and Mary are married.

"The Velvet Paw"

World Drama With Gail Kane and House Peters. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS offering, which is a very entertaining one, has several elements of appeal. One is the leading feminine character, beautifully played by Gail Kane. This is an adventuress role, but far removed from the unpleasant vampire type. Mary Dexter is a clever woman lobbyist who uses feminine wiles to gain her points because she wishes to win the game she has begun. She is the tool of a band of corrupt politicians, but merely because they recognized her talent and were shrewd enough to win her sympathy. Becoming thus a clearly told narrative of a battle of wits, the picture is interesting, refreshing and wholesome.

House Peters is excellently cast as the very likeable young congressman from Indiana, who follows out his own ideas of right and wrong without being priggish. His sincere love for the interesting Mrs. Dexter and his implicit trust in her are a pleasing contrast to the maudlin sentiment of the other congressman, Drake, who wrecked his career to please Mrs. Dexter, and who won slight sympathy from her or from the spectator.

Its political theme and the local color of the nation's capitol form another attraction. Well photographed views of Washington and the interior of its important buildings, views of sessions of the House of Representatives, as well as glimpses of many noted personages will arouse enthusiasm among a great many audiences who will appreciate what care the director, Maurice Tourneur, has given in order to present a political drama realistic in settings.

Whether the spirit of graft is as prevalent among lawmakers as this picture would suggest, those who know more of politics will have to answer. But the story does not impress one as of the "muck-raking" type, and the interest lies more in the individual characters than in the political situations; therefore one rather forgets to be worried about the moral issue.

Advertised as a political drama in which a clever and very attractive woman lobbyist is the leading character, an exhibitor need have little fear of this play disappointing. While the story is not remarkable in itself, still it holds the interest and entertains. While there may be questions which arise in one's mind regarding some of Mrs. Dexter's actions, Gail Kane makes her so charming that one is never bored with her.

The play is from a story by Paul West, scenarioized by Gardner Hunting. John V. de Brock is responsible for the photography.

The Story: Philip Dexter comes to Washington to win political aid for his invention. He is unsuccessful and commits suicide. His wife had won the friendship of Senator Barring, when she sought his aid for her husband, and had the inventor waited a bit longer, would have aided him.

Left alone and embittered at the treatment her husband had received, Mrs. Dexter becomes a lobbyist for Barring and his interests, although Barring is a grafter. One of her victims is Drake, who ruins his career when he votes to please her. Robert Moorehead is elected in Drake's place, and Barring and Mrs. Dexter plan to influence him also. Moorehead falls in love with Mrs. Dexter, but sticks to his own principles. At last she abandons her scheme of winning him politically, for she has fallen in love with him and does not wish to injure him.

For a dramatic finish, following a scene in which Moorehead by his speech defeats Barring's plans, Drake, the outcast, shoots and slightly wounds Mrs. Dexter, who was in the audience listening to the speech, then he falls over a balcony and is killed. Barring, however, bears neither Moorehead nor Mrs. Dexter ill will and is glad of their happiness, warning Moorehead, though, that he will some day defeat him.

In addition to the featured players, Ned Burton as Barring and Frank Goldsmith as Drake deserve commendation for good acting.

"Phantom Fortunes"

Barney Bernard in V. L. S. E. Blue Ribbon Feature. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

"PHANTOM FORTUNES," in which Barney Bernard, the bright particular star of the "Potash and Perlmutter" plays which had two immensely successful seasons on Broadway makes his initial bow to motion picture audiences, is described as a commercial comedy and it has to do with the business trials and tribulations of a Jewish clothing manufacturer who faces ruin in his attempt to land some war orders.

The story is well constructed and was written by Samuel Tauber. Paul Scardon gave the story a splendid production. But for all its good production and clever characterization by Mr. Bernard, "Phantom Fortunes" is only mildly amusing. It has a look about it that reminds one of champagne that has ceased to bubble. However, there are many pictures being offered that have far less entertainment value than "Phantom Fortunes."

If "Phantom Fortunes" does not make you laugh it is well worth the viewing if only for the excellent characterization of Mr. Bernard and the reality and faithfulness of its scenes. Types, settings and the whole spirit of the picture are just about as convincing as anything on the screen could be and in this respect the picture is remarkable, to say the least.

The play is built around one Zalmon Pinsker. We are given many evidences of his sympathy and whole-souled charity. He is the friend of the person is need. A coterie of crooks set up offices in a hotel and represent themselves as buyers for the allied countries. Through a young man, who is honest enough in his determination to earn a living, Pinsker negotiates with these crooks for a contract to supply army coats.

He presents the leader of the band with a fine suit of clothes and the cigars held for those select people known as "special customers." The supposed buyers ask Pinsker to leave his samples at their office for approval. When they have a good-sized stock of merchandise the crooks call in a dealer and sell him the lot. But this venture is not successful. The hotel detective arrests the lot of them before they can get the goods out of the place. Pinsker is in a terrible fix, for he has refused all orders to be prepared to fill the big contract, but there is a way out of every difficulty and young Deering discovers it in this case. They have material on hand and make a drive to capture the legitimate orders for home consumption, so all ends happily.

There is present the love interest and also a villain. The latter attribute is all of that for the reason that Lestern Bernard plays the part so well. Mrs. Moscowitz, James Morrison, Adele DeGarde, Edward Elkas and Mary Maurice are praiseworthy members of the supporting cast.

"The Dawn Makers"

William S. Hart as Half Breed Indian in Triangle-Ince. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

ON September 24 the latest William S. Hart offering will be released. "The Dawn Maker" is a character study by C. Gardner Sullivan, whose trained adjectives do a yeoman's service in the subtitles illuminating the at times pallid action of this mildly interesting play. Mr. Sullivan can develop a character and in "The Dawn Maker" he uses a form which he has found to be successful in former plays, especially those he executed for Mr. Hart to star in. There is one drawback to this. And that is the familiarity which grows up between the frequent picturegoer and the workings of the mind of these screen characters. One begins to feel instinctively what Mr. Hart as Joe Elk, or somebody else, is going to do next.

Lo, the poor half-breed, is the spirit of the play. Joe Elk, who springs from a line of Cree chiefs on his mother's side and a Scotch lineage on the other, is really a pathetic persons. He realizes the superiority of the white to the red race, yet with all his conscientious desire to bring his red brothers up to the standards of the white he realizes the hopelessness of such an ambition for in him is lacking the white man's courage in accomplishing his noble purpose.

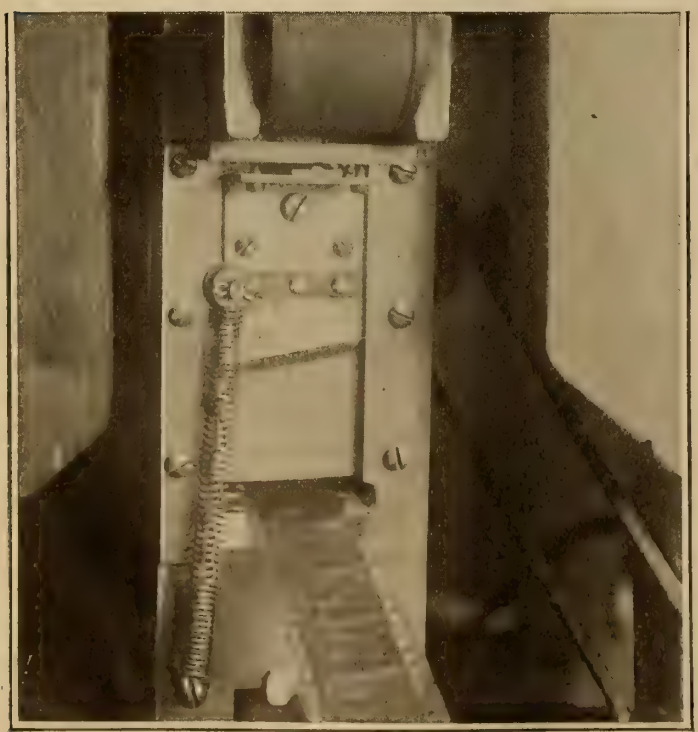
Joe takes a trip to Montreal and there is fired with a desire to return to the Crees and erect a school for the children of the tribe. In attempting to accomplish such a purpose Joe goes down to defeat before the obstacles which arise and he finds himself in disfavor with the Indians. His hope of marrying a white girl is shattered, and not only that, but Joe is reproached for ever dreaming of such a thing. In the end he dies of hunger that the young white couple may live and propagate a people capable of giving this world the progress one of his native limitations could never rise to.

The production is good considering the disadvantages under which the director worked. The story calls for a terriffic blizzard, but the best a trip that was perhaps long, arduous and expensive could supply was some locations pretty in themselves but having only a scant blanketing of snow. The "snow stuff" is a bit anaemic. In the direction of the action, however, the producer did well but even here he encountered impediments and these were furnished by the scenario itself. "The Dawn Maker" has a beginning to be sure, but in truth its middle and end are very similar. The progress of the play must be found through the agency of a microscope if it is to be found.

Mr. Hart has a vast following and to have acquired such great popularity as he enjoys requires real ability. We, personally, find this actor very much the same in every picture. There are a number of close-ups in "The Dawn Maker" and from where we sat it looked as though one could have been used for the other and no one would be the wiser. One thing which must be admitted is that Mr. Hart plays this role with that fine sincercity which characterizes all his work. In the supporting cast one finds the names of Blanche White, William Desmond, J. Frank Burke and Joe Goodboy.

Bryant Washburn and Marguerite Clayton have been with Essanay for five and four years, respectively, yet not until "The Prince of Graustark" is released will they have appeared in a feature picture together. During the past few months they were cast for the first time together in several three-act dramas. They made such ideal opposites that they were immediately cast for the film version of George Barr McCutcheon's famous sequel to "Graustark." The play will shortly be offered in five acts by Essanay.

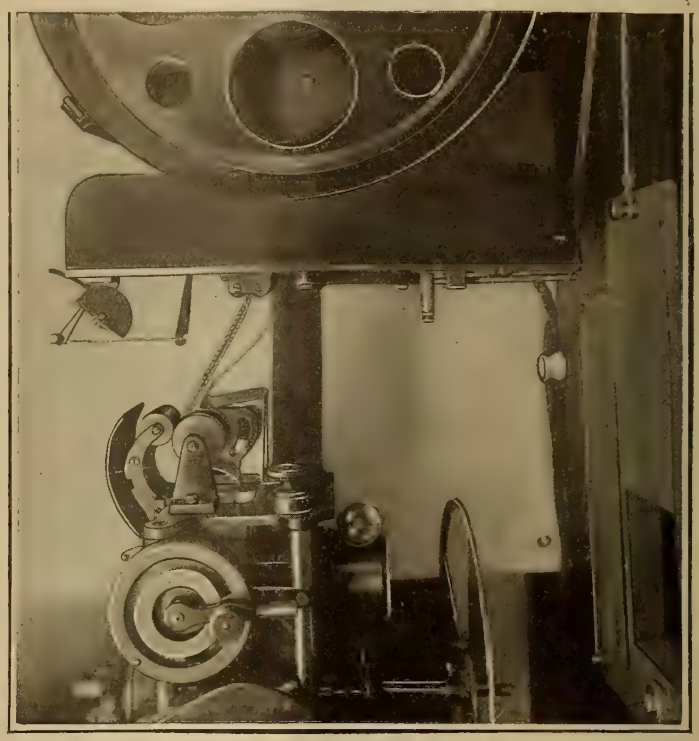
CUTS OFF FIRES



Automatic Control System that Prevents Fire and Panic From Burning Film—String and Knife Do Trick.

Here is a new and apparently efficient invention to prevent theater fires from the burning of a film. It is the invention of a young mechanical engineer, Anton Szeliga, of New York.

Experts, insurance men and others are agreed that as a safety device this invention is of prime importance.



The new apparatus prevents films in projecting machines from catching fire or exploding, both of which, up to the present time, have been relatively frequent occurrences and have often resulted in injury and even death to persons, and extensive destruction of property. The device of Mr. Szeliga, according to the Scientific American, is a simple electrical contrivance that may be fitted at a slight cost to any make of projecting machine.

Two sets of knives, housed at the openings of the film magazines, controlled by powerful springs and normally held in position by electro-magnets, are instantly released in case the film catches fire, cutting the film at the entrance to the magazines and absolutely sealing the latter. In this manner the fire is prevented from reaching the several hundred feet or more of film contained in the upper and lower magazines or retorts. Simultaneously, by means of an automatic control, the shutters in the fireproof booth front are dropped, the lights in the auditorium are turned on, a signal is flashed to the conductor of the orchestra to begin playing music designed to preclude any apprehension on the part of the audience, and the motor of the projecting machine is stopped. The same system of automatic control also extinguishes instantly the carbon arc in the machine. When the conflagration has burnt itself out, the net result is only about two feet of film and a few minutes of time lost in the exhibiting of the picture.

One of the knives which cut the burning film in two places. With the burning of the piece of string shown in the companion view, two guillotine-like knives are released, cutting the burning strip away from the balance of the film and protecting the latter.

It is claimed that not a single person among the audience is aware of the fact that the film caught fire. The extinguishing of the flame is only a matter of a second or two. The turning on of the lights in the house and the sudden start of the orchestra detract all attention from the slight trouble at the projecting machine; hence, all danger of panic or catastrophe is avoided.

Mechanism for protecting a motion picture theater against film fire. A piece of string, placed above the film mechanism, burns at the first flash of the film, releasing knives which cut the burning strip out of the balance of the film, and closing the apertures in the operating booth.

"Wet" and "Dry" Film

The "wet" and "dry" question figures in the two-reel Triangle comedy, "The Deadly Glass of Beer," with Tully Marshall, Jack Brammall and Teddy Sampson in the cast.

"The Deadly Glass of Beer" is a rollicking farce and deals with the adventures of a young chap who is to fall heir to a fortune provided he does not drink beer before he reaches his majority. How a villainous cousin, who is next in line for the fortune, and a beautiful adventuress, almost cause our hero to fall off the water wagon, provides a series of mirth provoking situations in the production. The plans of the wicked cousin and the heartless adventuress are foiled by Teddy Sampson, who as an "orphan Annie" type, puts a stop to the villainy, saves the fortune, and incidentally wins the man of her choice for a life mate.

Like Races? Here's One

More than two thousand extra people were engaged by Director George Siegmann in filming the race track scenes in the Triangle-Fine Arts feature, "The Best Bet," in which Dorothy Gish is featured.

Six race horses and jockeys from the Tia Juana race tracks were secured for the scenes which were staged at Exposition Park, Los Angeles. The scene at the track where four jockeys try to pocket the favorite horse and prevent it from winning the race is one of the most spectacular scenes of its kind ever filmed. In one of the scenes, six horses are shown at full speed. The camera was mounted on an automobile which was speeded up to keep just a few feet in advance of the oncoming horses which were traveling at full speed. One of the horses fell, throwing the rider, but luckily neither the animal nor the rider were injured.

Strong Ince Play

Thomas H Ince never has presented a stronger aggregation of talent in one production, it is said, than that which is offered in support of Bessie Barriscale and Charles Ray, the co-stars in "Home," the Triangle comedy-drama by C. Gardner Sullivan. The cast includes Clara Williams, Louise Glaum, George Fisher, Joseph J. Dowling, Agnes Herring and Thomas S. Guise.

Though, perhaps, none the better known, Miss Glaum has appeared in more plays than has Miss Williams. She made her initial Triangle appearance in "The Iron Strain," and followed with "Matrimony," "D'Artagnan," "Hell's Hinges," "The Aryan" and "Honor Thy Name!" In "The Wolf Woman" she is co-starred with Charles Ray. Her role in "Home" is again that of the enchantress.

Exterior scenes for "The Chaperon," the next five-act Essanay feature with Edna Mayo and Eugene O'Brien, will be taken at Washington Island off the shore of the upper peninsula of Michigan.

Lewis S. Stone, stage star who recently completed "According to the Code" in five acts for Essanay, is about to appear on Broadway in a new production entitled "The Double Cure."

Catalogue of Children's Films

H. J. Shepard, manager of the New England Universal exchange, received so many requests for both educational and entertaining pictures suitable for children that he conceived the idea of arranging subjects for the exhibitor so that he could book a whole program especially adapted for matinees for the little folks. Through the medium of the social welfare department of this exchange not only pictures covering educational, vocational and scientific fields, but also "better pictures for the kiddies," will be supplied weekly so that the demand for all types of pictures can be satisfied. The department has undertaken to classify, catalogue, print and arrange these various subjects into programs and they are now available for clubs, societies, institutions, churches and theaters all over the New England district.

The Lights at Sea in Pictures

Paramount Pictographs, the "magazine-on-the-screen," in one of its forthcoming releases will show the workings of a lighthouse. These pictures show the prisms and the revolving light, together with the little gas mantle which sends forth the signal and the powerful beam of light taken at night. It also shows the barren coast and the little plot of ground upon which the lighthouse keeper lives, and where on the shore beyond is a wreck which occurred prior to the establishment of the lighthouse.

Teddy Sampson, who scored a hit as the Japanese wife in the picturization of John Luther Long's "Madam Butterfly," and featured with Helen Ware in "Cross Currents," has been specially engaged to play opposite Tully Marshall in a Triangle Komedy, the temporary title of which is "The Deadly Glass of Beer." The story treats its chief characters in an unique manner and is a semi-satire on a wager that one of the principal players would not drink a glass of beer until he had reached a certain age.

Anita Loos conceived the scenario and Tod Browning is actively engaged in the direction of same. Jack Brammall and Elmo Lincoln are prominent members of the supporting cast.

The Rolin Company has moved and is now getting settled at its new home on the top of the hill overlooking Los Angeles.

No, this isn't a family reunion. It's Edward Jose directing Pearl White in a new Pathe drama.

SIDNEY DREW, the Metro star, celebrated his fifty-second birthday on August 28. A holiday was given to all the members of his company of Metro-Rolfe players, and a dinner at the Hotel Plaza followed by a theater party was given to the members of the families on both sides. The little party included S. Rankin Drew, son of Mr. Drew and a Vitagraph director; Hartley McVey and Rose McVey, brother and sister of Mrs. Drew, and Catherine Breen. The theater party was held at the Empire Theater, home of the famous Drew and Barrymore families, so to speak.

Although he is seventy-four years old, F. H. Fox, father of Edwin Carewe of the Metro-Rolfe Company, is going to appear in pictures, and will begin work just as soon as a suitable part is found for him in support of Mabel Taliaferro. Mr. Fox is a prominent attorney in Corpus Christi, Texas, and has been with his son and Miss Taliaferro on the Maine coast where they are producing "The Dawn of Love."

A play within a play is the innovation interpolated in "The Wheel of Justice," the Metro play in which Emily Stevens is starred and Frank Mills featured. Miss Stevens plays the part of a Broadway star who is appearing in Sardou's great drama, "La Tosca," and presents the most important scenes from that production.

Work begins this week on "The Brand of Cowardice," a Metro play in five acts dealing with conditions in Mexico and on the Mexican border at the present time. Lionel Barrymore is the star of the production, which John W. Noble will direct. Clara Whipple is Mr. Barrymore's leading feminine support in the new photoplay and John Davidson has been engaged for an important part.

Lincoln Producing Company, New York City. To conduct theatrical and motion picture enterprises. Capital $50,000. Directors, James Washington Drane, Wilson P. Marchbank and Vincent C. King.

Popular Cinema Exchange, Inc., Buffalo. To deal in motion picture films and conduct an agency. Capital $6,000. Directors, John M. Sitterly, Harry Marsey and Joseph A. Schuchert.

The Wallack's Theater Company of New York City, having a capital of $1,000, has filed a certificate of dissolution with the Secretary of State.

Twenty-Six Reels a Week

Starting with the week of September 18 the Universal program will be made up of 19 regular program reels, including the weekly. There will be a Red Feather and a serial in addition. In other words the program will be 26 reels per week, including a Red Feather, a serial episode and the animated weekly.

In addition to the 26 reels the Universal will use reissues of five reels; one comedy and four dramas, which will be considered in addition to the program and which can be ordered by the exchanges needing more than 26 reels per week.

Four features will be included on the program of September 11. The Red Feather release is entitled "The Whirlpool of Destiny," a five-reel spectacle drama in which Flora Parker De Haven will be featured. The second feature of the week will be Carter De Haven in "Hired and Fired," a two-reel comedy episode of the "Timothy Dobbs—That's Me" series. "The Caravan," an unusually fine two-reel Egyptian drama with a wealth of the color of the period, will be released in the same week with Claire MacDowell and Lena Baskette featured. The feature of the week, however, will be the fifth two-reel episode of "Liberty," in which Marie Walcamp, Eddie Polo and Jack Holt will be featured.

Actress Joins Condon Exchange

Adelaide Woods, who has been long and favorably known as a photoplay actress of distinction, has laid aside the make-up box for an executive connection with The Mable Condon Exchange. Miss Woods will officiate at the Los Angeles branch of the concern, assisting Ernest Shipman in the handling of photo play scripts for the California colony of producers. Mr. Shipman is at present in New York on a business trip.

Adelaide Woods, of the Mabel Condon Exchange.

McMackin Busy on Clam Farm

Archer McMackin, formerly director of the American Beauty Comedies at Santa Barbara, is in New York after a wild and adventuresome auto trip from the west coast. At present he is concluding his summer vacation on Long Island Sound, stocking up with a bunch of five reel feature scenarios, which he is going to put on this winter. Mac drives over to the big town about once a week but he says he is so busy with his clam farm that he can't get around much.

The latest acquisition to the forces of the Metro-Yorke Hollywood studio is Charles P. Stallings, who will act in the capacity of assistant to Henry Otto, director of the Harold Lockwood-May Allison feature productions.

Before joining the Yorke studio, Stallings was affiliated with the American Company in Santa Barbara, during the time Harold Lockwood, May Allison and Henry Otto were making Mutual pictures. He then joined the Morosco studio in Los Angeles, as technical director, where he remained until engaged by the Yorke studio.

New Ivan Production

"Her Surrender" having been completed, the Ivan Film Productions are already preparing for the next production, to be released in October.

The new play, which will be put into work almost immediately, is based on an original story especially conceived for the screen by L. V. Jefferson, one of our foremost dramatists. Because of the difficulty of its treatment and the wonderful possibilities it affords both the caste and the director, the scenario department of the Ivan Company has concentrated its entire efforts since last June to make the working script worthy of treatment by a master director. "The Sex Lure" is its title.

New Laskys

Under the direction of James Young, Marie Doro, Lasky Star who recently appeared in Paramount theaters in the production, "Common Ground," has begun an elaborate picturization of "The Lash," by Paul West. This will be Miss Doro's third Lasky picture.

Blanche Sweet will be seen in September in the Jesse L. Lasky production of "The Storm," a Paramount drama written especially for her by Leighton Osmun, and produced by Frank Reicher.

Miss Sweet is surrounded by a cast of unusual excellence, including such well known artists as Theodore Roberts and Thomas Meighan.

Vivian Martin Starts New One

Vivian Martin, who has just made her debut on the Paramount program in the Oliver Morosco photoplay, "The Stronger Love," has commenced activities on a new vehicle to be released under the Pallas brand. "The Right Direction," a touching drama by Julia Crawford Ivers is the title of the latest Vivian Martin subject in which the star appears as a waif of the tenements.

New Universalers

Universal has engaged the following players at Universal City: Olive Hoffman, to play roles under Director Webber; Raymond Whittaker, to take character parts under Director M. K. Wilson; A. M. Fralich, to play juvenile roles under Director Dillon; John George, to play hunchback parts in general stock; H. M. Holden and George Dayton to play characters under Director Mong, and Charles Cummings to play leads under Allen Holubar's direction.

Power Returns to New York

Nicholas Power, inventor of Power's Cameragraph and president of the Nicholas Power Company, returned to New York September 1 from Lake Bomoseen, Vermont, where he has been spending the summer at his country home. Mr. Power is highly pleased with the business done in his absence, and in spite of the unusual conditions caused by the paralysis epidemic, etc., believes that the motion picture industry will enjoy a good fall and winter business.

Eagle is Busy

Renewed activity at the Eagle City, Florida, studios of the Eagle Film Manufacturing and Producing Company of Chicago has followed the arrangement whereby the Unity Sales Corporation has contracted for the distribution of the Eagle films and the work of making the "Grogan's Alley" series will shortly be undertaken. For the past few weeks the entire energies of the organization have been directed toward the completion of the earlier pictures of the "Tweedledum" series.

The finishing touches have been added to the Triangle-Fine Arts production, "The Rummy," featuring Wilfred Lucas and directed by Paul Powell.

"The Rummy" is a realistic story of newspaper life. Both Lucas and Director Powell are old newspaper men and no opportunity was overlooked to make this one of the most graphic newspaper feature pictures as yet shown on the Triangle program.

Studio on Trolley Car

One of the most unusual studios on record was that used by the Rolin Company while making a "Luke" comedy for Pathe. The entire picture was staged on a trolley car which for most of the time was in motion. The cameras were set up between the seats and in spite of the handicaps the photography is excellent. "Snub" Pollard and Harold Lloyd, the well known comedians, acted as motorman and conductor respectively.

"Won't you come and have a ride, too?" says Ruth Stonehouse from the midst of this perambulating Universal beauty parlor. "I think you can squeeze on somewhere." And after considering the scenery with an aesthetic eye we conclude that if we were on the spot we would accept the invitation without regrets. Now wouldn't you?

ATLANTIC COAST NOTES

Alice Brady is now working in two World productions to be released early in the fall, "The Gilded Cage," and "A Woman Alone." While spending her vacation in Connecticut Miss Brady is reading play manuscripts, for she expects to return to the speaking stage in December or January.

In her next World play, "Should She Have Told?" Ethel Clayton appears as a girl of the cabarets who reforms and marries a young minister.

Baroness Dorothy van Raven, who appears in Metro pictures, sends one-fourth of her salary to Holland each month for the care of a Belgian baby.

Deep-sea fishing engaged the attention of Mabel Taliaferro during her sojourn on the Maine coast for the purpose of filming her new Metro-Rolfe play, "The Light of Love."

Robert Warwick will be seen soon in a World film production of Thomas W. Lawson's story of the stock exchange, "Friday the 13th." Gerda Holmes has the leading feminine role.

Jeanne Eagels, who was recently signed by the Thanhouser Company, will appear in a play written by Philip Lonergan, "The World and the Woman." Eugene Moore is directing. The picture will be released through Pathe.

Muriel Ostriche began her picture career as an extra when fourteen years of age. Her first engagement was with the Eclair Film Company. She was later with Thanhouser and Vitagraph. She is now with the World Film Corporation, her last appearance being in "Sally in Our Alley."

"In Life's Shadows," the new Metro-Columbia photoplay starring William Nigh and Irene Howley, Miss Howley appears in the character of a simple village girl, a distinct contrast to the vanpire role she played in "The Purple Lady," with Ralph Herz.

Beulah Livingston, until recently associated with Thomas H. Ince as general publicity representative of "Civilization," is now representing Valentine Grant and Sydney Olcott of Famous Players. Miss Livingston will also represent the motion picture interests of Daniel Mayer-Carlton, Inc., and will make her headquarters at their offices in the Times building.

T. Hayes Hunter, who is director general of "The Crimson Stain Mystery," the sixteen-episode photoplay presented by the Consolidated Film Corporation, is an alumnus of the University of Pennsylvania and was stroke oar in the famous Varsity crew of 1899. Mr. Hunter was stage director under David Belasco for three years. On the legitimate stage, he directed "The Sign of the Rose," "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," and other productions in which Cohan and Harris, Klaw and Erlanger and David Belasco were interested.

Eve Unsell is at work in the famous Players-Lasky scenario department in New York on a seven-reel adaptation for Mary Pickford.

Frances Nelson and Arthur Ashley, last seen together in the World play, "What Happened at 22," will again co-star in the film adaptation of the famous Shubert Broadway success, "The Revolt."

Of the five pictures in which Virginia Pearson has acted for William Fox, four were made under the direction of Kenean Buel. These were "Blazing Love," "Daredevil Kate," "Hypocrisy," and a new film to be released soon.

Having completed his final picture for the Paragon Company, starring Lew Fields, Director Frank Crane is taking his first vacation in three years and is making a tour of the Adirondacks.

The first episode in Gaumont's Mutual series, "Fantomas," is called "The Phantom Crook." It will be released in three reels September 7, and will be followed the next week by "The Man in Black."

So popular were the pictures taken by the Gaumont Company of the great New York explosion for the Mutual Weekly that they were held over the second week at the Rialto, New York's latest motion picture theater.

A number of circus freaks have been leased for "The Rainbow Princess," the next Famous Players-Paramount picture starring Ann Pennington, among them one of the longest thin men that ever smelled sawdust. All efforts to induce little Miss Pennington, who is four feet ten inches in height, to pose with the tall one have been in vain.

Jane and Katherine Lee have important roles in the Fox play, "The Unwelcome Mother." Jane, in this picture starring Baroness von Dewitz, has the role of a boy. Another child actress prominent in the cast is thirteen-year-old Violet Debiccari, who made her debut in Fox pictures in "Under Two Flags."

Leslie Elton, the well-known cartoonist, has joined the forces at the Bray studio and will contribute his comedy to the Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoons, released by the Paramount Pictures Corporation.

Supplemental scenes of light effects have brought the actual time spent before the camera in the Bushman and Bayne screen production of "Romeo and Juliet" up to thirteen weeks. Cameraman Rudolph Burquist is said to have secured some exquisite pictures of dawn, sunrise and night effects, which add materially to the pictorial value of the great production.

The film version of "War Brides," Marion Craig Wentworth's play in which Alla Nazimova is working under the direction of Herbert Brenon, will include many incidents which were only suggested in the original manuscript, such as the love story between the tragic woman around whom the play centers, and her young husband.

MARY MILES' MAN

Alan Forrest, who is playing opposite the little "American" star, Mary Miles Minter, is a Brooklyn boy, educated at the University School of Cleveland.

Forrest had little difficulty in obtaining his first stock engagement in Cleveland, owing to his good looks and earnestness of purpose. For some years after this start he played with stock companies and in vaudeville, and so arrived on the Pacific Coast.

Alan Forrest, American, who plays opposite Mary Miles Minter.

During a lull in engagements he met Harry Matthews, who was producing fairy stories. Matthews persuaded Alan to try his luck at the picture game, playing opposite Elsie Albert, and it was now apparent that he had a strong "screen presence" and "registered" perfectly. This decided his future career and after six months with Matthews he joined the Universal Company, staying with them for two years.

Followed a prominent part in the Kolb & Dill feature, "Glory," and a six months' engagement playing leads with the Lubin concern. Then came an offer from the American, where he has played opposite Helene Rosson and Miss Minter.

Alan Forrest is tall, has dark eyes and hair and dresses to the dot. He is a general favorite.

Margaret Anglin, who will appear both in pictures and on the speaking stage during the coming season, has returned to New York from her summer home at Wood's Hole, Mass. She has selected Maxim Gorky's play, "The Chosen People," for her first screen appearance. Arthur Voegtlin and Livingston Platt are already at work on the details and costumes of the picture, which will be elaborate. On the speaking stage, Miss Anglin will appear in a new play by William Somerset Maugham, "Caroline," under the direction of the Charles Frohman Company.

Theda Bara is mourning the death of "Czar Nicholas," her Russian wolfhound, who has appeared with her in many picture plays.

After appearing before the camera at the Pallas-Morosco studio in Los Angeles for the past three months, Lenore Ulrich has returned to New York, where she will appear on the speaking stage.

Ed V. Giroux has resigned his position of general representative for Thomas Dixon in the exploitation of "The Fall of a Nation." He will probably become allied with a noted theatrical manager. This is in line with his former work, for he left the employ of John Cort to go with Mr. Dixon.

Pathe Freres of London has started the formation of a film library. All films of historical interest are carefully stored and preserved with a view of compiling a living record of the events of the day.

Camille Duryea, who has been appearing before the camera at Wilkes-Barre, Pa., has returned to New York for a rest.

Fritz Liebler, for many years a leading man with Julia Marlowe, Robert Mantell and Ben Greet, has joined the William Fox players, and is playing the role of an Indian chief's son in the picture Bertram Bracken is directing.

The Ivan Film Productions, Inc., has secured a winter studio at Los Angeles.

Theodore Marston, formerly of the Vitagraph Company, has been engaged by the McClure Publications to produce the fourth release of the new concern. Charlotte Walker is the star of this picture, which is called "Sloth."

PACIFIC COAST NOTES

Kolb and Dill have finished the comedy, "Bluff," written by Aaron Hoffman, and are working in "A Peck O'Pickles," which was put into scenario form by Al Santell from the play by Frank Stammers, which was played by Kolb and Dill for a long time on the speaking stage. Tom Heffron is directing. Alan Forrest, May Cloy and Miss Clark have important roles.

Richard Stanton has begun the directing of his second Fox feature. With Alan Hale and Gretchen Hartman as his stars, he left for El Paso, Texas, to film exteriors. The story, a timely one, deals with border difficulties.

A new company, backed by local capital, has been organized in Redlands, Cal. M. B. Dudley is the manager of the new concern, which will produce five reel features and short comedies.

Myrtle Stedman is in search of a story for her next picture appearance. She has been reading on an average one book every two days, but as yet has found no novel which exactly suits the demands.

Grace Wilcox, late of the Los Angeles Tribune, has been engaged to write special publicity articles for Triangle pictures, especially for Keystone comedies.

Helen Gibson of Kalem made her professional debut as a dare-devil rider with Miller Brothers 101 Ranch show.

Eugenie Besserer has been cast for the role of "Lady Rens" in the Selig production of "The Garden of Allah."

Rupert Julian and Ella Hall are costars in a five reel feature, "We Are French," their first co-starring vehicle since "Jewel."

De Wolf Hopper has fulfilled his one-year contract with the Fine Arts Company and has left for New York by automobile.

Eddie Morrisey has returned to Los Angeles after having completed his work with Herbert Brenon in producing "The Daughter of the Gods" at Jamaica. Previous to joining Mr. Brenon, he was a Biograph director.

Both Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley will act with Mary MacLaren in "Idle Wives," the Bluebird feature. Miss Weber prepared the scenario from James Oppenheim's well-known book of the same title. Roy Fernandez, winner of the Universal "handsome man" contest will be introduced to the screen in this picture.

The first Fox comedy has been completed. It is a burlesque of the original Theda Bara vampire picture, "A Fool There Was." Charles Parrot directed it. Carmen Phillips and Hank Mann have the leading roles.

W. Christy Cabanne has left Los Angeles and is motoring to New York City, where he will soon begin work on the Francis Bushman-Beverly Bayne serial for the Metro company.

Jack Jasper has been appointed general business manager of the Horsley studio.

Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Company, has arrived at Universal City. This is his first visit to the producing plant since last December.

George Bronson-Howard, the novelist, has signed a contract to join the producing staff of the Universal Company. He will be assisted by Luther Reed, formerly a New York newspaper man, recently a scenario writer with Lasky. Their first work will probably be Mr. Howard's "Yorke Norroy" stories which appeared some years ago in The Popular Magazine and later in book form.

Rhea Mitchell, who has appeared in all of the Richard Bennett features made at the American studios to date, will change to Edward Sloman's company to take a specially written part in the new "Diamond From the Sky" serial to be started at once.

While her director, Gilbert Hamilton, is in New York, Dorothea Farley of the Century Company, recently featured in "Inherited Passions," is preparing the scenario for another big feature, and is also writing comedies.

William Garwood is directing "A Barbar Shop Sport," at Universal City, a light, satirical comedy featuring Lois Wilson and George Chesebro.

George Sargent, who directed "The Secret of the Submarine," has been presented with a miniature submarine by a sailor who made it as a token of the enjoyment he derived from the serial. Sargent is having a carved stand made for the model, which he treasures highly.

Marguerite Fischer and her director, Harry Pollard, have arrived at the American studios, where Mr. Pollard will produce the Pollard Picture Plays, starring Miss Fischer. Both became well known when they directed and acted in the "Beauty" brand photoplays at the American studios.

AMERICAN'S "BILL"

William Stowell plays "heavies" and other characters for the American company at Santa Barbara. He does not act with any one company, but for the whole organization, because every director on the "lot" asks for his services.

"Bill" Stowell (one never things of him as William) is as good-natured as he is adaptable and capable. His recent characterizations in "The Overcoat," "The Buzzard's Shadow," "The Man from Manhattan" and "Overalls" have vastly increased his popularity.

William Stowell, American, is a singer too.

Stowell was born in Boston, but emigrated to Chicago early in life and was known in the Windy City as a fine athlete. He is responsible for the statement that he was kicked out of one job after another until he obtained a position with a small traveling company, where he got his first experience of six parts a week and one-night stands. Possessed of a splendid baritone voice, he drifted into musical comedy and stayed with that form of entertainment for five years.

His first picture experience was with the Selig Company, starting at Chicago. He stayed with this concern for five years and then joined the American Company, by which he is regarded as one of the most valuable of their stock company.

Will M. Ritchie is busy preparing another serial for the Balboa Company.

James L. Farley is filling a special engagement with the Bosworth Company, and is taking the part of father to Vivian Martin in the feature directed by E. Mason Hopper. It is a character role, that of a drunken reprobate.

Ruth Stonehouse has been given her own company to direct, at Universal City, and has started work on a series entitled "Mary Ann," which she wrote and in which she will play the lead as well as direct.

Lottie Case, who has been with the American and Universal companies, has been added to the Rolin studios and will play characters under the direction of Gil Pratt.

Not one of the Rolin players who produce the "Lonesome Luke" comedies for Pathe is over twenty-five years of age.

Norbert A. Myles, who has appeared in Universal and Signal plays, has been especially engaged to appear in the heavy role in the next Triangle play starring William S. Hart.

Camille Astor has the role of "Susanne" in support of Helen Ware in the Selig production of Robert Hichen's story, "The Garden of Allah."

So many things have happened that make material for scenarios that Bess Meredith, who went to Alaska for a vacation, has had no time to rest. She recently met an old sea captain who gave her material enough for one hundred reels, she declares.

A new leading man, Raymond Jerome Binder, has started work at the Fine Arts studio in a five reel feature, supporting Dorothy Gish.

Dorothy Phillips was injured painfully recently when she fell into a bear trap while making pictures in Bear Valley.

Robert Dillon has been taken from the scenario department at Universal City to direct Pat Rooney in comedies.

William Clifford is to head his own company at the Horsley-Mutual studios in a new series of animal pictures in which the Bostock animals will appear.

Lee Kohlmar, who has been appearing in Universal pictures under Director Frank D. Ormston, has left the coast for a ten weeks' engagement in London at the Queen's theater, where he will play a leading role in "Abe and Mawruss," sequel to "Potash and Perlmutter."

"Pawn" is the title of the next Universal five-reeler starring Ella Hall. Fred Myton is the author.

Ida May Park has prepared for the screen Harriet Comstock's popular story, "The Place Beyond the Winds." Joseph De Grasse will direct. Dorothy Phillips will play the role of a girl of the Canadian wilds, Lon Chaney of a half-breed youth.

"The Road of Destiny," a five reel adaptation of the story by Clark Irvine, is being filmed by Director Lloyd Carleton. Dorothy Davenport is featured, with Emory Johnson playing opposite and Richard Morris as the heavy.

Lois Weber is preparing to film a five reel feature entitled "Devotion," in which Mary MacLaren will be featured.

Three large aeroplane motors are being used in the desert scenes of the Selig production, "The Garden of Allah," to produce sand windstorm effects.

True Boardman, the famous "Sting-agree" who is now appearing in the Kalem series, "The Girl From Frisco," comes of theatrical ancestry. His mother was Carro True, once a well know actress on the Pacific Coast, who later gained equal prominence as a newspaper writer on the San Francisco Chronicle.

Marin Sais was on the concert stage before she entered the pictures.

Newhall, California, a small town of the "wild west" type, furnished many of the scenes in the Selig production of "The Light of Western Stars." Tom Mix, Bessie Eyton, Frank Campeau, George W. Fawcett, Victoria Forde, Vivian Reed and Charles Gerrard form the cast of players in this feature which is planned for ten reels.

Tom Santschi has the leading man's role, that of "Boris," in the Selig production of "The Garden of Allah," starring Helen Ware. Al W. Filson has the role of "Lord Rens."

Douglas Bronston's name, appearing on the screen as the author of a recent universal photoplay, was the means of giving his address to a friend whom he had not been able to locate for ten years.

A portable lunch wagon, similar to the "soup cannons" used by the German army, was recently constructed for the Lasky Company in order to provide warm lunches to the players while out on locations. The "soup cannon" is pulled by a horse and is so arranged that hot soups, coffee, meat and other foods can be hauled over the rough ground without danger of spilling. From this wagon five to six hundred people can be fed.

Gabriel Pollock is designing the massive sets which will be used for the Oriental settings in the Selig production of "The Garden of Allah."

A statistician at the American-Mutual studios has discovered that Edward Coxen and Lizette Thorn have been "married" in pictures thirty-six times, William Russell and Charlotte Burton, thirty times, Art Acord and Helene Rosson, twenty-six times, Alfred Vosburgh and Vivian Rich eighteen times.

Two sensational stunts will be required of William S. Hart in the current Triangle play written by J. G. Hawks. In one, he rides a horse through the window of a saloon, ropes two men and drags them out. In the other, Hart rides on horseback behind a speeding train, grasps the railing of the observation platform on the rear car and swings himself aboard.

"The Folly of Desire," the Universal Red Feather feature, is a film version the "The Shulamite," written by Claude and Alice Askew. It was dramatized for the speaking stage by Edward Knoblauch" for the English actress, Lan Ashwell. George Loane Tucker produced it for Universal.

WHEN DELLA SMILES

Everyone in the George Kleine studios is kept in a happy mood these days by the bright smile and silvery laugh of Miss Della Connor, the vivacious blond and ingenue in "The Mishaps of Musty Suffer," with Harry Watson, Jr. If, on a rainy Monday or any other day there is anyone with a grouch, it is soon dispelled when Miss Connor with a cheery voice and a twinkle in her blue eyes greets one with a "Morning Mac," and "Howdy Bill." Miss Connor, trim, neat and athletic may be remembered as one of Gus Edwards' proteges. She was with Pathe Freres for over a year. Her work in George Kleine's "Officer 666," "The Scarlet Road" with Malcolm Duncan and Anna Nilsson, and "The Danger Signal" with Arthur Hoops is especially commendable.

Dallas, Texas, as the center of Methodism of the Southwest, will be depicted in a feature film showing the pageant of Methodism, the opening of the Southern Methodist University, the conference of presiding elders of Oklahoma, Texas and New Mexico; the meeting of the superannuated ministers and other events occurring on September 19, 20 and 21. The picture will also include the formal opening of the Union Terminal Station and street scenes of Dallas.

I am an ardent devotee to MOTOGRAPHY and must say that it contains more live notes about moving pictures and the industry as a whole than any other publication of its kind in the United States.

Projection with Incandescent Lamps

BY L. C. PORTER
New York section, Society of Illuminating Engineers.

FOR motion picture projection, we are already able with an incandescent lamp to equal the results from a 50 ampere alternating current arc, or from a 25 ampere direct current arc.

A few of the primary differences are these: In the common form of projection lantern, we have two condensing lenses (Fig. 1) and light from the focal point of lens A will be made practically parallel as it goes through. If you use an ordinary lamp filament, i. e., a filament as shown in Fig. 2, a light ray L^2, coming from a point P, away from the focal point would be scattered when it went through the lenses and similarly from all other points outside the focus. For that reason the ordinary lamp filament cannot be used for projection. To get satisfactory projection, it is necessary to concentrate the filament as closely as possible around the focal point of the condenser.

In arc lamps, the light comes from the crater of the carbon. The distribution of light from such a crater is somewhat as shown in Fig. 3; therefore, a condensing lens of tolerably long focal length will utilize a very large percentage of the total light, as shown by the shaded portion of Fig. 3. On the other hand, if you put an incandescent lamp (which has, practically speaking, a spherical distribution, i. e., the candle-power is equal practically in every direction with the exception of under the base) at the same point of the arc, using the same condenser, you utilize a very small percentage of the total light flux, as shown by the shaded portion in Fig. 4. Therefore, when one uses an incandescent light it is necessary to use a short focus condenser so that you utilize a larger percentage of the total light flux; and that can still further be increased by putting a spherical mirror back of it, as illustrated in Fig. 5. With an arc light source the screen is practically an image of the center of the arc and that gives you a uniform field. With an incandescent, if the light source is exactly at the focal point, you get an enlarged image of the filament on the screen, which is more or less objectionable. To get rid of that it is necessary to move the light source a little out of focus, or use other means of breaking up the filament image.

We found that we could get very good moonlight scenes with from six to ten foot-candles. I should estimate that about three to six foot-candles is considered good illumination on the screen in average moving picture work and we are able to obtain that from an incandescent light source.

Mr. M. Luckiesh: I believe this society should become more interested in vision as influenced by moving pictures. No doubt all of us while viewing motion pictures have experienced considerable visual discomfort from two chief sources of eye-strain, namely the brightness contrast of the highly illuminated screen amid relatively dark surroundings and the more or less evident flicker. The discomfort due to both of these causes can be lessened by illuminating the entire room slightly. In many cases I believe the illumination intensity on the screen is too great. However, if excessive intensity of illumination is available, I would suggest that considerable general illumination be provided. Where this is done the results are very satisfactory. Even in some cases the slight amount of light provided by the orchestra lamps makes the brightness contrast between the screen and its surroundings quite endurable compared with the condition when the orchestra lamps are unlighted. Sometimes, however, these lamps are very glaring.

Fig. 5

Another point of interest which has received little attention is the relation of the illumination intensity on the screen to the conspicuousness of the flicker. It is well known that the critical flicker-frequency, or the frequency at which flicker disappears, increases slowly with the increase in the brightness of the surface which is being alternated against darkness. The flicker frequency has been shown to increase approximately proportional to the logarithm of the brightness. There is reason to believe that there is an optimum relation between illumination and the noticeability of flicker in moving picture projection which is not the condition found in some movie theaters. Another point of interest is found in the contour of the flicker or the waveform of the brightness. The critical frequency decreases as the change from light to dark becomes less abrupt. This and other points are of considerable interest in the design of moving picture projection apparatus. In fact, the "movies" present a comparatively unexplored field for those interested in the aims of this society.

ANITA WRITES PRESIDENT

Anita King, "The Paramount Girl," who has been appearing in Lasky productions of Paramount pictures, has written a letter of congratulation to Hiram Abrams, the new president of Paramount Pictures Corporation.

Miss King was the first girl to cross the country in an automobile unaccompanied, this feat having been accomplished during the fall of 1915, when she stopped at nearly eleven hundred Paramount theaters in the different towns en route, telling the story of better pictures, for better theaters, and a better theater-going public, the foundation upon which Paramount is built.

This beautiful young actress, since she has returned to the coast, has appeared in six Lasky productions and during the past six months has become one of the "city mothers" of Los Angeles, caring for the destitute girls who crossed the continent in an endeavor to become motion picture actresses and failed, only to be left alone without proper funds and without the requisites to earn a livelihood.

This work is being lauded not only in the community in which she is doing it, but all over the country.

FOUR-YEAR-OLD MAKES LONG TRIP

Gertrude Messner, a four-year-old Spokane tot, has joined the Universal stock company at Universal City, after a trip alone from her home in Spokane, Wash. Miss Messner has appeared in amateur theatricals in Spokane and friends of her father at Universal City arranged for her debut into motion pictures. She already has played small parts in several of Lule Warrenton's pictures and under Director Elfelt.

On her trip from Spokane to Universal City little Miss Messner attended to her own little satchel, took care of her own ticket and when the conductor asked her in San Francisco where she was going pointed to the tag around her neck which read:

"I am Gertrude Messner, four years old. I am going to Universal City to play in moving pictures. Dad says take good care of me."

Passengers on the Union Pacific took little Gertrude in charge and trainmen in San Francisco saw that she made her connections safely.

Ben C. Brasch has again taken up the booking business and will once more endeavor to put Muskogee, Oklahoma, on the map. Mr. Brasch will open the Queen City Booking Exchange at Muskogee, Oklahoma, soon.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by makers MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

For the Son of the House—Biograph Re-issue—September 11.—Featuring Mae Marsh, Charles H. West and Charles H. Mailes. The girl is discharged by the owner of the sweatshop where she is employed when she refuses to accept the easy path which he offers. A minister rescues her from her predicament and believing the girl's story, realizes that she is a victim of circumstances and resolves to keep her. At his mission in the settlement she meets a wealthy woman and the woman agrees to take the girl home and give her a chance as maid and companion. The woman's son, a weakling and gambler, loses all his money and returns home and robs his mother's safe of her jewelry. He makes a noise and arouses the household and the girl to save him assumes the guilt, but the young man's manhood asserts itself and he confesses his guilt and the mother withdraws the charge. Several months later a letter arrives from the West and it ends like this: "and I find your son one of my most trusted employes." The woman rises from her chair and kisses the little maid upon the cheek and gives her the letter to read.

The Pony Express—(Two Reels)—Selig—September 11.—Featuring Tom Mix and Victoria Forde. A review appears elsewhere in this isue.

In Jungle Wilds—Selig—September 16.—Feaauring Dick La Reno, George Larkin and Miss McDonald. Bryce, a broker, is sentenced to a term in the penitentiary for embezzlement, and Norma, his daughter, breaks her engagement with James Shelly, because of her father's dishonor upon her. When Bryce is released from the penitentiary they go to South Africa to begin life anew and James Shelly follows them. Malone, former henchman of Bryce, now a tax collector in Africa, encounters him and tells him that they can make money smuggling diamonds and asks for Norma's hand. Bryce induces Shelly to take a journey into the interior of Africa, believing that he will become a prey of wild beasts, but after many hazardous adventures Shelly returns in time to save Norma from the machinations of Malone.

A Blot in the 'Scutcheon—(Two Reels)—Biograph—September 12.—Featuring Dorothy Bernard, Charles Mailes and Edwin August. Thorold, Earl Tresham, proud of his ancestral escutcheon, which he claims shows no tarnish, welcomes the proposal of Henry, Earl Mertoun, for his sister Mildred's hand, as it will mean the uniting of two noble houses, he not knowing that Mildred and Henry, who are both young, ignorant and unguarded, have already met, sinned and now atatempt a reparation. He learns from one of his servants that an unknown visitor, who was none other than Henry himself, was seen leaving his sister's chamber, and in a fury of rage he sets out to right the wrong as he believes to be the only way.

The Greater Obligation—(Two Reels)—Essanay—September 12.—Featuring Edward Arnold, Marion Ldyston and Betty Brown. Mildred Bane goes to the city from her little home town to avoid disgrace and leaves her child on a parsonage steps. Roger Willard marries and leaves the small town, also. The couple decide to adopt a baby and are awarded the same child found on the minister's steps. Some years later the boy, in playfully eluding his father, now a widower, brings him face to face with Mildred Bane. For revenge she later kidnaps the boy and after a long search Willard locates him. "You made a foundling of my child! I'll make an outcast of yours," she tells him, informing him also where she left her baby some years before. In surprise he answers that the boy is her own, that his wife never had a child. They are reconciled.

The Fable of the Slim Girl Who Tried to Keep a Date That Was Never Made—Essanay—September 13.—Featuring Warda Howard and Royal Douglas. Once there lived a Slim Girl who led a lonely life in a Rube Town, dreaming of her Ideal. But the Party failed to show up. Things went from Bad to Worse and from Worse to Waukegan where she Married Ernest, who had been kicked in the head by a Mule and believed everything he read in the Daily Sun. Ernest could put an Anvil into a Farm Wagon if anyone wanted to bet him the Segars, but every time he lifted an Axe, something caught him in the small of the back and he had to lie down. One Day Ernest, being too lazy to move into the shade, was Sunstruck and Passed Away without an Effort. The Widow put all the Money into a Marble Shaft marked: "At Rest." She was looked upon as a Martyr. However, she became the Wife of Mr. Gladden, who owned the General Store. Gladden built a new house, they Hired a Girl and had the Washing sent out. She had everything she wanted. Consequently, the Slim Girl was very Miserable, thinking of the Jewel she had lost.

Moral: If the Woman thinks he's All Right, you keep on your own Side of the Fence.

A Strenuous Visit—Vim—September 13.—Featuring Harry C. Meyers and Rosemary Theby. Harry arriving in town telephones his college chum, Fred, who has since been married, of his arrival and of his desire to meet his wife. Rose, Fred's wife, goes out to purchase a few things and Harry, who is somewhat of a flirt, flirts with her and is snubbed. His persistency angers Rose and she has him arrested and he phones Fred, who bails him out. When they arrive home Fred is called away and tells Harry to make himself at home. Rose is frightened at the sight of the flirt in her house and again has him arrested. Again Fred bails him out and brings him to his office and again Rose encounters the flirt when she enters her husband's office during his absence. She has Harry arrested for the third time and again Fred is called upon. This time Fred takes his wife with him and Harry is properly introduced to Rose and all is forgiven.

It is our aim to make this department as complete as possible, although to do this, we must have the co-operation of all the manufacturers of film in the United States. If brief stories of the films you are releasing this week are not contained in this department, it must be due to the fact that you have not supplied us with synopsis sheets. In that case please see that we are advised of your film titles and release dates, and furnished with a brief synopsis of the story. This department is intended for every film manufacturer, whether he uses our advertising pages or not.

Stranded—Vim—September 14.—Featuring Babe Hardy and Billy Ruge. Plump and Runt are wrecked at sea and are washed upon a lonely island and later a millionaire and friends choose this spot for their camp. His daughter's wealth and beauty have attracted the attention of an adventurer and he arrives to press his suit. Out hunting, the beauty disturbs Plump's slumbers by a shot, thus bringing about mutual introduction. A sportsman to the backbone, the old man goes fishing and loses his artificial teeth. Our heroes by a marvel of ingenuity restore them, and now comes the dirty work. The villain, mad with jealousy, seizes the girl and sails away with her. A wonderful shot from Plump's rifle and down comes the sail. Foiled again, the bad man places a bomb on the craft, ties up the girl and leaves her to her fate. Plump and Runt rescue her, throw away the bomb, which blows up the escaping scoundrel.

Payment in Full—Vim—September 15.—Featuring Robert Burns and Walter Stull. Ethel Jabbs is forced to marry Moneybags to save her father from ruin. Pokes, her sweetheart, is heartbroken and confides in his friend, Robin, an actor, who promises to help him. Robin makes Pokes up to resemble Jabbs and after sending a decoy message to Jabbs, Pokes invites Moneybags to the Jabbs' home to receive Ethel's answer. Once Pokes has the mortgage in his possession he demands that Moneybags give a demonstration of his muscular prowess and forces him through a series of gymnastic exercises which nearaly kill the old man. The test is too much for Moneybags and after surrendering all claims to Ethel, quits the house. Jabbs returning home is dumbfounded to find himself face to face with his double and believing that he is confronted by a madman shoots Pokes and is then terrified by the conviction that he is a murderer. However, when Pokes comes to life and removes his disguise and produces the mortgage papers, Jabbs is only too happy to give Ethel into Pokes' outstretched arms.

The Woman Always Pays—(Three Reels)—Essanay—September 16.—Featuring Lillian Drew and Sydney Ainsworth. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

Selig-Tribune No. 70—August 31.—Mrs. Waldo Pierce, the first woman amateur air pilot in the United States, makes a flight with Mr. C. W. Whitting of the Harvard Aero Club, Mineola, L. A., organizes a one-man parade and marches down Pennsylvania avenue as he did 54 years before on his way to serve in the Civil War, Washington, D. C.; gasoline driven "go-devils," which will travel 100 miles on a gallon of gasoline, are now being used on parcel delivery service, San Francisco, Cal.; largest searchlight in the world is completed at Brooklyn, N. Y., and is given its trial test; Andrew Carnegie, the steel king, reported as dangerously ill, comes ashore from his yacht "Surf" and says he only feels tired, Bar Harbor, Maine; the Ripley expedition, after a long search along the Driftwood river, find the fosil remains of a Dinosauria and a wealth of fossil beds, Buckley, B. C.

Ham and the Fortune Teller—Kalem—September 5.—Featuring Lloyd V. Hamilton and Bud Duncan. Ham and Bud wander into a gypsy camp and are about to suffer a dire fate when, in their fright, they manage to give the mystic sign that allows them to enter the inner circle. They are given the fortune telling privilege. Mr. Lotsacash, who had that morning had a quarrel with wifey, takes a walk along the road when his auto breaks down. He decides to let Ham tell his fortune. Ham speaks of a handsome dark man who is stealing his wife's love and, all in all, phophesies so well that he gets a large fee, with the added warning, "But woe unto you if I find you have been lying to me." It is then up to Ham to find a dark man to capture Mrs. Lotsacash's heart and Bud is elected to the job. The result brings on a merry tangle of fun that ends with Ham and Bud seeking safety in the tall grass.

Meter in the Kitchen—Kalem—September 8.—Featuring Ivy Close. Detailing the happenings in a small town when the gas was suddenly shut off. Fanny was very anxious to have the light because she wanted to show J. P. Plunks, of the Classy Designing Company, her original designs. Motorman Bill and Fanny's mother didn't want the gas because they were very much in love—to which Fanny objected. When J. P. Plunks departs in wrath, Motorman Bill feels somewhat guilty, so he pursues in the town's one and only street car. Plunks is overhauled and made to look at the designs by the light from the street car.

Ablaze on the Rails—Kalem—September 9.—Featuring Helen Gibson. Helen, by a courageous leap from a motorcycle, reaches the burning box car in which the detectives are imprisond and succeeds in applying the brakes in time to bring it to a stop and save them from almost certain death. Her bravery also enables Detective Kent to secure a coveted reward for the capture of the famous crook, which puts the seal of a "happy ending" to his romance.

Mutual Pictures

The Phantom Crook—(Three Reels)—Gaumont—September 7.—Featuring Victor Navarre. First episode of "Fantomas." All Paris is upset by a series of mysterious robberies and murders attributed to an elusive criminal called Fantomas. Police Inspector Juve, the greatest detective in France, is put upon the case and he resolves to track down the criminal. Lord Beltham, a wealthy Englishman, disappears, and this case is also assigned Juve. He calls at Lord Beltham's home and finds a man's hat in the drawing room in which is the letter G. Going through Lord Beltham's address book he finds only one name under that initial, which is Grun. He did not know that Grun overheard his conversation with Lady Beltham and immediately made arrangements to ship the trunks in his apartment to South Africa. Juve, however, learns of this and forestalls him and upon opening one of the trunks discovers the body of Lord Beltham. Grun confesses he killed the man and the night before Fantomas is to die, Valgrand, a famous actor of Paris, appears in the make-up of Fantomas and the next day Lady Beltham invites him to call at her apartment. The clever woman drugs the actor and turns him over to the guards she had bribed, in place of Grun. The quick eye of Juve, however, detects the imposition and swears that he will yet place the elusive criminal behind the bars.

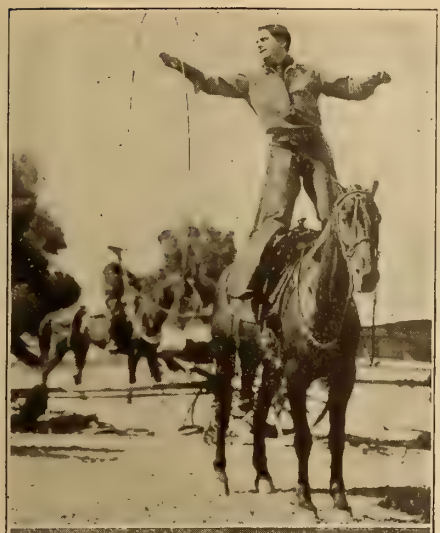
Tangled Hearts—(Two Reels)—Centaur—September 16.—Featuring William Clifford and Margaret Gibson. Margaret Gilbert is expelled from school when caught about to elope with Al Drake, son of a millionaire lawyer. Nan, Margaret's sister, and the promised bride of William Clifton, exerts herself to develop the good in her sister. Al's father wishes him to pursue his course in life, but Al desires a mechanical career. When the father learns of this he informs Al that his income has been cut off until such time as he proposes to resume the study of law. Al applies for the position of chauffeur and is hired by William, who is about to spend a week-end visit at the home of Nan. Here Al again meets Margaret and they are detected in a love scene by William and Nan. William discharges Al and later Margaret tells William that she is Al's wife. With pity for the girl William holds her in his arms and is seen by Nan, who believes that William and Margaret are having a love scene. Later, however, everything is brought to a happy ending through the influence of William.

Doctoring a Leak—(Two Reels)—Vogue—September 17.—Featuring Rube Miller and Ben Turpin. Dr. Kripple phones for a plumber to repair a broken pipe in the bath room. The maid also phones for a plumber and when Ben arrives with his kit of tools he wastes his time making love to her. He goes downstairs and turns off the water and when Rube, the second plumber, arrives, he turns it on, thinking he is turning it off. A patient comes to the house and, thinking Rube is the doctor, seeks his aid. Rube poses as the doctor, but is discovered by Ben, who also poses as the doctor. Rube and Ben get into various difficulties and finally when the real plumber arrives he opens a sewer outlet in the cellar, which lets out the water, taking Rube and Ben in the rush.



Universal Program

Hired and Fired—(Two Reels)—An Episode of "Timothy Dobbs, That's Me"—September 11. Carter De Haven featured. Timothy meets some girls and takes them to dine, although he has nothing in his pocket but a collar button. He gets out of paying the bill by throwing a fit. Later Timothy is given a part at the studio and as a cowboy he worries the directors not a little. When Timothy's picture is through running at the theater he is not much of a hero. To make things more uncomfortable the restaurant man appears with a cop, but his intrepid assistant, Jeff, saves Timothy from the disgrace of arrest.

Love and War—(Two Reels)—Episode No. 5 of "Liberty"—September 11.—Marie Walcamp, G. Raymond Nye and Jack Holt featured. In this episode at Lopez' orders, Theresa, Pedro and Liberty are taken prisoners. Captain Rutledge and his men are about to succumb to a vigorous attack when Colonel Dalton's cavalry arrives and the enemy is put to flight. Lopez, determined to gain Liberty's money, gives Manuel the alternative of getting money and men with military training or lose his life. While Liberty is having a struggle for liberty with the guard of her prison hut, Theresa makes her escape.

Nobody Guilty—Nestor—September 11.—With Wilkes Gamble, Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Priscilla Dean. The plot concerns itself with a store owner, his manager, a detective, a kleptomaniac and a necklace robbery. Events so transpire that the proprietor is finally convinced that no one is guilty, and Eddie, the manager, marries the kleptomaniac to take care of her.

The Caravan—(Two Reels)—Universal Special—September 11.—In the cast are J. Belasco, Claire McDowell, Lena Baskette and Malcolm Blevins. Hathor, beautiful wife of Chons, the caravan water man, is the object of the evil scheming of Tum. After being repulsed many times by Hathor, Tum finally instigates a plan whereby Chons is accused of throwing away the precious supply of water and his daughter determined upon for a sacrifice to the gods. At the last moment Tum's guilt is established by one of the slaves, the girl is saved and peace is again restored.

Douglas Fairbanks is at the top, in "Manhattan Madness," then comes Lillian Gish in "Diane of the Follies." At the bottom is "The Dawn Maker," with William S. Hart. All, of course, are Triangles, the first two Fine Arts, the latter, Ince.

Tillie's Terrible Turk—(Three Reels)—L-Ko—September 12.—Featuring Alice Howell. Alice slaves to support her three hundred-pound husband. As an earnest of gratitude the latter takes her savings and goes out to get stewed. Meanwhile Alice is arrested on circumstantial evidence for her husband's murder. All kinds of mischief is the result of Alice's escape from the police, her ardent neighbor being ever ready to save her from her pursuers. But the two are caught. Just as the hangman is about to get busy, however, along comes the weighty husband, a little the worse for drink, and the trouble ceases.

Jane's Choice—Victor—September 12.—With Jane Gail and Matt Moore. In this comedy, Jane, whose father has picked out a fat man for her to marry, resents this, and leaves the fat individual to either starve on an island or swim home. While she is paddling home after this expedition her canoe overturns. Then enters the hero and makes a daring rescue. Once on dry land the two pledge their love.

Love's Masquerade—(Two Reels)—Gold Seal—September 13.—Featuring Mary Fuller and Harry Benham. This story deals with the result of a hasty marriage, the young husband and wife being separated for a space of two years directly after the ceremony. Each finds another love but remains faithful. At last the day of the home-coming arrives, but both the husband and wife regard it with indifference. When Howard finds his wife in the arms of her lover he accuses her of being unfaithful, but this is straightened out, and the story closes with a double marriage, it being discovered that the first couple's marriage was illegal.

The Price of Victory—Laemmle—September 13.—With Douglas Gerrard and Francelia Billington. When war breaks out, Manuelo, a young Italian who has promised his father he will never become his brother's slayer, does not enlist, thus laying himself open to the title of coward. But Manuelo, unable to stand the censure longer, finally joins the fighting ranks and is subsequently reported dead. Luckily the report is false, and the story closes with Manuelo's return and a happy reunion.

For Her Mother's Sake—Big U—September 14. Featuring G. Raymond Nye and Vola Smith. Kenneth's city friend covertly wooes his sweetheart when he is at work in the woods and the girl finally elopes with him. Her father dies of grief. A few years later Kenneth comes across Nell, nearly exhausted, with a baby in her arms. The deserted wife soon dies, and Kenneth adopts the child, who in time grows to be the image of her mother.

Hunting Whales in Japan—Powers—September 14.—In this Dorsey travel picture instructive views of the details of whaling are given, together with the interesting methods employed in the Japanese pearl industry which has its center in Mikimoto. The whale is first shot with a harpoon gun, the final blow being delivered with an explosive shell. After the whale has been stripped of its blubber the men get into the carcass with their bare feet and shovel out the oil.

Baby's Toofs—(Two Reels)—Victor—September 14.—Harry Meyers and Rosemary Theby featured. This story, written and produced by Harry C. Meyers, deals with the over-zealous admiration of fond parents for their baby, many ludicrous situations being built around a couple of beans which, in baby's mouth, serve to fool its mother into thinking two brand-new teeth have arrived.

The Timber Wolf—Big U—September 15.—Molly Malone and Vester Pegg featured. In this story of the mountains, the "man from the city" figures largely. When Bob finds the latter forcing his attentions upon the girl whose affections he has usurped by his polished ways, he knocks the evil-intended city youth over a cliff. Then Bob jumps over and rescues him and the story closes with the lovers' reunion.

The Angel of the Attic—(Two Reels)—Imp—September 15.—Featuring Violet Mersereau and Harry Benham. Gerald Gray, a wealthy young man, poses as a struggling artist in the slums for the adventure. Here he meets a girl who is eking out her existence making paper flowers. Gradually the love affair grows until the girl finally becomes apprised of her lover's identity. Thinking she will be a drawback to his social success she withdraws, but Gray comes to claim her at last, realizing there is more in life than social success.

Speeding—Nestor—September 15.—When Harry, in his employer's borrowed Ford, takes a girl out for a ride and tries to get fresh with her, she vows vengeance. Later she and a girl friend get the flivver into their own hands, leaving Harry to foot it. They break all speed records, finally leaving the car stalled, and Harry to the mercy of the irate constable, for no sooner has Harry caught up to the car and taken possession of it than this individual takes him roughly in hand.

In Onion There Is Strength—Joker—September 16.—Featuring Gale Henry and William Franey. Gale and her husband, the deacon, belonging to the Anti-Sin Society, one day decide to investigate prison conditions. On his way to the prison the deacon is compelled by an escaped convict to change clothes with him, so the deacon has a chance to study conditions in the prison at close range. Meanwhile, the escaped convict, attempting to rob a club, is pounced upon by the prison gang working outside, and a general fight ensues.

Reading in the direction in which you always read, Thanhouser and Pathe's "The Fear of Poverty" comes first. Then follows inactives from Morosco's "The House of Lies" and Lasky's "Public Opinion," which features the Sweet star.

Brick Top—Big U—September 17.—Featuring Roy Clark. John, a mischievous schoolboy, who thinks his well-deserved punishment is unwarranted abuse, runs away. He happens to come across a house which is the rendezvous of bandits, and when his father, the sheriff, starts on his trail he is directed to this house. The father breaks in upon the privacy of the wicked gang and he is about to be harshly dealt with when his son arrives with aid. The latter's offenses are soon lost in the light of his heroism.

The Small Magnetic Hand—Rex—September 17.—With Gertrude Selby and Hal Cooley. As a result of her intoxicated husband's brutality, Sylvia enters upon a long term of sickness. When she learns that she is not to be a mother she is heartbroken. But gradually the devotion and penitence of her changed husband has its effect and later we see them in a happy home blessed with a bouncing baby.

Bobby Bumps and the Stork—(Split Reel)—Paramount-Bray—September 7.—An Earl Hurd animated cartoon that is quite interesting and diverting. Bobby must keep his pet dog even in spite of Pa's decision to get rid of him. He "manufactures" a stork and his little scheme works well, for Pa tells puppy he may remain around for a while at least. On the same reel with:

The Orang's Kindergarten.—Toto, Jerry and Peggy, orangs from Borneo now residing in the Bronx Zoo, here give some exhibitions of their ugliness and quite remarkable ability to imitate a human.

Glimpses of English Town and County—Paramount-Burton Holmes—September 7.—This travel picture is rather sprightly as travel pictures go. It presents a great variety of subjects and is altogether a pleasant as well as an instructive reel.

The Woman Always Pays," is on the left. Next is "When Justice Won," then "The Way of Patience." All are powerful September Essanay dramas.

You Men Who Pay The Advertising Bills

A large organization, nation-wide, has been working for years to promote better advertising conditions and to protect the man who pays the advertising bills. It employs a large staff of experts and has gone to great expense in order to protect your interests.

This organization is financed by advertisers, advertising agencies and newspaper, magazine, farm journal and trade paper publishers all over America—with the sole object in view of putting the buying of advertising space on a sound, clean, businesslike basis—so that you, when you buy advertising, can know what you get. It is not organized for profit—but for service only.

This organization is known as the "A. B. C."—Audit Bureau of Circulations—and is entitled to the support of every business man who ever pays a dollar for advertising space.

When you buy space from any publisher who is a member of the "A. B. C.," you buy CERTIFIED CIRCULATION—circulation that is as bona fide and square and honest as a certified check—circulation that has been verified, in every smallest detail, by the trained and unbiased auditors of the "A. B. C."

When you buy advertising space, buy it from those publications who have nothing to conceal, whose circulations are certified circulations.

Get What You Pay For

When you Advertisers buy circulars or booklets or postage stamps, you always check up the quantity received to see that you get what you pay for.

When you Manufacturers and Producers buy steel or wood or bolts or screws, or raw material of any kind, you check up every little package and item to see that you get what you pay for.

When you Exchangemen and Auxiliary Suppliers buy stocks from jobbers or manufacturers, you check up every smallest shipment that comes to your place to see that you get what you pay for.

Buy your advertising space the same way. The better publications all over the country—the newspapers whose circulation statements are founded on facts, not fancy—furnish you with certified audits so that when you buy their advertising space you know that you get what you pay for.

The Audit Bureau of Circulations' membership is made up of over a thousand advertisers, advertising agencies, newspapers, magazines, farm journals and trade publications. Its object is the improvement of circulation and advertising conditions, the protection of the man who pays the advertising bills, and the protection of the publisher who gives FULL MEASURE. When you buy advertising space, buy it from publications that give you proof of what you pay for.

The studios will be located in the suburbs of the city, free from the dust and noise, but at the same time conveniently accessible for the performers and extras that will be employed. Work on buildings and grounds will be commenced immediately.

MUCH EXPERIENCED WORLD ACTOR

An actor with an unusual amount of flexibility of characterization who has been seen to very good advantage in a recent World Film Corporation picture is Harold Entwistle, World.

Harold Entwistle, well-known character actor and former stage and screen actor and director.

Mr. Entwistle has had a varied stage career, serving with the late Wilson Barret, Mr. and Mrs. Kendall, Mrs. Langtry, Sir John Hare, Mrs. Patrick Campbell, and working directly under the late Charles Frohman for five years, in which time he was actor, stage director and manager, also having managed several theaters and four road companies at the same time.

Enjoying a wide and varied experience with many of the most famous stage celebrities of the past and present regime, Mr. Entwistle has played prominent parts in many of the greatest stage successes of recent years, and was, until his advent into the motion picture business, two and a half years ago, one of the leading stage directors in the country.

His first motion picture engagement was with the Vitagraph, following the California Motion Picture Company, the Universal Company, the New York Motion Picture Company and the World Film Corporation. He was director for the California Motion Picture Company twelve months, in which time he produced, scenarioized and directed many stellar attractions, including "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," "Lily of Poverty Flat," "A Phyllis of the Sierras" and "The Surrender," for the Western Universal Company.

WON BY A COSTUME

While located at Monterey, California, during the military training encampment, for the purpose of making scenes in a forthcoming war feature, Hayward Mack, the well-known actor, when time for dinner arrived, decided to go to the Hotel Del Monte which was a mecca for the military men.

The dining room of the hotel was crowded. Mr. Mack entered and was looking over the throng for a vacant place. Just in front of him was a table at which three men were eating, while a fourth was just about to take the remaining place, all were dressed as privates of the training camp; the man who was about to sit down noticed Mr. Mack, and seeing the shoulder straps and the marks of an officer, stood erect, saluted and gave the actor his place at the table, then turned and left the room.

Without the quiver of an eye-lid Mr. Mack returned the salute, and moved to the vacant place at the table. Immediately the three remaining privates arose as one, and saluted, making ready to leave the table, returning the salute, Mr. Mack asked the men not to leave on account of his being an officer, but to stay and enjoy the meal with him.

SPEEDY DRAMA CATCHING

Director Raymond Wells, who recently completed the picturization of "The Saintly Sinner," starring Ruth Stonehouse and Henri De Vries, set a new pace in securing scenes for the five reel photoplay. He photographed Jack Mulhall, one of the leading men at Universal City, on a train at Newhall, some thirty miles from Los Angeles. Mulhall remained on the train. Wells and his cameraman, Gilbert Warrenton, jumped into a machine and they made three more pictures of Mulhall at different points en route to Los Angeles.

This meant that at times the director in his automobile had to run up to sixty miles an hour in order to catch up with the train and had the camera ready by the time it flashed past him. It so happened that no motorcycle policemen were on the dusty road at that particular time of the day so Wells escaped arrest for speeding and at the same time secured the pictures he wanted.

SOME NEW THEATERS

California.

The Hub theater in Mill Valley has been sold by H. C. Papst to George H. Crook. Paramount pictures will be shown.

The Pastime theater on Market street, near Fourth, San Francisco, has been closed, and the work of tearing down the building in which it was located has commenced in earnest. This is the site that is to be occupied by the magnificent new house to be conducted under the management of Eugene Roth.

The new Reliance theater being erected on Clay street at San Pablo avenue, Oakland, is being arranged for every comfort for the patrons. It is fireproof, good lighting, ample exits, and the most modern system of heating and ventilation has been installed. The new building is of the Italian Renaissance type and will seat 1,800. A. J. Vanstrum will be manager.

G. B. Meyers & Son are erecting a $10,000 picture theater between Chestnut and Ligonier streets, Derry. The building will be fireproof. It will be one story in height with a balcony.

The Regent theater in the East Liberty section, Pittsburgh, has installed an air washing system at a cost of $1,400.

The Lyric theater, Oil City, is being enlarged by adding a balcony. New decorations will be made and the cozy theater will be opened about September 15.

The Colonial theater in Beaver Falls has installed new seats.

Manager Weir has opened the Photoplay theater, Meadville, after being closed for the summer months. The house has been beautified and some new equipment installed.

A modern moving picture theater is to be erected on the northwest corner of Fifth and State streets, Erie, by H. V. Ashby and E. B. Ashby. The structure will be three stories high and will have a frontage of 120 feet. Plans are being formulated, but no announcement has as yet been made as to when the work will be started.

Franklin Ritchie, the powerful player who is now appearing with Helene Rosson and others in an unusual new American drama of Hindoo occultism, released September 7 by Mutual.

Announcement has been made by Mastbaum Brothers & Fleisher, brokers, that they have sold Nos. 1900-1914 Market street and Nos. 2-22 South Nineteenth street, Philadelphia, for the respective owners to the Stanley Realty Company, which owns the Stanley theater, on the south side of Market street, west of Sixteenth. The Stanley Company will tear down the old buildings at Nineteenth and Market streets and erect on the site a theater building costing about $600,000. Plans for the structure are being drawn by the Hoffman Company, and work will probably be started within the next sixty days. The building, which will be a moving picture house, will have a seating capacity of 4,000, and will be equipped with escalators and elevators instead of staircases.

New motion picture machines are being installed and the ventilating system at the Savoy theater in Hazelton is being improved by Harry Hersker, who has taken over the management of the play house.

A concrete and brick moving picture theater, comfortably seating 440 persons, has been erected by Joe Ryan at 603 Eagan avenue, Madison. Everything has been installed that will make this theater up-to-date.

Cater to the Better Classes

By Will H. Sohm, Belasco Theater Company, Quincy, Ill.

My humble efforts have been rewarded through my irrevocable determination to be a good merchant, for after all there is little difference between the mercantile and the show business.

The showman like the merchant buys merchandise. In the case of the exhibitor, entertainment, education and "service" are so much stock which he markets to the public for a consideration. How well he succeeds depends entirely upon his judgment in selecting his wares and the facilities employed to market them. I have directed amateur, semi-professional theatricals for the past fifteen years and entered the motion picture field as an exhibitor. Throughout this period I have held fast to my contention that a good, clean story, well presented, will satisfy in most cases, at least to the extent of insuring a steady and regular patronage, which to me is eminently more satisfactory than the spasmodic rushes due to immoral or suggestive subjects which ultimately reflect upon the house and all its performances.

I sincerely believe that the amusement seeking public have a large majority in favor of the elevating tendencies of the better kind of pictures, and I'm for that exclusively.

Grave Faults in Pictures

BY CAPTAIN LESLIE T. PEACOCKE

(Editorial Note: Exhibitors, as well as patrons, often express a keen desire for the improvement of screen make-up, particularly for the elimination of the over-accentuation of features which is prevalent even in some of the best producing companies. Captain Peacocke's article is timely and drives the critical knife into the sore spot where the operation is needed.)

IT appears astounding to the majority of the millions who daily view productions on the screens why the same palpable faults should be made day after day by both producing directors and actors, and no steps, apparently, taken to remedy them.

I am alluding to the glaring enormities that invariably greet the eye in film productions. Enormities that even children point out, and that can be so easily remedied. Do the ladies and gentlemen who pose for the benefit and pleasure of the world at large never see their efforts on the screen, or do they merely consult the mirrors in their dressing rooms, and each others' countenances beneath the glaring lights in the studios?

I take up the cudgels on behalf of a long-suffering multitude, and throw a little ink at a subject that needs immediate attention. It is—the use and abuse of make-up!

Why do actors and actresses smother their faces thickly with grease-paint, so that they look like plaster masks, expressionless and scarcely human? Why thickly rim the eyes with black, and under the eye-brows with blue, giving slightly the effect of having played a losing bout with Jess Willard? Why "bead" the eye-lashes with a thick, black mess that even chorus girls facing the calcium lights in a big theater would hesitate in employing? Why smear the lips with red paint and cosmetic that can only photograph deadly black, and distort what is supposed to be a human mouth into a dark cavern, unpleasant to the sight?

Why is all this? Who is at fault? Is it the directors, or is it the actors themselves? Are they like children in the nursery, and find it difficult to "act" unless partially disguised by a mask—or whiskers?

Is it that the directors realize their limitations and are forced to humor them? Or is it that actors hope to escape recognition by their friends; or can it be that they have committed deadly crimes and fear to be too easily identified?

Patrons Sneer at Bad Make-up

I am not trying to suggest, for a moment, that actors should not employ make-up whilst enacting roles before the camera. It is the abuse of make-up that I am inveighing against. It is such a grave evil that daily one hears audiences in theaters audibly protesting against it, and the cause of sneers in sometimes most dramatic scenes.

Theatrical make-up of various sorts is often essential, but judicial care should be employed in its application. Many things should be taken into consideration, which are practically ignored by even some directors who are drawing salaries bigger than that of the president of the United States.

In deciding upon the make-up to be used, often little or no attention is paid by the directors to the "lighting conditions," and actors and actresses are directed to make up either heavily or lightly (as pleases the director) and then employed in a studio scene under heavy artificial lights; and then some exterior scenes have to be filmed, and the actors are rushed from the studio into automobiles and driven off to some outdoor location, and forced to face the camera in the searching rays of the sun, with the same mess of grease-paint on their faces as was employed especially to meet the conditions of studio lighting! The lay mind will question the veracity of this. It will ask, "Can such ignorance be possible?" But I have seen it myself—time and time again, in some of the biggest studios in the country—and I have marvelled. The public sees the results on the screen, and—the public sneers.

In studio work it is, of course, essential that judicious make-up be employed, and at a certain distance the effects are nearly always natural and pleasing; but when the actor, or actress, is drawn to a close-up to the camera (where even the minutest blemish on the skin is magnified to an enormity)—why, in heaven's name, is the same mess of make-up allowed to mar the face, that was solely placed there to meet the lighting conditions of the more distant scenes? Why is not a different make-up employed more often for the close-up scenes? Why do so many of the leading players, of both sexes, allow themselves to be depicted as veritable scarecrows? Are they blind? Don't they ever seen themselves on the screen? And if they do, are they satisfied? If so, thespians must be more devoid of vanity than the public gives them credit for! But ninety-nine cases out of a hundred it is not the actors' fault. They have no voice in the matter. They are being "directed!"

Our prominent stage stars, who essay roles in film productions for the first time are, naturally, ignorant of the proper make-up necessary to meet, to them, the new conditions; and appeal for information to the gentleman who is directing the production. Well, I have heard instructions given; usually like this: "Why, you know how to make-up, don't you? Yes, of course; a 'straight make-up,' same as I've seen you use in your stage productions. Any of the fellows (or girls) who have been acting around here will tell you." And the prominent star goes innocently to his artistic doom.

Ask the Man Who Knows

He has never thought of consulting the camera-man! He is ignoring the fact that he is going to have his photograph taken, maybe ten thousand times in as many seconds! He is going to face a camera, and he is ignoring the photographer altogether! Why? I'll tell you why. It is because the camera-man has been practically ignored since the inception of the moving picture industry; and when all is said and done, he is the most important element in the studio; both in the photographer's studio, and in the studio where photographs are ground out daily by the mile!

Miss Edna May, the dainty little beauty of "Belle of New York" fame, playfully, but vehemently declared that when she first saw her face in a close-up on the screen, that she felt horrified, and could not account for her mouth appearing to be smeared with blackberry jam when she hadn't tasted any of that succulent condiment for months! In a close-up her dainty cherry lips had not needed red grease-paint to accentuate them, and to turn them to a glaring black, with the baneful effect of altogether obliterating her rows of pearly teeth. Had she sought technical information from the camera-man? Who had advised her and instructed her in this instance? It would be interesting to know!

An actor must change his facial make-up to suit the lighting conditions of individual scenes, and the various distances from the camera. Some of our best producing directors have lately grasped this fact, and their productions show the result of the careful thought given to essential details—William C. De Mille, George E. Middleton, Raoul Walsh and George Tucker, showing their master minds and hands in such matters, and winning laurels and the thanks of a long-suffering public in consequence; and others will emulate them, without doubt.

So many directors and actors seem to be unable to grasp the fact that colors do not register in photography. That red does not photograph red, but black; and that red paint or cosmetic on the lips must necessarily depict them as black on the screen, and that rouge on the cheeks registers not as a maidenly blush, but as splotches of dirt!

The best directors we have are native-born Americans, and the best screen actors we have appearing in American stories are native-born Americans, and the American public likes American stories, far and away better than any other class of stories submitted for their entertainment. The public likes that which it best understands; and it is always better to give the public what it wants. It pays better.

Some of the best directors of photoplay productions have never had experience as stage directors. One or two have been photographers; then, later have acted as cameramen, and from that have both directed and filmed productions that have been masterpieces.

Why Make' em Look Like Actors?

Several years ago I visited a studio near Los Angeles to see some scenes being enacted in a big production for which I had written the scenario. I was heartily greeted by the director (a genial fellow, who had developed from stage manager of one of the foremost western stock companies to chief director of this big film corporation) and taken out to the courtyard of the studio, where a great concourse of "actors" was assembled.

There must have been 150 of them, at least, and all dressed in the garb of early Romans; some in togas, and others in Roman armor, carrying spears, swords and shields, and wearing helmets, and—by all the ancient gods—a big majority of them were displaying necks shaved at the back! True East Side hair-cuts! And every mother's son in the crowd was heavily smeared with grease-paint; their cheeks deeply and brightly rouged, and their eyes blacked and beaded like totties of the chorus; a number of them mounted on horse-back, with either Mexican or Western saddles and trappings, and nearly all of them had their noble nether limbs encased in ill-fitting fleshings, giving the wierd and unhappy effect of cheap underwear! I looked upon the crowd and gasped.

"What are they?" I queried meekly.

"Why, you ought to know," replied the director. "You wrote the story. They're Romans."

"Oh!" I gasped, "I see. But what's that—that stuff on their faces? That pink, and—and red, and black and blue, and lines, and—and things?"

The director looked upon me with undisguised scorn. "That's grease-paint," he said. "What we call 'make-up.' You've been 'round studios before, haven't you?"

I glanced at the motley crowd, perspiring beneath the bright California sun, and at the camera in the automobile, ready to record the ludicrous pageant, and wondered, dully, what the photographer was thinking of the matter; if he possesssed the soul of an artist. "Yes, but why—why do they need all that make-up out here?" I ventured timidly. "Out here in the daylight—the sunlight?"

"Why, of course," returned the director, testily. "You don't want them to look like a bunch of amateurs, do you? Of course they've got to have make-up. They wouldn't look like actors if they hadn't."

"Ooooh! Ooooh!" I apologized, humbly. "I beg your pardon, old man. I—I didn't know. I thought you intended them to look like Romans!"

He gave me a sharp look, tinged with suspicion, but I kept my countenance bravely, and to this day I think he is wondering if I was a fool, or merely an ass!

But I could see his point of view. I think he has it still. To him, a person enacting before a camera minus the full stage make-up, to which he had been for years accustomed, is an amateur. An actor must wear his mask of office. Calcium light or sun light do not enter into his calculations at all.

I have had various directors argue the point with me that in exterior settings artists must be made up, otherwise their faces would look dark and expressionless, and that the lines of character would not show up properly. Well, one of the finest film showings—from the photographic point of view—that I ever beheld, was the launching of an Italian battleship, at which the king and queen of Italy did the honors, and excellent close-up views of them and the royal party were depicted; and I do not think their majestic faces were made up for the occasion. I think my friend, the director, could safely have classed them as "amateurs." When we are going to have our photographs taken, do we make up our faces with grease-paint, or blacken our eyes, or bead them, or rouge our lips with carmine? Or, if we go into the garden and face a kodak, do we do it? Then, why in the name of thunder—oh, but what's the use?!!

Whiskers!!

And now we come to another important grievance—whiskers!

If an actor is cast for the role of a medical doctor, why does he invariably rush off and adorn his face with a beard? The most up-to-date medical men don't wear them nowadays. They are taboo. They have been voted as insanitary by wielders of the scapel. And you can't fool the camera with a false beard. Nor yet with a toupee. You may fool your best girl with a toupee, but not the camera. I have never seen a false beard, or toupee, or moustache, or hirsute appendages of any cut or make that did not cry aloud to the screen, "I am stuck on!" Some actors fool themselves that they look natural —I have heard them, and seen them—strutting about the studios and imagining that they look perfectly natural and human. But they don't fool anybody else. Even children note the falsity of the whiskers that don't move naturally with the muscles of the face. I have heard children remarking on the unnatural effects, often, and pointing them out with glee. And directors don't seem to give the subject sufficient thought, that is, a great many directors don't. They don't seem to make a study of the human countenance. The male human countenance, especially. If they did, there are several facts that would be more generally noticed.

For instance. A man's moustache is invariably lighter in shade than is the hair of the head; that is, before the hair of the head has started to turn grey. Yet, most actors will don a moustache either matching the color of their hair, or darker; and the result is that the moustacle is bound to look fake. Hair on the face is invariably lighter than the hair on the head.

And then, on the other hand, eyebrows are naturally darker in color than is the hair on the head; yet you will often see pure white eyebrows on the screen. Do you ever see them in real life? Why should there be such glaring disparities between real life and reel life? Are directors too busy, or is it that actors fear that they may be mistaken for amateurs if they are not obviously made up?

Why Wigs?

Why must wigs be worn at all? Why does a bald man don a white wig? He will look just as old without it, and will, moreover, look like a natural human being. But then, perhaps, he won't look like an "actor."

And why, when an actor is cast for the part of a Frenchman, does he invariably adorn his chin with a small "imperial"? How many men do we see with "imperials" parading the streets of Paris? I suppose it is for the same reason that the majority of foreigners picture the average American as resembling Uncle Sam. Well, we don't see many Uncle Sams running around loose!

It must be that some people cull their knowledge and ideas from the comic publications!

New Farnum Play Released

William Farnum has completed his Western picture for William Fox. It is called "Fires of Conscience" and shows vividly how a strong man can meet a strong man's test of honor. The photoplay is released for September 25, and was directed by Oscar C. Apfel. The script is from the pen of Henry Christeen Warnack, a Los Angeles dramatic critic. There are some wonderful bits of night photography in the San Bernardino Mountains in the picture.

"The Measure of a Man" has been completed by the J. Warren Kerrigan company at Universal City under the direction of Jack Conway.

BIG ASSOCIATION MEETING

Thirty-five Producers Attend—United Stand on All Matters by the Members of the National Association

Representatives of thirty-five of the largest producing companies attended the meeting of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry called by President William A. Brady and held in the association's headquarters in the Times Building, New York, on September 6. The purpose of the meeting was the appointment of various committees, one of which is to be devoted to each important phase of the industry.

The meeting was remarkable for the number of prominent men it brought out, among them being President Brady, World Film Corporation; Adolph Zukor and Jesse Lasky, Famous Players Lasky Corporation; P. A. Powers, Universal; William L. Sherrill, Frohman Amusement Company; W. E. Shallenberger, Arrow Film Corporation; Edwin Thanhouser, Thanhouser Films; Carl H. Pierce, Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company; H. K. Tootle, Gaumont Company; Randolph Bartlett, Brennon Film Corporation; John F. Miller, Niagara Film Service; W. J. Wright, Kalem Corporation; G. H. Wiley, Van Dyke Picture Company; Geo. Ridgewell, Sunbeam Film Company; L. D. Willis, Fox Film; A. Lorimore, representing Thomas H. Ince; Eugene B. Sanger, Sanger Picture Plays Corporation; Hamilton Smith; Chester Beecroft, representing Mr. Freuler of Mutual; Theodore Wharton, J. W. Buck, L. D. Wharton, Wharton, Inc.; P. A. Parsons, Pathe; Frank Powell, Powell Productions; Louis B. Jennings, American Film Laboratories; H. M. Goetz, Erbograph Company; Mr. Feely, Florida Pictures Corporation; Mr. LeVino, Arrow Film Company; J. O. Walsh, U. S. Motion Picture Corporation; Mr. Bolster, Vitagraph Company; Jesse J. Goldberg, Rialto; C. R. Macauley, Kineticartoon Corporation; W. H. Kembel, Brooklyn Triangle; William M. Seabury, General Counsel; Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary.

A united front upon such vital questions as censorship was also promised by President Brady, who stated that though some difference of opinion upon censorship existed among the members of the association, every one was agreed that the opinion of the majority should prevail.

Special efforts were urged to secure as many new memberships as possible from among those eligible who have not yet joined, with the result that seventeen membership applications were received at the meeting.

The election of an executive committee and the appointment of other committees was postponed until the meeting on Thursday, September 14, when this and other important matters will be taken up and the roster cleared of pending business.

William M. Seabury, general counsel, and Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary, were appointed as a committe to attend the convention of the League of American Municipalities in Newark, New Jersey, on September 7, and to learn, if possible, the kind of co-operation the mayors and other city officials individually desire from the motion picture manufacturers. P. A. Parsons was appointed a committee of one to secure co-operation from the trade papers in the way of proper mention of the meeting, its purpose, and the meeting to be held next week.

QUALITY BUILDS INDUSTRY

American's President Declares Pictures of Highest Possible Class Are Surest Means of Advancing and Stabilizing Film Business

By President Samuel S. Hutchinson, American Film Company.

Not because the public has become educated to demand and appreciate only the very best in story, plot, action, settings and photography, but because there is a good reason for the motion picture producer to constantly strive for betterment because of his desire and the desire of his associates—both workers and employers—to satisfy their ambition to advance, perfect and stabilize the industry.

Nowadays the success or failure of a photoplay is decided by the power or lack of power of the story. No matter how charming, beautiful, elaborately costumed or capable an actress or actor may be, no matter how well they have been advertised and established as a theater-filling star, the screen subject will fall flat if it does not have the innate virtue of the story value.

We will pay any price necessary for a story, whether submitted by a known or unknown author, if it has even a suggestion of a new, novel or unique possibility of plot. We employ a force of trained scenario writers, gathered through years of careful consideration and elimination, whose business it is to put plots and stories into workable form, whose knowledge of camerability and stage dressing, selection of locations and technique is thus applied.

The popularity of a star can be inestimably decreased by presenting her or him in a story which is not appropriate to their style or type, or a plot which lacks punch, and the all-important human interest or heart appeal, in addition to comedy possibilities.

Greatest care is given to the question of direction. Our directors are the best obtainable. Their knowledge of life, psychology, history, customs and folk lore is constantly being added to by diligent study and application of the events of the day.

Considering the importance of the motion picture as a means of manufacturing public opinion, its importance in the realm of educational literature cannot be overestimated, and the photoplay producers who will live and prosper are those who limit their operations to the class of photoplay which will gain the unequivocal approval of progressive thinkers the world over.

Chicago Exhibitors Get Big Films

Jones, Linick & Schaefer, the prominent Chicago exhibitors, have made the following interesting announcements:

"The Common Law," in which Clara Kimball Young makes her debut as a producing star, will be shown at the Studebaker theater beginning September 25. Preparations for a particularly interesting season are being arranged by Aaron Jones for this Michigan avenue playhouse.

The Universal Company's picture made from Jules Verne's story, "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," will open at the Studebaker October 9, for a run.

In arranging the program at the Colonial, it is more than probable that D. W. Griffith's new spectacle, "Intolerance," will occupy that playhouse beginning October 2.

Mr. Jones is in receipt of contract from New York which gives his firm the exclusive Chicago showing of the new Geraldine Farrar feature picture, "Joan of Arc."

Hodupp Makes Prediction

V. L. Hodupp, western manager for Pathe Exchange, Inc., is swinging round his circle of cities again and last week spent several days in Chicago. As a rule, he states, exhibitors are doing good business everywhere, the only exceptions being in localities in which infantile paralysis is getting a foothold. In most of these sections the houses are still running, but children under sixteen are prohibited from attending the shows. Toledo, states Mr. Hodupp, is hit by the epidemic just at the present time harder than any other western city.

The western manager made a very interesting prediction, when he stated that it is his belief that in the future the producers are going to "get together," either by combining their companies or by co-operating closely and efficiently in a business way. "Of course," continued Mr. Hodupp, "the independent producer and distributor and the state rights men will always exist."

Mr. Hodupp is well satisfied with the business being done at all the western offices of Pathe and was particularly enthusiastic concerning his new organizations at Cleveland and Indianapolis. His time in Chicago was taken up with general discussions with Manager Bunn of the local office.

Vitagraph Rejuvenates Prints

The Vitagraph Company has established a rejuvenating department for films at the Vitagraph plant. Prompt attention is given to all subjects returned for rejuvenation. This process keeps prints, regardless of age, in first-class condition. The exchanges will hereafter handle bookings so as to have the necessary time open on any prints which need to be rejuvenated.

Special Posters

Adhering to its policy of offering the exhibitor features that appeal to the vast majority of picture patrons, the Florida Feature Film Company paid special attention to the preparation of posters for their first feature, "The Human Orchid," realizing that it is necessary to first attract people into the theater.

With a large company of players, including Myrtle Gonzalez and Val Paul, Director Lynn Reynolds has gone to the redwood forests in the vicinity of Fresno, where a number of scenes will be filmed for his own five-reel photoplay, "The End of the Rainbow." Before returning to Universal City some scenes will be taken in the vicinity of San Francisco. The company will be away three weeks.

"Over-Production Evil Lessening"

PROBLEMS OF EXHIBITOR AND PRODUCER DISCUSSED BY A. W. GOFF

"WHAT is exhibiting, anyway? Can you tell me? Can anyone give an accurate definition of it? It's not merchandising; and it's not strictly a show business. There is an element in it which I have never yet heard expressed."

A. W. Goff, assistant general manager of the big new Vitagraph-V-L-S-E combine, was talking to a representative of MOTOGRAPHY at Chicago during Mr. Goff's stay in that city last week. He is making a "co-operative tour" of the western V-L-S-E exchanges and will visit—besides Chicago—Denver, Salt Lake City and San Francisco. Following the ancient custom of V-L-S-E he will consult carefully with the heads of each exchange, co-operate with them, and attempt to establish an even closer relation with exhibitors than ever before. Walter W. Irwin, general manager of V-L-S-E, is at present performing the same function in connection with the eastern exchanges.

Problems of Exhibitor and Producer

"The exhibitor has problems to meet and solve that are unlike those of any other business or show man," continued Mr. Goff. "His problems of program, film rental, reaching the public with a clean, strong appeal day in and day out, and, last but not least, of coming out at the big instead of the small end of the financial horn, are problems which form an element which has never been defined.

"And of course the producer has his troubles too—mighty big ones. The main trouble that exists in the motion picture business today is the fact that the cost of production of pictures has increased two and in some cases three times within the past three years. A feature which would cost $25,000 three years ago would total up to $50,000 or perhaps $75,000 now. But how much more is the exhibitor paying for his film rentals than he was three years ago? Very little. And that is due in part to the fact that in general he has not raised his admission price sufficiently to be able to afford to pay more for his shows. As a result the public is seeing better pictures than ever before by paying, in general, the same price. The picture-goer is getting an overflowing measureful of good entertainment for his money."

Over-Production Evil Lessening

The fact was then brought out that this condition is due in the main to over-production of films. Of course, the keen competition which the average exhibitor is obliged to meet also has a vital bearing on the condition. But scarcely anyone will deny that there are too many pictures being produced. Not only does the quality of the pictures suffer but the cost to the producer makes the game a case of the pace that kills. That is the very reason why, in Mr. Goff's opinion, the problem of over-production will in time untangle itself. It is already growing less. The small independent producer and distributor will inevitably be eliminated because, in order to dispose of his product, he sells below cost. Some of these independents are producing very good pictures. But in order to place them with the exhibitor—to sandwich them in with the big programs—they must satisfy themselves with a much lower price than is commanded by the big producer combined with a big distributing organization. The small producer will thus have a tendency to die off and relieve the condition of overproduction, though there will, of course, always be a few who are springing up and taking a try at the game.

With the evil of over-production lessened there will also come a lessening of the breakneck custom now in practice by the average exhibitor of running a show but one day. One showman does this now because his competitor does it. His competitor can do it because the pictures are available and because the salesman induces him to believe that he will make more money by the short runs. This is, of course, true with many theaters but not with the majority. It is the pace which kills, for the one-day run costs the exhibitor more rental than would the longer run, and because it means a tremendous consuming capacity which the producers have to meet at a cost of production which offers them a fine, roomy seat on the toboggan toward bankruptcy, and the public is getting the benefit, blissfully unconscious of it all.

"Say something about the new Vitagraph-V-L-S-E combine," Mr. Goff was asked.

"Well, sir, that company will form a more complete direct line of communication between the exhibitor and producer than has ever been established before. 'From script to screen' will be our battle cry of peace. We are going to be in direct contact with the consumer and will produce what he wants. We co-operate with the exhibitor in every way. We are going to book pictures according to the exhibitor's own method of booking. We are not going to tell him what he must do nor try to run his business for him. He knows his own business better than we do.

"In other words, we're going to take into account every bit of that indefinable something in the film business which lies between the show business and merchandising. We're going to attempt to hit that missing link and to eliminate some of the kinks of the trade which have a tendency to cause the most business troubles. Vitagraph will produce all its own films and they will flow through the well organized V-L-S-E channels directly onto the screen. Vitagraph is going to do some things which have never been done before in the motion picture industry."

"What about the cries of morally unclean pictures?"

"I don't believe in censorship, and the people who are always raising a fuss about something haven't anything else to do."

Brenon-Fox Trial in October

Herbert Brenon's suit against the Fox Film Corporation, to determine his rights to credit as author and director of the Annette Kellermann picture spectacle, "A Daughter of the Gods," will go to trial early in October. There have been erroneous statements that Mr. Brenon had lost his suit, owing to the fact that a temporary injunction against the release of the film without this credit was refused him.

HOW TO CARE FOR FILMS

M. H. Hoffman, General Manager of the Universal Exchange, Tells Where the Leaks Usually Occur, and How to Avoid Them

M. H. Hoffman, general manager of the Universal Exchanges, gave the following good advice to the Universal branch managers. First he asked them the questions:

"How often do you take inventory? What precaution do you take against films being lost? What checking system do you use to make sure that an account returns all the films shipped to him? Especially emergency shows. Do you know that it is more important to keep an especially good checking up on return of emergency shows than it is on new film? Because the new film is constantly booked, and if a reel should be missing it would be quickly discovered through a kick on the part of some exhibitor who was deprived of it. Whereas, when emergency reels are not returned they are never missed unless frequent inventories are taken and extraordinary care is exercised in following up the old film—Emergency Shows.

"Another leak that is apt to exist is when a lax record is kept of voided films. Do you know that when I was managing an exchange no one but myself could mark a reel void and throw it into the junk heap, and even then I chopped it up, or, better still, soaked it in water and put it in such condition that it could not be used by anyone for projection, so that if the employees intended to mark the film void with the intention of disposing of it his plans were frustrated and he was not likely to try that plan again. I mean to say that the manager should be extremely careful in appointing the man who is to mark reels 'void.' I have known a number of voided reels, or presumably voided, to appear in the hands of film pirates and robbers. It is that knowledge that made me extremely cautious.

"A third leak is where an office does any business with the U. S. Navy. They can seldom tell definitely when shipment will be returned, and when it is returned to some pier they are apt not to leave it until sold for storage, and then somebody picks it up and we wonder how Universal film got into their hands.

"About a year and a half ago, while managing the New York exchange, I was notified that there was a shipment waiting for the Universal company. I didn't know of any shipment that was due us, but I knew that it belonged to some Universal exchange, therefore investigated, and found from the reel bands that it belonged to the Boston office. This was because the party in the Navy making the shipment didn't attach much importance to our division of exchanges, but simply knew that it was Universal Film, that the Universal had offices in New York, and therefore shipped Universal Film Company, New York."

"Fall of a Nation" Starts on V-L-S-E

The V. L. S. E. season of "The Fall of a Nation" opens on September 18 with bookings in more than a hundred houses throughout the country, according to L. G. Bamberger, acting assistant general manager of the Irwin organization. Mr. Bamberger, a popular official, is holding down the desk of A. W. Goff while the latter executive is making a month's tour of the V. L. S. E. Exchanges.

"The demands for 'The Fall of a Nation,'" said Bamberger yesterday, "are even bigger than the Greater Vitagraph people or the National Drama Corporation had anticipated. A feature of the opening will be week stands in Minneapolis, Utica, Birmingham and Atlanta. Ten houses in Brooklyn have already contracted for the film, in addition to a dozen in Manhattan and a goodly representation in the best paying towns of New York State. One Atlanta representative wires that he desires three prints and 15,000 more sheets of poster paper."

Director Joseph De Grasse, with his big Universal company, including his featured players, Dorothy Phillips and Lon Chaney, is engaged in filming the remaining scenes of his five-reel production, "The Place Beyond the Winds." Many of the scenes were made in Big Bear Valley, where De Grasse took a company of sixty players.

Screenshine

By Mel Ody

SCREENSHINE will be turned upon a certain segment of one of these fair pages every now and then as the spook stirs, and under its influence will appear many things and diverse—even your name, perhaps.

Now, if any feller is going to get mad at something we say, we make just one request—Do it by mail.

Turn on the sunshine, Sol.

SWAT WE CALL ORIGINALITY

Talk about community spirit, how about the Oklahoma exhibitor who gives a free admission for every 100 swatted flies brought to his theater? Housewives should fly to his arms in gratitude—and maybe they do.

The Washington monument has been used as a movie screen. The rock of Gibraltar will be next—if the insurance sign doesn't interfere.

"THE STUFF DREAMS ARE MADE OF"

"The immense set was completed in two days at a cost of $98,000.00."

One of the best things that ever happened to the Chicago Pathe office was when it got a Bunn on.

And there's at least one other Good man there too.

Harry Guest, editor of the classy little magazine issued by the Kunsky Enterprises in Detroit, is telling his friends the following news:

"The famous star arrived at ten o'clock Friday morning. It's a girl! And she will be co-starred with her two brothers, Harry R., Jr., and James Andrew Guest, in the editor's latest feature, 'Here Are My Children.' There is a continuous performance at the Guest home, day and night." (Special music too undoubtedly.)

Mrs. Mutual of Chicago is becoming exclusive. She has changed her place of residence from Mallers Row and is now dwelling in the Consumers Park territory where she has a whole acre to herself.

Exhibitors of the western states have been receiving through the mail from one of the exchanges a blank "United States Hunting Licence" advertising a certain serial. "All laws of dignity suspended for two weeks," the card announces. "Busted buttons cheerfully sewed on." The idea is a clever one and we trust none of the exhibitors will find it necessary to do some tall hunting when he comes to look in the safe for his profits.

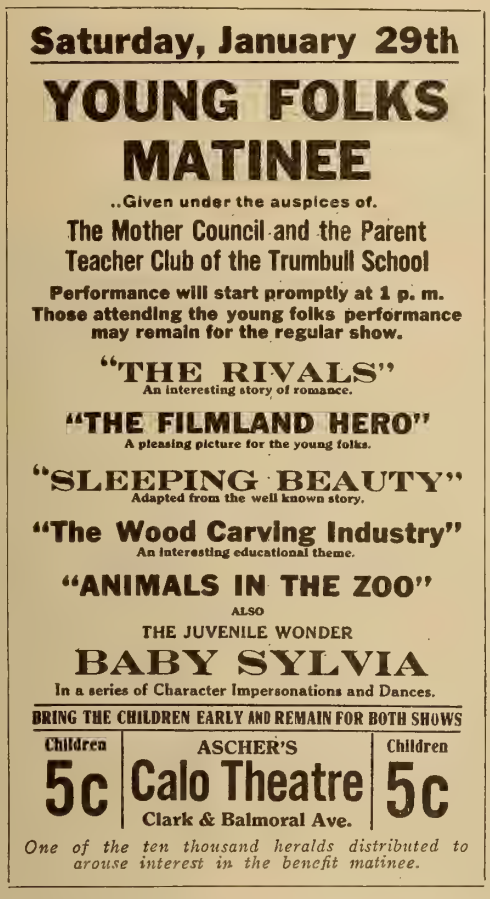
Children's Hour Aids Women's Clubs



BY J. B. KOPPEL
Manager, Calo Theater, Chicago, Illinois

I HAVE often been asked "Do you cater to the children?"

I always answer emphatically that I most certainly do or I would have no business. Exhibitors can say all they want to about not caring to have the children attend their theaters but if they eliminated the little ones they would kill their patronage. The kiddies are the best little advertisers and boosters for motion pictures that could be imagined. They are the ones who coax the whole family to the theater.

Realizing the value of endeavoring to please the younger members of the family and so gain their staunch support I decided to try the special performance for their benefit and inaugurated the first morning entertainment for children in a neighborhood theater in Chicago. I opened my theater Saturday mornings from ten thirty to twelve and ran a show especially for the youngsters. And right here let me say that too many managers who have failed in this experiment of catering to the children have not held their interest because they did not choose the right kind of pictures to amuse the little ones. Don't be everlastingly trying to educate them; give them some pleasure. After they have attended school for five days in the week surely they are entitled to a little amusement on Saturday. On the other hand, don't insult them by offering babyish pictures. They are just as capable of intelligently enjoying a good picture as their parents and the twelve-year-old child does not want to see fairy stories all the time. They have outgrown these fantasies and want real plays with good plots. There are plenty of stories released on regular programs which are very enthusiastically received by the children. You can hear their laughter for a block away when they see Charlie Chaplin, and they have a deep and enduring love for Mary Pickford and Marguerite Clark. Dustin Farnum is also a strong favorite. Films like "The Bugle Call," with William Collier, Jr.; "The Little School Ma'am," with Dorothy Gish, and others of this calibre, have a direct appeal to the child. Of course, in the children's entertainment you are dealing with all ages from the little three-year-olds to about fourteen and fifteen and have to give a varied program to please all. The little ones, in fact all of the children, are highly amused with the cartoon comedies. They also like travelogues, comedies and some industrial films. It is a comparatively simple matter now for the exhibitor to get a variety of subjects which will appeal to the child. But do not make the mistake of thinking you must reach down to their level. They realize the good in films.

My Saturday breakfast matinees were a great success for a while, as long as the novelty lasted, and then the attendance began to fall off. I accounted for this by the fact that in my neighborhood most of the mothers do their own work and are too busy with the housework on Saturday morning to stop and get the children ready, and also in many cases they want the children to help them with the little things about the home on their only day free from school.

Therefore I tried devoting the whole Saturday afternoon performance to the special matinee. This overcame the difficulty of getting the children ready so early in the morning and brought more of them out. But I soon discovered it was killing my Saturday afternoon business. There was a great dropping off of the steady patronage of the older people and the girls and boys of from about sixteen to eighteen, who had been attending this matinee for they were not attracted by the class of pictures I was showing the children. So I compromised and tried to strike a happy medium by giving the children an hour immediately preceding the afternoon performance. And this solved the problem. I gave the children what they wanted, brought out many of the older people as well for the special performance and my afternoon matinee again resumed its usual proportions. As soon as the children's hour was over I started on my regular afternoon performance. I will admit that most of the children stayed through for the afternoon also, for although I announced by a slide that the children's show was over and asked them please to leave and in some cases spoke from the platform, saying the afternoon performance was about to begin and those who had come only for the special program would please pass out, only a very few left. This did not seriously affect my afternoon business, however, for as we run a matinee every day in the week, the Saturday afternoon attendance is not so much greater than any other day and the theater is large enough to take care of them all.

The little folks use this children's hour as a means of entertaining their friends and almost every Saturday there is one or more theater parties composed of from four to twelve children. Sometimes they give a luncheon first and finish up with the special performance.

I cannot sympathize with the theaterman who complains because the mothers and club women will not work with him, for I have had very gratifying co-operation and support from the women's clubs in my neighborhood. The public school for the district has a wide-awake Mothers' Council and a Parent-Teacher Club and both have been especially interested in my programs for the kiddies. I am very glad to have their support and to do all I can for them in return. I have been every now and then giving a matinee for the benefit of these clubs and allowing them one-half of the profits to help in their work in the school. At this performance I allow them to choose the program themselves and they also sell the tickets. I attend to the advertising, using the newspapers extensively, issuing special heralds which are distributed to the school children as they come out of school on Friday afternoon and showing announcement slides on the screen. For these matinees the charge is ten cents. The women sell the tickets among their friends, many of them disposing of from fifty to one hundred. The children are also given tickets and for each ten they sell they receive one free admission. In this way a great many tickets are put into circulation and the house is always crowded, which means a nice little profit for the clubs and for me, as well as widespread advertising for the theater.

This co-operation of the women and these benefit performances have been very potent factors in the success of my theater. They have enlarged my patronage and solidified it and have contributed greatly to the success of my special hour for the children. Consequently where many managers have tried the special entertainments for children and failed, I have run them successfully for a year. I stopped them during the summer because the bathing beach and other out-of-door amusements, also the families going away on their vacations cut down the attendance. But I have started them again now that school has opened and shall run them during the entire school year.

Of course there is not as much profit in a children's matinee as in a regular performance but even if one only clears expenses they are well worth the effort for they are the greatest little publicity schemes that the manager can have. Word of mouth advertising is the most valuable kind and the children not only carry the news of the theater to their parents but spread it wherever they go. And if in addition to the support of the children the co-operation of the influential and progressive women of the neighborhood can be obtained the results are all that could be desired.

FIRST ARTCRAFT FOR OCTOBER

Mary Pickford Productions to Be Distributed Under New Policy of No Solicitors—Feature Will Establish New Standard of Lavishness

Direct and personal communication between the branch managers and the exhibitors is the policy decided upon by Walter E. Greene, president, and Al. Lichtman, general manager of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, distributors of the Mary Pickford productions. They intend to employ no solicitors to carry the Pickford doctrine to the exhibitor as they believe that live and loyal branch managers can accomplish better results by direct and personal communication than by the formation of a large organization of traveling subordinates.

In accordance with this policy, every exhibitor in the country will receive from the Artcraft manager in his territory form blanks on which to make application for bookings of Mary Pickford productions. Accompanying these forms will be a letter, which reads as follows:

"This is to formally announce that this organization is now distributing all of the future productions in which the incomparable Mary Pickford will appear.

"There will be not less than four nor more than eight master productions featuring this celebrated artiste released during the year beginning October, 1916.

"Each production will be not less than six nor more than ten reels in length and will each average about $250,000 in cost.

"It is Miss Pickford's desire that every theater in the land be given an opportunity to exhibit her pictures and to fulfill that desire and to give you an opportunity to arrange for the exhibition of the Mary Pickford productions we are herewith enclosing application blanks which kindly fill in and return to this office immediately.

"It is our intention not to employ solicitors. Therefore, if you want to arrange for the exhibition of the Mary Pickford productions, give the enclosed application your immediate attention."

Production is proceeding so rapidly on Mary Pickford's first feature as an independent star that the Artcraft Pictures Corporation expects no postponement of the tentative October date set for its release. Miss Pickford has directed than no expense be spared in the making of the production entitled "Less Than Dust" and the picture will set a new standard for lavish production.

John Emerson, who is directing the picture, describes it as a picturesque and appealing story of modern India. Miss Pickford appears as a little English castaway who is regarded by the superstitious natives as in reality "less than the dust" beneath their feet.

There are more than forty important characters in the new production. The principal roles will be played by David Powell, Frank Losee, Mary Alden, Mario Majeroni, Cesare Gravina, Francis Joyner, Russell Bassett, Walter Morgan and Mercita Esmonde.

The services of hundreds of extras have been enlisted for the ensembles and zoological collections have been drawn upon freely for the animals desired. Many of the superstitions which still survive in India are portrayed and for big effects a native rebellion against the English furnishes the thrills.

Two V. Comedies on General

On September 18 Vitagraph will release "A Perfect Day," a comedy produced at the Bayshore studio, through the General Film Service. It will be followed on September 22 with another one of the Hughie Mack comedies written by Lawrence Semon and Graham Baker and produced by Semon. Hughie's latest effort to reduce his avoirdupois is entitled "Sand, Scamps and Strategy."

This former Brooklyn undertaker has been putting his fat personality over so consistently recently that his name alone has come to mean great comedy stuff. Of course due credit must be given to Hughie's confederates; to Patsy de Forest and to the willowy Eddie Dunn and to the agile Frank Brule.

"Sand, Scamps and Strategy" sets a pace for fast and furious fun that even the agile Hughie and his comedy pals will find it hard to live up to. By the time they get through spinning the villain on the old mill wheel and blowing him and his rascally gang to smithereens by setting fire to the powder house, they are fit subjects for a sanatarium.

"A Perfect Day" relates in comic sequence the trials and tribulations of a party of picnickers bound for a day of pleasure. They find it—not.

Marshall Stedman, engaging director at Universal City, has been working seven days a week for months.

Kansas City Screen Club Opens

EXHIBITORS AND EXCHANGEMEN GET TOGETHER IN LIVE ORGANIZATION

By H. E. Jameyson

THE film men of Kansas City have just opened the new headquarters for the Kansas City Screen Club. The rooms occupy the entire floor above the Columbia theater, one of Kansas City's finest houses. The quarters have been well furnished and equipped, and forms now one of the finest clubs in the city.

The idea of a screen club sprang simultaneously into being in the minds of several Kansas City film men several months ago. At that time Charles Hardin, one of Kansas City's pioneer showmen, had just returned from the South, where he had been connected with Fox, to take the Kansas City Metro office. He talked so enthusiastically of the Atlanta Screen Club that many exhibitors and exchange men got interested. In the meantime E. R. Pearson of the V-L-S-E office—always a leader when it comes to progressive ideas—was turning the question over in his mind and had reached the conclusion that a screen club was just what Kansas City needed.

Two glimpses into the Kansas City Screen Club. Above, the billiard room and below the classy and comfortable parlor.

So when these two promoters met, the screen club was as good as organized. It only remained then to get the exhibitors and exchange men together. The opportunity occurred shortly. Dick Travers, Essanay's leading man, was visiting Kansas City and R. O. Proctor, who was then manager of the General, was preparing to leave. A stag dinner was arranged as a farewell dinner to Mr. Proctor, and a "get acquainted" dinner to Mr. Travers. The screen club strategists then sprung their coup, and before the crowd had left they had collected about three hundred dollars in cash and pledges toward the club. In this connection a great deal of credit must be given E. C. Mills, then of the Mutual and now with the Interstate booking agency, for the organization of the club.

Rooms were secured and the work of remodeling was rushed at top speed. Charles Hardin proved his value in this connection. He worked marvels with the money on hand.

The House Warming

On the evening of the opening, exhibitors and exchange men were invited to bring their wives, families and sweethearts. The result was that the fine decorations of the club escaped attention, while the feminine portion of throng that filled the rooms were "given the time of their lives." It will be the policy of the club on every Friday night to hold "open house" for the exhibitors and their families. On Tuesday night of every week a business meeting will be held.

The club rooms contain an assembly room, furnished with elegant carpets and wicker furniture. The next room is the billiard room containing two tables. A lounging and reading room follows. The last two rooms are reserved for the buffet and dining room. There is also a ladies' dressing room equipped with dressing tables and other articles dear to milady.

The walls of the club are decorated with splendid pictures of screen stars donated by the various exchanges. In the assembly room so far there is but one man's picture. That is of "Dick" Travers, who is charter member No. 1 of the Kansas City club.

The officers of the club are: Frank Newman, of the Royal and Regent theaters, president; vice-president, R. C. Cropper, manager of the Universal exchange; second vice-president, John Hicks, manager of the General exchange. L. J. Scott, publicity man for V-L-S-E, is secretary; E. R. Pearson, manager V-L-S-E, treasurer; and George Bowles, Universal publicity man, historian. The boards of directors consists of L. A. Landow, Charles Hardin, Metro; F. I. Buckingham, Apollo; and E. E. Richards, Wonderland.

OCHS WARNS EXCHANGES

National President of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League Cautions Exchange Managers Not to Place New Burdens on Exhibitors

Lee A. Ochs, national president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League has sent out the following warning to all clubs and associations of exchange managers announcing that the exhibitors prefer amicable relations with them but will stand up for their own rights.

"I hear that the exchange managers of this city have met recently for the purpose of organizing. If this were their only purpose I would have no further comment to make. From what I learn, however, it would seem that their purpose in meeting was to devise ways and means of placing new burdens on the exhibitor.

"At the present their courage does not keep pace with their desire and they all hesitate to take the first step in open antagonism to the exhibitor. It is proposed among other things to increase prices all along the line and to screw up the minimum charge for features to an absurdly high figure, but I am glad to learn that some of the managers are not in favor of the anti-exhibitor policy outlined at the meeting.

"Some of the managers and assistant managers, however, are a great deal like the mice in the fable. All of them thoroughly agree on the necessity of putting a bell of warning around the cat's neck, but none of them are anxious to perform the service.

"In regard to this association and all other associations that may be formed of a like character, I want to serve notice right now, not on behalf of myself personally but on behalf of the organization, which has elected me national president, that the first man who openly consents to any coercive measure against the exhibitor will have cause to rue it.

"We are not looking for war. Our organization is merely trying to adjust the balance of influence and power between the various branches of the industry for the benefit of the whole industry. The day for coercing the exhibitor is gone. Men who still live in the days of 1909 ought to lose no time in revising their chronology and bringing themselves up to date. If they cannot do that, the sooner they get out of the business the better for themselves and the industry at large.

"I personally have on numerous occasions aided branch managers and assistant branch managers when they were out of work and have often been at pains to secure employment for them, and in addition secured them business so that they could make good. I want to say that the moment any of these men put themselves in a position of avowed hostility to the exhibitor I will request them to stay away from my office altogether.

"In conclusion I can only state we want peace but we believe in preparedness."

Stories of Girl Reporters

The thrilling adventures that have happened to girl reporters on metropolitan newspapers have occasionally been told in fiction or related in Sunday supplements, but only recently has anyone had the foresight to collect some of the most vivid of these stories and adapt them for motion pictures. The Niagara Film Service, some weeks ago, commissioned Miss Edith Sessions Tupper, widely known as a newspaper and magazine writer, to collect a series of real adventrue stories among the girls who are today doing newspaper work. She succeeded admirably.

Every story that Miss Tupper wrote was based on real fact. They have now been filmed in a series of fifteen episodes of two reels each and will shortly be released through the Buffalo Times Newspaper Syndicate. The serial will be called "Perils of Our Girl Reporters." George W. Terwilliger, an old newspaperman himself and widely known as a director of motion pictures, produced the series and the Niagara Film Service told him to go the limit in filming the stories. Terwilliger has been making the pictures in different parts of the country and has produced dramatic effects as startling as they are interesting.

Earl Metcalfe, one of the best-known leading men in the country, has the chief male role throughout the series. Miss Zeena Keefe, whose clever work with the Vitagraph and World Film Companies in ingenue roles has made her very popular with picture fans throughout the country, and Miss Helen Green, a former

Such a laugh as that of Miss Zeena Keefe, leading lady in Niagara Film's "Perils of our Girl Reporters," sure is contagious.

Lubin star, will share honors in portraying the girl reporters. Others in the cast include such well known screen players as William H. Turner, Arthur W. Matthews, Edith Sinclair, Mabel Montgomery, Louis Huntington, Julia R. Hurley, George Arvine, Felix Hainey and George Richards.

Director Terwilliger has so arranged the stories that while each episode is a complete story in itself, there is a connecting thread running through them all which makes the series doubly interesting and holds one's attention from beginning to end. That the series will attract wide attention throughout the country is the prediction made by all who have had an opportunity of seeing some of the episodes. The stories differ from anything so far produced on the screen and the thrilling realism of them is astonishing, especially when one knows that every story is based on an actual adventure that has been lived by some girl on a metropolitan newspaper.

"The Message to Garcia"

A combination of circumstances which brought a print into the New York branch of Triangle too late to catch the last express shipment to Schenectady for the day necessitated the sending of a special messenger from New York to the up-state city with the print for that evening's show. Following is part of the exhibitor's letter of appreciation:

Gentlemen: I wish to thank you very much for the spirit in which you delivered my show today. In sending a special messenger all the way to Schenectady, you have shown plainly what you think of your customers. I was one of the first exhibitors of Triangle pictures and I hope to continue to be a steady customer. Wishing continued success to Triangle, I am sincerely yours,

J. J. Walker, Proprietor Lincoln Theater,
Schenectady, New York.

Director Burton George's five-reel production of "The Isle of Life," has been finished at Universal City.

Cleveland Houses Raise Prices

BEGINNING September 1, the three East End first-run theaters of Cleveland raised their admission prices. The theaters are the Alhambra, Knickerbocker and Metropolitan. Their prices had always ranged between 10 and 20 cents. The Knickerbocker now charges from 15 to 25 cents. The Metropolitan follows suit, as will also the Alhambra as soon as repairs now being made are completed.

A combination of causes brought about the admission price increase which first-run exhibitors have known for months was inevitable. Downtown first-run houses, the Strand, Orpheum and Standard, have charged the 15 to 25 cent scale evenings, Saturdays and Sundays for some months.

All summer, however, the East End houses maintained the 10 and 20 cent rate, despite the falling off in attendance due to extremely hot weather and the gradually increasing cost of first-run features.

Managers have called the attention of the public to the fact that in the face of these profit killing conditions, they have in no way lowered the standard of their houses. In each of the three theaters affected by the coming increases orchestras have been maintained at full strength and all forms of house service have been kept up to the winter season point. Foremost among the causes for the high cost of pictures, is the boosted cost of production. Instead of the cost of features to exhibitors being lowered, there is said to be every evidence that it will go still higher. Even during the quiet of the summer months the cost has been going up gradually, and with the fall season, Cleveland exhibitors look for still further jumps.

On top of this, the musicians' union made demands for wage increases. These had to be met by the exhibitors, and the only solution was the admission price increase.

Here is a miniature view of the New Albany, a first class New York house. Observe the beauty and distinction added to the front of the theater by the "canopy," which architects call a "marquis," above the entrance. The house seats 600 indoors and 1,200 out of doors. It is located at St. John's Place and Albany Avenue. William Beardt is the owner.

Tell This to Your Patrons

A mighty good point is brought out in an editorial by Harry R. Guest in the last issue of Weekly Film News, published by John H. Kunsky, Inc., of Detroit. It refers to the subject of tastes and every manager would do well to call the attention of his patrons to the matter from time to time. Mr. Guest says:

"Perhaps the play has not pleased you, and you come out of the theater saying, 'Punk!' or maybe 'Rotten!' You must remember that tastes differ. The thing that does not appeal to you may prove intensely interesting to someone else.

"Picture plays are sometimes bad, of course; but they are rarely all bad. There are redeeming details and scenes that are not always taken into consideration when you render hasty judgment.

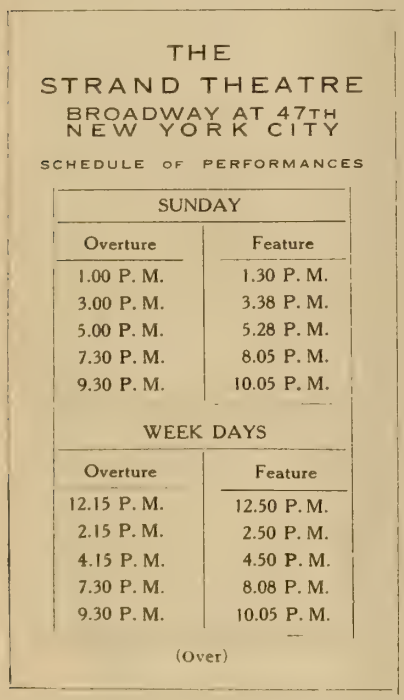
"In going to see a picture play you should remember that you are viewing for a small sum a filmed production that even in the lowest approximate cost represents an outlay of at least $5,000. There is the initial price for the story, the salaries of the cast, the cost of the stock, the developing expenses, advertising cost, etc. Remember, also, that the director and the actors have planned and worked for you; that they are endeavoring to please you. They put their best into the play you see. If you see it intelligently you will find good in it."

William Fox Builds 5,000 Seater

William Fox, the motion picture magnate, has leased for a term of forty-two years one-fourth of the block front on East Fourteenth street, between Third and Fourth avenues, New York City. The rental involved is in excess of $2,000,000.

The property begins 290 feet east of Fourth avenue and extends to within 175 feet of Third avenue, giving a frontage on Fourteenth street of 145 feet. The lease runs through to East Thirteenth street, a depth of 206 feet, with a Thirteenth street frontage of 150 feet.

Mr. Fox intends constructing the largest motion picture theater in New York on the site. It will have an entrance on Fourteenth street, with stores on either side of the entrance. These stores will have a depth of 65 feet, equipped with all modern appliances. The building will be absolutely fireproof and will be designed by Thomas W. Lamb, the well-known architect. Building operations will begin immediately.



The theater will have a seating capacity of approximately 5,000 persons, and advantage will be taken of the experience gained in the construction of the modern picture theaters throughout the United States. Mr. Fox intends that this theater shall excel every similar house in the country.

Many of the old landmarks of Fourteenth street will be wiped out through Mr. Fox's building operations. His lease includes 126, 128, 130, 132, 134, 136 and 138 East Fourteenth street. At 126, 128 and 130 is the Dewey Theater, which was owned for years by the late Timothy D. Sullivan, and in the same section was Thesis Music Hall.

When to Arrive at the Strand

A common cause for complaint among motion picture patrons is that they never know just when to arrive at a theater so that they can see the feature from the beginning and not start in at the middle and grope for the thread of the plot. When the climax of the play is seen first the beginning becomes an anti-climax and the true value of the story is lost.

To overcome this difficulty the management of the Strand Theater, New York City, issues a little card the exact size of the illustration, on one side of which is printed a detailed schedule of performances for week days and Sundays, and on the back of which is shown the order in which the different parts of the program appear.

a pocketbook or a pocket where it can be consulted and the theater reached at exactly the psychological time.

"Undoubtedly the great improvement in the production of moving pictures," says Alfred de Manby, late personal assistant to the managing director of the "Rialto," New York, "is due to the increased artistic perception of the producer and in presenting these masterpieces to the public the directors of moving picture theaters must see to it in the future, if they intend to outdistance their rivals, that the men in charge should possess atmospheric, artistic and technical ability in compiling their programs and the general running of their entertainments and houses. Men who will strive, and who are bound to succeed by these means, in compelling the attendance of the public by creating the attribute of 'atmosphere,' or the elusive 'it.' This can be done by means of music, stage settings, decoration and special lobby displays."

For the Children on Pink Slip Nights

By Bruce Godshaw

Manager, Cosmopolitan Theater, Chicago, Illinois.

A great many of my patrons complained because they were kept at home with the children on the nights when I was showing films under the "No children admitted" sign. They had no one with whom to leave the children and so they could not attend the show themselves and I lost all that extra revenue.

Although I do not run many pink slip pictures I cannot abolish them entirely because some of my patrons ask for them and I have to please all. But at the same time something had to be done to take care of the mothers and fathers who would otherwise have to stay at home because they could not bring the children. I therefore devised a scheme which allowed the parents to come and at the same time took care of the children so they were perfectly safe and happy during the time the show was going on. There was a vacant store a couple of doors from my theater and on nights when children were barred I rented this store, put in a sand pile and some toys and a maid in attendance and allowed all the children to be left there free of charge. They had a good time playing together, they were perfectly safe and at the same time the parents were free to come to the performance at the theater. I found that the increase in my box office receipts on these nights as soon as this scheme was put into operation more than covered the expense of the rent for the store and the cheap toys bought to amuse the little ones, and I was also "in solid" with the parents.

A House in the Cotton Belt

Down in the cotton belt there is a little theater which runs shows four times a week. This house, the Pastime, is at St. Francisville, Louisiana, and is managed by Peter Trocchiano. The town has a population of only about two thousand, but most of them take to pictures as a child does to candy. Whenever Alice Brady or Theda Bara are in the performance, says Manager Trocchiano, the people fill all his seats and overflow out into the village street.

All the first class producers are represented on the Pastime's program, particularly World, Fox, Triangle and Bluebird.

Every Friday about one hundred and fifty programs are sent out to patrons, via boy. These are the advertising folders furnished by the producers, with an attached slip giving the time of presentation of the picture in question and a general advertising talk to get people to come to see the feature.

Director George Cochrane is making at Universal City a two-reel drama, "The Little Outsider," featuring Molly Malone and Jack Nelson.

Commercial Credit the Exhibitor's Due

CREDIT extended to a man who has neither property nor reputation is a speculation, without the rewards that speculation promises. There may be, and indeed we all know there are, motion picture exhibitors who cannot, by any twist of commercial logic, claim the privileges of credit. This need not mean that they lack the qualities necessary to the establishment of credit, but merely that possible creditors have not become convinced of their possession of those qualities. Lack of property is not a bar to credit if reputation be present, and lack of reputation often means nothing but lack of acquaintance.

Credit, originally founded on hard and fast conditions of property possession and successful record, has gradually expanded to the consideration of character as a primary factor. Character, of course, depends upon past performance, because creditors are not clairvoyant, and need some records for their guidance. Nevertheless, it is not the uninterrupted career of success that alone commands credit. If there be failure in the record, the conditions which brought about such failure have bearing upon the granting of the credit which may assure future success. J. P. Morgan, the elder, is quoted to the effect that character alone, without commercial record, would justify the loan of a million dollars.

It is never expected that the ordinary demands of trade credit need consider the extreme refinement of financial credit contemplated by Mr. Morgan's comment. Trade credit consists merely of recognition of the debtor's ability and desire to pay later what it is inexpedient for him to pay now. That he has always paid his debts at the appointed time is accepted evidence that he will do so in the future. Character enters the equation here because we know if a man is absolutely honest and "square," he will never rest until his debts are paid. Trade credit, therefore, is a simple thing, dependent upon factors that are already known.

If we said a little while ago that there are many exhibitors who are not entitled to credit because they have not yet established the credit essentials, we say now that there are many exhibitors who are entitled to credit—and do not get it.

When we find an exhibitor—as we have no trouble in doing nowadays—who has a permanent investment in ground and building, a record of successful operation, and a reputation for financial squareness, it is quite plain that he is entitled to as free a credit as any other business man with a similar investment, record and reputation. The tendency is to withhold that privilege from him.

This operates greatly to his disadvantage by hindering the expansion of his business, the working out of his ambitions for growth and the establishment of a permanently better service to the public. By so hindering and hampering his possible operations, those who might be his creditors bind their own business into definite and narrow limitations.

It may be argued that the show business—that fine, large term that embraces so many things—is not accustomed to credits in the sense that they are used in other industries, and that therefore the motion picture business can do very well without them. But the motion picture business, if it please you, is bigger than any part of the show business, and enjoys a substantiality that the show business never had, however gaudy its trimmings. The modest owner of a five thousand dollar theater has a better place in commercial society than the owner of the biggest circus or the finest traveling company. He is a merchant, with all the privileges, duties and responsibilities of a merchant. For the picture business is not a minstrel show; it is an industry, one of the largest in the world, and the exhibitors with their little and big investments and their confidence in its future have made it so.

There is work ahead for the National Association in seeing to it that those exhibitors who have complied with all the unwritten rules of credit receive the benefits of the position they have established.

The Employe in the Picture Business

ONE is often moved to believe, with some little feeling of cynicism, that all the world is stage-struck. Omitting for present purposes all consideration of the feminine contingent, whose histrionic dreams are too well known to excite remark, we observe that a respectable percentage of male human beings who have focused their ambitions upon the picture business aspire to enter it by the stage door. It is fortunate, indeed, that in the business of playing many are called (that is, they think they hear their names) but few are chosen.

In considering the opportunities in the motion picture field for a young man of excellent character with no bad habits and willing to work hard, and all the other qualifications that properly belong on an application for employment, the eager aspirant is apt to overlook the laws of supply and demand, which apply just as surely to jobs as they do to jams and jellies. The picture people are overworked turning down applications from fellows who want to be actors, their qualifications consisting of a handsome or a homely face, a figure either perfect or funny, and a big wish. Even the man with real talents has to make a lot of noise about them to be heard above the riot.

Meanwhile splendid opportunities in other departments of the work are not going begging by any means, but nevertheless are lying wide open for the man who can show fitness for their duties.

Salaries in the picture business are generous. The executive end promises as easy a climb as any business, and rather greater reward at the top. Even the mechanical departments offer unusual interest and allurement to the employe, besides his pay envelope.

But it is the romantic figure of the director of productions that must hold the eye of the really ambitious worker in the lower ranks of picture making. For the director is, to many minds, the mainspring of the whole apparatus, the chief engineer of the plant. If his labor is arduous—and it is—his rewards in salary, satisfaction and happiness are likewise great.

"The average course for the training of a doctor, engineer, lawyer or kindred professions is four years with, perhaps, in the case of the doctor, a year or so of practical work," says Christy Cabanne, Griffith director. "To become a motion picture director with a thorough knowledge of stagecraft and the mechanics of photography takes at least seven years. I know that is the time I have devoted to it and yet I do not believe that I have by any means a thorough knowledge of motion picture direction. To have such a knowledge a man would have to know all the scenario writer, the camera-man, the laboratory expert, the actor, and even the exhibitor knows. Not one of my classmates has any where near the income that the average motion picture director has and I will wager that not one of them stays on the job from seven in the morning till anywheres up to midnight like we do. I know of no profession that offers a better opportunity to the young man of ideas and ambition."

The very obstacles in the way of attaining to the heights of directorship serve to clear the way for the strong by eliminating the unfit. The fact that a man must have real brains and force and ingenuity and quickness, that the position carries that brand upon it, is a spur to ambition. For here no ordinary, mediocre, average man can hope to make any lasting mark.

There is no royal road to a directorship, but there are several gateways at the foot of the hill. The scenario editor and his staff writer, the camera-man, the player, even the mechanical workers of the studio are the possible directors of ten years hence.

But picture plant employes cannot all become directors, nor need they regard that office as all that is desirable. The whole field bristles with opportunity for the employe; opportunity that will grow greater and more reliable and more attractive as the industry becomes older and more staid.

"Split Reel" Notes for Theater Men

HOW OTHERS ARE STEERING THE SHIP

THERE are at present eighty cases of infantile paralysis in Toledo, Ohio, and as a result the health authorities have barred from the picture houses all children under sixteen years of age.

C. C. Pyle, general sales agent of the Bartola Musical Instrument Company, has returned from his vacation, spent at Mackinac.

J. D. Verhalen has taken charge of the publicity department of the Minneapolis branch of the Famous Players Film Company.

Half a floor at 145 West 45th street, New York, is now being put into shape for the quarters of a new film rental concern known as the Dispatch Film Corporation.

Here's another woman theater manager. Mrs. Viola Brown is the owner and manager of the new Royal Theater at Oneill, Nebraska. She uses both pictures and vaudeville acts.

The sales force of the Central Film Corporation of Chicago now includes Phil Dunas, formerly of Bluebird; Ed Mordue, late with the World; Jack Schwartz and Sidney Goldman.

James Martin, manager of the Magic Theater, Fort Dodge, Iowa, has changed the policy of his house and will hereafter combine Pantages circuit vaudeville and pictures in his program.

"Hulda from Holland," Famous Players production of Paramount Pictures, when presented at the Regent Theater, East Liberty, Pittsburgh, broke all records for attendance at the theater.

Children's programs are to be started soon at the Clifford Theater at Urbana, Ohio. These will run on Saturday afternoons and will consist of fairy stories, comedies and travel films.

Manager R. S. Shrader of Pathe's Indianapolis office recently held a "live wire" contest. Salesman J. W. Shawcross won the inscribed cup by producing the greatest results in the given time.

H. P. Paxton, formerly connected with the advertising department of the International Harvester Company, is now in charge of the publicity department of the Famous Players Film Company, Chicago office.

Nicholas Power, inventor of Power's Cameragraph and president of the Nicholas Power Company, has returned to New York from Lake Bomoseen, Vermont, where he has been spending the summer at his country home.

The Logan Square Theater, on Milwaukee avenue, Chicago, is now managed by Leon Slessinger, who formerly was director of the Strand Theater of Toronto, Canada. The Logan Square handles both pictures and vaudeville.

The features showing at the New York theaters are Rialto, William S. Hart in "The Dawn Maker"; Strand, Dustin Farnum in "Parson of Panamint"; Criterion, "Civilization"; Maxine Elliott's "Is Any Girl Safe?" and Liberty, "Intolerance."

Another good example of co-operation between theater and newspaper is found in Toronto, Canada. The Strand has made arrangements with the Star Weekly to print reproductions of the pictures taken by the Strand news service throughout the city.

Patrons help select the programs at the Knickerbocker Theater in St. Louis. Manager James J. Barrett issues a fine program containing a coupon which the patron signs and hands in. It gives the sort of pictures preferred and the patron's favorite actors and actresses.

The Famous Players Film Company has established a publicity department in each branch office of the company to take care of local advertising and news service, and to co-operate with the main office in sounding the praises of Paramount in general, and the Famous Players in particular.

The Motion Picture Interests' Alliance of Chicago, composed of representatives of the Exhibitors' League, Chicago producers and exchanges, motion picture clubs and publications, has issued a letter to exhibitors and the trade in the Windy City furthering the candidacy of Robert R. Levy, an exhibitor who is running for the office of assessor.

On September 30 the last of the features and music of the "Cinema-concerts" at Orchestra Hall, Chicago, will fade into the past to make way for the regular season of concerts by the Chicago Symphony orchestra. H. W. Hill has managed the house during the summer for Wessels and Voegeli.

The woman's church federation of Chicago has divided the city into districts and will place a committee in charge of each section to watch the sort of films shown in each theater. The federation has several times objected in its reports to the character of many of the plays produced and shown.

The Rialto Theater Supply Co., of Minneapolis, who lately took over the Kriterion and the General Film Service, has added the Laemmle Film Service to the list. This company, which is headed by Sid Lewis, will not only equip a theater from cellar to roof, but will keep it supplied with good pictures.

A meeting has been called for the Branch Committee of Class 5 of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, at the headquarters in the Times Building, New York City. The class in question includes every person or employee in any branch of the motion picture industry not otherwise specified in the by-laws. The object of the meeting is to elect an executive committee for the Miscellaneous Branch Committee, and such other committees as those present deem advisable.

Watterson R. Rothacker, president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, has completed a motor trip from Chicago to New York and return. Mr. Rothacker and party made the trip through Canada on the way east, and on their return motored through the Berkshire Mountains.

William Conklin, who was featured as "Illington" and the "Brute Man" by Pathe in "Neal of the Navy," also a number of their Gold Rooster plays, has just joined the Lasky Company and is playing a leading role in "Joan of Arc," now in the making.

Jeff Irvine, manager of the publicity department of the Rolin studio, has gone north to Seattle, Vancouver, Tacoma, Portland and Spokane, to interview exhibitors who run Lonesome Luke's pictures, and also to see the various Pathe managers along the route.

The opening of the New Hamilton Theater, Lancaster, Pennsylvania, was heralded by the issuing of invitations gotten up in the regulation according-to-the-fashion form in which George M. Krupa, the manager, requested the pleasure of your company at the opening of the theater on Monday, September the eleventh.

Al Steffes, manager of the Northern Theater, Minneapolis, has asked for $1,300 damages and an injunction restraining the Minneapolis Operators' Union No. 219 and the International Association of Theatrical Stage Employees from picketing in front of his theater and injuring his business.

William Lowitz, chief pianist of the Strand Theater orchestra, New York, has composed "The Strand Overture," which has several times been rendered in the house. It is dedicated to Mitchell Mark, president of the Strand Theater Company. Mr. Lowitz is the composer of several light operas and has toured the country at the head of a concert orchestra.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Cleveland is having some difficulties to meet of late in handling the demand of the operators' union for increased wages. An exhibitors' committee has been appointed to work with the Federation of Labor in an attempt to settle the matter, as arbitration with the operators has failed. The committee is composed of Ernest Schwartz, chairman; S. Aubrey, John Sliney, Henry Lustig, W. J. Slimm, S. F. Deutch, Sam Bullock, William Miller and Benjamin Sawyer, president of the League.

There is a Japanese exhibitor in Canada. His name is M. Oyama and he is located at Stevenson, a small fishing village near Vancouver. He recently was unable to return his films after his Saturday night show. Knowing where they were booked for Monday he himself took the reels and paper and made the trip to the second theater, in another town, on Sunday, asking no reimbursement for his trouble although his actual expenses had been fifteen dollars. And thereby hangs a splendid example.

The downtown theaters in Chicago for the week of September tenth were showing the following programs: Colonial, "Ramona"; La Salle, Tyrone Powers in "Where Are My Children?" Studebaker, Robert Warwick in "Friday the 13th," also Billie Burke in "Her Vow Fulfilled"; Orchestra Hall, Louise Huff and Lottie Pickford in "The Reward of Patience"; V-L-S-E, Orrin Johnson in "Light at Dusk"; and Fine Arts, William S. Hart in "The Return of Draw Egan."

The boys at the border will be entertained with motion pictures through the Army Y. M. C. A. The film industry has made a gift to this organization of a film service for the Mexican border camps which has a rental value of about $30,000 a month. Russell Binder has been appointed secretary of the Y. M. C.. A. Border Motion Picture Service, with headquarters at Dallas, Texas. Thirty motion picture machines have been purchased and most of them are already installed in the Y. M. C. A. buildings.

In conjunction with the showing of the Vitagraph V-L-S-E feature "My Lady's Slipper," at the Pastime Theater, Toledo, Ohio, the manager created a novel advertising stunt which brought an enormous business. Cardboard cutouts in the shape of a modern dancing slipper were distributed all over the neighborhood in connection with a contest whereby the Pastime Theater gave out a pair of beautiful slippers to the lady who could wear size 1-AA. The slippers themselves were placed on display in a factory shoe store and the drawing population were canvassed with the slipper cutouts. The shoe store also distributed these cutouts to their patrons and filled their window with them.

When Sam Rothapfel got back on the job at the Rialto recently after a five-day trip to Indiana, he thought for a moment that some one had slipped a new pipe organ into his theater while he was away. Anything the organ had ever done before sounded almost half-hearted compared with what it was doing now. Then he remembered that the original scenic background, which was made of re-inforced plaster three inches thick, had been ripped out during his absence and replaced by a set of transparencies. The plaster had cut off the sound from several groups of pipes and when it was removed the organ proceeded to let out a roar of relief which shook the auditorium.

Exhibitors Call on Central Film

Recent vistors welcomed at the offices of the Central Film Corporation, Chicago, were Carl J. Mueller, Spencer Square Theater, Rock Island, Ill.; J. M. Lyon, Castle Theater, Bloomington, Ill.; J. F. Alman, Avon Theater, Decatur, Ill.; J. E. Condon, Star Theater, DeKalb, Ill., and A. Sigfried, Bijou Theater, Decatur, Ill.

Aaron Jones and Nathan Ascher have just returned from a week's trip to New York in the interest of Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation.

Harry Weiss, general manager of the Central Film Corporation, has left for a two weeks' automobile trip in the interest of his firm. Mr. Weiss expects to cover about 1,500 miles in this trip and visit the principal towns in Indiana, Illinois and Kentucky, and incidentally close up some important contracts on the Clara Kimball Young proposition.

First Aid to Theater Men

BY S. L. ROTHAPFEL

THE return of the families from their summer vacations and the opening of the new season with the exhibitors seems to have given rise to many variations of the time worn question of the child and the motion picture theater. Most of the letters received this week deal with some phase of this ever present problem.

64—There is an ordinance in our town to the effect that children under fourteen years of age cannot attend motion picture theaters in the evening. And this rule is making liars of the children and a lawbreaker of me. I am anxious to live up to the letter of the law in all things but if there is any man who can tell by looking at a child between the ages of thirteen and fifteen just how old he really is he has more of a detective's eye than I have. And the children of thirteen and fourteen know that if they tell the truth they will be turned away from the show so they lie complacently. But the children are not the only ones; if the parents want to see some particular picture and cannot come unless they bring the family with them, they also will swear falsely as to the ages. This is a difficulty from which I can see no way out.

This is a problem which I do not think can be solved by the exhibitor alone. He must have the help of the parents. And if the parents will not co-operate with him he is perfectly helpless. With half-grown children it is impossible to tell just how old they are and if the parents uphold them in their prevarications there is absolutely nothing to be done. You might try appealing to the honor of the parents by running an article on this subject in your program, if you issue one, and calling attention to the fact that they are not only breaking the law every time they allow the child to enter but they are also encouraging the children to be untruthful, and solicit their co-operation in this matter.

65—I have recently come to the conclusion that I do not blame apartment owners for making a rigid rule that absolutely no children are allowed in their buildings. I would like to make an arbitrary statement that no children are allowed in my theater. My patrons have been very much annoyed by the children lately. Their fond and doting parents think everything they do is "so cute" and pay no attention when they race up and down the aisles during the performance, or talk at the top of their voices. Generally when they come in they run with all the noise possible from the door to the very front seats of the house, and everyone's attention is distracted from the screen. The worst time is the Sunday afternoon matinee. Then the parents send the children to the theater because they are tired of their noise around the house and five or six of them come tramping in at a time. Do you think it would kill my business if I absolutely refused to allow any children in my theater under twelve years of age?

I most certainly think you might just as well go out of business as to attempt any plan of excluding children under twelve from your house. The theaters of the east which have been closed to the children on account of the infantile paralysis epidemic are very good examples of the value of the children's attendance. As you know, many of the houses have been closed entirely and in almost all of them the business has been so very poor that they have been pretty close to the rocks. And in the east they had a very legitimate excuse, it was not the fault of the management that the children were not admitted. If you arbitrarily, of your own volition, and just because you are annoyed by the action of the children, make such a rule I firmly believe that you too will have to go out of business. You will have the rancor of the whole neighborhod aroused against you.

Even if the children do irritate you they are a necessary nuisance to the theater man and you might just as well start with that idea and set to work to find some way of minimizing or eliminating this annoyance entirely. Start a slow but sure education of both the children and the parents. You probably cannot handle this at once but you can start on the missionary work which will eventually bring the results desired. Where the children come with their parents it is a much harder problem to handle than when they come alone. You do not want to antagonize the parent while you are trying to control the child.

When the children come alone instruct the usher at the door to ask them kindly as they come to the door not to run down the aisles but to go as quietly as possible because they might disturb the people watching the picture. A gentle reminder of this sort will go a long way toward eliminating this nuisance. A great deal of the success of the suggestion, however, will depend upon the manner in which the little ones are approached. Also instruct the ushers to speak to any group of children who are talking too loudly or fooling and giggling and so annoying the people around them. Or if you are on friendly terms with the children who attend your theater it might have more effect if you would speak to them yourself and ask them not to disturb the people who want to enjoy the picture.

The education of the parents will have to be done more indirectly. Have a slide shown between each performance calling attention to the annoyance caused by the children. This will have to be very tactfully worded, however, or you will immediately make enemies both of the parents and the children. Start out by saying you are always glad to have the children attend the performances and infer that you know they have not realized they were disturbing the other people in the theater and suggest that they talk softly and do not run up and down the aisles. Also run a little notice in your program to this same effect, but here also make it a very polite and veiled suggestion that you want better order among the children. You might even say a few words on this subject from the stage at two or three performances.

I think you will find that systematically keeping after the matter in this manner will bring results. Change your slide from time to time as the conditions improve and also change the announcement in the program. But be very careful that you do not allow your attitude of feeling the children are a nuisance and that you would like to get rid of them entirely to show in your manner or in your notices. The spirit in which this is done will have a very decided effect in the good results attained.

66—I am a tenderfoot exhibitor, in fact have just opened my theater, and find every day that there are more and more angles to this business and an appalling amount of things I don't know. I expect I shall be making you my father confessor and sending you a regular weekly letter of inquiry if I shall not wear out your patience by so doing. Can you tell me whether there is a regular law which prohibits children from attending motion picture theaters when a pink slip picture is being shown, or is the exhibitor simply compelled by the Board of Censors to put up the "No children admitted" sign to warn parents that they should not allow the children to see the picture? If the parents come with the child and are willing he should see the film then isn't the responsibility shifted from the shoulders of the exhibitor to those of the parent, and isn't it perfectly proper to allow the child to go in?

Do not hesitate to come as often as you are puzzled. I will be glad to receive two letters a week from you if I can be of assistance to you in this way.

I do not know just what law is in force in your city but in almost all cities there is a definite ordinance covering the admission of children to a theater where a "No children admitted" sign is displayed. The Board of Censors decide what plays shall be issued under a pink slip permit and the law backs up this decision by prohibiting children from seeing all films so labeled by the board. It makes no difference whether the parent is willing to allow the young folks to see the film or not, the responsibility still rests with the manager of the theater, for if he allows the child to go in with the parent he is breaking the law and will have to suffer the penalty set by the city ordinance for allowing this. The penalty will not be directed against the parent or the child but against the exhibitor. It is just to protect the children of such thoughtless or neglectful parents that this ordinance was passed by the city authorities.

67—I have been approached by four or five of the candidates for different offices in the approaching municipal election asking that I run slides of them on my screen and so help in their campaign. Some of them simply want slides showing their picture and telling why the people should vote for them and others want regular motion pictures showing them addressing a crowd of people or simply standing up and talking and then showing reading matter telling what their platform is and how well qualified they are to fill the office they are after, and so forth. Of course they are willing to pay well for this and it would mean a little extra revenue for me. Do you think it would be out of place to run them?

Personally I am averse to any kind of advertising on the screen of a motion picture theater. I think it is decidedly out of place, and outside of some announcements—as few as possible—concerning the coming attractions at the theater or some statement concerning the policies of the management, would abolish all slides from the screen. If you accept any of these pictures of candidates you will have to take all that come, for as a community theater you should be impartial, for if you show one candidate and not the others all the friends and supporters of the other man will be angry. In your public position it is necessary that you be neutral. So if you start this at all it would mean that a great deal of time would be taken from your regular show for the exhibition of these slides. You, of course, understand your audience and know how much they will allow you to presume on their good nature with slides of this kind but to me it seems rather an imposition for the people to pay their money to be entertained with pictures and then have a political campaign foisted upon them whether they would or no. If you must have that extra revenue and are determined to show these candidates, at least choose the lesser of the two evils and show simply the slides and not the motion pictures.

PICTURE CONTROL IN JAPAN

Strict and Unreasoning Censorship Prevails—Same Inconsistency in American Methods of "Moral" Regulation—China Has Better Method

Japan, the home of the Geisha girl and renowned for its free policy in matters of public morals, has with much inconsistency, established an official pre-publicity censorship of motion pictures. For the information of English-speaking people the Japanese authorities have translated their regulations. The version which has reached America is amusing and reads as follows:

The main points of police authority control on cinematograph films. (Having standard on the low class spectators who have poor common sense.)

1. Films about the prestige of the Imperial or Royal family.
2. Films seemed to teach the most clever criminal actions.
3. Films which show the opposition of the rebel against authority, or which show the defeat of the authority.
4. Films which show the cruel torture or brutal penalty for good men otherwise even for bad men. (For instance, the burning at the stake.)
5. Films seemed to arouse low passions.
6. Films to induce children to do various way and sorts of mischiefs.
7. Films show the last success of bad men or bad means.

There is inconsistency of similar kind in America wherever censorship is being agitated. Demand for official censorship of motion pictures usually proceeds from persons who fail to realize that a far greater public need is adequate regulation and supervision of pool rooms, dance halls, burlesque houses, and like resorts, many of which exert a positively bad or crime-producing influence upon the public.

Some people, too, still confuse the character of the motion picture houses with the character of the films. Progressive communities have established proper requirements with reference to the hygienic and lighting conditions in motion picture theaters and the seal of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures attests to the harmless nature of the films.

As a second line of defense, local villages and municipalities can control film exhibitions from their own standpoint through their license departments, by saying to the motion picture exhibitor that his license will be revoked if the character of his exhibitions runs counter to local public opinion in the matter of morals. Unregulated pool rooms and not infrequently those that are under control, public dance halls, particularly those of the lower type and cheap catchpenny shows are unquestionably a source of juvenile delinquency, while the assertions made in some quarters that the film induces crime in children has never been adequately sustained.

Eighty-one cases of juvenile crime said to have been inspired by motion pictures have recently been investigated with the result that but one authenticated case could be found in which legal evidence could be secured, naming the film and the theater in which the alleged incentive to crime was seen.

China is pursuing a much better course than Japan. A large committee has been formed in Shanghai consisting of educated Chinese and Americans who, as an unofficial body pass upon films. The movement is being led by the Y. M. C. A. Large motion picture companies are co-operating by showing their films to the committee.

The Photoplay Scenario

CONDUCTED BY B. F. BARRETT

Former Editor of Photoplay Scenario Magazine.

Note—This department will appear hereafter in each issue of Motography, and will treat of all subjects of interest to the photoplaywright—whether amateur or professional. You are invited to suggest any subjects you desire to have discussed, or ask questions on any matters relating to the writing of photoplays which have been puzzling you. The department is also open to you at any time for the expression of your own ideas or the submitting of ideas of others which have helped you, and will be interesting to other photoplay writers.

The Action of the Photoplay

By Will M. Ritchey

THE photoplay script has been worked out by its writer past the introductory scenes and fairly well into the main body of the theme. If he is an expert, he has blended introduction and story so skillfully that the exact dividing line cannot be distinguished. Or, like other practiced authors, he has boldly introduced his players by "close-ups" and sub-titles, and has then plunged into his story. Either method is proper; but the story and the length of the picture must determine which is best to use.

Still using the example of the country youth whose adventures in the city form the basis of our plot, we have started our picture by telling the audience who he is, and bringing him to the point where the real action of the film drama begins. We are having him look for work we will say, and only for purposes of illustration, are using the hackneyed situation of the destitute youngster and the wealthy benefactor.

The youth was on a park bench in our last scene. He was discouraged, hungry perhaps. How are we to bring him and the benefactor together in a way which will appear natural and at the same time have a novel twist which will interest the audience?

Right here instruction ends, and the screen writer must be left to his own resources and imagination. He must decide for himself what to use; he cannot invent something entirely new, but can give a new angle to an old situation. To try to suggest some novel incident for another's use would not be possible—and if it were, the very act would end the novelty.

But having brought the two together, the writer has all the resources of the studio, the camera and of fiction at his command. Through successive scenes he shows the youth at first laboring in subordinate positions. Perhaps, if his film is to be a short one, he relies on a sub-title to narrate the boy's advance to a position of responsibility. If he has time, and the details are worth the film-footage required, he injects "human interest" or "atmosphere" into his scenes of his hero's climb to fortune.

But in all this he must be careful not to write anything into his script which will break the thread of the main story—cause his audience to forget for the moment the major plot while being told of a minor happening.

WORKING UP THE CLIMAX

The screen script has progressed through its introductory stages, the author has woven his plot through the steps of the conflict, and has brought them to the crucial moment. Now, how shall he best develop his climax so that his audience will feel the struggle going on between the principal characters?

In the first place, it is difficult to draw a line between two widely varying methods. One is that of suspense—the keeping of the audience in ignorance of what is next to happen. The other is "letting the audience in" on the secret—letting the collective him know all about it, so that he may have a closer, intimate interest in the fortunes of the people of the play.

First consider the method of suspense. You must be very careful in striving for this, not to cloud your story so that it is hard to follow. In other words, each step must be understandable and logical, even if it has not been foreseen. But having arrived at the biggest moment in your play, if you can devise some new twist to the story, it naturally will take the audience by surprise and by its very newness may make your story a success.

The other method will bring just as big returns, if properly handled. By this I do not mean that the story should be trite or obvious. Nothing would be more fatal. It is possible, however, to tell a new story in such a way that the next development may be anticipated and still be of interest. Taking the audience into your confidence means that you are sharing with him the pleasures of working out your plot, and if you and he are of the same mind at the same time in the duration of the play, why, so much the better. Nearly all plays come under the observation of, "Why, I knew all the time how it would end." Of course. If it is a love story without any tragic feature, naturally one knows that the hero and heroine will be happy at last. There is all the difference in the world, however, between having the stereotyped "kiss finish" and having your love story run on smoothly and yet with fresh novelty.

Why Blame Only the Film Companies?

WHICH is unjust—the film company or the amateur writer?

According to the scenario editors the writer is the culprit.

According to the author the producer is the guilty one.

The following letter written by an amateur photoplaywright is typical of the attitude assumed by many neophytes.

If you will pardon my annoyance I think there are reasons not touched upon very strongly for lack of scenario material. I would ask you to answer these questions:

How is a scenario writer to know what is the matter with his script when it is simply returned as "Not available"? (These words alone used.)

How is the writer to know that his manuscript has had a fair and just reading?

After months of hard work surely the fault cannot lay at the door of 50,000 writers as a lot of boneheads. Then whose door? I think it is very unjust on the public. The writers should demand an explanation as to the cause of rejection of scripts. It is altogether too one-sided without any redress.

I would suggest that all companies should stamp their seal as an affidavit on all returned manuscripts, with the signature of the reader of same to show that they have given them a fair and just reading, and state the cause for rejection. Why not compel the companies to give an explanation? How is the young writer ever to know how to write a photoplay that will be accepted without these questions being answered?

After reading two or three letters expressing these same views one involuntarily exclaims, "May the Gods have mercy upon the persecuted film companies!" The writer is calling for fair play but what he really wants is a special dispensation of providence for himself and others of his clan. What he evidently desires is to have the scenario editor rewrite his play for him, give him credit on the screen and send a nice little check for the privilege of training him in the art of writing photoplays. Here is a new profession open to the scenario editor—start a kindergarten for amateur photoplaywrights from which they emerge as full-fledged staff writers, without having to continue through the elementary grades.

Will it be the millennium before some aspiring literary geniuses come to their senses and realize that photoplay writing is a profession—a business—and as such should be run according to business rules? Why should there be an unusual and decidedly different code governing the business of photoplay writing than that of any other business?

"Why not compel the companies to give an explanation?" Suppose you were a farmer and took some apples to town to sell. Some of the apples may be of a very inferior grade, may have decayed spots in them which make them unsalable, while others may be perfect specimens of fruit which would attract the attention of any buyer. Immediately the marketman will pick out the good, sound apples, buy these and reject the others. He is buying this fruit to sell over again and can only use the best. But according to the writer of this letter he should be compelled to buy those decayed apples or if he refuses them he must give a detailed explanation of why he will not take the poor apples. He has no right to simply say he cannot use them. He must say why and scientifically explain in minute detail the reason they are not worth anything to him. This is an absurd example, you say. It is not one whit more absurd than the statement that the film companies have no right to reject manuscripts with simply a "not available" rejection slip.

The trouble with the majority of young writers is that they do not take into consideration the fact that they are only one out of thousands of people who are bombarding the studios with photoplays. If you were the only person sending in a script it might be possible for the editor to tell frankly why your play would not suit the needs of his company and give some hint of why the manuscript lacked merit. But doing this for a thousand a day is quite another thing. Also in too many cases the scripts are so thoroughly worthless that it would take too much time to tell all that was the matter with them. The readers are not paid to train apprentices, they are paid to be able to discriminate between good and bad material and they do so by rejecting the unworthy and holding the worthy. But there is always this salve for the wounded feelings of the young writer. Because a manuscript is rejected by a printed slip does not mean that it is entirely without merit. It may simply mean that it does not suit the requirements of that particular company. The second or third firm to which you send it may quickly return the check you desire instead of the rejection slip.

The difficulty with most tyros is that they are too easily discouraged—or perhaps "peeved" better describes their mood. If their play is rejected at the first market to which it is sent they immediately are offended and like a spoiled child declare that if they can't have what they want when they want it they won't have it at all. If they cannot sell this script to the first company they won't sent it out again to be so mistreated. Keep your work in circulation. If it has any merit send it to one company after another. After you have exhausted every available market then lay it aside and decide that the trouble is with you, not with the film companies. But do not expect the scenario editors to give you a liberal education in writing scripts—that is not their vocation in life. Like the storekeeper they cannot buy goods that are decayed or imperfect for the public in turn will not buy such inferior products from them.

I am not claiming that the film companies are giving the free lance writers absolutely fair treatment for there is much room for improvement along this line—but I do claim that the free lance writers are just as much to blame for not giving the film companies any better treatment and in many cases not as fair treatment as they are receiving. They say that they want this relationship to be fair but their attitude would lead one to believe they want it one sided with all the favors on the side of the writer.

Nevertheless you can compel the film companies to read your plays. You can compel them to tell you why they reject your manuscript. But you cannot do this by force. You can only do it by producing something so good that they will want to read every word of it. You can compel them to tell you why they have rejected your play by making it so meritorious that they will want to help you and give you suggestions so that your future work will be available to their needs because you have something which they want.

Before you condemn the film companies, look to yourself. Before you censure the actions of others be sure your own actions will bear inspection. Remedy your own faults first and you will find that the producer will suddenly have many less faults. If you want a square deal yourself be sure that you give a fair deal in return. And don't be blinded by your own self-conceit to the extent that you feel that you cannot improve upon your work. If your first four or five scenarios do not sell do not blame it to the producer and say he has done you an injustice because the stories are probably only fit for the waste basket. By the time you have written your fiftieth photoplay you will yourself laugh at these first puny efforts and ridicule your own conceit at thinking anyone would buy those amateurish efforts.

International Not Buying

The name of the International Film Service, Inc., 729 Seventh Avenue, New York City, was unintentionally omitted from the list of film companies published in this department recently. At the present time this company is not considering any material from outside writers.

"Teddy" Roosevelt has just completed a bit of acting for the screen. But it was in news films which will be used in the Hughes presidential campaign.

The Universal Nestor Company is filming "Six Days" under the direction of Louis Chaudet.

Changes in Vitagraph Program

E. H. SOTHERN HAS NARROW ESCAPE IN STORM

IRVIN COBB'S first photoplay will be a Vitagraph production endorsed by the American Bankers' Association as a valuable asset to its national campaign on "Thrift." The title of this production was previously announced as "The Adventures of Bill," but it has been decided to change this to "The Dollar and the Law," as one better calculated to attract the public. Wilfrid North is the director of this feature, which will be a December release, and Lillian Walker is playing opposite Mr. Cobb.

The Greater Vitagraph has determined to move forward the date of "The Combat," starring Anita Stewart, from October 9 to September 18. By special arrangement with the New York Exchange, the new Flatbush Theater, Brooklyn, opened Labor Day night with "The Combat," and could not accommodate the crowds that flocked there. It will not be shown again until the new release date, September 18.

"The Combat" is an example of the better superfeatures that the Greater Vitagraph is planning to release. Ralph Ince directed the feature, and supporting Miss Stewart appear John Robertson, Richard Turner, Virginia Norden and Winthrop Mendell. Of particular interest to the women patrons will be the array of beautiful gowns worn by the star in this production.

Anita Stewart Recuperating

Anita Stewart, whose recent illness alarmed her friends and admirers all over the world, is recovering her strength in the Catskill mountains and expects to return to her beloved work at the Vitagraph studio about October 1. In the meantime Director S. Rankin Drew is resuming scenes in "The Girl Phillipa" and will finish those requiring all members of the cast except Miss Stewart, and will pick up the scenes in which she takes part when she returns. Miss Stewart's eagerness to play in this Robert W. Chambers story is facilitating her recuperation. She is—to quote her—"perfectly fascinated" with the role of the Girl.

Vitagraph's Press Department Moves

One of the first moves that the Greater Vitagraph made was to get its press department under the same roof with its advertising and sales forces. This department, which is under the direction of Victor B. Johnson, now occupies quarters on the rear of the sixth floor of 1600 Broadway. Adjoining is the room occupied by E. Lanning Masters, who will be responsible for the advertising policy of the Greater Vitagraph.

Mr. Johnson will keep one of his staff at the plant to supervise the taking of genuine news pictures. He will also, it is stated, greatly augment his syndicate service to the newspapers of the country and co-operate with Mr. Masters in getting out a wide variety of exhibitor-helps.

In the American drama with a patriotic topic, as yet unnamed, which will soon be released on the Vitagraph program, Antonio Moreno and Peggy Hyland will play together for the first time. Paul Scardon is directing the production and besides the stars Charles Kent, Arthur Cozine, Mary Maurice and Gordon Gray will appear in the cast.

Sothern Has Narrow Escape

The film city, occupying two square blocks, which was constructed for Vitagraph's production, "An Enemy to the King," in which E. H. Sothern is starred, was razed by a 70-mile wind which struck the city and played havoc with the buildings. Mr. Sothern himself narrowly escaped injury. He was riding a horse at the head of a cavalcade of brilliantly costumed participants on a triumphal entry to the city when the storm broke and his horse was struck by falling timbers and so seriously injured that he had to be shot.

Naomi Brand Perfume

There seems no end to the honors which have been accorded the pretty Vitagraph star, Naomi Childers.

In the near future a new brand of perfume is to be placed on the market under Miss Childers' name, "Naomi."

This essence is to breathe the perfume of the most beautiful blossoms imaginable in order to be worthy of the name under which it is to be sold.

The market of this perfume bids ill for all other brands for the thousands of Miss Childers' admirers will be sure to refuse all others and that leaves but a small majority of the public to purchase the other tinctures.

New Florida Corporation Formed

The United States Film Corporation is the latest company to take advantage of the film possibilities in Florida. This company was organized and chartered under the laws of the State of Florida with the following officers: President, F. H. Michaelis; vice-president, Miss L. Abernethy; secretary and treasurer, Frank Custer.

An innovation of the company, which is located in Jacksonville, is the utilizing of the roof of its building for studio purposes. The first floor of the building is occupied by the offices of the company together with the dressing rooms, lavatories, developing rooms—elevator service affording direct connection with the studio on the roof.

Leah Baird With Universal

One of the best-known leading ladies of the photoplay world, Leah Baird, has rejoined the Universal Film Manufacturing Company and will be featured in productions made at the Pacific Coast studios. Miss Baird already has commenced work under the directiono of F. E. Kelsey.

Miss Baird has been working in pictures for five years. She had a great deal of experience in stock on the legitimate stage and was featured in "The Girl from Mississippi" and "The Mummy and the Humming Bird."

Miss Baird prefers heavy leads and she has an ambition to direct her own pictures. She has written a great many photoplays and is an intense reader of the best books.

ONE CANDLE FOR FROHMAN

Completion of First Year in Film World Celebrated by Frohman Amusement Corporation—Eleven Features Have Been Produced Another birthday was celebrated last week when the Frohman Amusement Corporation passed its first milestone, which marked the completion of a year of activity in the film world. The event was made gay by a quiet little luncheon at the Hotel Plaza at which William L. Sherrill, George Irving, Ralph Dean, Jack Sherrill, Jos. Schwartz and several of the studio force were present. Not one change in the personnel of the concern has been made during the year. Except for the addition of Harry Reichenbach as business manager and advertising head, the original staff remains just as it started one year ago.

Jack Sherrill in Frohman's "The Conquest of Canaan."

During the year eleven ambitious features have been created.

"The Builder of Bridges," with C. Aubrey Smith, released through World Film, is the oldest production. "The Fairy and the Waif" having been withdrawn from active use to the Frohman Company.

"Just Out of College" followed and became an open market feature. It was state righted and was one of the popular hits of its period, having registered the record for attendance at the Fine Arts Theater, Chicago, and having done exceptionally well elsewhere.

"John Glayde's Honor," released through Pathe and of such distinct merit that it caused a legal action in an attempt of another concern to secure it, was a distinct success and was followed by "Body and Soul," which World Film released and which is still one of the "big sellers" on that program.

Alice Brady, the noted daughter of William A. Brady, was offered by the Frohman concern in "The Woman in 47," which was also released by World Film. Later Miss Brady was presented by the Frohman company in "Then I'll Come Back to You," Larry Evans' famous adventure story, in which Jack Sherrill shared honors with Miss Brady.

"What Happened at 22," with Arthur Ashley, was the next Frohman enterprise and was also taken by World Film. "What Happened at 22" is one of the biggest successes on the recent "World-Brady" made program and amply illustrates the progress and thoroughness of the Frohman features.

"Jaffery," the noted W. J. Locke story, was sought after by every program in the field and was finally awarded to William R. Hearst for the International Film Service, Inc., and was deemed of sufficient importance by that astute newspaperman and his lieutenants in the film field to be made the initial feature release of the International.

"The Conquest of Canaan," now complete, will be seen soon on one of various programs which are in keen competition for it, and "The Witching Hour" is already in work and will be the forthcoming feature offering of the Frohman Company.

Withal, it has been a happy and profitable year for the Frohman concern. Their productions have featured many programs and those distributed by franchise medium have earned money for both buyers and exhibitors. World rights on the Frohman productions have mostly been disposed of.

William L. Sherrill and Harry Reichenbach, the active heads of the company, announce that within a few weeks permanent releasing arrangements will be announced. Mr. Sherrill states that he is, as yet, undecided about entering into contractural obligations with any program, preferring to allow the changing condition of the market to define the Frohman company's future policy.

During the forthcoming year nine high class features will be made by the company, with a larger output next year if the market warrants it.

"Intolerance" in Long Run

"Intolerance," the new D. W. Griffith spectacle which was introduced at the Liberty Theater, New York, a short time ago, remains there for a run. Like its predecessor, "The Birth of a Nation," Griffith's second effort leaped into popular favor immediately and gives promise of exceeding the record run of the former.

The thrilling manner in which the producer has linked his intense modern story to shifting scenes of earlier periods in the world's history proved a novelty that awoke New York from its rather blase view of current theatricals. In addition to bringing something new into the theater Griffith has outdone himself in the bigness and grandeur of his various scenes that lend a historical background to the human quality of his basic plot. The dash of a high powered racing car to save the life of his present day hero and its race with a flying train is the climax of his action, but in the unfolding of the main narrative he has dug beneath the surface of life and touched upon some vital questions with that unrelenting realism which the art form he has created gives him such ample scope to illustrate. His ancient, sacred and mediaeval scenes are wonderful in their comprehensiveness. The entire production is so big it stands out in unique contrast to anything ever undertaken in the theater.

Ricord Gradwall, vice president and sales manager of the World Film Corporation, is making a tour of the branch exchanges of the organization. He arrived at Chicago on Wednesday last and reports that he is optimistic over the future of the film business in general and of the World Film Corporation in particular.

Three splendid productions which have just issued from the American-Mutual studios. From your left, "The Sable Blessing," with Richard Bennett and Rhea Mitchell; "Youth's Endearing Charm," starring Mary Miles Minter, and "Three Pals," through which Kolb and Dill gambol with joy.

Another Laugh With Kolb and Dill

ANNA LITTLE AND FRANK BORZAGE STARRED IN "LAND O' LIZARDS"

ANOTHER Kolb and Dill laugh provoker heads the list of releases on the Mutual program for the week of September 18. "The Three Pals" is the title of the Mutual Star Production which forms a very satisfactory vehicle for the funmakers, C. William Kolb and Max M. Dill.

This is the second appearance of the comedians on the Mutual program under their contract with the American Film Company. The first Mutual screen release in which they appeared was "A Million For Mary," a comedy drama which has caused a great deal of comment since its appearance.

There is a touching mixture of comedy and pathos in "The Three Pals," just that mixture which brings a tight feeling to the throat at the same time it raises a laugh to the lips. And every good director knows that there is no laugh half so effective as the laugh with a tear in it. The eccentric, simple, honest Dutchman with the real friendship and concern of those who see them going trustingly into dangers. Their funny antics call forth a genuine laugh. And all comes out well in the end, which leaves a feeling of contentment in the minds of the spectators.

May Cloy, the charming actress who played the role of "Mary" at eighteen, in the first Kolb and Dill picture, is cast in the role of Mary Markham in "The Three Pals," and may it be said her role of the "third pal" is exceptionally well played.

The comedy drama was put in scenario form by Al Santell and directed by Rea Berger.

Anna Little as a boy—a charming, naive and graceful boy—will delight the eyes of her many admirers in the five-part Mutual Masterpicture of the week, "Land o' Lizards." The setting, as usual in the photoplays in which Anna Little and Frank Borzage appear, is in the western country, this time located near a stream which is rich in gold. Miss Little plays the part of "Bobbie" Moore, the daughter of old Dave Moore, a prospector, who disguises herself as a boy for her own protection against a band of lawless cowpunchers who infest the region, and to keep attention away from the operations of her father as much as possible. Mr. Borzage plays the role of a dashing young "Stranger," also a prospector hired to probe into the possibilities of the region by a wealthy Easterner. His interest in "Bobbie" as a boy quickly turns into love on the discovery that she is a girl.

The ruggedness and picturesqueness of the background of this picture forms an ideal setting for this virile drama of the rough life of the west where the only law is that of physical might.

Miss Little and Mr. Borzage are supported by a well chosen cast composed of Harvey Clark, Laura Sears, Perry Banks and Jack Richardson. Mr. Richardson is seen again, of course, as the villain.

"Land o' Lizards" was written by Kenneth B. Clarke, the short story writer, and directed by Mr. Borzage himself. It will be released on Monday, September 18th.

"The Mysterious Fingerprints," the third great big thrilling episode of the history in pictures of the workings of the world's greatest criminal, "Fantomas," will go out as a Gaumont-Mutual product on Thursday, September 21.

"A Flaw in the Evidence," a Thanhouser production, and "The Father of Her Child," a screen offering from the Horsley studios, compose the week's two-part releases and appear on Friday and Saturday, September 22 and 23, respectively.

Both are dramas of tense action and thrilling climaxes. The former is a detective story, and "The Father of Her Child" is a drama full of heart throbs and unexpected happenings, which keeps the spectator in suspense from beginning to end.

An unusually funny "Beauty" comedy will find its way to the public on Tuesday in "The Stinger Stung," a one reel laugh-maker in which Orral Humphrey as the editor of "The Beeville Stinger" gets himself into all sorts of scrapes with the ladies of two rival aid societies, with the local political boss and with the loafers club, who finally railroad him out of town.

In support of Mr. Humphreys appears Rea Berger, George Clancy, Bessie Banks and Lucille Ward.

The Vogue comedy release of the week is "Paste and Politics," with the inimitable Paddy McGuire again to the front in the leading role of billposter. In his task of pasting campaign bills for the anti-reformers he learns that the "boss" is planning harm for his opponent of the reform party, and does the one noble deed of his life in saving the leader of the reform party from disgrace.

"Movie Struck" gives George Ovey, the Horsley comedian, the chance of his life, and in this one reel "Cub" comedy of Friday, September 22, he does himself credit with a lot of new funny business.

The remaining releases of the week consist of the Mutual Weekly, No. 90, dealing with present-day happenings, and the scenic "See America First," Gaumont productions, both of which will be released on Wednesday, September 20, and the screen edition of Reel Life, the Mutual Magazine, by the same company, will appear Sunday, September 24.

WAR IN CHICAGO

Exhibitor Surrounded by Chinks Surrenders His Show —Orientals Enraged by Powerful Balaban-Hershberg Feature Revealing Chinese Conditions

Simeon ("Si") Griever is a much peeved young man these days despite the fact that "The Yellow Menace" got away to a flying start at the World Theater in the Chicago loop, and here's the reason.

The World Theater on Randolph street is entirely surrounded by Orientals—the King Joy Lo Chinese restaurant being on the east side, while the Hong Kong Lo Chinese restaurant is on its west and extends east over the theater—and there is an entire nation of them some few thousand miles directly below. Manager Seaver, of the World, owns the land and buildings occupied by both the theater and restaurants.

A war with China eliminated this striking lobby display. The World Theater, Chicago, is surrounded by Orientals and they forced Manager Seaver to say good-bye to his well-advertised feature.

A short time ago Mr. Seaver stopped in at the General Feature Film Company office and booked "The Yellow Menace." Then he arranged for an elaborate lobby display and heralded the picture's coming for an entire week. He even dressed some people in Oriental costumes and placed them out in front. As Mr. Seaver's Oriental tenants became aware of his intention of showing "The Yellow Menace" they protested mildly to him. Mr. Seaver made very little of these protests and passed them up without further consideration. However, the protests became more strenuous as time went on, and reached their climax when the Orientals declared that they would cancel their rental leases if he ran the picture. They maintained that if they permitted it to be shown it would result in considerable race hatred and a consequent loss of business to them. This final protest from the "Chinks" caused Manager Seaver to cancel the bookings for this picture. Both Mr. Seaver and "Si" Griever ask no further evidence to prove to them the actual existence of such a condition as "The Yellow Menace."

SERIES STILL DRAWS

Number of Houses Still Doing Good Business on "Who's Guilty?" the Arrow and Pathe Series Released Last May

With the coming of Fall and the return to the city of the millions who have spent the summer in the country, "Who's guilty?" the remarkable series produced for Pathe by the Arrow Film Corporation has taken a decided spurt and though it was released in May, it is now beginning to be booked almost as heavily as when it was first released.

This sudden increase in the bookings on a picture which has been on the market for some time is unusual. Many different reasons have been advanced for these occurrences. Some say it is because "Who's Guilty?" following "The Iron Claw" was so different that exhibitors did not know if a series would go, and also because the later episodes are stronger than the preceding ones and are regarded as the best two reelers ever made. Others say that the film is of a better quality than has been put into many continued pictures and that it took time for this fact to become generally known.

The branch managers state that these facts have helped but there is an even greater factor, the splendid exchange organization which Pathe has built up in the past six months, giving the exhibitors the film in such excellent condition and with such a generous supply of advertising matter that they realized it would be more profitable from a box office standpoint to show "Who's Guilty?" even though it was a few months old, than it would be to book mediocre pictures released more recently, without the advertising or the fine production of the Pathe series. These exhibitors realized that a film is always "first run" until it has been shown in their community.

W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, who made the pictures, says that while all exhibitors acknowledged the superior quality of the film, they did not believe that a series would draw as well as a serial. Now all the bigger houses have found that a series is a splendid thing for them. Naturally, when the bigger houses run a series, the advertising that they do on it makes it valuable for the small houses also.

Farrar's Newest Play

The whole film industry has been wondering for some time what the play is upon which the Lasky company has had Geraldine Farrar working all summer. The cat's now out, and a very attractive feline it is, too.

The popular American prima donna will be presented in an elaborate production as "Joan of Arc." Cecil DeMills himself directed the play, which should touch some new heights of photoplay art.

Pathe's Fashion Pictures Unique

TENTH EPISODE OF "THE GRIP OF EVIL" READY FOR PUBLIC

THE Florence Rose Pictures released by the Pathe Exchange mark the "something different" in fashion films. They do not simply show a few fashions on the screen but through them it is possible for the exhibitor, the newspaper and the store to co-operate to their mutual benefit.

Such fashion films as the Florence Rose Pictures stimulate the interest of the women in being well dressed and cause them to become readers of the paper and patrons of the theater using the fashion service.

The newspaper benefits through increased circulation and increased advertising revenue, because the retailers see the advantage of advertising heavily the goods shown in the pictures.

Women are interested in the films because of the clothes shown and men are more than willing to see them because twelve of the most beautiful girls in New York take part in them.

The Pathe Florence Rose fashions have a regular story, during which the heroine, Miss Florence Reuth, wears the ultra-ultra in modes. Here are two views of her and, in the center, a peep at one of her stylish and attractive chums.

The films introduce high-priced as well as medium-priced merchandise, thus catering to the tastes of all classes.

An idea as to how complete the service is is seen in these facts:

A list of theaters booking the pictures is supplied through Miss Rose to the retailers handling merchandise shown. They advise their customers to read the newspaper articles and to see the pictures and then the garments.

While women are interested in the illustrated articles published in newspapers, they are more interested in seeing the fashions in the films worn by living models. Exhibitors, therefore, see the value of co-operating with the newspaper.

A number of the biggest newspapers of the country have already been signed to use this service and live managers find that it is going extremely well with exhibitors.

The costumes shown in the Florence Rose Fashion Pictures—complete from head to foot and including all the garments in the up-to-date wardrobe—reflect the accepted, authentic styles worn by best-dressed women.

The Florence Rose Fashions is not a selling agency. Selections are made entirely on style and only the best and most authentic fashions are chosen wherever they may be found.

These selections are made by Miss Florence Rose, former Editor of L'Art de la Mode, also fashion writer of the New York Evening Mail and New York Globe.

Miss Rose knows fashions. She has selected them; she has created them, and she has made them. She knows women; knows what they want; knows what they should have, and knows how to get it to them.

A woman of unexcelled taste, good judgment and intelligence is, therefore, selecting real fashions—not the freakish and the bizarre—but the best fashions for the women of the country.

The newspaper articles are written by Mrs. Carolyn Trowbridge Radnor-Lewis, former Managing Editor of Harper's Bazaar. The drawings are by Winifred I. Messer.

Co-Operative Plan of the Film

Concerning her Fashion Pictures, Miss Rose says:

I find that manufacturers are glad to permit me to inspect their lines from which I make selections of women's wearing apparel that I know will find a ready market all over the country, bearing in mind that I must cater to all classes of buyers.

This getting away from the usual stereotyped fashion service which offers fictitious, imaginery styles that women cannot purchase even if they want to, is the strong feature of my service. Through this means a woman interested in any line of apparel illustrated can procure it from her own retailer in her city.

When inquiries come to me from the newspaper service I ascertain from the manufacturer whom he sells in that particular city. I then write the retailer giving him the name of the woman and a description of the garment she is interested in and also write the woman giving her the name of the retailer.

And while women appreciate the service for the reasons

mentioned, their curiosity to see how these clothes look on living models brings them to the theaters showing the films.

Knowing women as I do they will respond most readily to a desire to teach them "clothes sense," and that the film does. For, instead of giving a glimpse of the model (which other fashion films do) the Florence Rose Fashions show persons going their daily rounds,—shopping, to the theater, to the dance, to the roof garden; how to dress the girl at school, and other touches of human interest that appeal to men as well as to women.

Tenth Episode of Serial Ready

"Down to the Sea" is the title of the tenth episode of Pathe's masterplot in fourteen chapters, "The Grip of Evil," released the week of September 17. There is at the present time considerable interest in American shipping and the film is characterized by a timely story dealing with the get-rich-quick scheme of two unscrupulous business men and fine acting on the part of Roland Bottomley as John Burton and Jackie Saunders as Marjorie Rogers.

Fitzmaurice Directs "The Test"

No one has been identified with a larger number of successes in the spoken drama than A. H. Woods. He is a prolific producer and possesses an almost uncanny insight into that highly variable and intangible something known as "popular taste." There are styles in plays as well as in costumes. Mr. Woods, ever keen to catch the popular fancy, put out in "The Test" a play that did big business for two years. The public likes a story which shows a beautiful girl, forced to work for a living, assailed with temptation on every side, yet keeping mind and body clean. "The Test" has such a story. Put into a Pathe Gold Rooster play by George Fitzmaurice of the Astra it loses nothing of the life and color it had on the stage, and gains much by reason of the unlimited choice of backgrounds.

Jane Grey, the star, is a player with much personal charm, united with exceptional dramatic talent. She films beautifully. The supporting cast is excellent, comprising as it does Lumsden Hare, Claude Fleming, Carl Harbaugh and Inez Buck. Mr. Fitzmaurice, the director of the picture, earned golden opinions with his "New York," "At Bay," and "Via Wireless." "The Test" is worthy of being ranked with these productions, which, we are informed, have made much money for exhibitors.

Frank Powell Completes "Charity"

"Charity?" the first feature of the Frank Powell Productions, Inc., is rapidly nearing completion. This picture, which has been made from a scenario by Linda A. Griffith, will mark Mr. Powell's initial effort as an independent producer. In it appear Creighton Hale, Linda A. Griffith and Sheldon Lewis.

"Charity?" will shortly be ready for release on a state rights basis.

Second Mutual Minter Play

"Dulcie's Adventure," the second of the Mary Miles Minter features produced by the American Film Co., Inc., for release through the Mutual, has been completed and will go out to the public on October 2. James Kirkwood, the director, may be depended upon, of course, to get the most that can be gotten out of a picture.

The most painstaking care has been given to the costuming and the setting of the picture. Whether in the garments of a poor lonesome little white girl, not allowed to play with the neighboring pickaninnies or the "poor white trash" in the antiquated hoop skirts deemed fashionable by her Aunt Netta, or in her gorgeous imported white satin wedding gown which crowns the picture, Mary Miles Minter is perfectly gowned. The atmosphere of "Dulcie's" prim southern home, then of the gay and dissolute social life among the pleasure seeking millionaires in the colony in California gives a contrast of setting to the picture, which Mr. Kirkwood has made the most of.

There are many touching scenes, including both the little "Dulcie" at home in her sunny southland, and the sad little "Dulcie" away on her enforced adventure in search of a millionaire. There are the stolen games with the white children of the neighborhood, only to be discovered and reprimanded by the two aunts; there is the scene where "Dulcie" must return the pet squirrel given her by the grocer's boy and her only companion; there are the plans for her enforced marriage to a man much older than herself. But the ending, when her grocer's boy comes and claims her and takes her back again to the south makes up for all that.

"Dulcie's Adventure" is permeated by the charm of the little star. It promises even to surpass the popularity of "Youth's Enduring Charm," her first Mutual release.

Awarding of Prizes Postponed

The awards in the $1,000 scenario contest conducted by the Boston Traveler and the Atlas Film Company were not made on September first as promised because with the great flood of manuscripts received it was impossible to read them all by that time. The readers of the scenarios say that most of the amateur authors reached into the lower walks of life for their theme, and a majority of the photoplays were built around some crime. Stealing, kidnapping, illegitimacy, betrayed girls, ministers' sons who went wrong, etc., were the general stories told. Some of the manuscripts were labeled: "This is the story of my life," or "This is a true story."

Three scenes from "Charity?"—the first Frank Powell production, featuring Linda A. Griffith, Creighton Hale and Sheldon Lewis.

Theda Bara Vampires Again

WILLIAM FARNUM AND VIRGINIA PEARSON COMPLETE POWERFUL NEW FOX FEAT

Not many experienced and successful actresses would send us pictures taken of them at work in their own kitchen. But here are Jane and Katherine Lee, the Fox veterans, enthusiastically —even proudly—making mud pies.

THE latest productions of the Fox Film Corporation show Theda Bara in a return to her vampire roles, William Farnum in his fourteenth photoplay for the Fox films and Virginia Pearson in a play with Scotch settings.

The Farnum photoplay, "Fires of Conscience," released for September 25, shows vividly how a strong man meets a strong man's test of honor. The scenario was written by Henry Christeen Warnack, a Los Angeles dramatic critic. Oscar C. Apfel screened the picture and obtained some wonderful bits of night photography in the San Bernardino Mountains, in the Silver Lake district.

One of the dramatic scenes in "Fires of Conscience" is the burning of a jail by outlaws, after locking the sheriff and his sweetheart, played by Mr. Farnum and Nell Shipman, in the building. In applying the torch to the gasoline-soaked timbers, Mr. Apfel's clothes caught fire, and he was severely burned. A physician was called, but the director continued to supervise the work, swathed in blankets.

In the cast with Mr. Farnum are Gladys Brockwell, Willard Louis, H. J. Barrows, Henry J. Herbert and William Burress.

More than one of the actors in the Pearson screen drama spent many a weary hour at the costumer's getting the proper sartorial effect, as the setting is laid in a Scotch village. Walter Law and Glen White share the laurels in the supporting cast.

The dictionary is honored in signal fashion in the new George Walsh photoplay now being made on the Pacific Coast, as Noah Webster's book of words has a part of prime importance to the action of the picture.

In Frank Lloyd's initial production for William Fox, paintings valued at more than $100,000 will be on exhibition. The collection was obtained from the homes of several wealthy residents of southern California, and two genuine Corots are included in the oils. The portraits and landscapes were used in a setting representing the interior of a large art gallery.

Several beautiful "sets" have also been erected for the new Valeska Suratt photodrama, now in work. Particularly attractive and unusual is a drawing room scene. The furniture is finished in black and white checks, and there are rich black and white panels in the walls.

In the cast with Miss Suratt is Joseph Granby, who has just joined the William Fox forces. Mr. Granby is proud of having taught the fundamentals of the drama for years before going on the stage. He joined the Castle Square players in Boston when he leaped from the theoretical to the practical. He has been on the stage for eleven years.

Players Appearing in Fox Films

The revised list of the featured actors and actresses in the employ of the Fox Film Corporation, as of September 16, 1916, is as follows:

Virginia Pearson, Jane Lee, Katherine Lee, Theda Bara, Valeska Suratt, Anna Luther, Betty Schade, Betty Harte, A. H. Van Buren, Walter Law, Madeleine Le Nard, George Walsh, Stuart Holmes, Kittens Reichert, James Marcus, Claire Whitney, Herbert Heyes, Harry S. Hilliard, Zena Keefe, Sara Alexander, Margaret Fielding, Bertha Kalich, Annette Kellermann, June Caprice, Dorothy Bernard, Miriam Battista, William Farnum, Gladys Brockwell, Charles Clary, Glen White, Hershel Mayall, John Webb Dillion, Milton Sills, Juanita Hansen, Kenneth Hunter, Nell Shipman, H. A. Barrows, H. J. Hebert, William Burress, Willard Louis, Mary Martin, Fritz Leiber, Gladys Coburn, Velma Whitman, Charline Mayfield, Curtis Benton, Gretchen Hartmann, Allan Hale, Edwin Cecil, George Webb, William Clifford.

Making hay while the star shines. Virginia Pearson is now harvesting the fall alfalfa crop on her farm and at the same time gleaming daily from innumerable shadow stages throughout Wilson's commonwealth.

Apfel's Home an Arsenal

Any person who was so unfortunate as to try to burglarize the home of Oscar C. Apfel, in the suburbs of Los Angeles, would probably be petrified with fright when he crossed the threshold of a room upstairs.

The den, the William Fox director calls it.

The armory, it had better have been named, for the picture-man has enough weapons on the premises to supply a good-sized regiment, with everything from cannons to hand grenades and bayonets. The mild-mannered man who made "Fires of Conscience" and most of the other William Farnum photoplays, boasts that his collection is without parallel in any private home in the country.

Although he has guns of every vintage, from the days of the fifteenth century down through the ages, Mr. Apfel's chiefest pride among his trophies is a caribou's head. It is the head of a silver caribou, one of the two known to be extant in the United States. The other head is in the Museum of Natural History in New York City.

The story behind the acquisition of the prize is one of the reasons for its extraordinary value.

Mr. Apfel has had occasion to use malemutes, famous Alaskan dogs, in the pictures of the northwest which he has directed for William Fox. He has always obtained the "huskies" from a Captain Smith, the partner of Hugh Bernard, the Alaskan fur trapper, who was one of the leaders in the party which rescued the explorer Stefanson from the Arctic.

Captain Bernard was making a trip by dog sled from the far north, when he and his companions came upon a huge herd of caribou, so large that it covered the great whiteness as far as one could see. In the vanguard of the herd were two silver caribou, the quest of all Alaskan hunters.

Hugh Bernard had two cartridges in his repeating rifle. They brought him the two caribou. One of the heads was sent to the museum, the other to Captain Smith. Director Apfel purchased the mounted head from the captain.

The antlers measure five feet, eight inches, from tip to tip.

Virginia Pearson a Maude Muller

"Nothing like variety," says Virginia Pearson, who makes photoplays for William Fox, and hay for recreation. Miss Pearson has a large estate in Palisades, New Jersey, near the studio, and when she's not working before the camera, she dons a great sun-bonnet, gets the barn ready, and pitches in—hay.

"Most moving picture actresses know a microscopic little about country life," Miss Pearson declared recently. "They tell a story about a friend of mine who is rather well-known to motion picture fans, which illustrates this beautifully.

"This girl went to the country—the real country where there is no city for miles around—for a vacation. She stayed at a farmhouse. Supper came and when the farmer's wife set some honey on the table, the actress clapped her hands and said, ecstatically: 'Oh, dear me, I see you keep a bee!'"

Frederick Lawrence, an editor and playwright, has begun a suit against the Essanay company for an accounting and share of the business done by "The Little Girl Next Door," the film revealing vice conditions which ran for several weeks to big business at the La Salle Theater, Chicago. Mr. Lawrence claims the idea for the play was his own.

ARROW BEGINS BIG DRAMA

Company Goes to Block Island for Scenes of Hall Caine Drama Featuring English Actor, Son of Noted Author

Howell Hansel, one of the directors of the Arrow Film Corporation, recently took his company to Block Island to make some exterior scenes in an eight-reel photoplay in which Derwent Hall Caine, the eminent English actor, is starred. The story demanded the use of several field-stone huts with thatched roofs, and these were built at the very edge of the cliffs on land leased especially for that purpose.

When all the scenes had been filmed (even the interior scenes were photographed with the real stone background rather than with the usual studio papier-mache rocks) and Hansel was ready to bring his company back to New York, the question arose as to what to do with the huts. They were complete except as to one side. It seemed a pity to destroy them, but in their existing condition they could not be used.

Finally the landlord and Hansel hit on the scheme. If Hansel would have the fourth wall built so as to make the huts tenantable, the landlord would not only remit the land rent, but would pay the cost of construction of the huts and a liberal bonus besides. This, of course, suited the canny Hansel, and his mechanical force quickly added the fourth wall to the huts.

And now there is a colony of Block Island fishermen living at the very edge of the sea in stone huts originally intended only for picture purposes.

Among recent additions to the players at the Arrow Film Corporation's studios in Yonkers, New York, cast for roles in early forthcoming Arrow feature releases, are: Miss Barbara Brown, who appeared in several of Arrow's "Who's Guilty?" series; Miss Mildred Cheshire, a little Georgia beauty, who recently has been seen in a number of noteworthy roles; Albert Froome, leading heavy and character man of the New York Hippodrome for the last six seasons, who played the part of Jackson in "The Million Dollar Mystery"; Leo Post, an exceedingly agile and romantic young actor; K. B. Clarendon, formerly of the Thanhouser Company; Thomas O'Malley, a veteran character actor; Al Hall, who has played in a number of Arrow pictures, including "The Woman's Law" and "Who's Guilty?"; Freeman Barnes, whose own work and that of his two collies long have been featured on the screen; Ben Lodge, James Levering and William B. Miller.

Miss Brown and Miss Cheshire will be seen in the support of Derwent Hall Caine, the famous English actor who is to be starred in a number of Arrow pictures.

Change in Releases

A change has been made in the Selig bookings in General Film Service for the week of October 9. "Converging Paths," a two-reel drama of unusual worth, will be released on Monday, October 9. This film will take the place of "The Temptation of Adam," formerly announced for October 9. On Saturday, October 14, the Western drama, "A Mistake in Rustlers," will be released. It is an exciting drama of the West with Tom Mix in the leading role.

Lois Weber, the Universal director, has completed "Idle Wives" in seven reels, featuring Mary MacLaren and Phillips Smalley.

Exhibitors Laud Musical Scores

FIRST PARAMOUNT COMEDY RELEASED OCTOBER 2

PARAMOUNT PICTURES CORPORATION recently made a campaign canvass among their more than 3,000 theater managers to find out what value they placed on the musical scores furnished with all Paramount Pictures, and the result has been that they have been flooded with nothing but complimentary letters in which exhibitors say that these scores are a great benefit, "well adapted to the pictures," "A step in the right direction," "A valuable service," "Music wins the highest praise from audiences," "Very essential to every picture," and the like.

In this canvass the managers were asked what they thought of the scores, what they meant to the orchestra leader or the piano player, how the audiences liked the music and what improvements could be suggested.

The replies were so enthusiastic that excerpts from a few hundred of the letters have been selected and are being published in booklet form by G. Schirmer, Inc., publishers, who have charge of the musical scores for all Paramount Pictures. These will be issued to all managers who are interested in the future of the photoplay, so that they may more fully realize how essential specially prepared musical settings are in furnishing the proper atmosphere for feature films.

With the demand of the better photoplay stories, better photography and better acting, there came the necessity for music, which really interpreted the picture. Paramount recognized this need and with the production "The Heart of Paula," special musical scores became a factor in the presentation of each Paramount Picture. Since then G. Schirmer, Inc., in collaboration with G. W. Beynon, Inc., composer and arranger, has issued complete music scores, perfectly synchronized to fit all Paramount features. One of the chief recommendations of these scores is the fact that the orchestrations are effective with any combination of instruments, or for piano only.

The photoplay department of G. Schirmer, Inc., is equipped to meet every requirement. Not only have their arrangers at their command the wealth of music contained in the Schirmer catalogues, but the cream of foreign publications is at their disposal. Furthermore, the mechanical facilities of the department have been so organized to give that quick action so indispensable to every phase of film service.

Paramount has been the pioneer in this undertaking and has undergone many obstacles which discouraged others who have attacked this new and exceedingly difficult problem. Neither brains nor money have been spared in making this feature a success, and the scores are being supplied to the exhibitors throughout the country at a very nominal cost, a cost that is scarcely worth considering in comparison with their proved value.

New Stars on Paramount

The Paramount program for the week of September 25 is worthy of special comment by reason of the fact that, during that week, Maurice and Florence Walton, the dancers of international fame, will make their first screen appearance in the Famous Players production of "The Quest of Life."

The other feature for the week will be the Lasky production of "Anton the Terrible," in which Theodore Roberts, the celebrated character actor, and Anita King, will be starred. During the past two years Mr. Roberts has played a wide variety of characters in Paramount Pictures, but in this production he is credited with doing his greatest work from a dramatic standpoint that he has yet accomplished since the advent of his adopting the screen instead of the speaking stage for the portrayal of his characterizations.

Surrounding the program this week will be Paramount's three short reel subjects, the thirty-third edition of the Paramount Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen, showing four leading subjects—"Fresh Water Acrobats," "Dining Automatically," "Wonders of the Unseen World," and "Leather Footprints."

The thirty-fourth weekly Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel-Pictures, continuing the "Trip Around the World," leaving England behind and entering the land of the heather. In Bonnie Scotland the trip takes in every possible point of interest in the land of the Scotchman; and the Paramount-Bray Cartoon, "Bobby Bumps Starts a Lodge," from the pen of Earl Hurd.

First Paramount Comedy October 2

The first of the Paramount Comedies will be released on October 2. These are exceptionally high class productions that have been secured through the United States Motion Picture Corporation, producers of Black Diamond Comedies, and the Classy Pictures, Inc., producers of Classic Comedies, and blend particularly well with the "better pictures for better theaters and a better public," which have been released on the Paramount program during the past two years. The first release will be "Nearly a Deserter," a Black Diamond Comedy produced by the United States Motion Pictures Corporation. This comedy deals with the surest fire trigger in the comedy world, the trick possibilities of the motion picture.

Colored Cover for Pictographs

Paramount Pictographs have squared away for the fall and winter months in a way that is already bringing joy to Paramount Exchanges and exhibitors throughout the country.

The Pictograph editors have been engaged during the summer in choosing features from the great masses of material which they have at hand. No material is found satisfactory for publication unless it has been gone over rigorously by the large staff and in this manner it has been possible for the editor to attack each of the four subjects making up one release, from the point of view that interests the most people. Nothing has been chosen except matters of moment, entertaining features which will interest all classes of patrons in the theater. Instead of using two meaty subjects and a couple of fillers, the editors have laid out a program which takes four "articles," each capable of making one reel, prune them until nothing but heart of the material is left and cram them into the necessary 1,000-foot lengths. That means there is no room for a single filler of any sort.

Among the subjects which have been prepared for the ensuing campaign are articles depicting what the chiefs of the nation do for a living. The series is entitled, "What I Am Trying to Do," and deals with the work of the cabinet officers, also with the work of the private chiefs of the United States who in their palatial offices direct the affairs of the business world.

On the theory that the people of the United States do not play enough, the editorial staff has arranged to show the people of America things that are not known about the fun of outdoor play.

One of the members of the editorial staff discovered a method of presenting lost motion which is more graphic than any which has ever been shown by the camera to the public.

The cover of future Paramount Pictographs will be in color as it is on all printed magazines. The latest tricks of the motion picture photographer will be shown. Psychological puzzles and guessing games will be used.

What the Paramount Trademark Means

By Hiram Abrams

President of the Paramount Pictures Corporation.

There are many people in the world who can write scenarios, and some who can write a few good ones; there are many producing companies who can turn those stories into motion pictures, and some good ones. But there have been mighty few who could write and produce MANY good ones. There has been that one significant feature about the motion picture industry since its inception. One class has been mixed with erratic productions of good and bad, while the other class, which is gravely in the minority, has been built on the foundation of genius and ability, consistent quality, and better pictures for better theaters, and a better public.

Hiram Abrams, president Paramount Pictures Corporation.

The men with genius and ability have been filled with ideas, and have been saturated with the higher standards of art, science and literature. They have turned their genius and ability into doing the greatest things in their line. They have established a standard, and their standard, because of its consistently high quality and acceptability, has become the standard of the product, whatever it may have been. Their work has been marked. Their brains have been marketed. Their trademark, which is the banner under which they continue to work, becomes the standard of their class.

Paramount Pictures Corporation, when it was born, just two years ago, took the name Paramount because it meant "superior to all others; the highest in rank and authority." The standard that was set then has been followed diligently and earnestly and the men who have written the stories from which our artists have produced our quality pictures, have been the "diamond-men" and the "gold-men" of the industry. They were born to do big and great things; they had to do them, to relieve their urging brains, and they are of that type, the "diamonds and gold of the earth" type, that can never live long enough to exhaust their ideas.

What Paramount has done is to take these products, which its name continually tells the millions of motion picture lovers, are superior in quality and consistently the best, and from them, the products of the Famous Players, Lasky, Morosco and Pallas, has given to the world something that deserved a mark of distinction. A mark that now means something in the industry; a trademark that stands for the best obtainable.

Law has made it incumbent upon some producers to put on the labels of their packages, a list of the ingredients, which combined, make the whole. Because of that, when purchasing a bottle of medicine or a can of insecticide, you know exactly what it contains. Other goods are put out under trade names, and, according to the value of the trade name of their manufacturers, they stand for certain qualities of their individual product. The people know what that trade name means. They know what they are buying. They have either used it before, or their best friends have assured them that it is the best, and when the people know the standard of the trade mark, or the trade name, it gives it real value.

Ten million people each week see Paramount Pictures. There is a consistent reason for that. They have seen those pictures before—the majojrity of them. They know that they are the productions of the Famous Players, Lasky, Morosco, and Pallas, and that individually, these companies produce pictures in which such stars as Mary Pickford, Geraldine Farrar, Marguerite Clark, Blanche Sweet, Mae Murray, Lenore Ulrich, Fannie Ward, Dustin Farnum, Pauline Frederick, Hazel Dawn, John Barrymore, Lou-Tellegen, and many others of "the greatest stars on earth."

These stars appear in film versions of the world's greatest plays, picturizations of the most famous stories, and in the original photoplays of writing geniuses. The plays produced by these companies are the ingredients, the contents of Paramount Pictures, and it has been the consistent standard that these companies have adhered to, that has made the trade name Paramount mean motion pictures to the lovers of the universal language.

When you think of Paramount, you think of motion pictures, the same as when you think of Uneeda, it is biscuits; Waterman, is pens; Victor, is talking machines, and the like.

Why? Because they stand for the best in their class; because they stand for consistent quality.

Gate City Comedy Completed

Albert W. Hale, production director of the Gate City Pictures Company, which was organized recently by capitalists of Greensboro, North Carolina, has just returned to Chicago from Jacksonville, Florida, where he completed the production of "Roland's Lucky Day," the first of a series of comedies to be made featuring "Smiling" Roland Hill. Mr. Hale will spend the next two weeks in the Windy City, negotiating some business matters for the "Gate City" company.

New Hollywood Studio

Owing to the increasing population and growth of Los Angeles and vicinity, the Golden Gate Photo Company will soon build another photographic studio for the portrait and commercial end of the photo business. This studio will be for motion picture, portrait, publicity, reproduction, and commercial use. The location will be Hollywood, and the studio is to be a two story building of artistic design. The business manager will be Nelson F. Evans.

S. R. O. Sign for "Beatrice Fairfax"

INTERNATIONAL'S RELEASE OF "JAFFERY" VERY SUCCESSFUL

THAT Beatrice Fairfax is as well loved on the screen as in her capacity of healer of love wounds, is shown in the record-breaking attendance which is greeting the showing of the International Film Service's series, "Beatrice Fairfax." Letters have been received from many prominent theatermen telling how they played to capacity houses at each performance of the film. Sam H. Trigger, manager of the Tremont Theater, New York, said that in spite of the restriction placed on the theaters of that city because of the epidemic he played to standing room only.

At the Liberty Theater in Pittsburgh the house was packed at the first performance, and a line of people extended down the street for two blocks waiting for the second showing. It was the most successful opening the theater ever had. Many were turned away at all four performances on Monday, a condition never experienced before.

Baseball Stars in Fairfax Films

One of the episodes of the "Beatrice Fairfax" series deals with a romance in the lives of a professional baseball player and his wife, and the big scenes were taken during a ball game at the Polo Grounds.

The International Film Service arranged with the New York American to stage several of the scenes during the game between the Yankees and Giants for the benefit of the American Neediest Families Fund.

Those who attended the benefit for this worthy cause witnessed a novel sight. All of the principals of the "Beatrice Fairfax" company, including Harry Fox, the famous star, who assumes the character of Jimmy Barton, a reporter and amateur sleuth in "Beatrice Fairfax"; Grace Darling, who plays the title role; Betty Howe, Mary Cranston and others were seen at work. Theodore Wharton, of Wharton, Inc., who is producing "Beatrice Fairfax" for the International, had the scenes rehearsed, and at the proper moment the actors appeared on the ball field, and, with the two teams struggling for supremacy as a part of the picture, the camera-man made the films. They also made moving pictures of the spectators.

Basil Dickey, who is writing the scenarios of "Beatrice Fairfax," conceived the idea for this particular episode after reading a pitiful letter received by Beatrice Fairfax from the wife of a baseball player in a distant city. He decided to stage the scene at the Polo Grounds and make the players of the Yankees and Giants take the place of the baseball players who participated in one scene of the romance.

Manager McGraw, of the Giants; Manager Donovan, of the Yankees, and the star players of both teams have prominent parts in the picture.

"Jaffery" Scores Success

"Jaffery," an adaptation of W. J. Locke's novel, the first Golden Eagle Feature of the International Film Service, has met with great success wherever exhibited.

William L. Sherrill, president of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, which produced "Jaffery" for the International Film Service, Inc., declares that it is the most artistic and delightful film play ever turned out.

No expense was spared in its production, and an all star cast was engaged. C. Aubrey Smith, English actor, who was leading man with Margaret Illington in "The Lie," was personally selected by Mr. Locke for the title role. Eleanor Woodruff, who will appear this season as leading lady with Otis Skinner, is featured as "Doria." Florence Deshon, now with David Belasco's "Seven Chances," plays "Liosha." Ben Hendricks, known in every city, town and hamlet in the country as originator of "Ole Olson" and "Yon Yonson," is the redoubtable Fendihook. Doris Sawyer, the beautiful English actress, as "Barbara"; Eric Blind, long a Frohman leading man, as "Hilary," and Paul Doucet, recently with Elsie Ferguson, and leading man for Theda Bara and Martha Hedman, as "Adrian," complete a cast of unusual strength.

Soldier Boys in Hearst Pictorial

The various state National Guard encampments along the Texas border from Nogales to Brownsville are being shown in the current releases of the Hearst International News Pictorial. They are not ordinary pictures of troop encampments, but are made in an artistic manner, and in each release a section is devoted to a specific state detachment.

Mrs. Vernon Castle Ill

Mrs. Vernon Castle is back at work in "Patria," the new preparedness serial of the International Film Service, Inc., after several days' illness caused by overenthusiasm in her work.

Several of the scenes of "Patria" occur on a United States warship and were taken aboard the gunboat Sandoval, on Lake Ontario, near Summerville, N. Y. In one of the scenes Mrs. Castle is pushed overboard and is daringly rescued by Milton Sills, her leading man.

The scene was photographed once, but Mrs. Castle was not entirely satisfied with it, and suggested that it be made over. It was a warm day, and she remained seated on the deck of the gun-boat clad in her wet clothes. She developed a severe cold, which confined her to her rooms at Rochester Hotel for several days.

As soon as she had completely recovered Mrs. Castle went to Newport with the other members of the "Patria" company, where several scenes are also being made. Mrs. Castle was entertained while in Newport by members of the New York social colony.

Threatening Letter Sent to Fox

A postal card addressed to William Fox, in the free and easy handwriting of a child, contained this declaration of faith:

Dear Sir: Writing you these few words in a kind of way to let Henry D' Torio, 318 East Ninth street, N. Y., be an actor. If you don't write him in two weeks, you know what will happen to you. He was to your office yesterday and they told him that he was too small. He's 16 years old and he's a man know.

Hoping that you'll write him, I remain, a friend of his.

P. S. Don't take this for fun.

Wallace Beery is playing the comedy lead in his own Universal play, "The Generous Janitor," which he also is directing.

Joseph Granby Joins William Fox

Joseph Granby, who taught the fundamentals of the drama for years before he went on the stage himself, is now a member of the William Fox photoplayers. Mr. Granby has a role in the new Valeska Suratt picture now being filmed. He was born in Boston and joined the Castle Square players when he jumped from the theoretical to the practical drama.

Mr. Granby was on the stage for eleven years. For an entire season he appeared in vaudeville with Curtis Benton, in a sketch written by the latter. Mr. Benton, strangely enough, became a William Fox actor some time since, and also has a part in the same picture with his old colleague.

Since last November, when Mr. Granby entered the silent drama, he has been in one hundred photoplays, and always in a "heavy" role.

Finishes Scottish Photoplay

Virginia Pearson's new picture for William Fox was completed last week and will be released in a short time. The photoplay is laid in a Scotch village and has an unusual story. More than one of the actors in the film spent many a weary hour at the costumer's getting the proper sartorial effect. Noah Webster's justly-famous book of words plays an important part in George Walsh's new picture for William Fox, now being screened out on the Pacific Coast. This is perhaps the first time that the dictionary has been honored in such signal fashion.

With Ruth Stonehouse as the featured player Director Raymond Wells of Universal City is nearing the completion of the five-reel drama, "Kinkaid, Gambler."

World Completes All 1916 Releases

LUCILE TO PLAN GOWNS FOR FUTURE "BRADY MADES"

WILLIAM BRADY, director general of the World Film Corporation, believes in the power of on-the-dot delivery of films. This is demonstrated in the announcement of the World Company that all its releases from now until the New Year are made, edited and ready for delivery.

These photoplays, produced under the personal supervision of Mr. Brady, embrace a broad selection of themes and employ the services of all the World-Brady stars.

The first on the list, the release date of which is September 18, is "Friday the 13th," a dramatization of Thomas W. Lawson's famous novel with frenzied finance as its background. Robert Warwick is the star of this production, and the "big" scene is a photographic reproduction of the floor of the New York Stock Exchange during a panic.

Clara Kimball Young, in "The Dark Silence," follows. This play is of the European war, with scenes laid on the battle grounds and field hospitals of France.

"The Revolt," a drama of the great city, filmed from a noted stage play, will be acted by Frances Nelson and Arthur Ashley.

"The Gilded Cage," with Alice Brady as its star, illustrates the vicissitudes of a young girl suddenly plunged into the turmoil and wickedness of life at court.

In direct contrast is "The Man Who Stood Still," a simple comedy of combined humor and sadness, the first World-Brady picture in which Lew Fields is the star.

"The Hidden Scar," starring Ethel Clayton and Holbrook Blinn, is a modern drama of love nearly wrecked through a mis-step in the past.

Robert Warwick in "The Heart of a Hero," assumes the role of Nathan Hale, one of the most heroic characters in our national history. The photoplay is made from Clyde Fitch's stage drama which met with country-wide favor under the title "Nathan Hale."

Marie Dressler, in "Tillie's Night Out," contributes the first of the "Tillie" series for which she has been engaged as star by the World-Brady organization.

Alice Brady in "Bought and Paid For" enacts the heroine of George Broadhurst's play, which ran for two whole seasons at the Playhouse, New York City.

The World-Brady interests are understood to have several other completed offerings in full readiness, but formal announcement of their identity and rotation is deferred for the present.

Clara Kimball Young Service

A new service has been established, called the Clara Kimball Young Service-World Pictures. This program provides eight re-issued pictures with this famous star, each re-edited and re-titled and all prints new.

First choice on the Clara Kimball Young program is given to the regular holders of World franchises with no advance in price. The printing and other advertising specialties for this service are entirely new and unique.

The new World-Brady campaign is characterized by foresight, vigor and that confidence of spirit which bespeaks the utmost faith in the growing future of the motion picture industry in which Mr. Brady is a singularly forceful and picturesque figure.

Lucile to Gown World Stars

William A. Brady, director general of the World Film Corporation, has contracted with Lady Duff Gordon (Lucile, Ltd.) to supply the gowns for all future Brady-Made pictures in which the feminine characters are drawn from the socially elect.

In describing the observation which had led him to adopt this expensive plan, Mr. Brady said:

"I was watching a picture at private view the other day when I noticed that the leading actress was wearing a dress which seemed familiar to me, and thereupon I instituted inquiries. These led to the information that the same gown had done duty in three photoplays, and I was not long in finding out that a good many directors, being mere men, are somewhat shy of gown knowledge.

"Clearly enough, here was a matter that needed attention. If we were to depict fashionable groups they must be fashionably clad, and dresses shown in one play must not go wandering through other plays to offend the quick and discerning eyes of the thousands of feminine spectators who are up-to-the-minute on the ever-varying styles."

Splendid American Novel Filmed

SELIG TO RELEASE "THE CRISIS" IN TWELVE PARTS

A FEW years ago the good folks of this commonwealth of ours were getting a good deal of enjoyment out of a certain book which told a romance of our Civil War. That book was "The Crisis," and the author is Winston Churchill, who has since come to be considered one of the very foremost of American writers. "The Inside of the Cup" and "A Far Country," two of Churchill's later works, have added still more to his reputation.

Thus it is with unusual interest, it would seem, that the American public will receive the screen version of the well-loved story presented in "The Crisis." The Selig Company has made a careful and spectacular film drama of the novel and will shortly release it in twelve reels.

William N. Selig considers "The Crisis" as one of the most elaborate and expensive film dramas ever made in this country and the verdict of the few who have been fortunate enough to see private presentations of the film bear out Mr. Selig's assertion.

An interesting innovation in connection with "The Crisis" is that there is not a single detail in the film but that closely follows Mr. Churchill's great book dealing with the crisis in American history. Also a majority of the scenes are filmed on historic ground, in localities called for in the book, including St. Louis, Missouri, and Vicksburg, Mississippi.

The battle cenes in "The Crisis" are spectacular and engage the services of the entire membership of the Mississippi National Guard, including officers, et cetera, who staged the seige and defense of Vicksburg on the same ground where the historic engagements occurred over half a century ago. Although thousands of men, horses and equipment are engaged in the scenes of Civil War battles, yet these scenes are but a small part of the drama and are just sufficient to carry along the logical action.

Veterans of the Civil War, both Federals and Confederates, together with their sons and daughters, will be greatly interested in this faithful reproduction of historical engagements and with the real fortifications used in the Civil War times. Historical scenes in and near Vicksburg, including the Vicksburg courthouse, slave market, etc., are shown in all historic detail. Beautiful southern homes, right in the heart of the romantic southern country, so frequently described in the book, are shown.

Not the least important item in connection with "The Crisis" is the introduction to filmland of a new and startlingly realistic Abraham Lincoln, enacted by Sam D. Drane. Too often historic characters are burlesqued and cause a loss of valuable atmosphere, but Drane's characterization of Abraham Lincoln is both dignified and convincing and not only does Drane resemble Lincoln, but The Great Emancipator's every little personal characteristic has been studied and faithfully portrayed. Even Lincoln's old dispatch box was loaned by the War Department for this Selig film play, which but proves the care that was taken in having every detail of the drama correct as to atmosphere and history.

The cast for the play is worthy of especial mention and includes George W. Fawcett as "Judge Silas Whipple;" Matt B. Snyder, as "Colonel Carvel;" Bessie Eyton, as "Virginia Carvel;" Thomas Santschi, as "Stephen Brice;" Eugenie Besserer, as "Mrs. Brice;" Frank Wood, as "Eliphalet Hopper;" Marshall Neilen, as "Clarence Colfax;" Cecil Holland, as "General Sherman;" Sam D. Drane, as "Abraham Lincoln;" Will Machin, as "Captain Lige Brent;" Leo Pierson, as "Jack Brinsmade," and others. Every member of the cast was selected with the type in view and all do full justice to their roles.

Colin Campbell was selected by Mr. Selig to direct the production of "The Crisis" and film authorities who have seen the play pronounce it his greatest and most artistic effort. When it is recalled that Mr. Campbell produced "The Spoilers," "The Rosary," "The Ne'er-Do-Well," etc., his latest and most massive production will be awaited with great interest.

"The Crisis" will be released with a special musical score that is now completed by one of this country's foremost musicians. An unusual publicity campaign is being planned and the presentation of this film will in every way be in just accordance to its artistic worth.

It is predicted that "The Crisis" will not only be pronounced a most wonderful film drama but will also be pronounced a most worthy addition to the film literature of our country preserving and typifying as it does the best spirit and thought of American manhood and womanhood. Announcement of the release plans for "The Crisis" will be made in the near future by Mr. Selig.

Carter De Haven, who has been working under the direction of Wallace Beery, has been assigned a Universal company of his own.

JURY TO SEE FILM

Number of American Artists to Sit in Session on "A Daughter of the Gods," the Big Fox Feature.

"A Daughter of the Gods," the William Fox million dollar picture soon to be released, is soon to be put to a remarkable test.

Mr. Fox has invited the foremost of the popular artists of America to be his guests for a special presentation of his picture. In the group of invited celebrities are:

Harrison Fisher, James Montgomery Flagg, Howard Chandler Christy, William De Leftwitch Dodge, Anton Fisher, May Wilson Preston, Violet Oakley, Alice Barber Stephens and many others whose work is seen in the best magazines.

Naturally confident of the beauties of his picture, Mr. Fox nevertheless wishes both to hear and see at first hand the impression that "A Daughter of the Gods" creates upon the greatest judges of "good form" and beauty in all the world. He wishes to know just what these famed and successful creators of beautiful women, painters of land and sky and sea-scapes think of his production.

Supplementing these guests there will be a group of nationally known musicians who will hear an orchestra of fifty odd pieces swing through the evolutions of the special score composed by Robert Hood Bowers for the spectacle in which Miss Kellermann is starred. It is well known, of course, that Miss Kellermann has a supporting cast of more than 20,000 persons.

For the first time an outline of the thematic construction of the musical score developed by Mr. Bowers is available.

First in importance, naturally, is the theme attuned to the character of the Dream Maiden played by Miss Kellermann. It is suggestive of the kingdom of the ocean, the never-ceasing roll of the waves and the poetry of the conception of her origin. This will be played by the full orchestra. Then comes the theme attuned to the Spirit of Benevolence, or the Fairy Queen. This is a dainty fairy theme, simple as a child's lullaby; ethereal and delicate. The third theme is for the Spirit of Evil, or the Witch of the story. It is an ominous theme spoken by the horns and trombones, bassoons and tympani.

The love theme is fourth. As all love themes should be, this one is full of tenderness and longing. Then the dashing Oriental marches and captivating waltzes for the swimming exhibitions. Then there are suggestive thematic moments for the storm at sea, the battle scenes, the Sultan's cavalry, for the burning of the Moorish city, the witches' dance, the Oriental dances and the funeral march. And, of course, the birds, frogs, alligators and mermaids have musical voices entirely their own.

Oklahoma Exhibitor Robbed

By Wm. Noble
Special Correspondent for Motography.

Single handed, a masked robber robbed the manager of the Liberty Theater at Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, September 4. He made his escape with $400. The day's receipts had just been counted when the burglar, armed with a revolver, entered the box office while the performance was going on, and ordered Manager H. W. McCall to hold up his hands, which he did unhesitatingly. The man then pocketed all the money in sight and backed toward the door, but in doing so his revolver was discharged, creating considerable excitement among the women of the audience who were watching the closing scenes of the show. The robber then hurried through the balcony audience to the fire escape door, through which he disappeared. Officers were quickly on the scene but failed to find the robber.

LEAGUE ENTERS POLITICS

Illinois Branch of Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America Endorses Only Candidates Who Will Oppose Censorship

In their fight against censorship the Illinois Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America will not endorse the showing on the screen of pictures of the candidate for any city or state office who does not promise that he will oppose censorship. The Political Action Committee of the League, composed of Joseph Hopp, chairman, L. H. Frank, secretary, M. A. Choynski, George Laing, W. J. Sweeney and Adolph Powell, have made the following report:

For the past three weeks we have had on an average ten to fifteen aspirants for office and those who are now in office seeking nomination for re-election, before us asking us for our League endorsement. This was due to a letter sent to the various exhibitors in Illinois asking them to refrain from showing slides or films of aspirants for office without the endorsement of our League.

It is remarkable what effect it has had and what a power the screen has proven itself to be in so far as the political office seekers are concerned. They show no hesitancy in letting us know that we are far superior to the press in getting them before the public. Each and every one that received the endorsement of our organization has had to come out and convince us that they would oppose censorship in every form and those who could not vote on propositions of that kind although elected to office, have promised their moral support to help us combat any laws of censorship and all other laws that might be inimical to the interests of the motion picture industry.

We feel that we have gained a great recognition and intend to use same judiciously and at all times for the good of the League. All other states of our organization should do likewise and I am sure that in a short time the motion picture industry will be as safely protected as any other industry.

In the course of the last three weeks we have probably had three hundred candidates appear before us for the present primaries asking our League endorsement, from candidates for governor to the lowest office of the state, also men who are now in congress as well as those that are now representing the state in other offices.

After three weeks of hard work the committee has adjourned for one week.

National Association to Meet

On Thursday, September 21, there will be held at the headquarters in the Times building, New York, two meetings of the board of directors of the National Association of the motion picture industry.

The first session, called for 11:00 a. m., is for the purpose of crystalizing and defining the attitude of the association toward the different forms of censorship. It will be an open meeting. The afternoon session will take up the question of entrance fees and annual dues and it is possible that some changes will be made in these.

Ethel Clayton and Carlyle Blackwell are again appearing together in World pictures.

On Triangle Firing Lines

GLIMPSES INTO FUTURE FEATURES IN THE MAKING

"OTHER exhibitors may not care so much about it," said a theater man to MOTOGRAPHY last week, "but I like to know what's going on at the studios—the new plays that they're working on, the trips they are making, the stunts they are doing, and who some of the directors and other fellows are who are really the fellows 'behind the guns.'"

And so, because it is MOTOGRAPHY's policy to give the exhibitor what he wants, we here give some verbal glimpses into the workings of the Triangle organizations—the news of the thousands of details that go to make up the day's work of providing steady streams of crystalized sunshine for the screens of the nation.

Director Paul Powell has started work on the five-reel Triangle-Fine Arts feature, "Bugs," (temporary title) with Wilfred Lucas and Constance Talmadge in the leading roles. The scenario was written by W. E. Wing, one of the best known scenario writers in the country. The plot of the play hinges on the story of a small town physician. Supporting Lucas and Miss Talmadge in the production are F. A. Turner, Winifred Westover, Pomeroy Cannon, Fred Warren, James O'Shea, Jack Sealock, Kate Bruce and Monte Blue.

A thrilling pistol duel is one of the features of the Triangle comedy, "The Village Vamp," featuring Fay Tincher as a deadly vampire in a calico gown, who demoralizes a church, breaks up a church choir, and leads a minister astray. Miss Tincher starts a duel between two new admirers in a chop suey restaurant, which, however, she thinks is a gilded cafe.

Chet Withey, who has just put the finishing touches to "Old Folks at Home," featuring Sir Herbert Tree, will soon start rehearsing Mae Marsh and Robert Harron in a Triangle-Fine Arts production. The scenario is being prepared by Anita Loos.

A fully equipped nursery, with hobby horses, dolls, wagons, Teddy bears, and all the paraphernalia necessary in a juvenile room, has been installed by Directors C. M. and S. A. Franklin for the Fine Arts kiddies during their two weeks' stay at Sunland, where the big scenes in the Triangle-Fine Arts production, "The Defenders," are being staged. When the Franklin brothers went to Sunland, they decided to make the stay as pleasant as possible for the Triangle youngsters, and a nursery and playroom was installed near the big ranch structures. The kiddies, including George Stone, Violet Radcliffe, Carmen De Rue, Francis Carpenter, Beulah Burns and Lloyd Pearl, are having the time of their lives on the location. The children are in the charge of Mrs. Love, mother of Bessie Love, who is featured in "The Defenders." The Franklin brothers state that the nursery and playroom has proved to be a good investment. Whenever they need one or more of the kiddies, they always find them in the nursery, busy with the toys.

With the Ince Film Infantry

Every once in a while in the making of motion pictures there arises an occasion wherein a director is confronted with the opportunity of adding to his production a scene or two not prescribed in the author's scenario. And frequently this impromptu bit of business proves, on the screen, to be one of the most highly valuable scenes in the entire story.

Just such an occasion as this is said to have presented itself recently at Ince's Culver City studios, during the making there of "The Thoroughbred," the Triangle play by C. Gardner Sullivan, in which Frank Keenan is starred. The piece was being directed by Reginald Barker, who was filming some scenes within a church "set," when he encountered the chance to inject new business into the subject.

In one of the pews sat Thomas S. Guise, one of the Ince character actors, who plays the role of a horse trainer employed by Keenan. For three nights, owing to his wife's illness, Guise had been forced to remain awake—and unable to hold his eyes open during a lull in the proceedings on the stage, he dropped off to sleep. One of the other actors in the company called Barker's attention to the unusual sight and the director hastily instructed the cameraman, Charles Kauffman, to "set up." This done, he told one of the ushers to awaken the slumbering Guise, by poking him in the ribs with the collection basket. Then Kauffman began turning the camera-crank and the "close-up" of Guise "coming out of it" is declared to be one of the most delightfully humorous scenes in the story.

Fine Arts' "Puppets" is a comedy of unusual class. In the circle is Pauline Starke and Ned Bolles in a buss from the play. The same two are seen on the left with Jack Brommel, the man wearing diamonds. De Wolf Hopper, the lead, is the rampaging clown on the right.

Mount Baldy—that towering snow-capped peak of the California Sierras—is depicted in all its grandeur in "The Dawn Maker," in which Thomas H. Ince presents William S. Hart as star. Constantly, throughout the action of the piece, this scenic wonder-spot of the Golden State springs into view and the excellent photography that has recorded it affords a splendid opportunity, it is said, to study its remarkable beauty.

The filming of Mount Baldy and the scenes staged in its vicinity was not, however, without its difficulties. Heavy spring rains had made traveling over the steep mountain passes highly dangerous and on more than one occasion, it is stated, Hart and his company narrowly escaped sudden precipitation to the bottom of a rocky ravine.

New Keystones

The Triangle-Keystone studios have just made a number of striking releases, among them being "She Loved a Sailor," said to have been one of the most difficult water pieces ever staged on the Mack Sennett lot; "The Winning Punch," the famous fight story featuring Slim Summerville and Bobbie Dunn; "His Lying Heart," Ford Sterling's new comedy; "Her Feathered Nest," with Charles Murray, Louise Fazonda and Harry Booker; "The Houseboat," with Chester Conklin, and "A Scoundrel's Reward," and street car comedy, the taking of which had Los Angeles in an uproar for an entire day.

They Welcome Those Chaplin Pants

The sensitive ear of a short grass congressman listening to his constituency just before election time is nothing at all to the way Charles Chaplin tunes his hearing to the voice of his followers. His latest picture, "The Count," released by the Mutual Film Corporation, in which Charlie returns to his famous make-up, consisting mostly of moustache, cane, pants and shoes, is an answer to "the voice of the people."

It seems a safe statement to say that no previous Chaplin picture has ever received such unanimous approval from the public as has "The Count." The expressions of the trade critics and the photoplay editors of the daily press are for once in harmony and unanimous. Here are some of the expressions of the daily press:

Chicago Tribune—One of the funniest of the funnies this week is Mr. Chaplin's latest "The Count," which is at the old business of wholesale laugh making. It has story, speed and spontaneity. The fun is not forced—it just bubbles out. A good deal of originality prevails and utter respectability. Some squeamish folks may take exception to Mr. Chaplin holding his nose while eating strong cheese, scratching his head with his fork and washing his ears in watermelon juice at the table. But these vulgarities pass quickly and can be forgotten in the stress of the high comedy of the soup and the dance. Miss Purviance, all dressed up, is ornamentally among those present, as are many other folk, making it a symphony affair instead of a solo. Mr. Chaplin has his capacity for serious playing, but he is foremost as a clown and here he clowns superbly.

Minneapolis News—Charlie Chaplin comes to the New Aster for a full week's run Monday in "The Count," a screaming two-reel Chaplin-Mutual comedy.

Indianapolis Star—Returning to his old make-up and the slap stick variety of comedy that first made him famous as the only Chaplin, the inimitable Charlie as a bogus count undergoes a number of exceedingly funny adventures in a burlesque sort of high life in his latest picture. There is no attempt at a plot of any sort in "The Count," but the numerous incidents follow each other with the usual Chaplin speed and with a laugh in every one.

Louisville Courier-Journal—Charles Chaplin again proves his right to the title of the world's funniest man. He demonstrates that as an originator of ludicrous situations he is without a peer in the fifth Mutual-Chaplin two-act comedy "The Count." The inimitable comedian returns to the type of motion picture farce in which he gained his fame, and is seen in his familiar baggy trousers, cutaways coat at least two sizes too small, his dinky derby, diminutive moustache and slender cane, not forgetting the celebrated brogans. Fat men particularly should not see this picture as they loosen the screws in the seats; but if there is anything in the ancient quotation "laugh and grow fat" thin persons will perceptibly increase their embonpoint.

San Francisco Call—Charlie Chaplin certainly proves up on his title of "the world's funniest man" and demonstrates that as an originator of ludicrous situations he is without a peer in "The Count."

Omaha Bee—In "The Count" Charles Chaplin returns to the type of motion picture farce in which he gained his fame and is seen in his familiar make-up.

Chicago American—Charlie Chaplin has gone back. He has done so in a strictly Chaplin way. You know his feet. Well, he's using them again in the good old way. He has gone back to the comedy which made his worth the fabulous salary Mutual pays. When he goes forward on those feet of his everybody laughs, but when he goes back they all scream. Welcome Charlie in a regular old time Chaplin stunt, called "The Count."

New York Telegraph—Charlie Chaplin in "The Count" has been added to the programs at Lowe's New York Theatre and Roof. The inimitable comedian returns to the type of motion picture farce in which he gained his fame.

Worcester (Mass.) Telegram—Charlie Chaplin made the holiday audiences at the Royal Theater laugh until their sides ached by his antics in his latest two-reel Mutual comedy, "The Count." This picture is one of the funniest in which the inimitable little fun-maker has been seen.

New Haven Courier—Charlie Chaplin, to whom 50,000,000 or more theater-goers look for laughs, has become a member of the nobility. None of Europe's crowned heads plead guilty to bestowing peerage honors on Charlie, yet he is there right among the ribbon and medal bearers in the latest Chaplin picture "The Count." When Charlie and his famous Chaplin invade the exclusive ranks of titled society things begin to happen that put the fun pace up to the last notch on the high speed indicator.

Chicago Paramount Offices Remodeled

A large portion of the Chicago Paramount office is undergoing the process of reconstruction for the purpose of satisfactorily accommodating the sales and publicity departments. The sales manager, publicity manager, and the four city salesmen will have a private location in the office.

Every possible arrangement is being made that will enable these two important departments to work with the greatest speed and efficiency possible. A hearty co-operation exists between these two departments. Incidentally the great number of exhibitors visiting this exchange every day are assured of a lively, interesting and beneficial session.

Five country salesmen are also busily engaged in landing contracts for this exchange. The entire office is being refreshed and made new by the painters and decorators. And not even the mayor has a finer, more up-to-date and efficient private office than that of Manager F. M. Brockell since it has been remodeled.

Last but not least C. E. Elliott, sales manager, and all of his city salesmen are to be equipped with a brand new Ford runabout. They will then be in a position to call on a greater number of exhibitors every day.

The Triangle company is now expending large sums on fashionable apparel for its actresses in order to make its plays sartorially satisfying to women screen goers.

"Civilization" Moves to Park Theater

GIGANTIC ELECTRICAL DISPLAY ENTICES PEOPLE TO PERFORMANCE

"CIVILIZATION," after 200 consecutive performances at the Criterion Theater, New York, has moved to the Park Theater, Columbus Circle, where it will continue its former policy of two performances daily. Thomas H. Ince, producer of "Civilization," was compelled by the existence of a prior contract, to vacate the Criterion Theater, where his masterpiece had registered an unqualified success and where thousands of people were still clamoring to see it. Realizing the importance of his duty to the public, Mr. Ince began to cast about for another theater and finally selected the Park, principally because of its large seating capacity and admirable location.

With a satisfactory theater at his disposal, Mr. Ince began to analyze conditions and possibilities. His first move was to electrify Columbus Circle, and a small fortune has been expended in the construction of the longest electric sign in the world, the letters forming the word "Civilization." This sign stretches from Eighth avenue right across to the Park Theater, having a gigantic electric hand pointing down to the entrance of the house, so that as you come down Broadway, or along the park, or through the park, or Fifty-ninth street, or as you go up Eighth avenue; from east, west, north or south, in fact, you are bound to see this sign and go where it leads and points.

This is not all. Right over the entrance of the Park Theater there is a 40 ft. by 50 ft. sign made of enormous flaming arc lamps, and on top of the theater is a search light sweeping the points of the compass.

Then Mr. Ince decided that the music should surpass even that furnished at the Criterion and arranged for the installation of a $50,000 Choralcelo to supplement the regular orchestra which continues under the direction of M. Maurice. The first performance at the Park was a decided success and it may be accepted as symptomatic of an indication that the picture is in for an indefinite run at Columbus Circle. Everybody sat out "Civilization"—an unusual happening, because people are getting somewhat hypercritical about these big films and it is no uncommon thing to see them rise and go out of the theater while the film is in progress, simply because the picture is unable to hold their interest.

"Civilization" is exciting the keenest interest amongst state right buyers, and several important deals are on the point of being consummated and closed with this great production as the object. The executives of the Harper Film Corporation controlling "Civilization," are in receipt of a number of applications from South America as well as North America for the picture, and territory negotiations are proceeding apace.

State righting a million dollar film spectacle is necessarily an affair of some deliberation. It involves a great deal of money; and big money in the motion picture business moves with caution as well as deliberation. As time goes on, the money making value of "Civilization" increases, because of its absolutely unique value and standing in the market, for million dollar spectacles are scarce goods.

The reception of the picture at Boston, under the auspices of the New England Film Distributors, was of an epochal kind. The production is sweeping all before it wherever it is shown.

Although it is a very common thing for actors and actresses to receive complimentary verses and letters of admiration from the "movie fans," Miss Violet H. Mead of Los Angeles is probably the first to pay a compliment of this kind to the producer of a feature film.

The authoress saw "Civilization" shortly after its first public presentation, and thereupon sat down and wrote a poetical tribute to the film, taking the story as its basis. This poem, which is of striking merit, consists of about 140 verses, extending to nearly four thousand words.

Miss Mead adopted a very graceful and artistic way of printing the poem. She chose white silk as the support for her offering, and upon it she neatly typed the verses. The silk is mounted on a tasseled roller, and is seven feet in length, and about seven inches wide, and makes a very refined and artistic looking scroll.

Mr. Ince values this poetical offering in this striking, original, unconventional form, very highly.

Before the completion of J. Warren Kerrigan's latest production, "The Measure of a Man," his leading lady, Louise Lovely, was taken so ill that she had to remain in bed for three days.

However, rather than delay the completion of the picture, the pretty Australian girl appeared at the studio and went through a number of scenes, but under the watchful eye of her physician.

Two scenes from Thomas H. Ince's "Civilization," and a view of the forceful director himself in action, directing the filming of his big war show.

PAUL PANZER IN SERIAL

Monmouth Film Corporation to Release "Jimmie Dale, Alias 'The Grey Seal'" Serial, with Paul Panzer in the Title Role

The worth of a motion picture director is always apparent in his choice of players to fit the characters of his story. This fact makes Harry McRae Webster stand out as a director like a bolt of lightning in a black sky.

Paul Panzer, Monmouth.

His latest feat is the engagement of Paul Panzer for the role of the villain in "Jimmie Dale, Alias the Grey Seal," the Monmouth Film Corporation's forthcoming series of two-reel features.

Mr. Panzer's first appearance on the screen was made in 1905. It was in June of that year that he gained the acquaintance of Stuart Blackton, who, with his co-workers, had just organized the Vitagraph Company and set up a studio in the building at 116 Nassau street. It is very interesting to hear Mr. Panzer relate his early activities in the picture world. He tells how actors, after being barred from the regular passenger elevators of the building because they looked like freaks in make-up and costume, would upon reaching their roof-stage be forced to manufacture or improvise the scenery to be used in the picture. They had to do their own carpenter work, set up and arrange their props—going about at all times to beg or borrow these—in fact, they had to do everything from wielding a hammer and a paint brush to playing the role of ermine-clad emperor.

Panzer's connection with the Vitagraph Company covered four years, during which period of time he appeared in many of their most successful productions.

The next four years, which included the forming of the Pantograph Company and its downfall, were rather strenuous, eventually throwing Mr. Panzer into a state of nervousness which necessitated his taking a complete rest.

His next engagement was with the Pathe Players, and his work with this organization is too well known to require any comment.

Following his associations here he entered upon a tour of the eastern vaudeville houses, lecturing on his career as a motion picture idol, carrying with him a film showing the most principal scenes in seven of his best characterizations of the screen, and relating to the audience happenings incident to the taking of the picture.

Following this tour he became connected with the Universal forces, where he remained for a year.

The "Jimmie Dale, Alias 'The Grey Seal'" series—which will be released on October 16, and will permit Mr. Panzer to display his talents to the fullest extent, thus serving to bring him once again in closer association with his countless admirers.

VITAGRAPH RETAINS FILM

"Ne'er-Do-Well" to Be Distributed on Vitagraph Program—Leon D. Netter Takes Joint Interest With Lesser in Eastern Venture

In view of the fact that the Selig Company has withdrawn from the V-L-S-E, Sol Lesser, head of the All Star Features, Inc., located in San Francisco, desires to make it known to the film world that "The Ne'er-Do-Well," which he purchased outright from Selig, will continue to be released on the Vitagraph V-L-S-E program.

The absorption of the V-L-S-E by the Vitagraph Company will in no way affect the distribution of "The Ne'er-Do-Well." Inasmuch as it is expressly understood that while V-L-S-E becomes a department of Vitagraph, its plans, policies, and sales force will in no way be altered by this merger.

"The Ne'er-Do-Well" has had exceptional runs all over the country. One "live wire" exhibitor in Northern Maine ran it as a serial. Another distributed miniature copies of Rex Beach's novel, giving only the first chapter. Still another gained a goodly quota of good-will and patronage by showing it to the students at Cornell University after circularizing them, about a rich college boy who turned out to be a "ne'er-do-well."

William Moore Patch, who had such an extended and successful run of "The Ne'er-Do-Well" at the Pitt Theater, Pittsburgh, is considering rebooking this feature on the strength of the demand already created.

Mr. Lesser, in a statement to Mr. Irwin, explicitly states that he is entirely satisfied with the efficient way in which V-L-S-E has distributed "The Ne'er-Do-Well," and feels sure that the Greater Vitagraph Company with the same high-purposed organization will continue to show results he anticipated when he sought out V-L-S-E and placed his confidence with that organization. Leon D. Netter, who so successfully handled Selig's "Spoilers," in Philadelphia, and distributed "Cabiria" and Annette Kellermann in "Neptune's Daughter," as a states rights exchange man, and who previous to that had a wide and active experience with Sol Lesser's enterprises in the West, has taken over joint interest in Lesser's latest ventures in the East. Netter, who will make his office at 1325 Vine street, Philadelphia, where he can best supervise the distribution of "The Little Girl Next Door," the rights for which he and Lesser recently purchased for Pennsylvania, will also be in a better position here in the East to give the proper service to exhibitors in Ohio, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Indiana, West Virginia and Kentucky for the Audrey Munson film, "Purity," which they also jointly own for this territory. Netter is just completing a comprehensive exhibitor campaign in regard to these features which will shortly be launched.

Initials or Not?

Unless plans are radically changed, the official title of the latest Filmland's combinations will be the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Company. It had been suggested that the initials of these companies be used, but motion picture exhibitors and others immediately protested. William N. Selig and George Spoor have also both expressed themselves in favor of utilizing the full names of the companies interested.

Two scenes from D. W. Griffith's mighty world-drama, "Intolerance."

"Intolerance"

D. W. Griffith's Beautiful and Stupendous "Sun Play." Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy.

The manifold wonders with which D. W. Griffith has endowed "Intolerance" sufficed to accomplish something in excess of merely fulfilling the expectations of the first-nighters at the Liberty Theater on Tuesday, September 5, when the new creation of the producer of "The Birth of a Nation" began its New York run. The audience assembled there was prepared to witness extraordinary and overpowering photographic effects and that their appetites, craving lofty and exalted exhibitions of the motion picture art, were sated speaks volumes in praise of "Intolerance."

So gigantic is "Intolerance" that the spectator's attitude after seeing it is that of bewilderment. One is stunned by a scope and vastness which paralyzes the significance of sounding words and phrases even when written in a spirit of flushed enthusiasm. A work which consumed years in being brought to completion cannot be comprehended in its entirety in one reading, and it is difficult to detail the several miracles of this picture when they all combine to make one great impression whose features are blurred by their own dazzling brilliance. Cogitation upon what has been seen tends only to throw one into a state of wonderment at the fact that such a work could ever be accomplished, granting the ambitious one who conceived it all the time and money available to the most hale and ingenious of men.

"Intolerance" is entirely the work of D. W. Griffith. The idea upon which the picture is based and its visualization owe their being to him. The picture can not be likened to any other work designed for the theater. Pageantry so moving and of such magnitude is something new under the sun. Described as "a sun play of the ages," "Intolerance" is given to showing that our present society may trace its ills to that evil which proved the source of disaster in every step or age in the history of man.

In depicting this theme Griffith visualizes four separate stories. The fall of Babylon, the Crucifixion of Christ, the massacre of the French Huguenots and a modern melodrama. In his scenario Griffith pays little heed to the accepted dramatic forms, his aim being to show incidents in each of the four periods as they might occur to one reasoning along these lines of comparison. The plots are developed simultaneously, thus the spectator is carried by means of the switchback from the modern to the ancient period and from there to the religious or historical age as an even unraveling of the plot thread requires.

It would naturally be supposed that this manner of telling four separate stories would result not only in confusion to the spectator but also lessen noticeably the dramatic force of each. But in "Intolerance" this is not the case. For, odd as it may seen, one follows the story of each period with consummate ease and there is the most conclusive evidence to prove that the last ounce of dramatic effect has been wrung from the four plays treated.

As a drama proceeding from the premise that civilization has been and is even now being retarded by the failure of one man to accept, or rather respect the opinions or principles of another, "Intolerance" can hardly be considered vital. We were no surer that intolerance was the one great evil after seeing "Intolerance" than before. Babylon, the mighty city which Griffith has really reconstructed and destroyed again, might have fallen before the sword of ambition as much as the poison of intolerance for all this portion of the picture proves to the contrary.

The Babylonian and the modern are the most striking of the four periods. Of the former all one can do is to bow one's head and ponder at its colossal and thrilling spectacular effects and the latter is a thoroughly absorbing melodrama. But as far as the plays are concerned, it is quite probable that the same material and scenario construction if given into the hands of any other producer would fail to attain remarkable prominence over the best that the screen drama has already offered. "Intolerance" cannot fail to drive home the fact that Griffith is the supreme master of motion picture production. Also, if the scenario really worthy of his talents ever comes within his grasp, the world shall see the camera's art completely sounded. And then new and greater treasures will be brought up from its vastly depths.

But it is difficult to dwell upon "Intolerance" and remain calm and analytical of a story which holds together marvels of an undeniable allure. Those who do not make possible the opportunity to see it are guilty of an offense against their own welfare and good. There is one scene whose magnificent and inspiring artistry is well worth a long journey and twice the price of the rent of the choicest seat to view. This is the beginning of the march of Cyrus's Persian hordes in their second martial advance upon Babylon. The picture seems little more than a flash, but what a flash of grandeur it is. The battle scenes in this period are equally great in their power to thrill. Strictly as battle scenes they cannot be compared with those of any other film production. They take up the pace where the best of the others left off, and, to be sure, they travel far from this advanced starting point.

The pictures of ancient Jerusalem stir emotions of a more ethereal nature. They are as gorgeous as those of Babylon, but theirs is a splendor of simplicity and spirituality as against the bizarre and awe-inspiring glamour of the edifices and passions of those mighty men of the world who are reincarnated in the ancient story told by "Intolerance." The artificiality and pomp of the court of Charles IX of France as well as scenes of the reign of terror on St. Bartholomew's eve are reproduced in striking reality in the historical period.

The modern story is quite as notable as the others. It rather bitterly attacks certain forms of organized charity in a play whose central characters are of the working class. Nor is this story without thrills. The enactment of the murder for which an innocent is sent to the very trap of the gallows is most intense. And the auto racing to catch a train carrying the only man with the power to stay the hand of a law about to be put to misuse brought the audience to the foremost reach of the theater chairs.

But in accounting for the influences which make the modern period of "Intolerance" a play of intensely interesting properties the observer would prove himself quite lax were he to make no note of Mae Marsh's acting. Just as "Intolerance" surpasses all previous attempts so too does Miss Marsh set a new standard for the greatest of the actresses who are to come to the screen by her performance here.

The innovations which Griffith has introduced are as numerous as they are astonishing. These new devices are abstractly referred to for the simple reason that one visit tto tthe screen holding "Intolerance" is not sufficient to enable a reviewer to point out and describe the most typical instances.

"Her Double Life"

Six-Reel William Fox Drama Features Theda Bara. Reviewed by George W. Graves

ONCE again Theda Bara takes a recess from the pure vampire style of role, this time appearing as a woman with perfectly sincere motives, forced by unfortunate circumstances, to choose between the lesser of two evils. In the role of this woman, who, to escape the persecutions of an immoral villain, usurps the name and fortune of another woman believed to be dead, Miss Bara has a part which is productive of dramatic power, especially at the story's climax, when she is called to account. This characterization is among the most effective and genuinely pleasing to be be found in Miss Bara's long line of successful portrayals. Having as her vehicle a play which deals with the natural course of things, and not with silly abnormalities, her work is bound to fasten itself upon the sympathies of the spectator.

That element which is largely noticeable in all Fox productions, realism, is here to a large extent, finding expression in such bits as the explosion and burning of a house, some brief war scenes, etc. As a six-reel subject the picture does not grow tiresome, due to plenty of story material and the other sustaining graces of a good photoplay, including good direction and acting, the latter (barring Miss Bara) being the work of Stuart Holmes, A. H. Van Buren, Walter Law and Madeleine Le Nard. The director, J. Gordon Edwards, worked from a scenario by Mary Murillo.

Mary Doone, a nurse at the front, finds herself in the power of Lloyd Stanley, a scheming war correspondent, who uses his knowledge of her past to frighten her into acquiescence with his desires, although she is really innocent. Finally Mary jumps at a chance to escape. An orphaned girl on her way to the home of her aunt in England becomes wounded and is placed in Mary's care. When the latter thinks the girl has died, she discovers a note of introduction to her English aunt, as well as papers of identification and a passport. On the spur of the moment Mary changes clothes with what she thinks is a corpse, and makes a successful escape to England.

While Mary, in the role of Ethel Wardley, the orphan, is being lovingly taken into the family in England, the doctors back at the front are nursing the real Ethel Wardley back to health, it having been discovered that her case was one of suspended animation. Mary falls deeply in love with Elliott Clifford, a minister, and the marriage date is ultimately set. Then Ethel comes to England and tries to claim her rights but she is looked upon as an imposter. But when Stanley comes, soon after, he and Ethel tell the truth to Elliott. Mary, however, has meanwhile decided to sacrifice all that is dear to her in order to do the right thing, and written a note of confession. Luckily Elliott overhears some of Stanley's secret conversation, which fully incriminates the latter. So the story comes to a happy conclusion, after the minister has battled with himself to forgive Mary's deception.

"The Light of Happiness"

Viola Dana in Metro Release Produced by Columbia. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

WHEN it attains the heights of the pretty sentiments at which the play is ever aiming "The Light of Happiness" is pleasing enough to make one regret having smiled a bit patronizingly at the early steps in this march toward emotion stirring incidents.

Viola Dana reveals herself as an actress of resource in "The Light of Happiness."

John H. Collins is the author and producer of this scenario dealing with small-town manners.

Doubtless, the story was written for the star, which is at best a trying job. And the task is made none the less difficult through the heavy demand the screen has made upon cinderella stories. What claims the play makes to one's affections are not through novelty of theme or newness of handling. "The Light of Happiness" reads like many other scenarios and it resembles the majority in its profusion of credulity-straining moments. But on many occasions the spectator's sympathetic humors are appealed to and there is present a note of deep sincerity.

Viola Dana is featured in this Metro offering. Miss Dana is an actress of great resource and plainly does she show this in those of her scenes previous to the fifth reel, when she, like Edward Earle as Lowell Van Orden and Robert Walker as the minister, gets an opportunity to do some acting. The last reel is the best part of "The Light of Happiness," which is rather a good thing, for then one takes away a pleasant impression; more pleasant than if some of the action had been advanced to enliven four reels of constant building which is manifestly building until all of a sudden things become concrete and the seeds planted with so much ado spring up and blossom.

"The Light of Happiness" tells of a little girl who is an outcast in the community because her father is a drunkard. She becomes a party to a scheme to disrupt the love affair of a wealthy man whose eyesight is suddenly restored and a farmer's daughter. The new minister takes Tangletop, as she is known, in the town, after her father's death. There is a scandal about this but the minister soon brings the truth out. Tangletop is troubled by her conscience, so she goes to the rich man's home and informs him that she deceived him when she represented herself as Molly, the girl he loved while blind. The ending is marked by a double "curtain" embrace.

Mr. Earle's performance as the wealthy Lowell in its effective ease and quiet grace is wholly characteristic. Mr. Walker has the best opportunities and his portrayal of the part in which he is cast shows that he deserved them, and more perhaps. Miss Dana lived up to expectations when given the opportunity. Lorraine Frost appeals very decidedly as Mollie Dean. "The Light of Happiness" is capable of providing the average screen patron with a fair brand of entertainment.

"Three Pals"

Kolb and Dill in Five-Reel American Mutual Feature. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

FOR their second screen appearance, which is September 18, Kolb and Dill have a comedy drama which gives them an opportunity for a number of unusual and entertaining scenes. There is in the same mingling of humor and pathos which made their first picture, "A Million for Mary" so attractive. An interesting narrative forms the basis of the play and will hold the attention of the audience in the intervals between the humorous episodes. Many of the subtitles are written in the German dialect employed by these comedians in their speaking stage roles. A number of these are sure to win laughter.

As a whole, however, while the acting of the featured players is, as in the first picture, excellent, the vehicle lacks the clever twists, both in situations and captions, of the Aaron Hoffman story from which the former picture was made. Also, five reels proves rather lengthy for the telling of the story. Nevertheless, "Three Pals" is entertaining, and there can be little doubt of its success with most audiences. It is wholesome and sunshiny, excellent for the neighborhood theater. In fact, these two Kolb and Dill comedies and the Richard Bennett picture, all released this month through Mutual, should please especially those patrons of cinema theaters who have been demandying a cleaner, cleverer type of screen comedy. The releases should win friends among such people for the house runnning them.

The story: A farm summer resort in Illinois furnishes the scenes in the early part of the play. Mike and Louie, two pals, are discovered asleep in a hay field and are set to work by the farmer. Among other tasks, they wait upon the guests at the table. A practical joker among the men, noticing the friendship between Mike and Louie, plans to break it up. He succeeds in provoking a quarrel which ends in a fight and almost a tragedy.

In the end, the friendship is restored, and then the story proper begins when Louie reads in a Chicago paper of a fortune left for Mike Schultz. They set out together for the city so that Mike may claim his inheritance. Arrived without many mishaps at the office of the lawyer, Philo Markham, they find that their supposition is correct, and Mike is given $10,000. However, the lawyer at once cheats them out of their money by selling them for $9,000 a worthless ranch in the west.

With bright visions of a beautiful country home, they set out for the west, after providing themselves with western costumes of the "wild and woolly" period.

The lawyer is not without his own troubles, for his daughter has eloped with a fortune hunter who deserts her when her father disowns her. The girl, May, and her husband go west on the train with Mike and Louie, and after the quarrel May leaves the train near El Reposo Ranch. Mike and Louie, finding their property valueless, work for a neighboring farmer with whom May is living. They admit the girl to their friendship, thus becoming "three pals." Their efforts to protect the girl, whose identity they do not know, and their final decision to kill themselves so that she may have their insurance money, form the story, which ends happily when after many adventures May returns to her father and later, meeting Mike and Louie again as entertainers in a restaurant when there is a reconciliation and the lawyer, in gratitude and repentance, doubles the amount of the original lost fortune.

"Land O' Lizards"

Five-Part American Mutual Masterpicture Released Sept. 21. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

IN many ways this play resembles the best of the three-reel "Mustang" western dramas, and it is good enough to merit its amplification into a five-reel feature. Frank Borzage directed it, and it has the spirit and quick action noticeable in the shorter subjects he is responsible for. The photography is beautiful and the settings typical. Added to the exciting situations, the play contains fine acting, especially on the part of Borzage, who has the leading man's role, and Anna Little who, as "Bobby" Moore, a girl masquerading as a boy, has one of the most appealing roles of her career.

The stranger stops at Moore's for information.

In short, if your patrons have liked the American western plays, this special feature will please them and will merit strong advertising. It is, in fact, a very good picture for any audience which takes kindly to a brisk, well told story with appealing leads.

The supporting cast of players includes Harvey Clark, Laura Sears, Perry Banks and Jack Richardson. The story is credited to Kenneth B. Clark.

The Story: The people of a western village live in terror of a lawless gang, the "Bar C" ranchers, who have taken possession of the best part of the country. It is reported that gold is to be found in a gulch on the ranch, but no one is brave enough to question or dispute the right of the "Bar C" gang. A row of graves marks the entrance to the ranch, graves of unwise intruders. Among them is one of the agents of the Curtis Development Company who had sent a report to the eastern office of the existence of gold in the gulch.

Because of this report, Ward Curtis, president of the company, comes west, bringing with him his daughter. He seeks a man to carry out his plan of overcoming the lawless gang, and is attracted to "The Stranger" (Borzage), a courageous chap who, because of his utter fearlessness has won something like respect from the "Bar C" outlaws. The Stranger accepts the commission, largely because of his sudden interest in Curtis' daughter.

Another man who knows the secret of the hidden gold is Dave Moore, owner of a sheep ranch. The Stranger in his exploration of the gulch meets Moore and "Bobby," supposedly Moore's son, in reality his daughter. "Bobby" rebells against the rough life she is forced to lead, but her father's hope of gaining the gold keeps them there. Moore files a claim to the gulch. Soon after, he is killed as the other intruders were by the outlaws. The Stranger, also investigating, escapes with his life and, wounded, goes to the Moore home where Bobby, who has confessed her femininity, cares for him. The outlaws discover him there. He escapes from them, but they kidnap Bobby. But by this time, Ward Curtis has incited the townspeople against the gang, and in a battle they are overcome. Bobby is rescued and later she and the Stranger are married. And Bobby inherits the gold mine, for which her father has filed his claim.

"His Wife's Good Name"

Melodramatic Romance Presented by V-L-S-E. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

"HIS Wife's Good Name," is a five-part Blue Ribbon Feature written by Josephine Lovett and produced under Ralph Ince's direction and though it contains when generally considered elements which make for popular appeal the play is neither novel nor remarkably dramatic. But the story which tells of an innocent girl who marries a wealthy chap and is then discredited in his eyes through the ignoble scheme of an irate father is just bound to find favor with a majority of those who see it.

Lucille Lee Stewart is featured as Mary Ellen McKay. This is Miss Stewart's third appearance on the V-L-S-E. program and it outranks in effectiveness her two former performances. With the able support of Huntly Gordon and a good cast Miss Stewart renders a convincing though not colorful characterization of the country girl who comes to a college town to study music. Harry Weatherby is a student at the college. He is much taken with Mary and succeeds in making her acquaintance.

It is a case of strong mutual attraction and ere long Harry and Mary are married. They deem it best to keep the marriage a secret for a time but when Harry goes home for a visit he confides the event to his mother and she gives the information to his father after Harry's return to college. The father deceives Mary. He promises to celebrate the wedding at a dinner party at which a number of her husband's friends are supposed to be present. Harry is to arrive late and the unsuspecting girl, desirous of pleasing his friends, indulges in some wine which they practically force on her.

The father then brings Harry to the scene and shows him his wife in the arms of another man. Harry reproaches the girl and leaves. Mary goes home to her apartment and attempts suicide by inhaling illuminating gas, but she is saved by her friend and a pulmotor. After her recovery at the charitable Dr. Cameron's country place, Mary is determined to live and enjoy life but the doctor takes her on a sight-seeing tour of the cafes in New York, thereby convincing her that forgetfulness cannot be found through such a course. The man who agreed to frame Mary endeavors to cash a check given her by the elder Weatherby and in this manner Harry learns the truth. He happens to be acquainted with Dr. Cameron and hurries to him for advice and he finds something more to his liking, which is Mary, whom he still loves.

Frank Currier is the stern father and William Lytell, Jr., makes a good Silk Harrington, the crook. Through the interpretation of Jessie Miller, Kate Weld who is Mary's friend, becomes a likable girl whose only fault it seems lies in her use of the language. Mary says to the janitor: "I've rang twice and Miss McKay does not answer." We did not get this from lip reading but from the insert with Kate's words printed clearly thereon. John Robertson is very good as Doctor Cameron. "His Wife's Good Name" will not move people to the point of excitement or anywhere near it, but it does furnish a calm and quiet sort of melodramatic entertainment.

"The Scarlet Runner"

C. M. and A. M. Williamson Series Produced by Vitagraph. Reviewed by Thomas C Kennedy

FOR its first serial offering V-L-S-E presents "The Scarlet Runner," a twelve-episode series of adventure stories in two reels each. After witnessing the first four releases in this series there is little for the reviewer to do but express a firm belief that the exhibitor will find it very much worth his while to offer "The Scarlet Runner" series to his patrons. It would seem that the exhibitor who does need entertain no doubts as to the ability of the pictures to please the picture-goers immensely.

"The Scarlet Runner" is a series more than a serial, but the leading character is seen in every release and the really interesting properties of the first, second, third and fourth episodes are reasons a plenty for bringing the theater patrons back for the release of the following week. The ever popular mystery element runs through each story, the first four of which give evidence of the decided ability in this regard of their well known authors, C. N. and A. M. Williamson.

"The Scarlet Runner," so far at least, creates suspense through the development of plots of rather clever conceit and effective construction. For our own part, we found these plays much more absorbing than those other serials with climaxes which have a heroine tied to a railroad track and we fail to see that the action requires more intelligence to follow than the mere episodic form of motion picture melodrama. The plots are not cumbersome and by no stretch of the truth could they be called complicated. But in spite of this we would not in the least be surprised to hear some prodigiously well informed person say that "The Scarlet Runner" is too high-class.

The stories take their series title from a very high-powered and speedy motor car. The opening scene discloses the fact that a popular young Englishman has exhausted the patience of his wealthy uncle with his reckless manner of living. The uncle threatens to cut off his allowance and also to leave the rich estate to charity. This is a bit of a shock to Christopher Race so he proposes that his uncle stop the allowance but grant him one year in which to make good. The uncle agrees and names the condition that Christopher show an earning power of one hundred guineas.

The young man sells most of his effects and with the proceeds purchases a motor called "the Scarlet Runner." He proposes to rent his car and his services to special parties to tour in any part of the world, but before long he is forced to take out a regular license to carry public fares. His first customer is a certain king visiting London incognito. One of the king's servants is intriguing to prevent the marriage of another representative of the government. Christopher saves the life of the young man and also exposes the villainy of the minister to the king.

The second episode is entitled "The Nuremburg Watch." In this episode Christopher is made the tool of some bomb-throwers who plot against his uncle, an attorney. He takes a package given him by a person unknown to him to his uncle. It contains an unusual watch, which Sir Gordon Race immediately gives to his financee. Christopher then learns that the watch contains a high explosive and by pushing his car to its utmost prevents a catastrophe.

"The Masked Ball" is the third episode. It is a highly interesting release telling of an attempted robbery of the wealthy guests at a masked ball by a society crook who almost makes Christopher and his great car a party to the scheme. "The Hidden Prince," which is the fourth in the series, tells of Christopher's second encounter with Fitzgerald, who planned the ball robbery. The young Englishman rescues the Prince whom Fitzgerald has kidnaped and has that nefarious person placed under arrest.

The direction of the production is credited to Wallie Van and William P. S. Earle. The directors deserve all manner of praise for their skillful work. The action is laid in England, which is an added difficulty in the path of the producers, but Mr. Van and Mr. Earle have overcome all obstacles very commendably in staging these four plays. Any inconsistencies that are present become absolutely insignificent and negligible in the light of the fine quality of the settings and direction of the action.

Earle Williams plays his role, Christopher Race, with spirit and naturalness. It is safe to say that Mr. Williams will increase his already vast popularity by his acting in this part. Prominent Vitagraph players appear in the supporting cast of each story and in the pictures shown they give good performances. Lillian Tucker, who is well known to picture audiences, appears in the third and fourth episodes. This combined with the fact that she portrays the part so well, which is usual with her, tempts us to mention one other name. The entire casts for the four plays if bunched here would require space unlimited, so we find ourselves forced to refrain from even making mention of their names.

"The Reward of Patience"

Famous Players-Paramount Play Released September 11. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

PATIENCE was rewarded, after the sorrows which come to her throughout the five reels of this picture, by a final union with the man she loved from the first scene. Louise Huff, in the title role, plays the little Quaker maid with a wistful gentleness which is appealing.

While the story of the play is not unusual in any way, and the principal situations have been used many times before, the marriage for money, the estrangement of husband and wife because of the former's devotion to work, the death of the wife and her lover, leaving the husband free to marry the girl he really loves, still it is presented in a fashion so pleasing and with so many human touches that it will have slight trouble "getting by."

The beginning scenes in the little Quaker town start the play out well, especially those containing the children, the Sunday school episode, and others. These, and the pleasing exterior scenes, are enjoyable. Then the story shifts to the city, and the little Quaker girl plays a prominent part as a secretary in the home of the hero during his short and unhappy married career. This part of the play drags and is conventional, but will make an appeal to many patrons because of a quality known as "sweetness."

John Bowers is well chosen as the hero, Robert Penfield. Lottie Pickford, who reappears after a long absence from the screen, has the role of Edith, who married Robert for his money, a bargain both regret. Adolph Menjou plays Paul Dunstan, with whom Edith elopes. Kate Lester appears as Robert's mother. The story is by Shannon Fife.

The Story: Robert Penfield, a civil engineer, comes to the Quaker village of Amity Center to supervise the building of a bridge. He and Patience, a Quaker girl, become good friends, and when the father of Patience dies, Robert recommends the girl as a companion for his mother. Patience has fallen in love with Robert and is deeply wounded when she learns, at his mother's home, that he is to marry a girl of his own class. This girl, Edith, is in love with Paul Dunston, but marries the wealthier Robert.

After the marriage, Robert's mother goes abroad but Patience remains as secretary to Edith. She manages Edith's affairs and, after a baby is born, supervises its care while its mother resumes her flirtation with Dunstan. Robert, absorbed in his work, does not realize the situation. Edith is jealous of Patience and of Robert's interest in her welfare, and discharges her. A little later, when Dunstan inherits a fortune, she plans to elope with him. The two are killed on the runaway trip, and Robert is free to go in search of Patience, who had returned to her native village and was entertaining thoughts of suicide.

"The Chattel"

V-L-S-E Blue Ribbon Feature with E. H. Sothern. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

"THE Chattel," a drama by Paul West, produced by Vitagraph under the direction of Fred Thompson, introduces the distinguished E. H. Sothern to motion picture audiences. The mere fact that Mr. Sothern appears in "The Chattel" should make it a box-office attraction of no little consequence. This actor holds a position of great prominence on the American stage and doubtless multitudes will be keen to see him in his first screen presentation.

Considered in the other light "The Chattel" is in no way an impressive picture. When shown for review the offering was in six reels but we are given to understand that the powers that be have decided to cut it to five. "The Chattel" would be a better picture were it cut to five reels or even less, for it must be said that the story drags a lot in the last two reels and before that it has little spirit.

Mr. Sothern appears as Blake Waring, a financier whose life code is: "I must and will have the best! for it I will pay any price and count the cost fair. But once the thing is mine it is mine own, to do with as I please, and none shall interfere." From this it will be apparent to all that when he meets a woman who excites within him a desire to marry she will become his wife and also said wife is in for her own share of trials.

Waring tries to make Leila a slave to his peculiar moods and habits. This becomes oppressive to her and she decides that there will be a parting of the ways when he tells her that she belongs to him as much as any article of furniture he possesses; for has he not saved her father from disgrace and purchased his very right to respectability? Leila then makes a successful investment and surprises the haughty Waring by handing him the amount and telling him that she has now bought her freedom. The ensuing days are unhappy ones for Waring, for real love for Leila awakens. He brings her back to his home but through love and not the methods he hitherto practiced.

The play was not rich enough in incident to be selected for depiction in five reels and it cannot be said that the director made the best of his material. Peggy Hyland is equipped with an engaging manner and good looks. She plays Leila well. Rose E. Tapley, Charles Kent, John Lark Taylor and Florence Radinoff make up the balance of the cast.

discovered the guilty one and won a confession from him, she feels that she has fulfilled her vow to her former lover.

When the installment begins, Gloria pauses in her career of crime detecting long enough to plan an entertainment at her country home. After these details are completed, the Staffords and Judge Freeman are astonished to see Trask and his daughter arrive. For Trask has decided to confess his crime. So, in Trask's story, related to Gloria, the tragedy which formed the basis of the entire story, is pictured as it really happened. Judge Freeman, who is listening, is overjoyed to learn that his fears of David's part in the affair are groundless, while Gloria gives a sigh of relief when she finds that the story does not concern her brother or Dr. Royce. Since Trask is dying from the wound received in the fight on the barge, no charge of the crime is brought against him, and he is given back to his daughter.

So, the mystery of the murder having been solved, the way is laid for the completion of "Gloria's Romance" in the next chapter.

"The House of Lies"

Morosco-Paramount Release With Edna Goodrich. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

EDNA GOODRICH is an actress of great charm and beauty of face and form. One need be in possession of no very subtle appreciation of just what constitutes physical attraction to realize that. The whole thing is most apparent in a single glance to those who have the use of their eyes. Consequently, it is quite convincing that she appear in a role which demands beauty. Such a role is furnished Miss Goodrich in the latest offering of the Morosco Photoplay Company.

Miss Goodrich is Edna Coleman in "The House of Lies," which tells of a step-mother who is badly in need of funds to continue her lavish mode of living. To her the most direct way is to capitalize her step-daughter's good looks so she enters into a written contract with a crooked theatrical producer who owes a great deal of money to a wealthy dramatist. The mother agrees in writing to do anything the producer may propose as a return for his aid in capturing the playwright for a husband for her daughter.

Edna abhors the idea of being loved for her physical beauty and she confides her woes to the family physician. At a reception at which she is to meet the famous Auriel, the young woman, before the eyes of her maid, drops some strong acid on her face, thereby causing a burn which the doctor states will leave a permanent and disfiguring scar. The other sister is in league with the mother and between them they succeed in having Auriel promise to marry Dorothy.

The villainous producer insists that they steal a note which the author holds against him. This plan is foiled by Edna, who is now employed by Auriel. For her unselfish act the playwright asks her to marry him even if her face is scarred. And on the wedding day, of all wonders, Edna appears sans the scar. The story then comes out. It was all a plot between the doctor and Edna and she is not scarred at all.

All of which above outlined story strikes us as being just about as foolish as any screen or stage play conceivable. The entire play is of such character as to elicit no further comment than that it is silly from start to finish.

Frank Lloyd directed the production. There is much to admire in the staging given the piece, the settings being pleasant and the photography good. Juan de la Cruz, Kathleen Kirkham,

"The Jungle Child"

Triangle-Kay Bee Production Released October 8. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

THE savagery of a South American jungle is pitted against the corruption of a center of civilization, the city, in "The Jungle Child" and the comparison shows that brutality is not nearly so low as corruption. "The Jungle Child" is by Monte M. Katterjohn. Its appeal is not broad, nor is it a picture that will ingratiate itself to a notable extent even to the few who may be interested in seeing what happens when a vicious American wins the love of a girl reared in a jungle and brings her to New York as his wife merely to get possession of the rich inheritance.

This Ince offering was given a splendid production and Dorothy Dalton makes an interesting Ollante, but unfortunately she has not the opportunity to render the part in a style capable of carrying the interest in a story that is without a dramatic moment in its five reels. In "The Jungle Child" we have neither plot or characterization and it is doubtful if the many realistic scenes laid in the Brazilian jungle will be considered compensation for this delinquency by the average picture-goer.

Ollante is really a Spanish girl, though she has been reared by a woman of the Tupi tribe and is in ignorance of her heritage until she reaches the age of twenty. The old woman has some papers found beside Ollante's dead father years before. Of course, she cannot read the documents. On the other hand, they excite no longing in the breast of Ollante, who is satisfied to remain with these people.

Ridgeway Webb is traveling as an interpreter with an exploration party when the provisions are stolen. A coward, Webb appropriates the remaining food and deserts the party. A few days later he is found exhausted by Ollante. The girl carries him to her hut and nurses him back to health. He is given the papers by the old woman and upon learning from them that Ollante is the daughter of a wealthy Spaniard and will receive her inheritance if proper representations are made, he informs the old woman that these documents establish the girl as an unworthy person.

Webb marries the girl and returns with her to New York. It takes a full year for him to secure the fortune belonging to Ollante. It is not a pleasant year for Ollante, who is of course very much out of place in her present surroundings. But she is no less fortunate than the spectator because the year drags for him too. When Webb finally gets his hands on the money he gives a party at his home and it is there that Ollante hears him call her a barbarian. In a bitter state of mind the unhappy Ollante dons her tribal gown and performs the ancient death-dance much to the dismay of her Tupi mother, who witnesses the girl's revenge in killing Webb with her own powerful hands.

Walter Edwards used skill in visualizing the story. He secured striking settings for the action in every instance and in a number of instances almost gained life for the ineffectual dramatic situations by clever direction. Howard Hickman, Gertrude Claire, and Dorcas Matthews have the prominent parts.

Colleges Interested in Photoplays

Announcement that the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company was to produce, with Fannie Ward as the star, the Columbia University Prize Photoplay, "Witchcraft," by R. Ralston Reed, has created an interest in photoplay writing among the dramatic classes of other universities in the country. The success of the Columbia competition, which was conceived by Samuel Goldfish, will prompt the Lasky Company to extend its facilities of production to the winning photoplay written by students of several other colleges. Columbia University was the first of the big colleges to establish a class of photodramatics. It is likely that before long similar classes will be started by other large educational institutions.

ABOUT BUDDING PLAYS, AND NEWS OF THE TRADE

Metro-Yorke Gets "Tremaine"

President Balshofer Claims Film Business Will Progress So Long as Good Pictures Are Exhibited

FRED J. BALSHOFER, president and general manager of the Yorke Film Corporation, declares that good pictures are increasing in general popularity and that the better producing companies are in a healthy and prosperous condition.

Splendid set used in Metro-Yorke's "Big Tremaine." Harold Lockwood is at the left, with Director Henry Otto and Cameraman Tony Gaudio.

"Motion pictures will always live, so will the stage," says Mr. Balshofer. "The former caters to a distinctive audience and is also being patronized by a majority of the speaking stage followers, whereas the speaking stage has only its regular following and does not draw from the ranks of picture fans, because the latter can have as much enjoyment at a picture show for twenty-five or fifty cents and, consequently, nine cases out of ten cannot see their way clear to paying a dollar or two to see a legitimate attraction. Therefore, the picture business will always progress, providing of course, film manufacturers continue making attractive pictures."

Negotiations have been closed by the Metro-Yorke Company with Little, Brown and Company, for the motion picture rights to "Big Tremaine," the novel by Marie Van Vorst. Production will be started soon under the direction of Henry Otto. Harold Lockwood will characterize the name part of "Big Tremaine" and May Allison will play opposite him. Others in the cast include Andrew Arbuckle, Lillian Hayward, William Ephe, Virginia Southern, and Josephine Rice. Lester Cuneo is cast for the best male part in the play next to Harold Lockwood.

Owing to a similarity in the title of two feature productions that might result in confusion, the Metro Pictures Corporation, out of deference to the Vitagraph company, has changed the name of their five-part production, "The Wheel of Justice," in which Emily Stevens is starred, to "The Wheel of the Law." The Vitagraph has a feature bearing a like title, but the stories are distinctively different. In addition to Miss Stevens, "The Wheel of the Law" is produced with an exceptionally strong cast headed by Frank Mills.

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne have completed the production of "Romeo and Juliet" and are now at work on a five-part Metro-Quality feature called "A Diplomatic Romance." Mr. Bushman not only collaborated in the writing of the scenario but also is directing the production.

Many of the scenes are laid in Washington, D. C., and Mr. Bushman will transport his company there to photograph the action in the real locations. The interiors will be made in the Metro-Quality studio at Forty-third street and Eleventh avenue, which Mr. Bushman recently took over. As soon as this play is completed Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne will begin work on a serial which is being prepared for them by W. Christy Cabanne.

Charles P. Stallings is the latest acquisition to the forces of the Metro-Yorke Hollywood studios. Mr. Stallings, who was formerly connected with the American and the Morosco studios, will act in the capacity of assistant to Henry Ott, director of the Harold Lockwood-May Allison feature productions.

Owing to the fact that Emily Stevens, the distinguished dramatic Metro star, will resume her stage engagement within three weeks, which will take her to Chicago, Director George D. Baker will be obliged to produce the five-part feature, "The Wager," in exactly two weeks and four days. Miss Stevens will open the season of 1916-17 in the play, "The Unchastened Woman," which was counted the biggest success of the season last year on Broadway.

"The Wager" was written by Mr. Baker especially for Miss Stevens, and both star and director will be hard put to complete the production in the brief time allotted for it. However, both have consented to work early and late, and the entire company of players in Miss Stevens' support are keyed up to high tension and working with enthusiasm seldom seen around a studio. The making of the picture has been systematized in such a way that Miss Stevens' scenes can all be photographed first. The incidental scenes, in which she does not appear, will be made after she has gone to Chicago.

New Publicity Man

Vernon R. Moore, a well known newspaper man, has been appointed director of publicity of the Progressive Motion Picture Company, San Francisco, California, distributors of Paramount pictures in California, Oregon, Washington, Arizona, New Mexico and Nevada.

Prior to this time, the publicity has been handled by J. W. Allen but in view of the countrywide advertising and publicity campaign that has been inaugurated by Paramount Pictures Corporation to help the exhibitor build his business for permanency upon better pictures for better theaters and a better public, Mr. Moore has been added to this department, which will, for a short while to come, be supervised by Mr. Allen upon the larger details of the campaign. Mr. Moore knows Paramount Pictures thoroughly, having been connected with the San Francisco office several months in the capacity of the single reel department.

The mammoth set depicting the interior of an Adirondack Mountain lodge is serving, this week, for scenes in the current Triangle detective drama by C. Gardner Sullivan, in which Thomas H. Ince will present William Desmond as star. This set is said to be one of the handsomest ever constructed at the Ince plant, it having entailed an expenditure of several thousand dollars. It occupies about half the floor space on one of the big glass-enclosed stages at Culver City. Those in the cast with Desmond, working under the direction of Charles Giblyn, are Margaret Thompson, Robert McKim, J. Barney Sheery, and Joseph J. Dowlin.

August D. Paulsen has purchased the Pastime Theater at Schleswig, Iowa.

Jordon & Simonson has leased the Star Theater at O'Neill, Nebraska, to Prof. Beckhard.

Work has commenced on the rebuilding and renovation of the Lyrick Theater, which was partially destroyed by fire recently, at Aurora, Nebraska.

ATLANTIC COAST NOTES

Alice Brady had eight hours' respite between her last scene in "The Gilded Cage" and her first in "Bought and Paid For." The final scene of "The Gilded Cage" was finished at twelve o'clock midnight, and the cast of "Bought and Paid For" was assembled at the World studio at eight the next morning.

George Clarke, stage manager for the late Charles Frohman for many seasons, is now an actor with the William Fox productions. Mr. Clarke was born in Birmingham, England. He had long experience on the legitimate stage before entering the silent drama.

Joseph R. Darling, special representative of the Fox films in England, left London last week for an extensive tour of South and Central America, in the principal cities of which he will open new branches for the corporation. Mr. Darling will visit Rio de Janeiro, Buenos Aires, Montevideo, Santiago in Chili, La Paz in Bolivia, Quito in Ecuador; and Panama, for the purpose of developing the Fox film interests in the Latin-American republics. The trip will require nearly a half-year.

Society folk at Watch Hill, R. I., a summer resort, where Douglas Fairbanks and his company are making a Triangle Fine Arts picture, are very eager to appear in scenes. Since they insisted on getting into the picture whether Director Lloyd Ingraham liked it or not, the script of the play was changed in some respects to allow them to appear whenever possible.

Grace Valentine called on Billie Burke last week, and brought some friends along. The friends included Director John W. Noble, Lionel Barrymore and twenty other players of "The Brand of Cowardice," in which Miss Valentine and Barrymore are co-starred, and they used the grounds of Miss Burke's home for several important scenes.

Paul Rainey's latest hunt pictures were presented at Newport recently for the benefit of the infantile paralysis victims of Rhode Island and New York.

Holbrook Blinn has already finished his first McClure picture and is at present getting in the hay at his summer home in Croton.

Vincent Serrano, who played the role of the lieutenant in "Arizona," on the speaking stage, has been engaged by Edwin Thanhouser to be starred in a five-reel feature, "A Modern Monte Cristo," written by Lloyd Lonergan. Mr. Serrano appeared in pictures only once before, with Pauline Frederick in "Lydia Gilmore."

Brooklyn Keller has joined the Fox players and has a role in William Farnum's final western drama.

Kittens Reichert, the charming little actress of the Fox forces, is cast for the part of a blind girl in Bertram Bracken's new production.

At a private exhibition of "The Chattel" in Fine Arts Hall, last Thursday, Julia Marlowe had her first opportunity of seeing the work of her husband, E. H. Sothern, on the screen. The showing was given by the Vitagraph Company particularly for Miss Marlowe, although the occasion was made more festive by the presence of about 200 guests.

There is a new player at the Famous Players studio, a most enthusiastic one. She is Julienne, Pauline Frederick's maid. When for a few scenes in "Ashes of Embers," Miss Frederick needed a maid, she insisted that the girl could do the scenes better than any actress she could get for the part.

Jack Pickford is to play the leading role in the Famous Players adaptation of Booth Tarkington's "Seventeen."

Mme. Petrova used her beautiful country home near Flushing, L. I., for many scenes in "Extravagance," the Metro play in which she is working under the direction of Burton King. In the studio, Mr. King reproduced the interior of Mme. Petrova's sun parlor, and the star brought her parrot and her blue Persian cat to town to "work in the set."

Many of the important scenes in the Metro version of "The Iron Woman," Margaret Deland's novel, in which Nance O'Neil is starring, were taken in the big steel plant at Bethlehem, Pa. Carl Harbaugh is directing the play.

Edward Brennan has returned to the Metro studios from Kansas City, where he directed a big feature picture depicting the history of that state. He is now working in a picture with Mme. Petrova.

The market in general on film stocks has been abnormally quiet during the month of August. Investors in film stocks are not now so eager to bite at new propositions; they have had an opportunity, in the last four years, to see both sides of the industry and have before them some incontrovertible facts which demonstrate that things can go wrong quite as easily in this field as in any other line of industry, and are, therefore, investing their funds only in those companies which have been tested by the fire of competition—have weathered the drastic changes that have taken place in the manufacture and distribution of photoplays, and can show, in their present surplus account, that their management clearly knows the intricacies of the game and can secure profits for the stockholders.

The counsel of this column would be for all investors to be exceedingly wary in showing any responsiveness to the casual new offering. The mortality of new ventures in the last year and a half has been excessively high. There have been many attempted combinations—90% of which have fallen through. Wall Street, which usually exhibits a chariness to new ventures, and with all its experience in analyzing financial propositions and its usual record of "canniness" in allowing the other man to "prove out" anything new, found itself badly burnt by several pieces of "adventuresome financeering," so that in the future general interest may not be expected from that quarter. Wall Street, when it once learns it does not know a game, has sufficient intelligence to drop it.

The soundest financing of the film industry has centered around Chicago and the "big chancing" was taken by the eastern cities. To epitomize the foregoing—know both the earning power and the management before you make any investments in the film industry, which, in spite of the word "industry" is not an industry in the ordinary sense of the word, but an "amusement" enterprise, and investments should be made with this thought in mind. The profits are usually large or none at all.

Lone Star Film Corporation: Bookings are reported in excess of $2,500,000; European business exceeds $575,000. This latter business is more in the nature of a definite sale, and, in some instances, very substantial sums have already been paid down. The market on the common stock has been fairly steady at between 35 and 45 during the past several weeks.

New York Motion Picture Corporation: The future fortunes of this company are somewhat vague. No one can definitely state just where the attempted combinations of several of the larger companies (of which this was to be a part), stands today; apparently the big capitalization has not found favor either with the banking interests or the investing public. While the standard of the pictures produced remains as high as ever, activity in the stock has practically ceased.

North American Film Corporation: The sequel to "The Diamond From the Sky" is now in preparation and will shortly be released in the form of eight reels. Final redemption of the remaining preferred stock is promised October 15.

Mutual Film Corporation: At the rate of earnings reported for the quarter ending in July, net profits are sufficient to pay the preferred and approximately 28% on the common stock. While no definite dividend policy is promised by the management at this time, it would appear that common stock—between 30 and 35—would be an attractive purchase.

Vogue Films, Incorporated: It is reported from reliable sources that a bulk dividend will be paid at the end of the financial year.

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by makes, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

The Unveiling—Biograph re-issue—September 18.—Featuring Mabel Normand and Robert Harron. The boy, who is the idol of his widowed mother, returns from college with a collegiate record she is justly proud of. To mark the occasion his boyhood sweetheart and her mother come to spend a few days. A show girl, who learns that he will soon come into great wealth, determines to win him. Unsophisticated as he is, he is an easy prey. A friend of the family warns the mother of her boy's danger, which she is loath to believe until positive proof is presented. Pleadings, are in vain for the boy is fascinated, and so the sorrowing mother, feeling she has lost all that she has lived for, determines upon self-destruction and is prevented only by the timely appearance of her visiting friend, who devises the plan that awakens the boy. She has the mother pretend suicide on account of the loss of fortune. This shows the boy the true nature and design of the object of his infatuation.

Into the Northland—(Three Reels)—Selig—September 18.—Featuring Fritzi Brunette and Leo Pierson. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

When Justice Won—(Two Reels)—Essanay—September 19.—Featuring Marguerite Clayton and Sydney Ainsworth. Fifteen years before the story opens James Dillon is entrusted with a document by a fellow convict. He discovers the paper designates him as guardian over the dead man's daughter, who is heir to her grandfather's immense fortune. Dillon escapes, and visits the orphanage. The meeting with the child softens him, and, a changed man, he determines to make something of himself. Clemens, another convict, who sees Dillon rising as a citizen, blackmails him. When Grace Marion is grown her guardian has fought himself to a position of respect, becoming a leading citizen of the state. Clemens continues his persecution and tries to force Dillon to permit his ward to marry Frank Smith, a young accomplice. He denounces Dillon and the girl turns from her guardian. Dillon tells his story to the governor, a friend, and the latter soon puts a pardon in the hands of the girl. Dillon finds her trapped by the two crooks and rescues her. He finds that she desires him to be more than a guardian to her.

Strongheart — (Three Reels)—Biograph—September 20.—Featuring Henry Walthall and Blanche Sweet. Frank Nelson and his sister, Dorothy, are on a hunting trip in the West, and Strongheart, an Indian chief's son, saves Frank from drowning. Strongheart is so impressed with Frank's tales of college life that he begs his father to send him East to acquire the wisdom of the white man for the benefit of his race. He goes to Columbia College with Frank and becomes a great favorite with the boys. Dorothy is loved by Ralph Thorne, but she favors Dick Livingston, her brother's chum, and Thorne, jealous, plans to disgrace Dick by exchanging his list of football signals for Dick's and sends them to the opposing team, who are too honorable to take advantage of the stolen information. Through Strongheart, Thorne's treachery is discovered and he is discharged from college. Dorothy falls in love with Strongheart, and when he received word of his father's death she pleads with him to take her with him, but he refuses, realizing that Dorothy could not live the life of his people, and thus two loving hearts are separated by inexorable fate.

Canimated Nooz Pictorial, No. 16—Essanay—September 20.—A split reel release sharing the thousand feet with beautiful Canadian scenic. Cartoonist Carlson has pictured the ninety-seventh annual track and field meet of the Boneyard Old Peoples Home at Boneyard, Ill. Lads between the ages of seventy-three and ninety-eight participate in the 200-yard dash. "Dad Time," the champion, is handicapped with a long brush which causes him to drop out at the third post. Rufus Rawsberry wins in 12 minutes, 7 seconds. Dreamy Dud has an amusing experience with Kid Kangaroo, just before father awakes him to see his birthday presents.

Honeymoon Car—Vim—September 20.—Featuring Rosemary Theby and Harry Meyers. Harry receives a letter from his uncle telling him to buy a car with the money order enclosed, get married and make the trip to uncle's home in the car. On the way the bridal pair run out of gasoline and hubby walks to the nearest gasoline station and while he is away a tramp holds up the bride and relieves her of her jewelry. When the groom returns he is told of the affair, and he starts in search of said robber, but returns soon, being unable to trace him. They start out again and later they discover that the gasoline tank cap is lost and again the car is stalled. They come upon the tramp and after a merry chase manage to get him and have him arrested. When they arrive at uncle's home he refuses to recognize them as they are so dirty, and the pair return to their car, sit on the running board and try to fathom out a way to make uncle admit his relationship to the groom.

Love and Duty—Vim—September 21.—Featuring Babe Hardy and Billy Ruge. The bugle's call rouses Private Plump and he hurries to Lieutenant Runt's tent to aid his pompous little superior's dressing. Secure in his authority, the officer tortures poor Plump with unnecessary drilling and departs for the day's work. The colonel's daughter loves Plump. The lieutenant loves her. Plump's heart is given to the little pet of the regiment, so that things are rather mixed. A trumped up charge places Plump in the court martial's hands and unthinkingly the colonel sentences him to death. Risking her life, the pet aids him to escape. About this time the maneuvers are taking place and the bursting of a cannon scatters the troops and sends the colonel's horse away on a mad gallop ending in a flying jump into the river. Plump sees this and rushes off to a crane, jumps into the scoop and with a mighty heave drags out the drowning colonel. Before the whole regiment the hero is now restored, decorated and promoted, and with the pet in his arms, his happy future is assured.

A Lesson from Life—(Three Reels)—Knickerbocker—September 22.—Belle Keene, aspiring to become a playwright, frequents the slums in order to perfect her types, but her husband, a successful novelist, does not approve of this. He decides to let his wife visit the slums, and elicits the aid of Steve, a former actor, to make life for her very miserable while she is in the slums. In the tenement house Bella comes in contact with Steve and his confederates. Steve enters her room through a window, supposedly being sought by the police and threatens her and she aids in throwing the police off the scent. Steve becomes so interested in Bella that he determines to ditch his old sweetheart for her and complications ensue between the jealous and discarded girl. Steve is supposedly killed by this girl and Bella seeks safety in flight in order to avoid being mixed up in the affair. She goes to a beach hotel and Richard goes to the tenement, where Steve, the cop and the girl await further orders. He is acquainted with the melodramatic stunts and decides to locate his wife. He finds her and she informs him that she has gained all the material necessary to perfect her story.

The Man Hunters—Vim—September 22.—Featuring Robert Burns and Walter Stull. Pokes, the village boob, and a graduate of a correspondence school for detectives, volunteers to arrest two outlaws who have been terrorizing the town. Pokes follows on the trail of every stranger who enters the town, and when Jabbs, the famous city detective summoned by the town police, arrives, Pokes follows him, and when he discovers Jabbs disguising himself as a woman and entering the postoffice, he summons the police and Jabbs is arrested. Meanwhile the outlaws enter the postoffice and make away with the contents of the safe. Jabbs finally establishes his identity and when the police return to the postoffice and discover the robbery they set out after Pokes, who, they believe, is responsible for the affair. Pokes eludes them, however, and in so doing comes upon the outlaws, who are so surprised at his sudden appearance that they allow themselves to be captured. Just as Pokes marches his captives to the front, and Jabbs is praising him, and the village belles rush to kiss him, fate steps in, and instead of a hero, Pokes finds himself once again the village boob.

The Way of Patience—(Three Reels)—Essanay—September 23.—Featuring Nell Craig and Darwin Karr. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

A Corner in Water—Selig—September 23.—Featuring Tom Mix and Victoria Forde. Pete Johnson takes possession of a water hole, and charges all who come along for the use of same. Joe Simpson and his daughter, Vicky, traveling in a covered wagon, and looking for a location, stop at the water hole, but Johnson refuses to give them water, and shoots a hole through the bucket which Vicky carries, hoping to secure some water for her horses. Tom Smith, a cowpuncher, sees this, ropes Johnson, drags him from the water hole, and Vicky gets some water. Hostile Indians sight Vicky and her father, and give chase. As they approach, father and daughter prepare to hold them off. Tom discovers the state of affairs, and with an automatic rifle kills three of the Indians. The others retreat, and Vicky's eyes tell Tom mutely of her admiration.

Selig-Tribune, No. 72—September 7.—The National Tennis Championship tournament attracts great throngs of enthusiasts who witness the defeat of McLoughlin, the one-time champion and favorite, Forest Hills, N. Y.; first hospital train for the United States Army, under the command of Captain Howard H. Bailey, M. B., arrives here and is put into instant service, San Antonio, Texas; Countess Von Bernstorff, wife of the German ambassador to the United States, arrives in New York on a safe passage guarantee from the Allies, New York, N. Y.; an interesting incident attracting attention in Los Angeles is the adoption of a tiger cub by a Great Dane, herself the mother of two puppies.

Selig-Tribune, No. 73—September 11.—Mrs. Edna Rothard Passapae, while attending the convention of the National Association of Dancing Masters, demonstrates her new "Skating Waltz," Chicago, Ill.; clad in the prosaic garb of men's fashion, King Nicholas of Montenegro presents in the streets of Paris, France, anything but kingly aspect; Charles E. Hughes' campaign party attends the county fair at Loveland, Colo.; Lloyd George, the new British War Minister, accompanied by Sir Manuel Hughes, Canadian War Minister, reviews the Fourth Division Canadian troops prior to their departure for France, Surrey, England; aviators, who flew to their rendezvous in hydro-aeroplanes, indulge in the first "aviation luncheon" tendered to the members of the new Flying Yacht Club, New York, N. Y.

"Stopping a Leak," a [illegible] week, comes first, then the powerful American drama, "Land O' Lizards," with Frank Borzage and Anna Little. On the right is Beauty's "The Stinger Stung." Mutual will, of course, present them all.

Universals that will make their appearance soon. From the left, "A Jungle Hero," Bison, "If My Country Should Call," Red Feather, and the Gold Seal "Husks of Love."

Mutual Pictures

The Stinger Stung—BEAUTY—SEPTEMBER 18.—Featuring Orral Humphrey. "The Stinger" is a four-page sheet published by Petrie, a man beyond middle age, calm and placid in disposition, perfectly illogical in mind and governed by a desire to follow the course of least resistance, avoiding trouble where possible, but otherwise meeting it with an effort to make a peaceful adjustment at any cost. Petrie publishes articles in "The Stinger" which are alternately offensive to the two factions, and in trying to square himself he gets in deeper. Then to pacify the Social Reformers he attacks Simon Hick's saloon business and loses all of the advertising which had supported the paper. In an effort to mollify Hicks he drinks himself very drunk. In this condition he is discovered by the Ladies' Aid Society leader, and in a supreme effort to get straight with her he attacks the loafers' club that gathers daily before Hicks' store. This is the last straw. The loafers organize, sieze Petrie and ride him away on a rail.

Paste and Politics—(TWO REELS)—VOGUE—SEPTEMBER 24.—Featuring Paddy McQuire. A political campaign is going on in the town when the stranger arrives and he is offered a job by the "Boss" and starts out with paste bucket and bills announcing the slogan of the anti-reformers. A series of ludicrous mishaps follows, in which Paddy, the vagabond, attempts to paste bills in the most impossible places and succeeds in covering most of the town with paste, if not with bills. Returning to the headquarters of the boss, he overhears them plotting to ruin the reform candidate, whose daughter Paddy had saved from the attack of two ruffians. He is caught listening and is thrown into the street. When he recovers from the blow he runs to the home of the reformer and notifies his daughter of the plot to ruin her father. They all rush to the room where the plotters have just succeeded in getting the reformer and a general fight ensues and the reformer and his friends are victorious.

The Man in Black—(THREE REELS)—GAUMONT—SEPTEMBER 14.—Second episode of "Fantomas." Juve, the detective, finds no clue to Fantomas until the body of a woman, who has been crushed to death in some mysterious fashion, was found in the office of a mysterious Dr. Chalek and it was supposed to be that of Lady Beltham, whose husband Fantomas had murdered. Juve follows Dr. Chalek when he drives away in an automobile, but the man who gets out of the machine is a slouchy loafer of the boulevards, whereas the man they had trailed was a middle-aged professional man with a blond beard. Juve is thrown off the trail. Fandor, his assistant, follows the woman, who handed the Fantomas a note as he left the automobile, to a railway station where she meets a wine merchant named Martialle going to make payment for his firm. The train on which they are riding is wrecked and Fantomas is disappointed in his hope of getting money from the merchant, since each bill is torn in two, the other half to be paid in thirty days. After many exciting adventures Fantomas again makes his getaway and it is learned that Lady Beltham was crushed to death by a huge snake owned by Fantomas.

Universal Program

He Almost Lands an Angel—(TWO REELS)—An episode of "Timothy Dobbs, That's Me." Featuring Carter De Haven. As this episode starts off, Timothy is in clover, having by the merest chance become a hero in the sight of a wealthy man. Wishing to show off, Timothy does not at once sign a $5,000-a-week contract as a movie actor in the rich man's newly formed company. As a result he never signs it, for a demonstration of his acting is enough and too much for the old man, who gives him the "go-by." Timothy also loses all chances with "the girl."

The Desert of Lost Souls—(TWO REELS)—Episode 6 of "Liberty." After Lopez has tried to lure his American enemies to destruction, using Theresa and Liberty as bait, and failed, he resorts to a ruse to get Rutledge and the American into his power at a lonely spot in the desert. But for a message carried by a government aviator, which orders the invasion into Mexico delayed until "diplomatic negotiation" have been consummated, Uncle Sam's men might have fallen into a trap from which they could not extricate themselves.

After the Battle—(TWO REELS)—BIG U—SEPTEMBER 18.—Victoria Forde and William Clifford featured. This story of the Civil War relates how two sweethearts are able to communicate with each other, and thus be of benefit to the North. The girl's sweetheart is about to be killed in a battle by the cowardly action of his rival when the latter's life is ended by a shell. Later the girl finds her lover on the battle field and revives him.

Buzzard's Prey—IMP—SEPTEMBER 18.—Mary is decoyed into a trap by Jim, whose intent is evil. Bob, her lover, has had misgivings about Mary's going to a place specified in a letter, and follows her there. His suspicions are verified. He apparently shoots and kills Jim, but as he is about to be arrested for the crime, the "dead" man comes to life and all is well.

A Wife's Innocence—LAEMMLE—SEPTEMBER 18.—An artist's wife seeks diversion flirting with another man. A tramp whom the artist has befriended sees his benefactor's wife in the other man's arms and notifies the husband. But when the eavesdropper realizes the trouble he has caused the couple, he sets about to convince the husband that his wife has done nothing really wrong and causes a reunion.

A Silly Sultan—NESTOR—SEPTEMBER 18.—With Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Priscilla Dean. Eddie and Lee are American reporters in Turkey. While in the harem, Nita, a dazzling beauty, slips a note into Eddie's hand, informing him she is in trouble and asking for help. So Lee, dressed as a girl, is finally traded for Nita. Eddie strips the Sultan of his girls, and even the throne, on a gambling basis. When Lee's sex is discovered, in the harem, murder is in the air, but Eddie, in the role of ruler, pardons his friend, and after picking out a beauty for him, they leave the Sultan's domain.

Under the Spell—REX—SEPTEMBER 18.—With Phillips Smalley and Lois Weber. Unknown to her husband, Lois Small becomes addicted to the opium habit. Rather than have him discover her awful obsession, Lois allows her husband to believe her dead. She goes from bad to worse. Word finally comes to Small that his wife still lives. After a search he locates her, but not until she has expired.

The Girl Who Didn't Tell—(THREE REELS)—UNIVERSAL SPECIAL—SEPTEMBER 19.—Violet Mersereau featured. Judith is forced by her crook father to secure the Rand diamonds. Just before entering the house, however, on a prearranged plan, she loses her memory. The Rands decide to care for the girl and Marshall Rand later falls in love with her. Finally the thieves come to investigate and get the gems for themselves. They are discovered and Judith's father is shot. Judith is saved from being arrested as an accomplice by the denial of this accusation which is made by her faithful lover of former days.

Cold Hearts and Hot Flames—(TWO REELS)—L-KO—SEPTEMBER 20.—Featuring Billie Ritchie as Mr. Rockabilt, who, when he is threatened with being put out of his hotel because of bad debts, writes a telegram to himself to the effect that he is inheriting a million dollars. This puts him on the right side of the proprietor, who offers his daughter in marriage. But just as the ceremony is about to take place Billie's deception is discovered. After the hotel has been fired by the proprietor, to get the insurance, and an explosion has blown the edifice with all people therein to the skies, the minister, Billie and the girl meet in midair, where the wedding is completed.

Poisoned Lips—(TWO REELS)—LAEMMLE—SEPTEMBER 21.—Francis Ford and Betty Schade featured. Through the efforts of a scandal-monger and the oddities of circumstance a jealous husband almost kills a man who is entirely innocent of any liaison with his wife. At a tense moment parties who are able to prove the unfortunate man's innocence put in appearance, the jealous husband's anger subsides and the picture closes with his wife's presenting him with a baby.

High Speed—VICTOR—SEPTEMBER 21.—With Edith Roberts and M. K. Wilson. Irene consents to go riding with a young man visiting her village, whom she thinks is a drummer. When the car breaks down Irene thinks it is a preconceived "stall" and phones for her big brother. The latter receives a beating from his sister's escort, it is established that the breakdown really was genuine, and the story closes with the girl's forced engagement to the sranger, who later proves to be wealthy.

His Mother's Boy—REX—SEPTEMBER 22.—Kingsley Benedict has the role of a Northern spy, who shoots a sentinel on the Southern lines, but is himself badly wounded. Wearing the grey, he is cared for by a kind old lady, who finally proves to be the dead sentinel's mother. The latter discovers the true situation, but after a battle with herself, allows the spy to escape—to his mother.

The Broken Spur—(TWO REELS)—BISON—SEPTEMBER 23.—Featuring Ben Wilson in the double role of Jacques Durand, a robber, and Dayton, superintendent of a construction gang. Circumstance so evolves that Dayton is accused of stealing the pay roll, as well as of being unfaithful to his sweetheart. When things look serious for the bewildered superintendent, Durand is caught and the exact likeness of the two men leads to an investigation which proves Dayton innocent.

Musical Madness—JOKER—SEPTEMBER 23.—With Gale Henry and William Franey. As the beautiful girl's father has a leaning towards music, he tells the suitors that the one who sings best will get his daughter—so Ratto, the opera singer, has a clear title to the girl. Binks, the other suitor, tries a little deception to discredit his rival, but it is of no avail—his luck is bound to be bad.

A Desperate Remedy—IMP—SEPTEMBER 24.—Featuring Gertrude Selby. Martin and Gloria, lovers, have a quarrel. To drown his disappointment, Martin takes up life in the woods, posing as a wild character. Gloria, by chance, does the same thing. When they meet, Martin's recognition is not shared by his old sweetheart. After the girl has been attacked in her hut and the "woodsman" has come to her rescue, recognition and reconcilation take place.

To Another Woman—(TWO REELS)—REX—SEPTEMBER 24.—Cleo Madison is seen in the role of Alice, a plain little wife who is put in a sanitorium against her will by her husband, the latter being prompted by the suggestions of Hester, a worldly woman by whom he is being led astray. A young doctor in the institution in which Alice is incarcerated finds that she is sane and helps her to escape, in spite of the bribed head doctor. Later Hester believes that she is losing her hold on the wealthy man and kills him in a moment of rage. This leaves the doctor and the unfortunate wife free to marry.

Pathe

Down to the Sea—(Two Reels)—Pathe-Balboa.—In the tenth number of "The Grip of Evil," featuring Roland Bottomley and Jackie Saunders, the theme of inordinate greed is developed into a drama of good entertaining qualities. It deals with the extreme methods employed by the superintendent of a large fishing industry to do away with his employer and secure the business for himself. He finds it easy to entice his wealthy employer into a launch and get him out into the open sea, but difficult to throw him overboard, even after he has killed another passenger to make his task easier. But the plot is discovered and a rescue launch puts out from shore, arriving just in time to prevent a second murder.

A Change of Heart—(Two Reels)—Pathe-Balboa.—Episode 11 of "The Grip of Evil," featuring Jackie Saunders and Roland Bottomley. This picture has a story which is very simple, but decidedly effective and touching. Its moral effect is also very marked. A "dear old lady" from the country, ignorant and trusting, brings her total savings to the city to invest in a fake venture. Her money is blandly taken by the thieving "officers" of the company, who give her a worthless piece of paper in return. But one of the group, his conscience awakened by memories of his mother, undergoes a quick change of spirit, reclaims the money at the point of a revolver, and journeys into the country to return it to its owner.

Pathe News, No. 72—September 6.—President Wilson leaves the White House for his summer Capitol at Shadow Lawn, N. J.; part of the Atlantic Squadron steams into Hampton Roads to receive its supply of coal for the winter cruise, Old Point Comfort, Va.; latest fashions for winter; Colonel Theodore Roosevelt arrives in Maine to start his active campaign for the election of Governor Hughes to the presidency, Lewiston, Me.; graduates of the Military College receive their commissions as army officers from King Alphonso, Guadalajara, Spain; enterprising aviators organize a Flying Yacht Club and drive to meetings in their high-powered hydroplanes, New York, N. Y.; a new aerial torpedo, invented by an army officer, is tested by officials of the Swedish Government, Stockholm, Sweden; darkening clouds of revolution cause a run on the principal banks of Shanghai, China, as anxious depositors desire to withdraw their funds.

Red Feather

Black Friday—(Five Reels)—Red Feather—September 18.—Dorothy Davenport and Emory Johnson are featured in this drama of love and financial intrigue. Lloyd Carleton directed the production. Adapted from the book written by Frederick S. Isham.

Triangle Program

Puppets—(Two Reels)—Triangle-Fine Arts.—This is a burlesque of the pantomimic art of the stage. It is somewhat of a novelty, which accounts for the fact that the abortive attempts at comic effect do not bore the spectator to a point of distraction. Some of the black and white settings are a bit interesting, but the players' attempts at real pantomime are almost pathetic. True, the entire play is a burlesque, but that is no reason for the actors to express themselves in much the same fashion as that adopted by screen players in serious photodramas. In doing so, they only emphasize the weaknesses of their own profession. The story tells of an uncle's interference in the affairs of the heart of Pierrot and Columbine. De Wolf Hopper, Pauline Starke, Edward Bolles and Jack Brunnel are the prominent players. As a two-reel comedy offering, "Puppets" might be considered a picture closely approaching but not quite arriving at the passable class, and it gets that far only because it moves in novel settings.

Diane of the Follies—(Five Reels)—Triangle-Fine Arts—September 24.—A comedy dealing with a show girl, in which role Lillian Gish appears. Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

The Jungle Child—(Five Reels)—Triangle-Kay Bee—October 8.—Written by Monte Katterjohn and produced by Walter Edwards. Dorothy Dalton is seen as a Spanish girl who is brought up by a tribe of Brazilian savages. Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

TRIANGLE-Fine Arts
LILLIAN GISH in
"Diane of the Follies"

As a modern picture of the stage and matrimony this latest TRIANGLE PLAY is sure to arouse considerable enthusiasm. Men will enjoy it. Women will love it, for among other things, 67 beautiful gowns of the very latest fashion are displayed, to say nothing of the $75,000 worth of jewels worn by Miss Gish.

TRIANGLE-Kay Bee
W. S. HART in
"The Dawn-Maker"

This week exhibitors are again offered the opportunity of presenting that premier star, W. S. Big National Association Meeting

MANY NEW MEMBERS GAINED AND PRODUCTIVE WORK ACCOMPLISHED

THE meeting of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry which was held in New York and continued for a week, resulted in many new memberships for the Association, the cementing of the structure of the organization, the arousing of a fine spirit of enthusiasm among the members and a declaration to pull together to increase the prestige, power and influence of the organization and bring about a unity in the industry which its intimate relation to the national life demands.

There were meetings, all of them either productive of immediate things accomplished or others put well under way. There were gatherings of the producers, distributors, representatives of the exchanges, the supply and equipment men, the executive committee and the general division, the eligibility to which gives some idea of the working scope of the national organization—architects and sub-contractors, employment agents, projection engineers, publications devoted exclusively to motion pictures, theatrical publications with motion picture departments, newspapers, transportation companies, insurance companies, bill posting companies and all employes of establishments and plants in any way connected with the motion picture industry.

During the week 100 persons identified with the industry became members and there were pledges for as many more. Among the corporations that made application were The Erbograph Company, the United States Motion Picture Corporation, Frank Powell Productions, Fox Film Corporation, the Niagara Film Service, the Kineticartoon Corporation, the Sunbeam Motion Picture Corporation and the Rialto Film Corporation.

President William A. Brady freely contributed much time from his own immediate business interests for the benefit of the organization in this important formative stage and attended as many as two meeting a day. He expressed himself as gratified with the corporative growth and the individual membership increase, but urged that there be no slackening in the work. If it is good, it still can be better.

In its intention the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry can be made the greatest organization of its kind in the world, judged by geographical distribution, numbers, capital, organized political influence, the intellectual and moral power of the motion picture and its capacity for shaping public sentiment and the wide affiliation with strong interests and integrally in the industry. If every man who has to do with the industry, even in the humblest capacity, could realize that he is a necessary factor in not only a popular amusement but in one of the most powerful of forces in modern civilization he will have awakened to the big idea of the thing and come into the industrial consciousness of the motion picture industry, which makes for unselfish cooperation and the desire to build all interests into a harmonious entity.

The executive committee accomplished much in a comparatively brief period. Walter W. Irwin, of the V. L. S. E. is the chairman, with President Brady of the World Paragon Company an ex-officio member, and the other members are:

Louis F. Blumenthal, Auditorium Theater, Jersey City; H. E. Brulatour, Eastman Films; Louis L. Levine, Regent Theater, Brooklyn; Arthur James, Metro Pictures Corporation; P. A. Powers, Universal Film Manufacturing Company; William L. Sherrill, Frohman Amusement Corporation; Samuel H. Trigger, Tremont Theater, New York; and Adolph Zukor, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

At a single meeting of one of the divisions during the week forty-five memberships were entered. A recent sitting of the Producers' branch committee, attended by several non-members shows how when the purpose and scope of the organization are fully analyzed there is no question regarding membership. At this particular gathering were Adolph Zukor, Famous Players; W. L. Sherrill, Frohman Amusement Corporation; Jesse Lasky, Lasky Feature Play Company; H. K. Tootle, Gaumont; Randolph Bartlett, Brenon Film; John F. Miller, Buffalo Times; William Wright, Kalem Company; T. H. Wiley, George Ridgewell, Harry E. Yost, Sunbeam Motion Picture Corporation; H. G. Pierce, Oliver Morosco Photo Play Company; L. D. Willis, Fox Film Corporation; A. Lorimore, representing Thomas H. Ince; Eugene B. Sanger, Sanger Picture Plays Corporation; and Hamilton Smith, of the same concern; Chester Beecroft, representing President Freuler of the Mutual; Theodore Wharton, L. D. Wharton, Wharton, Inc.; P. A. Parsons, Pathe; Frank Powell, Frank Powell Productions; Louis B. Jennings, American Film; N. H. Goetz, Erbograph Company; P. A. Powers, Universal; M. M. Feely, Florida Pictures Corporation; J. W. Buck, Wharton, Inc.; A. S. LeVino, Arrow Film Corporation; Edwin Thanhauser, Thanhauser Film Corporation; W. E. Shallenberger, Arrow Film Corporation; J. O. Walsh, United States Motion Picture Corporation; Harold Bolster, Vitagraph; W. A. Brady, Jesse J. Goldberg, Rialto Film; C. R. Macauley, Kinecartoon Company; W. H. Kemble, Brooklyn Triangle.

Among the subjects under discussion was the question of censorship, on which the organization will soon make an important step. Mr. Brady declared that the producer and the exhibitor must censor themselves; that there should be no salacious pictures produced at all. Then again, the cause of the motion picture is the cause of some ten million persons, who willingly pay daily for the diversion and instruction it yields them. For the picture-public are millions of capital invested; for them are a vast army, in various activities, working day and night. And, in any fight based on the picture this public is inseparable—it must be the deciding factor in the issue. The public is the best censor—providing of course, there is anything to censor. Still, declared Mr. Brady, if the committee should vote for no censorship, he would stand with it. He reminded the gathering that what is needed most is a solid front and the unqualified cooperation of all divisions.

After the meeting the following, who had followed the proceedings with the deepest interest, agreed to become members: Frank Powell, W. H. Kemble, Theodore Wharton, C. R. Macauley, Edwin Thanhauser, Wm. Wright, H. H. Goetz, Louis B. Jennings, Chester Beecroft, H. K. Tootle, J. O. Walsh, M. J. Feeley, and Eugene B. Sanger.

BIGGER BUSINESS AFTER WAR

More American Films Than Ever Will Be Demanded in England with Advent of Peace—Import Tax on Film.

At the time the war broke out the cinematograph industry in the Bristol district of England was in a state of active development, according to Commerce Reports. In the past two years, however, the evolution of this trade has been brought virtually to a standstill. As investors do not like to risk their money when conditions are uncertain, it has been practically impossible to organize new companies. Bristol does not possess as many picture theaters as the average city of equal population in the United States would have, but it is quite probable that, had it not been for the war, the number would have been very much larger. Persons engaged in the business believe that when the war is over there will be a boom in this industry, as its hold on public favor is considered permanent.

Amusement Tax Increases Costs

The admission to the best class of theaters is from 6 pence to 1 shilling (12 to 24 cents). Adding to this the amusement tax, which has recently been imposed, the cost ranges from 14 to 28 cents. The cheaper theaters usually charge an entrance fee of 3 to 4 pence (6 to 8 cents United States currency).

Although the new taxation on amusements is believed to have brought about only a slight reduction in the size of audiences at theaters, many persons who were heretofore willing to pay a shilling and go to the best seats now have adopted the habit of going to the cheaper sections, thus reducing the profits of the proprietors.

The British Government has imposed a tax on the imports of films. According to the local customs authorities, the rates on films imported for the exhibition of pictures or other optical effects by means of a cinematograph or similar apparatus are: Blank films and raw films, two-thirds cent per linear foot, 1⅜ inches wide; positives, 2 cents per foot; negatives, 10 cents. All imports are required to be entered on a special form of entry, with a declaration by the importers as to the correctness.

Most of the large American film companies have their own offices in London, and motion-picture material used in the Provinces of England is usually distributed from that city. The majority of motion pictures shown are either American or French. American films, however, largely predominate, while British products are considerably in the minority. Cowboy and western films are popular. The greatest demand is for clean dramas, and long 4 or 5 reel photoplays are meeting with an ever-growing popularity.

It is believed that when the depressing effect of the war has disappeared the sale of American films in England will be even more extensive than at present. British producers find it difficult to compete with American manufacturers on account of the superiority of the California climate as a center for this industry.

League's Thanksgiving Ball Rolling

The ball which will be held at Madison Square Garden, New York City, on Thanksgiving eve, November 22, 1916, under the auspices of the National Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America promises to be an unusual event. The producers and manufacturers have signified their intention of supporting the "party," and space has already been contracted for by Vitagraph, V. L. S. E., Nicholas Power Company, Precision Machine Company, General Decorating Company, G. H. Masten & Company, Charles Mayer, B. S. Moss, Lewis J. Selznick, Excelsior Illustrating Company, Al Harstn and others.

The committees in charge of the arrangements are: General Committee, I. N. Hartstall, L. F. Blumenthal, Wm. Hilkemeier; Reception Committee, Lee A. Ochs; Arrangements, I. N. Hartstall; Entertainment, L. F. Blumenthal; Ticket, Wm. Hilkemeier; Floor, Chas. Steiner; Badge, Otto Lederer; Decorations, Chas. Haring; Music, Gus. Koenigswald; Press, Publicity and Program, Thos. Howard; Master of Ceremonies, S. H. Trigger; Invitation, C. R. Martineau; and Wardrobe, Benjamin Lyons.

All the officers of the League are busy working to make this ball a great success, and the Committee of Arrangements has contracted with G. H. Masten & Company to decorate the Garden and basement at a cost of $6,000.

Pathe Club Outing

About one hundred and thirty members and guests of the Pathe Club held another very successful outing at Brighton Beach on September 9. Three big auto busses and several touring cars decorated with the club's banners were used to take the party to the beach. The afternoon was devoted to the amusements of Coney Island, followed by a dinner at Hotel Shelbourne.

Among the associate members present were E. D. Horkheimer of Balboa, Geo. A. Powers, T. C. Wiley, Harry Mittenthal and Harold Davis. Patheites from out of town were H. M. Osborne, manager of the Philadelphia office; Manager Epstein of the Albany office; Manager Abeles of the New York booking office, and Manager Rheinlieb of Newark.

Club President J. A. Berst had taken an active interest in the outing, which explained to a large degree the success of it. The committee on arrangements included P. A. Parsons, J. W. Kyle, F. C. Davidson and E. J. O'Connor.

Seven directors are now working at the Lasky studios at Hollywood.

When the Signal Shows Red

BY P. G. ESTEE
A Small Town Exhibitor

THERE are some businesses upon which should be hung the red flag of danger. We know of no business of which this is more true than that of the motion picture exhibitor. It is true even though he be experienced. If not—not only is the red danger signal warning his business train, but the derailing switch is wide open, and the ditch is a deep one.

In the accounts of the stupendous sums paid out by the producers of great photodramas and the millions invested in studios, menageries and equipment of all kinds by the regular program companies and in the sworn statements which tell of the equally stupendous salaries paid the screen actors and actresses, we see little mention of the exhibitor, the man who gets these dramas or programs of comedy and drama to the people who make possible all this lavish expenditure—the patrons who night after night contribute their five, ten or fifteen cents.

Of the exhibitor's troubles, profits and losses the general public knows little, but imagines much. They see large crowds and many nickles and dimes sliding across the little cash windows. "What expense has the show owner?" they ask. "Nothing like that of the groceryman, the baker or butcher. Surely not. Little help and little money invested. Must be nearly all profit." Thus reasons the unthinking prospective investor.

The Small Town Exhibitor

It is not our intention to speak of the great city houses with ornate fronts, marble floored lobbies, elaborate ventilation and uniformed attendants; but of the thousands of small town exhibitors with houses seating two hundred to one thousand. Houses with lobby fronts, houses with store fronts and houses with no fronts at all.

Some are making money, although nowhere nearly as much as the public surmises, and for the man thinking of investing there should be warning signs of red by day and red by night, for when the exhibitor starts losing money he is in the position of a man on a string of runaway cars on a down grade with the brake rigging gone. Some of the other cars may be wrecked first and his car blocked and held upright. Some of the other fellows, his competitors, may go broke first and his own business, although jarred, will recover.

This is true of the "big time" show seating five thousand or of the "store" front or "made-over lobby" picture show with two or five hundred seats. Unlike any other business, you may not retrench. When the competition or unfortunate conditions begin to cut in and profits drop off, or worse, when the cash receipts do not cover the film rental alone, there is no way to economize until the trouble blows over. The next day you must rent a little higher priced feature, pay for more advertising space, and perhaps add to an already expensive equipment and force.

This must be kept up until the profits and capital of either yourself or competitor are gone; then, alone in the field, one or the other may retrieve losses.

The owner of the ruined business may either close up and accept the difference between his heavy investment and the trifle the vulture-like second-hand equipment brokers will allow, or he may call in the help of a show agency salesman.

The owner, if he is honest, tells the prospective purchaser that more capital might have allowed him to put his competitor in the position he now occupies, that there is no room for the ruined business. Sometimes the agencies take the show, purchasing outright at sacrifice prices, or the creditors place it in their hands, allowing liberal commissions. There are many honest agencies, but personal knowledge is the only weapon that will save you from the dishonest ones.

Now the unwary one who has many times computed, to his own satisfaction, the tremendous profits made at all theaters becomes interested. He has a little money; why not put it out at better interest? He is assured that the former owner retired because of other business, and because he no longer required the picture theater income.

Sometimes he "bites" through his own sheer ignorance and self-confidence; sometimes cleverly placed money swells the attendance and the prospective buyer, encouraged to "check" the business by the income and expense, finds that his dreams were indeed true. There are profits; large ones. Eagerly he accepts the terms, pays over hard earned money and can write owner or manager, as he chooses, after his name.

In a month or months the new purchaser, sadder, wiser and poorer financially, has perhaps reached the end of his resources, and the show is once more in the hands of an agency for sale to the next man who believes experience and special knowledge unnecessary to extract the golden profits from moving picture exhibitions.

The same story might be written of the man who stands across the street and checks the attendance at his home town show or shows. He sees goodly crowds, perhaps some nights many are turned away. He tells himself there is room for another show and invests heavily in equipment, rentals, etc., only to realize very soon that he has erred in his estimate of the money spent for amusements in his town, and also erred in rushing into a business without a working knowledge of its principles.

It is no business for a man who does not know the game and all the rules. If you feel the call to enter the moving picture business profit by the experience of the writer who is just now slowly getting on his financial feet after a rash purchase of the kind first mentioned.

One Exhibitor's Experience

The town was able to support two shows where there were then three, but the writer lacked the experience to realize that fact. The original owner had seen the writing on the wall and withdrawn while the show was still making money. The first purchaser, also inexperienced, began to lose, and promptly placed the show in the hands of an agency. The writer fell for clever talk, a bit of "loaded" attendance and his belief that the thorough knowledge of advertising acquired in the newspaper game would enable him to succeed where the other man, comparatively uneducated, had failed. He forgot that there might be other things to the show game.

Two months later he knew a great deal more of the picture show business, was broke and in debt. He had worked hard and faithfully and planned as well as he was able with the knowledge of films that he then possessed. He found that the film exchanges cared only for the man of success; the people went to the other shows as soon as the wireless of the small town business world told that he was losing.

One of the other shows which he had figured as neglible competition had slipped in while the show was in the hands of his predecessor and secured exclusive rights to the plays of a great comedian. The writer had not been told this. It is doubtful if he would have appreciated the importance of that contract even had he been told. He did not realize, in fact, until he saw the competitor paying his whole week's expenses from the receipts of the two Sunday shows in which the comedian appeared upon the screen. Then indeed he realized how futile had been the "checking" of a business of which he knew nothing.

Buying is said to be the important element of the mercantile business. The writer found it true also in the picture show business, and once more he was at the mercy of feature salesmen and exchanges. Not all are prone to take advantage of the inexperienced, but there are the same proportion of unscrupulous ones as there are in the grocery or millinery trade, and without warning or experience how is one to tell? The other two shows, while apparently fighting for business, were together agreeing to take a heavy loss for a time by cutting admission half in two. That was the end indeed. At the full admission we were losing money; at half rates our debts would double each night. The show was closed.

Rather then help to victimize some other chap, who had perhaps worked as hard to get a little investment money ahead, the writer decided to sell at a sacrifice—quarter purchase price—to one of the competitors, and the house was permanently closed and dismantled.

He Grabs Hold Again

Two things remained: to go back on salary, barely a living, or capitalize the knowledge bought at a cost of some thousands. The writer did the latter. He borrowed two hundred of a relative and found a small town where building and equipment could both be leased—he could not buy. There was no competition. The manager who preceded him had failed in the show, but a really careful checking of the business and circumstances showed this to have been the fault of the man rather than of the location.

Progress was slow. For four months the show merely paid running expenses. The two hundred went for living, and in addition the new manager did local work for the home weekly. Then suddenly each week began to show a little profit, and now at the end of six months the rundown house is on its feet and prospering modestly. By that we mean that it is now paying running expenses and a profit of one hundred to one hundred and fifty dollars each month. People in the small town believe that the writer is making four to five hundred per month, and it will be no surprise if some misinformed person starts a second show.

Many Have Hoed Same Row

Mistakes in this second town were made—many of them, but with no competitor to take advantage of the slips and a friendly home-town patronage the writer has added to his stock of experience until he would now be competent to go to the town where he failed and correctly size up the show situation, in which case he would not have invested. This experience is true and typical of that of hundreds of poor fellows who have seen only one side of the moving picture exhibition game until it was too late. Now they are back on salary, denying themselves and families while they try to pay debts and retrieve their mistake.

Again we say, "Put a warning sign at the door of the moving picture business until "Old Man Experience" goes with you to "check" the theater you wish to buy. Hire out or even donate your services to some other manager until you have studied the projection, studied the films as they are received, studied the buying end and the salaries you will have to pay. Above all, study the advertising and the patrons and the effect of certain pictures and advertising on the patronage. Then, and then only, should the signal turn to green, which means—"go ahead."

THE "PICK UP MAN"

F. I. L. M. Club of Chicago Discusses Question of Insuring Perfect Deliveries by Messengers Carrying Shows from Exchange Theater

The evil incidental to irresponsible pick-up men and messenger service as usually found in the larger cities of the United States, is under discussion and receiving the attention at this time of the F. I. L. M. Club of Chicago.

Why should not the pick-up men, who are deriving their income from the film industry, and at the expense of the safe arrival of feature film service which is the property of the different exchanges, be subservient to, and appointed by both the film exchange they are doing business with, and the exhibitor, as a protection to both?

They are handling valuable property. The average film messenger is careless in his respect for the value of that property and for any delay incidental to its proper delivery.

The F. I. L. M. Club of Chicago feels that they should be protected, and that all its members who constitute the managers of the exchanges doing business in Chicago, should have sufficient protection from injury and delay that might come, and at times does come in the handling of films on the part of messengers. Why then, should not the exhibitor have protection? He should. In fact, he should have a greater protection than he now has by long odds. He does not know what minute a feature used at his theater will go astray, will, in the careless handling by messengers, be stolen from them, and should such a contingency arise, to whom would the exchange naturally look for recompense for their loss but the exhibitor?

Conditions in this branch of the business therefore should receive wide comment and discussion at this time, with a view to creating greater system and greater protection for each one who is subjecting himself to the difficulties incidental to the proper delivery of films.

Six-Room "Set"

A six-room set was built by the scene men in one of the William Fox studios for some scenes in Theda Bara's new subject for the Fox Films.

Ann Pennington, Famous Players star in Paramount Pictures, will make her second appearance on the screen in "The Rainbow Princess."

Women Want Juvenile Film Exchange

BY B. F. BARRETT

An Interview with Mrs. Frederic Michael, Chairman Social Service Committee of Illinois Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teacher Associations.

IN the campaign for the establishing of special programs for children in the motion picture theaters of the country and the movement toward better pictures for the family in general it is but natural that the women—the mothers of the country—should take up the cudgel in behalf of their offspring. And the women in the various states are working toward a utopian idea of the solution of the problem of the child and the motion picture theater.

Many exhibitors have claimed, however, that the women are not in earnest in their efforts toward getting special matinees for the children established as a regular part of the motion picture program for the week. They claim that the clubs induce the exhibitor to start these matinees and then do not support him and stand by him through the experiment. There may be some women that are working in this haphazard way, and unfortunately the many will be judged by the few, but there are also women who are working earnestly and conscientiously toward the end of better films for children and an especially selected program for the young people in every theater.

What are these women doing? An interview with Mrs. Frederic Michael, chairman of the Social Service Committee of the Illinois Congress of Mothers and the Parent-Teacher Associations, shows that with the co-operation of the exhibitors they have already accomplished great things, and have many plans for still greater achievements.

In an effort to get all the women's clubs in Illinois interested in this work the following letter was sent out all over the state:

The crying need for better moving pictures for children is so apparent that it hardly seems necessary to dwell on that question; an effort to better this condition is the essential thing. That the moving picture can be made of as much value as good literature for our children, is coming to be understood. There is the historical film, the film of romance, the film of clean comedy and the educational film. We would not willingly allow our children to read what is termed "trash" in literature, yet those children who attend the average motion picture theater are having every lovely ideal shattered by what they see there.

With this problem before us, the Social Service Committee of the Illinois Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teacher Associations mean to make a campaign for better motion pictures for children, and each organization can help this work along by carrying out the following plan: Make up a committee to approach your best motion picture manager in your particular neighborhood with the request that he gives one "children's performance" a week.

Saturday morning has proven very popular in Chicago. If the demand is made strong enough there will be a supply. The motion picture producers who have been interviewed have claimed that there is not enough demand for this "better films for children." The women of Illinois can make that demand.

There is a bureau in Chicago (the only one of its kind in the west), that is making a specialty of good moving pictures for children. Some of the committee have seen a number of their performances and cannot speak too highly of them. This bureau chooses not only the best pictures, but religiously cuts out anything objectionable. Their programs are selected by women.

Now that the Social Center bill has become a law and it is your privilege to ask for the use of your school house, it would be a splendid plan to install a moving picture machine and bring your "movies" to the school under proper supervision.

The women claim that the two chief factors working against the success of this cause are the lack of good facilities for obtaining these suitable pictures on the part of the exhibitors, and the irresponsibility of the mothers in watching over their own children and aiding the theaterman in this work.

Many exhibitors when approached on the subject of setting a certain time to run a special performance for children complain that it is impossible for them to get suitable films, as they have to take what is sent them in their service. This, however, is considered a very weak excuse, for they could undoubtedly get the films if they wanted them. It might cost a little more at the beginning, but in the long run the results would be well worth the initial outlay.

In other cases the managers expressed their willingness to meet the women half way, and promised to do whatever they could for the future of better pictures for children, but this too often meant what they were forced to do by the public and boards of censorship.

Others are really in earnest and try to run these special performances as best they can but are often discouraged, not because there are so few pictures on the market that would be good for the young folks to see but because it is so hard for them to get hold of the films. And to counteract this difficulty the women are advocating that an exchange be organized which will handle all the juvenile films produced so that the exhibitor can easily procure his program for these entertainments. The plan is to go even back of this and try to interest the producer in the movement so that he will not only make suitable films for the younger generation but see that they are handled through this central exchange. There are many pictures on the market now which would be splendid for these selected programs if it was only easier to get hold of them. Also there are many films which the women would like to have prepared, such as adaptations of books and historical subjects which would have a ready sale on any market. The exhibitor who has to go from one place to another picking up a one-reeler here and a feature there gets discouraged and decides that if the children's show is going to make more work than all the rest of his program he will discontinue it.

The women do not mean to confine their work only to the little ones up to ten or twelve years old but would give their attention particularly to the adolescent child from the ages of thirteen to sixteen or eighteen. It is with this age that the most harm may result from the pictures. With the younger child the acting, the beauty of the settings and so forth interest and please them and anything objectionable is liable to be beyond their comprehension. But it is the adolescent child who is just beginning to awake to the mysteries of life that should be carefully guarded.

Experience has taught the organizations interested that a program must not be too educational. There should be romance, fairy tales and comedy as well as travel, nature study and history. The adolescent child particularly must be taken into consideration. The programs must not be one-sided. Where there is a fairy tale for the younger children, there should be a story of romance for the older ones.

To attract these boys and girls it would be better to call the special performance a young people's entertainment, as they probably would show a "children's matinee." and have it on Friday night, when there is no school the next day, or on Saturday afternoon. The ultimate aim of the scheme is to keep the young people away from the theater on all other nights except that set aside especially for them. This would relieve much of the censure which is directed toward exhibitors and many of the pictures which are unobjectionable as witnessed through adult eyes but immediately assume a different aspect when shown to an audience in which the young people are present.

The women do not approve of the scheme of devoting an hour immediately before the Saturday afternoon matinee to the children for the young people will stay over to the regular show, and in too many cases the feature shown is very undesirable and counteracts all the good accomplished by the special program. Here also the mothers do not help the exhibitor. When the children are told to go home at the end of the special program by a sign on the screen bidding them good-bye and asking them to come next Saturday, some leave—but more do not. When the plan was tried of announcing that all children not accompanied by parents must leave, some women present gathered all the children they could about them and said, "These are my children; they have paid their way and will stay for the adult picture."

And this is just one example of the way in which the mothers do not assist the theater man. We have found that before the special program of suitable films for children can be started the mothers of the country will have to be educated. In an effort to arouse the dormant responsibility of the mothers on this subject Mrs. Michael has put the following questions to them:

1. Do you know where your child is receiving his legitimate recreation?
2. Do you realize what influence the average vicious moving picture has upon the mind of your adolescent boy or girl?
3. Do you wish to see your children graduate in the school of crime through the medium of vicious moving pictures?
4. Do you realize that there is an intemperate use of moving pictures?

By the intemperate use of motion pictures she means allowing the child to go to the theater four or five times a week or every night in the week, as too many small children do, with the result that they are dullards in school, their minds are filled with unnatural ideas and they have an abnormal craving for excitement. Here again the mother is to blame for allowing the child to go so often and to see all kinds of pictures.

The mothers do not protect their children, they do not seem to realize the necessity for being their own censors for the films which their children see.

A woman accompanied by a little girl recently stepped up to the ticket window of a motion picture theater, put down her dime and said to the ticket seller:

"Is there something spicy today?"

"No, not today," replied the ticket dispenser.

"Give me my dime back then," said the woman, "I'll go some place else."

This is typical of far too many of the mothers of the present generation. The clubwomen can agitate the question of special performances for children, the exhibitors can do their part by running these shows, but the mothers—the ones who should work for this movement with all their might—too often will not do their part. The mothers will have to be educated and this work can best be done by women and that is one of the principal things which the women of the country are trying to do through their Mothers' Council and Parent-Teacher Associations.

Another objectionable feature of the motion picture theater business which the women are striving to overcome is the use of lurid and licentious posters displayed in front of and in the lobby of the theaters. The children may be excluded from the theater by the "No children admitted" sign, but they are not prevented from seeing these vicious posters. An innocent child can learn a great amount of evil from two or three of these posters which are exploiting all the objectionable points of the film. And the pity of it is that in a great many cases the film which is being advertised is in itself really not offensive but the exhibitor is playing it up as questionable because he believes in this way he will attract the sensation seeking crowd.

The women have accomplished a great deal already by their efforts—twenty-two theaters in Chicago are now holding these special performances for children and in the smaller towns throughout the state of Illinois even a larger percentage are interested. The women find the exhibitors in most cases are willing to co-operate and the principals of the public school are also interested in this subject and are glad to do all they can to help the good cause along. In some towns the Business Men's Association has become interested and are working side by side with the women and theater men.

The women are ready to support the exhibitor and help him in every way. Will not all the exhibitors meet them half way and take advantage of this proffered help for the benefit of the kiddies?

Rothacker Opens New Bureau

The Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company has established a service bureau in Chicago's downtown district. Offices have been engaged on the second floor of the Auditorium building. Besides housing the city sales organization this will be a complete service station where local orders can be delivered, sent to the laboratory, and delivery made of the finished product from the central point. Also the new offices will offer accommodations to all visiting customers.

A Rothacker camera crew under the direction of W. B. Klingensmith has left for the Mexican border to secure 10,000 feet of film representative of the activities of the Illinois National Guard now stationed in that territory.

E. Linden, who had charge of the camera crew operating in Yellowstone Park, has returned to Chicago, and Harry Birch, with his cameraman, has left for the extreme Northwest to secure some mountain scenic views.

E. H. Phillips, sales manager of the Rothacker Company, has left for New York, where he will attend a special advertising conference and consult with some of his agents in the eastern districts.

In her first venture into motion pictures, Miss Margaret Anglin will use as a vehicle a filmatization of Maxim Gorky's great play, "The Chosen People."

What Theater Men Are Doing

AN OPEN FORUM

This is a department of, by and for exhibitors. We want YOU represented here. Other managers and proprietors of picture theaters want to hear YOUR experiences, your opinions and your advice. Write to this department telling us your story, how you started, how you grew and all about your theater and how you manage it. Mention your advertising methods and your lobby displays. If possible send in photographs of yourself and your house. Address, The Forum, MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago.

Want to Go to Curacoa?

THERE is an island by the name of Curacoa in the Dutch West Indies, where exhibitng conditions are in an interesting state. American Consul General Messer Smith, writing from the island, says that there is an opening for American exhibtors and American pictures there. He may be influenced by his patriotism or a selfish desire to see Mary Pickford once again, but the following is his report:

"The showing of motion pictures, if not actually prohibited by the authorities in Curacoa, was so discouraged by them that few films were shown here for some time. The poverty of the people and the lack of work made it inadvisable that the poorer people, who are very fond of photoplays, should spend their money for this or any other form of amusement. Now that there is plenty of work on the island two cinemas have recently been opened, and they are allowed to give as many performances as they find will be patronized. One is an open air theater. Each is now giving three shows a week.

"One of the principal clubs in Willensted occasionally gives a motion picture entertainment on the club tennis courts, and the innovation is very popular. The films used are principally of French origin, with the legends in Spanish, which language is spoken or understood by practically every one here, although the familiar dialect of the natives is Papiemento. Films in which love is the central theme are the most popular.

"The comedy reels come from England. It is believed that American films would prove popular here, especially good comic films and those portraying the romantic side of Western life. The legends may be in English, as the better classes understand that language. However, Spanish is always to be preferred."

Get YOUR Newspaper to Follow Suit

By A. R. M. Sutton

The Seattle Daily Times, the city's most widely circulated newspaper, runs a motion picture section of eight pages, in which at one time appeared 408 inches of paid motion picture advertising, together with a very live and appropriate collection of motion picture news. The importance which the Times attaches to its picture section may be measured by the strength of the appeal it makes to motion picture men. Across the bottom of each page of the section in a recent issue was printed the following notice:

Motion picture exhibitors throughout the Northwest depend on the Seattle Daily Times for their motion picture news. The co-operation this paper is giving the industry is being commented on by all the leading manufacturers in the country, and the Times is being used as an example by those who are seeking to induce newspapers to publish news of this character.

The later issues of the paper have not fallen below the standard first set and its managers have further emphasized the importance with which they regard the new section by sending George Bellman, editor of the film section, to California to visit all the studios and locations of the film manufacturers. During his absence he did not contribute to the paper, but devoted his entire time to a thorough study and review of the motion picture industry.

Takes Care of the Babies

Women of Cleveland can now leave their babies at a picture house, then go and do their shopping with the assurance that the tots are happy. This comfortable arrangement has been inaugurated by J. E. Sliney, manager of the Reel, one of the largest of Cleveland's downtown picture show houses.

The theater is equipped with a row of balcony boxes, where the little ones can see the pictures without being disturbed by the comings and goings of a restless audience. Adjoining the boxes is a large rest room supplied with all conveniences, where an attendant nurse takes full charge of the children, and sees that their ordinary needs are satisfied.

"Young babies are too much responsibility," says Mr. Sliney, "so we keep them only from six years of age up." When asked whether many mothers take advantage of this convenience he said: "Yes, indeed, we often have six or eight little ones at a time, and they are always happy and contented to stay."

Scot Exhibitor Rouses Enthusiasm

At Cambuslang, Scotland, last month, Charles Taylor presented "The Campbells are Coming," and did enormous business. For the occasion Mr. Taylor engaged a full brass and pipe band, which paraded the streets prior to the opening, while the pipers supplied the necessary incidental music during the projection of the picture.

Great enthusiasm was worked up. At that part of the picture where the Campbells are seen coming over the hill in the distance the "pipes" were faintly heard, and as the soldiers came nearer the music increased in volume. When "close up" the pipes were in full blast, and the audience let themselves go in one wild round of applause, nearly bringing down the house.

A No-Ticket House

The Globe Theater of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, has the distinction of being the first place of amusement in the city to install a pay-as-you-enter system.

The old ticket-selling booth has been dispensed with, and in its place has been installed a self-registering coin receiver, with an attendant in charge. The machine is so constructed that a cent dropped in the slot fails to register and is thrown out at the side of the machine, but a nickel or a dime is registered and its value is counted on the dial.

The machine was installed by the Johnstown Automatic Register Company, which has just begun the manufacture of the machines and is now distributing its stock among local shareholders. The company is issuing $50,000 in stock at $10 a share.

Developing Live House Paper

By Frank W. Burke

Strand Theater, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

I read your section in the popular trade paper with great interest, and thought possibly through my efforts to build up a creditable house organ I might break into print with some of my own ideas. Of course I have only been here a few weeks, but I have taken over the Strand News and put a local touch to it. Practical newspaper experience has taught me that the canned stuff sent out by aspiring press agents often has little value. Through my little publication it is my earnest endeavor to build up a mailing list. In the past 5,000 copies of the paper have been delivered by boys about the city every Saturday morning. Apparently people are getting interested in the publication, as I receive many starts from nearby towns.

Live Doves on Stage

By Frank W. Burke

Strand Theater, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

Frank Stanton, manager of the Fenway Theater, Boston, has quite a novelty in a stage setting and effects. His setting is handsome, with heavy red velvet hangings, with the orchestra on the stage, and works many light effects, by starting the overture in darkness and gradually working up into different colors, but the real punch is that he releases several doves who fly about the stage, and also distributed about are ten large cages of canary birds, who sing all through the overture, also when the singer is on, and the effect is striking. Mr. Stanton runs the Paramount program.

Uses Bible Against "Deadheads"

In Glasgow, Scotland, the genus deadhead is just as much a trouble as he (or she) is in other places, but we have not come across a neater method of reading their species a lesson than that employed by Alex. Gilchrist, J. P., of the Eglinton Electric Theater. For the benefit of his fellow-exhibitors, Mr. Gilchrist cheerfully gave permission for the reproduction in the London Bioscope of his "text card," which is as follows:

In Ancient Days

Corinne Parquet, the Triangle-Keystone comedienne who is appearing with Fatty Arbuckle in his recent pictures, has taken to collecting butterflies as a fad. Over in her dressing room at the Fort Lee studios where she is now working on a picture she has a collection of over twenty different specimens. The butterflies are attracted by the light in the studio at night and are easily captured. Some of them are rarely beautiful and one or two specimens are decidedly uncommon.

Screenshine

By Mel Ody

AS we said before, this little ray of screenshine will percolate through the latest news and events every week or thereabouts. "A little nonsense now and then, is relished by the best of men." That shows you the class you are in when you are one of our readers.

Turn the button, Bill.

YOU CAN'T SEE THROUGH THE CHINKS

Chicago Chinamen threatened to include a Chicago exhibitor in their next batch of chop suey if he ran "The Yellow Menace," and yet Vice President Chatkin of the United Film Service, tells us that he has booked the feature in two of the Frisco Chink houses. Verily, Chink is stranger than fiction.

NO WONDER.

Harry Lehnhardt is happy. The big Western Fox chief engineer has just got over a trip to New York.

TICKLEFILLUMS

Comedies are atrocious things,
I like 'em.
Smudging Virtue's modest wings.
I like 'em.
They horrify the women's clubs,
Receive the highbrows' haughty snubs.
But wring the guffaws out of dubs.
I like 'em!

Funny films are equine play,
I like 'em.
Begin in fight and end in fray
I like 'em.
—Comedian sits on villain's face,
O'er soup and salad dish does chase—
They sure are one deep-dyed disgrace.
I like 'em!

Every week Manager Hill of the Orchestra Hall "Cinema-concerts," Chicago, takes his soloist for the coming week over into Grant Park and makes a little movie star out of her. Before the camera she bows and smiles to the audience. This at the time of the taking is composed of about 200 bums and chance pedestrians; at the time of showing the audience has moved up toward the top of the social scale. Mr. Hill uses the strip of film on his screen with the announcement of the soloist for the coming week.

WHAT WOULD YOU SAY?

A big twenty-five hundred seater is about to be built in Chicago directly across the street from a present picture house accommodating several hundred. Just for fun some of the "boys" interested in the former enterprise sent a formal letter to the manager of the smaller house enquiring if it would be possible to rent his house as a waiting room for the new theater. "They can't kid me!" he declared. And as there are 300,000 people in the section to draw from, he should worry.

ARE YOU GOOD AT INVENTIONS?

The latest member of the twenty-first century club is the state of Washington exhibitor who has built a glass room into each side of his auditorium. The women tend their vocalizing offspring while watching the show from one transparent room; in the other the smokers hit the pipe in peace. Won't someone now invent a kneeless audience? It is a much kneeded innovation.

"Split Reel" Notes for Theater Men

HOW OTHERS ARE STEERING THE SHIP

IN the topical reviews prepared by the house and shown at the Rialto Theater, New York, last week, appeared Teddy Roosevelt, Justice Hughes and President Wilson. The applause which greeted each one was doubled when the statue of Abraham Lincoln was shown.

Illinois has two minister-exhibitors—Reverend W. P. Burke of Shenoa, and Reverend F. A. Dickman of Rutland.

Neal Kingsley, who formerly managed the Fox exchange in Detroit, has been appointed to the same position in the Cincinnati office.

The Crystal Theater, Oconomowoc, Wisconsin, managed by G. W. Huebner, has been thoroughly renovated during the summer.

"Intolerance," the big Griffith spectacle at the Liberty Theater, New York, continues one of the high lights of the current theatrical season.

Wanted: An operator. A picture house in Laurel, Iowa, was unable to open recently because it was impossible to secure the services of a man who knew how to run 'em through.

One of the novelties on last week's bill at the Rialto, New York, is the Pierre and Pierrot dance done by Zuleme Pettus and Leon Barte, as a prelude to introduce De Wolf Hopper in "Puppets."

The Airdome, owned by John S. Slocum, of the Woodrow Theater, and the Happy Hour Theater of Mangum, Oklahoma, were recently destroyed by fire. No insurance was carried on either house.

Owing to the lack of a sufficient number of exchanges in London, a Canadian exhibitor who recently visited there states that he found three houses within two blocks running the same feature. Nearly everything there is rented on the open market.

The Bay View Methodist assembly at Petoskey, Michigan, has purchased a projection machine and will run picture shows to aid in raising money to meet its expenses. This is the first time films have been used in this manner by a religious conference.

A contest to increase attendance has been started by the Liberty Theater of Miles City, Montana. Prizes, including a piano, an automobile and jewelry will be given away to the winners. It is expected that the entire cost of the contest will run up to $1,500.

"The air in this theater is changed every three minutes." This sentence is carried in a prominent place on the neat program of the Hoyburn Theater of Evanston, Illinois. That is one of the strongest appeals that can be made to the up-to-date audience.

Sam Zierler, manager of the New York Universal exchange, celebrated his third anniversary with the Universal Film Company on September 18. Before joining the Universal, Mr. Zeirler had been connected with the Mutual, Empire, Metropolitan and Paramount exchanges.

The exhibitors in Dayton and vicinity are meeting almost every week in the Gem City. They are endeavoring to perfect a one hundred per cent organization with the purpose in view of putting the motion picture industry, so far as the exhibitor is concerned, on a higher plane.

Elkhorn, Wisconsin, claims as its very best motion picture theater the Princess, which is owned by Webster & Minette. Under the able generalship of these two gentlemen the Princess is forging ahead and establishing new attendance records in Elkhorn. The Paramount program is run.

L. M. Rubens, manager of the Princess Theater, in Joliet, Illinois, recently exhibited the "Ne'er-do-Well" to capacity audiences for three days at twenty-five cents admission. Says Mr. Rubens: "The second and third day of the "Ne'er-do-Well" beat the second and third day of "The Spoilers" by $400."

With a pure white front and an elaborate lighting system, with cut flowers banked all over the lobby and auditorium, the new Lincoln Theater of Port Angeles was opened a short time ago. Hopkins and Halberg are the owners and they spent $15,000 on the new house.

Here's one way to bring out the S. R. O. sign. Manager T. H. Swenson put on a free show as the opener for his Grand Theater, which he recently purchased in Hastings, Minnesota. Manager Swenson started off with "The Iron Claw" serial, and reports continued good business. He is charging now for his shows.

A Kansas City, Kansas, picture house is being sued, in connection with a film producing company, by Leota Lorraine, a picture actress of that city, because the defendants advertised her as the leading lady in a "shocking" role in the picture, "Should a Wife Forgive?" Lillian Lorraine was the actress who really played the part.

The New Hamilton Theater and the Grand Theater, both of Philadelphia, have combined their resources and will hereafter be operated by the new concern, the Hamilton Amusement Company. George M. Krupa and William Snyder are the proprietors who have joined in the new company, which is incorporated for $100,000.

The eight-page program for D. W. Griffith's "Intolerance," which is now running at the Liberty Theater, New York, contains a page and a half of authorities consulted in securing data for the historical sections of the stories. Another page is devoted to quotations from noted men anent the emotion of intolerance itself.

A motion picture theater in a railway car is expected to make its appearance in the Upper Peninsula of Michigan soon. The car will be used to promote the agricultural interests of that section of the Wolverine state. Regular features will be shown with the films of the northern Michigan agricultural advantages.

Manager Charles E. Oldt of the Third Street Theater of Easton, Pennsylvania, secured the names of as many as possible of German residents of the vicinity when he ran a travelogue of Germany, and sent them an invitation in script to "come and take a trip through the Fatherland." An overflowing attendance resulted.

Messrs. Crouse and Kunz of the Opera House, Mansfield, Ohio, recently raised their admission price to fifteen cents. As a special concession, they are offering books of eight tickets for one dollar. Convincing arguments well displayed in large newspaper space have been used to get this increase across with the public.

The Fine Arts Theater, one of the finest of the Chicago photoplay houses under the management of Alfred Hamburger, is to become an old-style playhouse about the first of November. And its name will be changed to "The Playhouse" to correspond. Maurice Brown's Little Theater Company will open the remodeled house with a repertoire of highbrow dramas.

C. F. Wood, representative of the Peoples' Moving Picture Corporation of New York, is contemplating the erection of a motion picture studio and a large moving picture theater for Easton, Pennsylvania. The studio will give an opportunity for local talent to display its ability as one of the specialties of the company in which Mr. Wood is interested will be to produce pictures of local historic and educational value as well as the regular dramas of the screen.

The Palace Theater at Waterloo, Iowa, believes in newspaper space. In the Waterloo Times-Tribune recently the Palace occupied a full page of space advertising Mary Pickford in "Hulda from Holland." W. L. Myers is the manager of the Palace, and it is because of his constant activity that this theater is regarded as one of the best paying as well as the best managed houses in the state of Iowa. The Palace is one of a string of theaters owned by the Palace Theater Company at Waterloo, Cedar Rapids and Vinton, Iowa.

C. A. Kracht is now advertising manager of the Motion Picture Mail, which is the motion picture section of the New York Evening Mail, and has offices of its own in Times Square. Mr. Kracht's likeable qualities have made him a member of the inner film circle in Gotham—by which we infer that he does not belong to the ranks which are courtmartialed by the boy in the outer office. Previous to his connection with the Motion Picture Mail, Mr. Kracht was on the staff of the Evening Mail, which recruited him from the New York Globe, where he served five years.

One of the finest house organs and programs which has come to our attention is that issued by the Alhambra Theater of Cincinnati, Ohio, of which Charles Weigel and Walter E. Harris are managers. It is called "Reel Revue," "published every Friday for the lovers of the silent drama." The booklet contains eight pages of good enameled stock and is well arranged and printed. One good feature is the local photoplay news it carries—news of the Screen Club and so on. Manager Weigel is president of the club.

The cover design contains a circle into which a different halftone may be set each week. In the border of this circle is the fine sentence: "The film doth hold as 'twere the mirror up to nature."

Three of the four big dailies in Cincinnati have started a photoplay section in their publications. Previous to a few weeks ago but little photoplay news of any description crept into the papers in Cincinnati.

The Cincinnati Post is devoting a part of its editorial page two days a week to general photoplay news and feature stories. Joseph Dorney has been made photoplay editor of the Cincinnati Enquirer. This paper runs the news of the silent drama in its Sunday edition. All of these publications are exceedingly friendly to the photoplay industry.

Douglas Fairbanks gave a box party at the Rialto Theater, New York, a short time ago, for a number of other screen celebrities who wanted to see him in Manhattan Madness." Mary Pickford, Elsie Janis, Mrs. Janis, Owen Moore and Irving Berlin were among the guests. Jesse Lasky, with a party, was also on hand to give his friend a sendoff.

After Douglas had held up a stage coach, climbed the side of a house and whipped at least ten men (in the picture) he came striding out between the big red curtains in front of the screen as the lights came up. With a shout of appreciation the audience rose to its feet and applauded the smiling star.

"I'm so tired after that picture that I don't know whether I can talk to you or not," he began when he could make himself heard; "but I want to thank you for liking it. This was the picture in which I got hurt. In the one I'm doing now I've been hurt about twenty times, so I hope it will be twenty times as good as this one."

Figures on Films Versus Saloon

In cold figures here is one of the best proofs that have yet been recorded of what picture houses are doing to the saloons.

In the second magistrate's district, including Queens, Brooklyn and Richmond Boroughs, New York, in 1907, with a total population of 1,775,000, there were 16,000 arraignments for intoxication. Last year in the same district with a population of 2,267,000 there were only 8,382 arraignments.

"Magistrates agree," says the Daily Star, "in attributing this condition to education and to the publicity given by the newspapers to the distrust of drinkers by employers, but principally to the moving picture houses."

Henry B. Walthall is starting a new five-act feature at the Essanay studios.

Director P. C. Hartigan has completed a one-reel comedy, "A Prehistoric Discovery," featuring Ernie Shields with Yvette Mitchell playing opposite.

Increasing the Price of Film Service

AMID a general crescendo of prices for food, fuel and raiment, to say nothing of those commodities which class as luxuries, some exhibitors are protesting because their film service has gone up.

Just offhand, without knowing anything more about it, one might be inclined to grant the film exchanges the same privileges as the grocers and the coalmen and the tailors. If everything else is going up, why not film?

It is popularly supposed that the price of everything is dictated by the condition of supply and demand. That is strictly true, however, only of the bare necessities of living, like food and clothing. With most other commodities the demand is everything; and if it is created by clever advertising, the supply may be practically unlimited without reducing the price. This is the characteristic of monopolies. A patent medicine consisting mostly of water, and costing seven cents a bottle to produce, may sell in enormous quantities at a dollar a bottle because advertising has created a demand for it. A brand of film possessing peculiar virtues by reason of the exclusive use of a well advertised star or a specially clever director may sell at high prices in spite of the fact that the positive prints from its negatives cost no more per print than if they were made from the most inferior of subjects.

With the public utilities, like railroad transportation, gas, electricity and telephone service, neither the supply-and-demand law nor artificially created demand has anything to do with the price. Public utility rates are figured by adding a fixed reasonable profit to the cost of manufacture and general overhead expense. It may be noted that the commercial disposal of motion pictures bears some resemblance to public utility practice.

There are conceivable two legitimate causes for the increased price of film to the exhibitor. One is the fortunate possession, by the manufacturer, of a peculiarly valuable attraction, in the shape of a well known and popular star or a director of happy ability. In this case the price to the exhibitor may be raised on the supposition that he, in turn, may raise his admission price or enjoy greater attendance, and so increase his revenue to compensate for his higher cost. The other cause of increased price for service is increased cost of manufacture. This may be chargeable to either a higher "labor" cost or a higher "material" cost. "Labor" cost in this industry means, of course, salaries to stars. Much of this charge is undoubtedly sheer extravagance; but where the manufacturer pays it, the exhibitor must contribute if he wants that brand of film. "Material" cost means more ambitious properties and settings. That may or may not be extravagance. If it adds to the real attractiveness of the film it is a legitimate cause for a raise in price.

We mention these elements of the business to support the hypothesis that there are possible legitimate reasons for increasing the price of film service. Of these reasons the exhibitor is as good a judge as anybody. He knows whether the service he is getting is more expensive to produce than it used to be, and whether it is worth more to him and to his patrons. And we are convinced that the exhibitor recognizes the right of the producer and distributor to charge more for what costs more to make. For the protests we mention in our opening paragraph are directed against a price-raising process that does not even claim an improved product.

It is the practice of some exchanges, according to the report, to insist on a higher rental from certain exhibitors because other exhibitors have offered more money for the same service. At first blush that sounds reasonable enough—the supply and demand argument—and we presume the exchanges in question feel wholly justified in their course. Here is an exhibitor who is paying a hundred dollars a week for service. Across the street a new theater is about to open. Along comes the exchange man and tells our exhibitor that the new fellow over the way is offering a hundred and fifty for his service. The exchange man doesn't want to lose his old customer, but business is business, and money talks, etc., etc.; and it is up to our exhibitor to come across, or take chances with a new program while his patrons follow the old favorite across the road.

We cannot question the legal right of the exchange to jump to the highest bidder. We do question its moral right to do so when the old customer has put up a deposit for "protection." And laying aside all question of right or wrong, we know it is injudicious; for it makes enemies and dissatisfaction out of proportion to its increased profits. The best evidence we have of that is the fact that many really conscientious exchangemen refuse to practice it.

Whatever the price of any particular film service may be, it should be the same to any exhibitor who signs up for it. The unfairness of allowing a new exhibitor, for example, to bid more than its value for an old exhibitor's program so he can use it as a club to drive the old customer out of business, should be obvious to every right-thinking distributor. The distributor is entitled to all the profit he can reasonably get. He is entitled to higher rates when he can show that his own costs have increased in proportion. But when, in his greed for money, he virtually sells out his old customers he is making trouble that will some day come home to roost.

The Incompetencies of Directors

LAST week we named motion picture directing as an opportunity for the ambitious young man. There are some people who apparently would like to hasten the day when those new directors develop and replace at least a few of the old school.

Authority, more or less arbitrary, is one of the prime essentials of successful directing. The director's word must be law on the studio floor. Nobody objects to that so long as the director is competent and has the confidence and respect of his players. But when, not having been a successful actor himself, he essays to tell actresses how to play their parts; when, with no practical knowledge of photography, he issues foolish orders to cameramen; when he gives intimate directions on make-up and properties and settings without adequate information on the technique of those subjects, his authority develops friction and disaffection and inefficiency.

Douglas Fairbanks, in a recent burst of candor, declares that this condition is far from uncommon. He says that most of the directors don't know anything about art. These things are not true of the directors we have met; but then we have not met them all, so we cannot successfully take the stand against expert testimony.

We know that directing pictures is a big job, as we said last week. It takes big men to handle it as it should be handled. It is quite likely that the rapid development of the producing business, with its present enormous output, has not brought out enough directing talent to meet the demand. As a result, any player who shows executive ability is apt to be called upon to direct; and the disposition to assume authority may be practically his only qualification for the position.

Of course, few directors have carte blanche in the exercise of their initiative. Back of the director is the producer; and at the hands of that practical person the beautiful, artistic and ingenious schemes of the director may receive scant consideration. Unfortunately, it is a peculiarity of human nature that the most artistic soul seldom has enough business ability even to convince his superior that his ideas are sound; and too often they are not sound.

The ideal director, and producer, too, for that matter, is a rare combination of art and business. That is one of the reasons why good directors are scarce, and why the right man has the biggest opportunity in the world in that profession.

First Aid to Theater Men

BY S. L. ROTHAPFEL

NOW that the chill of the fall is in the air and you have to begin to think about heating your house to make your patrons comfortable don't forget your ventilation. More theaters have gained a bad reputation through lack of proper ventilation than any other one thing, and generally just a little thought and care would have eliminated all this trouble. Keep this one thought ever before you—the air must be kept pure.

68—I have been offered a very cheap rental on a theater with a seating capacity of about five hundred which has been managed by three different people and each one in succession has failed. The house is in an exclusive, wealthy neighborhood and there is no other theater very near. It seems as though it could be made to pay if managed correctly. Upon inquiry I have found that when it first started the manager ran almost all rather suggestive plays and the people resented it. The neighborhood families did not care to see pictures of that kind and it drew an undesirable crowd to the theater from the community around. This may be the reason that the second man did not succeed although I believe he ran better films. I think also that it has a poor ventilating system and that may have something to do with it. Do you think it would be a safe investment for me to try it out?

If you take over the management of this house you will not only have to build up your patronage and get the place on a good business basis but added to that you will first have to live down the bad reputation which has preceded your regime. This may not be an easy thing to do because once a house is tabooed by the best people of the neighborhood and a rather undesirable class is allowed to monopolize it it is a hard thing to change it to a first class house again.

In a neighborhood such as you describe, with little competition, it seems as if there would be a good chance to make a success of this theater if you managed it carefully and judiciously. It would probably take quite a little money to get it started properly, however, and you must look the fact square in the face that you have a grave problem in front of you to live down the poor reputation of the house before you can start to build up a good one. If you feel that you are competent to do this then I think you would be wise to accept the bargain offer which has been made to you.

In your effort to get the right kind of patronage I would suggest your getting a mailing list of all the most desirable people in the neighborhood and sending them a letter telling of your taking over the house, what you desire to do for the community, that you will not run the objectionable class of films, and invite them to attend a performance and see what you are giving in the way of a program. It might be a good idea to issue a certain number of complimentary tickets for each night the first week to entice these people into the theater. You might even try the scheme of a house to house canvass to see if you could not sell a certain number of season tickets to the theater which would entitle the holder to a reserved seat. This has been tried quite satisfactorily by a number of exhibitors and it might prove a novelty in this neighborhood as people in a select suburb of this kind are apt to like the idea of the reserved seats. This plan would also give you a little ready cash at first when your box office receipts are necessarily rather small.

If the ventilation is poor you had better remedy this the first thing because the comfort of your patrons will have a great deal to do with making them regular attendants.

Choose your pictures carefully. If you are dealing with a first class audience be sure that you give them high class features.

It might be a good idea to print a little coupon on the bottom of your program asking for ideas as to any pictures or particular players they would like to see and suggesting that they drop them into a box placed conspicuously in the lobby. You will probably gain many valuable hints in this way as to what they really want to see.

69—I am going to fix up my house a little, in fact find that I must do so to keep up with the competition near me. I have just so much money to spend. Would you put it all into the inside of the house or save some to fix up the lobby? Where is the best place to start making the improvements?

Very often conditions alter cases you know and when you give me no idea as to how much money you desire to spend, just how the inside of your house looks and in what shape your lobby is, I find it a little difficult to answer you in a comprehensive manner. I should say that about three-fourths of the amount spent on the inside of the house and one-fourth on the lobby would be a fair percentage. It is very important that the entrance be attractive for the first impression is always very important and is liable to be a lasting one. It does not take much outlay of money, however, to make the entrance attractive. Have it plain with very little color—in fact pure white or white livened up with little touches of gold, is always good and gives an air of refinement to a house in contrast to the many garish colors too often used. White also lights up well at night. Have the ticket booth harmonize with the same white and gold decorations. Some framed portraits of the various actresses and actors ornamenting the wall give an added touch. After you have fixed up the lobby in this plain but effective style do not spoil its simplicity by glaring posters put up any old way. Get some frames and put the posters in them—or better yet mount some photographs showing different scenes from the play and put these in the frames. Care should be taken in arranging your displays so that they will present a neat appearance. Because of the character of the bills this is not always an easy thing to do. Carelessly placed posters can easily ruin the whole artistic effect. A well lighted lobby always attracts attention so see to it that your illumination is good and well placed to bring the best results.

If you place a few palms around this will add greatly to the artistic plan of your lobby display. A person coming up to your theater for the first time will surely remark upon the air of refinement and will look for high class pictures as well as decorations.

The three most important things on the inside of your house are the machine, the screen and the ventilation. If any of these three are not up to standard that is the first place to put your money. In the redecorating be careful not to use too many glaring color combinations. Let simplicity be your keynote here also and carry out the same idea you have tried in the lobby. Leave out all garishness and inartistic gew gaws. An artistically decorated house built along simple lines and kept scrupulously clean, combined with courteous service will appeal to everyone who enters and make them wish to come again.

70—I have been running pink slip shows almost entirely lately and advertising them well by posters in the lobby and in front of the theater. Some of the busy bodies in the neighborhood have come around to me lately talking about them and objecting. They seem to think they can make me change them by blackballing me if I don't do as they ask. I can't see that it is any of their business how I run my business. I do a good deal of display advertising in front of the theater planned to compel attention and find that the people will always come out better to see the class of play I am running. As I am in this business to make money I see no reason why I should not book and play up that class of films if I desire.

Of course if you would rather make a second class house of your theater and cater to a rather undesirable class of people just because you think there is more money in that side of the picture business I suppose that is your privilege. But I cannot say that I admire your policy nor your idea of high standards. As for the posters which are used in front of theaters of your class, and which are placed there just to appeal to the baser side of human nature and create an unnatural desire for sensational films, I do not blame the women in the neighborhood for objecting. They may not be able to blackball you as they threaten and put you out of business, but they are in a position to do you a great deal of harm in one way or another. The women of the neighborhood have more influence than you seem to give them credit for and they are backed by a number of other people who are now waging a campaign against the abuse of the motion picture screen. As a matter of fact it is not as much of an offense against humanity to show pictures of this class on the screen for no one has to go in to see them unless they so desire—as it is to display these decidedly suggestive advertisements in front of the theater where all who pass may read.

This policy is "their business" if the people of the neighborhood in which your house is situated feel that you are making a public nuisance of your theater. They may also feel that you are lowering the good name of their community because you know the motion picture theater does portray the standing of the neighborhood to a certain extent. In these days of numerous automobiles people do not confine their patronage to the picture theater within walking distance but shop for their pictures just as they shop for other things they desire. It is a familiar sight now to see an automobile slow up in front of a theater and the people all lean forward to read the signs telling what the show is for the evening. If it suits their fancy they all get out but if it does not appeal to them they start off and are away to the next house to see what it has to offer. So the information as to the kind of plays you run is spread from one group to another. If your show is good and the kind that is desired you will see one machine after another stop and park while the people go in to see your pictures. If they are undesirable you will be chagrinned to see the machine slow up for a minute and then pass on—and soon they will not even slow up for they will know that you are not giving what they want. As so they will gauge the property owners by your shows. They will remark that evidently the people who live near your theater are not very refined nor particular or they would not allow such shows in the neighborhood. And so you have hurt the reputation of the district and from this standpoint the inhabitants have a right to object to what you are doing. You are liable to arouse the animosity of the churches, schools and all public spirited people of the community as well as the women if you persist in this policy. If you think you are giving the majority of the people from whom you draw your audience what they do want then that is a different matter. If the people demand these plays then the blame is shifted upon their shoulders. If you are pleasing them and desire to have your house known as sanctioning pink slip plays of every description that is a matter to be left to your own judgment.

But from your statement that some people have objected it looks as if you were not giving them what they want. Do not press them too far or you will find that the feeling against you is steadily growing and your business will begin to feel the strain of that animosity. It is better to meet them half way and keep in their good graces for if you do not please the people they will transfer their favor to someone who will give them what they want.

NEW COMPANIES IN CANADA

Five New Motion Picture Producing Companies Have Been Formed in Different Parts of Dominion

With the belief that world trade channels and tariff arrangements are going to be radically changed after the war and many adjustments and adaptations of trade facilities will be necessary; also that the duty levied on films imported from the United States will be materially raised, the business men of Canada are preparing to meet these exigencies. Within the last few weeks announcements of the formation of five film producing companies have been made in five different cities of the Dominion. The five cities are Quebec, Montreal, Kingston, Niagara Falls and Banff.

The company working around Banff is known as the Great Western Film Company of Canada, Limited, and it has a capitalization of $200,000. The prime mover in this business is Alex L. Dunbar, and the plan is to produce three five-reel features, three three-reel subjects and two single-reel releases each month.

The prospective moving picture industry for Kingston, Ontario, consists of the Canadian National Features, Limited, of which J. Shea of Toronto is president. This company has applied for the lease of the Kingston fair grounds upon which to erect a studio.

At Niagara Falls, Ontario, has been organized the Niagara Falls Film Comporation with a capital of $100,000. It is announced that forty players are available to this company and operations have already been started.

A Canadian film exchange with headquarters in Toronto is also making arrangements for the filming of photodramas near Montreal.

Canada now has its own pictorial news weekly which is made up exclusively of Canadian happenings. These weeklies are released by M. S. Marvin of Toronto.

Director W. W. Beaudine is making a one-reel comedy at Universal City, "Open Window," featuring Gale Henry and William Franey.

The Photoplay Scenario

CONDUCTED BY B. F. BARRETT

Former Editor of Photoplay Scenario Magazine.

Note—This department will appear hereafter in each issue of Motography, and will treat of all subjects of interest to the photoplaywright—whether amateur or professional. You are invited to suggest any subjects you desire to have discussed, or ask questions on any matters relating to the writing of photoplays which have been puzzling you. The department is also open to you at any time for the expression of your own ideas or the submitting of ideas of others which have helped you, and will be interesting to other photoplay writers.

Photoplay Writing Not an Easy Art

By Gilson Willets

Staff Writer of the Selig Company

(Editor's Note: This is the first of a series of articles by Mr. Willets which will appear in this department each week.)

I AM glad to be able to give some information from my experience that may prove more or less valuable to other writers. The art of photoplay writing is not an easy art education; talent and industry are essentials for success.

To succeed as a writer of photoplays one must have a story to tell, an unusual plot to present, otherwise the effort is worth nothing. In order to succeed in the photoplay writing art one must also write action and not dialogue. You cannot photograph dialogue, but you can photograph action.

In the writing of fiction one can utilize word paintings, description, embellish as it were, the plot. In some fiction stories the plot is even secondary. Not so in the photoplay. The plot comes first and it must be a plot of action.

The photoplay manuscript consists of main title, cast of characters, synopsis and action by scenes. The title should be an attractive one, and, at the same time, should not divulge the plot of the story. The names of the characters should be reminiscent of the plot, and there should not be too many characters, for too many characters lead to confusion. The synopsis of a photoplay, if it heads a manuscript of detailed action, should not exceed three to five hundred words, should present clearly but concisely the action carried out in the scenic action. Subtitles should be used in places where the action does not clearly carry the story. The fewer the subtitles, or explanatory text, the better is the photoplay.

Good, clean, unusual stories of the life and the people we all know are much to be desired. Avoid scenes of murder, kidnaping, and assault, for these scenes will not pass the Board of Censors now in power in many states and cities. Such action is also old, having been done many times.

There are a number of text-books which will give you knowledge of the proper form of the photoplay. I would recommend that you purchase one of these books. But remember no book can teach you the habits of observation, the knowledge to write, or how to know a good story when you see one.

The best school for the would-be photoplay writer is the newspaper office. Many who were formerly newspaper men are now successful as writers for the silent drama. They know life, a good story and the value of a gripping situation. Avoid patronizing schools which profess to teach photoplay writing.

Horrible Examples in Titles

IN their efforts to create original titles photoplaywrights often swing to the other extreme and evolve "freaks." Helen Starr, scenario editor of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, gives a list of some remarkable titles which have been picked at random from among the hundred scripts that are the daily average in that company's scenario department. Among the most startling captions are "Whose Child Am I?" and "Who Is My Father?" These titles were by different authors and both were suggested as companion pieces to "Where Are My Children?" the Lois Smalley masterpiece. Other strange apellations chosen were "The Follies of Mother," "Father Regenerated"—they seem to come in pairs. "The Fatal Laugh," "The Kiss That Killed," "Freckles Extinguished," "Classy Heathen," "A Happy Couple Until"—this evidently was an effort to excite the curiosity of the editor and later of the public. But the prize winner certainly should have been "Flees in Father's Pants."

Among the sweepings the porter found "A Pearl of Great Price," "The Ruby of the Moguls" and "The Idol's Emerald Eye." These had outworn their usefulness, having been done to death by innumerable amateurs.

Winding Up the Story

By Will M. Ritchey

IT is as necessary to know how to finish your picture as it is to know how to begin it. If you have presented an interesting story, it does not do to have it "fall down" at the end and have your audience remember its last scenes in an unfavorable frame of mind. Similarly, many a good story has remained unsold because the script editor gets his poorest impression last.

We have been talking about climaxes. The climax naturally is the crux of the situation; it is the highest point of the plot, where the action is most intense and the balance swings one way or the other.

After the climax has been reached the story is at an end. We may imagine still other events in the lives of our characters which grow out of the action we have depicted; but, as Kipling has been so often quoted, "That is another story." The point is that the particular story on which the picture has been based is told, over and done with.

But, naturally, one would ask, "How did it end?" To tell that convincingly and with satisfaction to the audience, and yet as briefly as possible, is the artist's test.

The "lead"—the hero or heroine—has surmounted the obstacles and has won something. He has accomplished that for which he or she strove at the beginning of the story. Show him or her reaping the benefits of the accomplishment as simply and quickly as possible. If it is a love story show that the sweethearts are united. If it is a business drama, have the hero save his firm from ruin. Or if it is a "thriller" have the "lead" find his way safely to his goal despite his dangers.

But don't, if you aspire to more than mediocrity, depend on the last fifty feet of the film to show a close embrace of hero and heroine. Leave something to the audience. It is just as intelligent as you are; it knows what will happen and would enjoy some refreshing close.

Suggestion of a happy ending may be more satisfying than the details of the happiness. Or even if you dare run the risk, and decide on an unhappy ending, you may do so in such a way that the audience is pleased, even at the death of the character with which the audience is in sympathy.

But whatever may be your method, don't forget the good story teller is he who doesn't have to explain his story when it is finished and who knows when he has reached the end.

Pallas-Morosco Seeking Stories

In spite of the fact that the Pallas-Morosco forces have in their dramatic department ten staff writers, writing exclusively for these two companies, in addition to which they have three free-lance writers working on special commissions, two members of the firm giving a larger part of their time to the scenario department and have the advantage of being able to call into consultation Oliver Morosco, one of the greatest producers in America, and George Broadhurst, one of the greatest living playwrights, the company is seeking the best and strongest obtainable stories from the best possible writers in order to present to its Paramount patrons real stories of exceptional interest.

In other words, in spite of the department which now totals twenty-one people, fourteen of whom give their entire time to the dramatic department, the company offers to pay $1,500 each for complete stories adapted to its needs or upon which a complete photoplay may be founded. This story may be either in synopsis form of 500 to 2,000 words each, or may be in the form of a book, magazine or short story.

The company is especially desirous of obtaining stories adapted to Vivian Martin, Dustin Farnum, Myrtle Stedman, Kathlyn Williams and Lenore Ulrich.

It does not invite incomplete and imperfect scenarios from amateurish writers, although it will pay any one for original ideas, depending upon their availability. What it does want is good stories with carefully co-ordinated plots by writers who know how to put drama into their writing. This company especially desires modern society dramas with comedy relief, with carefully worked out and logical plots, with happy surprises, small casts, closely knit plots, and good acting parts rather than what is ordinarily termed "mechanical drama."

The demand of the public at this time is acting, not "stunts." Every possible "stunt" that can be imagined has been shown on the screen, and audiences now demand real acting in preference to overdrawn motion picture pantomime.

Where to Sell

American Film Company, Santa Barbara, Calif.—In the market for only such stories as are capable of making feature plays of five reels or more. Do not care for worked-out scenarios, a detailed synopsis being alone sufficient. Not at present in the market for western stories nor those calling for costumes.

Arrow Film Corporation, Times Building, New York City.—In the market for feature stories of at least five-reel length; also for exceptionally strong two-reel episode serial stories. Costume plays or stories of foreign setting are not desired at this time, as Arrow is already supplied with big picture material of this nature. Modern American stories dealing with domestic, economic, sociological and similar problems of every-day life. Plays based merely on sex-exploitation are not desired. "The Woman's Law," the five-reel Arrow feature, represents the sort of plot this company will buy. Complete synopses, rather than scenarios, should be submitted.

California Motion Picture Corporation, San Francisco, California.—Not at present in the market for photoplays of any description, as we are only doing adaptations of books and stage plays, and have enough material already contracted for to keep us busy for a long time to come, so far as our feature productions are concerned. However, this company is contemplating the production of one and two-reel comedies, and will probably have, at least, two comedy companies working here before very long; and then we shall be in the market for one- and two-reel comedies, and will pay really good prices for original, humorous plots; worked out into practical photoplay form and cleanly-told synopses. We shall not attempt any "slap-stick" or vulgar comedies, but only those of a grade that will appeal to normal, grown-up audiences.

E. & R. Jungle Film Company, Inc., Los Angeles, Calif.—In the market for one-reel chimpanzee comedies written for Sally and Napoleon, also two-reel comedies and dramas. Also have a large collection of rare animals such as lions, leopards, pumas and innumerable kinds of monkeys and would like scripts in which they can be utilized.

Fine Arts Film Company, 4500 Sunset Blvd., Los Angeles, Calif.—In market for five-reel stories suitable for any of its stars: Douglas Fairbanks, Mae Marsh, Bobby Herron, Lillian Gish, Norma Talmadge, Wilfred Lucas, Fay Tincher, Bessie Love, Olga Grey and Constance Talmadge. Two or three of these players usually appear in the same picture. Most of the feminine stars are ingenues, and stories in which the principal character is a young girl are especially desired. Each story should have an underlying theme of considerable power. Historical stories are not desired. Will also make two-reel comedies for the Triangle program. Light comedy-dramas are preferred. Simply synopsis of story desired, and in submitting same when possible state price desired for the story.

Gaumont Company, Congress Avenue, Flushing, N. Y.—Not in the market for scenarios of any description.

David Horsley Studios, 2009 South Main Street, Los Angeles, Calif.—Not in the market for scenarios as we have found it necessary to write in our own department one-reel comedies for George Ovey and five-reel dramas for Crane Wilbur and the animal scenarios for the Centaur features, as we found the material submitted was entirely unsuited to our needs.

New York Motion Picture Corporation, Culver City, Calif.—Five and six-reel modern social dramas, comedy dramas, and stories of intrigue. No costume plays desired and absolutely no comedies. Glad to receive either the scenario or the synopsis.

Universal Film Manufacturing Company, Universal City, Calif.—We desire good stories; our program requirements cover everything from one to five reels and every type of story. At this time of year we naturally prefer stories of the outdoors, or half and half. We are doing no Indian, military, costume or stories requiring special sets. Occasionally we do westerns but there seems to be very little demand for this type of stuff. Lately we have been flooded with a mass of stuff impossible and improbable. What we do want is stories of everyday life that have an appeal in them and have the different developments which are so essential to the present day pictures. We are also needing good one-reel comedies for our various releases. Providing the writer has some experience in writing scenarios we gladly consider the scenario, otherwise we prefer to handle the synopsis only. In every case stories must be accompanied by synopsis.

Mutual's Latest Entertainers

HELEN HOLMES AND WILLIAM RUSSELL IN TYPICAL CHARACTERIZATIONS

"A train is burned up, trees are set on fire, engines are exploded and collisions avoided by the width of a hair,—in fact 'The Manager of the B. and A.' is replete with the 'danger stuff' which holds the audience spellbound," swears the Publicity Monarch. This glimpse of the latest Signal-Mutual would seem to prove that it IS full of the good old railroad stuff.

HELEN HOLMES and William Russell hold the center of the screen on the Mutual program for the week beginning September 25.

"The Manager of the B. & A." is Helen Holmes' vehicle in which she is ably supported by Leo Maloney. Miss Holmes is her daring, dauntless self and the drama is replete with the "danger stuff" which holds an audience spellbound. Trees are set on fire, a train burned up by the blaze, engines exploded, runaway cars are stopped on the verge of collision with loaded express trains, strikes are averted and there are a thousand and one hair-breadth escapes.

William Russell appears in a Mutual Star production entitled "The Torch Bearer." This is an American Film Company production and was released September 28. Charlotte Burton, Marie Van Tassell and Margaret Nichols play important roles in the cast. The remaining parts are taken by Harry Keenan, Alan Forrest, Dick La Reno, Harvey Clarke and Nate Watt.

Next in importance among the week's releases from Mutual is the fourth number of the "Fantomas" series under the title of "The Crook Detective." This was also released on September 28.

To those who have watched the famous master crook of fiction, "Fantomas" escape through the very fingers of the law when they had already closed upon him, in the first three episodes depicting the crime career of the great criminal, the fourth episode will bring another thrill. To those who have not seen the preceding chapters it will be exactly as intelligible and spell binding, for each one of the three-part episodes of this extraordinary detective series is complete in itself.

"The Black Terror," a two-part Thanhouser picture, featuring Thomas Curran and Barbara Gilroy, is released this week. This also is a detective story—short, but packed from beginning to end with mystery and thrill. Mr. Curran is given an interesting characterization, one which it takes a real knowledge of psychology to interpret. He is a villain, not the villain as you usually expect him, but a man who through his extreme generosity to his friends, his unselfishness, his thoughtfulness, wins a place of real distinction in the world, while underneath his exterior of uprightness he is a thief and a scoundrel. His undoing comes as a tremendous surprise, and lends a decided punch to the picture.

The comedy releases, four in number, for this week consists of two one-reelers and two two-reelers. The Vogue company comes forward with an amusing story mostly about ducks, geese and chickens, in the two-reel comedy, "Poultry," featuring Ben Turpin and Rube Miller which goes out on October 1.

George Ovey, the funny "Cub" comedian, is featured in two funny pictures of the week. "Catching That Burglar," the one-reel release of September 29, and "Foiled," the two-part comedy of September 30, are each with the usual Ovey brand of funniness.

The Beauty release of the week is "The Deacon's Card," a picturized sermon against the evils of organizing anti-gambling clubs, from the pen of Edward Hungerford and featuring Orral Humphrey.

Mutual Weekly No. 91, picturing current events, "See America First," the Mutual scenic and cartoon, and Reel Life, the Mutual's magazine in pictures, all of which are produced by the Gaumont Company, complete the week's releases. The weekly and scenic cartoon appears September 27, the Reel Life on Sunday, October 1.

Sing Singers See Sunday Show

On Sunday evening, September 17, the Despatch Film Company furnished the convicts at Sing Sing prison with some screen entertainment which took very well with the members of the Mutual Welfare League. "The Prima Donna's Husband," which is being distributed in New York and neighboring territory by the Despatch Film Company, won hearty applause from the large audience which attended the show.

Julius Steger, who, in association with Joseph A. Golden, produced the picture, addressed the assembled picture fans and in the course of his remarks said: "I feel that we could find no audience better able to judge the real quality of 'The Prima Donna's Husband,' than the members of the Mutual Welfare League," to which remark there was much response in the way of hand-clapping. And when those boys applaud they surely do it with a will.

Among those who motored from various points between 45th street and Yonkers up the very beautiful and very well paved road to Sing Sing were Walter Shauer and A. Alperstein of the Despatch Film Company; Julius Steger, Joseph A. Golden, Gilbert P. Hamilton, Miss Jane Herbert, the celebrated soprano; Harry Warner, Mrs. Golden and Mrs. Alperstein. L. J. Rubinstein collected some representatives of the motion picture trade press and took them along.

EXHIBITORS FIGHT CRISTMAN

Extensive Campaign Being Waged by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League to Prevent the Re-election of Senator Cristman

The influence of the entire motion picture industry is being brought to bear on the political fight which is now being waged by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League against the re-election of Senator Cristman in the thirty-second district, New York.

Senator Cristman aroused the animosity of the film industry in his action as co-author of the Cristman-Wheeler censorship bill which sought to create a state board of censors, but which was vetoed by Governor Whitman.

Mr. Robinson is the opposing candidate and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League is exerting all its influence to gain his election. The effects of this film campaign will be felt throughout the districts which include Herkimer, Fulton, Lewis and Hamilton counties.

No stump speeches are being made in favor of the film candidate but every motion picture theater in the district is supplied with slides bearing campaign slogans. These are flashed on the screen many times during each performance and hundreds of thousands of people are reached in this way.

The attitude of the League in this campaign is shown by their declaration for Robinson:

"Mr. Cristman is now a candidate for re-election as Senator, and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League purposes to show him that he was wrong in his endeavor to usurp the rights of the motion picture patrons; that they will rise in their might on election day and prove that their constitutional rights must be respected; that they are competent to think for themselves and that they will not permit politicians and so-called reformers to think for them."

Another declaration embodied in the statement is of interest. It follows:

"The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League now serves notice to all candidates for political positions that it proposes to take an active part in the field of politics and will insist and demand that it be given a square deal. The league will fight for its rights, its exception from unjust taxation and discrimination and its right to earn reasonable compensation on the vast amount of money it has invested."

"Don'ts" for Actors

Archimedes Heckman Van Buren, who played more than two hundred parts on the stage before he joined Fox, and who had the male lead in "Her Double Life," recently drew up the following "Don'ts" for actors:

"My first 'Don't,'" says Van Buren, "is, 'don't follow my example and give good advice.

"Don't envy anyone on the stage. If the person of whom you are envious is a good actor, it simply means that he is a hard worker. If he is a bad actor, he isn't worth your envy.

"Don't fail to be sincere, whether you are on the stage or not. Posing fools no one but yourself. The only reason a cigar store Indian looks so ludicrous is because he is posing.

"Don't worry. If you owe anyone money, remember that the man you are indebted to is probably worrying a ten-acre lot more than you are.

"Don't get into the dangerous habit of thinking that the world is ill-treating you. It's too busy attending to its own affairs to waste time in hounding you.

"Don't think that because you have been a success on the stage that it follows you will be one on the screen. Perhaps your voice was fifty per cent of it in the legitimate. Remember that voices count for minus six per cent in the motion picture work.

"Don't expect praise for everything you do. Remember the story of the fellow who took the girl to the ball game. One of the outfielders made a fine catch and the chap started to throw his hat in the air. 'Wasn't that a great catch?' he asked. 'I thought that's what they kept him out there for,' said the girl."

EXCHANGE MANAGERS MEET

First of Sixty-Day Meetings of Universal Distribution Leaders Held in Chicago September 15-17—Score Present

A score of managers for the Universal Company and President Carl Laemmle himself attended the meeting of exchange managers held in Chicago on September 15, 16 and 17. This is the first of a series of such meetings which are scheduled to be called every sixty days with the idea of building an even stronger Universal program and distribution.

The most important decision of the meeting was that to spend still more money in making Universal two and three-reelers even stronger than ever before. Better stars and better directors are to be added as they are found. More comedies are to be produced and of a continually improving quality. An attempt will also be made to improve the Bluebirds. All these decisions came as a result of the conferences of the exchange men, who believe that business will continue to improve with every effort made to improve the Universal output and to give exhibitors the best films it is possible to produce.

Among those present were President Carl Laemmle, Joe Schnitzer, Indianapolis Universal manager; Herman Fitzchenberg, Consolidated, New Orleans; I. Van Ronkle, Chicago Bluebird; C. R. Plough, Chicago Universal; F. J. Flaherty, Milwaukee Bluebird; Claire Hague, Toronto; Art Schmidt, Buffalo; George Weeks, Detroit; V. R. Carrick, general manager of the Interstate Exchanges with headquarters in Philadelphia; William Oldknow, Atlanta; Maurice Fleckles, Chicago, R. C. Cropper, Kansas City; M. L. Markowitz, San Francisco; General Manager Hoffman and his assistant, E. H. Goldstein.

Mystery

David Wark Griffith, in New York ostensibly only for the presentation of his "Intolerance," has been spending some time at the Famous Players studio directing. It is said that he wished to add a scene to his big spectacle mentioned above. But there's lots of wondering going on in film circles—just lots of wondering, that's all.

Billie Ritchie has received an offer from a British syndicate to open a studio in Canada.

Sothern Appears in "The Chattel"

GREATER VITAGRAPH WILL PRESENT A NUMBER OF BRITISH STARS

VITAGRAPH'S first release starring E. H. Sothern went to the public on September 25 under the title of "The Chattel." Peggy Hyland plays opposite Mr. Sothern and in the supporting cast appear Rose Tapley, Charles Kent and John L. Taylor. "The Chattel" is an original story written by Paul West to fit Mr. Sothern's personal and dramatic style of acting. It was produced by Frederick Thomson. The large stock exchange scenes are correct to the minutest detail, more than 300 people being engaged for these scenes alone.

Goff Makes Western Tour

A. W. Goff, assistant general manager of the V-L-S-E is making a tour of the offices of that organization as far west as the Pacific Coast for the purpose of making certain that the sales representatives of the Vitagraph V-L-S-E thoroughly understand the possibilities for enlarged service and progress which are opened to them by reason of the absorption of the V-L-S-E by the Greater Vitagraph. Incidentally Mr. Goff will also outline the campaign of advertising, publicity and sales helps which is to be employed to aid exhibitors in making the most of Greater Vitagraph's serial "The Scarlet Runner," which is to be released on October 2. Mr. Goff has visited Chicago and St. Louis, and will visit Kansas City, Minneapolis, Salt Lake City, Denver, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle and upon his return Cincinnati, Cleveland and Pittsburgh.

Vitagraph London-Mades

The great English drive on the photoplay has commenced. Stars of the London stage are beginning to take strategic steps preparatory to advancing to share the honors gained by the American stage star. The Great Vitagraph organization is announcing a number of releases from its London studio in which famous British stars will appear. On October 9 Vitagraph's first London-made release will be "The Firm of Girdlestone," a story by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle. In the cast will appear Charles Rock and Edna Flugrath.

Later on Vitagraph will present the film version of "Caste," with Sir John Hare in the role of "Old Ecoles," one of of his greatest characters. He will be supported by Peggy Hyland. Then will come Sir George Alexander in "The Second Mrs. Tranquery," followed by Henry Ainley in "The Great Adventure."

"The Scarlet Runner" Fictionized

General Manager Irwin of Vitagraph announces that he has completed negotiations whereby metropolitan newspapers all over the country will exploit "The Scarlet Runner" as a fiction feature.

It is worthy of note that William Randolph Hearst after hearing such favorable reports of "The Scarlet Runner," was willing to enter into a contract to feature it in his newspapers throughout the country and handle the syndicating of it to other newspapers both in the large cities and the smaller towns.

According to the arrangements made by the International Film Service, Inc., exhibitors who have never before secured the co-operation that they were entitled to when handling serial pictures will be agreeably surprised to find that their local newspapers are going to publish Vitagraph's "Mile-A-Minute Motor Series" as fiction simultaneously with their showing it. These metropolitan papers will be supported in their endeavors by hundreds of smaller dailies and weeklies who will receive the serial plate or mat form from the Western Newspaper Union. Every episode of this serial is a complete story in itself and introduces not only Earle Williams but also the leading lady in every episode.

Willis Goes With Unicorn

J. E. Willis, widely known in the motion picture business, and affectionately called "Pop," has entered upon his duties as assistant general manager of the Unicorn Film Service Corporation. He arrived at Chicago last Friday to start his new duties, which immediately took him on a side trip to Minneapolis and later to Indianapolis.

The headquarters of Mr. Willis will be in the Mallers Building, Chicago, where the mid-west branch of the Unicorn Film Service Corporation is situated.

The woodland scene is from Vitagraph's "The Chattel," which features the charming English actress, Peggy Hyland. The other picture gives you a pre-screen peep at Anita Stewart's coming Blue Ribbon, "The Combat," released September 18.

NEW PRODUCING COMPANY

Valkyrien to Produce Her Own Classics, "Venus" Being the First—No Studio to Be Used—Profit Sharing Cost

Valkyrien, the Danish star, is to have her own producing company under the title of Valkyrien Films, Inc. The success of "Diana," a classic feature photoplay in multi-color effect, in which Valkyrien made her initial star debut on the American screen, was instrumental in interesting capital on behalf of the youthful titled star. Valkyrien excels in nature parts and classic roles and has been starred in eight such features during this, her first year on the American screen. Her proposed producing company will be devoted exclusively to classic feature plays based on the famous and captivating episodes of Greek, Roman and Scandinavian mythology. Valkyrien's first offering on her own program will be a seven-reel classic, entitled "Venus," the scenario of which is already finished. This feature will afford ample scope for the histrionic talent of the "Blonde Beautiful" and her magnificent physique. Valkyrien's experience as a classic danseuse in the Royal Danish Ballet is another asset that will aid her in putting upon the screen veritable and artistic portrayals of the goddesses of the ancients.

Valkyrien, Danish beauty, who is to produce with her own company.

The youthful star has already secured a staff of producing specialists that will put the classics under her banner in a class entirely by itself. Memo Misu, the Roumanian screen wizard, who is justly regarded as Europe's Griffith, for his unsurpassed production of such master spectacles as "The Miracle," "Phantome," "Titanic," "David and Saul," etc., has been secured to direct Valkyrien, while her husband, Baron Dewitz, the screen connoisseur, will be regisseur and in charge of costumes, settings, staging, etc., insuring unfailing accuracy and correct period in the smallest detail. Two of Europe's most accomplished cameramen have been engaged.

The new organization will have no studio whatever, as all classic action takes place in the open. The producing staff and the principals will be engaged on a new profit-sharing plan, and the entire scope of production will be organized on a plan entirely new to America, whereby maximum artistic results are feasible at minimum expenditure.

Benjamin Christie, the director general of the Dansk Biograf Company of Copenhagen, which concern is now occupying American headquarters in the World's Tower Building, at 110 West Fortieth street, New York City, on September 14 gave a private exhibition at the Strand Theater, New York, of his recently completed seven-part photoplay "Blind Justice."

"Blind Justice," its projectors are confident, is destined to create quite a sensation, as it deals very daringly with the modern penal system and the conviction of possibly innocent men upon circumstantial evidence. Invitations have been extended to practically every prominent publicist and philanthropist, including Thomas Mott Osborne, warden of Sing Sing prison, whose work in penal reformation has gained him a national reputation, and suffragist and other public-spirited citizens. The audience is expected to be a thoroughly representative one, including as it does, beside the trade, many eminent names of prominent people.

Mr. Christie is planning, after a tour of America, which will embrace a painstaking study of the California studios and American methods of production, to take back with him to Denmark an American company headed by a very noted emotional star. It is entirely possible, states Mr. Christie, that he may also build a studio in the United States, and alternate his Danish companies and the American company between the two countries. Plans are now in active formation to perfect an organization of this sort.

The Danish Biograf Company have two studios in Copenhagen, and have several government privileges.

Comedy a Week for Three Years

One of the busiest and most successful directors in the whole producing staff of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company is Allen Curtis of the Jokers, who accomplishes a tremendous amount of work without making any noise about it. He has a three-year record at Universal City, during most of which time he has occupied his present position as father of the Jokers. He has completed no less than one hundred and seventy-five comedies, practically one per week. Hardly any other producer has so consistent a record as this.

As surely as Monday comes around Curtis may be found beginning work on a new story. He confesses that it is rather a strain to have a fresh subject always ready, to say nothing of the necessity of getting a laugh into every scene. However, he is an old comedian himself, having played with Weber and Fields, that unrivaled team of comedians. He has also owned and managed his own companies, so that directing comedies has become for him almost second nature. Once in a while Miss Henry gets an inspiration herself and supplies him with the plot for a Joker.

Carter De Haven and Ivor McFadden were the participants in a prize fight in one of the episodes of "Timothy Dobbs," the Universal series directed by Wallace Beery. The great disparity in the sizes of the combatants made the bout an exeremely ludicrous affair—McFadden being an extra heavyweight of 330 pounds and the diminutive comedian tipping the scales at 110.

"Hope I didn't hurt you," said Carter with a merry little twinkle in his eye to his big antagonist after the bout was over.

Geraldine Farrar, the noted American grand opera singer, has returned to New York from Los Angeles, where she has been working at the Lasky studios.

Pathe Has Gigantic Advertising Plan

FIRST ADAPTION OF RUDYARD KIPLING

READY OCTOBER 15

ALMOST stupendous advertising campaign has been planned by the Pathe Exchange to exploit their new serial, "The Shielding Shadow." This serial was produced by the Astra Film Corporation under the direction of Louis J. Gasnier and Donald Mackenzie from the scenarios by George B. Seitz, author of "The Iron Claw."

According to the plan of J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, two newspapers in every important city of the country will carry "The Shielding Shadow" advertising, which means that 25,000,000 people will read about the serial each week.

In addition to newspaper advertising there will be billboards in nineteen of the largest cities and painted sign boards in New York, St. Louis, Kansas City, Niagara Falls and Newark. The billboards have been designed with a space for the name of the theaters and the dates they will show the picture.

Pathe was probably the first company to practice complete exhibitor co-operation. Its policy is to create business for its exhibitors. By means of newspapers, billboards and painted signs it is doing so, reaching every resident and every visitor in all of the large cities. The exhibitor in the small town benefits by the prestige thus lent to the pictures which he presents. In addition, every possible advertising aid is furnished by the company.

There will be window cards on "The Shielding Shadow" playing up in a striking manner, the powerful mystery.

In addtion there will be the following advertising matter on "The Shielding Shadow":

Advance portrait one sheet of Grace Darmond, sets of five slides, including three on "The Mystery of the Shielding Shadow," 1-3 and 6 sheet posters for each release, colored lobby display photographs, 12 to a set, attractive booklets which will be substituted for heralds on the first two chapters—these booklets are printed on good quality stock and are attractively illustrated with colored photographs of Grace Darmond, Ralph Kellard and Leon Bary. They contain a general story about "The Shielding Shadow" and the story of the first and second chapters. They will be issued in envelope size for mailing. For the remaining chapters of "The Shielding Shadow" there will be two colored heralds, envelope size for each release, 22x28 photographs of a scene from each week's release, 22x28 photographs of Grace Darmond, Ralph Kellard and Leon Bary, one and two column newspaper cuts of scenes and stars for each chapter, canvas banners 10x3 feet, advance twenty-four sheets, novelties. There will also be a campaign book giving the exhibitor a complete advertising and publicity campaign with reproductions of the advertising matter in order that he may see what he is getting and know how to use it.

Pathe's policy is to charge what a picture is worth. Prices have been doubled on "The Shielding Shadow." Bookings are pouring in.

Prints of the picture are now in all Pathe Exchanges. Its release date is October 1.

First Kipling Picture Released

To Pathe goes the honor of being the first to release a picture adapted from a book by Rudyard Kipling. On October 15 "The Light That Failed," a five-reel Gold Rooster play produced by Edward Jose, will be given to the public. Mr. Jose selected an all-star cast to interpret the picture, consisting of Robert Edeson, Jose Collins, Lillian Tucker and Clause Fleming. Hundreds of extras—British soldiers, tribesmen and so forth, were used to give the picture real atmosphere.

Gold Rooster for September 24

"Saint, Devil and Woman" is the title of the Gold Rooster play released September 24. Florence LaBadie takes the principal part in this play, which is based upon dual personality combined with hypnotic influence. In support of Miss LaBadie appear Wayne Arey, Ethyl Cook and Hector Dion. Thanhouser produced the picture from a scenario by Philip Lonergan, and Frederic Sullivan directed it.

E. J. Farrell, formerly manager for the General Film Company in Boston, has been engaged as manager of the New England Pathe Exchange. Mr. Farrell has a strong team working with him, composed of A. W. Smith, Jr., J. I. Goldman, J. J. Donnelly, A. Bevan, F. J. Cavanagh, R. C. Kinney and F. A. Grady.

Pathe has gone back to the "one feature a week" policy. For a while the big company released but one a month, but the demand was so insistent for more big productions that a bigger output was decided upon.

The Pathe News is running a series of clever political cartoons by well known artists under the process patented by J. R. Bray. The cartoons are proving to be a very popular feature, as they are particularly timely in view of the approaching presidential election.

A portion of the footage of Pathe's big new serial, "The Shielding Shadow," will reveal the intense scene pictured below. This is the serial which Pathe intends to advertise in two newspapers in every large city in the country. Here is a smile from Grace Darmond, the star, who is also the armed lady below.

CAST WITH NAZIMOVA

Unusual Array of Actors and Actresses Secured by Herbert Brenon for His Coming Production, the Famous "War Brides"

In the cast which will be seen in support of Nazimova in the Herbert Brenon photodramatic production of "War Brides," to be released through Lewis J. Selznick in October, there are two members of the vaudeville company which appeared with this star in her successful tour. One of these, Gertrude Berkeley, never has appeared in moving pictures except under Mr. Brenon's direction, and had decided to retire from stage and screen, when Nazimova and Mr. Brenon induced her to return to play her big part in "War Brides," that of the aged mother of soldiers. In the photodrama Miss Berkeley's role is second in gripping intensity only to that portrayed by Nazimova herself.

Nila Mac also was in Nazimova's company, and will have her previous role. Robert Whitworth, another member of the cast, has had a distinguished career on the stage with such stars as Sir Henry Irving and Forbes Robertson, and recently has been featured by the Vitagraph. William Bailey has been in pictures for nine years, with Essanay, Fox, Metro, and with Universal as a director. Theodora Warfield was one of the mermaids in the spectacle, "A Daughter of the Gods." Richard S. Barthelmess has been acting in pictures in his college vacations; his mother coached Nazimova for her American debut, and he has known the star almost all his life. Ned Burton, who will play the part of the captain, was in vaudeville eighteen years, in the team of Burton and Brookes, was with Julian Eltinge in "Cousin Lucy," and last season played Senator Murphy in "Potash and Perlmutter." Charles Bryand, Nazimova's husband, is realistically cast as her husband in the photodrama. Charles Hutchinson and several other well-known players will complete the strong array.

Unity Opens Executive Offices

Andrew J. Cobe has opened executive offices for the Unity Sales Corporation in Chicago. Ever since the purchase of "The Yellow Menace," the sixteen episode serial produced by the Serial Film Company, Mr. Cobe and the Unity officials have felt the need of executive offices in Chicago to supplement the activities of the New York office, and the present announcement of the opening of the office at 207 South Wabash avenue, is the realization of an ambition which has been in the minds of all interested in the Unity Sales Corporation for some months. Mr. Cobe plans to spend a greater part of his time in the Chicago office and will look after practically all the matters that affect the distribution of the pictures released on the Unity program.

Chas. W. Allen, president of the company, and Arthur Rosenbach, secretary, will still continue to be actively in charge of the New York office and all the pictures for the program will be bought in and shipped from New York. The advertising and publicity departments will remain in New York as before.

Florence La Badie, the Thanhouser star, is now working under the direction of Frederic Sullivan in "Divorce and the Daughter," a feature to be released through the Pathe exchanges. The story is by Agnes C. Johnston, author of "The Fear of Poverty," "The Shine Girl" and "Prudence, the Pirate"—in the last two named Gladys Hulette was the star.

Miss La Badie is supported by J. H. Gilmour, Edwin Stanley, Kathryn Adams, Sam Niblack, Zenaide Williams and two children, Ethelmary Oakland and Arthur Levine.

Partridge Head of Home Office

Joseph S. Partridge has been engaged as special representative of the home office of the Vitagraph-V-L-S-E. It will be the duty of Mr. Partridge to keep in touch with the twenty-three branches of Vitagraph-V-L-S-E by personal visits and to see to it that everything that will make for the greatest good of the exhibitors, and consequently for Greater Vitagraph, is being done. Mr. Partridge was for a number of years connected with the General Film Company in an investigating capacity. He came with V-L-S-E to take charge of its New York office at its inception. He is succeeded as manager of the New York branch by George Balsdon, Sr., who was formerly manager of the Boston branch of the V-L-S-E. J. L. Reardon, who has been assistant branch manager at Boston, has been appointed manager of that office.

Joseph S. Partridge, special Vitagraph V-L-S-E representative.

Chaplin Next in "The Pawn Shop"

Charlie Chaplin will be seen on and after October 2 in a still bigger and funnier one, "The Pawn Shop." This picture, with the Mutual's inimitable half million dollar funny man in the role of the pawnbroker's assistant, will be the sixth of the two-reel comedies made by Mr. Chaplin for the Mutual.

The only change in the comedian's famous make-up, the funny moustache, the big feet, the derby hat and the baggy trousers, is the addition of a vest in the season's nattiest plaid, and a hoary time piece. All the celebrated Chaplin business is there, and a lot more that the public has never seen, besides. "The Pawn Shop" is a typical Chaplin picture, only more so. It is the funny man at his very best in the make-up that the public likes the most.

In the role of the beautiful pawnbroker's daughter is the fair Edna Purviance. In her kitchen centers much of the fun. "The Pawn Shop," it is stated on the authority of those who have seen the latest Chaplin-Mutual at the studios, is the funniest of any of the famous comedian's productions.

E. C. Jenson, formerly manager of the Chicago World office, has been transferred to New York. Logan Rozelle succeeds Mr. Jensen in Chicago.

These Fox artists in a row, from the left, are June Caprice—"Little Miss Happiness"—Fritz Leiber, Gretchen Hartmann, Joan Sawyer, Stuart Holmes, Juanita Hansen, and in the circle Velma Whitman.

Fox Introduces Joan Sawyer

SURATT, PEARSON AND CAPRICE IN OCTOBER FEATURES

WILLIAM FOX'S releases for the first weeks in October give to the public three strong features in which Valeska Suratt, Virginia Pearson and June Caprice are starred.

Several hundred feet of Miss Suratt's picture which tells of a woman's revenge plot were made at Sing Sing prison. Another interesting scene is the realistic effect of lightning striking the house.

Miss Pearson's play is a story of life during the war in a simple Scotch village, and shows the torment the struggle brings to a woman's heart.

A cheery, optimistic little tale is woven through Miss Caprice's third production for the William Fox films. The story was written by Frederic Chapin, and gives the winsome actress the sympathetic role of a waif. Harry Hilliard plays opposite the youthful star. Little Jane Lee is also included in the cast.

Joan Sawyer Dances for Fox

Joan Sawyer's wonderful dancing will not be lost to the world because she has joined the ranks of the silent drama.

In the new William Fox photoplay in which Miss Sawyer is now busily at work under the direction of Tefft Johnson, the famous society danseuse has several opportunities to display her art. The picture has a background of Gypsy life, and the first steps the noted dancer takes for the films are photographed at midnight in the glow of the Gypsy's campfire.

The plot of Miss Sawyer's initial production has been planned out so carefully that her dancing, in each instance, fits in naturally with, and is essential to, the story.

"I think I know what were the shortest and the longest dances on record," said Joan Sawyer.

"Credit for the shortest, I'll take myself.

"That dance, what little there was of it, was performed in the barn in back of my home in El Paso, Texas, when I was still carrying school books in a strap. I had seen 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' the night before and was trying to imitate the fandango little Eva did between the acts.

"My father saw me take three steps, and the dance was done.

"As for the longest—that was performed by William Kemp, the famous Shakespearian actor when he 'daunced from London to Norwich,' as described in a book called 'Kemp's Nine Daies Wonder.'"

The Dangers of Picture-making

The picture featuring Gladys Coburn, another new star in the Fox firmament, is well under way. Few persons realize that the dangers which are gone through by actors are frequently real dangers, and not deeds merely faked for the camera. An experience of Miss Coburn last week exemplifies this.

The actress had to fall from a swiftly moving yacht in one scene of her photoplay. She did. Although she cannot swim, yet she did not hesitate about the plunge. It is betraying no confidence, however, to say that she was genuinely glad when Fritz Leiber "rescued" her.

Director Bertram Bracken, who is screening the Coburn picture, has also found that civilization has its drawbacks. Everything had been rehearsed exhaustively before Mr. Bracken ordered the cameras to begin "shooting" a scene showing an Indian attack on a fortified cabin.

The Indians crept through a clump of bushes on the side of the road opposite the house, while the cameras ground. Then, just as the Red-men were about to dash across the road, an automobile party of three cars passed gaily between the cameras and the ferocious Indians.

A fresh start had to be made.

Theda Bara "Vamps" Again

Theda Bara's new photoplay for Fox films is near completion. Miss Barra has a "vampire" role—her first since the tremendously successful "The Eternal Sapho."

A. H. Van Buren, who had the male lead in "Her Double Life," has an important part in the photoplay. Included in the cast are Herbert Heyes and Mary Martin.

Clarke Acts in First Fox Production

George Clarke, for some time stage manager for the late Charles Frohman, is now acting in his first William Fox production.

Mr. Clarke was born in England, and has had the distinction of playing before two kings and two presidents. The new Fox actor quickly attained a position of prominence on the English stage, and during an engagement at the Garrick Theater in London, he appeared before King Edward and Queen Alexandra. Many years afterward, he played to King George and Queen Mary.

In America, Mr. Clarke had the distinction of acting before Presidents Taft and Wilson. He personally received Mr. Taft after the performance behind the scenes of the Belasco Theater in New York.

Theda's Letter From the Trenches

Theda Bara received this card last week from the trenches:

Somewhere in Belgium.

"Many thanks for your kindness in supplying cigarettes and tobacco for us boys who are trying to do their bit for all civilization. These little acts of kindness and self-denial on the part of those across the water are beams of sunshine to us boys in muddy Flanders. So with best luck and wishes to yourself, I remain

Yours truly,

E. L."

SIGNAL TO RELEASE SERIAL

Helen Holmes to Be Featured in "A Lass of the Lumberlands," Released Through Mutual in Fifteen Chapters of Two Reels

S. S. Hutchinson, president of the Signal Film Corporation, announces that this company has ready for release a new picture serial entitled "A Lass of the Lumberlands." Helen Holmes will be the star of this serial, which will be released through the Mutual Film Corporation's sixty-eight exchanges on October 23. "A Lass of the Lumberlands" is in fifteen chapters of two reels each. E. Alexander Powell is the author of the story, while the production is in the capable hands of J. P. McGowan.

Helen Holmes, the luminous charmer of Signal's coming serial.

As the title "A Lass of the Lumberlands" indicates, the story is laid in the great north woods, amid the mighty sequoia, pines and cedars that make this region famous. As the story progresses the screen will actually illustrate every detail of operation in the great lumbering industry. One will see the standing timber, behold the methods of cutting and trimming the logs for arrangement in booms, the shooting of the logs down the flumes, the start of the drive down the swirling streams to the sawmills, the breaking of a log-jam, the arrival of the timber at the mills, the operation of the mills themselves and the final marketing of the lumber.

All who see the serial on the screen are sure to gain a more comprehensive idea of what the great lumbering industry means to this country than they could by reading columns of dry text on the subject, or by an actual visit to any single lumber camp, any sawmill, or any single factor of the many which go to make up the lumbering industry as a whole.

The story is not primarily an educational feature, but an intensely interesting, tremendously thrilling, splendidly acted spectacular chapter play which has been actually filmed in the real lumberlands. There is nothing staged or artificial about it from first to last. The company that produced the picture under the direction of J. P. MacGowan worked for several months in the heart of the mighty forests of the north. Real lumberjacks are seen cutting real timber. Real log-jams in real rivers are seen broken up by real dynamite. Every chapter of the entire fifteen is crammed with action, and each chapter demonstrates the daring of the fearless film star, Helen Holmes. In fact, there will not be a dull moment in the whole serial. And yet there is nothing exaggerated or unbelievable in the entire story. It is a tale of conditions as they exist, told in a convincing fashion.

The fact that the story has the lumbering industry as its theme and that its scenes are laid in the big timber regions will give the exhibitor innumerable opportunities for odd and unusual displays in his lobby and for outdoor display on the street. Huge logs, gaily colored mackinaws, canthooks, peaveys and other lumbering utensils, can be used to advantage in decorating the theater, and many houses will probably make use of rough timber in trimming their lobbies during the period that "A Lass of the Lumberlands" is on the screen.

The film will be released at a time when the fall season has just opened. It comes at a time when the whole country is feeling prosperous and the people are seeking amusement. It is unusual in theme. It features a star who has an established following. It is filled with action and thrill, yet is always logical and convincing.

Kleine Men Meet in Chicago

In Chicago on September 10 and 11 an important conference of George Kleine exchange managers was held. Branch managers of the Kleine offices from the west, the south and the central west gathered to discuss plans for launching the regular fall sales campaign and to talk over problems affecting each individual exchange.

All the managers were guests at a noonday luncheon given at the University Club. Following the meal M. E. Smith presided over a business meeting that lasted well along into the afternoon, and which resulted in bringing out many new ideas by which exhibitors in all territories will benefit. In attendance at the meeting were Messrs. Buckwalter of Denver and Salt Lake City; Ragland of New Orleans; Edmunds of San Francisco and Los Angeles; Rosenberg of St. Louis; Wuerz of Dallas; Ratz of Indianapolis; Hardcastle of Atlanta; Reavey of Cleveland; Graham of Minneapolis; Nathan of Detroit, and Jenner and Fox of Chicago.

Vitagraphs on General Program

On Monday, September 25, the General Film Company released a Vitagraph one-part comedy made at the Bayshore Studio by Director Robertson. It is entitled "Getting By" and features Huntly Gordon and Shirley Moore.

On Friday, September 29, Hughie Mack scores in the comedy offering "She Who Laughs Last." This is another screen production from the script by himself and Graham Baker. Patsey De Forest and the rest of Semon's "Sea Lions" support Hughie.

Paramount Plans Diplomatic Series

LENORE ULRICH AND VALENTINE GRANT IN FIVE-REEL FEATURES

THE first of the one-reel comedies which will hereafter be a feature of the Paramount program will appear on the program of October 2. This comedy was produced by the United States Picture Corporation and is entitled "Nearly a Deserter."

This first-week-of-October program also marks the return to the screen of Lenore Ulrich in her first Morosco production for this season after her exceptional success on the speaking stage last winter, and also brings forth the second Famous Players production in which Valentine Grant appears.

Lenore Ulrich will appear in "Intrigue," the first of three productions planned for her this season.

Valentine Grant will be seen in "The Daughter of MacGregor," a Scotch character piece written by Miss Grant herself.

Beside the comedy the small features on the program consist of the thirty-fourth edition of the Paramount Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen; a Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Picture, the thirty-fifth of the series of "Trips Around the World," entitled "A Scotch-Irish Reel"; and a Paramount-Bray Cartoon, "O. U. Rooster," by C. L. Glackens.

The Paramount Pictograph is made up of four subjects, "Safety First," showing how people can safeguard themselves from injury in many unique ways; "What Became of the Spinning Wheel?" "How Great Lake Freighters are Handled"; and "The Four-Footed Aristocrats."

Burton Holmes takes his audience through an interesting trip to Scotland and Ireland. The pictures are the result of Mr. Holmes' recent motor trip through these countries.

Special lithograph paper, publicity and advertising, has been arranged for each of the five-reel features and the single reels on the program for the exhibtor's aids, which is a part of the campaign Paramount has inaugurated to help the exhibitor.

Arrangements have just been completed by Paramount Pictures Corporation with the members of the cabinet of President Wilson and other prominent personages in diplomatic circles, for the production of a series of feature screen-magazine stories, entitled "What I Am Trying To Do." They will be released as the leading articles in the Paramount Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen.

Pictures have already been made of the stories regarding the accomplishments in office of Secretary Franklin K. Lane, of the Department of the Interior, Secretary Baker, of the Department of War, Secretary Josephus Daniels, of the Department of the Navy, and Admiral Benson, Chief of Naval Operations. Each of the pictures shows in details the many interesting things these men at the head of the government have done and are doing, the great majority of which information the average layman never knew of or had reason to believe came within the province of a cabinet member. Each article is signed personally by the official which makes the pictures the authoritative statement in pictures of the men themselves to the public as to what they are doing.

These pictures disregard in every detail the matter of politics, and despite the fact that it is already known what others will do in the different cabinet offices if they succeed the present holders, the releases will show what the province of each in connection with the running the Government really is.

It is only the larger plans of these officials which are outlined in the pictures. There is no detailed descriptions of the experiences of some under official in trying to promote a political scheme. They tell exclusively what the larger efforts of each individual head are, and they present to the voter, to the man and woman who is a good citizen, an opportunity to judge as to whether or not each of these head officials is acting as the citizen would want him to act in regard to these plans. There is absolutely no question whether the head is a Republican or a Democrat.

Paramount Pictographs have filmed a remarkable picture which shows how a tremendous farm has been built out of the Oak Orchard Swamp in western New York. The farm, which comprises 16,000 acres, is in no way a philanthropic enterprise. It is the endeavor of Wall Street bankers to make money on a farm and to discover at the same time the best ways for making a colossal project of this sort a commercial success. This picture shows to the world what it is possible to do on a large farm with modern machinery. The farm is on a cost accounting system so that the bankers know just how much each can of spinach produced at the farm cost. There is no guess work of any sort.

To Helen M. Irwin of San Diago, California, belongs the honor of inaugurating the first Paramount Party. Miss Irwin issued invitations to her guests on Paramount cards requesting them to come to her home dressed to represent their favorite Paramount star.

The Irwin home was beautifuly decorated for the occasion with pictures of the Paramount stars and the Paramount trademark artistically arranged in different sections of the house, lighted with electric lights. Gold and blue was used as the color scheme throughout.

When luncheon was served on the center of the table was a motion picture camera with a camera man turning out a new picture of a number of stars. The place cards were bordered with strips of film and the table covering was of stars of the Paramount program. During the evening clever Paramount games were played and prizes in the form of theatre tickets to the next Paramount productions were given.

New Philosophy on Acting

Here's an altruistic actor. Walter Law rises to the defense of the "other fellow."

"In all the comments on acting, both in the legitimate and in motion pictures," says the William Fox star, "it seems to me that critics and laymen alike have overlooked, or have not stressed sufficiently, one thing. Successful acting in plays, or for the screen, depends largely on teamwork, especially in scenes in which there are only two persons.

"When anyone compliments me on a bit of acting in a photoplay I always split the credit two ways, if there has been some one else in the scene with me, because any good work that I may have done is in no small measure due to whoever was my 'partner' in that particular scene. I noticed this was true soon after I began treading the boards, and I think it holds with double force for the silent drama.

"It helps one a whole lot to know that one won't have to think for the other fellow; it gives you the intensest sort of a satisfactory feeling to realize that the other fellow is working in conjunction with you. I have played in countless scenes in stock in which the person opposite me handicapped, more than aided, me.

"In chorus dancing and musical comedy generally teamwork is always emphasized because a flaw there would be so obvious. In photoplay acting a mistake would not be so apparent, but would be equally disastrous."

The William Fox actor admits that he may make a fetish of the teamwork idea because he got a severe training during the three years in which he smashed and kicked with ten other members of the football team at Ohio State University. Law, by the way, has a forty-six inch chest.

BIG FEATURES FOR ARROW

The Famous Hall Caine, Mrs. Wilson Woodrow, Mrs. Maravene Thompson and William Osborne to Contribute to Arrow

W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Film Corporation, announces that he has signed contracts and completed arrangements whereby Arrow will, in the next twelve months, produce in addition to its five-reel pictures a number of seven and eight-reel special features and two serials, the basic stories of which include the best-known novels and stage plays of world-famous authors or else material written by them especially for Arrow.

Chief among these writers is Hall Caine. Other famous authors who have written or now are working on stories acquired by Arrow are Mrs. Wilson Woodrow, Mrs. Maravene Thompson, William Hamilton Osborne and a number of others.

All of these big stories will be produced in the motion picture length which is warranted solely by the dramatic value of the material. Some will be only five reels in length, others seven, some eight, and at least one of them ten. This length will not be accurately determined until the picture is finally assembled, titled, and cut.

Arrow does not intend to abandon, totally, the production of program features. But Mr. Shallenberger feels that it is best not to agree to make nothing but five-reel productions.

In addition to the acquisition of these stories of world-famous authors, Mr. Shallenberger has brought to the United States, to appear in a number of Arrow picture, Derwent Hall Caine, son of the Manx author and himself a famous London actor-manager. Derwent Hall Caine, who has produced and starred in several of his father's plays on the English speaking stage, will be seen in the same parts in Arrow's film version of these masterpieces.

Mr. Caine's American debut will be made in an eight-reel Arrow production of one of his father's best-known books. It is anticipated it will be ready for the market in about three weeks. Following this, he will be starred in a five-reel American picture which Mr. Caine has helped to prepare for the screen.

"THE CONQUEST OF CANAAN"

Frohman Amusement Corporation Uses Entire Population of Village in Production of Film—Jack Sherrill and Edith Taliaferro Score Success

The Frohman Amusement Corporation announces that its latest production, "The Conquest of Canaan," represents the best work yet done by Director Irving and his staff. Over two thousand people were used in this production, and no pains were spared to make it perfect in every detail.

The role of Joe Louden is happily suited to Jack Sherrill's particular ability, while Edith Taliaferro lends to the part of Aeriel the winsome personality that won her so favorable a standing in her work in "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," "Young Wisdom," etc.

For the exterior situations Technical Master Ralph Dean arranged with the civic authorities at Mineola, Long Island, for the use of the principal streets and municipal buildings for several half holidays. The court house, post office, fire department buildings, police station, county and city jails and various city office suits were all used to good advantage. The populace, in response to an invitation, assisted in various ensemble scenes to such an extent that perfectly natural effects resulted, and the stereotyped mob scenes has been improved upon to no mean extent.

The entire company journeyed to Trenton, N. J., where a number of scenes were staged at the head of an old bridge, across the spot Washington was supposed to have made his memorable crossing. The bridge is over a century old and formed an admirable background for numerous situations.

The production is in six parts. The story in itself, in book form, exceeded four hundred pages, and Director Irving stuck as close to Tarkington's tale as the camera necessities would permit.

An extra large cast of principals features the production.

Edith Taliaferro, Jack Sherrill, Ralph Delmore, Ben Hendricks, Marie Edith Wells, Walter Heirs, Gene La Mott and George Melville all have important parts, while over two thousand people were used in all.

The releasing arrangements will be announced by the Frohman company within the next few days.

The eight reissues of Clara Kimball Young photoplays announced by the World Film Corporation and first offered to the regular patrons of that concern are in strong demand. All these pictures have been re-edited and retitled.

Want another little peach for your screen Mr. Showman? In their big "Beauty and Brains" contest, Photoplay Magazine and the World Film Corporation applied the magnet of the motion drama to the uttermost parts of the country and among the thousands called these few were chosen to challenge the camera for a place in the screen. They are, top row, from the left, Phyllis Curl, Roxbury, Massachusetts; Mildred Lee, Kansas City, Missouri; Florence Gray, Seattle; Helen Arnold, Louisville; Alatia Martin, Dallas; Peggy Bloom, Orlando, Florida; Lucille Zintheo, Spokane. Lower row: Lucille Satterthwait, Waynesville, N. C.; Vivian Suckling, Winnipeg, Canada; Estelle Claire Judy, McKeesport, Pa.; Claire Lois Butler Lee, Wichita.

World Contest Winners Arrive

ALICE BRADY REFUSES OFFERS FROM FOOTLIGHTS

ELEVEN young girls, representing Canada and nine states in the Union, have arrived in New York to make their first try-out before the camera. These embryo artists have at least one distinct advantage over other girls who come to New York with a similar purpose, inasmuch as each is assured of a thorough screen trial and a year's contract under salary if she survives the camera's vivisection and shows ability to act.

The trials will take place in the studios of the World Film Corporation at Fort Lee, and Director General William A. Brady expresses the belief that one or more conspicuous favorites of the screen may be developed. The competitors are the winners of a "Beauty and Brains" contest conducted by Photoplay Magazine and the World corporation.

The official stamp of unusual mental as well as physical gifts was bestowed upon the members of this group by a board of judges which included Lillian Russell, Kitty Kelly, Sophie Irene Loeb, William A. Brady, Arthur H. Spiegel and Julian Johnson.

The eleven American girls typifying their country's pulchritude and intellect are: Vivian Suckling, Winnipeg, Canada; Estelle Judy, McKeesport, Pennsylvania; Lucille Zintheo, Spokane, Washington; Florence Gray, Seattle, Washington; Claire Lois Butler Lee, Wichita, Kansas; Peggy Bloom, Orlando, Florida; Alatia Marton, Dallas, Texas; Phyllis Curl, Roxbury, Massachusetts; Mildred Lee, Kansas City, Missouri; Lucille Satterthwait, Waynesville, North Carolina, and Helen Arnold, Louisville, Kentucky.

"The motion picture producers," said Mr. Brady yesterday, "had been met with one of the great obstacles which confront producers for the speaking stage—scarcity of young actresses who possess real ability and attractive personality. The main idea of this contest was to discover such talent and bring it to the motion pictures to fill the breach already mentioned. But we did not want mere beauty, which means nothing beyond visual gratification. To be of real usefulness the girls who are to relieve the scarcity of worth-while youthful material must have exceptional intelligence."

Alice Brady Forswears Stage

Alice Brady will not be seen upon the speaking stage for some months to come. Miss Brady has recently declined propositions from Cohan and Harris, Oliver Morosco, John Cort, the Messrs. Shubert and other producing managers, including her father, William A. Brady. The manager last mentioned wanted her for a new play by Owen Davis which he expected to place in rehearsal following the comedy by Montague Glass and Jules Eckert Goodman, now in preparation, but when Miss Alice had stated her case he was satisfied with its business wisdom.

"You see," said Miss Brady, "I am going along so famously in the moving pictures that I think it would be poor judgment to interrupt my progress at present. It would be different if I had any considerable time on my hands between productions, for of course a stage hit stimulates the demand in the studios and increases one's value—particularly if that value happens to be a trifle uncertain.

"But this case does not apply to my situation, at present anyway, I am very happy to say. When one picture is finished I scarcely have time to draw a long breath before another begins. I had only eight hours' rest between 'The Gilded Cage' and 'Bought and Paid For,' and now a single day follows the latter before I begin on the next play, which I hear is to be called 'Loneliness.'"

Miss Brady also bases her decision on her belief that the experience gained in working for the screen is much greater than that gained on the legitimate stage. In discussing this the star says: "What does stage experience amount to as compared with what you get in the pictures? When you are making ready for a stage play you rehearse for a given time, going over the same ground day after day until you are as perfect as you ever will be. Then full of ambition and excitement, you come up to your first night and perhaps make a big hit.

"With the pictures, on the other hand, when you come to your first night you are finished with that particular affair, and you begin all over again upon a totally different proposition. It is just one character after another, one set of requirements following upon the preceding set—constant change.

"When the picture is completed you are done, so far as that one goes, and you must be up and doing for the next. There is absolutely no comparison between the two schools, if experience really makes actors and actresses."

Lawson Sees "Friday the 13th"

Thomas W. Lawson, author of the novel from which "Friday the 13th" was made into a photoplay by William A. Brady and the World Film Corporation, went to see the production in a very quizzical frame of mind. He did not expect much from the screen version. But as the play unfolded the quizzical smile left his face and an expression of growing interest took its place. At the end of the performance he expressed himself as "fairly carried away with the illusion of the picture."

Exhibitors at Censor Problem

The censorship situation in Minneapolis has hit rough waters. With the argument that to recognize censorship in any of its forms is dangerous, a several hour meeting was held on September 16, in the offices of the Bijou Theater, which was attended by exchange managers, exhibitors and the mayor's secretary.

At a previous meeting with the mayor and the censorboard representatives, a form of censorship was agreed upon that merely required the registration of film with the mayor's office and if it was thought the picture should not be exhibited publicly the censorboard would request the exchange to present the picture for their viewing.

Everything worked along harmoniously until the codemning of "The Wolf Woman." At the showing of this picture to the board it is claimed by Mr. Broadford that very little attention was paid to the picture by the censors. The result is that a committee was appointed of nine men to wait on the mayor and request him to abolish the censorboard now in existence and return to the police regulation policy.

Also it was decided to get the candidates for mayor in the coming election to declare themselves on the question of censorship. They will be invited to a meeting of exhibitors, exchangemen, operators and attaches in the motion picture business to be held in the Unique Theater.

Labor Rumblings in Mill City

Rumblings of labor trouble have been going on in the local picture field for the past few weeks. The operators have presented to the theater managers their demands. Several meetings have been held by both factions and a few joint meetings were called. The theater managers have presented their compromise. It is understood, however, that one of the contended demands of the operators upon which they are obdurate is that they will not pick up or deliver film to the exchanges unless they secure fifty cents for the first exchange visited and twenty-five cents for all other exchanges visited.

It is believed that the wage scale will be settled amicably. Considerable time was spent arguing the point of permitting an operator to appoint a substitute on days he takes off, it was also a requirement of the union that the operator get one day off a week.

It is expected that a decision will be reached within a very few days.

Greenwood and Coxen in Mutual Drama

Mutual's popular star, Winnifred Greenwood, will be seen in a stirring drama of unusual merit in the Mutual Masterpicture, "A Woman's Daring," which will be released October 6.

In the role of a woman, who through her life has the shadow of a wrong done her in her girlhood days hanging over happiness, Miss Greenwood is cast in an interesting role. There is a restraint, a delicately hinted at tinge of melancholy which must color the portrayal of the role of the woman throughout the production. Miss Greenwood's interpretation shows an unusual understanding of the psychology of the part. Edward Coxen, Miss Greenwood's co-star, is also worthily cast. He plays the part of the woman's husband, a noble character and excellently portrayed by the Mutual (American) star.

There are many scenes of real beauty in this production. Some of the most charming are those including the grounds of the woman's home, and the small boy who poses as the woman's son.

"Crisis" Owner in New York

Harry Sherman, who recently announced his purchase of Selig's production of Winston Churchill's "The Crisis," is in New York and has opened an office in the Candler Building, 220 West 42nd street. "The Crisis" will be offered on a state rights and territory basis. Mr. Sherman will retain Chicago and all territory west and he will exploit "The Crisis" in the same manner in which he is now handling "Ramona" and "The Birth of a Nation."

Mr. Sherman says that in his estimation "The Crisis" is the equal of "The Birth of a Nation." The production and photography, he says, are wonderful; while the story is of a type which should make "The Crisis" as big a money-getter as Griffith's great Civil War play. In the course of the next few days Mr. Sherman will open offices in Chicago and another announcement given out by Mr. Sherman is to the effect that he has secured E. J. O'Donnell as director of publicity.

In Which Another Rumor Is Killed

There seems to have been thrown into the channels of news, or at least into the broader paths of rumor, that Marguerite Clark, the celebrated little star with Famous Players, has been captured by another company and that her name has been written on the dotted line of a long time contract with the new concern. This report is, however, incorrect. Famous Players and Paramount have both stated that Miss Clark is still a member of their family and will remain on Paramount screens indefinitely.

Flora Parker De Haven has commenced work again at Universal City under the direction of Allen Holubar.

Ruth Roland is the latest acquisition to the group of popular stars appearing in Knickerbocker Star Features.

Another Golden Eagle Ready

INTERNATIONAL ENGAGES OLIVE THOMAS AND MAY HOPKINS

"THE Flower of Faith" is the second of the Golden Eagle Features in five reels offered by the International Film Service, Inc. The film was especially produced for the International by the Superb Pictures Corporation of which Arthur Jacobs is president.

Jane Grey, the star of this feature, is well known both to the screen and the legitimate stage. Her latest success was as Miranda in the Century Theater production of "The Tempest."

Frank Mills, playing opposite Miss Grey, is also well known on the stage having been leading man for Olga Nethersole, Mrs. Patrick Campbell, Mrs. Fiske, Elsie Ferguson, Mary Mannering and Eleanor Robson.

Percy Helton, who also has one of the principal parts, is a boy character actor and at present is starring in "Yankee Doodle Dick."

Albert Travernier, another of the all-star cast, made his greatest picture success in "The Devil's Garden." He is at present appearing in the star production of "The Flame."

Eighteen thousand persons witnessed the filming of a most novel motion picture, at the Polo Grounds, Sunday afternoon. When completed the picture will form a part of the tenth episode of "Beatrice Fairfax," entitled "Play Ball," the great photo-play series of the International Film Service, Inc.

The crowd had assembled to see the baseball game between the Yankees and the Giants, for the benefit of the New York American Evening Journal's Needy Family Fund. Every person in the vast throng, including the players on both teams, will form a part of the picture.

Before the regular game started, the members of the two teams enacted the critical stage of the film game, with the screen actors in the characters they assume in the episode. They include Harry Fox, the star of "Beatrice Fairfax," as Jimmy Barton, Grace Darling as Beatrice Fairfax, Migel Barrie, as Kerrigan, the pitcher, and Olive Thomas, as Rita Malone, his sweetheart. The vast crowd was then photographed from all sides, and many of the scenes of the regular game will form a part of the photoplay. The spectators entered into the spirit of the novel experience with the greatest enthusiasm.

The ball game was won by the Giants by the score of 4 to 2. Both teams had their regular line-up on the field. Russell pitched for the Yankees and Schupp and Anderson for the Giants.

Prior to the game there was a sacred concert by Nahan Fanke's Band, and solos by Miss Anna Fitzjiu and Hugh Allen, of the Metropolitan Opera Company. The benefit netted more than $11,500.

Grace Darling, who is a personal friend of Nahan Franke, and an accomplished musician, was invited to the conductor's stand by Mr. Franke, and directed the band while it played several numbers.

Two New Members of Fairfax Cast

Two new members have been added to the all-star cast producing "Beatrice Fairfax." They are Olive Thomas, of Ziegfeld Follies fame, who will appear in the tenth episode, "Play Ball"; and May Hopkins engaged for the eighth episode, "At the Ainslee Ball."

"Jaffery," the first of the Golden Eagle Features of the International Film Service, Inc., which has just been released, is meeting with tremendous success. The popularity of this photoplay lies in the fact that nothing has been lost in transforming Locke's beautiful story from the novel to the screen, and it is well portrayed by an all-star cast headed by C. Aubrey Smith and Eleanor Woodruff.

The International Company has been very much gratified by the letters and telegrams of congratulations they have received on this film. Harry Davis of Pittsburgh, a prominent theatrical man, wrote: "'Jaffery' broke all records for attendance both afternoon and evening on our first day's presentation in the Grand Opera House. This in spite of intense heat and threatening rain. Distinctly a one hundred per cent picture. Give us more like it." Many others of this same opinion were received.

Mrs. Vernon Castle, star of the International Film Service's preparedness serial, "Patria," is mourning the loss of a gold emblem of the British Royal Flying Corps, of which her husband is a member. Mrs. Castle was at Newport last week, where several of the scenes of "Patria" were made. After the completion of one of the scenes, Mrs. Castle missed the emblem, which she had worn constantly since it was presented to her by her husband on the night they danced before the Queen Mother of England, early last spring.

The loss was reported to the police of Newport, who are making every effort to find it.

Mr. Castle recently sent to his wife one of the caps which he wore for several months as a member of the Royal Flying Corps. She has made it a part of the "Castle preparedness suit" which she recently designed.

"Charity?" to Have Trade Showing

"Charity?", the first feature of the Frank Powell Productions, Inc., which has just been completed, will be shown to the trade at Loew's New York Theater Roof on Tuesday afternoon, September 26, at two o'clock.

This picture, which has been made under Mr. Powell's direction from a story by Linda A. Griffith, and which marks his initial effort as an independent producer, already has aroused unusual interest. In it, and who are making their first appearance as stars under Mr. Powell's direction, are Creighton Hale, Linda A. Griffith and Sheldon Lewis.

In the endeavor to eliminate the possibility of that which is ofttimes an unfortunate feature of an otherwise presentable picture—bad titles—Mr. Powell commissioned James Clarence Harvey to write the captions for "Charity?". Mr. Harvey has long occupied a unique position in the world of letters as a writer of verse and prose that carries always an appeal to the heart strings.

In addition to the trade there will be present at the private view of "Charity?" numerous people prominent in various lines of endeavor who have displayed keen interest in the picture during its making, and who are interested especially in those conditions considered in the picture.

"Charity?" will be released on a state rights basis.

PICKFORD FILM IN OCTOBER

Artcraft Pictures Corporation Announces "Less Than the Dust" for Release Early in October—Many Bookings for Mary's First Film

The Artcraft Pictures Corporation has named October for the release of the first Mary Pickford production, "Less Than the Dust." The final scenes of this production are now being taken and the work of cutting and assembling will begin at once, and then a preliminary shipment of eighty prints will be made to the sixteen exchanges in the United States and Canada. A complete replica of a city of modern India was erected on Long Island for the filming of the big scenes.

Miss Pickford feels that Rahda in "Less Than the Dust" will prove her most popular characterization up to the present time, as the portraying of the heroine gives her a splendid chance to show her versatility. The scenes with the children of the Indian city give the little star an opportunity to show all her charming and adorable traits that have built up her large following.

The Artcraft Pictures Corporation has now invaded Canada, and the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, Ltd., has been organized especially to handle the new Mary Pickford productions throughout the Dominion.

The managers of the various branch offices in the States have also been chosen as follows: San Francisco, C. M. Simmons, formerly with Mutual; Denver, T. Y. Henry; Seattle, H. G. Rosenbaum, formerly with Triangle; Chicago, Max Goldstein; Minneapolis, Ben E. Drum, formerly with V. L. S. E.

Walter E. Greene, president of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, reports the closing of an unusually large number of contracts for bookings of the Mary Pickford productions in the more prominent theaters of the country.

Charles S. Goetz, assistant manager of the New York exchange, spent all last week in western New York closing bookings on the mass of applications from that section.

MICHELENA FILM FOR OCTOBER

California Motion Picture Corporation to Distribute "The Woman Who Dared" on the State Rights Plan—Beatriz Michelena in New Feature

The California Motion Picture Corporation announces that "The Woman Who Dared," with Beatriz Michelena in the leading role, has been completed and will be distributed on state rights plan for October release. An extensive line of advertising helps has been prepared for the picture and is now ready for delivery.

The sales department of the "California" organization says the number of inquiries received concerning this picture would indicate that the independent buyers are alive to the new opportunities offered by the open market. The number of requests for quotations on "The Woman Who Dared" has prompted their decision to begin an immediate assignment of territories for that feature.

The California Company also announces another Michelena production entitled "The Passion Flower," written by Captain Leslie Peacocke, which is nearing completion, and will be released for a November date. This is a seven part feature, and listed in the supporting cast are Andrew Robson, William Pike, Albert Morrison and Irene Outtrim.

"The Passion Flower" is a story of the big out-of-doors and utilizes a section of northern California's redwood scenery never before touched by the camera.

"Birth of a Nation" in Chicago

Chicago is again to see "The Birth of a Nation." That immortal of the screen is to re-open at the Colonial on September 25, for a four weeks' run. Dollar prices will be charged.

The decision of the management to re-run the "old" Griffith masterpiece will of necessity postpone the opening in Chicago of his new "sun play of the ages," "Intolerance," which is now magnetizing crowds in New York. The big spectacle was scheduled tentatively to open at the Colonial on October 2, but Jones, Linick and Schaefer now expect to open its run about four weeks later, following "The Birth of a Nation."

W-C-T-U Endorses Film

The W. C. T. U. of Minneapolis, Minnesota, has endorsed Thomas H. Ince's "Civilization." At a regular meeting of the club held last week, a resolution was passed highly commending "Civilization."

Jack Warren Kerrigan will go into vaudeville upon the expiration of his present contract with the Universal.

"IS ANY GIRL SAFE?" RELEASED

Anti-Vice Motion Picture Company Presents Film Exposing the Methods of White Slavers—Sociologists and Philanthropists Commend Film

When "Is Any Girl Safe?" the first production of the Anti-Vice Motion Picture Company, Inc., was presented at the Maxine Elliott Theater, New York, so great a crowd thronged the box office that the management had to call for police protection and hundreds stood outside for two hours until the second show began. Children under sixteen years of age were not admitted.

The play is an indictment of the conditions made possible by the vice trust and presents a vital warning to parents of all girls. Helen Wright, Mina Cunard, Jessie Arnold, William Quinn and G. Raymond Nye play the principal roles. The play depicts the insidious methods pursued by well-dressed young panderers and no attempt has been made to gloss over the most horrible aspects of the traffic in girls. Included in the film are pictures of Yushe Botwin, the "king of the white slaves," who is now awaiting trial in the Tombs, New York.

Other scenes show the burial of fallen girls at Potter's Field on Hart's Island, New York, where the bodies of more than 198,000 of New York's "unknowns" are shoveled into trenches 150 to a trench by convicts. Another series of views were taken in Washington Cemetery, Brooklyn, where the New York Independent Benevolent Association maintains ten plots for the burial of vice trust victims. The president of this association is Nathan Schwartzburg and Ike Fisher is the secretary.

The Anti-Vice Motion Picture Co., Inc., was organized for the express purpose of assisting in the fight against the white slave traffic. While its first picture was conceived some time before the present proceedings were started against Yushe Botwin. The story it tells, by an extraordinary coincidence, bears a startling resemblance to that which was unfolded before Judge Rosalsky in the Court of General Sessions, New York, recently.

With a view to getting authentic local color for the picture the directors sought permission from the District Attorney to Interview Botwin in the Tombs. This was readily granted, the District Attorney believing the picture would prove a powerful aid to him in his fight to clean up New York City.

Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, who resigned from the editorial staff of the New York American to collaborate on the picture; District Attorney Swann, and Lieut. Dan Costigan, head of the New York Police Department vice squad, made several interesting and valuable suggestions for scenes in the play.

Among those who were invited to the opening performance and whose aid has been solicited in the fight against the white slave traffic by the producers of "Is Any Girl Safe?" were Warden Osborne, of Sing Sing prison, Mrs. William Einstein, vice-president of the New York State Conference of Charities and Correction and president of the Widowed Mothers Fund Association; Mrs. William Grant Brown, vice-president of the Civic Betterment League of New York, and president of the Women's Auxiliary to the rescue work of the Salvation Army; Mrs. Alice C. Smith, probation officer of the New York Night Court for Women; Miss Florence Guernsey, writer on sociological subjects, formerly head of the New York City Federation of Women's Clubs; Mrs. John Elliott of the Hudson Guild; Daniel F. Murphy, vice-president of the Florence Crittenden League; Mrs. Walston Hill Brown, head of the International Child's Welfare League; Mrs. Charles Austin Bates, president of the College Women's Club; Mrs. Mortimor Menken, head of the Sisterhood of the Spanish and Portuguese Synagogue; Mrs. Mary Masters Needham, general secretary of the Big Sisters, Inc.; Mrs. William Julian Heath, president and founder of the National Housewives League; Judge Aaron J. Levy, president and founder of the Board of Judges of New York and Justice of the Mother's Police Court; the Rev. Charles A. Eaton, pastor of the Madison avenue Baptist Church; Mrs. Inez Milholland Boissevain; Supt. Barger of the Society for the Suppression of Vice; Mrs. Margaret E. Luther, white slave traffic worker and investigator for the Florence Crittenden Home; Miss Alice Smith, chief probation officer of the Night Court, and City Magistrate Norman J. Marsh, Assistant District Attorney James E. Smith, Dean Kirchway of Columbia University; Helen Varick Boswell, Miss Helen Todd; and representatives of the Catholic Drama League, the Bureau of Immigration, the Woman's Prison Association, and the Home for Wayward Girls.

Sociologists and others who have witnessed a private exhibition of the picture say it is the most vivid and thorough portrayal of the methods of white slavers ever shown in moving pictures. They think it should, by enlightening mothers and fathers on the methods pursued by these cadets, move them to make a final collective effort to stamp out this horrible business forever.

GAUMONT TO RELEASE SERIAL

Third Episode of "Fantomas" Released—Announcement Made of Serial to Be Released in Nine Episodes of Three Reels Each.

The third "Fantomas" episode and three single-reel releases comprise the Gaumont Company's contribution to the Mutual program for the week beginning September 17.

"The Mysterious Finger Print," the third of the "Fantomas" series, will be released September 21. There are two more episodes to follow.

The three single reelers are "Reel Life" No. 20, released on September 17, which shows "Training Our Merchant Marine Officers," a second section showing how a designer of gowns drapes his creations from bolts of material; and another Gaumont tabloid photoplay from "Life."

"See America First," No. 54, released September 20, takes the spectators on a trip through the mountains of New Hampshire. Attached to it is one of Harry Palmer's cartoons entitled "Nosey Ned Commandeers an Army Mule."

The third release is the Mutual Weekly, which is edited and manufactured by the Gaumont Company. This shows the notification of President Wilson of his selection to head the democratic hosts in the coming election, activities of the naval "rookies," the pretty girls on Fifth avenue leading goats, and Freddie Welsh, the pugilistic victor at Colorado Springs, Colorado.

The Gaumont Company is announcing the forthcoming release of "The Vampires," the "Arch Criminals of Paris." It will be released in nine episodes of three reels each. As in the case of the present Mutual series from the Gaumont studios, "Fantomas," each episode will be complete in itself. There will be one episode released each week. The date for the first episode has not been set.

Kittens Reichert, the famous little child actress with the William Fox photoplayers, is cast for the part of a blind girl in Bertram Bracken's new production, now being screened.

INCEVILLE INFORMATION

William S. Hart Again Appears as "Bad-Man." Dorothy Dalton and Howard Hickman as Co-Stars in "The Jungle Child."

For the first time since "The Aryan," William S. Hart is seen in the role of a "bad-man" when he is presented by Thomas H. Ince as star of the western play entitled "The Return of 'Draw' Egan." This story is from the pen of G. Gardner Sullivan and is released as a Triangle-Kay Bee subject. As "Draw" Eagan Hart is said to have contributed a characterization that compares favorably with his famous performance of Steve Denton in "The Aryan." Hart's principal support is supplied by Margery Wilson. Louise Glaum also has an important part and the other two members of the cast are Robert McKim and J. P. Lockney.

A Brazilian Tupi Indian village in all its picturesqueness was faithfully reproduced in Inceville for the scenes of "The Jungle Child," the Triangle drama in which Thomas H. Ince presents Dorothy Dalton and Howard Hickman as co-stars. The Tupi Indians appearing in the scenes are impersonated by the redskins regularly employed at Inceville, while fifty negroes shown in the play were "borrowed" from a neighboring ranch.

Elaborate preparations are being made at the Ince-Triangle studios in Culver City for the production of a powerful drama in which Thomas H. Ince will present another tri-star combination—this one to consist of Dorothy Dalton, Charles Ray and Louise Glaum. It is a psychological subject with a deep thought behind it and is the work of Alice P. Brown of Pasadena, Cal.

The supporting cast will consist of Margaret Thompson, Robert McKim, J. Barney Sherry and Charles K. French. The production will be directed by Raymond B. West.

John Lynch, the writer who of recent months has provided the Ince-Triangle players with several of their biggest subjects, has just completed a new drama for William Desmond and Enid Markey. It deals with college life, providing Desmond with the role of a heroic collegiate athlete and Miss Markey with that of a chorus girl. The supporting cast will consist of Howard Hickman, Margaret Thompson, Charles Gunn, J. Barney Sherry, David M. Hartford, J. Frank Burke and Louis Durham.

Photoplay fans in [illegible] will welcome Clara Hayden in the newest Ince play, "Love Leads," and the new drama will be shown at [illegible] hundreds of good screens.

Motion Picture Forum

The advent of the Motion Picture Forum into the field of motion picture activities marks one of the most progressive and important movements of this rapidly growing industry.

Entertainment will always be the chief mission of the screen; but no more satisfying form of entertainment can be conceived than that which conveys information and knowledge through the absorbing and powerful medium of motion pictures.

The unqualified and enthusiastic approval of the forum idea by such men as Lee Ochs, president of the Exhibitors' League of America; Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor; D. W. Griffith, master motion picture director of the world, and many other men prominent in public life is an indisputable proof of the gripping force of the screen forum.

Informative material entertainingly presented will be received with acclaim by the millions of people that patronize picture theaters every day. It will bring the screen closer to their lives, increase patronage, improve the quality and tone of photoplays presented and definitely do away with the grave menace of national and state censorships.

Vitagraphers "Out"

The first annual outing of the Greater Vitagraph Company was held on Saturday, September 16. Various contests of skill and strength were arranged between the New York and Brooklyn contingents. The former includes all the employees at No. 1600 Broadway and the latter those at the studio and office in Flatbush. The order of events was as follows:

A cameraman was on the job to record all events from start to finish, and these pictures will later be shown in the home office projection room. Arriving at the studio, an informal light luncheon was served at 12:30. The hosts and hostesses included the leading Vitagraph players. At 1:30 a trip was made through the entire factory and studio, incidental toward seeing a film from the moment it is inserted in the camera as blank begative until it is finally projected on the screen.

Then came the athletic events. In the big swimming tank in the Vitagraph yard took place the swimming races, then at the Brooklyn athletic field a five-inning baseball game, New York vs. Brooklyn, was pulled off.

Triangle Leaders in New York

And now all the interesting rumors in the film industry are centered about Triangle. All the corners of the company are in New York at present—Griffith, Ince and Sennett. Of course they have business of their own to transact in Manhattan, Griffith and Ince to supervise the presentation of "Intolerance" and "Civilization," respectively, and the genius of Keystone to oversee production. Still there is in the air evidence of some changes about to be made in Triangle, particularly in distribution methods.

Theda Bara has completed her seventeenth picture under the William Fox banner. The direction was in charge of J. Gordon Edwards, and the photoplay marks Miss Bara's return to the "vampire" role in which she is pre-eminent.

New Arrow Lady

Marian Swayne, who has just been placed under contract to the Arrow Film Corporation by W. E. Shallenberger, is a bewitching blonde personality whose career on stage and screen has been a continued success. Hard work, ambition, personality, ability, and again hard work have combined to put Miss Swayne at the top of the list. In our opinion, for she is a modest little lady who quickly disclaims the pet phrases of the press agent, it has been mostly hard work.

Miss Marian Swayne, featured in Arrow and Pathe specials.

Although she is but 20 years old she has five big stage successes to her credit. Included in these are the roles of Effie in "The Blindness of Virtue," Cicely in "The Importance of Being Ernest," the Squaw in "The Squaw Man" (on the strength of which performance Lasky offered her the same part for the screen version of this play, but which Miss Swayne declined in order to remain on the stage), as the Grain (the stenographer) in "The Grain of Dust," and as Vivie in "Mrs. Warren's Profession." Before her success in these five important parts Miss Swayne had also played in "The City," "The Greyhound," "The Deep Purple," and "The Awakening of Helena Ritchie." Prior to her appearance as Effie, Miss Swayne played for almost two years in motion pictures, appearing for one year in Blache features, and for another year in Gaumont features. She also played the role of Kitty in James Montgomery Flagg's series, "The Adventures of Kitty Cobb." Immediately prior to joining the Arrow forces, Miss Swayne played the lead in the Thanhouser feature, "The Net." Following this performance she was offered the leading part in a current New York stage production, but under the persuasive powers of Mr. Shallenbeger this idea was relinquished, and Miss Swayne contracted with Arrow for the big features which that company now has under way.

Miss Swayne's first moving picture was a Solax production called "Her Mother's Picture," which was directed by Howell Hansel, this being also his first moving picture production. In her return to the screen Miss Swayne again finds herself under Mr. Hansel's direction, this time with Arrow. In the strange way that life has of repeating its incidents, many of the scenes in Miss Swayne's current Arrow picture were taken at exactly the same location in New London as those used in her first screen play under Mr. Hansel's direction.

The up-to-date list of stars featured in productions of the World Film Company is as follows:

Alice Brady, Mollie King, Marie Dressler, Gail Kane, Carlyle Blackwell, House Peters, Muriel Ostriche, Gerda Holmes, Arthur Ashley, Holbrook Blinn, Frank Beamish, Doris Keyon, Lew Fields, June Elvidge, Madge Evans, Robert Warwick, Frances Nelson, Clara Whipple, Ethel Clayton, Johnny Hines, Alec B. Francis, Edward Kimball.

New Plays for Florence La Badie

Following "The Fear of Poverty," which was released through the Pathe exchanges on September 10, Florence La Badie, the Thanhouser star, will be seen in a novel drama by Philip Lonergan, called "Saint, Devil and Woman."

In this Thanhouser feature, which will be released on September 24, Miss La Badie's emotional powers are taxed quite as much as in "The Fear of Poverty," in which she played a mother and a daughter, of widely different characteristics.

Following "Saint, Devil and Woman," the next Florence La Badie feature to be released through Pathe will be "The Pillory," by Philip Lonergan, and directed by Frederic Sullivan.

Miss La Badie is supported in "The Pillory" by Marie Shotwell, Ethyle Cooke, George Marlo, Nettie Parker Spaulding, Marie Haynes, Yale Benner and James Seeley.

"The Pillory" is a strong tale of a country girl who is reared by a stern aunt whose religion is superorthodox. Miss La Badie's mother has been driven away and finally Florence, innocent of any wrong, suffers the same fate.

A Thanhouser company combined business and duty at Block Island, New York, the other day when the big Hygeia Hotel burned to the ground.

Vincent Serrano, Thomas Curran and Assistant Director Leo Wirth, members of the company that is at Block Island making scenes under the direction of Eugene Moore for "A Modern Monte Cristo," were in the Hygeia grill shortly before midnight when the fire was discovered.

They rushed upstairs, through smoke and flame, just as if they had been making a picture, and awoke the sleeping guests and helped them get out with their clothing and valuables.

Mr. Curran was the last to leave the burning building. When he got out into the open air he found Mr. Moore standing beside Camera Man George Webber, who had his machine ready.

"Fine fire," said Mr. Moore. "We're taking it. Get a girl, take her back into the fire and bring her out. It'll make great stuff."

And Mr. Curran did. Mr. Moore took scenes until Mr. Curran, utterly exhausted, warned him that if he didn't stop the citizens would suspect that he started the fire just to make a picture.

Famous Trip Filmed

Jules Verne's world famed novel, "Around the World in Eighty Days," will soon appear in pictures. Millions will remember the happy hours spent reading the wonderful story by Jules Verne and will recall the actual trip around the world made by Nellie Bly for the Evening World of New York, and now every devotee of the screen will have the opportunity of seeing the modernized version of this immortal novel picturized.

The story will appear in six reels. In rapid succession there are visited London, Suez, Alexandria, Hong Kong, Yokohama, Vancouver, New York, Cherburg and back again to London.

The Herald Film Corporation will release "Around the World in Eighty Days" during the early part of October, thereby enabling the general public to take the same trip that it took Phileas Fogg eighty days to make in eighty minutes.

POPE TO SEE "CIVILIZATION"

Pope Benedict XV Desires to Witness Ince Spectacle With a View to Using It in His Peace Propaganda

The widespread approval which "Civilization," Thomas H. Ince's great spectacle, has created throughout the United States has attracted attention abroad, and it is said that Pope Benedict XV has expressed a desire to see the picture, with a view of invoking its aid in his peace propaganda.

This is not the first instance in which the Roman pontiffs have shown a tendency to extend their patronage to the motion pictures. Pope Leo the 13th, who was a great scholar, wrote some Latin verses about "still" photography, which were highly appreciated by professors of the black art, and two years ago, after careful diplomatic handling, Pope Pius the 10th allowed motion pictures to be made of the Vatican, himself and his august entourage. It is on record that when his late Holiness saw the American made motion pictures he was profuse in his admiration of their artistic qualities.

His successor, Pope Benedict XV, has shown himself just as sympathetic towards the motion picture art as his two distinguished predecessors. It is well known that the present occupant of the papal throne is a great humanitarian as well as a great ecclesiastic, and is endeavoring to stop the bloodshed that is deluging Europe. He is neglecting nothing which would bring about this much desired consummation.

It will be the aim of Mr. Ince to provide every facility for the inspection of "Civilization" by Pope Benedict XV.

Unofficially the spectacle has been indorsed by many religious bodies, Catholic dignitaries in particular being enthusiastic about this film as a contribution towards the dissemination of the best principles of humanity.

First Selig on "K-E-S-E"

"The Country That God Forgot," the Selig Red Seal play which has created so much favorable comment in the trade, will be Wm. N. Selig's first release in Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay. The release date will be Monday, October 2.

Marshall Neilan wrote and directed "The Country That God Forgot" and the leading character roles are undertaken by Tom Santschi, George W. Fawcett, and Mary Charleson. Critics who have been favored by Mr. Selig with a preliminary view of this drama are enthusiastic over the story, the acting, and the numerous deft touches which, in the aggregate, assume prime importance.

"The Crisis" Offices Opened

After a consultation with Wm. N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company, H. A. Sherman, president of Sherman-Elliott, Inc., which incorporation recently purchased half interest in "The Crisis" for the United States and Canada at the cost of a quarter of a million dollars, announces that plans are about perfected for the release of this drama of true American life founded upon Churchill's popular novel.

Mr. Sherman will open offices in both New York City and Chicago in order to properly get in touch with buyers of territorial rights and others. Communications may be addressed to him, care Selig Polyscope Co., 58 East Washington street, Chicago.

Gaumont Production

An average of a reel a day from its studios and laboratories each week is the present Gaumont contribution to Mutual Service. The importance of these issues is in their quality rather than in their quantity, since they comprise the three single-reels released by Mutual, and an episode of the great Gaumont "Fantomas" series. "The Crook Detective" is episode number four in this remarkable three-reel series, the first of this length to be released in America. It will reach the screen September 28 as part of the film released by Gaumont the week of September 24.

The efforts of both exhibitors and societies, schools and clubs to secure entertaining motion pictures, other than photodramas, will be made easier by the weekly publication of a bulletin of Gaumont single-reel releases. The preliminary bulletins, containing a list of subjects in "See America First" and "Reel Life," has already been issued. The Gaumont bulletins are being supplied Mutual branch managers, and through the branches they are distributed to exhibitors and others interested in films of this nature.

Would You Do It?

Few persons realize that the dangers which moving picture actors often go through are real dangers, and not mere faked deeds made for the camera, where the actor in question is not a far-famed "daredevil."

In the case of Gladys Coburn, the new William Fox star, this is especially true.

Miss Coburn had to fall from a swiftly moving yacht for one scene in a new William Fox photoplay. She did. But the worst part of it is that Miss Coburn is no Neptune's daughter. In fact, she cannot swim. Yet she did not hesitate about the plunge, but it is betraying no confidence to say that she was genuinely glad when Fritz Leiber "saved" her.

Douglas Fairbanks in Chicago

For an hour or so on September 18 the Windy City was breezier than ever—while Douglas Fairbanks stopped off between trains. The vigorous and good-natured Triangle comedian had slipped away from New York unbeknownst to even the press agent and so his trip to "somewhere in Wyoming" was unheralded. Fairbanks took a "tenderfoot" along with him for the amusement the latter would afford while the pair are roughing it.

One decided opinion that Fairbanks dropped off in Chicago was that in general directors are far from artists. Many of them, he declares, are sadly in need of a generous coating of culture.

Release Date for "Prudence"

"Prudence, the Pirate," starring Gladys Hulette, will be the second Thanhouser feature released through the Pathe exchanges in October. October 22 is the date upon which "Prudence" will have her first public showing. Florence La Badie in "The Pillory" is to be Thanhouser's first October release.

The same qualities that made "The Shine Girl" one of Thanhouser's greatest successes is responsible for the punch in "Prudence, the Pirate."

"The Storm"

Lasky-Paramount Drama Is of a High Order of Quality. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

A GOOD sound drama, capitally produced and finely enacted. All this may be freely said of "The Storm," a play by Beatrice C. De Mille. Miss De Mille's scenario compels admiration, for it presents situations which are tinctured with a bit of originality, the characters are human and the general effectiveness of the construction is, indeed, something over which to grow enthusiastic.

The central character is a young girl who lives in a cottage near a secluded lake with her studious and absent-minded father, an ex-college professor. At the beginning of the play a theological student who is camping at the lake receives a letter from the bishop advising him of his nearness to an old friend who has retired from active work and is living at the lake. The daughter is being brought up a pagan and the bishop hopes Avery will seek her out and open her eyes to the beauties of religion.

Avery and Natalie meet often, the topic of their conversation being religion. But one of these meetings reaches a disastrous conclusion. For both, while stranded on a small island during a storm, succumb to an impulse having its birth in their strong attraction for each other. Before they leave the island Avery proposes marriage but it is evident that he does not love Natalie and she refuses to accept his viewpoint, claiming she would feel herself guilty of a continuance of the wrong were she to marry him when there is no love.

The following year Avery's close friend, a millionaire, goes to the lake for a few days' outing. But the days stretch into weeks because Fielding has developed a deep affection for Natalie. He asks her to marry him and though she hesitates long, the persistence of Fielding and love itself persuade her to accept. News of this forthcoming marriage brings Avery to the lake. Fielding proposes that the marriage take place the following day and that Avery perform the ceremony. In a scene with Natalie that night Avery is not only unsuccessful in trying to force Natalie to draw back but he is driven by her to agree to perform the marriage service. At the ceremony, however, Natalie breaks under the strain and she relates the circumstances of her one transgression. Naturally, Fielding is stunned but his recovery is quick and he commands Avery to proceed with the service.

The story loses much in being printed as it is above, for it is not possible to add the touches contributed by a director who makes evident his marked ability in the visualization of every scene and players of such experience and talents as Blanche Sweet, Theodore Roberts, Thomas Meighan and Richard Sterling. Miss Sweet's Natalie is the best thing we have seen her do in a long while. As for Mr. Roberts, one can only fall back on superlatives in an endeavor to describe his delightful and life-giving characterization. Thomas Meighan is at his own admirable best as Robert Fielding and Richard Sterling is most effective as Avery.

"The Storm" is an excellent drama. Of this there can be no doubt and its real worth will be proved when its public is given the opportunity to see the picture.

"Into the Northland"

Three-Reel Selig Drama Released September 18. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE adventure element and the fact that the story is laid in the always interesting northland give an appeal to this offering, written by D. W. Higgins and directed by William Robert Daly. The play is unpretentious but holds the interest. The work of Fritzi Brunette in the leading role is the play's best feature. As usual, Miss Brunette has a number of tearful scenes to enact, but her best moments are those when she appears as a mischievous boy, which causes one to wonder why her fortune (in picture plays) does not lead her more often into sunshiny paths, where "sob stuff" is less prevalent.

Leo Pierson has the leading man's role. Lillian Hayward does very clever work in a character part, as Moll McGuire. Other character roles are taken by Harry Lonsdale and James Bradbury.

The Story: George Collins (Leo Pierson), after becoming involved in a quarrel in a gambling den, sets out for the gold fields of the north, leaving his wife, Harriet, (Fritzi Brunette) with his mother. Moll McGuire, the owner of the gambling den, which is raided as a result of the quarrel, also decides to seek new fields, and she goes into the north, encountering Collins on the ship.

While Collins in seeking his fortune, his wife is most unhappy at home and finally, disguised as a boy, she becomes a stowaway on a ship and follows him northward. She is unable to locate him, and therefore continues to pose as a lad, earning her way as an errand boy. Then she becomes ill, and is cared for by Moll, who learns that the supposed boy is Collin's wife.

In the meantime, Collins has located a gold mine and returns to the little town. He is met by Moll, who takes him to her cabin where he finds his wife and their newly born son.

"The Way of Patience"

Three-Act Essanay Drama Released September 23. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS picture is very pleasing, both from the standpoint of story and of production. The Quaker characters and settings give distinction to the play, which is effectively presented. It is entertaining and wholesome and will be greatly enjoyed by the average audience.

away from home to adventures in the city. Ernest Maupain as her father is very good as a stern old Quaker. Darwin Karr is an entirely satisfactory hero, while Hugh Thompson as an artist plays the villain well.

The settings are interesting, the photography excellent.

The Story: Patience Worth, a Quaker girl, while on an errand to the village store purchases a necklace of beads, to the genuine horror of several women of the Quaker community who are present. When she arrives home, her father reproves her severely, and, since the women have reported her action, she is also reprimanded in meeting and as a result of her disgrace, she rebels and goes to the city.

An accidental meeting with an artist's model results in an appointment to pose for Amos Thayer, an artist. Patience soon substitutes modern styles for her Quaker garb, and becomes one of a little bohemian set. Both Thayer and Emerson Leonard, the latter an author, fall in love with the girl. She believes that she loves the artist, but, alarmed by his unconventional ideas of love, she marries the other man. Then she runs away from him and returns to her father. But when Leonard follows her to her home, she realizes that she loved the man she married and is glad to go back to the city with him.

"Manhattan Madness"

Triangle-Fine Arts Comedy, with Douglas Fairbanks. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

"MANHATTAN MADNESS" furnishes an hour of the most sprightly and rollicking entertainment that an amusement seeker has a right to expect. This melodramatic farce presents Douglas Fairbanks in the fullnes of his mirth-provoking talents and it captures the spectator's risible affections in the beginning only to hold them in a firm grip until the audience has walked out of the theater and on along the streets. "Manhattan Madness" did that very thing to the several groups of people we trailed out of the Rialto last Monday afternoon. Remarks very flattering to Fairbanks and "Manhattan Madness" generally floated back to us, and we were entirely in sympathy with them.

Fairbanks sprang into favor with the picturegoers in his first film appearance, which is nothing to wonder at. If there are any who have not seen his pictures and are a bit skeptical about this let them visit the theater showing "Manhattan Madness." Those who do not see the picture will have cause, without being aware of the fact, to regret; for most certainly they are missing something.

Directed by Allan Dwan, the play is screen farce of a singularly diverting sort. Whatever praise the play deserves, which is a whole lot, must be given to Mr. Dwan, for without the exceedingly fine direction the story would amount to little or nothing at all. The subtitles are written in a humorous and witty vein and several of them scored successes on their own account with the audience at the Rialto.

"Manhattan Madness" records the doings of a young Westerner who comes to New York on business and quite astonishes his friends by being thoroughly bored with everything they have to show him. Steve wants a thrill, so his college chum stages one for him. It is all real to Steve until he is told how it all came about. By that time he is in a position to give the New Yorkers a sample of the sort of thing he has been calling a "thrill." There is a girl, a very pretty and attractive one, and there are fights of the zippy kind Fairbanks always supplies.

The action of the piece is brisk. Something is going on all the time and there are many big laughs contained in the five reels. Jewel Carmen is the girl who makes Steve admit in the end that it makes little difference where you are, the thing that counts is not a geographical question but a question of finding the right girl. Others in the cast are George Beranger, Ruth Darling, Macey Harlan, W. P. Richmond and Eugene Ormonde. "Manhattan Madness" is the best Douglas Fairbanks picture we have seen. It is a real, honest-to-goodness treat.

"Saint, Devil and Woman"

A Five-Part Pathe Gold Rooster Play Produced by Thanhouser. Reviewed by George W. Graves

THIS picture, featuring the irresistible Florence LaBadie in a part which presents her with opportunities a-plenty to display her dramatic power, fulfils all requirements as regards stirring action and realistic, artistic production. The picture has been exceptionally well directed. The author, Philip Lonergan, bases the good and evil forces of his story on hypnotic control, entering a field which has become so popular of late. Although it is true some things rather conjectural occur in the story, they do not draw enough on the spectator's credulity to make him lose interest in the fortunes of the characters concerned, and the story's interest is well sustained. Often in pictures of this kind, the appeal is lost because of a tendency to be too radical.

After her uncle's death, Florence Stanton is placed under the care of the executor of the estate, and this individual, Alvarez, loses no time in getting control of the girl's mind to such an extent as to cause her to do things which will bring him prosperity—depriving her of her individuality and finally transforming the "Saint" into a "Devil." Thus it is that Florence is led to cut the wages of her already starving factory workers and to do things of like nature.

But a young psychologist and doctor finally becomes interested in the girl, and in investigating the reasons of her extreme brutality, discerns the cause—Alvarez. Then ensues the "battle of wills," it seeming at times as though Alverez's subtlty would get the best of the doctor. But after a series of stormy incidents the latter gains the ascendency, the devil nature in Florence is conquered forever and Alvarez commits suicide.

Hector Dion makes a most diabolical character out of his Alvarez, while Wayne Arey is effective as the hero. Other names on the cast are Claus Bogel and Ethyle Cooke.

"The Pillory"

A Five-Part Pathe Gold Rooster Play Produced by Thanhouser. Reviewed by George W. Graves

FLORENCE LABADIE was never more charming and appealing than in this story which presents in a startling manner some of the cruel usages of society which are based on the erroneous mortal law of the ages. The story, written by Philip Lonergan, has a distinct tone of originality, and it contains some forceful dramatic situations which have been "put on" the screen by a director who aims for clear effect. Being purely sociological in nature the story presents numerous arguments which need not be mentioned here, but which the spectator will find himself reflecting over for some time after the last scene has died out. It touches on some deep things with a knowing hand.

In a very well chosen cast, all the members of which give evidence of no little experience, are James Seeley, George Marlo, Ethyle Cooke, Yale Benner and Marie Shotwell. Mere physical thrills or stunts have no part in this picture; they are not needed. Tastefully conceived and well photographed settings, however, do have their part, as they do in every picture whose producer realizes the value of maintaining an unmarred illusion.

If for no other reason, the very presence of Florence LaBadie should usher this picture into the land of prosperity, but the exhibitor who wants a good story as well as a good star cannot stray far from the path of virtue by booking this picture.

At the outset of the story we are introduced to a beauiful young girl who is living with her straight-laced old aunt. The latter is determined that the girl shall pay the penalty for the sin of her mother, who has gone astray, and makes life miserable for Florence. Although the spinster knows her niece's mother lives, she tells the girl that she has no mother.

When the unmercifully "righteous" aunt dies, Florence is sent out into the cold world by the stern housekeeper. She comes to the city and blindly walks into trouble from which she is extricated by the wife of a prominent judge, who is an indefatigable social worker. To her astonishment, this good woman discovers that Florence is her child, the child whom she was told had died at birth. She immediately adopts her, although her husband is unaware of Florence's real selfhood.

When Florence later becomes engaged and writes of this to her old nurse, her aunt's hypocrit housekeeper, the storm is precipitated. Being fully persuaded that it is the "Lord's will" that the judge's wife be brought down to the dust, she comes to the city and denounces the unfortunate woman at a crowded reception before all her friends. Whereupon the friends depart from the accused wife and her husband casts her off. So Florence and her mother live apart by themselves benefiting the community by their kind deeds. When the stolid judge is almost prepared to forgive his wife, she dies, and the next best thing he can do is to take back Florence. The judge at last realizes the enormity of hypocrisy, the folly of relentless human codes, and the import of the words, "Let him that is without sin among you first cast a stone."

"Where Love Leads"

William Fox Drama in Five Reels Released September 18. Reviewed by George W. Graves

ORMI HAWLEY, one of the pioneers of the screen, is the star of this film. Her performance in this picture shows that she is still a big attraction. The story, in whose interpretation she has been given a part, however, will hardly find favor with a discriminating audience. Both production and direction are inadequate. The picture is not up, in any respect but acting, to the uniformly good quality of Fox productions.

Not being allowed her own choice in love, Marion Barstow, daughter of a well-to-do American, is married to an English "title." She is blessed with two children, who, when they grow to be about the age of eighteen, she finally realizes, must be separated from the influence of their father who has become a riotous liver. Marion arranges to send the children to the home of the grandfather in America. The two girls fall into the hands of white slavers, and the net of captivity is just about to be drawn tight when Marion's old lover, Richard Warren, delivers them, and with the help of the police completely routs the gang. The children are safely given into their grandparents' hands. Later, Marion secures a divorce from her husband, turns her back on the long years of misery, and comes to America, to enter upon a bright future at the side of Richard Warren.

Rockcliffe Fellowes is consistently good in the part of Richard Warren, Charles Craig is an ideal Englishman and Pauline Curley and Sleen Hume, the two daughters, are very full of life and charm. Dorothy Rogers, as the procuress, is excellent.

"The Return of 'Draw' Egan"

A Five-Part Triangle-Ince Drama Featuring William S. Hart. Reviewed by George W. Graves

WILLIAM S. HART, whose Western screen characters, embodying such a volume of strength through his Indian-like composure, and yet surprising alertness, has seldom been seen in a picture which has a more direct appeal than "The Return of 'Draw' Egan." The strength of the story, by C. Gardner Sullivan, is in its simplicity and its intimate human, heart-effecting situations.

The regenerative influence which a gentle, pure-minded girl has upon the conduct of a bandit, moulding him into a defender of the law instead of a violator of it, is the psychological force of the story. The situation which arises, when after months of service as the most efficient and respected sheriff in the wild community, "Draw" Egan's true identity—a long-hunted bandit—is revealed by a former henchman, provides the dramatic force which attacks the vulnerable spot in our emotional make-up.

Egan's death seems inevitable. But, at last coming to the decision that his presence is indispensable to the enforcing of law in the region, and also the cognizance of his complete reformation, the good citizens decide he is better alive than dead, and act accordingly. The girl, who has been hard-hit by the affair, does not forgive him until he later voluntarily decides to leave the town for her sake. Then she runs after him and enters her protest against his departure. He answers, in the subtitle's language, "Well, in that case, I reckon it would take dynamite to move me."

Mr. Hart's thorough individuality, the story's force, the magnificent production, all combine to make this a picture worth while—one whose appeal is practically universal. Louise Glaum, Margery Wilson, Robert McKim, and J. P. Lockney are members of the highly efficient cast.

"Diane of the Follies"

Lillian Gish in Fine Arts-Triangle Comedy. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

LILLIAN GISH essays a role quite different from anything she has previously attempted in "Diane of The Follies," and as a very temperamental show-girl she does remarkably well. There is nothing in the way of adverse criticism prompted by Miss Gish's performance, but after sitting through the full five reels of "Diane of The Follies" one, even if one be most charitable, cannot down the feeling that the producers should have found another story about a show-girl if they were anxious to have Miss Gish play such a part.

Lillian Gish in a "different" role.

Diane has plenty of spirit and breeziness but none of the other characters has, nor does this story by Granville Warwick ever threaten to get anywhere in particular. Diane is a show-girl and she marries an amateur writer and is not happy with him and goes back to the "Follies." That rather brief sentence would do as an outline of the play.

The only semblance of plot comes after Diane leaves her husband and child. The latter becomes the victim of some dramatic illness or other and dies before Diane receives word of the trouble. And that was to be expected from the moment Diane gazed longingly upon the child before taking her departure from Christy. The ending of the play finds Diane again back on the stage and her husband, whom she wishes every happiness and success, continues to live as he did before meeting her.

"Diane of The Follies" presents some quietly amusing situations and Miss Gish by sheer force of her own acting is a bit interesting upon occasions, but these events are too far between. The production is good in all particulars save one, and that one is the show given to the theater-going public of Stamford. If Stamford could applaud a show like that, why there is hope for "Diane of The Follies," in Stamford at least.

This comedy from the Fine Arts studio was produced by W. Christy Cabanne. Sam De Grasse as Phillips Christy does nothing at all. Others in the cast are Lillian Langdon, Howard Gaye, Wilbur Higby and Wilhelmina Siegmann.

"Friday the Thirteenth"

Robert Warwick in Wall Street Story by World Film. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

ROBERT WARWICK, a realistic atmosphere to the action laid in the offices in Wall Street and the Stock Exchange and a spirited ending are the high-lights of "Friday The Thirteenth." For the rest the picture is a love romance of a conventional sort.

The story is an adaptation from the book by Thomas W. Lawson, though even to one who has not read Mr. Lawson's attack upon certain of his erstwhile competitors in the Street it is apparent that little if anything of the original story remains in his screen play. Most every time a scenario writer breaks into print he has something to say about the amount of change under which his story goes, and so Mr. Lawson will feel about "Friday The Thirteenth." For Wall Street methods are given but slight attention and when they are brought to view they have little about them that differs from incidents which have been treated in pictures previously.

If one expects to see any exposition of financial jugglery in "Friday The Thirteenth" one is bound to be disappointed. There is no such thing present. Instead we are presented with a romance of rather pleasing properties. The picture is interesting despite its lack of plausibility in certain moments and the ending is remarkable for its quick action and its profusion of complications.

Mr. Warwick plays with his usual finish and ease the role of Robert Brownley. Brownley's father has ruined financially a Southerner named Sands. The latter's daughter comes to New York to earn her living and accepts a position as secretary in Brownley's office under the name of Lee. These two are soon in love with each other and Beulah hesitates when the opportunity to ruin Brownley comes, but the urgings of her father prevail. However, a sudden change in conditions make Brownley a winner instead of a loser. Then before there is a reconciliation, a number of complications of a melodramatic nature arise.

Emil Chautard directed the production of the play. The scenes in the Exchange, as intimated above, are perhaps the most realistic and convincing the screen has ever held. Gerda Holmes is pretty and also effective as Beulah, while the supporting cast, which includes Clarence Harvey, Charles Brandt, Montagu Love and Lenore Harris, is uniformly good. "Friday The Thirteenth" has appealing moments. It is up to the standard of good World Film offerings.

"The Scarlet Runner"

Series Featuring Earle Williams Released by V-L-S-E. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

CHRISTOPHER RACE and his automobile, "Scarlet Runner," have become celebrated throughout London and in the fifth, sixth and seventh episodes of this Vitagraph series the name Race immediately suggests itself to those who have difficulties to solve. And like most people who have attained a brilliant reputation in a certain field Christopher is credited with accomplishments he had no hand in. This is of course one of fame's rewards.

In "The Jacobean House" Race is called in to do detective work by a young woman who cannot account for the mysterious disappearance of many valuable trinkets belonging to guests at the hotel. He consents to look into the matter and in an effort to solve the problem goes to the Jacobean House as a guest. The day and night he spends there are the same as many others which have passed in that hotel, for even he is robbed of his cuff-links and studs while at the dinner table. But Race discovers the thieves. They have used a mysterious drug from India. The effect of the drug is to render senseless for only a moment or two all those assembled in the room where this gas is released. They awake soon after and are none the wiser for their experience.

The sixth episode tells of a young man who suddenly disappears. His motor is found submerged near the shore but there is no sign of John Brown anywhere along the beach. Race is secured by a newspaper to find the young millionaire and report the chase. He gets so close to Brown that that young man decides to throw himself upon the mercy of the celebrated motorist and detective. He visits Race and tells how he attempted a fake death to bring his sweetheart, who broke off her engagement with him for some slight reason, to terms. This confession is satisfactory to Race, so he promises to keep the affair quiet and sends the young couple away happy.

The seventh release far surpasses its two immediate predecessors in interest. There is more action; fortunately, for in the fifth and sixth episodes there is a scarcity of it, in "The Red Whiskered Man," which deals with a banker's attempt to have a precious jewel carried from Amsterdam to London. Race is retained to drive young Van Courtland and his fiancee in Scarlet Runner. A famous crook impersonates the man who is to carry one of the packages (there being three, two empty and the third containing the jewel). The crook secures all three packages, but not the jewel. For Race has taken care of that. He elaborated on the original plan and had a fourth package done up. The fourth one contains the jewel and he keeps it in his possession with little difficulty.

"The Country that God Forgot"

Selig Red Seal Play in Five Reels. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THERE have been many western dramas produced by this and other companies, but "The Country That God Forgot" ranks among the best in that the human appeal in it dominates over any sensational effects or cheap "thrills." Without the aid of beautiful settings, with photography which is seldom even of average fineness, with a simple story whose plot has little complications, a play is presented which in its dramatic value, its sincerity and truthfulness, merits the term excellent.

To the director-author, Marshall Neilan, much of the credit for the play should be given. His presentation is very skillful in its effective simplicity. The continuity is unbroken, and the action, without being hurried, progresses well. There are no draggy intervals. The selection of incidents and of scenes gives the right emphasis to the play, and brings out strongly the producer's idea of the utter loneliness of "the country that God forgot," and the dreary life of the heroine, unrelieved even by the rough fun and the ambitious plans which fill the lives of the men. In its depiction of the tragedy of the pioneer woman, the play is very realistic.

The acting of the leading characters is fine, particularly that of Thomas Santschi, who as Steve Brant, has an especially fitting role, and George Fawcett, who as Cal, the partner, again proves his ability as a character actor. Mary Charleson as Helen Brant, the only important woman character, is very satisfactory. The acting and the arrangement of the story center the sympathies strongly about the leading players. We are equally sorry for

The temperance member of the company.

Steve, the miner, and for the wife who deserts him. And it is this definite appeal to the sympathies which will make the play go well in any audience. The part of Craig Wells, the villain, is played with good taste by Charles Gerrard. But his part in the tragedy is less than the part played by circumstances over which the characters had no control. There is a certain inevitableness about Helen's infatuation for the stranger and her decision to go away with him. It is so inevitable that one cannot blame her, but this does not lessen our sympathy for Steve. And the magnanimity of the deserted partners also rings true. Helen's change of heart may seem a bit sudden, but under the circumstances it was probable, and it marks the beginning of the dramatic close of the story.

There are many bits of "business" and human incidents introduced into the picture that might be mentioned, but the important thing is that the picture contains a real appeal, presented in a fashion which is likely to "get it across" well.

The Story: Steve Brant (Thomas Santschi) and his partner, Cal Hearn (George Fawcett), have won a fortune through years of mining, and intend to use the bulk of it in giving to Steve's wife, Helen, the pleasures of life, of which she has been deprived. Helen is the daughter of a former partner of Steve and Cal, and had married Steve when her father's death left her unprovided for. Helen's life is most dreary and, not knowing of the surprise in store for her, she sees no way of changing it. When a stranger enters the mining community and his regard flatters her, she falls in love with him and agrees to go with him to the city life she has dreamed of.

Steve learns of the affair and of Helen's love for the stranger, and not only allows them to escape, but places his fortune in gold in a package for Helen. When, on their ride to the station, Helen discovers this, she insists on turning back, but Wells, who has stolen the payroll, does not dare, and the two quarrel. In a struggle for the gun, Helen is shot and Wells deserts her. She is found and taken home by Steve, who follows them when he learns that Wells is a thief. Wells is captured by the vigilance committee and is hung. Helen and her husband are reconciled.

"Gloria's Romance"

Chapter Twenty of the George Kleine Serial. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

BILLIE BURKE'S pink finger daintily points to the words, "The End," printed on the last white page of a big book, Billie turns to the audience, smiles her sweetest and our eyes hear her say, "Good by." Thus endeth the Kleine serial's final chapter, entitled, of course, "Love's Reward."

The most interesting portion of this completing paragraph of Gloria's story is the children's lawn fete which Gloria gives for the benefit of the Red Cross. As we have said before, one touch of youngster makes the whole world grin, and the kiddies that cluster round Gloria are charming in spite of their faultless attire. They frolic after the Pied Piper and his entrancing strains and, as planned by Gloria, are led right up to a snowy table full of luscious things to eat. This incident, as well as the classic dance by the fountain, appeals to the feminine members of the audience.

Romeo to Billie's Juliet in the playlet given at the fete. He wins smiles in his practicing for the part under the coaching of David and audible chuckles are heard when he forgets to let go of "Juliet's hands in the love scene. "Look, the audience (at the fete) is laughing at us," says Gloria-Juliet-Burke. "Let them laugh," the bold lover returns. "I mean everything I say." And later on the lawn he proves it, when the final declarations are made and the inevitable embrace is coyly hidden by Gloria's lacy parasol.

Considerable yardage is taken up just before the close of the chapter by imaginary scenes of Gloria as a red cross nurse and Dr. Royce on the job as first assistant to her dainty ministrations. The romantic thread of the story which has to do with Judge Freeman's daughter, Lois, and her husband, David, is tied into a closing knot when they are seen happily arm in arm, and the judge smiles when he realizes that David has never discovered Lois' affair with Freneau which threatened to sink the matrimonial ship.

excellent actor whose accomplishments have won him wide recognition on the European stage. Mr. Christie was inspired to write a story turning about the character he portrays in "Blind Justice" by the Jean Valjean of Hugo's "Les Miserables."

The scenario Mr. Christie has written is remarkable for its fine construction and his production in its wonderful detail and finish is equally as fine an exhibition of technique, while the characterization Mr. Christie contributes is really a superb and telling effort. The picture creates a very pronounced order of suspense in the early scenes and this element is found consistently throughout the play. Forceful situations are plentiful and they succeed one another in a rapid succession that makes doubly effective some good bits of comedy.

As a matter of fact the director hammers a bit too hard at suspense in the situations he has so carefully evolved. The climax is an instance of this. This moment is drawn out to the last point and though its grip does not exhaust the spectator, who in nine cases out of ten will be found with eyes riveted to the screen, it does wear and pall on one a trifle. The most remarkable part of this all is the absence of a single false note in the many details which contribute to the power of the dramatic moments.

The story of "Blind Justice" becomes a tragic depiction of a victim of circumstances and the long arm of the law. This is so mostly because of the leading actor's performance as "Strong John," who, falsely accused of murder, is sent to prison. He escapes and breaks into the orphanage where his infant son is being cared for and seizes the child. Again he is captured and sent back to prison. Fifteen years later John is released. He is now a man broken in body and spirit. He has his opportunity for revenge upon the woman he holds responsible for his second arrest and in a mentally unbalanced state he tries to kill her. John is shot and mortally wounded. He lives just long enough to learn that his son is being well taken care of by the woman he desired to kill.

The plot is a strong one and it has been worked out with great care. The players who support Mr. Christie are all splendid actors. As usual, there is one thing which does not come up to the mark. In this case it is inserts. Whoever titled this picture was too anxious to explain perfectly apparent things and we find subtitles without number which do nothing more than break into a strong scene. A few are very effective both as to wording and placement but with so many chances an occasional score is not to be held as remarkable. The lighting and photography are praiseworthy. "Blind Justice" is a picture with a broad and powerful appeal. It is a genuinely fine screen drama.

"The Daughter of MacGregor"

Paramount Presents Scotch Comedy by Famous Players. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

A CINDERELLA child is the same the world over, as the motion picture fan must well know. "The Daughter of MacGregor" presents us with a Scotch one, but just the same she has a stubborn, tyrannical father, whose name is Donald and who marries a second time, unhappily for Jean. One gazes at Jean to find her a pretty lass, but there is that wholesomeness about her which causes one to look still deeper and ere long the gazer finds himself "considering the lilies of the field." But in spite of this the innocent girl is accused by the new mother of sinful conduct with a handsome English chap.

This brings things to such a pass that there is nothing for Jean to do but leave home. She makes her way to a lumber camp in the United States, where the poor girl is not very warmly received by her uncle, the boss of the camp. There have been robberies in the camp and because of their continuance MacPherson's job is threatened. Needless to say, Jean discovers the crooks and endears herself to the uncle. The rest is the story of marriage to the English chap who visits the camp in the interests of his father, also the scenario. There is a return home and forgiveness by the repenting father and all is happiness.

Valentine Grant, whose original script this scenario is based on, plays Jean with effective sincerity and intelligence. Miss Grant's is a faithful and highly commendable characterization. As may be gleaned from the outline above, the plot is of minor importance. The main issue is the production of the piece. This portion of the offering is in every regard splendid. Sidney Olcott supplies a number of quaint and unassuming little scenes for the opening of the story, and they go a long way toward carrying "The Daughter of MacGregor" to the successful conclusion it reaches.

Those who have seen the Famous Players production of "Butterfly" and know that it was made somewhere in New Jersey, need not be told that "The Daughter of MacGregor" is to all practical intents and purposes as rich in true and charming atmosphere as though the company traveled to Scotland to produce the story. It is in the charm and beauty of the settings, as well as the deft touches of comedy Mr. Olcott may be counted on to affect, that "The Daughter of MacGregor" realizes its ambition, which is that of filling the eye with beauty and appealing to the simple emotions in a simple way.

The photography is worthy of special mention. A good cast supports Miss Grant. Arda La Croix, Sidney Mason, Helen Ludreth and Edward Davis are included in this cast. Jean's faithful dog will make a hit with the spectators. Lady is now quite well known to patrons of the screen. "The Daughter of MacGregor" is a decidedly pleasant offering.

"The Intrigue"

Pallas-Paramount Offering Featuring Lenore Ulrich. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

"THE INTRIGUE" deals with the efforts of a certain foreign power's representative to secure the plans for a deadly weapon of war invented by an American. Also the story concerns itself with a romance between the inventor and a countess who comes here to defeat the ends of the other foreign representative. The best thing about this unconvincing melodramatic adventure story by Julia Crawford Ivers is the opportunities it furnishes Lenore Ulrich.

Lenore Ulrich in "The Intrigue."

Miss Ulrich is given any number of situations and scenes in which to appear advantageously as an emotional actress. She accepts these at their true value and acquits herself remarkably well. The star receives her best support from the handsome staging effects usually found in a Pallas offering. Frank Lloyd directed this production.

"The Intrigue" tells of an American's visit to Europe in the hope of selling his invention, a wireless x-ray which is capable of killing men at a great distance. He demonstrates the terrible machine and the government he is negotiating with agrees to buy it. But first he must return to America as there is some improvement to be made in the contrivance. The government thinks it best to send a man to watch and keep track of Longstreet.

The secret service agents of a neighboring state learn all about this so the Countes Sonia Varnli is to follow Baron Rogniat and await her opportunity to destroy both the machine and the plans. Rogniat is aware of this, but the countess outwits him and we find her living in his home in this country as a maid. The baron has a sinister plot. He would kill the inventor after buying the plans, so his country would be the only holder of the secret of the wireless x-ray. The countess foils his scheme and because he loves her the American destroys the instrument of murder.

Howard Davies is the baron, Cecil Van Auker, the American, and Florence Vidor the maid to Sonia. The picture is interesting, but its failure to show a single life-like character or incident forces one to stop at that curt assertion in describing it.

"The Manager of the B. and A."

Signal Five-Reel Feature with Helen Holmes. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THERE are many thrills in this picture. It will be exceedingly well received in picture houses where railroad dramas are liked. Of its type, it is one of the best. There is not a dull moment in the production. The "thrills" are very real and very well presented. Director McGowan has succeeded excellently in his efforts. The acting of the players is good throughout.

A remarkable phase of the picture is that while Helen Holmes is the star, she appears in very few scenes. When the story did not logically require the presence of the heroine, the director was wise enough not to go out of his way to include her. And while Miss Holmes is a charming addition to any picture, one cannot but admire her for letting the story itself take the first place, rather than the star. If all stars and all directors were as wise as Miss Holmes and Mr. McGowan show themselves in this feature, there would be fewer criticisms of the so-called "star system."

The story is especially timely, dealing as it does with a trainmen's strike. It is a play which can be heavily advertised as a play of "thrill following thrill," without disappointing the most wearied fan. Fires, railroad wrecks, mob scenes, dangers of all kinds, are included. And with them are very real and very appealing characters. The story holds the interest at all times, and it is logically built up.

The Story: Leo Maloney is appointed manager of a division of the "B. and A." railroad. The division is not paying expenses and the new manager must reform it, or the machine shops will be closed. Since the men have been working under a slack manager, they rebel against the more stringent rules of the new man. A political faction is working against him, and its members influence the men to such an extent that they refuse to cooperate with the manager.

The manager gives a position in the shops to his father, who is an ex-convict, a role excellently played by Paul Hurst. This angers the men, who finally strike. There is a battle between the strikers and the new men. In the midst of it, the explosion of an engine sets the shops afire and endangers the town. The water supply has been cut off, but after a number of spectacular events, aid is brought from a neighboring town and the fire checked. The ex-convict proves himself the hero of the occasion but loses his life. The men renew their loyalty to the manager of the B. and A.

"Beatrice Fairfax"

Seventh in International Series Entitled "A Name for a Baby." Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

JIMMY BARTON, who, as seen in the magnetic person of Harry Fox, is one of the brightest features of the "Beatrice Fairfax" series, gives up a story such as any reporter might long to get hold of in order to bring happiness to an outraged young mother and an unacknowledged baby. This happens in "A Name for a Baby," the seventh release of the series. It is an active release and one of undoubted interest to those who have found previous episodes to their tastes and liking.

As usual, coincidence proves the grand old standby in bringing the rescuers to the scene where they are most needed. "A Name for a Baby" shows Jimmy Barton and Beatrice Fairfax in their best light as friends to the needy. Beatrice receives a request for a suitable name for her baby from a distracted young woman who has been shamefully treated by a prominent lawyer. The lawyer is soon to marry a society girl who knows nothing of his affair with Madge.

When Barton sees the letter he connects it with a marriage announcement carried in the morning paper and he pays a visit to Conley. Conley's actions convince him that he is the man referred to in the letter to Beatrice. The lawyer's suspicions are aroused. He then offers a dissolute man who lives in Madge's home town a large sum if he will force the poor girl to marry him. The worthless one kidnaps the baby and he is about to exact a promise of marriage from Madge when Jimmy and Beatrice appear upon the scene. The next scene shows the marriage of Lawyer Conley. Immediately after the service Conley lifts the veil from his bride's face only to find that he has entered into a marriage contract with Madge. Of course, he is furious, but Jimmy and Beatrice calm him.

The cast in this episode includes Betty Howe, Mary Cranston and Allen Murnane, and the featured players Grace Darling and Harry Fox.

"Twin Fates"

Essanay Drama in Three Acts Released September 30. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

A STORY with interesting complications which hold the interest throughout the three reels forms the theme of this photoplay. Sydney Ainsworth has the leading role and appears in the first scene as a ragged tramp, rather a departure for this portrayer of suave villains. The opening scenes lead one to expect a temperance play, but the story soon takes precedent over the lesson. However, if he judges this feature of the story will please his patrons, an exhibitor is justified in calling attention to the temperance sermon indirectly given.

The plot, while not startlingly original, is cleverly presented and will go well in the average house. It has action and suspense and characters which win sympathy. The acting is good, and also the photography.

The Story: Walter Keane (Edmund F. Cobb), a youth who yields to his craving for strong drink. His father gives him a chance to redeem himself when he arranges a position for him with a business friend in another city. By the end of a year, he must prove that he has made good.

Learning the conditions under which he is taking the position, the boy rebels and leaves the train at a small town. There he meets a tramp, "Gentleman Jack" (Sydney Ainsworth), who, on hearing the story, advises the boy to take the chance, stating that he himself would like another chance to make good. Walter, discouraged, shoots himself, after writing an explanatory note signed "Gentleman Jack" and another note to the tramp asking him to take the letter of introduction and make good in his stead. The tramp decides to do this, goes to the city and takes the position in the name of the younger man.

At the end of the year the ex-tramp has made good. Also he has met and regained the love of his former sweetheart, Doris (Marguerite Clayton), to whom he has told the story of his deception. At the appointed time, a friend of the boy's father arrives in the city to arrange for Walter's return home. Then the substitution is discovered, and the former tramp is accused of the murder of Walter. But through detective work on the part of Doris he is saved. The girl discovers that a friend's chauffeur calls himself "Gentleman Jack" and cannot recall events of a year previous. The chauffeur proves to be Walter Keane, who had been only injured by the bullet wound, and who recovers his memory at the sight of Jack. The story ends with the reconciliation of Walter and his father and the marriage of Doris and Jack.

ABOUT BUDDING PLAYS, AND NEWS OF THE TRADE

Three Leading Men in One Metro Play

May Allison and Harold Lockwood Prove Themselves Heroes in Putting Out a Forest Fire, and Incidentally Save Two Thousand Feet of Film

ONE leading lady and one leading man is the usual quota of stars in a production but in the Metro feature "The Gates of Eden," Viola Dana, the star, is supported by three leading men, Edward Earle, Bob Walker and Augustus Phillips. Shakerism is the central theme of this five-reel feature and the religious ceremonies of the Shakers in which they "shake" their sins away add to the interest of the unusual production.

Fred J. Balshofer, president and general manager of the Yorke and Quality Pictures Corporation releasing on the Metro program, believes that one of the most important branches of photoplay production is the cutting and assembling of the films. Regarding this Mr. Balshofer says:

"Proper cutting of pictures is just as essential as good stories, photography or casts. No matter how good a story is, if it fails to contain simplified continuity and if the chief characters are not brought in front of the audience often enough you are just as far from having a successful photoplay as though you were dealing with a poorly constructed theme. On the other hand, you can improve the quality of a poor story with good cutting and subtitles."

The quick wit and courage of May Allison and Harold Lockwood recently saved several thousand dollars worth of Yorke films. They were in a dense woods at Lake Tahoe, California, when a fire sprang up in the dry grass near a car which contained nearly two thousand feet of the choicest scenes of "Mister 44." Slipping off her heavy riding coat and calling to Mr. Lockwood to do the same Miss Allison started to flail the burning grass. The flames were finally put out as others of the company came running up.

The stars received many congratulations on their bravery and presence of mind for this was really a case in which unusual courage was required.

New Rothacker Official

At a recent special meeting of the board of directors of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company of Chicago, N. J. Baumer was elected vice president.

Mr. Baumer for a great many years has been president and director of Matzene studios, which are probably the largest and foremost in portrait work in America.

Under Mr. Baumer's personal direction during the past seven years, were made over one hundred thousand negatives of national American reputation, thirty-two of the English nobility of London and all of the stars and settings of the Chicago Grand Opera Company, of which he is appointed the official photographer.

The Pathescope projecting machine was first marketed in the central west by Mr. Baumer, who organized, owned and directed the Pathescope Company of Chicago. While Mr. Baumer retains the presidency of Matzene's he has disposed of his Pathescope holdings to the new Pathescope Central Corporation and will devote his entire time to his official duties with the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company.

Mr. Baumer is recognized authority on studio lighting and artistic illumination.

Pyke Engaged by Pallas

Wallace Pyke, the well known character man, has been engaged by Pallas Pictures and will be seen under this brand on the Paramount program in the forthcoming Dustin Farnum vehicle, "A Son of Erin."

Patrons of Paramount Pictures need no introduction to Mr. Pyke who has appeared under the Jesse L. Lasky banner, his recent work opposite Victor Moore having won him many new admirers. Prior to his affiliation with Lasky, Mr. Pyke appeared with Essanay under Thomas Ricketts and with the Vitagraph Company's New York forces. Behind the footlights he has attained considerable success, having appeared on the speaking stage for some fifteen years. His initial appearance as an actor was with the original cast of "Way Down East," in which Phoebe Davis and Odel Williams took part. Three years with the Henry W. Savage Castle Square Opera Company, three years with the Aborn English Grand Opera Company, playing leading roles and other important engagements including those with Victor Herbert's "Naughty Marietta," with Trentini and in vaudeville, gave him wide experience as an actor. One of his greatest characterizations on the screen was presented in "Sargent Mulcahay," in which he portrayed the title role. For Pallas Pictures, Mr. Pyke will portray the part of Dan O'Keefe, the ward boss in "A Son of Erin," which will be the next Dustin Farnum release on the Paramount program.

Corporation, with headquarters at the Peerless studio in Fort Lee. Mr. McIntyre, who intends hereafter to devote himself to motion pictures exclusively, has enjoyed a long and valuable experience at the business end of theatrical amusements. For several years he was business manager and treasurer of the historic Walnut Street Theater, Philadelphia. From that post he joined the forces of William A. Brady, first as touring manager of "Baby Mine," and then as treasurer of Mr. Brady's playhouse, at that time about to be dedicated to the public. After the close of last season Mr. McIntyre turned his attention to the picture field.

CHICAGO GOSSIP

Grosset and Dunlap, book publishers, are to issue a special edition of "The Crisis," simultaneously with the release of the Selig film of the same name. It will be illustrated with scenes from the film drama.

George K. Spoor, president of Essanay, has purchased the picture rights of Marion Fairfax's play, "The Chaperon," formerly played on the speaking stage by Maxine Elliot and Julian L'Estrange. Edna Mayo and Eugene O'Brien will be featured in the film production.

Following the buying of an interest in "The Crisis" by a syndicate represented by H. A. Sherman, of Minneapolis, Minn., at a figure exceeding a quarter of a million of dollars, plans for immediate exploitation of this the latest Selig feature drama are progressing. Michel Mowschine, a Chicago musical composer of note, has completed the elaborate musical score, and plans of presentation will be announced to the public soon.

Nell Craig and Bryant Washburn are the featured players in the Essanay version of Arthur Stringer's story, "The Breakers," recently published as a continued story in The Saturday Evening Post. Fred E. Wright, who has just finished "The Prince of Graustark," will direct. The play will be in five reels.

John Cossar, Essanay character actor, is now playing in his third consecutive feature at Essanay. He played in "The Return of Eve" and "The Prince of Graustark," just completed in 5 acts each, and is now working in "The Chaperon," Edna Mayo's next feature.

Lewis S. Stone, stage star, who recently completed "According to the Code" in five acts for Essanay, is about to appear on Broadway in a new production entitled, "The Double Cure."

Exterior scenes for "The Chaperon" will be taken at Washington Island off the shore of the upper peninsula of Michigan.

PACIFIC COAST NOTES

After a year of dramatic roles, Jay Belasco of Universal is taking the leading part in a comedy-drama under the direction of Director Morton.

Henry Otto obtained a real dawn in the Metro picture, "Mister 44," in which he directed Harold Lockwood and May Allison.

In her latest play, "Diane of the Follies," Lillian Gish gives an imitation of Sarah Bernhardt, with whom she once appeared as a fairy dancer.

By special permission of the chieftains of the Hoopa Indian tribe now resident on the Hoopa Indian reservation some sixty miles from Arcata, the Signal Film Corporation this week secured pictures of the White Deer dance, a tribal rite of which much has been written in fiction tales of the northwest, but which few white people have ever seen.

Director General J. P. McGowan this week made arrangements with the officials of the San Francisco and Portland Steamship Company to use their passenger steamer "Bear," in the production of the second episode of the latest Helen Holmes serial feature, "The Lass of the Lumberlands."

In recognition of the splendid work she has done under the Ince-Triangle banner, Margery Wilson, who made her first appearance in this company with W. S. Hart in "The Primal Lure," following this with a successful part in "The Eye of the Night," has been given a long time contract to appear in Ince plays.

Matt Snyder, who plays the role of "Colonel Carvel" in "The Crisis," has been cast for the important role of "Count Anteoni" in the Selig production of "The Garden of Allah."

William S. Selig plans to produce a large number of spectacular specials along the lines of "The Spoilers," "The Rosary," "The Ne'er-Do-Well" and "The Crisis." Following "The Garden of Allah," now in the course of production with Helen Ware and Thomas Santschi in the leading roles, a company will begin work on another feature of ten reels.

George Sargent, who directed "The Secret of the Submarine" and the first two Richard Bennett pictures, was given a farewell dinner by the members of his companies at Santa Barbara recently, for he is leaving the American Company.

Harry Pollard has completed the first of his new features for the Mutual program, with Marguerita Fischer as the star, and is now at work on the Exposition grounds at San Diego, whose beautiful settings will appear in his next picture.

Henry King and little Mary Sunshine are busy at the Balboa studios making pictures which King says will surpass their first success.

The American Film Company boasts of the most filmed burro in the business. Director Frank Borzage has taken such a fancy to the little animal that he wants a part written in each script for the burro. The burro is always just where he is wanted and plays his part surprisingly well.

The new Universal serial, "Liberty," when released in foreign countries will be known as "Love's Battlefield."

George Siegmann is producing "The Best Bet," with Dorothy Gish.

Paul Powell is rehearsing a new play by W. E. Wing featuring Wilfred Lucas and Constance Talmadge.

Two passenger trains will be sent crashing together in a head-on collision for a scene for the current Triangle play which Raymond B. West is directing and in which Dorothy Dalton, Howard Hickman and Enid Markey will be presented in a tri-star combination.

Bessie Barriscale plays the role of a society reporter in her next Triangle picture.

Hylda Hollis, who played the adventuress role in "The Secret of the Submarine," is in real life the wife of Director Edward Sloman.

Neva Gerber has just completed an important role in a forthcoming feature produced by Lois Weber at Universal City. She plays a young working girl whose desires for frivolity and gaiety are repressed.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

The Sunbeam—Biograph Re-issue—September 25.—Featuring Inez Seabury, Claire McDowell, Kate Bruce and Dell Henderson. The little one is playing with her doll while her mother lies sick. The poor woman dies, and the child, thinking her asleep, goes downstairs in search of a playmate. First she visits an austere old maid, and by her artlessness soon melts her coldness. Next she goes across the hallway to a crabbed old bachelor and affects him the same way. The old maid misses one of her hair puffs and goes after the child, thinking she took it. While she is in the bachelor's room talking to the child, several tenement house youngsters steal a "scarlet fever" notice and stick it on the bachelor's door. This quarantines the three until the Health Officer appears and releases them. They then take the child to find its mamma and are horrified at finding her dead. As each wants the child they end the argument most logically—a wedding results.

The Power of the Cross—(Three Reels)—Selig—September 25.—Featuring Virginia Kirtley and Robyn Adair. Madge Johnson, a beautiful young stenographer, is loved by Francis Randall, but she marries her employer, Horace Anderson. Francis joins the Salvation Army and rapidly rises in the ranks until he becomes an official and has charge of the meetings in the Salvation Army barracks. Madge's married life is not happy, as she does not love her husband. Some time later her husband dies of heart failure and then it is that Madge resolves to seek Randall, the only man she has ever loved. When they meet face to face, Madge tells him of the mistake she has made and that she appreciated that love is more than all the riches in the world, but Randall tells her it is too late, as he has sacrificed all worldly thoughts in order to work for the Master.

The Wedding Gown—(Two Reels)—Biograph September 26.—Featuring Gertrude Robinson, Marshall Neilan and H. S. Mack. May Belle receives a letter from her wealthy aunt asking her to come to the city and live with her. She takes leave of her sweetheart, Billy, and her mother and goes to her aunt's. Her aunt introduces her into society and later introduces her to the son of her most particular friend and implies that it is her duty to marry this man. May Belle, realizing all that her aunt has done for her mother when her father died, consents and writes her mother to the effect. Billy, when he learns of her coming marriage, holds to his post and even agrees to be messenger and bring mother's wedding gown to May Belle. May Belle is enjoying the new trousseau that her aunt has given her when Billy arrives with her mother's dress. Her aunt's friends make fun of the dress, but when May Belle shows them her letter they retired in shame. That night she leaves her aunt's home and returns to the little farm house where Billy and mother are waiting by the fireside.

Peter, the Hermit—(Two Reels)—Essanay—September 26.—Featuring John Junior, Nell Craig and Harry Dunkinson. Peter Dudley, a young assistant professor, nearly wrecks his health by writing a book on ants in addition to his other duties. His physician tells him he has three months to live, so Peter takes to the open road and falls in with Easy Ed, master hobo. In a colony of tramps he becomes the mentor for the crew. Vivian Palmer, tired of her social program, makes a trip with her father to his lumber camp. Peter rescues her from the lake as a matter of course and pays no further attention to her. Then he gets all the hoboes to work in the lumber camp and becomes camp boss. He makes no secret of his identity and when the girl reads in a newspaper that a book on ants written by a missing scientist has created a sensation she recognizes the writer as the young camp boss. Peter, who has forgotten all about dying in his new atmosphere, returns to collect royalties and resume teaching with his bride as one of his most earnest students.

The Reformers—Vim—September 28.—Featuring Babe Hardy and Billy Ruge. The fact that an unfortunate member of the canine race possesses a rather lurid appellation should not necessarily mean that the free passage of his breath ought to be prevented by means of a piece of hemp. Plump and Runt were jail birds—thieves from the day they first stole a mouthful of air. A religious revival hits some buried chord in their beings and they reform in so much as they get jobs as butler and chef. The same household shelters a wayward son, who is being bled by a woman of the world. To meet his demand for money his sister steals her friends' money and jewels, the blame falling upon our (this time innocent) heroes. How they emerge from the clouds of suspicion and finally bring the real culprits to justice is graphically told in the picture for the closing scenes show them, covered with virtuous indignation, vegetables and a few clothes, enthroned among the household gods.

Dreamy Dud Has a Laugh on the Boss—Essanay—September 27.—Cartoonist Carlson goes to sleep at his drawing board as soon as he has sketched his familiar figures of Dreamy Dud and his dog Wag. Catching their boss asleep these two mischievous youngsters leap off the board and are off for some fun. They get into an apple orchard. The farmer—Harry Dunkinson—is reading a "Diamond Dick" between blood-curdling interruptions by his parrot. He spies the trespassers and with a blunderbuss fires at them. They retaliate so rapidly with apples that he shakes off the mortal coil and becomes an angel. What matter if his garb is a sheet and his wings merely panama fans? Ascending, he reaches the moon and a wing breaks. A sign tells him it is only 983,000,000 miles to heaven, so he is discouraged. Spying Dreamy Dud in the orchard he hurls a boot at him from the moon. He topples out of the tree. Carlson wakes up on the floor where he has fallen, to find Dreamy Dud, Wag, and Farmer Dunkinson all laughing at him. It was his own dream.

Artistic Atmosphere—Vim—September 27.—Featuring Harry Meyers and Rosemary Theby. Wife reads that every woman must create an artistic atmosphere in her home to avoid becoming old. She thinks she already shows signs of wear and takes up painting. She decorates hubby's collars with her landscapes, causing him to become the laughing-stock of the men in the office. Hoping that a baby will cure her mania for painting, hubby adopts one, but she tells him babies are not in her line. He leaves the baby on a rich man's doorstep, but a copper sees him and he has to take the baby home. He puts it to sleep and then goes out to look for work. When he returns home he sees the painting outfit flying out of the window and later learns that wife has discovered a miniature Caruso in the person of the baby and he is overjoyed to hear that wife intends to find her "artistic atmosphere" cultivating the baby's voice.

For the Governor's Chair—(Three Reels)—Knickerbocker—September 29.—Dying, Tobias Meeker, an accountant who has been in the employ of the state for years, is forced by Henry Croft, Governor of the State, to sign a fake confession that Malcolm Rush, Croft's opponent for governor, tried to bribe Meeker to change state records, and Ralston, his secretary, signs the confession as witness. Arline, Meeker's daughter, overhears the plot and she tells Sanger, star reporter of "The Globe" and her sweetheart, of the scheme, who warns his friend Rush of the conspiracy. That night, a man whose face is concealed, enters the governor's office and secures the confession and as he is leaving he is seen by the night watchman, who gives chase. The man drops a glove and it is picked up by the watchman. The watchman forgets the incident, although he keeps the glove, which shows the initials "M. R." within the wrist. Ralston is arrested as the guilty party when the confession cannot be found, but later everything is straightened out and Rush is elected governor, while Croft is arrested on charge of conspiracy.

Tangled Hearts—Vim—September 29.—Featuring Robert Burns and Walter Stull. Pokes, a supposed nervous wreck, is sent by his wife to a hotel in the country that he may enjoy a well-earned rest. However, instead of resting, Pokes begins to flirt desperately with the wives of Jabbs and Newlywed. Both husbands are incensed at Pokes' conduct and finally their patience is exhausted, so they agree that Pokes must be taught not to flirt so promiscuously. Jabbs' wife, overhearing her husband's plan to punch Pokes, tries to warn the latter to escape, but when her husband discovers her in Pokes' room he is infuriated and refuses to listen to her explanations. In the fight that follows Pokes defeats both Jabbs and Newlywed, but when his wife suddenly appears at the hotel, he seeks refuge in flight. He escapes from the hotel via the telegraph wire, but slips and falls into the well, out of which he is dragged in a half-drowned condition, but upon his recovering consciousness, rather than face his irate spouse, he again falls to the bottom and rises no more.

Twin Fates—(Three Reels)—Essanay—September 30.—Featuring Marguerite Clayton, Sydney Ainsworth and Edmund F. Cobb. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

The Raiders—Selig—September 30.—Featuring Tom Mix and Victoria Forde. Tom Gardner, a Texas ranger, while riding the border looking for raiders, visits his sweetheart, Vicky, who is just leaving with her father, Jim Nelson, for town. Ramero, leader of Mexican outlaws, sees Tom, and vows to "get" him if possible. Later, Ramero and his band give chase to Nelson and his daughter, who are returning home with their supplies. Nelson is killed during an exchange of shots. Tom hears the shots and goes to the rescue, arriving just in time to save Vicky. Ramero escapes. Tom and Vicky pursue him, and later he falls dead before Tom's well directed shot. Then it is that Vicky consents to become Tom's new deputy for life.

The Mud Cure—Kalem—September 19.—Featuring Lloyd V. Hamilton and Bud Duncan. Poor Bud has a toothache and Ham brings him to Doc. Pullem to have the offending molar extracted. The dentist's pretty daughter aids him in administering the gas but as she is busy flirting with Ham she bungles the job—and what a dream follows for Bud. He finds Ham and himself the attendants at a mud bath health resort where Doc Pullem and his daughter come for treatments. The things that happen then would make any Welsh rare-bit dream seem a sweet lullaby.

The Gun Runners—Kalem—September 20.—Featuring Marin Sais and True Boardman. Barbara, finding her automobile disabled, is forced to go to the Storms reception in a taxi. The chauffeur brings her to the wrong house and she finds herself greeted by The Blind Mole as "English Rose." The Blind Mole, a picturesque Central American character, takes her into his confidence regarding his plans for a revolution in Costa Blanca. Suddenly Arenzo, a rival revolutionist, arrives with his followers and in the battle that follows The Blind Mole is killed. Arenzo also thinks that Barbara is "English Rose" and forces her to accompany him. The scenes that follow, telling in exciting manner how Wallace and a reporter succeed in unravelling the mystery of Barbara's disappearance and how that adventurous girl thwarts the schemes of the "gun runners," culminate in a spirited conflict aboard the schooner which was to bear the revolutionists' arms to Costa Blanca.

"The Deacon's Card," on the left, "Paste and Politics" and "Poultry, a la Mode," are brand new Mutual comedies.

That Pesky Parrot—KALEM—SEPTEMBER 22.—Featuring Ivy Close. The newlyweds have a parrot quick of memory and loose of tongue. With the aid of Pete, the paper-hanger, the parrot causes all sorts of mix-ups when Jack goes away on a business journey and returns unexpectedly. Jack finds the parrot alone in a wildly upset house, and decides that his bride has been kidnaped. But after a swift succession of laughable incidents all ends well.

Defying Death—KALEM—SEPTEMBER 23.—Featuring Helen Gibson. Dick Benton, a young attorney of the railroad, is on his way to the Capitol to deliver evidence involving Riggs in a conspiracy arising out of a fight with the railroad over a franchise. At Lone Point he learns that by leaving the package to be picked up by the express it will reach the Governor sooner than he can bring it on the local. He leaves it in Helen's care. But Riggs, who has been following Benton, succeeds in getting away with the box and boarding an auto standing outside the station. He has scarcely gone a hundred feet when a momentary loss of control causes the car to ram a telegraph pole. Helen recovers the box but looks up to find another automobile with Riggs' aides bearing down upon her. While they are tending the injured Riggs she boards an electric speeder, a development of the handcar, and races down the track. In a moment the conspirators are after her. Suddenly the express swings around the curve, on the adjoining track. Ahead, Helen sees the switch which will send her to almost certain death under the wheels of the express unless her speeder is brought to a stop. She tries frantically to apply the brakes but they will not work and in a twinkling she is at the switch and under the express. By a matter of inches she escapes the wheels of the train and races along the other track apace with the express above her. When she has finally mastered the brake she calls to the trainmen above her and both express and speeder are brought to a stop together. The trainmen quickly effect the capture of Riggs and his fellows.

Mutual Pictures

The Deacon's Card—BEAUTY—SEPTEMBER 26.—Featuring Orral Humphrey. The deacon is elected president of the Smithville anti-gambling league and his admirers, led by Parson Jones, are arranging to start a whirlwind crusade against the gamblers. Nora, the deacons daughter, is loved by Tom and he proposes to her the night the deacon is elected and Nora refers Tom to her father and Tom in his perturbation pulls out his handkerchief and dashes a deck of cards to the floor and he is at once banished. The deacon is picking up the cards when the league committee calls and thrusts the cards in his coattail pocket to get them out of sight. Tom and Nora, seizing the opportunity, elope and get married. When the deacon pulls out his handkerchief to wipe his heated brow he scatters the cards all over and the committee denounce him as a hypocrite. The committee call on the parson to demand the deacon's expulsion and find him in the act of marrying Tom and Nora. Tom explains matters and the deacon is again elected president of the league.

The Crook Detective—(THREE REELS)—GAUMONT—SEPTEMBER 28.—Fourth episode of "Fantomas. Since Juve, the greatest detective in France, has been unable to apprehend Fantomas, there has gradually grown the suspicion that Juve is himself Fantomas, and he is arrested and thrown into prison. Lady Beltham, who successfully concealed her affair with Fantomas and has since married a Russian Grand Duke, gives a masked ball and this is attended by Fantomas wearing the celebrated black garb, Fandor, Juve's friend, also wearing a Fantomas costume, and the third person wearing the Fantomas suit of black is a detective detailed to watch for thieves. Fantomas murders the detective and during the encounter receives a stab wound in the arm and he disappears before the murder is discovered. When it is, it is then clearly seen that Fantomas had been at work, and if Juve was Fantomas, then he would have a wound in his arm. Fandor and the police rush to the prison and find the detectice seemingly asleep in his cell and a stab wound is found on his arm, but instead of being asleep he is in a deep stupor. When he regains consciousness he accuses the keeper of stabbing him in his cell and Juve is set free to continue his search for Fantomas.

Poultry A La Mode—(TWO REELS)—VOGUE—OCTOBER 1.—Featuring Rube Miller and Ben Turpin. Rube and Ben are neighbors, one raises ducks on one side of their line fence and the other has a flock of geese. In a nearby part of the town lives a wealthy Turk who is engaged in securing wives to fill the harem of his sultan, and into the Oriental splendor of the Turk's place of abode a duck and goose strut and there they find a pool of refreshing water. They hasten back to tell the rest of their flocks, but not until Rube and Ben have followed them to the place. The water of the pool has been treated with a magic liquid and when the duck and goose jump into the water they are turned into two beautiful maidens. Rube and Ben capture the Turk and lock him in a huge chest and then they encounter the Turk's favorite and she flirts bewitchingly with the truant husbands. Complications set in and excitement reigns and a wild fight starts between Rube, Ben and the Sultan and several policemen.

Universal Program

A Hero by Proxy—(TWO REELS)—AN EPISODE OF "TIMOTHY DOBBS, THAT'S ME"—SEPTEMBER 25.—Carter De Haven featured. Timothy rescues a beautiful girl from a band of villains and as a result wins her father's gratitude—and a job as leading man in his movie company. Before coming into his position Timothy takes a job as property man in a studio and worries everybody, particularly the directors. Afterwards Timothy learns that he has by chance stumbled into the studio in which he is to be leading man. His attitude at once changes, as does that of the directors, who forgive him his past sins.

Model 46—NESTOR—SEPTEMBER 25.—With Gretchen Lederer, Lee Moran and Eddie Lyons. When Eddie is ordered to take a wax model to a salesman at the seashore, his sweetheart, Betty, thinks the model is alive, and supplanting her in the youth's affections. Later, when Eddie endeavors to explain, he only makes matters worse, due to getting into the wrong room and becoming victimized by an actress. It takes some time to settle matters to the satisfaction of Betty and the actress' lover.

Husks of Love—(THREE REELS)—GOLD SEAL—SEPTEMBER 26.—Claire McDowell and William V. Mong. When Mary Holmes, a reporter, marries Bixby, a society man, her life is made miserable by Bixby's mother, who thinks her son has married beneath his station. Amos Bixby himself finally becomes overbearing, and as a result of his cruelty Mary returns to her father. Time passes and Amos is taken ill. Realizing her place is beside her husband, Mary returns to him, only to be plotted against by a designing woman who wishes Amos for herself. The latter, by her wicked arrangements, so incites Amos against his wife that she is obliged to kill him in self-defense. Her justification in the matter is later established and Mary is left free to marry her first love, the reporter who has constantly stood by her.

The Lie Sublime—(TWO REELS)—BIG U—SEPTEMBER 28.—Featuring King Baggot and Edna Hunter. "The Lie Sublime" is the lie told to a young girl aspiring to be an operatic singer, by an impressario. It is done at the suggestion of a friend of the girl's, who, to gain fame on the stage, has sacrificed love, and knows that the girl will do the same thing and later rue her action. So the girl, who really has a wonderful voice, is kept ignorant of the fact and its possibilities, making her content to settle down and lead a truly happy life. Then the man who has brought this about seeks out his old sweetheart, whom he finds still waiting.

Behind the Scenes in Japan—POWERS—SEPTEMBER 28.—In this number of the Dorsey travel pictures the old capitals of Japan, Nara and Kyoto are visited, and many things of artistic and educational interest are shown. Particularly interesting phases of the life of the famous Geisha girls conclude the picture.

The Shadow Sinister—BIG U—SEPTEMBER 29.—Beppo, a Mexican, attacks a girl whom he has long coveted, but in his clumsy attempts to overcome her he falls over a cliff. The next day the girl's sheriff lover goes for the body and finds that it is that of a noted bandit, for whom there is a large reward. So the lovers have something substantial on which to launch forth on the ocean of marriage.

The Jungle Hero—(TWO REELS)—BISON—SEPTEMBER 30.—Featuring Golda Coldwell and Colin Chase. Lucille Ames sacrifices love for social ambition, her lover going to Africa to collect specimens for a zoo. Later Lucille accompanies her father to Africa on a mining expedition, which almost ends in disaster and in Lucille's death at the hands of natives. Lucille's lover, however, who is hunting animals with his men in this lawless region, comes to the rescue and saves the girl from being torn to pieces by lion cubs.

The Inspector's Double—JOKER—SEPTEMBER 30. With Gale Henry and William Franey. All the trouble contained in this reel is caused by the likeness between John and Frank, the health inspector, and their wives' inability to tell one from the other. Following many turbulent adventures both men finally land in the insane asylum, where the cops and the keepers at last realize their mistake.

Ashes of Remembrance—(TWO REELS)—REX—OCTOBER 1.—With Paul Byron and Helen Leslie. Through indiscretion a young wife appears to her husband to be unfaithful, and she is cast off. In a moment of great need the poor girl finds a friend in the kind old "Grandpap Martin," who fills her with courage. Soon after the wife's arrival within the old man's gates, the husband comes to him for advice. The old gentleman hides the girl in the next room and then proceeds to tell the erring youth a story of his past. The moral of the story is applicable to the young people's predicament, and leads the young man to rue his actions. Then, having done his part, the elderly man leads the concealed wife forth and a touching reunion ensues.

In the Laps of the Gods—VICTOR—OCTOBER 1.—This story deals with the test of a young man by a girl whom he has never seen, although he is to marry her within three days to come into a large fortune. The test proves Jack to be a man of good morals and gives the participants in the marriage full confidence in each other.

Feature Programs

Blue Bird

The Evil Women Do—(Five Reels)—Bluebird—September 25.—Featuring Rupert Julian, Elsie Jane Wilson, Hobart Henley and Francelia Billington. Ernestine Bergot, a child of the streets, is adopted by an artist and he takes her to his studio in the Latin quarter and here she meets Justin Chavessat. Gradually Ernestine becomes a beautiful "vampire" hardened to any crime. One day she accidentally shoves her benefactor out of the studio window after robbing him of a large sum of money. Ernestine and Chavessat leave the Latin quarter. Later Ernestine changes her name to Sarah Brandon and by her reckless adventures soon becomes known to Parisians as the most evil and pernicious woman in the gay city of Paris. She meets Count Ville Handray and later she marries him. Henrietta, the count's daughter, is forced to leave her father's house because of her unscrupulous stepmother. Later, however, Sarah's treachery is discovered and rather than submit to arrest she drinks poison and dies. Sydney Dean, C. N. Hammond, Douglas Gerrard and Tom Lockhart complete the cast. Rupert Julian directed the picture.

Fox

Where Love Leads—(Five Reels)—William Fox—September 18.—Featuring Ormi Hawley. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

International Film

Beatrice Fairfax—(Two Reels)—International Film Service.—The seventh episode of this serial, featuring Grace Darling and Harry Fox, is entitled "A Name For a Baby." A review appears on another page of this issue.

Hearst-International News Pictorial No. 73.—September 12.—A new life-preserver makes deep-water swimming safe for Amateurs, Chicago, Ill.; new records are made at the National Championship track and field meets in which the best athletes of the country participate in contests requiring speed, strength and skill, Newark, N. J.; latest fashions; Yankees and Giants clash in a hard-fought baseball game, New York, N. Y.; equipped with deadly bombs, to drop in the Bulgarian lines, a French flying-boat piloted by an intrepid aviator, leaves here to join the Allies' offensive against the Central Powers, Salonika, Greece; five sailors killed when the cruiser Memphis was dashed upon the rocks in a hurricane off Santo Domingo City, are brought to the National Capital to be buried with honors in Arlington Cemetery, Washington, D. C.

Hearst-International News Pictorial No. 74.—September 17. Fire sweeps a large manufacturing plant in South Boston, Mass., inflicting $50,000 loss and threatening millions of dollars' worth of nearby manufacturing plants; the Fourth Missouri National Guard gets practical training in trench digging, Laredo, Texas; appearing in costumes of the latest cut, style and brevity, girls parade before a large throng on the beach at Oakland, Cal.; pigskin athletes of the East and West begin practice for the 1916 season, Coach Andy Smith puts the University of California squad through strenuous practice, while Captain Dadam of Harvard leads his recruits in preliminary training; beautiful out door opera is produced for the benefit of charity, San Francisco, Cal.; canoeists who plied their craft during the summer months on the historic Charles river, close the boating season with a gala day of thrilling water sports, Auburndale, Mass.; two giant locomotives running full speed ahead, clash in the center of a large arena for the entertainment of State Fair visitors, San Diego, Cal.

The Flower of Faith—(Five Reels)—International Film Service—October 2.—This Golden Eagle feature presents Jane Grey and Frank Mills. Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

Kleine

Gloria's Romance. No. 20—(Two Reels)—George Kleine.—Featuring Billie Burke. "Love's Reward." A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

Mutual Star Production

The Manager of the B. & A.—(Five Reels)—American—September 25.—Featuring Helen Holmes. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

The Torch Bearer—(Five Reels)—American—September 28.—Featuring William Russell. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

Paramount

The Daughter of MacGregor—(Five Reels)—Famous Players.—Produced by Sidney Olcott from the story by Valentine Grant, who plays the name role. Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

The Intrigue—(Five Reels)—Pallas.—A melodrama playing in Europe and America with Lenore Ulrich in the leading part. A review appears on another page of this issue.

Pictographs — Paramount — September 17. — Opening with an article on Safety First, which was produced under direct supervision of the New York Police Department, this is an especially good number of Pictographs. The Safety First pictures are very interesting, and, of course, they give instructions which might be taken real seriously by a majority of the people. "How Grandma Lost Her Job" gives contrasting pictures of the old and new methods in making wool ready for the loom, and "Handling a Great Lakes Steamer" shows some remarkable bits of modern ingenuity. "Four-footed Aristocrats" gives intimate views of domestic animals.

In Bonnie Scotland — Paramount-Burton Holmes—September 17.—The Firth of Forth bridge, which is the longest in the world, is well worth looking at as it is shown in this travelogue. Also there are views of Aberdeen, Ben Nevil, which is the highest mountain in Great Britain, and a breezy trip through the Caledonian Canal.

Colonel Heeza Liar's Bachelor Quarters—Paramount-Bray—September 17. An animated cartoon by J. R. Bray which is full of action and a number of mirth-provoking incidents. Mr. Bray gives the rat whose activity about the apartment brings on all the complications a wide range of facial expression that accounts for much of the enjoyment this short reel affords. On the same reel with:

An Animal Engineer—A quite thorough study of the beaver and its dam and hut-building methods. This Dr. R. L. Ditmars picture is attractive and it will appeal.

Pathe

Pathe News No. 74—September 15. The five thousand ton central span of the St. Lawrence bridge which collapsed while being lifted into space, falling and sinking in ten seconds, Quebec, Canada; five thousand workers of the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company receive a hearty welcome by the citizens of Trinidad when they arrive to participate in the second annual field day, Trinidad, Colo.; nation expresses its sorrow as the five American sailors, victims of the wrecking of the U. S. S. Memphis by a severe storm, are buried with full military honors, Washington, D. C.; Governor Hughes invades the Solid South during his campaign trip to plead the cause of the Republicans, Nashville, Tenn.; latest fashions; Golden State is busy washing and sorting its bumper crop of prunes, estimated at 130,000,000 pounds, San Jose, Cal.; military and naval battalions participate in an impressive celebration of Lafayette Day in honor of the great French general who helped us win the Revolutionary War, Fall River, Mass.

Pathe News No. 75—September 16.—Eight thousand striking employes of the traction lines unite in a monster demonstration to arouse sympathy for their cause, New York City, N. Y.; regiments of the New York militia, first of the National Guard to be ordered back from service at the Mexican border, return to Camp Whitman until mustered out, Beekman, N. Y.; rescued from the claws of its crazed mother lioness, a little cub is now being nursed by an altruistic canine together with its own little pup at the local zoo, Cincinnati, Ohio; Harvard commences its football season and a large squad turns out for practice, promising good material for a strong eleven, Cambridge, Mass.; President Wilson opens his summer capitol, located in a modern office building, where he will be in touch with the multitudinous duties of his office during his vacation, Asbury Park, N. J.

Red Feather

If My Country Should Call—(Five Reels)—Red Feather—September 25.—Remarkable preparedness drama featuring Dorothy Phillips and Lon Chaney. Helen Leslie, Adele Farrington, Frank Whitson, Jack Nelson, Albert MacQuarrie, Carl von Schiller and Gretchen Lederer complete the cast. Joseph De Grasse directed the picture.

Triangle Program

Plain Jane—(Five Reels)—Triangle-Ince—October 1.—A comedy by C. Gardner Sullivan with Bessie Barriscale and Charles Ray in the leading roles. The picture tells of the romance of a slavey who works in a college boarding house. Jane is so very plain as to appearance that John Adams is not in the least interested in her, but Jane is very fond of him. A prosperous photographer arranges her hair becomingly and takes a photograph of her which wins a beauty prize offered by a New York newspaper. Then the photographer adopts Jane, educates her and makes her generally enchanting to John. The leading actress is of course interesting, but the story unfolded by the picture contains no quality that would recommend it to praise. It is a slight story and the entertainment furnished by the picture is just as slight. Charles Miller directed the production.

V. L. S. E. Inc.

The Combat—(Six Reels)—V-L-S-E—September 18.—Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature starring Anita Stewart. Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

The Scarlet Runner—V-L-S-E.—Serial featuring Earle Williams. The fifth, sixth and seventh episodes are reviewed on another page of this issue.

The Fall of a Nation—(Seven Reels)—V-L-S-E. September 18.—This is a considerably shortened, and for that reason improved release of the preparedness spectacle written and produced by Thomas Dixon. The picture had a run at the Liberty Theater, New York.

Scene from the Triangle Fine Arts "The Rummy" is on the left; next is a Reesie Arbuckle Keystone comedy so young that it is as yet unnamed. At the right is "Model 46" a Nestor Universal Comedy.

CHICAGO NEWS

Harry P. Wayman, manager of the Triangle Theater at 7219 Wentworth avenue, is confined to a South Side hospital as the result of a mysterious accident. He is on the way to recovery.

M. A. Choynski of the Newberry Theater and "Bill" Sweeney, secretary Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, left for New York on September 18 to attend the meeting of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry which opened there on September 21.

Fred W. Hartman, manager of the Aristo Theater, Chicago, has gone to Rochester, Minnesota, where on a tentative arrangement he has taken over the management of the two houses owned by the Metropolitan Amusement Corporation. Recent communication from him advises that he intends to include some high class vaudeville in future performances. Thus far he reports a good business.

Homer A. Bushay, general manager of the Essanay Chicago plant, who for the past few weeks has been vacationing on an automobile trip, will return to Chicago about October 1.

Philip S. Lewis, formerly connected with the Owl Feature Film Company, Chicago, has left for Minneapolis where he is to have charge of the distribution of the productions of the Lewis J. Selznick Enterprises. The Minneapolis office will look after the exhibitors in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and the northern half of Wisconsin in which territory Mr. Lewis is well known, due to his former connection with the Chicago Film Exchange of Minneapolis.

The Star Features Company, who formerly controlled the rights on "The Unwritten Law," in the states of Indiana, Michigan, Missouri and Kansas have disposed of Missouri and Kansas to Arthur Marowitz, who so successfully handled "Damaged Goods" in the same territory.

Manager Wiley of the Wiley Theater, Chicago, is planning to retire to his farm in New York state. Mr. Wiley is one of the pioneers of the film business in Chicago. He started with a small store theater in the early days and about five years ago built what was then considered a large house, within a few doors of the old one. This house, together with the equipment, has a tangible value of not less than $25.000.

C. SPERBECK has purchased the Princess Theater at Reinbeck, Iowa, from John Wilkens & Son.

Clyde Eddington has purchased the Majestic Theater at Ossian, Iowa, from David Jacobson.

Charles Chapman has leased the Masonic Opera House at What Cheer, Iowa.

MR. EXHIBITOR: MISS GRANT

Valentine Grant, the international cinema star, who achieved a wide reputation as an interpreter of foreign types on the screen, will be seen as a Scotch lassie in her latest Famous Players productions,

Valentine Grant of Famous Players in a rosy pose especially for Motography.

"The Daughter of MacGregor," filmed under the direction of Sydney Olcott. It was shown at the Strand Theater, New York, the week of September 17.

Miss Grant has been filmed in pictures in England, Scotland, Ireland and on the continent, and this experience, together with her charming personality and ability as an actress, has enabled her to interpret foreign types with a wealth of sympathy and understanding.

Previous to "The Daughter of MacGregor" Miss Grant played the role of Nora O'Brien, an Irish colleen, in "The Innocent Lie."

"The Daughter of MacGregor" is from the pen of Miss Grant and the story is exceptionally interesting.

W. W. Cocroft has purchased the picture theater at Rock Valley, Iowa.

George Graves has purchased the Gem Theater at Coin, Iowa.

F. C. Schroeder has purchased the Majestic Theater at Wellman, Iowa.

Bruce Jones will open a new picture theater at Keswick, Iowa, in the near future.

Willis Oaks has purchased the Star at Shannon City, Iowa.

J. R. Battersby has sold the Auditorium Theater at Lewis, Iowa, to Mr. Frost.

Peter N. Ledeu has purchased the opera house at Yuma, Colorado.

M. J. Downes will open the Crescent Theater at Kearney, Nebraska, soon.

George Sinclair has purchased the Elmoreck Theater at Overton, Nebraska.

W. C. Heiden will build a new theater at Thayer, Nebraska, in the near future.

Mrs. Viola Brown will open the new Royal Theater at O'Neill, Nebraska, in the near future. The Royal will be exclusive feature and vaudeville and will use orchestra music exclusively.

A. L. Middleton has purchased the Princess Theater at DeQueen, Arkansas, from H. E. Wood, and will rename the theater "Queen."

The amusement situation in Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, continues unchanged, and this makes the seventh week since the strike of employees started. Despite the apparent success of the strike from the union viewpoint, members of the Theatrical Managers' Association do not seem to weaken. Theatrical managers are showing stubborn fighting, and a policy that gives but little satisfaction to the strikers. The latter, however, claim success and say that they will win in the end.

The Kansas City Screen Club dedicated their new rooms over the Columbia Theater at Kansas City, September 1. Managers and exchange men were present in large numbers.

The Pantages circuit, the big small time vaudeville string, has booked "The Crimson Stain Mystery," the sixteen episode serial, presented by Consolidated Film Corporation.

T. E. Letendre of New York for the past eight months associated with the publicity department of the World Film Corporation, has severed connections with that concern to take charge of the personal publicity of several well known stars, including Robert Warwick, Mollie King, Emile Chautard and Irving Cummings. He has taken up offices in the Heidelberg building, New York.

A feature of his publicity service will be a weekly news letter to Sunday newspapers on photoplay conditions in New York. Over one hundred newspapers have already subscribed for this service. Mr. Letendre is also the New York theatrical representative of sixty French newspapers.

AUSTRALIAN NEWS

By Blenner Hassett

Special Correspondent for Motography.

The censors have commenced operations in earnest in Australia. They have prohibited the screening of the "Yellow Passport" featuring Clara Kimball Young, and the "Kiss of Hate." This is the first big move on the part of censors, and many more films will probably be pruned, now that a start has been made. The action caused quite a stir in motion picture circles here, as the films had been showing for two days at several theaters before meeting their doom.

One of the finest theaters we have in this state is the Boomerang, which has just been opened. H. W. S. Bray, on being interviewed by Motography's representative, stated that the whole building and the modern effects and fittings lay out a total of £10,000 ($4,800). A first class orchestra of fifteen performers and first release programmes are being run in this palatial theater. H. J. Clayton, a well-known racing man of this state, is the owner of the property.

Jack Matthews, at one time on the Fuller Vaudeville Circuit, and a producer of many Australian productions, has completed a one-reel comedy, "Charlie's Twin Brother," featuring Ernie Vockler and Charles Evans. Vockler and Evans are well-known Chaplin impersonators who frequent the lobbies of the different theaters in Sydney.

"The Veil of Kismet," a two-reel filmologue recently written and directed by Donald Cornwallis and produced under the supervision of the Ben J. Fuller vaudeville enterprises, has taken a place on the latter's vaudeville bill at the Princess Theater.

John F. Gavin, co-producer of the Nurse Cavell film (which is at present being handled by C. Post Mason in New York City), is about to release a feature production starring Miss Gwen Lewis, a popular soubrette at present with the Royal Strollers Company at the Palace Theater. Miss Lewis makes her photoplay debut in this production and promises to be as big a hit on the screen as on the speaking stage. A lot of good work is put into the picture by the Palladium Ballet, headed by Vera Murray and Rae Anderson, both well known in Australian vaudeville. T. H. Eslick, the general manager of the Palladium, gave permission for these young ladies to work in the feature. Motor car loads of the "Pally" girls were seen being driven out to the studios in their cabaret costumes, and they caused quite a sensation.

Last week the state governor, Sir Gerald Strickland, accompanied by the director of fisheries, Mr. Stead, and the minister of education, Mr. Hall, embarked on one of the government trawlers to witness the scheme of deep-sea trawling. The trip was not without the representation of a film concern. Australasian Films dispatched Cameraman Ellis with the expedition, and a one-reel picture was taken of the whole trawling operation. The next day the fisheries director and the minister of justice paid a visit to the A. F. Ltd. studios and witnessed the whole operations over again, and expressed great satisfaction with what they had seen.

MOTOGRAPHY's Australian representative would like to hear from Stanley H. Twist, at one time associated with the Selig Company, and late general manager of the Australasian Films studios and laboratories. Address Box 2269, G. P. O., Sydney, N. S. W., Australia.

In a letter from Adelaide, South Australia, comes word of the tremendous success of the Triangle plays. The Ozone Theater has been doing record business.

"The Birth of a Nation" has now started its run in the Suburban districts of Sidney.

"The Battle Cry of Peace," Vitagraph's big war special, has been doing record business in this city, having played at the Crystal Palace Theater, Hippodrome, and a return season at the Lyceum Theater, in all occupying nearly a three weeks' run.

Wirths Limited, the big circus proprietors, recently turned their huge hippodrome into a motion picture house, but the new venture was not a success and they have closed down.

Hoyt's Limited, a well known picture show firm of Melbourne, Victoria, has opened a new theater in this city. The seating capacity is 2,000. William Fox and Metro productions are shown at this theater first.

According to the "Australian Variety and Show World," a bright and newsy journal, Australia apparently possesses the youngest cameraman in the world in the person of Claude C. Carter, who has just reached his sixteenth birthday. He is employed by Australasian Films turning the crank, filming the Animated cartoons of Harry Julius, which appear in the Australian Gazette.

A list of the films on the leading theaters at present includes: "The Eye of the Night (Triangle), "The Half Breed" (Triangle), "A Fool's Revenge" (Fox), "Blazing Love" (Fox), "The Phantom" (Triangle), "Jeanne Dore" (Bluebird), "The Weakness of Man" (World), "The Secret Sin" (Lasky).

The last week of August saw the first issue of the only trade picture magazine published in the Commonwealth of Australia, with a circulation embracing the Dominion of New Zealand, United States and England. Published under the title of "The Australian Photoplay Magazine," it will make its appearance weekly and has already secured the backing of exchangemen and exhibitors everywhere. The editorial management will be in the hands of John M. Giles, at one time organizer and general publicity manager for the Henry Waterhouse Tourist Bureau at Honolulu, and at the present time assistant advertising manager for Australasian Films, Limited. With him on the staff are Hal H. Carleton, well known in Australian circles as an authority on the industry, and formerly co-editor of the "Australian Reliance Reviews," who will have charge of exchange matters generally. Tom S. Imrie, who will handle reviews and general publicity matter, was associated with Mr. Carleton on the A. R. "Reviews" and until he joined the staff of the new magazine, was photoplay editor of "The Mirror," Sydney. Suitable offices have been secured in Berry's Chambers, Pitt street, Sydney, right in the heart of the "picture block."

SIGNAL VETERAN DEAD

After a long life of strenuous activity N. Z. Wood, or "Daddy" Wood, as he was affectionately known to the members of the Signal Film Corporation, passed away last week at his home in Glendale, California.

Ever since its organization a year ago Mr. Wood had been playing character roles with the Signal corporation, appearing in "The Girl and the Game," "Whispering Smith," "The Diamond Runners," and "The Manager of the B. and A." It was shortly after having been cast for an important part in "The Lass of the Lumberlands" that he was stricken ill and forced to abandon his work in the picture.

Prior to entering motion pictures Mr. Wood had been in active railroad work all his life and it was this fact which made him so valuable to the Signal company. He was for thirty-six years an engineer on the Chicago and Eastern Illinois and following that he pulled an engine out of Mexico City for a number of years over the Mexican International. He remained in Mexico until about a year after the outbreak of the Madero revolution when he returned to this country with his family.

He is survived by his widow.

Ellis Parker Butler's "Philo Gubb" series will be made in Jacksonville, Florida, under the directions of Pierce Kingsley, who is picturizing and also producing this series of comedy dramas to be released in two reel subjects.

Mr. Edwin Stevens, who plays the role of the villainous demon, Ali Singh, in "The Yellow Menace" serial, is starring in this new "Philo Gubb" series as Philo Gubb, the amateur detective, a comedy role.

THE FIREMAN

was played as the feature attraction, first run, in 14 theatres — all but one of the big first class theatres in that section! This strip of "main street" is picked out merely for the sake of ready illustration. Every other section made a like showing —the town went Chaplin mad. Reports coming in from all over the country read the same—crowds turned away and patrons warmly enthusiastic in their praise of star and picture.

No such record smashing success has ever been known. Every part of the world is clamoring for the Mutual Chaplin pictures—for there never was such a sure thing investment. No speculation — just look up the business done in the thousands of houses that showed "The Floor-walker" and "The Fireman" and get in in time for the next Mutual Chaplin.

Exhibitors send glowing reports of success! Read this letter—

Richmond, Ind., May 29, 1916

Today was our opening day for "THE SECRET OF THE SUBMARINE." We had "a regular jam." Before opening time (1:15 in the afternoon) our side of Main street was blocked, and those wishing to pass were compelled to take the other side. Regardless of inclement weather and six other high class features being shown at other houses today, we enjoyed a capacity business until 11:00 o'clock tonight. Considering that our audience changed on an average of once every forty minutes (as we were running but three reels today) will show you what "THE SECRET OF THE SUBMARINE" can do for box-office receipts. Any exhibitor who neglects this opportunity is overlooking a mighty good chance. THEATORIUM, Actual Pictures Taken On the Field of Battle!

EXHIBITED AT THE PARK THEATRE
New York City, under the auspices of

The New York Globe

THE ZEPPELIN RAIDS ON LONDON AND THE SIEGE OF VERDUN

The actual and only authentic scenes of the bombardment of London by the fleet of Giant Zeppelins, and the trail of destruction in their wake; "Deadman's Hill" the human slaughter pen taken inside the firing lines; Lord Kitchener's review of the Coldstream Guards—the last pictures taken of this great warrior just before he met his tragic death.

THIS IS THE ONE PICTURE WHICH BRINGS HOME THE HELLISHNESS OF WAR IN ALL ITS GRIM REALISM!

Truly, the most sensational box-office attraction of the year

Paper depicting actual scenes in 1, 3, 6, 9 and 24 sheets

¶ THE MYSTERIES OF MYRA is now in its eighth week. Bookings on this feature series continue to pour into our exchanges.

The story of THE MYSTERIES OF MYRA grows stronger with each episode and the dramatic situations intensify with each release. You are missing an opportunity if you do not book it.

¶ WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN MEXICO is the title of the only authentic Mexican pictures. This single reel feature was taken by Tracy Mathewson, staff photographer now with the Punitive Expedition in Mexico. Tracy Mathewson is the only authorized photographer with this expedition.

¶ MAUDE THE MULE by F. Opper, will make millions laugh, beginning June 20th.

A SAD AWAKENING is the name of a Krazy Kat cartoon by George W. Herriman. Book this cartoon feature.

¶ THE HEARST INTERNATIONAL NEWS PICTORIAL is a newspaper in pictures in the full sense of the word. It contains a news section—a war section—a fashion section—and puts the interesting events of the world before your eyes. Two releases every week.
